Argum. 5. Now in the laſt place we will conclude, with that excellent ſaying of the Apoſtle: That I might be found in him, not hauing mine owne righteouſneſſe, which is of the law, but that, which is through the faith of Chriſt, euen the righteouſneſſe, which is of God through faith: S. Paul here denieth his owne righteouſneſſe: but he that hath inherent righteouſnes, hath ſome righteouſnes of his owne. Againe, he commendeth the righteouſneſſe of God through faith: that is, apprehended by faith, not conſiſting in the meritorious act or worthineſſe of faith: for if faith in it ſelfe ſhould be this righteouſneſſe, how can it alſo bee the righteouſneſſe of God? the righteouſneſſe of God is not faith, for Chriſt hath no ſuch faith: it is the righteouſneſſe then of God apprehended by faith, which is our righteouſneſſe before God, not any inherent iuſtice in vs. Auguſtine ſaith well, Iuſtificatio ex fide impetratur: Iuſtification is obtained by faith: De ſpirit. & liter. c. 29. iuſtitia noſtra per fidem eſt—nec iuſti credendo, in quem non videmus: We are iuſt by beleeuing in him, whom we ſee not. tract. 4 in epiſtol. Ioan. Iuſtitia noſtra in hac vita potius peccatorum remiſſione conſtat quam perfectione virtutum: Our iuſtice in this life conſiſteth rather in the remiſſion of ſinnes, then perfection of vertue: lib. 20. de ciuitat. Dei. c. 27. Againe, he ſaith, Si dixerimus, quod nihil iuſtitiæ habemus, aduerſum Dei dona mentimur: ſi enim iuſtitiæ nihil habemus, nec fidem habemus: ſi autem fidem habemus, iam aliquid habemus iuſtitiæ: If we ſay, we haue no iuſtice at all, we do belie the good gifts of God; for if we haue no iuſtice, we haue no faith: but if we haue faith, then haue we ſome iuſtice in vs. de verb. Apoſt. ſer. 16. In theſe places Auguſtine acknowledgeth no inherent iuſtice, but the iuſtice onely of faith. If it ſhall be anſwered, that euen the iuſtice of faith is an inherent iuſtice, becauſe it iuſtifieth by the worthineſſe & merit thereof: Auguſtine ſaith againe, writing vpon theſe words of our Sauiour, No man cõmeth vnto me, &c. Vt doceret nos, ipſum credere, doni eſſe nõ meriti, To teach vs that to beleeue, is of the gift of God, not of merit: de verbis Apoſt. ſerm. 2. To conclude, he ſaith yet more plainely: Totum reputa, quod iuſtus es pietati; quod autem peccator es, tuæ iniquitati aſcribe: Omne crimen, facinus, vel peccatum, noſtra eſt negligentiæ: Omnis virtus & ſanctitas Dei eſt indulgentiæ: That thou art iuſt, repute it wholy to godlineſſe; that thou art a ſinner, aſcribe it to thine owne iniquitie: euery ſinne and offence is of our owne negligence: all holineſſe and vertue in vs is of Gods mercie, in Mat. ſerm. 7. All our iuſtice then, whereby we are iuſt, dependeth of our godlineſſe, which is our faith, beleefe, and confidence in God.

Philip. 3. 9.

Now, ſhall follow ſome other arguments taken out of Scripture, to proue the imputation as well of Chriſts actiue as paſſiue obedience.

That not only Chriſts ſatiſfaction for our ſinnes, but his righteouſneſſe and all his merits are imputed to vs by faith.
Rom. 4. 25.
Hexapl. in Roman. c 4. qu. 41.

Argum. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, which was deliuered to death for our ſinnes, and roſe againe for our iuſtification: Here remiſſion of ſinnes, and iuſtification are made two diſtinct things, though in vſe and fruition neuer ſeuered, and both of them are imputed vnto vs by faith in Chriſt: and though it be here anſwered, that we haue both theſe by the death of Chriſt, but the perfiting and manifeſtation thereof is referred to Chriſts reſurrection: yet, it remaineth ſtill, that there is more in iuſtification, then remiſſion of ſinnes, for otherwiſe the Apoſtle ſhould commit a tautologie, a verball repetition of the ſame thing: and if the reſurrection of Chriſt muſt concurre to our iuſtification, then more is required, then his paſſion onely: ſee the more full explication of this place, elſe-where.

Rom. 5. 19.

Argum. 2. Rom. 5. 19. As by one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners, ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous: Here many are directly ſaid to be conſtituted iuſt, by Chriſts obedience: It will be anſwered, that the paſſiue obedience of Chriſt is vnderſtood, in being obedient vnto death.

Contra. Yea, the whole obedience of Chriſt in his life and death, is here inſinuated, as may thus appeare. 1. Chriſts obedience is ſet againſt Adams diſobedience, which was a tranſgreſſion of the whole law, therefore Chriſts obedience muſt be vnderſtood to be generall. 2. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the gift of righteouſneſſe, verſ. 17. but donum iuſtitiæ, the gift of righteouſneſſe is more, then the taking away of ſinnes. 3. And the reigning of righteouſneſſe, is ſet againſt the reigne of ſinne: but for ſinne not to reigne, and for righteouſneſſe to reigne, though one neceſſarily followeth the other, yet they are in themſelues diuerſe and different. 4. The Apoſtle vſeth the word κατασταθήσονται, conſtituentur, ſhall be conſtituted righteous, therefore iuſtification is a ſetling or conſtituting of man in the ſtate of righteouſneſſe before God, which is more then the remiſſion of ſinnes, which ſheweth a priuation onely acquitall or riddance of euill and ſinne.

*Argum.*3. Adde hereunto the place before vrged againſt inherent iuſtice, that Chriſt is our righteouſneſſe, ſanctification, redemption: which place is thus well interpreted by Maſter Caluine: by iuſtice or righteouſneſſe hee vnderſtandeth that both Chriſt doth expiate our ſinnes by his death, & eius obedientia nobis in iuſticiam imputatur, and his obedience is imputed to vs for righteouſneſſe: for ſeeing the iuſtice of faith conſiſteth in the remiſſion of ſinnes, and our gracious acceptance, vtrunq; per Chriſtum conſequimur, we obtaine both by Chriſt, &c. Beſide then the remiſſion of ſinnes, there is the imputation of Chriſts righteouſneſſe, that maketh vs accepted with God.

*Argum.*4. Euen reaſon it ſelfe ſheweth, that in iuſtification there is a gift of righteouſnes, beſide remiſſion of ſinnes: for in euery change and alteration, there are two things to be conſidered, from what we are changed, and into what, which are called, terminus à quo, & terminus ad quem: as when a thing is turned from black to white, there is the priuation of blacknes, and the ſucceeding of whitenes: as when in the ayre darknes is expelled, and light receiued: ſo to make a man iuſt, there muſt be a remiſſion of ſinne, and a conferring of righteouſneſſe: And vnto ſaluation belongeth, deliuerance from hell, and the poſſeſſion of heauen: the one we are freed from by the redemption from our ſins, the other is giuen vs for the acceptation of Chriſts righteouſneſſe. We are not onely freed from condemnation, but we alſo are made heires of God: the offender being abſolued from the ſentence of the Iudge, is not vpon that honoured and rewarded: ſo that it ſtandeth with the law of naturall reaſon, and courſe of ciuill iuſtice, that two things muſt concurre vnto iuſtification, an ablation of ſinne, and collation of righteouſnes.

*Argum.*5. To the perfiting of our redemption and ſetting of vs in poſſeſſion of heauen, it was requiſite, that both the law ſhould be fulfilled, which man had tranſgreſſed, and the puniſhment of the law ſatisfied, that man by his tranſgreſſion had deſerued: the one Chriſt did by his death, the other he wrought by his life: and therefore the imputation of both is neceſſarie: ſo S. Paul ſheweth this to be one of the ends for the which Chriſt tooke vpon him our fleſh, that the righteouſneſſe of the law might be fulfilled in vs. But it will be here ſaid, that both are not requiſite in Gods iuſtice, to keepe the law, and to pay the puniſhment: Gods iuſtice is ſatisfied, in that the puniſhment is anſwered for tranſgreſſing the law. Anſw. True it is, if we expected to receiue no more in Chriſt, then wee loſt in Adam, which was the loſſe of a terreſtriall paradiſe: to reſtore vs to that wee were in Adam, ſatisfaction for the puniſhment had ſufficed; but to bring vs to heauen, a new merit by Chriſts perfect obedience was to be procured, by the which heauen is purchaſed.

Rom.8.4.

*Argum.*6. If Chriſts actuall obedience bee not a part of our iuſtification, then ſome of Chriſts workes had been ſuperfluous, and not neceſſarie: for being vnſpotted in his birth and conception, if he had preſently ſhed his blood for vs in his infancie, among the reſt of the babes, that Herode for Chriſts cauſe put to death, it had ſufficed for our redemption: But whatſoeuer Chriſt did, he wrought all for vs, as tending to our iuſtification: his holy birth and life doe all conferre to that end: as our bleſſed Sauiour himſelfe ſaith: for this cauſe was I borne, and for this cauſe came I into the world, that I ſhould beare witnes to the truth.

Ioh.18.37.

But it will here be ſaid, that after Chriſt became man, it was requiſite, that he as man, ſhould keepe the law, and as man he was bound thereunto. Anſ. Chriſt muſt not be conſidered, as a particular or priuate man, working for himſelfe, but in the perſon of a Redeemer, doing all he did for vs: he ſaith, indeed, thus it becommeth vs to fulfill all righteouſnes: but why did it thus become him, as our Redeemer, to finiſh the worke of our redemption, for the which he was ſent: as S. Paul directly ſaith; He was made vnder the law, to redeeme them which were vnder the law: He was to be obedient to the law, and bound vnto it, but for our ſakes, to redeeme vs. This matter may bee thus reſembled, like as a Prince reſoluing to goe himſelfe into captiuitie, to redeeme his ſubiects that are taken captiues, when he commeth to deliuer them, will carrie himſelfe decently as it becommeth a Prince, yet all this was firſt vndertaken for his ſubiects: ſo Chriſt the Prince of glorie, comming into the world to redeeme man, being come, walketh in all vertue and holineſſe, as it became the perſon of the Redeemer; yet all this was vndertaken for vs: ſo that προηγουμένως, originally Chriſt became obedient to the law for vs, ἑπομένως, conſequently, he ſo was obedient in reſpect of his perſon.

Galath.4.5.

*Argum.*7. The death and paſſion of Chriſt was auailable, becauſe of the holineſſe of his perſon: wee were redeemed, with the precious blood of Chriſt, as of a lambe vndefiled: Chriſt could not haue redeemed vs, if he had not been moſt holy and innocent: Chriſts perſon cannot be ſeuered then from his obedience, from whence it taketh the value and force, the one then being imputed vnto vs, the other muſt alſo. It will be anſwered here, that the holineſſe and obedience of Chriſt was a preparation, and diſpoſition vnto his paſſion, but it followeth not, that the one ſhould be imputed as well as the other. Anſw. It followeth neceſſarily: Like as a Prince ſhould accept of an vnſpotted lambe for a captiue: if he bring one that is blemiſhed, and ſpotted, it will not be accepted: the captiue then is deliuered, becauſe of the ſpotleſſe lambe, which is offered: the priſoner then is accepted, becauſe of the ſpotleſſe gift: and ſo are we accepted of God, for the vndefiled Lambes ſake: it is then his innocencie which maketh his death, and vs in his death accepted.

1.Pet.1.19.

*Argum.*8. The Papiſts themſelues grant ſo much, iuſtitia Chriſti imputatur quoad ſatisfactionem, that Chriſts iuſtice is imputed in reſpect of his ſatisfaction: but they vtterly refuſe imputatiue iuſtice: ſhall then Proteſtants ioyne with Papiſts in ouerthrowing one of the greateſt points and articles, wherein we diſſent from the Church of Rome, concerning iuſtification, by the imputatiue iuſtice of Christ. We may here ſay, as Iehu the Prophet to Iehoſaphat, that ioyned with Ahab in battell, Wouldeſt thou helpe the wicked, and loue them that hate the Lord? 2. Chron. 19. 2.

Bellarm.lib.2. de Iuſtit.c.10. ſ.reſp.ad 3.argum.

Argum. 9. Now becauſe it is obiected, that this doctrine of imputed iuſtice hath no teſtimonie from the ancient fathers, I will ſhew how their iudgement herein inclined.

ἑνὸς δικαιοσύνη, &c. epiſt. ad Diognet. Iuſtinus Martyr: What other thing could couer our ſinnes, (then his iuſtice) the iuſtice of one hath made many vnrighteous, iuſt, &c.

Orat. de baptiſm. Baſile: Ex redemptione Chriſti eſt libertas à morte, —reconciliatio cum Deo, iuſtitiæ donum, —regni cœlorum hæreditas: From the redemption of Chriſt there is freedome from death, reconciliation with God, the gift of righteouſnes, the inheritance of the kingdome of heauen, &c. Wee haue then from our Redeemer, not only freedome from death and ſinne, but the gift of righteouſnes.

In 20. c. Ioann. tit. 1. Cyrillus: De plenitudine filij, quaſi iugi fonte gratiarum donum ſcaturiens, in ſingulas animas defluit, &c. From the fulnes of the Son, as a continuall fountaine, the gift of grace ſpringing, doth flow down into euery ſoule that is meete.

In 3. c. Ioann. homil. 27. Chryſoſtome: Deus per regenerationis lauacrum ab omnibus peccatis nos abſoluit, & iuſtitiam & ſanctificationem largitur: God by the lauacre of regeneration doth abſolue vs from all our ſins, and doth giue vs righteouſnes and ſanctification.

In 3. cap. ad Roman. Sedulius: Iuſtitia Dei eſt ſanctificatio per fidem, & remiſſio peccatorum, &c. The righteouſneſſe of God is ſanctification by faith, and remiſſion of ſinnes, &c. The ſanctification then of our nature, and the remiſſion of our ſinnes, are two diuers things.

In 7. cap. ad Hebreos. Primaſius: Chriſt, naſcendo, moriendo, reſurgendo, aſcendendo pacem attulit mundo: Chriſt by being borne, by dying, riſing again, aſcending brought peace vnto the world, &c. All then was not wrought only by his death.

In 8. c. ad Roman. Theodulus ſaith: Hæc Chriſtus fecit, vt ſcopus legis (hæc enim iuſtificatio eſt) impleatur in nobis, &c. Chriſt did theſe things, that the ſcope of the law, that is iuſtification, may be fulfilled in vs, &c. Againe, In 13. cap. ad Roman. Quiſquis Chriſtum induerit, habet vniuerſam virtutem: Whoſoeuer putteth on Chriſt, hath all vertue, &c. Againe, In 5. cap. ad Roman. The grace and gift of God ſo abounded, vt deleret omnia omnium peccata, nec id tantum effecit, verum ad iuſtificationem, id eſt, ad iuſtitiam omnes, &c. that it blotted out all mens ſins, and not only that, but it brought them to iuſtification, that is, to righteouſnes, &c.

In Pſalm. 70. Auguſtine: Cum ero iuſtus, tua erit iuſtitia, quia iuſtitia mihi abs te data iuſtus ero, —in eum enim credo, qui iuſtificat impium, vt deputetur fides mea ad iuſtitiam: When I ſhall be iuſt, it is thy iuſtice, becauſe I am iuſt by that iuſtice, which is giuen me of thee, for I beleeue in him that iuſtifieth the wicked, that my faith may be deputed for righteouſnes.

Libr. de baptiſm. Tertullian: Nec mors noſtra diſſolui poſſet, niſi Domini paſſione, nec vita reſtitui ſine ſurrectione ipſius: Neither could our death be diſſolued without Chriſts paſſion, nor our life reſtored without his reſurrection, &c. Here are two benefits purchaſed by Chriſt, the diſſoluing of death, and conferring of life.

Libr. 3. de virginib. Ambroſe: Si ſanari vis, medicus eſt; ſi febribus æſtuas, fons eſt; ſi grauaris iniquitate, iuſtitia eſt; ſi mortem times, vita eſt; ſi cœlum deſideras, via eſt, &c. If thou wouldeſt be healed, hee is thy Phyſition; if thou burneſt with feauers, he is a fountaine to coole thee; if thou art preſſed downe with iniquitie, he is thy righteouſnes; if thou feareſt death, he is life; if thou deſireſt heauen, he is the way, &c. Here is conferred iuſtice, life, the kingdome of heauen, which is more then remiſſion of ſinnes.

τοῖς πᾶσι γέγονε πάντα, Catecheſ. 10. So alſo Cyril: If thou wanteſt a refreſhing and comfort, he is a vineyard; to them, that would enter he is a doore; to them, that will offer vp their prayers, a Mediator; to them, that haue ſinne, he is a ſheepe to be ſlaine for them: and (he is become all to all): If Chriſt be all to all, then he is our redemption, our iuſtice, righteouſnes, and what not?

Serm. 2. de Pentecoſt. Bernard bringeth in Chriſt thus ſpeaking: Conceptio mea mundet tuam, vita mea inſtruat tuam, mors mea deſtruat tuam, reſurrectio mea præcedat tuam: Let my conception cleanſe thine, my life inſtruct thine, my death deſtroy thine, my reſurrection goe before thine, &c.

Theſe teſtimonies of the Fathers may ſuffice to ſhew that the doctrine of the Church was then, that not only by the death of Chriſt, we haue remiſſion of ſinnes, but life alſo and righteouſnes by beleeuing in him.

I will adde hereunto the teſtimonie of Ieremie the Greeke Patriarke, that it may appeare how this doctrine of the imputation of Chriſts actiue righteouſnes is embraced generally of the Church.

Singulis vitæ ſuæ & conuerſationis partibus, ſingulos illicitos animi noſtri motus Saluator confutat & perimit, &c. By the ſeuerall parts of his life and conuerſation our Sauiour doth confute and deſtroy the ſeuerall vnlawfull motions of our ſoule, —by his humilitie our pride, by his deiection our deſire of vaine glorie, by his pouertie our couetouſnes, by his faſting our gluttonie and drunkennes, by his chaſtitie our incontinencie; by his perſeuerance our inconſtancie, by his patience our wrath, &c. *Cenſur. In 1.Cor.1.30.

But Maſter Beza more diſtinctly maketh three parts of imputatiue iuſtice: for beſide the eſſentiall iuſtice of Chriſt, which is not communicable vnto vs; there is his habituall iuſtice, whereby from his very conception hee ſanctified our nature, and his actuall iuſtice in his perfect obedience to the law, and his paſſiue obedience in ſuffering the puniſhment: all theſe three are imputed to vs by faith.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE CERTAINTIE OF IUSTIFICATION BY FAITH.

The Papiſts.

THe Rhemiſts call it a faithleſſe perſwaſion of ſaluation to be confident of Gods grace and ſaluation, and fides dæmoniorum, non Apoſtolorum, the faith of diuels, not of Apoſtles, *annot.*8. 1. Cor. 9. *ſect.*9. So the Tridentine Councell, call certitudinem remiſſionis peccatorum vanam, & ab omni Pietate remotam fiduciam: The certaintie of remiſſion of ſinnes, a vaine and faithleſſe perſwaſion: And therefore euery man, de gratia timere & formidare poteſt, may ſtand in doubt and be afraid, whether hee be in the ſtate of grace, ſeſſ.6.c.9. This is alſo affirmed by Bellarm. that a man without ſpeciall reuelation, cannot be aſſured by his faith, that his ſinnes are forgiuen him, lib.3. de iuſtif cap. 2.

58.Error.

*Argum.*1. Prou.20.9. Who can ſay, my heart is cleane, I am pure from ſinne, which is not ſo to be vnderſtood, as though no man could haue a cleane heart: for our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, Bleſſed are the pure in heart. But the wiſe man thus ſpeaketh, becauſe no man can know whether his heart be cleane: ſic Bellarm.cap 4.

Prou.20.9. Matth.5.8.

*Anſw.*1. The words are thus to be read according to the Hebrue, Who can ſay I haue made my heart cleane: not after the vulgar Latine, Who can ſay my heart is cleane: So that the wiſe man here doth repreſſe the inſolencie of thoſe, which think to be iuſtified by their own ſtrength. And thus anſwereth Catharinus a Papiſt. 2. We ſay, that the meaning of the wiſe man is this, that no man can be cleane from ſinne in this life: In many things, we ſinne all, Iam.3.2. which if the Ieſuite will denie, as indeede he ſeemeth to doe, he contradicteth the holy Apoſtle, and commeth neere to the old Pelagian hereſie, Poſſe hominem eſſe ſine peccato: That a man may be without ſinne, yea they added alſo, per gratiam, by grace: *Auguſt.de natur.& grat.*1.11. 3. To be pure in heart, betokeneth not abſolute purenes in the ſight of God: for ſo neither the Angels nor the heauens are cleane. But to be pure in heart, is as much as to be vpright in heart, to be without deceit, as it is expounded, Pſalm.24.4 Not to haue a double heart, Pſal.12.2. As our Sauiour ſaid of Nathaniel, this is a true Iſraelite, in whom is no guile. This it is to be pure or vndefiled in heart. Auguſtine ſaith, Ingredi ſine macula dicitur, non qui iam perfectus eſt, ſed qui ad perfectionem irreprehenſibiliter currit: He is ſaid to walke without ſpot, not which is alreadie perfect, but who doth walke on forward towards perfection without reprehenſion: Auguſtine cont.Celeſt.de perfection.iuſtit. This purenes of heart, a faithfull man may ſee and know in himſelfe, as Dauid ſaith, I haue cleanſed my heart in vaine, and waſhed my hands in innocencie.

*Argum.*2. Eccleſ.9.1. No man knoweth whether he be worthie loue or hatred: Ergo, a man cannot be certaine of his iuſtification, Bellarm.ibid.

Eccleſ.9.1.11.

Anſw. The wiſe man meaneth not, that a man cannot any way at all know, whether he be in fauour with God: but that it cannot be diſcerned, by the outward chances and accidents of this life: as he ſheweth in the next verſe, that there is the ſame outward condition to the iuſt and wicked. Nay it many times fareth better with the wicked, then with the righteous in this life: I ſaw, ſaith he, vnder the Sunne, that riches are not for men of vnderſtanding, nor yet bread for the wiſe, nor fauour for men of knowledge, verſ.11.

Bellarmine replieth: The Preacher ſpeaketh onely of the iuſt and wiſe, and of their workes, verſ.1. he compareth not the wicked and the righteous together, ibid.

Eccleſ.3.21.19. Contra. In the next verſe the wiſe man expoundeth himſelfe, all things fall out alike to all, the ſame condition is to the iuſt and to the wicked,&c. as is the good, ſo is the ſinner, hee that ſweareth, as he that feareth an oath, verſ.2. It is euident therefore, that the wiſe man compareth here the righteous and wicked both together: and that he meaneth, that it cannot bee diſcerned by the outward euents of mans life, which of them is in fauour with God. And that this is his meaning, it may appeare by the like place, Who knoweth whether the ſpirit of man aſcend vpward, and the ſpirit of the beaſt deſcend downward? Not that wee are altogether ignorant of the end of mans ſoule: but it cannot be diſcerned by the outward and corporall death, what difference is betweene the ſpirit of man, and of beaſts: for as the one dieth, ſo dieth the other, verſ.19. So in this place, the wiſe man, ſaying, that no man knoweth hatred, or loue; doth not meane, that this is impoſſible to be knowne, but that it cannot by the externall things of this life be diſcerned: Sic Caluin.lib.3.inſtitut.cap.2.ſect.38.

Bellarmine anſwereth that Salomon in the third chapter ſpeaketh in the perſon of the vnwiſe, and worldly ſenſuall man, who knoweth no difference betweene the ſpirits of men, and bruit beaſts: Bellarm.cap.4.

Eccleſ.9.7,8. 1.Cor.15.33. Contra. So alſo doth the Preacher vtter many things in this chapter, in the perſon of the Epicure: as that, verſ.4. better is a liuing dogge, then a dead lion: Goe eate thy bread, and drinke thy wine: At all times let thy garments be white, and let no oyle be wanting vpon thine head, verſ.7,8. Theſe are the very ſpeeches of carnall and ſenſuall men, that place their whole happineſſe and felicitie in this life. Such alſo there were among the Corinthians, that ſaid, Let vs eate and drinke, for to morrow wee ſhall die: concerning whom the Apoſtle ſaith, Euill words corrupt good manners: for any thing then, that the Ieſuite hath yet ſaid, or is able to ſay, the meaning of the Preacher in this place is ſuch as we haue ſaid.

1.Cor.4.4. Argum.3. Saint Paul ſaith, I know nothing by my ſelfe, yet am I not thereby iuſtified. Though the Apoſtle had the teſtimonie of a good conſcience, yet hee durſt not aſſure himſelfe, whether hee were thereby iuſtified, Rhemiſt.in eum locum. Bellarm.lib.3.de iuſtificat.cap.5.

Rom.8.30. 1.Ioh.3.20. Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith not, I know not my ſelfe to be iuſtified, but I am not thereby iuſtified: therefore by this example it cannot be gathered, that wee haue no knowledge of our iuſtification. Secondly, this place rather maketh againſt popiſh inherent iuſtice: for the Apoſtle ſaith, hee is not iuſtified by his good conſcience, and ſo conſequently not by any good thing, that was in him. Thirdly, Paul was moſt ſure of Gods grace, and of his iuſtification through faith, Rom.8.30. Therefore it is too great boldnes, to ſay, the Apoſtle was not ſure of his iuſtification. Fourthly, this then is the Apoſtles meaning, that although he were cleere in conſcience, that hee walked moſt painfully in his calling, yet this was not ſufficient to cleere him, and pronounce him moſt iuſt before God: for, as S. Iohn ſaith, If our owne heart or conſcience condemne vs not, God is greater then our heart, and can eſpie what is amiſſe in vs, though we our ſelues ſee it not.

Bellarmine replieth, where the Apoſtle ſaith, Nihil mihi conſcius ſum: I know nothing by my ſelfe. Firſt, either he ſpeaketh of himſelfe in his owne iudgement, that he knew no ſinne in himſelfe, and then it is not true, that the Apoſtle was not iuſt, hauing no ſinne. Secondly, or that he knew his ſinnes to be forgiuen in Chriſt, and then alſo in their owne opinion, Paul was iuſtified, but now he ſaith, I am not thereby iuſtified. Thirdly, either they muſt ſay, that he ſpeaketh of the iudgement of others, but that cannot be: for he ſpeaketh of his owne iudgement, I iudge not my ſelfe, it remaineth then, that the Apoſtle ſheweth that notwithſtanding his conſcience that accuſed him not, he was not ſure of iuſtification, Bellarm.c.5.

1.Timoth.1.15 Galat.2.16.20. Philip.3.8,9. Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not in generall of his owne ſtate, as though hee knew no ſinne by himſelfe: the contrarie is confeſſed by him, that Chriſt came into the world to ſaue ſinners, of the which, ſaith he, I am chiefe. Secondly, neither doth the Apoſtle ſpeake of himſelfe, as now acquited of his ſinnes by faith in Chriſt: for ſo euery where he confeſſeth he was iuſtified by Chriſt. We haue beleeued in Chriſt, that we might be iuſtified,&c. I liue by the faith of the ſonne of God. That I might winne Chriſt, and might be found in him, not hauing mine owne righteouſneſſe, but that which is through faith, &c. Thirdly, he ſpeaketh then of his outward diſpenſation and Apoſtleſhip, wherein his owne conſcience bare him record, he had been faithfull, and therefore he paſſed in that behalfe, very little to bee iudged of them, becauſe I doe not iudge my ſelfe: that is as faultie or negligent in my calling, wherein I am iudged of others.

Philip.2.12. 2.Pet.1.10. Argum.4. Worke your ſaluation with feare and trembling: Ergo, men muſt not be ſecure, neither can be ſure of their ſaluation. Againe, Make your election and calling ſure by good workes. But this certaintie that dependeth of good workes, is but coniecturall: and if it doe ariſe from good workes, then faith only certifieth vs not of our iuſtification, Bellarm.cap.6.

Anſw. Firſt, the working of our ſaluation with feare, excludeth onely preſumption and careleſſe ſecuritie, not faithfull boldnes and confidence: As it may appeare in the verſe following, where the Apoſtle giueth a reaſon of this feare: For it is God which worketh,&c. We ought then to finiſh our ſaluation not doubtfully, becauſe God worketh it, and therefore we may be moſt ſure of his promiſe: but yet with feare and reuerence, as it becommeth children, for it is the Lord, with whom we haue to deale: thus we ſee confidence and the feare of God may very well ſtand together. Tertullian excellently ſheweth, how a reuerent feare and care, and a faithfull confidence and ſecuritie may ſtand together:

gether: Securi ſimus de noſtra conſcientia, optantes id perſeuerare in nobis, non tamen præſumere, nam qui præſumit, minus veretur — timor fundamentum ſalutis, præſumptio impedimentum timoris — qui ſecurus agit non eſt ſollicitus — at qui ſollicitus, is vere poterit eſſe ſecurus: Let vs bee ſecure of our conſcience, wiſhing to perſeuere, not to preſume: hee that preſumeth, feareth not: feare is the foundation of ſaluation, preſumption is an impediment of feare: hee that goeth on ſecure, is not carefull, but hee that is carefull, may very well be ſecure. Secondly, S. Peter maketh not mention only of good workes, but faith, ioyne vertue and other ſpirituall graces to your faith, verſ.5. Good workes then onely doe not make our vocation ſure, but faith and good workes, that is, faith working by loue: good workes then are a certaine demonſtration of our faith: and by faith we vnderſtand our vocation, and iuſtification. Againe, neither is it an vncertaine demonſtration that is made by workes, though it be not ſo perfect, as that which ſheweth the cauſe: for the heat doth euidently ſhew the fire, and a good tree is certainly knowne by good fruit: Neither did our Sauiour giue a coniecturall ſigne to know falſe Prophets by, but a ſure and infallible marke, when he ſaid, by their fruits you ſhall know them. Laſtly, we muſt vnderſtand, that there is a double aſſurance of our vocation, and iuſtification: One which is more perfect, by the cauſe ſhewing the effect, and that is the inward teſtimonie of the ſpirit: And this is for thoſe that are wholy ſpirituall. There is another not ſo perfect, by the effects demonſtrating the cauſe, and that is by the workes and fruites of the ſpirit, whereof S. Peter ſpeaketh: And this is for thoſe which are not yet able to comprehend the other.

Lib. de cult. fæminar.

Rom.8.16.

The Proteſtants.

THat by a liuely faith we may be aſſured, that our ſinnes are forgiuen vs, and that we be fully iuſtified in Chriſt, reconciled to God, and are remaining in the ſtate of grace: we haue moſt cleare and euident teſtimonies of Scripture to proue it.

*Argum.*1: Rom.8.15. Ye haue receiued the ſpirit of adoption, whereby we crie, Abba, father; the ſame ſpirit beareth witneſſe with our ſpirit, that we are the children of God: But the teſtimonie of the ſpirit is moſt certaine, for the ſpirit cannot be deceiued, neither doth deceiue any: Ergo, we may be certaine of our adoption, that we are the Sonnes of God.

Anſw. This teſtimonie of the ſpirit, whereby wee are moued to crie Abba father, is not knowne vnto vs by faith, or any other expreſſe meanes, but onely by certaine coniectures which may deceiue vs, as by the inward peace, and taſte of ſome ſweetneſſe in the ſoule: for there be many that call God their father, as the Iewes, Iohn 8.41. and many ſay in the Lords prayer, Our father, who are not aſſured that they are the Sonnes of God, Bellarm. reſponſ. ad 6. teſtimon. cap.9.

Contra. Firſt, to beleeue that God is our father, is of faith: for to beleeue that God is, and that hee is a rewarder, &c. is of faith, Heb.11.6. but it is more to beleeue that God is our father: how then ſaith the Ieſuite, Non conſtat nobis ex fide diuina: It is not knowne vnto vs by faith, that it is the ſpirit which moueth vs to crie Abba father?

Secondly, and ſay you that the inward peace of conſcience is but a coniecturall & deceitfull meanes: yet S. Iohn ſaith, If our owne heart condemne vs not, we haue boldneſſe toward God: is that vncertaine and barely coniecturall, which worketh boldneſſe in vs? The inward taſte alſo, and ſweetneſſe of the ſpirit, doth the Ieſuite make ſo ſmall account of it? hee that hath a true taſte of the mercie of God, ſeeth God: Taſte and ſee how gracious the Lord is: But he that ſeeth the Sonne, and beleeueth in him, is ſure to haue euerlaſting life, Iohn 6.40.

Pſal.34.8.

Iohn 6.40.

Thirdly, and what if many ſay with their mouth, Abba father, and yet are not ſure they are the children of God? the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of a crying with the mouth, but a crying in the heart: He hath ſent the ſpirit of his Sonne into our hearts, which crieth Abba father: for though all vtter the ſame voyce, yet is it not the ſame crying: The vncleane ſpirit made the ſame confeſſion outwardly of Chriſt, Mark. 5.7. acknowledging him to be the Sonne of God, which Peter did make, Matth.16. yet were not both one kinde of confeſſion: the beleefe of the heart, which was in Peter, and not in the other, did diſcerne their confeſſion.

Gal.4.6.

Now that the ſpirit of God, by his inward teſtimonie, doth not coniecturally but vndoubtedly aſſure vs, that we are the Sonnes of God, we ſhew it thus; the ſpirit of adoption expelleth all feare: for the Apoſtle ſaith, you haue not receiued the ſpirit of bondage to feare againe: And where no feare is, there loue is perfect, 1.Ioh.4.18. And where no feare is, there is no paineſulneſſe: therefore neither doubtfulneſſe, nor miſtruſt. Secondly, they to whom the ſpirit of God teſtifieth, that they are ſo the Sonnes of God, that they bee alſo heires with Chriſt, doe certainely knowe that they are the ſonnes of God: for how could they bee heires, vnleſſe they were ſonnes? But the ſpirit of God doth certifie vs that we are heires annexed with Chriſt: And our Sauiour ſaith, He that beleeueth, is alreadie paſſed from death to life: Ergo, much more are we ſure that we are Sonnes. Thirdly, hee that hath the ſpirit of the Sonne, is ſure he is alſo a ſonne: Becauſe ye are ſonnes, he hath ſent the ſpirit of his ſonne into your hearts: But he that hath the ſpirit of adoption, hath the ſpirit of the ſonne: Ergo, he is vndoubtedly ſure he is a ſonne. Many ſuch arguments may bee gathered out of the text it ſelfe: whereby the Ieſuites groſſe and corrupt cauils and gloſſes, may eaſily be auoyded: I wonder they are not aſhamed, thus to obſcure the euident light of Gods truth againſt their owne conſcience.

1.Ioh.4.18.

Rom.8.17.

Gal.4.6.

*Argum.*2. I am certaine, ſaith S. Paul, or I am perſwaded, that neither life, nor death, &c. ſhall ſeparate vs from the loue of God in Chriſt: The Apoſtle was fully perſwaded of his ſaluation in Chriſt.

Rom.8.38.

Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh onely in generall, as if hee ſhould haue ſaid: So many as are elected cannot certainely periſh, Rhemiſt.ibid.Bellarm.cap.9.reſponſ.ad teſtimon.7.

Contra. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not only in generall, but pronounceth particularly of himſelfe, I am 2.Tim.4.8. certaine: As more plainely: from hence forth is laid vp for me a crowne of righteouſneſſe.

Anſw. Secondly, S.Paul might haue this perſwaſion, by ſome ſpeciall reuelation, Rhem.ibid.

Contra. The ground of the Apoſtles perſwaſion is none other, but that which is common to all the faithfull, euen the loue of God in Chriſt: And ſo Auguſtine interpreteth this place, writing thus: Iſti
2.Tim.2.19. ſignificati ſunt ad Timotheum,&c. Thoſe of whom the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, are ſignified in another place to De corrept.& grat.cap.7. Timothie: The foundation of God remaineth ſure, the Lord knoweth who are his. And againe in another place: when the Apoſtle had ſhewed his owne confidence, There is laid vp for me a crowne of righteouſneſſe, he declareth that this priuiledge was not proper to him, but common to all the faithfull: And 2.Tim.4.8. not to me onely, but vnto them alſo that loue his appearing: Ergo, this aſſurance and confidence is common, though not in the like meaſure, to all faithfull Chriſtians.

Anſw. Thirdly, the word which the Apoſtle vſeth, ſignifieth not a certaine and infallible perſwaſion, but ſuch an one as ariſeth of coniecture and geſſe: As elſe-where hee ſaith, I am perſwaded of you
Rom.15.14. brethren, that you are full of goodneſſe,&c. And I am perſwaded the ſame faith dwelleth in thee: But the A-2.Tim.1.5. poſtle did not certainely know this, but only by coniecture, Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. Firſt, we grant, that this word πέπεισμαι, doth not alwaies ſignifie an vndoubted and infallible knowledge, and perſwaſion: yet I ſee no reaſon why it may not ſo ſignifie in thoſe places alleaged:
1.Cor.12.10. for the Apoſtles had the gift of diſcerning of ſpirits, whereof we reade, 1.Cor.12.10. though this gift be ceaſed now: by the which gift they might certainely be perſwaded, of the graces that were in the faithfull.

Secondly, howſoeuer this word may other where be taken, it is certaine that S.Paul ſpeaketh here of a full and perfect perſwaſion and aſſurance that hee had of his ſaluation, vnleſſe they will ſay that Saint Paul ſtood in doubt, or was not ſure of his ſaluation; which is a blaſphemous vntruth, ſeeing the Apoſtle doth in ſo many places proteſt and teſtifie his aſſured hope and confidence: As hee doubted not, but after his diſſolution to be with Chriſt, Phil.1.23. That there is a crowne of glory laid vp for him, 2.Tim.4.8. Who hath loued me and giuen himſelfe for me, Galath.2.20. But whom Chriſt loueth, he loueth to the end, Iohn 13.1.

Thirdly, this word that ſignifieth, to truſt, to be ſure, or perſwaded, is no where vſed, where mention is made of heauenly things, but it ſheweth an infallible truſt and confidence: as Epheſ.3.12. by whom we haue boldneſſe and entrance with confidence, by faith in him: the word here tranſlated confidence, is, πεποίθησις, which is deriued from the ſame word, which S.Paul vſeth in this place, Rom.8.38. And it betokeneth a full and ſtedfaſt perſwaſion, being ioyned with two other very ſignificant and effectuall words, παῤῥησία, boldneſſe, and πίστις, faith.

Bellarmine hath nothing to anſwere here: but that S.Paul ſpeaketh not of the confidence or certaintie of our iuſtification, but of the truth of the articles of the faith, that Chriſt is now riſen, aſcended, and ſitteth at the right hand of God a Mediator, and interceſſor, and therefore wee haue boldneſſe, Bellarm.reſponſ.ad loc.12.

Contra. Firſt, it is not the knowledge only of the articles of faith, that they are true, that can worke this boldneſſe, and confidence in vs: for then the diuell who beleeueth and acknowledgeth the truth of theſe things, Mark.5.7. Iam.2.19. ſhould haue acceſſe with confidence as well as the faithfull.

Secondly, S.Paul declareth elſe-where, that his acceſſe, or entrance with boldneſſe, is a fruit of our iuſtification by faith, Rom.5.1. Being iuſtified by faith we haue peace with God,&c. then it followeth, by whom we haue acceſſe thorough faith vnto this grace, verſ.2. therefore by the ſame faith which iuſtifieth, thorough the ſame we haue this boldneſſe.

*Argum.*3. Saint Iohn ſaith, We know we are tranſlated from death to life, becauſe we loue the brethren, 1.Iohn 3.14. Againe, hereby know we, that we dwell in him, and he in vs, becauſe he hath giuen vs of his ſpirit, chap.4.13. We know that we are of God, chap.5.19. He that beleeueth in the Sonne of God, hath the witneſſe of God in himſelfe, 1.Ioh.5.10. By theſe places it is proued, that we may be aſſured of the fauour of God, and that we are in the ſtate of grace.

Anſw. This knowledge, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, doth not ſhew an abſolute and infallible certaintie or ſureneſſe: but we may be ſaid to know, when as by ſignes and coniectures onely we doe gather any thing, Bellarm.reſponſ.ad loc.13.

*Contra.*1. It appeareth that this knowledge of our ſaluation wrought in vs by the ſpirit, is ſure and certaine, without any doubting, not coniecturall: becauſe the Apoſtle by this word vſeth to expreſſe
1.Ioh.5.18,20. the ſure and vndoubted apprehenſion, that we haue of any thing: We know that whoſoeuer is of God, ſinneth not: we know that the Sonne of God is come: This knowledge whereby wee know, that they which are borne of God, ſinne not, that is, haue not ſinne raigning in them; and whereby we alſo know, that Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is moſt firme and ſure without any wauering or doubting. Ergo, in the ſame ſenſe the Apoſtle ſaith, we know, that we are of God, verſ.19. for why ſhould not the ſame word, being twice taken in the ſame place, both in the verſe next before, and in the verſe next after, for a ſure and certaine knowledge, be ſo alſo vnderſtood in this verſe.

2. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not in the ſecond or third perſon, you know, or they know, but in the firſt, wee know, putting himſelfe in the number: Now I truſt they will not ſay that the Apoſtle did geſſe onely, and was not ſure that he had the holy Ghoſt: S. Paul indeede ſaith, I thinke that I haue the ſpirit of God, 1.Cor.7.40. not as though he doubted of it or ſpake by coniecture: but he thus ſpeaketh in modeſtie, leaſt he ſhould ſeeme to boaſt; for he was ſure he had the ſpirit: for if he could pronounce certainely of others: God hath giuen you his holy ſpirit, 1.Theſſal.4.8. much more was he certaine of himſelfe.

3. The knowledge of faith is ſure and certaine, without any doubting: as our Sauiour ſaith to Peter, O thou of little faith, wherefore didſt thou doubt? Matth.14.31. where faith is full and perfect then, there is no doubting. Saint Iames alſo ſaith, Let him aske in faith, and wauer not, Iam.1.6. But this knowledge, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, is of faith: He that beleeueth in the Sonne of God, hath the witneſſe of God in himſelfe, 1.Iohn 5.10. Ergo, it is a certaine and infallible knowledge.

4. That knowledge, whereby we doe aſſure our hearts before God, and haue boldneſſe with God, is a certaine and vndoubted knowledge. Such is this knowledge: Thereby we know wee are of the truth, and ſhall before him aſſure our hearts, and wee haue boldneſſe toward God, Ergo. If the Ieſuite anſwere vs, as he doth, that, audacia non eſt certitudo, boldneſſe is not certaintie: we reply againe, that boldneſſe, which the children of God ſhall haue in the day of iudgement, is full of confidence, without any deſpaire or doubting, and therefore certaine: but this knowledge worketh in vs ſuch boldneſſe: Herein is loue perfect in vs, that we ſhould haue boldneſſe in the day of iudgement: Ergo. 1.Iohn 3.19,21 1.Iohn 4,17.

Argum.4. Proue your ſelues, whether you are in the faith, examine your ſelues, know ye not your owne ſelues, how that Ieſus Chriſt is in you, except ye be reprobates, 2,Cor.13.5. Ergo, they that by faith are ſure that Chriſt is in them, are ſure alſo of their ſaluation, and know, that they are not reprobates.

Anſw. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of the preſence of Chriſt by grace, but by his power and prouidence: ſo that his meaning is, that vnleſſe they are giuen ouer to a reprobate ſenſe, they will acknowledge the power of Chriſt working amongſt them, by theſe myracles, which the Apoſtle wrought: and by which power he deliuered ſome to Satan, *Bellarm.reſponſ.ad teſtim.*11.

Contra. That the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the preſence of Chriſt by grace, and of iuſtifying faith; it may ſtrongly be gathered by theſe arguments: 1. The Apoſtle vſeth this phraſe of ſpeech, to be in the faith, or of the faith, when he would expreſſe the manner of iuſtification: as, They which be of faith, are bleſſed with faithfull Abraham: Gal.3.9. Where it is euident, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of iuſtifying faith. 2. Examine your ſelues, ſaith the Apoſtle: but it is that faith, which iuſtifieth, whereby we doe examine our ſelues: Let a man examine himſelfe, and ſo let him eate of this bread, &c. 1.Cor.11.28. To examine themſelues is to proue whether they be in the faith: 1.Cor.13.5. And that faith, whereby we doe eate and drinke worthily the bodie and blood of Chriſt, is iuſtifying faith. 3. S.Paul ſpeaketh of that faith, whereby we liue in Chriſt, verſ.4. But wee ſhall liue with him; but that is iuſtifying faith: The iuſt ſhall liue by faith, Rom.1:17. I liue by faith in the Sonne of God, Galath.2.20. 4. For Chriſt to be in vs, ſheweth his preſence and being by grace, and not by his power onely: he in whom Chriſt is, hee hath Chriſt, and hath the Sonne: he that hath the Sonne, hath life, euen life eternall: 1.Iohn 5.12. Ergo, he in whom Chriſt the Sonne of God is, hath eternall life: Ergo, knowing Chriſt to be in him, he knoweth thereby that hee ſhall be ſaued: by the being then of Chriſt in him, he is ſure of his ſaluation.

Argum.5. Further, wee thus reaſon for the certitude of iuſtification by faith out of theſe places of Scripture.

1. Ioh.3.21. He that doth the truth commeth to the light, that his deedes may be made manifeſt, that they are wrought according to God. But this a man cannot know, not being aſſured of his faith and iuſtification, that his workes are acceptable to God: whom it is impoſſible to pleaſe without faith. 1.

2. Ioh.14.17. But ye know the ſpirit, for he dwelleth with you, and ſhall be in you: Ergo, if we know the ſpirit to be in vs, we alſo conſequently know our iuſtification. 2.

3. Rom.4.13. Therefore it is by faith, that the promiſe may be ſure: Ergo, wee by faith are ſure of the promiſe. 3.

4. Epheſ.3.12. By whom we haue boldneſſe and entrance with confidence by faith in him: Ergo, faith maketh vs confident and aſſured. 4.

*Anſw.*1. Chriſt ſpeaketh of thoſe which in a ſimple heart came vnto him, as Nathanael, Nicodemus, not being yet iuſtified, but comming to be iuſtified; how then could they yet be ſure of their iuſtification? *Bellarm.c.9.reſp.ad loc.*2. 1.

Contra. Chriſt ſpeaketh of beleeuers, verſ.18. He that beleeueth, ſhall not be condemned: of thoſe that doe the truth, whoſe deedes are wrought according to God: but they, which are but comming to Chriſt, hauing yet no knowledge of the truth, cannot doe the truth, nor worke according to God. Iohn 3.18.21.

Anſw. By the preſence of the ſpirit we are not ſure of our iuſtification, but onely we know, hauing faith, that it is not without Gods helpe, *Bellar.reſp.ad loc.*4. 2.

Contra. A moſt abſurd anſwere: a man, ſaith he, is not ſure of his faith: but if he haue faith, hee is ſure the ſpirit worketh it. Firſt, if a man be ſure of the ſpirit, how is he not ſure of faith, which is the effect of the ſpirit? as if there be fire, there is heate neceſſarily. Secondly, indeed if a man haue not faith, he cannot be ſure of it: but when he hath it, he knoweth he hath it, becauſe hee knoweth hee hath the ſpirit that worketh it.

Anſ. Abraham was ſure by faith: but we haue not ſuch a faith as Abraham had, Bell.reſp.ad 5.teſtim. 3.

Contra. Firſt, that the promiſe might be ſure by faith to all the ſeede, ſaith the Apoſtle: Ergo, not in Abraham only, but in all his ſeed faith worketh the ſame ſureneſſe. Likewiſe, That righteouſneſſe might be imputed to them alſo that walke in the ſteps of the faith of Abraham. Secondly, ſo S. Ambroſe expoundeth: Quid credidit Abraham? ſe ſemen habiturum, in quo omnes gentes iuſtificarentur per fidem, ſicut & Abraham, &c. What did Abraham beleeue? that he ſhould haue a ſeed, wherein all nations ſhould be iuſtified by faith, as Abraham was iuſtified, &c. in 4. c. ad Roman. Abrahams faith then and ours is the ſame.

Rom. 4.12.

4. Anſw. The certitude, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, is not of our iuſtification, but of the truth of the myſteries of faith, as of Chriſts death, reſurrection, &c, Bellarm. reſp. ad loc. 12.

Rom. 5.1.2. Contra. S. Paul aſcribeth this aſſurance to iuſtification by faith: as, Being iuſtified by faith, we are at peace with God: then it followeth verſ. 2. by whom we haue entrance by faith: where the Apoſtle vſeth the ſame word προσαγωγὴν, which he doth here: ſhewing that our entrance with boldneſſe is a fruit or effect of our iuſtification by faith.

1. Auguſtine ſaith vpon theſe words, Iohn 5.22. He that beleeueth—is paſſed from death to life: Ego audiui verba Domini, credidi—tranſij de morte ad vitam, ad iudicium non venio, non præſumptione mea, ſed promiſſione ipſius: I haue heard the words of God and beleeued: when I was an vnbeleeuer, I became a beleeuer, I am paſſed from death to life (as he ſaith) I come not to iudgement, not by my preſumption but by his promiſe. tract. 22. ſuper Ioann. Here Auguſtine directly affirmeth, that hee was by faith ſure of life, and freed from iudgement. Againe, he ſaith, Vnuſquiſq; inſpiciat ſe intus, appendat ſe, probet ſe in omnib. factis ſuis—fides, quæ operatur per dilectionem ſi in vobis eſt, iam pertinetis ad prædeſtinatos: Let euery man looke into himſelfe, examine, proue himſelfe—if faith working by loue be in you, euen now you doe belong vnto the number of the predeſtinate: de verb. Apoſtol. ſerm. 16.

Origen ſaith, Tract. 7. in Matth. Omnis anima, quæ ſe inſeparabilem eſſe cognoſcit à Chriſto, dicit, &c. Euery ſoule which knoweth it ſelfe to be inſeparable from Chriſt, ſaith, Who ſhall ſeparate vs, &c.

Epheſ. 3.17. S. Ambroſe thus excellently writeth vpon theſe words: That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith: In eo petit eos magis firmari, vt non ambigant, ſed magis credant Chriſtum habitare in ſe, vt certi ſint de Chriſto, quòd habitat per fidem, &c. Hee deſireth them therein to bee confirmed, that they ſhould not doubt, but rather beleeue that Chriſt dwelleth in them, that they may be ſure of Chriſt that hee dwelleth by faith in their hearts, that when we haue his faith in our hearts, we may be knowne to haue him, vt ſecuri ſimus de auxilio eius, that we may be ſure or ſecure of his helpe, becauſe he doth not forſake vs, but is alway preſent, becauſe of his faith, which he ſeeth to be in vs, &c.

2 Theodoret ſaith: Fides eſt inſita credentium animis citra ambiguitatem aliquam diſpoſitio: Faith is a diſpoſition ſetled in the minde of beleeuers without any ambiguitie.

Harm. ſect. 8. pag. 239. 3 Confeſſ. of Wirtemberg. c. 14. We are not ignorant, that ſome doubt of the mercie and fauour of God doth alwaies cleaue to our fleſh, ſo long as we liue in the bodie: but ſeeing God doth promiſe vnto vs his free mercie for Chriſt his Sonnes ſake—he doth require, that we ſhould mortifie this doubting of the fleſh, and haue a moſt aſſured affiance in his mercie: And to this purpoſe Hilarie is alleaged: Iuſtification through faith is none at all, if faith it ſelfe be doubtfull. Belgia. artic. 23. This righteouſneſſe doth driue from our conſcience all feare. Saxonie. artic. of iuſtification: This common error of doubting is euidently refuted by theſe words, being iuſtified by faith, we are at peace with God, &c.

Ibid. ſect. 9. p. 285.

We want not their owne teſtimonie: Decr. Greg. lib. 5. tit. 7. c. 1. Stephanus: Dubius in fide infidelis eſt: He that is doubtfull in faith, is an Infidell.

Ambroſ. Catharinus apolog. cont. Dominic. à Soto, Enchirid. Colonienſ. tract. de iuſtificat. Theſe Popiſh authors doe herein agree with vs: Poſſe fidèles certa fide ſtatuere, ſibi remiſſa peccata: That faithfull men by their faith, may certainly determine that their ſinnes are forgiuen them.

Laſtly, let vs adioyne the conſent and teſtimonie of the holy Martyrs: Maſter Patricke Hamelton Martyr, condemned for this article with others, for ſaying, He is not worthie to be called a Chriſtian, which beleeueth not that he is in grace: Fox. pag. 974. col. 2. articul. 4. Maſter Tyndall ſaith thus: Chriſt is thine, and all his deedes are thy deedes, Chriſt is in thee, and thou in him, neither canſt thou bee damned, except Chriſt be damned with thee: neither can Chriſt be ſaued, except hee be ſaued with thee: pag. 1248. Maſter Bradford thus: Know for a certaine, that as the diuell goeth about nothing ſo much, as to bring you in doubt, whether you be Gods childe: ſo whatſoeuer ſhall moue you to admit that dubitation, bee aſſured, the ſame to come of the diuell: pag. 1640. epiſtol. quadam. Maſter Philpot thus boldly and confidently proteſteth: Let him doubt of his faith that liſteth, God giue me alwaies grace to beleeue, that I am ſure of true faith, and fauour in Chriſt: pag. 1825. Iulius Palmer Martyr thus confeſſeth: No man can beleeue, but by the inſpiration of the holy Ghoſt: therefore if I were not a ſpirituall man, and inſpired with Gods holy ſpirit, I were not a true Chriſtian: Qui ſpiritum Chriſti non habet, hic non eſt eius: He that hath not the ſpirit of God, is none of his, pag. 1938. All theſe holy Martyrs, with many other, both were aſſured themſelues of their ſaluation by faith in Chriſt, and in confirmation of this doctrine, gaue their moſt precious liues. Such a ſeale of their doctrine our aduerſaries are neuer able to ſhew.

AN APPENDIX, WHETHER FAITH, OR the grace of iuſtification may be loſt.

The Papiſts.

A Man, they ſay, may fall away from the faith, which once truly he had, and be depriued altogether of the ſtate of grace, ſo that he may iuſtly be counted among the reprobates: Bellarm.lib.3.de iuſtificat.cap.14. 57.Error.

*Argum.*1. Firſt, they alleage theſe and ſuch like teſtimonies of Scripture: If a righteous man turne away from his righteouſneſſe,&c. S.Paul alſo ſaith of ſome, That they had made ſhipwracke of their faith: Rhemiſt.Bellarm.lib.3.de iuſtificat,cap.12.Ergo, true faith and iuſtice may be loſt. Ezech.18.2?.

Anſw. The Apoſtle ſaith, ſome hauing put away a good conſcience, made ſhipwracke of faith: ſuch a faith indeede, that hath not a good conſcience may be loſt: for it is not a true liuely faith, but a dead fruitleſſe faith: So is alſo the place in Ezechiel to be vnderſtood, of ſuch righteous perſons, as ſeemed ſo to be rather, then were ſo indeede. And thus S.Luke teacheth vs to expound it: who, whereas other Euangeliſts write, From him that hath not, ſhall be taken away, euen that which he hath: he ſaith, that which he ſeemed to haue, God taketh away his grace from him, that hath it not; but ſeemeth onely to haue it: he giueth ſtill to him that hath. Thus one of your owne expoundeth this place: Fidem quam habere magis viderentur, quam haberent perdiderunt: They loſt faith, which they rather ſeemed to haue, than they had indeede: Eſpenc.in hunc locum. 1.Tim.1.19. Luk.8.18.

*Argum.*2. Further, theſe places of Scripture are produced:

1. They receiue the word with ioy, but they haue no roote, which for a while beleeue, but in the time of tentation goe away: Theſe haue faith, for they beleeue the word of God, yet fall away. 1.

2. Iohn 15.2. Euery branch that beareth not fruit in me, he taketh away: but it can be no branch, vnleſſe it were once in the ſtocke. 2.

3. Matth.24.12. The loue of many ſhall waxe colde. 3.

4. 1.Cor.9.27. I doe chaſtice my body, leſt when I haue preached to others, I ſhould be a reprobate. 4.

5. Galath.5.4. Whoſoeuer are iuſtified by the law, are fallen from grace. 5.

6. Hebr.6.4. It is impoſſible, that they which were once lightened,&c. and haue taſted of the word of God, if they fall away,&c. Ergo, they which haue faith may loſe it, and fall away from it: Bellarm.cap.14. 6.

*Anſw.*1. The text expoundeth it ſelfe, they had no roote, and they beleeued but for a while: Ergo, they had no true faith: for a true faith is not without a roote: Epheſ.3.17. That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith, that being rooted,&c. 1.

2. Hypocrites and vnbeleeuers may for a while be counted among the branches of Chriſt, but they were neuer true branches: firſt, Chriſt ſaith, verſ.5. I am the vine, ye are the branches, ſpeaking to his faithfull followers. Secondly, Matth.15.13. Euery plant, which my father hath not planted, ſhall be rooted vp: there are plants then in outward ſhew, not planted of God: but all the true branches of the true vine are planted of God. Thirdly, then as S.Iohn ſaith, They went out from vs, but were not of vs. ſo theſe branches may be accounted among the true branches, ſecundũ præſentem iuſtitiã, non ſecundũ præſcientiam, according to their preſent iuſtice, but not in reſpect of Gods preſcience: as Ambroſe wel ſaith. 2. 1.Iohn 2.19.

3 That loue, which falleth away, was neuer any true loue: as Auguſtine: Charitas, quæ deſeri potuit, nunquam vera fuit: Charitie, which may be forſaken, was neuer true charitie. This ſentence is rehearſed, decret.p.2.cauſ.33.diſt.2.c.2. 3.

4. Firſt, S.Paul hath no ſuch feare leſt he ſhould become a reprobate or caſt-away: hee profeſſeth the contrarie, that he was perſwaded nothing could ſeparate him from the loue of God: and I truſt ye ſhall know we are not reprobates. And ſay if you dare, that Paul the elect veſſell might become a reprobate. Secondly, but his meaning is this, leaſt if he preached one thing, and practiſed another, he might be reproued and reproached of men: in which ſenſe he ſaith, though we be as reprobates, that is in mans iudgement, and as hee expoundeth himſelfe, If I build the things that I haue deſtroyed, I make my ſelfe a treſpaſſer, παραβάτην, which is all one, as if he had ſaid, ἀδόκιμον, reproued, or reprobate to men. 4. 2.Cor.13.6. 2.Cor.13.7. Gal.2.18.

5. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of any mans particular ſtate, but of the generall falling away of the Galathians from the doctrine of the Goſpell: as, I marueile ye are ſo ſoone remoued to another Goſpell: Are ye ſo fooliſh, that when ye haue begun in the ſpirit, ye would end in the fleſh? This is then nothing to the purpoſe. 5. Gal.1.6.c.3.3.

6. Theſe which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, neuer had any true faith, but onely a taſte thereof, and a momentanie or ſuperficiall lightning of the minde: for the Apoſtle ſaith, They that went out from vs, that is, fell away, were not of vs. 6. 1.Iohn 2.19.

Thus their owne gloſſe expoundeth this text: Aliud eſt bibere, vel manducare, aliud deguſtare,&c. It is one thing to drinke or eate, another thing to taſte: he drinketh, that is rooted in charitie: Ille deguſtat, qui ea aliquatenus communicat, à qua poſtea delinquendo recedit, de quibus Apoſtolus: Impoſſibile eſt,&c. He taſteth, that doth ſomewhat communicate of that water, but afterward by ſinning departeth; of whom the Apoſtle ſaith: It is impoſſible, that they which are once lightened, and haue taſted,&c. if they fall away,&c. Cauſ,33.diſt.2.c.44.gloſſ.

*Argum.*3. Dauid, Peter, did grieuouſly fall: Saul, Simon, Iudas, became reprobates: Ergo, the righteous may finally fall away. Bellarm.

Luk.22.32.

Anſw. Firſt the faith of Dauid and Peter, by their tranſgreſſion, was greatly decayed, and much ſhaken, yet not vtterly loſt: for Chriſt prayed for Peter, that his faith ſhould not faile. Secondly, as for the reſt, they were neuer[a] truly iuſt or righteous. Iudas is called the childe of perdition, and when he was[b] in his holieſt courſe, he was but a theefe, and an hypocrite, as the Scripture teſtifieth of him. Saint Peter alſo ſaith of Simon Magus, That his heart[c] was not right in the ſight of God, howſoeuer he appeared before men: Act.8.21. Theſe examples therefore proue nothing.

[a] This by a popiſh Cauiller is called a notable lye, that Saul was neuer truely iuſt: whereas the Scripture in ſaying of Dauid, that the Lord had ſought him a man after his owne heart. 1.Sam.13.14 doth imply, that Saul was not a man after the Lords heart: Auguſtine ſaith, that Saul was, Rex peſſimus perſecutor ſancti ſerui, &c. A wicked King perſecutor of his holy ſeruant Dauid: *de ſanct. ſerm.*17. And he applieth vnto him that text, Iob 34.30. Qui regnare facit hypocritam, &c. which cauſeth an hypocrite to reigne, &c. *in Pſalm.*51. hee thinketh hee was from the beginning an hypocrite. [b] This alſo is termed a notable lye: whereas our bleſſed Sauiour pronounceth of Iudas, that he was a diuell. Iohn 6.70. euen at the beginning, when he was choſen to be one of the twelue, he was alſo a thiefe long before he betrayed Chriſt, Iohn 12.6. vpon which place Auguſtine thus writeth: Non tunc periit, iam fur erat, & Dominum perditus non corde ſed corpore ſequebatur: Hee did not then periſh (when hee betrayed his Maſter) hee was euen now a thiefe, and followed the Lord being a caſt-away, not in heart but in bodie, &c. tract. ſerm. Ioann. then the lye is giuen to Auguſtine, yea to the Scripture it ſelfe: See my further anſwere *Retect. p.*43. [c] Here I am charged with corrupting the Scripture, becauſe I reade was not, for, is not: whereas I in ſo citing the Scripture, haue relation not to the time preſent wherein Saint Peter ſo ſpake, but to the time now paſt: Saint Peter might by the like reaſon be charged to be a corrupter, becauſe that place, Pſal.16.9. Thou wilt ſhew mee the waies of life: he citeth as ſpoken in the time paſt ἐγνώρισας, thou haſt made knowne: hauing reference to the fulfilling of that Propheſie, which was fore-tolde by Dauid: ſuch peeuiſh Cauilling is not worthie of an anſwere: See further a more full anſwere, *Retect. pag.*228.

Annot. in Iudg.16.17.

Annot. in 1. Chron.28.8. Salomon did not finally fall away. 2.Sam.7.15.

*Argum.*4. The Doway proctors and agents for the Pope and Poperie, would thus infringe the certaintie of faith: as of Sampſon they giue this note, vpon theſe words, If my head ſhall be ſhauen, my ſtrength ſhall depart from me: Supernaturall ſtrength or grace departeth, when any leaue the rule of their profeſſion: and concerning Dauid, they ſay, that he was not without faith, yet contaminate not with iniquitie: ſo they ſay Salomon loſt Gods grace, and fell away.

Contra. One anſwere may ſerue for all theſe obiections: theſe holy men had their ſlips and infirmities, their faith was eclipſed, and obſcured by their ſinnes: but it was not vtterly loſt and extinguiſhed, it reuiued againe, as the trees, that ſeeme to be dead in Winter, reuiue in the Spring, and the coales couered with aſhes, kindle againe: And the Lord teſtifieth of Salomon: My mercie ſhall not depart from him as I take it from Saul.

The Proteſtants.

See what is here obiected, and the ſame anſwered, *Retect. p.*124. and before. Error. 52. Proteſt. in the margine.

OVr ſentence is this: that he which once hath receiued a true liuely faith, and is thereby iuſtified before God, can neuer finally fall away; neither can that faith vtterly periſh, or faile in him, though it may for a while ſomewhat decay, and be empaired, yet ſhall it reuiue, and hee be raiſed vp againe.

*Argum.*1. Iohn 4.14. He that drinketh of the water that I ſhall giue him, ſhall neuer be more athirſt, &c. 1.Iohn 3.9. Whoſoeuer is borne of God, ſinneth not, for his ſeed remaineth in him, &c. Ergo, the grace of iuſtification cannot be loſt.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that ſo long as they haue this water and ſeede, they ſhall neither thirſt, nor ſinne; but the fountaine may be dried vp, and the ſeed loſt: and then may they fall into both.

*Contra.*1. The Goſpell ſaith, It ſhall be in him a Well of water, ſpringing vp to euerlaſting life: Ergo, it cannot be dried vp; for it ſpringeth continually and ſtinteth not, till it haue brought him to life eternall. 2. Saint Iohn ſaith not, they ſinne not, if, or while they haue their ſeed: but ſimply, becauſe their ſeed abideth. Neither doth he reaſon thus: they ſinne not: Ergo, they haue the ſeed: But they haue this ſeed abiding: Ergo, they cannot ſinne: for if they that are borne of God, are ſubiect to ſinne in ſuch ſort, as the Apoſtle meaneth, then may the childe of God, be the childe of the diuell: for he that ſo ſinneth willingly with delight, and continuance therein, is of the diuell.

Iohn 5.24.

*Argum.*2. He that beleeueth, is alreadie paſſed from death to life: If it be then poſſible for a man to be brought from life to death, from heauen backe againe to hell, then may a faithfull beleeuer become alſo a faithleſſe infidell.

Cantic. 8.7. 1.Cor.13.8.

*Argum.*3. Much water cannot quench loue, neither can the floods drowne it: Loue doth neuer fall away; if charitie cannot be loſt, then neither faith, for without faith there is no charitie.

Anſw. Charitie indeede falleth not away, but a man may fall from charitie: and as long as charitie remaineth, no floods, that is, perſecutions can drowne it or extinguiſh it: *Bellarm. c.*15. reſp. ad 1. teſt. & 4.

Epheſ. 2.17. Luk.8.13.

*Contra.*1. As charitie it ſelfe is alwaies permanent, both in this world and the next, which I grant is the ſpeciall meaning of the Apoſtle: yet it is true alſo, that true charitie cannot bee ſeparated from the heart of a faithfull man, being rooted (ſaith the Apoſtle) and grounded in loue: How can that wither, which hath a roote? the ſeede ſowen in ſtonie ground doth wither, becauſe it hath no roote. Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Radicata eſt charitas, ſecurus eſto, Charitie is rooted, be ſecure or out of doubt: *tract.*8. ſuper epiſt. 1. Ioan. rehearſed *cauſ.*33. *diſtinct.*2. *c.*3. 2. Origen expoundeth this place, 1.Cor.13. of the ſtabilitie and firmeneſſe of charitie, *tract.*23. in Matth. vpon theſe words, Charitie neuer falleth away: Ex charitate nunquam excidente erant illa voces dicentis, confido, &c. From charitie neuer falling away, proceeded thoſe ſpeeches of the Apoſtle, I am perſwaded, that neither death, nor life, &c. can ſeparate me from the loue of God, &c. 3. Saint Gregory alſo thus expoundeth the firſt place, Valida eſt vt mors dilectio, virtuti mortis dilectio comparatur, quia mentem, quam ſemel caperit, à delectatione mundi funditus occidit, &c. Loue is ſtrong as death; loue is compared to the ſtrength of death, becauſe it doth ſlay in the minde for euer where it is the delight of the world, lib.10.moral.c.22. repeated, cauſ.33.diſt.2.c.4.

1. Auguſtine doth plainly ſet downe his ſentence of this matter: Horum fides quæ per dilectionem operatur, profecto, aut omnino non deficit, aut ſi qui ſunt quorum deficit, reparatur, antequam vita iſta finiatur: de correpț.& grat.cap.7. Their faith, which worketh by loue, either neuer faileth at all, or if it doe faile in any, it is repaired againe, before the life be ended: this ſentence is ratified, cauſ.33.diſtinct.2.c.25.

Tertullian here is a moſt plentifull witneſſe: Illius es (i. Chriſti) conſcriptus in libris vitæ: Thou art his, that is, Chriſts, written in the booke of life. Againe, Inter hæc vada & freta idololatriæ velificata ſpiritu Dei fides nauigat, tuta ſi cauta, ſecura ſi attonita: Amid theſe ſeas and ſhallowes of idolatrie ſaileth faith winded by the ſpirit of God, ſafe, if it be warie, and ſecure, if appaied: fides integra ſecura de ſalute, faith intire is ſecure of ſaluation, &c. But faith, if it were mutable and ſubiect to be loſt, could not bring this ſecuritie.

Seeing then the couenant betweene God and man in Chriſt is vnchangeable, the ſeale of the couenant, which is faith, muſt needes alſo bee firme and permanent.

This truth alſo is ſealed by Maſter Bradford holy Martyr: Our cecitie or blindneſſe, and corrupt affections, doe often ſhadow the ſight of Gods ſeede in Gods children, as though they were plaine reprobates: whereof it commeth, that they praying according to their ſenſe, but not according to the truth, deſire of God to giue them againe his ſpirit, as though they had loſt it, and hee had taken it away: which thing God neuer doth indeede; although hee make vs to thinke ſo for a time. Fox pag.1655.

THE FIFTH PART OF GOOD WORKES, first in generall, then in particular.

Concerning good workes in generall, the ſeuerall queſtions are theſe; firſt, of the law, which is the rule of good workes: ſecondly, of good workes themſelues.

THE FIRST QVESTION OF THE LAW.

THe parts of this queſtion are theſe: firſt, of the differences of the Law and the Goſpell: ſecondly, whether the law be poſſible to be kept: thirdly, of the workes of Supererogation: fourthly, whether God be to be ſerued for hope of reward, or feare of puniſhment.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE TRVE AND FALSE difference betweene the Law and the Goſpell.

FIRST OF THE FALSE DIFFERENCES.

Coloſſ.2.17.
Heb.7.12.
Galath.3.24.
Rom.8.15.
Acts 15.10.
Matth.11.30.

THere are ſome differences betweene the Law and the Goſpell, concerning the which wee are both agreed: as firſt the Law ſetteth foorth but the ſhadow of things to come; the Goſpell containeth the body it ſelfe, Coloſſ.2.17. Secondly, the law of Moſes was mutable, and to be changed, Heb.7.12. if the Prieſthood be changed, there muſt be a change alſo of the law: but the Goſpell is eternall. Thirdly, the law was not giuen, to iuſtifie vs, but to be onely a ſchoolemaſter to bring vs to Chriſt, Galath.3.24. The Goſpell teacheth the way to life by Chriſt. Fourthly, the law of Moſes engendred feare: the Goſpell bringeth libertie and peace, Rom.8.15. You haue not receiued the ſpirit of bondage to feare againe. Fifthly, the law of Moſes was a hard yoke, grieuous to be borne, Acts 15.10. but Chriſts yoke is eaſie, Matth.11.30. Theſe differences we acknowledge: but theſe following we doe vtterly reiect.

58. Error.

FIrſt, Bellarmine ſaith, the Goſpell differeth from the law, as a perfect thing from an imperfect: and that the Goſpell is contained and included in the law, as the tree in the ſeede: and that the Goſpell doth not only explane, and expound the law, but addeth the Counſels of perfection vnto it: Bellarm. de iuſtificat. lib.4.cap.4.

The Proteſtants.

Luke 1.70.

Contra. 1. IF by the law we vnderſtand whatſoeuer is contained in the old Teſtament, as for Moſes and the Prophets wee willingly grant, that the doctrine of the Goſpell is included in the law: for of Chriſt ſpake all the Prophets, Luk. 1.70. but then ſhould wee not ſpeake properly to our purpoſe: for when we compare the Law and the Goſpell together, wee vnderſtand onely the law of workes, which is called the morall law, as it is oppoſite to the doctrine of faith. 2. This then wee affirme, that the law of faith, which is the ſubſtance of the Goſpell, is not incluſiuely contained in the decalogue, which is the law of works: as it may appeare by theſe reaſons.

Rom.7.9.
Rom.6.2.
Rom.3.28.
Rom.11.6.
Mark.9.22.

1. The law of workes and the law of faith haue contrarie effects: by the law ſinne is reuiued, and receiueth ſtrength, Rom.7.9. but being baptized by faith into Chriſts death, we are dead vnto ſinne, Rom.6.2. Ergo, no affinitie betweene the Law and the Goſpell, which commandeth faith. 2. If faith were commanded in the law, it ſhould be a worke of the law, which the Apoſtle denieth, concluding thus: That a man is iuſtified by faith, without the workes of the law. 3. Grace excludeth workes, and workes exclude grace. If of workes, then no more of grace: workes alſo exclude faith and beleefe: Rom.4.5. To him that worketh not, but beleeueth, &c. If then the law of workes exclude faith, faith can in no wiſe be included in the law. The Goſpell therefore and the law are two diſtinct things: the law ſaith, Doe this, and thou ſhalt be ſaued: the Goſpell; Beleeue only, and it ſufficeth vnto life: For all things are poſſible to him that beleeueth: the doctrine therefore of the faith of the Goſpell cannot be ſet forth in the law of workes: and if it were, this would ſhew an agreement rather betweene the Law and the Goſpell, then a difference: for betweene the thing that containeth, and that which is contained, there muſt needes be ſome affinitie: therefore the Ieſuite cannot properly herein make any difference betweene the law and the Goſpell.

Saint Ambroſe ſaith, in Luc.12. Nemo ſub lege fidem conſtituat; lex enim intra menſuram, vltra menſuram gratia; nemo fidem intra menſuram legis conſtituat: Let no man place faith in the law: the law is within meaſure; grace is without meaſure: let no man place faith within the meaſure of the law, &c. Ergo, faith is not contained in the law.

1. Tertullian ſaith: Euangelica gratia euacuatur, ſi ad legem Chriſtum redigit: The grace of the Goſpell is euacuated, if it ſhould reduce Chriſt to the law.

In 3. cap. ad Galatas.

2. Theodoret ſaith: Lex non quærit fidem, ſed actionem exigit: The law ſeeketh no faith, but exacteth action, &c. How then is the Goſpell contained in the law?

Harm. ſect.7. pag.202.

3. Latter Confeſſion of Heluetia, chap.13. The Goſpell is oppoſed to the law, for the law worketh wrath, but the Goſpell doth preach grace, and a bleſſing, &c.

4. Cauſ.23.qu.4.c.16. Cum lege ſcriptum ſit, diliges amicum, odio habebis inimicum, &c. Whereas it is written in the law, Thou ſhalt loue thy friend, and hate thine enemie, &c. It was lawfull then for righteous men to hate their enemies: quod in nouo Teſtamento compeſcitur: which is reſtrained in the new: If the law ſuffered that which the Goſpell forbiddeth, how is the one contained in the other?

Peter Lombard.lib.3.diſtinct.37.liter.c. Litera Euangelij exprimitur, quod litera legis non exprimebatur: That is expreſſed in the letter of the Goſpell, which was not expreſſed in the letter of the law, &c. how then is the Goſpell contained in the law?

3. Neither is it true, that the Goſpell addeth vnto the law, precepts or counſels, concerning works of greater perfection: for all good workes appertaine to the law, as faith belongeth to the Goſpell: and therefore the Apoſtle concludeth, that if wee be not iuſtified by the workes of the law, it followeth, that we are by faith. He findeth no meane betweene. Our Sauiour Chriſt alſo ſaith, that there are no commandements greater, then to loue God aboue all, and our neighbour as our ſelfe, which are contained in the law, Mark.12.31. Therefore the Goſpell cannot counſell or command any thing greater then the law: ſeeing there can be no greater thing, then to loue God with all the heart, ſoule and ſtrength, Mark.12.33.

Hieron.ad Cteſiphont. vpon theſe words, No fleſh ſhall be iuſtified by the workes of the law: Quod ne de lege Moſis tantum dictum putes & non de omnibus mandatis, quæ vno nomine legis continentur, &c. Which that you ſhould not thinke to be ſpoken onely of the law of Moſes, and not of all commandements whatſoeuer, which are contained vnder the name of the law, the ſame Apoſtle ſaith: I conſent vnto the law in the inward man, &c. Ergo, all commandements of workes whatſoeuer, belong to the law.

The Papiſts.

Bellarmines* ſecond difference betweene the Law and the Goſpell is this: The law only teacheth the doctrine, and ſheweth the way, to diſcerne betweene vertue and vice: the Goſpell beſide this knowledge, giueth power and ſtrength to keepe the law: ſo ſaith S.Iohn, 1.17. The law was giuen by Moſes, but grace and truth came by Ieſus Chriſt: Bellarm.cap.4.

Ioh.1.17.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. First, it is true, that the law is a reuealer and diſcouerer of ſinne, Rom.7.7. not a giuer of righteouſneſſe, for that is impoſſible to the law, in as much as it was weake, &c. Rom.8.3. Yet euen vnder the law by grace they receiued ſtrength, in ſome meaſure to keepe the law, though not thereby to be iuſtified: I will runne the way of thy commandements, (ſaith the Prophet Dauid) when thou ſhalt enlarge my heart, Pſal.119.32. Secondly, grace indeede is giuen vnto vs in the Goſpell, not to enable vs to be iuſtified by doing the works of the law, but by grace are we ſaued through faith, Epheſ.2.8. In that Chriſt is become our righteouſneſſe, 1.Cor.1.30 and wee the righteouſneſſe of God in him, 2.Cor.5.21. So that as by grace the righteous both vnder the Law and the Goſpell are ſanctified to walke in ſome meaſure of obedience to the law: ſo neither then, nor now doth grace giue power to vs to be iuſtified by the keeping of the law: but our iuſtification, wholly, onely, and immediatly is wrought by the faith of Chriſt, Galath.3.16. This therefore is no difference betweene the Law and the Goſpell.

Galath.3.16.

1. Theodoret ſaith: Qui credit Domino Chriſto, is ſcopum legis adimplet: He that beleeueth the Lord Chriſt, doth fulfill the ſcope of the law, &c. The law is not fulfilled vnder the Goſpell, but by faith in Chriſt. In 10 cap.ad Roman.

2. Tertullian: Euangelium Chriſti à lege euocare debuit ad gratiam: The Goſpell of Chriſt, from the law ſhould call vs to grace, &c. But if the workes of the law are ſtill required vnder the Goſpell to be iuſtified by, we are not called from the law, but remaine vnder it ſtill. Lib.5.contr. Marcion.

3. Wirtemberg, confeſſ.chap.6. The law was giuen to ſhew man his imperfection, &c. and to ſtirre them vp to ſeeke remiſſion of their ſinnes, righteouſneſſe and ſaluation by faith in the only Sonne of God: The righteouſnes then which the Goſpell teacheth, is not by keeping the law, but by faith in Chriſt, who hath fulfilled the law for vs. Harm.ſect.7. pag.208.

4. Ferus ſaith: The law is impoſſible, ſemper enim plus contra legem quam pro lege facimus: for we alwaies doe more againſt the law, then for it, and that we doe is imperfect. The Goſpell then giueth vs not power and ſtrength to keepe the law. In Act.15.

OF THE TRVE DIFFERENCES OF the Law and the Goſpell.

The Papiſts.

Whereas we diſtinguiſh the Law and the Goſpell, chiefly in theſe two reſpects: firſt, that the law engendreth terror and feare; the Goſpell peace. Secondly, the law requireth obedience of the commandements, thereby to be iuſtified; the Goſpel commandeth only faith. Bellarmine refuſeth theſe two differences betweene the law and the Goſpell, and thus bendeth his force to ouerthrow them.

60.Error.

Argum.1. Firſt, that the Goſpell worketh feare, as well as the law, he would prooue it by theſe menacings and threatnings, which are denounced in the Goſpell, as Matth.7.19. Euery tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewen downe, &c. Rom.1.16. I am not aſhamed of the Goſpell of Chriſt, &c. Then he ſheweth the fruits and effects of the Goſpell: Firſt, the righteouſnes of God is reuealed from faith to faith. Secondly, the wrath of God is reuealed from heauen againſt all vngodlineſſe: The Goſpell then reuealeth the wrath of God: Ergo, it worketh feare, Bellar.cap.2.

Matth.7.19.
Rom.1.16.

Anſw. Firſt, as whatſoeuer is contained in the old Teſtament, doth not appertaine to the law, as the promiſes of mercie in Chriſt foreſhewed by the Prophets, which though they were vttered in the time of the law, yet belonged to the Goſpell: ſo in the new Teſtament, all that wee finde there written, is not ſtraightway of the ſubſtance of the Goſpell: but the threatning of Gods iudgements there contained, doe as well appertaine to the law, as the comfortable promiſes in the old Teſtament to the Goſpell. So that thoſe places doe proue onely, that the law and the Goſpell are ioyned in vſe; yet it followeth not, that they haue the ſame operation and effect: S. Peter, Acts 2. and 3. and the reſt of the Apoſtles, in their ſermons tempered the threatnings of the law, and the comforts of the Goſpell together; by the one drawing the people to repentance, by the other miniſtring hope of remiſſion of ſinnes: the ſame courſe ought the Miniſters of the Goſpell to take in teaching the people now: firſt in humbling them by the law, then comforting them by the Goſpell: for the law, as S. Paul ſaith, Galath.3.24. is a ſchoolemaſter to bring vs to Chriſt, Galath. 3.24. But all this ſheweth only a ioyning of the law and the Goſpell in vſe, not in nature or propertie.

Secondly, the Goſpell worketh feare and terror, per accidens, not of it ſelfe, but accidentally and improperly: as Saint Paul ſaith, The Goſpell is the ſauour of life vnto life, and of death vnto death, 2.Cor.2.16. 2. Cor. 2.16. That is, properly and of it ſelfe, it worketh vnto life, but not ſo vnto death: which is not the proper effect of the Goſpell, but is cauſed by the wilfull contemners, and diſobedient hearers of the Goſpell: by whoſe peruerſe nature the ſweetnes thereof is turned to bitternes. So then vnto the faithfull and beleeuers the Goſpell bringeth comfort and peace: if it doe not ſo to others, the fault is in themſelues: But the law brought terror to all, euen to the righteous: for Moſes trembled, and Heb.12.11. quaked at the deliuering of the law, Heb. 12.21.

61.Error. Argum. 2. Bellarmine alſo proueth, that the Goſpell requireth the condition of obedience as well Matth.19.17. as the law: as Chriſt ſaith to the young man, if thou wilt enter into life, keepe the Commandements. Hence hee inferreth, that the Goſpell alſo enioyneth obedience, and not only faith: And the Councell of Trent, ſeſſ.6.cap.7. doe call this verbum fidei, and, verbum Chriſti, the word of faith, and the word of Chriſt, to be obeyed and followed of all Chriſtians, which Chriſt here vttered to the young man.

Contra. Firſt, we grant that the Goſpell requireth obedience, for it eſtabliſheth the law, and without this obedience there is no ſaluation: for euery tree that bringeth not foorth good fruit ſhall be cut downe, &c. But it is not now required as in the law, to be a meanes and cauſe of life and iuſtification, as it was then ſaid, Doe this, and thou ſhalt liue; but onely as a neceſſarie conſequent of our faith, and an effectuall fruit of our iuſtification. Secondly, our Sauiour Chriſt vttered theſe words to the young man onely to humble him thereby, and to teach him to know himſelfe: for he willing to iuſtifie him- Luke 10.29. ſelfe by keeping of the law; as wee reade, Luke 10.29. of another, which came to our Sauiour, with the ſame queſtion, What ſhall I doe to haue eternall life? our Sauiour hereby ſheweth him how farre ſhort he came of keeping the law, that not by doing, but by beleeuing from hence-foorth hee ſhould hope to be ſaued. Thirdly, the Apoſtles exhorted men to beleeue without any other condition, and ſo to Acts 16.31. be ſaued, Acts 16.31. Their doctrine was not diuers from Chriſts: therefore Chriſt onely required the condition of faith to iuſtification. By this meanes alſo, the law ſhould become a miniſter and inſtrument of life, contrarie to Saint Paul, who ſaith, it ſerueth onely as a ſchoolemaſter to bring vs to Galath.3.24. Chriſt, Galat. 3.24. It diſcouereth and reuealeth ſinne, Rom. 7.7. the Apoſtle alſo calleth it the killing Rom.7.7. letter, and miniſterie of condemnation, 2. Cor. 3.6.9. It cannot therefore helpe to procure our ſalua- 2.Cor.3.6.9. tion: but if that we are iuſtified by our obedience to the law, then ſhould the law helpe to iuſtifie vs, which is contrarie to the Apoſtle.

The Proteſtants.

NOw on the contrarie ſide, our arguments are theſe: Firſt, that the law worketh terror, the Goſpel Rom.8.15. only comfort. Ye haue not receiued the ſpirit of bondage to feare againe, but yee haue receiued the Galath.4.4. ſpirit of adoption, whereby we crie Abba father. And againe, God ſent his ſonne, that he might redeeme them that were vnder the law, that wee might receiue the adoption of ſonnes, and becauſe ye are ſonnes, God hath ſent the ſpirit of his ſonne into your hearts, which crieth Abba father. Theſe places proue, that while we were vnder the law, we were ſeruants, and kept in feare: but by the Goſpell of Ieſus Chriſt we are made ſonnes, and receiue the ſpirit of adoption.

Bellarmines anſwere here is very ſimple, that not the law but the old Teſtament, engendreth feare; and not the Goſpell, but the new Teſtament miniſtreth comfort, Bellarm. cap. 2.

Contra. 1. The contrarie rather hereof is moſt euident, that not the old Teſtament, but the law; not the new Teſtament, but the Goſpell worketh, the one feare, the other comfort: for both the olde Teſtament containeth comfortable promiſes of the Goſpell, and the new, fearefull threatnings of iudgement: therefore neither the old wholly, nor the new wholly, can be, that the miniſter of feare, this of peace, but the law, and the Goſpell comprehended both in the old and new Scriptures.

2. Bellarmine himſelfe, forgetting what he had ſaid before, confeſſeth afterward in theſe words: Lex Moſis, lex timoris & ſeruitutis fuit; Euangelium lex amoris: The law of Moſes was the law of feare and ſeruitude; the Goſpell the law of loue and peace. Thus he himſelfe acknowledgeth this diſtinction betweene the law and the Goſpell: Bellarm. lib. 4. diſcrim. 7.

*Auguſt. Hæc eſt breuiſſi.& apertiſſ. differentia duorum teſtamentorum, timor & amor, contr. Adimant.c.*17. This is a ſhort and manifeſt difference of the two teſtaments, feare and loue.

Ambr. in 3. ad Rom. Lex iram operatur, fides gaudium: The law worketh wrath, faith ioy. Ibid. Pacem cum deo habere fides facit non lex: Faith maketh vs to haue peace with God, not the law: In 11 ad Rom. Data eſt lex vt humanum genus terrore manifeſtata legis fr anaretur: The law was giuen, that mankinde might be terrified by the manifeſtation thereof.

*Cauſ.*23.*qu.*4.*c.*15.gloſſ. In lege populus ſeruili timore cogebatur,&c. In the law the people was compelled with a ſeruile feare, and they had the law as a ſchoolemaſter: in Euangelio filiali amore inuitatur, but in the Goſpell they are inuited with a filiall loue, &c.

*Argum.*2. That the Goſpell requireth not obedience to the commandements as a meane to ſaluation, as the law doth, but onely commandeth faith, Saint Paul euery where ſheweth: Rom.3.20. We cannot be iuſtified by the workes or obedience of the law: the reaſon followeth: for by the law commeth the knowledge of ſinne. And againe, verſ.21. The righteouſneſſe of God (which is by the faith of Chriſt Ieſus, verſ. 22.) is made manifeſt without the law: Only faith then is required to make vs righteous before God, without the workes or obedience of the law. Rom.3.20,21.

1. Heare what Auguſtine ſaith: Teſtimonium legis eis, qui ea non legitimè vtuntur, teſtimonium eſt, quo conuincantur puniendi peccatores: eis, qui legitimè vtuntur, teſtimonium eſt, quo demonſtratur, ad quem liberandi confugere debeant peccatores: The teſtimonie of the law, to them which vſe it not aright, is a teſtimonie to conuince them: to them which doe, a teſtimonie to teach them, to whom ſinners ought to flie for their deliuerance: *Expoſit. in Pſal.*77. Ergo, the law worketh not our deliuerance it ſelfe, but ſendeth vs to our deliuerer.

Againe, Lex fidei æque atque lex factorum ayt ne concupiſcas, ſed quod operum lex minando imperat, fidei lex credendo impetrat: The law of faith, and the law of workes, doe both ſay thou ſhalt not cõuet: but what the law of workes, by threatning enioyneth, the law of faith by beleeuing obtaineth: *de ſpiritu & liter.cap.*13.

*Ambroſ. in c.*3.ad Galath. Non eſt ex fide lex, quia nihil mandat credendum: The law is not of faith, becauſe it commandeth nothing to be beleeued, &c. As the law commanded not faith, ſo neither doth the Goſpell command obedience to the law as a meane to our iuſtification.

Cyrill ſaith: Lex ſeruitutis ſpiritum ad formidinem dabat, Chriſtus ſpiritum adoptionis in libertatem: The law of ſeruitude did giue the ſpirit of feare, Chriſt the ſpirit of adoption vnto libertie. Lib.1.in c.21. Ioann.

2. Theodoret: Lex eos qui peccabant, condemnabat, gratia autem eos ſuſcipiens, per fidem iuſtificat,&c. The law condemned them which ſinned, but grace receiuing them, doth iuſtifie by faith, &c. The law then requireth workes, the Goſpell faith: the one worketh terror, the other peace and comfort. Qu.43.in Deuteron.

3. Bohemia confeſſ chap.10. The word of the law and old teſtament, is the word of death, feare, &c. but the word of the Goſpell is the miniſterie of faith, of grace,&c. Harm.ſect.7. pag.206.

4. Lyranus alleageth, and approueth that ſaying of Auguſtine: Differentia legis & Euangelij, timor & amor, timor reſpicit conditionem ſeruilem, amor libertatem: The difference of the law and Goſpell, are feare and loue; feare reſpecteth a ſeruile condition, loue reſpecteth libertie. Annot.in 2.c. Iam.25.

Maſter Patricke Hamelton holy Martyr, hath ſealed this truth: *The law ſheweth vs our ſinne, the Goſpell ſheweth vs remedie for it: the law is the word of ire, the Goſpell is the word of grace: the law is the word of deſpaire, the Goſpell is the word of comfort,&c. Fox p.*977.

AN APPENDIX CONCERNING THE libertie of the Goſpell.

B*Ellarmine* here is not aſhamed to ſlaunder vs, that we ſhould affirme Chriſtian libertie herein to ſtand, in that we are altogether freed from the obedience and ſubiection of the law: Vt Moſes cum ſuo decalogo nihil ad nos pertineat: And that Moſes with his decalogue belongeth not to vs, *lib.*5.*de iuſtificat.c.*5.initio. But wee call God and all the world to record, that wee witneſſe no ſuch thing, knowing that Chriſt came not to diſſolue, but to fulfill the law, Mat.5.17. Here therfore Bellarmine fighteth with his owne ſhadow, *cap.*5. The Moſcouites indeed doe hold, that the decalogue is abrogated by the Apoſtles, *Theol. Moſcouit.c.*5. But Proteſtants are farre off frõ ſo groſſe an opinion. Math.5.17.

Chriſtian libertie then conſiſteth in theſe three poynts: Firſt, in that we are exempted from the ceremonies of the law, and the Iudicials, ſo farre forth, as they concerned the politike ſtate of the Iewes: Acts 15.10 Why lay ye a yoke on the diſciples neckes, which neither our fathers nor we were able to beare? Secondly, we are freed from the curſe and guilt of the law: Galath.3.13. Chriſt hath redeemed vs from the curſe of the law, when he was made a curſe for vs. Thirdly, wee are deliuered from the ſeruitude of ſinne, that although it remaine in vs, yet it raigneth not in vs, Rom.6.12. Herein the Ieſuite diſſenteth from vs. Acts 15.10. Galath.3.13. Rom.6.12.

The Papiſts.

B*Ellarmines* opinion then is this, that by the libertie of the Goſpell we are altogether freed from ſinne, ſo that it is throughly dead, and not onely not imputed, but not aliue, or hauing any being in the righteous, *cap.*6. 62.Error.

Argum.

Rom.7.6.20.21, verſ.23. Argum. Rom.7.6. Now wee are deliuered from the law, being dead vnto it, that we ſhould ſerue in newneſſe of the ſpirit: If ſinne be dead in vs, and we vnto it, then hath it no life at all.

Anſ. Firſt, in the very ſame chapter, the Apoſtle ſheweth by his owne example, that euen in the regenerate there is ſome remnant of ſinne: verſ.20. Sinne that dwelleth in me: verſ.21. Euill is preſent with me: verſ.23. I finde a law in my members rebelling againſt the law of my minde: If ſin dwell, be preſent, rebell euen in the righteous, then are they not fully purged from it. Secondly, wherefore the Apoſtle in ſaying, we are dead vnto ſin, or to the law, would be vnderſtood as where he ſaith, He that is dead, is freed from ſin, Rom.6.7. that is, from obedience and ſeruice to ſin: verſ.12. Let not ſin raigne in your mortall body: they are freed from the kingdome of ſinne, not from the hauing of ſinne. Rom.6.7.12.

The Proteſtants.

THat we are by the libertie of faith, freed from the tyrannie and kingdome of ſinne, but not altogether from the dwelling and abiding of ſinne in vs, ſo long as wee liue in the fleſh: thus wee are perſwaded out of the Scripture.

Argum. Saint Paul being now an Apoſtle, and ſo conſequently a ſanctified and regenerate man, ſaith, I am carnall, and ſold vnder ſinne, Rom.7.14. And verſ.25. In my fleſh I ſerue the law of ſinne: Ergo, ſinne was yet abiding in him. Verſ.24. Who ſhall deliuer me from the body of death? that is, the body of ſinne, Rom.6.6. Ergo, he was not yet fully deliuered from ſinne, though it raigned not in him: but his freedome only conſiſted in this, that the body of ſinne ſhould be deſtroyed, that henceforth we ſhould not ſerue ſinne, Rom.6.6. We are freed then from the ſeruice and obedience to ſinne, not from the poſſeſſion and habitation of ſinne. Rom.7.14, 25, 24. Rom.6.6.

1. Auguſtine ſaith, Aliud eſt non peccare, aliud non habere peccatum: nam in quo peccatum non regnat, non peccat, id eſt, qui non obedit deſiderijs eius: in quo autem non exiſtunt iſta deſideria, non ſolum non peccat, ſed nec habet peccatum: It is one thing not to ſinne, another not to haue ſin: for in whom ſinne raigneth not, he ſinneth not, that is, obeyeth not the deſires thereof; but hee in whom none of theſe deſires are, hath no ſin at all: in 5. cap. epiſtol. ad Galat. But there is no man liuing, in whom there be not found ſome euill deſires: Ergo, no man, but hath ſinne.

Ambroſe ſheweth wherein Chriſtian libertie conſiſteth: in 2. Galath. Libertus in Ieſu Chriſto hec eſt, non ſubijci legi: This is the libertie in Ieſus Chriſt, not to be ſubiect to the law: that is, the terror and feare thereof, as he expoundeth, Galath.4. Lex data eſt, vt terrori eſſet: The law was giuen to be a terror. Againe, in 2. Cor.3. Lex ſpiritus dat libertatem ſolam fidem poſcens: The law of the ſpirit giueth libertie, requiring only faith, &c. Ergo, this is our libertie, that by faith we are deliuered from the thraldome and bondage of the law, both in the obſeruation thereof required as a meane to ſaluation, and the puniſhment of the tranſgreſſion thereof.

De Eccleſiaſt. Dogmat. c.86. Auguſtine further ſaith: Nullus ſanctus & iuſtus caret peccato, &c. No iuſt or holy man wanteth ſinne, &c.

In 6.c. Leuit. 2. Iſychius ſaith: Peccato refertum eſt omne viuentium genus: All mankinde liuing, aboundeth with ſinne, &c. None then are deliuered from the contagion of ſinne, but from the tyrannie and dominion thereof.

Harm. ſect.7. pag.111. 3. Latter confeſſion of Heluetia, chap.12. Neither could there euer, neither at this day can any fleſh ſatiſfie the law of God and fulfill it, by reaſon of the weakenes in our fleſh, which remaineth and ſticketh faſt in vs; euen to our laſt breath, &c. None then are freed altogether from ſinne in this life.

De iuſtificat. lib.6. cap.3. 4. Stapleton one of their owne Doctors ſubſcribeth to that concluſion, reſolued vpon againſt the Pelagians, neminem iuſtorum in hac vita ſine peccato viuere poſſe: that none of the righteous can in this life liue without ſinne.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER IT BE poſſible to keepe the law in this life.

The Papiſts.

63. Error. IF any man ſay, that the precepts, and commandements of God vnto a man iuſtified, and in the ſtate of grace, are impoſſible to be kept, let him be accurſed: Concil. Tridentin. ſeſſ.6. can.18.

Rom.8.4. Argum.1. Rom.8.4. That the righteouſnes of the law might be fulfilled in vs: Ergo, the law of God by the grace of Chriſt may be kept, and the keeping thereof is our iuſtice. Chriſt alſo ſaith, my yoke is eaſie, and my burthen light: Ergo, his commandements are poſſible to be kept.

1.Cor.1.30. Anſw. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith not, that the law is fulfilled by vs, but in vs by Chriſt, who is our righteouſnes, and ſanctification. The law remaineth ſtill impoſſible to be kept through the weaknes of our fleſh, verſ.3. Neither doth God giue vs abilitie to keepe it, but Chriſt hath fulfilled it for vs: God ſent his ſonne in the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh, verſ.3. We notwithſtanding are bound to walke in obedience to the commandements, which is, to walke after the ſpirit, not after the fleſh, verſ.4. But this our obedience is imperfect, and farre off from that perfection, which Gods iuſtice requireth. Secondly, to him that is borne of God, his commandements are ſaid to be eaſie, and not grieuous, not becauſe they are able perfectly to keepe them: but that ſtrength is giuen to keepe them in part, and they doe willingly, not of conſtraint exerciſe themſelues therein: as alſo for the reſt, that notwithſtanding their obedience is imperfect, yet the curſe of the law is taken away, and their ſinnes pardoned in Chriſt.

Auguſtine alſo telleth vs how Chriſts yoke is light: Pracepta ſunt nolentibus grauia, volentibus leuia, ſicut ipſe ait iugum meum ſuaue eſt: de ſalutar. docum. cap.7. His precepts are heauie to the vnwilling, but to the willing light, as he himſelfe ſaith, my yoke is pleaſant. The commandements then are eaſie, not becauſe we can keepe them perfectly, but Chriſt maketh vs willing by his ſpirit in ſome meaſure to walke in obedience.

Argum.2. Rom.13. He that loueth his neighbour hath kept the whole law: but it is poſſible to Rom.13.8.
loue our neighbour: Ergo, to keepe the law, Bellar. cap.11.

Anſw. He that loueth perfectly, as he ought, may keepe the law: but the aſſumption is falſe, that it is poſſible for any man ſo to loue. Bellarmine ſheweth, that our loue may be perfectly ſufficient toward the keeping of the law, becauſe Dauid ſaith, With my whole heart haue I ſought thee. Contra. Pſalm.119.10.
The Prophet Dauid in ſo ſaying, With my whole heart, ſheweth the qualitie rather, then Pelag. 3.7.* Paul therefore had no perfect or abſolute iuſtice and obedience.

*Argum.*4. The old Pelagians, who held the ſame or very like poſition to the Papiſts, obiected thus; Si impoſſibilia ſunt mandata, non in his erit culpa, qui accepere mandata, ſed in eo qui dedit impoſſibilia: If the commandements be impoſſible, the fault is not in them that receiued them, but in him that gaue them, Hieron.ad Cteſiphont.

Firſt, Hierome anſwereth, Nunquid præcepit mihi Deus, vt eſſem, quod Deus eſt? &c. Hath God commanded, that I ſhould be the ſame, that God is? that I ſhould haue that which the Angels haue not? Of Chriſt it is written, Peccatum non fecit, he did no ſinne: if this be common to me and Chriſt, Quid ille habuit proprium? what had he proper to himſelfe?

Secondly, ſaith he, Poſſibilia ſunt Dei mandata, &c. The commandements of God are poſſible; who Rom 8.3. denieth it? but how this is to be vnderſtood, the choſen veſſell ſheweth. That which was impoſſible in the law, &c. God ſending his ſonne, &c. His meaning is, that the commandements were poſſible in the obedience of Chriſt, Hieron.ad Cteſiphont.

Thirdly, Impoſſibilia ſunt, non imbecillitate naturæ, ſed animi laſſitudine: They are impoſſible, not by the imbecillitie of nature, (wherein Adam was firſt created) ſed laſſitudine animi, but through the infirmitie of the mind, (by Adams fall:) dialog.1.aduerſ.Pelagian.

The Doway ſtudents would prooue the poſſibilitie of keeping the law by that place, Deut.30.11.
Doway Bible, pag.459. pag.704. This commandement, which I command thee this day, is not aboue thee: When thou art ſtirred vp, induced and aſſiſted with Gods grace (ſay they) the commandement of God is not then aboue thee, as farre from thee, but very neere thee in thy mouth (to confeſſe God) and in thy heart to doe it, &c. And in the margent they giue this note, (By grace men are able to keepe Gods commandements) ſo the commandements are not impoſſible, &c.

*Cont.*1. The tranſlate-latines, following their Latine text, do not reade this text aright: the Hebrew word niphleeth, ſignifieth not aboue, but abditum, abſconditum, hid from thee, and ſo their owne Interpreters, Vatablus and Montanus doe tranſlate. 2. but allowing this reading, this maketh nothing at all for the poſſibilitie of keeping the law; but either, as Vatablus noteth, all pretext of ignorance is taken from them, that they had the law giuen them, it was neere at hand, they need not ſeeke
Rom.16.6,7. farre for it. 3. Or rather, this, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, is vnderſtood of the word of faith: directly ſetting downe a difference betweene the law of workes, which requireth doing, and the law of faith, which requireth of vs onely beleeuing in Chriſt, who hath performed the law for vs. So Oecumenius vpon that place to the Romanes: breuis ſalus nihil indigens externis laboribus: a compendious ſaluation not ſtanding in need of externall workes. And their owne Lyranus, Oſtenditur iuſtitiæ per fidem Chriſti facilitas, the eaſines of iuſtice by faith in Chriſt is ſhewed; they therefore very vnskilfullie apply that to the law of workes, which the Apoſtle referreth vnto faith.

The Proteſtants.

That no mortall man is able to keepe the Law of God perfectlie in this life, it may bee thus prooued.

1 *Argum.*1. S. Peter ſaith, Act.15.10. Why tempt ye God, to lay a yoke on the diſciples neckes, which Act.15.10. neither our fathers nor we were able to beare: Ergo, the law is an importable burthen, and ſo impoſſible to be kept.

2. Againe, S. Paul ſaith, Rom.7.18. To will is preſent with me, but I find no meanes to performe that is Rom.7.18. good: Ergo, Paul could not keepe the law.

Bellar. Saint Peter ſpeaketh of the ceremoniall law, which being added to the morall law, made it importable; but now the ceremoniall being aboliſhed, the morall law is portable. *cap.14.reſp. ad loc.*1.

1. *Contra.*1. Though the Apoſtle in that place treate chieflie of the ceremoniall, yet the reaſon is Act.15.11. generall: We beleeue through the grace of the Lord Ieſus to be ſaued. Beleefe is oppoſed not onely to the ceremoniall, but morall law alſo: wherefore ſeeing that is made eaſie and portable by faith, which otherwiſe is importable, it followeth that both the ceremoniall and morall are in them-
2. ſelues importable. 2. The Apoſtle generallie ſpeaking of the whole law, ſaith it was impoſſible, Rom.7.7.10. Rom.8.3.

Bellarm. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the acte of concupiſcence, which is no ſinne. *reſponſ.ad obiect.*3.

*Contra.*1. The Apoſtle ſheweth the contrarie: that both it is a ſinne to luſt, Rom.7.7. I knew not ſinne, but by the law; for I had not knowne luſt, except the law had ſaid, thou ſhalt not luſt: Ergo, it is ſin to luſt. 2. He confeſſeth in direct words alſo, that this ſinne dwelleth in him, verſ.10.

Gala.3.10.12. *Argum.*2. Galath.3.10. As many as are vnder the workes of the law, are vnder the curſe: for it is written, curſed is euery one that continueth not in al things which are written in the booke of the law: The Apoſtle reaſoneth thus: who ſo keepeth not the law in all points, ſtandeth accurſed: but no man is able to keepe it: Ergo, euery man is vnder the curſe.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that they are accurſed, which think to keepe the law by their owne ſtrength, without grace, which indeed it is impoſſible to doe, but poſſible by grace: *reſp.ad loc.*2.

Contra. Nay the Apoſtle ſheweth, that it is poſſible no way to keepe the law perfectly: for if man by grace might performe the law, hee might deliuer himſelfe by grace from the curſe: but now are we redeemed only from the curſe by Chriſt, who was made a curſe for vs, verſ.13. Ergo, the law by no man can be performed. 2. The law is not of faith, verſ.12. But if by faith and grace the law could be kept, then the law ſhould be of faith.

*Argum.*3. If the righteous man doth keepe the law, then is hee without ſinne: for where there is no tranſgreſſion of the law, there is no ſinne; but no man is without ſin, In many things we offend all. If we ſay we haue no ſinne, we deceiue our ſelues: Ergo, no man can keepe the law.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that the veniall ſinnes which iuſt men commit, are not directlie againſt the law, but prater legem, beſide the law: and therefore they may keepe the law, and yet haue veniall ſinnes.

Contra. Firſt, Saint Iohn ſaith, Sinne is the tranſgreſſion of the law, and whoſoeuer committeth ſinne tranſgreſſeth the law: but a veniall or ſmall offence is ſinne: Ergo, a tranſgreſſion: and where the law is tranſgreſſed it is not kept. Secondly, S. Iames ſaith, Whoſoeuer ſhall keepe the whole law, and yet faile in one point, he is guiltie of all. But he that committeth veniall ſinnes, faileth in ſome point, hee doth ſomewhat (prater legem) beſide the law: Ergo, they are guiltie of the whole, and ſo tranſgreſſe contra legem, againſt the law: and ſo this diſtinction of ſinnes beſide, and againſt the law, is found nothing worth.

1. Auguſtine thus writeth of this matter againſt the Pelagians: Illud quod dicunt ſine vllo peccato aliquos homines vixiſſe in hoc ſeculo, vel viuere, optandum eſt vt fiat, conandum eſt vt fiat, ſupplicandum eſt vt fiat, non tamen, quaſi factum fuerit, confidendum: That which they ſay, that ſome may, and haue liued here without ſinne, we muſt endeuour, and pray, that it may be ſo, not preſume that it hath been done: *De peccator merit. et remiſſ. contr. But they which ſay, they can keepe the law, conſequently affirme that they haue no ſinne.

The Chriſtian Church of Æthiopia holdeth, Legem excepto Ieſu Chriſto nemo cuſtodire potuit: None except Chriſt can keepe the law: Zago Zabo.

Damianus à Goes.

Commentar. in Act.15. fol.164.

See the teſtimonie of the holy Martyrs: Patricke Hamelton Martyr, ſaith, that the law biddeth vs to doe that thing, which is impoſſible, in as much as the keeping of the commandements, which the law biddeth, is impoſſible, Fox. pag.976.

Maſter Tyndall holy Martyr: The law, when it commandeth thou ſhalt not luſt, giueth thee not power ſo to doe, but damneth thee, becauſe thou canſt not ſo doe: If thou wilt therefore be at peace with God, then muſt thou turne to the promiſes of the Goſpell: Fox pag.1247.

AN APPENDIX OF THE DIVIſion of the law.

The Papiſts.

THe Maſter of the Sentences, whom the reſt doe follow, maketh but three commandements in the firſt table, ioyning in one the firſt and the ſecond: lib.3. diſt.37. liter. b. and he diuideth the ſecond table into ſeauen, making two of the laſt commandement: this to be the ſixth, Thou ſhalt not couet thy neighbours wife: that which followeth, Thou ſhalt not couet thy neighbours houſe, nor his ſeruant, &c. to be the ſeauenth and the laſt: lib. 3. diſt. 40. liter. a. This deuice the Papiſts ſucceeding haue the more willingly embraced, that the ſecond commandement, which doth pinch them very ſore, might be left out altogether, which ſome of them haue moſt impiouſly attempted. And Catharinus, a great popiſh writer, is directly of this iudgement, mandatum ſecundum fuiſſe temporale, that the ſecond commandement was but temporall, to continue for a time: opuſcul. de imaginib. For this their deuice, reaſons out of Scripture they haue none.

64. Error.

Our Doway Doctors doe thus helpe out the matter: 1. they ſay the firſt commandement cannot be diuided, becauſe to make a picture to the end to adore it as God, were in deed to haue a ſtrange God. 2. The laſt commandement they would haue to be two, becauſe the deſire and internall con-ſent to adulterie and theft differ as much altogether, as the externall actes of the ſame ſinnes, &c.

Annot. in Exod.20.4. & in Deut.c.5.21.

*Contra.*1. Though euery picture adored as God, be a ſtrange god, yet there may bee a worſhip of a ſtrange god without a picture: and ſo Lyranus confeſſeth. Thus ſome of their Doctors make this difference betweene this precept and the next, that here is forbidden ſuch worſhip of ſtrange gods, as is done without an image, as Varro ſaith, the Romanes did worſhip their gods a long time without any image: and ſome thinke, that the idols of ſuch things as are fained, and haue no exiſtence in nature are here forbidden, as to make an image with a mans bodie, and a rammes head, as they did of Iupiter, and imagined him ſo to be. And further, they which worſhipped the Sunne and Moone, and brute beaſts, as the Egyptians did, did not adore images, but the things themſelues: all theſe kinds of idolatries fall not vnder this prohibition, Thou ſhalt not make vnto thy ſelfe any grauen image; wherefore all this cannot be one commandement.

Rom 7.8. Exod 20.17. Deut.5.21. 2. The laſt commandement is but one: 1. S. Paul calleth it ἐντολὴ, a commandement in the ſingular number. 2. In one place, Thou ſhalt not couet thy neighbours wife is put firſt: in another, Thou ſhalt not couet thy neighbours wife: If they were two commandements, it ſhould bee vncertaine in what order to place them. 3. Neither doe the thoughts of coueting differ as much as the actes: for then there ſhould bee other commandements alſo of not coueting to kill, to diſhonour parents, to beare falſe witneſſe.

The Proteſtants.

THis diuiſion of the law, to ioyne the firſt and the ſecond commandement in one, and ſo to make two of the laſt; we ſhew it to be contrarie to the Scripture, to reaſon and authoritie.

Marke 10.19. Firſt, our Sauiour Chriſt maketh but ſixe commandements in the ſecond table: where in ſtead of the laſt, Thou ſhalt not couet, is put, μὴ ἀποστερήσῃς, Thou ſhalt hurt no man, no not ſo much as by thought or deſire to couet any thing of his.

Rom.7.8. Againe, S. Paul calleth the law forbidding to luſt, ἐντολὴ, a commandement in the ſingular number, not commandements.

Secondly, reaſon alſo giueth, that this commandement, Thou ſhalt not couet, ſhould be but one: firſt, diuers commandements haue their diuers acts which are forbidden, as to ſteale, to kill, to commit adulterie: but theſe two ſuppoſed lawes haue but one action, which is to couet. Secondly, the concluſion, after the particular induction, nor any thing that is his, ſheweth, that all the particulars before going belong vnto the ſame charge and commandement.

Thirdly, 1. Origen miſliketh this diuiſion thus writing in 8. Exod. Hæc omnia nonnulli putant ſimul vnum eſſe mandatum, quod ſi ita putetur, non complebitur decem numerus mandatorum: Some thinke all theſe to be one commandement: which if it be ſo, how ſhall the number of ten commandements be fulfilled? Therefore this is the firſt commandement, Thou ſhalt haue no other Gods, &c. The ſecond, Thou ſhalt make no Idoll, &c.

Ambroſ. Conſtat primum eſſe mandatum, &c. It is euident this is the firſt commandement, Thou ſhalt haue no other Gods, &c. then, Thou ſhalt make no image, &c. the third, Thou ſhalt not take the name, &c. in 5. ad Epheſ.

Com.in.7.ad Roman.v.7. 2. Theophylact, As the Apoſtle, calleth the precept, thou ſhalt not luſt, ἐντολή, a commandement in the ſingular number, ſo he ſaith in the ſame number, Lex ad hoc homines inſtruebat, vt a concupiſcendo abigeret, The law inſtructed men, to driue them from coueting, &c.

3. Our beſt Proteſtant writers, doe diuide the firſt table into foure commandements, and the ſecond into ſixe; as Peter [a] Martyr, Maſter [b] Caluin, [c] Buchanus with others.

THE THIRD PART OF THE WORKES of Supererogation.

The Papiſts.

65.Error. THey teach, that it is not onely poſſible for men to keepe the law of God in this life, but to doe more then is preſcribed or commanded: and that men of their abundance may allot vnto others ſuch workes of ſupererogation, Rhemiſt.1.Cor.9.ſect.6.ex Tileman loc.3.err.16.

Argum. 2.Cor.8.ſect.3. As your abundance now ſupplieth their want, their abundance alſo may ſupplie your want, that there may be equalitie. Saints, or other vertuous perſons may in meaſure and proportion of other mens deſeruings, allot vnto them as well the ſupererogation of their ſpiritual works, as thoſe that abound in worldly goods may giue almes of their ſuperfluities, to them which are in neceſſitie, Rhemiſt. totid. verbis.

Anſw. 1. This place prooueth no communication of merits of one to another: but that as euery one aboundeth in the gifts and graces of God, ſo they ought to communicate the vſe thereof one to anothers benefit: for no man meriteth himſelfe by any worke of his: therefore he cannot communicate that to another, which he hath not himſelfe. Here alſo mention is made of mutuall communication, for one to ſupplie anothers want: but he that doth ſupererogate to another of the abundance of his good workes, hath no neede to haue his wants ſupplied by another mans deſeruings: therefore there is no mutuall communicating betweene them, which is the thing whereof the Apoſtle ſpeaketh in this place.

The Proteſtants.

Arg. THat no man is holpen by another mans deſeruings, but all that a man can doe, is little enough and not ſufficient for himſelfe; it is plaine in the Goſpell: where our Sauiour ſaith, That when we haue done all that is commanded, we are vnprofitable ſeruants, and did no more then was our dutie: Ergo, a man cannot doe more then his dutie. Luk.17.10.

Hierome vpon this place thus concludeth: Si inutilis eſt, qui fecit omnia, quid de illo dicendum eſt, qui explere non potuit: If he be an vnprofitable ſeruant, which did all, what ſhall be ſaid of him which could not fulfill them? ad Cteſiphont.

Saint Ambroſe vpon the ſame words writeth thus: Ergo, & cum fecerimus quod nobis imperatum eſt, &c. Therefore, when we haue done that which is commanded vs, we muſt not ſtraight be exalted, but humble our ſelues: quia non ſtatim, ſi aliquid fecerimus, implenimus omnia ſeruitutis obſequia, quis tanta ſalutis beneficia digno poſſit æquare ſeruitio? quis poteſt ſoluere, quod accepit? becauſe not ſtraightwaies, if we haue done any thing, we haue performed all the duties of our ſeruice, who can bee equall in his ſeruice to ſo great benefit of ſaluation? who can pay that which hee hath receiued? ſerm.16. in Pſal.119. Ergo, no man can doe more then he is bound to doe.

We may alſo remember the parable of the Virgins, Matth.25. where the fiue wiſe refuſe to giue of their oyle to the fiue fooliſh: leſt (ſay they) there will not be enough for vs and you. No man therefore hath attained to ſuch a perfection of goodneſſe, that he is able to ſpare ought for his brother, but ſhall haue neede thereof himſelfe.

1. Auguſtine writing vpon this parable ſaith: Vnuſquiſque pro ſe rationem reddet, nec alieno teſtimonio quicquam adiuuatur, apud Deum: — & vix ſibi quiſque ſufficit, vt ſibi teſtimonium perhibeat conſcientia ſua: Euery man ſhall giue account for himſelfe, neither is a man relieued by anothers teſtimonie before God: — the teſtimonie of a mans conſcience is hardlie ſufficient for himſelfe: de verb. Domini ſerm.22. See more of this matter: Controuerſ.14. quæſt.7. part.4. & quæſt.8. part.3. artic.2.

Tertullian hereof alſo thus writeth, lib. de Pudicit. Sufficiat martyri propria delicta purgaſſe, ingrati, vel ſuperbi eſt in alios ſpargere, quod ipſe pro magno fuerit conſecutus: ecquis alienam mortem ſua morte ſoluit, niſi ſolus filius dei? Let it ſuffice a Martyr to haue purged his owne ſinne, it is the part of an vnthankfull or proud man, to ſcatter vpon others, that which he hath obtained for a great benefit: doth any man by his death looſe anothers death, but onely the Sonne of God?

2. Chryſoſtome (as he is alleaged by Ieremie Patriarch of Conſtantinople) ſaith: Non quiſquam mortalium — poteſt ante Deum conſiſtere, No mortall man is able to ſtand before God, &c. if a mans righteouſneſſe ſuffice not for himſelfe, much leſſe hath he to impart vnto another. Cenſor oriental. cap.6.

3. Confeſſ. of Sweueland, artic.11. The Saints are farre off from aſcribing their ſaluation to their owne merites, how therefore ſhould they preſume to helpe any other with their merits. Auſpurg, artic.6. They haue feyned (ſpeaking of Monkes) that they doe ſo ſatiſfie Gods commandements, that they can doe ſomewhat more, and hereupon roſe that horrible error of the workes of ſupererogation, &c. Harm. ſect.2. pag.49. Harm. ſect.18. pag.563.

4. Eſpenc. a learned Papiſt thus confeſſeth: Quo die multa nimirum miſericordia opus erit omnibus Sanctis: In which day of the Lord all the Saints ſhall haue great neede of mercie: in 2.Tim. p.15. And againe hee thus alleageth out of Auguſtines Sentences, collected by Proſper. ſent.234. Nemo fidelium, quamuis multum profecerit, dicat, ſufficit mihi: Let none of the Saints, though hee haue well profited, ſay, it ſufficeth me: p.126. If no man hath ſufficient for himſelfe, how can hee ſupererogate to others.

THE FOVRTH PART WHETHER GOD BE to bee ſerued for hope of reward, or feare of puniſhment.

The Papiſts.

MEn ought to doe good in reſpect and for reward and recompence in heauen for their good workes: the Apoſtle ſaith of Moſes, Heb.11.26. He had reſpect to the recompence of reward, Rhemiſt. ibid. 66. Error. Heb.11.26.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, we denie, that we ought to make account of heauen to be giuen as a iuſt recompence deſerued by our workes: for life eternall, as the Apoſtle ſaith, is the free gift of God, Rom.6.23, Secondlie, wee grant that men in their well doing ought to haue reſpect to the reward, but not chieflie or principally: but the reſpect of Gods glorie and their owne dutie ought to moue them more. Rom.6.23.

Argum. Taſte and ſee, how gracious the Lord is: Wee ought as dutifull children to yeeld obedience to the Lord, and delight in him, euen becauſe of that pleaſant taſte, comfort and ioy, which we feele in his goodnes toward vs. Auguſtine ſaith well, Deus non propterea ſe amari vult, quia dat aliquid Pſalm.34.8. In Pſalm.52.

præter ſe,ſed quia dat ſe : God would not be beloued of vs, becauſe he giueth or promiſeth any thing beſide himſelfe, but becauſe he giueth himſelfe.

Iſychius ſaith, Ita ſe quis debet diſponere, vt omne deſiderium & propoſitum cuiuſlibet actionis & In 3. Leuitic. conſummationem Deo offerat,&c. Euery one muſt ſo diſpoſe of himſelfe, that he offer vnto God, the deſire and purpoſe of euery action, and the conſummation thereof, &c, the glory then of God, not the hope of our reward, muſt bee the chiefe end of our actions.

Confeſſ. of Bohemia, c. 7. We muſt exerciſe our ſelues in good workes — for the reward of eternall life, — and that by faith we may haue a more eaſie entrance to theſe rewards,&c. Wee may looke then to the reward, but not as the reward of our merites, but giuen vs by grace, and apprehended by faith.

Lib. 2. de triplice homin. officio c. 28. Their owne Doway Doctor Weſton ſaith, No worke of a righteous man, Habere valorem condignum præmio cœleſti, hath a valour worthie of the heauenly reward, but al the valour is placed, in Dei acceptatione, in the acceptance of God, &c. then it will follow, that heauen muſt not be expected, as a reward due vnto our workes.

Ambroſe : Propoſitum piæ mentis mercedem non expetit, ſed pro mercede habet boni facti conſcientiam & iuſti operis effectum : The purpoſe of a godly minde doth deſire no reward, but in ſtead of a reward hath the conſcience of a good fact, and the effect of a righteous worke, lib. 1. de Abram. c. 8.

Maſter Tyndall holy Martyr ſaith : Euery Chriſtian man muſt keepe Gods commandements by loue, and not by hope, to get for his ſeruice euerlaſting life, pag. 1255. artic. 10. Againe, they that for feare of hell, or the ioyes of heauen doe their dutie, doe a conſtrained ſeruice which God will not haue : ſuch are hyred men and waged ſeruants, not children, pag. 1255. col. 2.

The Papiſts.

67. Error. 2. Euen in right Chriſtian godly men there remaineth doubt, miſtruſt, feare of hell and damnation: and the feare of Gods iudgements cauſeth iuſt men to humble themſelues, leaſt they ſhould be damned. And ſo S. Paul ſaith, Worke out your ſaluation with feare and trembling, Philip. 2. Rhemiſt. 1. Iohn 4. ſect. 6.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. We acknowledge a dutifull reuerence and feare of God alwaies remaining in the godly: but it is farre from that ſeruile and ſlauiſh feare, which is cauſed only by the remem-In Pſal. 127. brance of hell fire and eternall iudgement. Auguſtine doth thus reſemble the matter : The chaſt wife (ſaith he) and the adulterous do both feare their husbands : ſed caſta timet ne diſcedat vir ; adultera, ne veniat : But the chaſte wife is afraid leſt her husband ſhould depart ; the adulterous is afraid leſt he ſhould come, &c. Such a feare as is in the chaſte wife, we grant to be in the children of God, but not the other.

2. We alſo confeſſe, that the horror of hell is profitable to make a way and entrance for the calling of worldly and hard hearted men, as the needle or briſtle (as Auguſtine ſaith) maketh a way for the 1. Iohn 4. 18. thread : but in a man alreadie called, this feare is expelled by loue, as the Apoſtle ſaith: for we muſt be 2. Tim. 4. 8. of thoſe that loue the appearing of Chriſt, not of that number which feare it, and wiſh it were prolonged.

Auguſt. Si poſſumus efficere, fratres, vt dies iudicij non veniret, puto, quia nec ſic erat, male viuendum: If we could bring it about, that the day of iudgement ſhould not come at all, we ought not for all that to liue ill, &c. His meaning is, that we ought not to liue well onely for feare of Gods iudgements.

Origen tract. 33. in Matth vpon theſe words, Matth. 25. 24. I knew thou waſt an hard man, and therefore was afraid : Nec eſt bonus huiuſmodi timor, nec liberat nos talis timor à tenebris exterioribus: This feare is not good, neither deliuereth vs from vtter darkneſſe.

Lib. 1. de fid. 2. Theodoret ſaith, Fides eſt inſita credentium animis citra ambiguitatem aliquam diſpoſitio : Faith is a diſpoſition ſetled in the mindes of beleeuers without all ambiguitie, &c. but where is feare, there is doubtfulneſſe and ambiguitie.

Harm. ſect. 17. pag. 519. 2. Confeſſ. of Bohemia : Their mind (i. of the faithfull) is ſtirred vp to performe theſe things, rather of loue, then of any debt to any compulſion,&c.

4. Peter. Lombard. Inimicus eſt iuſtitiæ, qui pœna timore non peccat: He is an enemie to iuſtice, that ſinneth not for feare of puniſhment, lib. 3. diſt. 36. liter. c.

Maſter Tyndall holy Martyr : They are the people of Chriſt, which willingly doe heare and follow him, not for feare of the law, but onely entiſed and lead with a gracious libertie, and faithfull loue, not doing any thing, becauſe it is commanded, but becauſe it is pleaſant and acceptable to them, though it were not commanded, Fox pag. 1253. col. 2.

THE SECOND GENERALL QVEſtion of good workes.

THE FIRST PART OF THE NECESSItie of workes.

The Papiſts.

Their opinion is, that good workes are not onely neceſſary to ſaluation, neceſſitate præſentia, becauſe they muſt neceſſarily be preſent, and wee cannot be without them: but neceſſitate efficientiæ, they are neceſſarie, as efficient cauſes together with faith, of our ſaluation. 68.Error.

Argum. Worke out your ſaluation with feare, and trembling: Our light affliction cauſeth vnto vs a more excellent weight of glorie: Ergo, our workes and ſufferings are the cauſe of ſaluation, Bellarm. lib.6.de iuſtificat.c.17. Phil.3.12. 2.Cor.4.17.

Anſw. 1. To the firſt place we ſay, that the Apoſtle there ſaith none other thing, then his fellow Apoſtle Saint Peter, Make your election ſure: to worke out our ſaluation, and to make our election ſure by good workes, is all one, not that our ſaluation or election is thereby cauſed before God: but good workes doe ſerue to aſſure our owne conſcience of our ſaluation, and to perfit or finiſh it to our ſelues. And againe it followeth in the next verſe: For it is God which worketh in you both the will and the deede, verſ.13. So then man worketh, but it is God, that giueth him grace to worke: as Auguſtine ſaith vppon theſe words, without me you can do nothing: Ioan.15.5. Sine paruum, ſiue multum, ſine illo fieri non poteſt, ſine quo nihil fieri poteſt: whether it be little or much, nothing can be done without him, without whom nothing can be done: tract.81 in Ioan. 2.Pet.1.10. 13.

2. Affliction is not the cauſe of ſaluation, for then the Apoſtle ſhould bee contrarie to himſelfe, I count that the afflictions, of this preſent time are not worthy the glory,&c. But it is onely the way, that bringeth vs to Heauen, The gate is narrow, and the way ſtraite, that leadeth to life: And Bernard (well ſaith) Sunt via regni, non cauſa regnandi: Good workes are the way to the kingdome, not the cauſe of the kingdome. Rom.8.18. Matth.7.14.

The Proteſtants.

A Neceſſitie of good workes we grant, as liuely teſtimonies of our faith, without the which there is neither faith nor life: Euery tree, that bringeth not forth good fruite is hewen downe,&c. And Saint Iames ſaith, Shew me thy faith, out of thy workes: Bernard alſo writeth: Credis in Chriſtum? fac Chriſti opera, vt viuat fides tua: Dooſt thou beleeue in Chriſt? doe Chriſts workes, that thy faith may liue: in Paſchal.ſer.2. ſuch a neceſſitie of workes we grant, but not as the cauſe or efficient of ſaluation. Matth.7.19. Iam.2.18.

Argum. A man is iuſtified by faith, without the workes of the law: I liue by the faith of the ſonne of God; No man is iuſtified by the law, and the law is not of faith: Ergo, faith onely is neceſſary to our iuſtification: workes, as being of the law, are not herein ioyned with faith, for then the law were of faith: But they follow after as fruites of our iuſtification. Rom.3.28. Galath 2.20. Galath.3.11.

1. Chryſoſtome thus ſaith vpon theſe words of our Sauiour, Iohn 6. This is the worke of God that ye beleeue,&c. Yee ſee how he calleth faith the worke of God: therefore as ſoone as thou beleeueſt, thou art adorned with good works, not that workes are wanting, ſed per ſeipſam fides eſt plena operibus, but faith by it ſelfe is full of workes,&c. Ieremie Patriarch agreeth, While we praiſe good workes, my meaning is, not that we repoſe our whole confidence therein, for therein we ſhould much offend: Sed ita ea coli volumus, vt quæ ad ſalutem neceſſaria ſunt,& quæ fidem natura ſua conſequantur,&c. But I would haue them ſo embraced, as ſuch as are neceſſary to ſaluation, and do of their owne nature follow faith, &c. Workes then are neceſſarie as fruites and teſtimonies of faith, not otherwiſe. Iohn 6.2.9. Serm.de fid. & leg.natur. Cenſor.oriental.c.6.

2. Cyrill of Alexandria ſaith, Opera fidei congruentia facere,&c. To doe workes agreeable to faith, belongeth onely to them that loue God. Lib.9.in Ioann.c.44.

3. Confeſſ.of Heluetia, c.16. Thoſe ſame workes that are agreeable to Gods will muſt bee done, not to the end to merite eternall life by them; for life euerlaſting, as the Apoſtle ſaith, is the gift of God — but to the glorie of God, to commend and ſet forth our calling,&c. Harm.ſect.9. pag.246.

4. Synod. Moguntin, cap.8. Opera iuſtificatorum gratiæ Dei effectus ſunt, & mouente & adiuuante ſpiritu ſancto fiunt: The workes of thoſe that are iuſtified, are the effects or fruites of grace, and are wrought by the motion of the ſpirit. — Men then are firſt iuſtified by grace, and after their iuſtification, good workes are wrought.

The Martyrs haue ſealed this truth: *Patrick Hamelton: No man is iuſtified by the deedes of the law, but by the faith of Ieſus, Fox.*pag.978. Catherine Hamelton put to death, for ſaying, I know perfectly, that no workes can ſaue me, but onely the workes of Chriſt my Lord and Sauiour.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE EFFICACIE OF workes, whether we are thereby iuſtified.

The Papiſts.

69.Error. THat a man by good workes is iuſtified, and made more iuſt, they thinke to bee very manifeſt and plaine out of Scripture: wherein, as it ſhall appeare, they are greatly deceiued, and do no leſſe deceiue others ſeduced by them.

Iam.2.21.25. *Argum.*1. Of all others, which may ſeeme to make for them, they moſt of all vrge that of Saint Iames: Was not Abraham our father iuſtified through workes, verſ.25. Likewiſe was Rahab the harlot iuſtified through workes: Ergo, we are iuſtified by our workes, *Bellarm.cap.*18.

Rom.3.28. Anſw. Saint Iames in ſaying we are iuſtified by workes, meaneth not that iuſtification whereby we are made iuſt before God, for then he ſhould be contrary to Saint Paul, who ſaith, we are iuſtified without workes. But by being iuſtified he vnderſtandeth nothing elſe, but to be declared iuſt, as wel before men, as in the ſight of God: which declaration is teſtified and ſhewed forth by our workes proceeding of faith.

Bellarmine contrariwiſe laboureth to proue, that the word cannot be ſo taken here: for the Apoſtle ioyneth workes and faith together, verſ.22. The faith wrought with his workes, and through the workes the faith was made perfect; workes and faith doe then worke together; as one worketh, ſo doth the other, they iuſtifie both alike: but faith iuſtifieth not by way of declaration, but verily, and in deede, Ergo.

Contra. Firſt, it followeth not, becauſe faith worketh with workes, that therefore they worke both alike: it is one thing for faith to iuſtifie with workes, another to iuſtifie as workes: Secondly, as faith doth iuſtifie vs before God, ſo alſo it iuſtifieth before men, that is, faith ſerueth alſo for the declaration of our iuſtification, in that it cauſeth good workes, and theſe good workes doe teſtifie of faith, that it is liuely, and perfect, not a dead faith. Thirdly, that to iuſtifie is here taken onely for the declaration, or teſtification of our faith, it thus appeareth: firſt, that this word is ſo vſed in Scripture; it is plaine, that thou maieſt be iuſtified in thy words: that is knowne, or declared to bee iuſt.
Rom.3.4. De ſpiritu.& liter.cap.26. Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Iuſtificabuntur, id eſt, iuſti habebuntur, they ſhall bee iuſtified, that is counted iuſt, as we alſo ſay, Sanctificetur nomen tuum, id eſt, ſanctum habeatur, let thy name be halowed, that is, acknowledged to be holy.
Iam.2.18. Secondly, the Apoſtle himſelfe ſaith, verſ.18. Shew me thy faith out of thy workes, &c. he ſpeaketh onely of the outward ſhewing and teſtification of faith. Thirdly, if wee take iuſtification properly, as Saint Paul vſeth the word, then ſhould S. Iames bee contrary to Saint Paul, who ſaith, we are iuſtified by faith without workes.

Lib.4.in cap.4. ad Roman. Origene alſo thus expoundeth this text: Indicium eſt fidei veræ vbi non delinquitur, — It is a ſigne of true faith, where is no offence, &c. Abraham is ſaid to bee iuſtified by workes, quia certum eſt eum qui vere credit, opus fidei & iuſtitia operari, becauſe it is certaine, that hee which beleeueth, doth worke the worke of faith and iuſtice, and ſo is capable of both glories, of that which is in ſecret with God, and open before man, &c.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Saint Paul ſpeaketh of the firſt iuſtification, which is, without workes; Saint Iames of the ſecond iuſtification, whereby a man is made more iuſt, and this is cauſed by good workes.

Rom.8.30. Contra. Firſt, we deny any ſuch difference of iuſtification: the Scripture ſpeaketh but of one iuſtification, Whom hee iuſtified, them alſo he glorified: vnleſſe you will haue another iuſtification to come after our glorification: and verſe 7. Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiuen: the iuſtification in remiſſion of ſinnes, doth make a man bleſſed: Ergo, it is the onely ſufficient iuſtification.

Secondly, if faith doe iuſtifie as it is a worke, by the merit and worthines thereof, as it is by our aduerſaries affirmed, and not inſtrumentally onely by apprehending Chriſt, then neither ſhall their firſt iuſtification be without workes, becauſe it is not without faith.

Thirdly, Saint Paul and Saint Iames ſpeake both of one and the ſelfe ſame iuſtification before God: for both of them alleage the ſame example of Abraham, both citing the ſame teſtimony of Scripture:
Geneſ.15.6.6 Abraham beleeued God, and it was counted vnto him for righteouſnes: Wherefore they bringing in the ſame example, and vſing the ſame words, muſt needs apply them to the ſame end. Rahab alſo is brought in an example of the very firſt iuſtification, Rahab the harlot was iuſtified: ſhe was an harlot onely before her firſt iuſtification: ſo then it will follow, that euen the firſt iuſtification is by workes, if they will haue Saint Iames to vnderſtand iuſtification as Saint Paul doth.

*Argum.*2. Bellarmine for iuſtification by workes further oppoſeth theſe places of Scripture.

.1 Rom.6.19. 1. Rom.6.19. As you haue giuen your members, ſeruants to vncleaneneſſe, and iniquitie to commit iniquitie, ſo now giue your members ſeruants to iuſtice or righteouſnes to ſanctification: by ſanctification here iuſtification is ſignified, being oppoſed to iniquitie.

.2 2.Cor.7.1. 2. 2.Cor.7.1. Hauing theſe promiſes, let vs cleanſe our ſelues from all filthines of the fleſh and ſpirit, and grow vp vnto ſanctification in the feare of the Lord: we muſt grow vp euery day to more iuſtice and ſanctification.

3. 2.Cor.9.10. He will multiplie your ſeede, and increaſe the fruites of your iuſtice : by almes then our iuſtice is encreaſed. 2.Cor.9.10.

4. Iohn 14.23. If any man loue me, he will keepe my word, and my father will loue him : this keeping of the commandements doth procure the loue of God, and conſequently iuſtification. 4. Iohn 14.23.

5. Apocal.22.11. He that is filthie, let him be filthie ſtill, he that is iuſt, iuſtificetur adhuc, let him be iuſtified ſtill. Ergo, by good workes a man hath encreaſe of iuſtification. 5. Apocal.22.11.

1. Anſw. First, ſanctification, ἁγιασμὸς, is the fruite of iuſtice or righteouſnes by faith : as the Apoſtle ſaith, you haue your fruit vnto holines or ſanctification : this place onely ſheweth, that we muſt be the ſeruants of the iuſtice of faith, to bring forth fruits of ſanctification. Secondly, ἀνομία, iniquitie, is a generall name, both ſignifying the deprauation and vncleanneſſe of our nature, as here it is ioyned with it, as alſo it betokeneth actuall ſinne, for as S. Iohn ſaith, ἁμαρτία is ἀνομία : ſinne is iniquitie or, tranſgreſſion of the lawe, ſo that the word iniquitie or tranſgreſſion, may very well anſwere vnto iuſtice and ſanctification, the tree and the fruite. 1. Rom.6.22. 1.Iohn 3.4.

2. We deny not, but that we muſt continually grow vp and encreaſe in the workes of ſanctification, which the Apoſtle here affirmeth; but iuſtification is one thing, ſanctification another : we muſt firſt be iuſtified by faith in the promiſes of Chriſt; of the which promiſes alſo the Apoſtle here maketh mention; then followeth as an effect and fruite thereof, our ſanctification and holines with the workes thereof. 2.

3. First, by iuſtice here either the Apoſtle vnderſtandeth not the iuſtice of faith, wherewith wee are iuſtified before God; but the iuſtice wrought in vs by faith, which they call inherent or ſecond iuſtice : as Matth.6.1. Doe not your iuſtice before men, to be ſeene of them : but the inward iuſtice of faith cannot be ſeene of men : and verſe 2. by iuſtice, our Sauiour expoundeth almes. Secondly, or elſe, if we vnderſtand the true iuſtice of faith : the Apoſtle ſaith not, that iuſtice it ſelfe, but the fruites thereof are encreaſed, which we deny not. Thirdly, though the iuſtice of faith before God be not encreaſed, yet we may encreaſe in the aſſurance thereof vnto our ſelues. 3. Matth.6.1.2.

4. Our Sauiour expoundeth himſelfe, verſ.21. I will loue him, and ſhew my ſelfe vnto him : this loue then of God in Chriſt, is not procured by good workes, but onely ſhewed, manifeſted and aſſured, as Saint Peter ſaith, 2.Pet.1.10. Make your calling and election ſure by good workes. 4. Ioh.14.21. 2.Pet.1.10.

5. First, it is manifeſt by the oppoſition, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of that iuſtice which is wrought in vs by faith, which they call the ſecond iuſtice : for he had ſaid before : ὁ ἀδικῶν he that is vniuſt or iniurious, or as their owne tranſlation readeth, qui nocet, he that is hurtfull, let him bee hurtfull ſtill : as this is vnderſtood not of originall, but externall iniuſtice; ſo the clauſe following, ὁ δίκαιος, he that is iuſt, let him be more iuſtified, muſt be referred to the encreaſe of iuſtice. Secondly, vnleſſe wee will vnderſtand it of the aſſurance of iuſtification to our ſelues, wherein as I ſaide before wee may encreaſe : but what is this to iuſtification by workes, whereof there is not one ſyllable mentioned? 5.

The Proteſtants.

THat good workes, although they be notable teſtimonies of our faith, yet helpe not to iuſtifie vs before God : the Scripture thus witneſſeth.

*Argum.*1. Rom.4.7. Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiuen : our bleſſednes is not cauſed by our workes, but by the free remiſſion of our ſinnes in Chriſt. 1. Rom.4.7.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that Saint Paul ſpeaketh of the firſt iuſtification, or the beginning of iuſtification.

*Contra.*1. He ſpeaketh of that iuſtification, which bleſſedneſſe followeth, which is not the beginning, but the very perfection of our iuſtification : we ſee heauen is promiſed at the firſt remiſſion of our ſinnes, what need then any other iuſtification? As Auguſtine ſaith, Donando delicta fecit ſe debitorem corona, by forgiuing of our ſinnes, he hath made himſelfe a debtor of the crowne. 2. Againe, whereas man all his life long hath need of remiſſion of ſinnes, this iuſtification, whereby all our ſinnes are remitted, is not the beginning only, but the conſummation thereof, which extendeth it ſelfe thoroughout our whole life. Wherefore good workes are not giuen vs to be iuſtified thereby, but to be euident ſignes and witneſſes of our faith, to the glory of God: as Bernard ſaith, Sicut corporis huius vitam ex corporis motu dignoſcimus, ſic fidei vitam ex operibus bonis : As wee diſcerne the life of the body by the motion, ſo faith by good workes: *In Paſchal. ſerm.*2.

*Argum.*2. Pſalm.143.2. Enter not into iudgement with thy ſeruant (ſaith the Prophet) for in thy ſight ſhall none that liueth be iuſtified : Matth.6.12. Our Sauiour teacheth euery man, though neuer ſo iuſt, to pray, forgiue vs our ſinnes, &c. Ergo, no man is iuſt by his workes. 2. Pſal.143.2. Matth.6.12.

*Bellarm.*1. Dauid deſireth not to be iudged according to thoſe things, which hee had of himſelfe, whereby hee could not be iuſtified 2. Or it is to bee vnderſtood of veniall ſinnes. 3. Or hee ſaith, that in compariſon of God, who is perfectly iuſt, no man can be iuſtified, *Bellarm. cap.*20. *reſp. ad loc.*2. 1.

*Contra.*1. Dauid ſpeaketh of himſelfe as Gods ſeruant; and ſo in the ſtate of grace, not as vnder his naturall condition. 2. Doth hee thinke that God hauing forgiuen vnto his ſeruants their greater ſinnes, will enter into iudgement with them for ſmall offences, which hee calleth veniall : therefore 1.

Dauid

Pſal.130.2. Dauid vnderſtandeth all ſinnes whatſoeuer: as in the like place is euident, Pſal.130.2. Si obſeruaueris iniquitates, quis ſuſtinebit? If thou marke iniquities, who ſhall abide it? 3. He ſaith not, in compariſon of God, but in the ſight of God: and what other iuſtification do we ſpeake of, but before God? before men, we denie not, but by good workes one may be iuſtified, that is, knowne or declared ſo to be. Againe, he ſpeaketh of ſuch a iuſtification, whereby Gods ſeruants ſhall bee deliuered from iudgement: which is not to be made iuſt, as God is, or equall vnto him; for then euery man ſhould be iudged or condemned: for ſuch iuſtice the Angels haue not, much leſſe men.

Bellarm. That petition of the Lords prayer is to be vnderſtood onely of veniall ſinnes, which are mixed with our good workes, c.20.reſp.ad loc.5.

Contra. 1. The word is ὀφειλήματα, debts; we pray to haue all our debts forgiuen: but I truſt wee are more endangered and indebted to God, by great ſinnes then ſmall. 2. Saint Luke readeth, ἁμαρτίας, ſinnes: and S. Iohn defineth, ἁμαρτία, ſinne to be ἀνομία, tranſgreſſion: 1.Ioh.3.4. 1 Iohn 3.4. but great ſinnes are tranſgreſſions of the law, more then veniall: Ergo, they are not excluded. 3. If good workes are tempered with venial ſins, how can they, being imperfect, make vs iuſt, and perfect before God?

Concil. Arauſican.can.20. Multa in homine bona fiunt, quæ non facit homo, nulla vera bona facit homo, quæ Deus non præſtat, vt faciat homo: Many good things are wrought in man, without man; but man doth no good things, which God doth not firſt giue ſtrength to man to worke and do them, &c. A man then muſt firſt receiue grace of God to worke (which is giuen in his iuſtification) and then he worketh: ſo that good workes are the effect, not the cauſe of iuſtification. See the ſeale of the Martyrs to this doctrine, Part.1. of this Queſtion.

Pſalm.130.4. Cenſur. orientall.cap.6. 1. Ieremie the Patriarch thus alleageth Chryſoſtome to this purpoſe, vpon theſe words of the Pſalme: With thee is mercy: Hoc eſt non in noſtris recte factis, ſed in tua bonitate ſitum eſt, vt tantam effugiamus damnationem: that is, It lieth not in our well done deedes, but in thy goodneſſe, that wee eſcape ſo great damnation.

In 4.cap.ad Roman. In 2.cap.ad Galat. 2. Primaſius ſaith: Impium per ſolam fidem iuſtificat: Hee iuſtifieth the wicked by faith alone, &c. Si gentes fide ſola non ſaluauit, nec nos, quia ex operibus, nemo iuſtificabitur: if hee did not ſaue the Gentiles onely by faith, neither doth hee ſaue vs: for by workes ſhall none bee iuſtified.

*Argum.*2. Theſe places alſo are produced for the perfection of Workes.

1. Matth.6.22. If thy eye be ſingle, all thy body is light: Luke 11.36. If thy bodie bee light, hauing no part darke: Ergo, In good workes there is no darkeneſſe at all. Matth.6.22. Luke 11.36.

2. 1.Corinth.3.12. If any build vpon this foundation, gold, ſiluer: Ergo, ſome workes are as precious and perfect as gold. 1.Cor.3.12.

3. Iam.3.2. In many things we offend all: Ergo, in ſome things we offend not. Iam.3.2.

4. Pſalm.4.4. Tremble and ſinne not; Iſay 1.16.17. Ceaſe to do euill, learne to do well: to what end are we thus exhorted not to ſinne, if we cannot chooſe but ſinne in our good workes. Pſal.4.4. Iſay.1.16.17.

5. Act.10.35. He that feareth God, and worketh righteouſneſſe, is accepted before him: but nothing can pleaſe God, but that, which is truely good. Acts 10.35.

6. In diuers places the Scripture calleth the workes of the righteous, good workes: as Matth.5.16. that men ſeeing your good workes, &c. Bellarm.lib.4.de iuſtificat.c.15. Matth.5.16.

Contra. 1. The ſimple eye, ſignifieth not perfection, but integritie and ſinglenes of heart, without guile or diſſimulation: as Auguſtine very well diſtinguiſheth betweene rectum corde, & mundum corde: right in heart, and cleane in heart: rectus corde eſt, — vt recto curſu, id eſt, recta fide atq; intentione peruenire, vbi habitat mundus corde: He is right in heart, which endeuoureth that with a right courſe, that is a right faith, and intention he may come thither, where dwelleth the cleane in heart, de perfect.iuſtit.contr.Celeſtin. Secondly, the light hauing no darkneſſe, is Faith, which wholy lighteneth the body: as Chriſt ſaith, He that is waſhed, is cleane euery whit: this maketh not for the perfection of workes. Thirdly, yet the light of faith, though conſidered in it ſelſe, it hath no darkeneſſe; yet in the ſight of God, and conferred with his light, is full of darkeneſſe: As Hierome well noteth vpon theſe wordes, God is light, and in him is no darkeneſſe: Oſtendit omnia aliorum lumina aliqua ſorde maculari: He ſheweth that all other lights are obſcured with ſome blemiſh. 1. Ioh.13.10. 1.Ioh.1.5.

First, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of teachers, and of ſound or corrupt doctrine, which hee compareth to gold, ſiluer, or ſtubble, hay, &c. for he compareth himſelfe and other teachers to builders, verſe 10. So then a man may teach pure and ſyncere doctrine, We ſpeake of ſynceritie: though the Apoſtle denie himſelfe to be perfect in working, Not as though we were already perfect. 2. This gold, ſiluer, &c. is ſo called not ſimplie, being laid to Gods touchſtone, but in reſpect of the hay, ſtubble, &c. So we denie not, but that good workes in reſpect of euill, are as gold. 3. Saint Peter expoundeth faith to be that, which is more precious then gold. This place therefore maketh nothing for the perfection of workes. 2. 2.Cor.2.17. Philip.3.12. 1.Pet.1.7.

First, In many things we offend all; ſaith the Apoſtle: whereupon it is well inferred, that in ſome things we offend not all, which is true: for euery man offendeth not in euery thing: but heereof it followeth not, that in ſome things no man offendeth. 2. The Apoſtle affirmeth the contrary, that he is a perfect man, that offendeth not in word: but no man is ſo perfect, and therefore in this point all offend in ſome meaſure: as Let God bee true and euery man a lyar. 3. The word is πταίομεν, we fall or ſtumble: ſo that in his conſtruction, ſome thing there may be, wherein a righteous man doth not fall or ſtumble; that is, apparantly or notoriouſly tranſgreſſe, though he be not without fault. 3. Rom.3.4.

First, his meaning is, that we ſhould not be outragious or immoderate in our anger; as the Apoſtle expoundeth, Let not the the Sunne goe downe vpon your wrath: not that we can bee altogether free from corruption. 2. We are exhorted to ceaſe to do euill; that is, to obſtaine from the workes of the wicked: For as Hierome well ſaith, hominem poſſe eſſe ἀναμάρτητον, ſed non abſq; κακίᾳ vitio, I ſay, a man may be without ſinne, but not without fault, dial.2.contra.Pelag. 3. And as Auguſtine well ſaith, Cur non praeciperetur homini iſta perfectio, &c. Why ſhould perfect iuſtice be commanded, though it cannot be performed? non enim recte curritur, ſi quo currendum eſt neſciatur, &c. A man cannot runne well, if he know not whether to runne: de perfect.iuſtit.contr.Celeſtin. 4. Epheſ.4.26.

Good workes are acceptable to God, but through Chriſt: Such ſacrifices God is pleaſed with, but we muſt offer theſe ſacrifices by Chriſt. 5. Hebr.13.15.

Our workes are called good, non ſecundum perfectam iuſtitiam, ſed hanc, quae humanae fragilitati competit, not after perfect iuſtice, but as is agreeable to our humane fragilitie, dialog.1.contra.Pelag. Hieron. 6.

I cannot here omit a moſt excellent teſtimony of Origen to this purpoſe: Etſi omnia fecerimus, &c. Although we haue done all things, that are commanded vs, yet haue wee not done any good: (for God onely is good) for if the things were truely good, that we doe, it would not haue been written, that doing thoſe things, wee ſhould ſay wee are vnprofitable ſeruants, Quantum ad comparationem caeterorum dicuntur bona, quae agimus; quantum autem ad veritatem, bonum noſtrum non eſt bonum: In reſpect then of other things, the workes are called good, which we do: but in regard of the truth, our good doing is not good: tract,8.in Matth. Luke 17.10.

The Doway champions doe here thus helpe out the matter: whereas Luther would proue by that text; The imagination of the thoughts of mans heart are onely euill continually: that all mens actions are polluted, as proceeding from a corrupt heart; they make this anſwere, that Moſes deſcribeth the enormitie of ſinne, that raigned then in the world before the flood: but there is excep- Geneſ.6.5. Contra. 1. That Moſes ſpeaketh not onely of theſe times, but generally of all mankind, ſhewing what man is by nature, is euident by the like place, cap.8. The imagination of mans heart is euill, euen from his youth: This was ſpoken after the flood: and your Latine Bible here hath this marginall note, which theſe tranſlators haue omitted, cor hominis malum, mans heart is euill: which ſheweth the generall condition of all men by nature. 2. And how Noah was counted perfect, your interlinearie gloſſe ſheweth he was perfect, Tanquam viator, non comprehenſor, As a traueller by the way, not as one that comprehended: that is, was attained to perfection: their owne Vatablus alſo ſaith, that the Apoſtle pronounceth Noe to haue done iuſt per fidem by faith, then not by his owne perfection: yea, the Doway gloſſe-men themſelues els where confeſſe, that the ſpot of veniall ſinnes may bee in a iuſt man,&c. how then is any man perfect?

The Proteſtants.

THe moſt righteous men in earth, haue not onely their infirmities, and are in danger to ſinne daily, but euen their beſt and moſt holy workes are blemiſhed with ſome infirmitie, and haue a ſmacke of ſinne.

Prou.20.9.

Argum. 1. There is no iuſt man in the earth that doth good, and ſinneth not: that is, not at another time, as Bellarmine gloſeth, but euen at the ſame time, wherein he doth good, is not free from ſinne: for who can ſay, I am cleane from ſinne? the iuſt man cannot ſay, that at any time he is cleane from ſinne.

Iſay 64.6.

Argum. 2. All our righteouſneſſe is as a ſtayned clout: Ergo, the beſt workes which we do, are ſomewhat defiled with our owne corruptions.

Bellarmine anſwereth: 1. That the Prophet ſpeaketh of the wicked men, with whom God was angry, not of the righteous.

Iſay 65.5.8.

Contra. Yea, euen of the righteous which ſay, verſ.5. We ſhall be ſaued, and verſ.8. Thou art our father, and we are the worke of thy hands. The wicked cannot ſay thus.

Bellarm. 2. The Prophet vnderſtandeth onely their ceremoniall righteouſnes, in bringing ſacrifices, obſeruing their new Moones, and ſuch like.

Contra. The Prophets words are generall: All our righteouſnes is ſtayned: all, that is, whether the righteouſnes of the morall or ceremoniall law.

1.Pet.4.18.

Argum. 3. Hierome vrgeth againſt the Pelagians, theſe texts of Scripture: Firſt, The righteous ſhall ſcarcely be ſaued: Saluaretur autem facile, ſi nihil in ſe macula haberet: But he ſhould be eaſily ſaued, if he had no blot or blemiſh.

Galath.5.17.

Secondly, Ye cannot doe the ſame things ye would: Ecce Apoſtolus omneſque credentes quod volunt implere non poſſunt: Behold, neither the Apoſtle, nor any beleeuer, can fulfill that which they would.

1.Ioh.1.5.

Thirdly, God is light, and in him is no darknes: Quando dicit nullas tenebras in dei lumine reperiri,&c. When he ſaith no darknes is found in Gods light, he ſheweth that all other mens lights are ſtained.

Matth.9.13.

Fourthly, I came not to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance: Nullus enim ad perfectum iuſtus, ſed aliqua ex parte peccator: For no man is perfectly iuſt, but in ſome ſort a ſinner: Dial. 2. aduer. Pelag.

Firſt, if the righteous then haue alwaies ſome ſtaine; ſecondly, if they cannot in any worke do that they would; thirdly, if their light be alwayes mixed with darknes; fourthly, if they bee not in any thing perfectly iuſt: then it followeth, that their beſt workes are blemiſhed, and imperfect.

1. Origen ſaith well: Vix eſt qui ita curetur,&c. As there is hardly any man ſo cured of his wound, but there remaineth ſome marke of it, ita anima, quæ peccati vulnus accepit, etiamſi curetur, habet tamen peccati cicatricem: ſo the ſoule, which receiued the wound of ſinne, though it be cured, hath ſome ſcarres of ſinne ſtill: *Hom.*8. in Leuitic.

Auguſtine vpon theſe words of *Iob.*29.14. I put on iuſtice as a robe, thus writeth: Veſtis iſta belli magis ſolet eſſe quam pacis, vbi adhuc expugnatur concupiſcentia, non vbi erit plena, ſine aliquo prorſus hoſte iuſtitia: This garment, that is a cloake or mantle, is rather for warre, then peace: for heere wee doe daily fight againſt concupiſcence, and there is no perfect righteouſnes without ſome enemy, cont. Celeſt. de perfect. iuſtit. But if ſo any worke of ours could bee perfect without ſinne, righteouſneſſe might be without an enemie, which Auguſtine denieth.

Cenſur.orient. cap.6.

2. Ieremie Patriarch confeſſeth, that which we doe, paruum quid & nihil ſit, ſi conferatur,&c. it is a ſmall thing, and euen as nothing, being compared with the diuine bountie,&c. And to the ſame purpoſe he citeth Chryſoſtome: ea quæ nobis parua delicta videntur, Thoſe which ſeeme ſmall faultes with vs, doe deſerue great puniſhment, before the diuine tribunall,&c. And againe, in that tribunall, where mercie is preſident, non omnia exacte computantur: all things are not exactly reckoned, the iudge of his great mercie, multa prætermittente, multa condonante, pretermitting many things, and pardoning many.

Eſpenc. in 1. Timoth. 5.7. Quis non quaſi in pulchro corpore, næuum aut verrucam habeat? Who hath not as in a beautifull bodie ſome ſpot or wart? In 2. Timoth. p.110. ex Chryſoſtom. Nemo poteſt ſic in omnibus malus eſſe, quin aliqua bona habeat; vel bonus, quin quædam peccata: No man can be ſo euill in all things, but he hath ſome good things; no man ſo good, but he hath ſome euill.

SECONDLY, WHETHER A RIGHTEOVS MAN may fall into any mortall ſinne.

The Papiſts.

Mortall ſinne (they ſay) cannot conſiſt together with the grace of God, and cannot be committed by a man continuing the ſonne of God: for he that is borne of God ſinneth not, ſaith the Apoſtle, that is, falleth into no mortall ſinne, Rhemiſt. 1. Ioh. 3. ſect. 5.

72. Error.
1. Iohn. 3.9.

The Proteſtants.

First, vnderſtanding mortall ſin, as they doe for euery ſin, that deſerueth death, as adulterie theft, murther, their expoſition is hereticall: for then Dauid ſhould not haue been the ſon of God, when he committed adulterie, and conſequently ſhould haue been none of the predeſtinate: but he that is once the ſonne of God, is alwaies to the [a] end: For whom God loueth, he loueth to the end, Iohn 13.1.

[a] It is obiected by a popiſh cauiller, that this doctrine is dangerous, becauſe it ſpurreth to all villanie: and falſe, becauſe the Apoſtle ſaith of ſome, yee which are iuſtified by the law, are fallen from grace: Galath. 5.4. Anſw. 1. Aſſurance of ſaluation, that ſuch as are the ſonnes of God cannot fall away, breedeth not carnall ſecuritie, but godly carefulneſſe, that they may walke worthie of their calling, as the Apoſtle ſaith, we are choſen in him, that we ſhould be holy: Epheſ. 1.4. 2. They are ſaid to fall from grace, not in reſpect of Gods election, whereby they were neuer ordained to grace that fall from it: but of the outward meanes, which ſhould bring them to ſaluation. See our further anſwere, Retect. pag. 114.

Secondly, the Apoſtles meaning, when he ſaith, he that is borne of God ſinneth not, is no other but as Saint Paul ſaith, let not ſinne raigne, &c. Rom. 6.12. that is, the children of God, though they fall into ſinne, continue not in it, neither delight therein, neither are wholly ouercome of it: for it is true of them, that they doe it not, but ſinne that dwelleth in them, Rom. 7.20. Auguſtine ſaith, Quicunque in Dei prouidentiſſ. diſpoſitione prædeſtinati ſunt, non dico nondum renati, ſed etiam nondum nati, filij Dei ſunt & perire non poſſunt: Whoſoeuer in the moſt wiſe counſell of God are predeſtinate to ſaluation, not onely before they are regenerate and borne againe, but euen before they are borne, are the children of God, and cannot periſh: de correpţ. grat. cap. 9. Such therefore cannot finally periſh, and ceaſe to be the ſonnes of God, though they may fall into ſinne.

Hierome to this purpoſe vrgeth that place of the Pſalme againſt the Pelagians: Pſal. 32.5. when the Prophet had ſaid: I will confeſſe againſt my ſelfe my wickednes: it followeth: Pro hoc, id eſt, impietate orabit ad te omnis ſanctus: ſi ſanctus eſt, quomodo orat pro iniquitate? ſi iniquitatem habet, qua ratione ſanctus appellatur? iuxta illum ſcilicet modum, qui in alio loco ſcribitur, ſepties cadit iuſtus & reſurgit: For this, that is, impietie, ſhall euery holy man pray, &c. If holy, how prayeth he for iniquitie? if hee haue iniquitie, how is he holy? Surely as it is written in another place, The righteous falleth ſeauen times a day and riſeth againe, Dial. 2. ad Pelag. Ergo, an holy man may fall into impietie or iniquitie, though by Gods grace he may be recouered againe.

Pſalm. 32.5.

1. Auguſtine ſaith, Nullus ſanctus & iuſtus caret peccato, &c. No holy or iuſt man, is without ſin, &c. And Primaſius ſaith, Sagitta mortis peccatum, per quod animæ iugulantur: Sinne is the arrow of death, by the which the ſoules are ſlaine, &c. If then a iuſt man cannot be without ſinne, then conſequently the arrow of death ſticketh in his ſoule: but it is pulled foorth by the blood of Chriſt.

De eccleſiaſtic. dogmat. cap.86.
In 15. c.1. epiſt. ad Corinth.

2. Chryſoſtome ſaith, as he is alleaged by Ieremie the Patriarch, Quæ nobis parua delicta videntur magnam merentur pœnam, &c. The ſinnes which ſeeme ſmall to vs, deſerue great puniſhment before the iuſt tribunall, &c. then euen the ſmall and veniall ſinnes, as they call them, are mortall, and worthy of death in the ſeueritie of the diuine iuſtice.

3. Confeſſ. of Saxonie, artic. 16. We condemne the Catharans and Nouatians, which fained, that the elect could not fall into ſinnes againſt their conſcience.

Harm. ſect.8. pag.230.

4. Gregorie ſaith, that euen the righteous perituros ſe ſine ambiguitate præſciunt, ſi remota pietate iudicentur, do foreſee that they ſhall vndoubtedly periſh, if they be iudged without mercie, &c. then it followeth, that euen the iuſt may commit ſinnes worthie of death.

In 3. c. Iob. lib.5. c.8.

THE THIRD IMPEDIMENT OF GOOD WORKES, namely, of ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt: whether it be a ſinne irremiſſible.

23.Error.

ALL ſinnes are pardonable, ſo long as the committers of them be in caſe to repent: as they are, ſo long as they liue in this world: It is great blaſphemie therefore, which the Caluiniſts vtter, that Apoſtaſie, and certaine other ſins of the reprobate, cannot be forgiuen at all in this life: Rhem.1.Iohn.1.5.ſect.4. And therefore they ſay, that blaſphemie againſt the ſpirit is ſaid to be irremiſſible, becauſe it is hardly forgiuen: And they define ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt to bee nothing elſe but finall impenitencie, Rhemiſt. Matth.12.4.

Bellarmine better aduiſed, ſaith, that blaſphemie againſt the holy ſpirit is neither euery ſinne committed after Baptiſme, as Origen thought, nor finall impenitencie, nor yet euery ſinne committed of malice, but defineth it to be a malicious hatred, and deteſtation of the knowne truth: but he ſaith as the reſt, that it is not a ſinne ſimply irremiſſible, Bellarm.lib.2.de pœnitent.cap.15.

Argum. Ioh.20.23.Whoſe ſinnes ſoeuer you remit, they are remitted, &c. Ergo, all ſinnes are remiſſible: Bellar.lib.2.de pœnit.c.15.

Matth.18.18.

*Anſw.*1. The Apoſtles had not commiſſion to bind or looſe whom they would, but to bind all impenitent perſons, and to looſe all penitent ſinners: as Matth.18.18. this authoritie of binding and looſing is giuen with a limitation, that if any man would not heare the Church he ſhould be as a heathen; him they muſt bind, looſe him they cannot, whom they ſee impenitent. And therefore ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, becauſe it was alwaies ioyned with impenitencie, cannot be looſed.

Luke 13.3.

2. Secondly, Bellarmine ſpendeth many words in vaine, to prooue nullum eſſe peccatum, &c. that there is no ſinne, which is not taken away by true repentance: none of vs euer denied it: yea wee doubt not to ſay with Ambroſe: Arbitror, quod etiam Iudas potuiſſet tanta dei miſeratione non excludi à venia, ſi pœnitentiam non apud Iudæos, ſed apud Chriſtum egiſſet: I thinke, that Iudas might haue been not excluded from forgiuenes by the great mercie of God, if he had done repentance not before the Iewes, but with Chriſt, lib.2.de pœnitent.c.4. He ſhould then haue prooued, that repentance may be ioyned with ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt: but ſeeing all, which commit that ſinne are hardened in their hearts, and ſo finally impenitent, they cannot bee forgiuen: for they which repent not ſhall periſh, Luk.13.3.

1.King.2.25.

The Doway diſciples doe here alſo play their part, giuing this marginall note vpon that place: If a man ſhall ſinne againſt our Lord, who ſhall pray for him. ſinnes directly againſt God — are more hardly remitted, but none are irremiſſible before death, becauſe during life, euery one may repent, if they will: annotat. vpon that place.

Marke 3.29. Ierem.31.18. Rom.2.5.

Contra. 1. Though we vrge not this place concerning ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt: yet there gloſſe is falſe: for ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt ſhall neuer be forgiuen, Mark.3.29. and therefore it is irremiſſible euen in this life. 2. The reaſon of the gloſſe is vntrue, that it is in mans power to repent: the Scripture ſaith otherwiſe conuert thou me, and I ſhall be conuerted: and the very next wordes are againſt them, they heard not the voice of their father, becauſe the Lord would kill them: and their note thereupon confuteth their former gloſſe: For their obſtinacie God left them to themſelues, without his grace, and ſo iuſtly puniſhed them. If they could haue repented of themſelues, without the grace of God, the withholding of Gods grace had been no impediment to their repentance: it was certaine therefore, that they could not repent, becauſe God certainely had decreed their puniſhment; and ſo the Apoſtle calleth the heart of ſuch ἀμετανόητον, impenitent, or which cannot repent.

The Proteſtants.

THis queſtion of ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, though it come here ſomewhat out of place, (for it belongeth properly to the 18. Controuerſie, where the other queſtions are handled concerning ſinne) yet I thought it better to touch a matter ſo waightie briefly by the way, then altogether to let it be omitted: We haue therefore to deale both with the Rhemiſts, who doe not rightly deſcribe this ſinne, and then with Bellarmine, that together with the reſt affirmeth this ſin to bee remiſſible, though not ordinarily and commonly.

Firſt then, againſt the Rhemiſts we ſhew, that ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt is not finall impenitencie: euery one indeede that ſo ſinneth, is finally impenitent, becauſe he ſhall neuer haue the grace to repent: But our Sauiour Chriſt meaneth ſome ſpeciall ſinne, in calling it blaſphemie againſt the holie Ghoſt: for many a wicked man may die impenitently, and yet not blaſpheme.

1.Iohn 5.16.

And againe, if finall impenitencie were this ſin, then could it not be committed before death: But ſeeing our Sauiour chargeth the Phariſies then liuing, with blaſphemie, and S. Iohn ſpeaking of the ſinnes of the liuing, which are ſeene, ſaith, there is a ſin vnto death: If thou ſee thy brother ſinne, &c. 1.Iohn 5.16. But if a man could not commit this ſinne before hee die, hee could not bee ſeene to ſinne.

Auguſtine better defineth this ſin: Cum poſt agnitionem Domini per gratiam, &c. quiſquam oppugnat fraternitatem & aduerſus gratiam ipſam, qua reconciliatus eſt Deo, inuidentiæ facibus agitatur: When after the acknowledging of the Lord by the grace of Chriſt, any man doth oppugne the brotherhood, and maliciouſlie is carried againſt that grace whereby hee was reconciled to God: lib.1. de ſerm. in mont.41. But moſt perfectly is this ſinne deſcribed, Heb.10.29. where there are ſet downe three circumſtances that make this ſinne: firſt, the perſon; hee muſt bee ſuch an one as hath been lightened with grace, and been in outward appearance ſanctified: therefore Iewes, Turkes, or Infidels, cannot commit this ſinne; becauſe their minds were neuer illuminate by the truth. Secondly, his affection muſt be conſidered, which is moſt deadly and hatefull in the higheſt degree: blaſpheming the ſpirit, and deſpiting the ſame, crucifying and perſecuting Chriſt againe as it were, Heb.6.6. Wherefore, they which offend of ignorance, as S. Paul before his conuerſion; or infirmitie and weakenes, as S. Peter did when he denied Chriſt; or which fall not into horrible blaſphemies, are not guiltie of this ſin. Thirdly, it is the truth which they hate and deteſt, which ſometime they loued, and were thereby ſanctified, not denying ſome part thereof, as the heretikes doe, but making a generall Apoſtaſie from the whole profeſſion of the faith, they count the blood of the teſtament as an vnholie thing. Blaſphemie then againſt the holy Ghoſt, is an horrible hatred and deteſtation of the truth, and grace of Gods ſpirit, whereby he that now blaſphemeth, was before illuminate. Lyranus defineth it, impugnatio veritatis agnita, an impugning of the knowne truth.

Heb.6.6.

Lyran.annot. in Mat.12.32.

1. Secondly, againſt Bellarmine we ſhew, that this ſinne not onely eaſily ſhall not be forgiuen, but not at all, as our Sauiour ſaith, Neither in this world, nor the world to come.
2. And it is impoſſible for them to be renewed by repentance. From hence wee gather theſe arguments: No ſinne without repentance can be forgiuen. Vnleſſe ye repent, ye ſhall periſh: But ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt is vtterly void of repentance: neither can he that committeth it be renewed by repentance, it is impoſſible ſaith the Apoſtle: Ergo.

Matth.12.32.
Luke 13.3.

3. That ſinne, for the which there remaineth no ſacrifice, is not remiſſible: for our ſinnes cannot otherwiſe be forgiuen vs, then by the ſacrifice of Chriſts death: But ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, which is a willing or wilfull backſliding after the knowledge of the truth, connot be done away by any ſacrifice, Heb.10.26. Ergo.

Heb.10.26.

4. There is no hope of forgiueneſſe for that ſinne, for the which it is not lawfull to pray: for ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, which is a ſinne vnto death, it is not lawfull to pray, 1. Iohn 5.16. Ergo. Wherefore it is a great blaſphemie in the Papiſts ſo contrarie to the Scripture to affirme, that blaſphemie againſt the ſpirit may be forgiuen.

1. Bellarmine anſwereth, that ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt is ſaid not to be remitted in this world nor the next: quia ordinariè & vt plurimùm, becauſe ordinarily, and for the moſt part it is not forgiuen: lib.2. de pœnit.c.16 reſp.ad arg.1. 1.

1. Contra. Firſt, S. Marke ſaith: Non habet remiſſionem in æternum: He that blaſphemeth the holy Ghoſt, ſhal not be forgiuen for euer, Mark.3.29. If neuer, how then dare he contradict the Scripture? Yes, he ſhall be forgiuen, though hardly: if he be forgiuen at all, then the Euangeliſt ſaith not true, he ſhall neuer, &c. Secondly, as other blaſphemies are forgiuen, ſo this blaſphemie is not forgiuen: but other blaſphemies and ſinnes are alſo hardly forgiuen; The righteous ſhall ſcarcely be ſaued: Ergo, this ſinne is not forgiuen, no not hardly. Thirdly, thus Cyprian expoundeth, Non poſſe in Eccleſia remitti ei, qui in deum deliquerit, &c. He cannot be forgiuen in the Church, which ſinneth againſt God: and then he citeth this place, Matth.12.32. lib.3. ad Quirinum cap.28.

1.Pet.4.18.

Matth.12.32.

Origen: Quibus (qui, i. in ſpiritum ſanctum, blaſphemant) neque in præſenti, neque in futuro ſeculo remittetur: To whom (that ſinne againſt the holie Ghoſt) it ſhall not be forgiuen, neither in this world nor the next.

Cauſ.33. diſt.1. c.59. gloſſ. Blaſphemiam in ſpiritum dominus neque in hoc ſeculo, nec futuro remittendam aſſeruit: Blaſphemie againſt the holy Ghoſt, the Lord ſaid, ſhall neither in this world bee forgiuen, nor in the world to come, &c. that is neuer, or not at all.

2. Bellarmine to the ſecond and third place maketh the ſame anſwere, that hee that is once lightened, that is baptized, if he fall away, cannot be renewed againe by the baptiſme of repentance: and for ſuch there is no more ſacrifice, that is, no ſecond baptiſme to be expected: Bellar. ibid. 2.

2. Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle, Heb.6.1.2. maketh repentance from dead workes, and the doctrine of Baptiſmes two diuers things: therefore by repentance Baptiſme is not inſinuated. Secondly, the meaning of the Apoſtle is, that ſuch an one cannot at all repent, and ſo cannot bee renewed by repentance: the reaſon is taken from the greatnes of ſinne, becauſe hee doth crucifie againe the Sonne of God, and make a mocke of him, verſ 6. and therefore is neere to curſing, verſ.8. Thirdly, Ambroſe ſaith in Luc.22. Caſſa erat proditoris pœnitentia, qui peccauit in ſpiritum ſanctum: The traytors repentance was in vaine (meaning Iudas) which ſinned againſt the holy Ghoſt, &c. ſignifying, that ſuch an one cannot haue true repentance. Likewiſe Hierome: Nihil ita repugnat deo quam cor impœnitens; ſolum crimen eſt, quod veniam conſequi non poteſt; ſolum deſperationis crimen, quod mederi non poteſt: Nothing doth ſo much reſiſt againſt God, as an impenitent heart; it is the onely crime, which cannot obtaine pardon; only the crime of deſperation cannot be healed: obiurgat. Sabinian. The Apoſtles meaning then is, that they which ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, hauing no grace to repent, cannot at all be forgiuen.

Verſ.6.8.

3. Firſt, in the ſame ſenſe the Apoſtle ſaith, there remaineth no ſacrifice for this, nor any meanes

Heb.10.27.28. at al of forgiuenes:but a fearefull looking for of iudgement and violent fire,Heb.10.27.ſo that the Apoſtle excludeth all meanes and hope of comfort and remiſſion.Secondly, v.28.he dieth without mercy that deſpiſeth Moſes law:but he that blaſphemeth the ſpirit,is worthie of greater puniſhment; verſ.29. therfore he alſo ſine vlla miſeratione moritur,dieth without mercie;and where there is no mercy there is no forgiuenes. Thirdly,Peter Lombard lib.3.diſt.43.b.rehearſeth thus out of Auguſtine: Hoc ſolum peccatum veniam mereri non poteſt: Thus ſinne onely againſt the holy Ghoſt can find no mercy.And out of Hierome: Taliter peccans dignè pœnitere non poteſt: He that thus ſinneth,cannot worthily repent,&c.Ergo,there is no hope at all of mercie for ſuch, nor no ſacrifice for remiſſion of their ſinne.

4. Bellar. The Apoſtle doth not forbid vs to pray for ſuch,but onely ſheweth,that wee are not ſo 1.Ioh.5.15.14. eaſily heard,nor cannot pray with ſuch aſſurance: otherwiſe he had ſaid before,1.Ioh.5.15.we know that he heareth whatſoeuer we aske: Bellar.ibid.reſp.ad 4.loc.

Contra. Firſt,the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe,verſ.14. This is the aſſurance,that we haue in him, that if we aske any thing according to his will,he heareth vs: but to pray for a ſinne irremiſſible, is to pray againſt his will. Secondly,the Apoſtle hauing before giuen a direct precept to pray for a brother, ſinning not vnto death, afterward giueth a flat exception, of this ſinne vnto death, I ſay not that thou ſhouldeſt pray for it. Now that which is excepted out of the precept,is it not denied, or forbidden? as Ioh.13.18. our Sauiour ſaith,I ſpeake not of you all: hee doth manifeſtly except and exclude Iudas: ſo here to pray for a ſinne vnto death,being excepted from the generall precept before,is euidently forbidden and denied.Thirdly,the end of our prayer for ſinners,is,that God would giue them life,that ſinne not vnto death: but life cannot be granted for a ſinne vnto death, (for how is it a ſinne vnto death,if it may find life?) Ergo, there is no prayer for ſuch,where the end of the prayer cannot be hoped for. Fourthly, thus Ambroſe expoundeth: Non poteſt ibi exoratio eſſe veniæ, vbi ſacrilegij eſt plenitudo: There can be no entreatie for pardon, where there is a fulneſſe of ſacrilege. Hierome,as he is cited by Pet.Lombard, Rectè dicit Ioannes,non pro eo oret quis,&c. Saint Iohn ſaith well,let not any man pray for him: lib.3.diſt.43.b. He maketh this exception of the Apoſtle a flat prohibition.

So I conclude this place,with that ſentence of Hierome: Genus eſt lepræ,quod omnino mundari non poteſt,&c. There is a kind of leproſie,which cannot be cleanſed at all, and therefore ſuch a man was bid to goe out of the campe. This is that ſinne, which is committed againſt the holy Ghoſt, that is of blaſphemie,which,as our Lord ſaith in the Goſpell, ſhall not bee forgiuen, neither in this nor the next world: de diuerſ.generib.lepr.

We haue alſo the teſtimonie of holy Martyrs: Maſter Tyndall; *Sinne againſt the holy Ghoſt is,when men of a ſet malice doe perſecute the truth,and of a grounded hate againſt the law of God,by reaſon of a ful conſent they haue to ſin,and to walke in their old waies of ignorance,whereunto being now paſt all repentance, they haue vtterly yeelded themſelues, to follow with full luſt,without bridle or ſnaffle,&c.*Fox.pag. 1080.col.2.

Lib.de pudicitia. And for further euidence: 1.Tertullian thus euidently diſtinguiſheth ſinnes: Eſt delictum non ad mortem — hoc erit remiſſibile,eſt delictum ad mortem hoc erit irremiſſibile,— vbi eſt poſtulationis, illic erit remiſſionis,vbi nec poſtulationis, ibi æque neque remiſſionis — alia erit quæ veniam conſequi poſſit,alia quæ conſequi nullo modo poteſt,&c. There is a ſinne not vnto death, and a ſinne vnto death, for this I ſay not (ſaith the Apoſtle) that any ſhould pray: where is place for prayer, there is of remiſſion,where not for prayer, neither for remiſſion: — ſome may obtaine pardon, ſome cannot by any meanes,&c.

Lib.de certaminib. eſſent. patr.fil.& ſperit. Athanaſius ſaith,Nullum eſt peccatum irremiſſibile apud Deum,&c. There is no ſinne irremiſſible before God to them,that from their heart doe repent,&c. and this we denie not.

Catech.16. Cyrill of Ieruſalem ſaith,Chriſt Ieſus, the Iudge of the quicke and dead, hath decreed, ὅτι οὐκ ἔχει ἄφεσιν, that ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt,ſhall haue no forgiueneſſe.

Cenſur. orien. cap.4. 2. So alſo Ieremie the Patriarch ſaith, Nullum eſt peccatum tantum quod miſericordiam Dei vincere poſſit, There is no ſinne ſo great,which can ouercome the mercie of God,that is,if we can repent: but to them which cannot repent,as in the ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt,there is no pardon.

Harm.ſect.9. pag.216. 3. Latter confeſſ. of Heluetia,c.14. God doth forgiue all ſinnes of the faithfull, onely that one ſinne excepted,which is commited againſt the holy Ghoſt.

4. The interlinearie gloſſe giueth this note, Matth.3.29. ſhall neuer be forgiuen, quia dignè pænitere non poteſt, becauſe he that committeth that ſinne, can neuer worthily repent, &c. Therefore this ſinne in this ſenſe is irremiſſible.

THE FOVRTH PART OF THE DIGNITIE and worthines of good workes, that is, of merits.

THE FIRST PART, WHICH BE THE good workes of Chriſtians.

The Papiſts.

74.Error. THey doe not onely call them good workes, which are commanded of God,but which are alſo inioyned by the Church and the gouernours thereof; and that euen by ſuch workes men are iuſtified, Concil. Trident.ſeſſ.6.cap.10.Tapper.ex Tileman.loc.11.err.1.

The Proteſtants.

SAint Paul defineth good workes otherwiſe, namely, thoſe which God hath ordained, that wee ſhould walke in them, Epheſ.2.10. They are not the precepts of men, but the commandements of God in his word, the doing whereof hath the name of good works. As for the traditions and iniunctions of men not warranted by Gods word, they are ſo farre from being commended or commanded, that our Sauiour calleth the doing thereof, but a Worſhipping of God in vaine, Mark.7.7.

Marke 7.7.

Auguſtine vpon thoſe words, in the 103. Pſalme. The louing kindnes of the Lord is vpon thoſe that keepe his couenant, and thinke vpon his commandements to do them, ſaith thus: Vide vt praecepta teneas: ſed quomodo teneas? non memoria, ſed vita: Memoria retinentibus mandata eius, non vt reddant ea, ſed vt faciant ea: See that thou keepe Gods commandements: but how? not in thy memorie, but in thy life; not to ſay them by rote, but to doe them: Ergo, they are Gods commandements, which we muſt thinke of to do them: occurrat, in Pſal. 102. for vnto ſuch the bleſſing is promiſed, not to the obſeruers of mens precepts or traditions.

Cantic.1.14.

2. Chryſoſtome ſaith: Virtutes & actio purgata caelitus datur hominibus, a Deo: Vertue and purged actions are giuen vnto men from heauen, from God, &c. Ieremie Patriarke, Abſque exercitio illorum operum, quae Deus praecepit, neque ſpes vlla ſalutis: Without the exerciſe of thoſe workes, which God hath commanded, there is no hope of ſaluation, &c. Theſe then are the good workes, which God hath preſcribed.

4. Eſpenc. out of Theodoret, thus expoundeth that 1.Timoth.6.18. ἀγαθοεργεῖν, to doe well, that is, Credere Deo, & quaecunque fidei conueniunt facere: To beleeue in God, and to doe all things agreeable to faith: *in 1.Tim.p.*171. Good workes then are thoſe which God hath appointed, and are according to faith.

1.Tim.6.18.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER THERE be any good workes without faith.

The Papiſts.

THough they dare not altogether iuſtifie the workes of the Heathen and Infidels, yet they doe excuſe them, and do blame vs for ſaying, that Infidels doe ſinne in honouring their parents, in fighting for their countrey, and ſuch like. They therefore doe diſcharge the Heathen of ſinne, in theſe workes of theirs, *Rhemiſt, Rom.*14. *ſect.*4.

75. Error.

The Proteſtants.

THeſe workes are not ſinne in themſelues, but in Infidels they are, becauſe they proceede of Infidelitie.

Arg. It is the rule of the Goſpell, that a corrupt tree cannot bring foorth good fruit: But all Infidels are corrupt trees, being without faith: Ergo, they can bring forth no good fruit.

Matth.7.18.

1. The Pelagians thought to haue poſed Auguſtine with the ſame queſtion, which the Papiſts propound to vs. Was it ſinne in the Heathen (ſay they) to clothe the naked? Auguſtine anſwereth, Non per ſeipſum factum peccatum eſt, — ſed de tali opere non in domino gloriari, ſolus impius negat eſſe peccatum: The fact of it ſelfe is not ſinne, but in doing any ſuch thing not to reioyce in the Lord, none but wicked men will denie it to be ſinne, &c. I may therefore ſay vnto theſe patrones of Ethnicke vertues, as Bernard in the like caſe: Dum multum ſudat quomodo Platonem faciat Chriſtianum ſe probat Ethnicum: While hee laboureth to make Plato a Chriſtian, hee ſheweth himſelfe an Ethnicke: *Epiſtol.*191.

Cyrillus, Opera fidei congruentia facere, eorum ſolummodo eſt, qui diligunt Deum: To do workes agreeable to faith, it belongeth onely to them that loue God.

2. Ieremie Patriarch: Illa vero bona opera eſſe iudicamus, quae a vera & certa fide ſeiuncta non ſunt, &c. We iudge thoſe to be right good workes, which are not ſeparated from the right faith, &c. and in another place he approoueth that ſentence, quicquid non ex fide peccatum, whatſoeuer is not of faith is ſinne:

Like as then the branch without the vine bringeth no fruite: ſo neither can a man without faith doe any thing, that is good.

Decr par.2.cauſ.1.qu.1.c.26.Gregor. Vbi Chriſtus non eſt fundamentum,nullum eſt boni operis edificium: Where Chriſt is not the foundation,there can be no good worke builded vpon.

Peter Lombard.lib.2.diſt.41.a. Quæ ſine fide fiunt,bona non ſunt: The things done without faith, are not good.

THE THIRD PART OF THE VSE and office of good workes.

THey make a threefold vſe of good workes, as they call them: firſt, by them the merites of Chriſt, they ſay, are applied vnto vs. Secondlie, they doe purge our ſinnes. Thirdlie, they are meritorious.

THE FIRST ARTICLE, WHETHER bona opera be applicatoria.

The Papiſts.

76.Error. BY any worke proceeding of faith and charitie,the merit of Chriſts paſſion is applied to vs,Soto,ex Tileman.loc.11.err.21. Men by their ſuffrings and other works,may applie to themſelues the generall medicine of Chriſts merits and ſatisfaction,Rhemiſt.annot.1.Coloſſ.ſect.4.

The Proteſtants.

IT is the propertie of faith onely,to apprehend,and apply vnto vs the benefits of Chriſts paſſion,and all other his merits.

Rom.10.7.8. Argum. Rom.10.7.8.We need not (ſaith the Apoſtle) to aſcend to heauen,or deſcend into the deepe, to bring Chriſt from thence: it is the word of faith,which we preach. By faith then we doe ſcale the heauens,and behold Chriſt: it is not the doctrine of workes,but the word of faith that performeth this. And therefore the Apoſtle defineth faith, to bee the ground of things hoped for, and the euidence

Heb.11.1. of things not ſeene,Hebr.11.1. This definition cannot agree vnto workes, or vnto any other thing but faith: for then it were no good definition, nor yet deſcription: Ergo, faith only is the euidence of things inuiſible: and therefore onely applieth Chriſts pretious merits, which are things beleeued and not ſeene.

Auguſtine thus alſo deſcribeth faith: Rerum abſentium præſens eſt fides; rerum,quæ foris ſunt,intus eſt fides: rerum,quæ non videntur, videtur fides: Faith maketh things abſent,preſent; things without vs,to be within vs; things not ſeene,to be ſeene: de Trinitat.lib.13.c.1. Ergo, faith only hath this applicatorie power,to applie Chriſts merits not preſent,nor ſeene,and to make them as our owne.

Ambroſ.in 2.Cor.3. Lex ſpiritus dat libertatem ſolam fidem poſcens,vt quia quæ non vidit,credit,de conditione erui mereatur: The law of the ſpirit giueth libertie,requiring onely faith,which becauſe it beleeueth thoſe things it ſeeth not,is thought worthie to be deliuered. This then is that which in faith is auaileable,becauſe it beleeueth,that which is not ſeene,which is only proper and peculiar to faith, and not to workes.

In 2.cap. ad Epheſ. Now for further euidence: 1.Theodoret ſaith, Sola fide ſuſcepta condonauit peccata: hee hath pardoned our ſinnes,by faith onely receiued,non exegit vitæ innocentiam, he exacteth not innocencie of life,&c.that is toward iuſtification: workes then apply not Chriſts merits but faith.

In 5.c.ad Roman. 2. Primaſius: Impium per ſolam fidem iuſtificat non opera: He iuſtifieth the wicked onely by faith, not by workes,&c.but if workes applied Chriſts merits,they ſhould iuſtifie,as well as faith,&c.

Harm.ſect.14. pag.437. Confeſſ. of Auſpurg,&c. The applying of the benefit of Chriſt,is by a mans owne faith,as Paul witneſſeth,whom God hath ſet foorth to be a reconciliation through faith in his blood,&c.

Index.Hiſpan. expurg.f.11. pag.2. 4. Vatablus giueth this note in Cantic.3.numer.2. Sola gratia inuenitur Chriſtus non opera hominis, onely by faith is Chriſt found,not by the helpe of man,&c. Which ſentence therefore is in their index expurgator, noted to be blotted out.

THE SECOND ARTICLE WHETHER bona opera be expiatoria.

The Papiſts.

78.Error. THe workes of charitie and mercie,as almes deeds,and ſuch like,haue force to extinguiſh our ſins, as Saint Peter ſaith,Charitie doth couer a multitude of ſins,Epiſt.1.4.8. Rhemiſt ibid.

The Proteſtants.

Prou.10.11. Anſw. THe Apoſtle ſpeaketh of mutuall charitie amongſt our ſelues, whoſe propertie is to couer a multitude of our neighbours offences,as Salomon ſaith, Prou.10.11. Hatred ſtirreth vp contentions, but loue couereth treſpaſſes: what is this to the extinguiſhing of our ſinnes before God?

Heb.1.3. Arg. It is an abominable and blaſphemous opinion, that any man by his works ſhould bee able to redeeme his ſinnes: for the Scripture ſaith,that by himſelfe Chriſt hath purged our ſinnes, Heb.1.3.

If he haue wholy done it by himſelfe, he hath not giuen this power and force of redemption to any other meanes.

If they vnderſtand by the force of extinguiſhing ſinnes, the meanes onely of applying Chriſts merits: in that ſenſe, faith onely is ſaid to ſaue vs, Epheſ.2.8. Epheſ.2.8.

Auguſtine: Si merita noſtra aliquid facerent, ad damnationem noſtram veniret, ſed non venit ad inſpectionem meritorum, ſed remiſſionem peccatorum: If our merits were auaileable to any purpoſe, God ſhould come to our condemnation: but he commeth not to behold our merits, but to forgiue vs our ſinnes: enarr. in Pſal.43. Ergo, by our merits our ſinnes are not forgiuen.

Ambroſe: Peccatum aut donatur, aut deletur, aut tegitur; donatur per gratiam, deletur per ſanguinem crucis, tegitur per charitatem: Sinne is either pardoned, extinguiſhed, or blotted, couered; it is pardoned by grace, blotted or waſhed away by Chriſts blood, couered by charitie: apolog. Dauid. cap.13. So then though before men by loue and charitie offences may bee couered, yet before God by grace onely and faith in Chriſts blood, are they blotted and extinguiſhed. And that is Ambroſe meaning, that before God ſinnes are not couered by charitie, but by faith, it is euident by his owne words: Remittere, tegere, non imputare, vna ratio, vnus eſt ſenſus: To remit, to couer, not to impute, haue all one ſenſe: in 4. ad Roman. But he had ſaid before, that ſinnes are pardoned and ſo remitted by grace: Ergo, by grace and faith they are alſo couered.

1. Cyrillus further ſaith, Ne iuſtificari opere putemus, ne gratiam Dei meritis noſtris, ſed fide aſſuturam nobis ſperemus: That we ſhould not thinke to be iuſtified by worke, nor hope for grace by our merits, but by faith, &c. Lib.4. in Ioann.cap.51.

2. Chryſoſtome vpon theſe words, with thee is mercie, as hee is cited by Ieremie the Patriarch, Hoc eſt non in noſtris rectè factis ſed in tua bonitate ſitum eſt, vt tantam effugiamus damnationem, &c. that is, it lieth not in our well doing, but in thy goodneſſe, that wee eſcape ſo great damnation, &c. Cenſur. oriental.cap.6.

3. Confeſſ. of Bohemia, cap.4. Neither hath any man, of all things whatſoeuer any thing at all, whereby he may deliuer, ſet free, or redeeme himſelfe from his ſinnes and condemnation. Confeſſ. of Baſil. The faithfull doe worke not to ſatisfie for their ſinnes, but onely that in ſome ſort they may ſhew themſelues thankefull vnto God. Harm.ſect.6. pag.95. Sect.9. pag.249

4. Vatablus giueth this marginall note: Eccleſ.9. Per iuſtitiam operum neſcit homo amore an odio dignus ſit: by the righteouſneſſe of workes, a man knoweth not whether he be worthie of loue or hatred, &c. then cannot his workes expiate or redeeme his ſinnes: this note is likewiſe in their Index, blotted out. Index expurg. Hiſpan.f.11. pag.1.

THE THIRD ARTICLE, WHETHER our workes be meritorious.

The Papiſts.

God giueth as well euerlaſting life and glory to men, for and according to their workes, as hee giueth damnation for the contrary workes, Rhemiſt. Roman.2. ſect.2. And men by their workes, proceeding of grace, doe deſerue or merit heauen, and the more or leſſe ioy in the ſame, 1. Cor.3. ſect.2. 79. Error.

*Argum.*1. He will render to euery man according to his workes, Rom.2.6. Euery man ſhall receiue his reward according to his labour. Heere we ſee the kingdome of heauen is a retribution, hyre, wages for workes: Ergo, our workes are the value, price, worth and merite of the ſame: Rhemiſt. Rom.2.6.

Anſw. Our labours and workes are a meaſure of the reward, according to the which God doth meete out and render vnto his Saints of the heauenly reward: but they are no meritorious or deſeruing cauſe thereof. The reward is of mercy, not of deſert; of grace, not of merite: for life eternall is the meere gift of God through Ieſus Chriſt, Rom.6.23. But the wages of ſinne is death. Where the Apoſtle doth ſet a manifeſt difference betweene the reward of the righteous, and the iuſt recompence of the wicked: for life eternall is the free and gracious gift of God, not deſerued: but eternall damnation is the due debt of ſinne. Wherefore the Papiſts doe bid open battell to the Apoſtle, in ſaying, that the one is as due by debt as the other. Rom.6.23.

*Argum.*2. S. Paul ſaith, That there is a crowne of righteouſneſſe layd vp for him, which God the iuſt Iudge ſhall giue him: Ergo, the crowne is giuen not of mercie, but of iuſtice, as a wages and iuſt recompence to the Apoſtle. 2.Timoth.4.8.

Anſw. God rendreth heauen as a iuſt Iudge, not to the merite and worthines of our workes, but to the merite and worthineſſe of Chriſt, and as due to vs by his promiſe made to vs in Chriſt. The reward therefore of heauen is of the mercie of God, who hath freely promiſed it vs in Chriſt. It is of his iuſtice, in that he is faithfull and iuſt in keeping of his promiſe made to vs: So that it is a debt, not in reſpect of any deſert in vs, but in regard of his owne promiſe; As Auguſtine ſaith: Debitorem ipſe ſe Dominus fecit, non accipiendo, ſed promittendo: Non ei dicitur redde, quod accepiſti, ſed redde quod promiſiſti: God hath made himſelfe a debtor, by promiſing, not by receiuing any thing at our hands: We ſay not to him, render that thou haſt receiued, but giue that which thou haſt promiſed: In Pſalm.83.

Alexander Seton Preacher and Martyr thus witneſſeth: If you aske if good workes ſhall bee rewarded, I ſay yea, and with no leſſe then eternall glorie: but for no merite they deſerue, but onely becauſe God hath promiſed, not for the merite of the worke, but for his promiſe ſake, and hee will not breake his promiſe: Fox.pag.1206.

Argum.3. Further, theſe places are produced for the proofe of merites.

Matth.5.12. Matth.20.8. 1. Life euerlaſting is in Scripture called merces, a recompence or reward, therefore good workes doe properlie merite, Reioyce and be glad, great is your reward in heauen: Call the labourers, and giue them their hire.

Matth.25.34. verſ.21. 2. Good workes are rendred as the cauſe, why eternall life is rendred, Come yee bleſſed inherite the kingdome, for when I was hungred ye gaue me meate, &c. Thou haſt been faithfull in little, I will make thee ruler ouer much, enter into thy Maſters ioy.

Matth.19.17. 1.Tim.4.8. 3. Life eternall is promiſed to good workes: If thou wilt enter into life, keepe the Commandements. Godlineſſe hath the promiſe both of this life and the next: ſo then, as he that promiſeth, is endebted by promiſe; ſo he that worketh, and fulfilleth the condition meriteth.

Luk.10.7. 2.Theſ.1.5. Apocal.3.4. 4. The Scripture counteth men worthie: The labourer is worthy of his wages. That ye may be counted worthy of the kingdome of God, for which ye ſuffer: They ſhall walke with me in white, for they are worthy.

Rom.2.11. Galat.2.6. 5. God is no accepter of perſons: There is no reſpect of perſons with God: Therefore he giueth vnto euery man according to their workes: Bellarm.lib.5.de iuſtif.c.3.

1. Anſw. Firſt Auguſtine ſaith, Quicquid promiſit indignis promiſit, vt non quaſi operibus merces premitteretur, ſed gratia gratis daretur: Whatſoeuer God hath promiſed, he hath promiſed to thoſe that are vnworthy, that it ſhould not be promiſed as a reward vnto workes, but as grace freely giuen: *Præfat.in Pſalm.*109. The argument then followeth not, there is a reward, Ergo, merite: For the reward may be counted of fauour as well as of debt, Rom.4.4. Secondly, S. Ambroſe inferreth the cleane contrary concluſion: Cum hi qui in multo labore ſudarunt, &c. Seeing they, which were in all the labour receiued no more then the laſt, Intelligant donum ſe gratia non operum accepiſſe mercedem: Let them know that they receiued a gift of grace, not a reward of their workes, Ambr lib.1.de vocat. gent.c.3.

2. Good workes are alleaged not as the cauſe or reaſon of life, but as the way and order thereunto: Saint Ambroſe ſheweth the reaſon, Habet vitam æternam fides, quia fundamentum eſt bonum, habent & bona facta, quibus vir iuſtus & dictis & rebus probatur: Faith hath life eternall, as a good foundation, and good workes alſo, whereby a righteous man is proued in word and deede: Officior.lib.2.c.2. Good workes then are recompenſed as teſtimonies and proofes of our faith.

Rom.4.16. Rom.4.3. 3. Promiſe and merite or worke cannot ſtand together, but promiſe is the obiect of faith: It is by faith, that the promiſe might be ſure, and that which is of faith is not of debt: as the Apoſtle ſheweth, To him that worketh, the wages is counted of debt; to him that worketh not, faith is counted, &c. And Ambroſe, Veniam tanquam ex fide ſperemus, non tanquam ex debito: Let vs hope for pardon as of faith, not of debt, *lib.2.de pœniten.c.*8. Wherefore it followeth not, God promiſeth life with a condition, Ergo, by the condition performed we doe merite: ſeeing that the reward dependeth vpon the promiſe which is apprehended by faith, and ſo is not of merite.

4. Firſt, he that laboureth in the Goſpell, is worthy of his wages before men, but it followeth not that it is ſo before God. Secondly, the text is: That ye may be counted worthie: and verſ.11. That God may make you worthy: we are not then verily worthy, but as it pleaſeth God in Chriſt to account vs worthy. Ambroſe ſaith well, Quantum ad cæterorum comparationem pertinet, hi digni ſunt, quantum ad rem ipſam omnes indigni ſunt: In reſpect of others they are worthy, but indeede in reſpect of the thing, they are all vnworthy, in 2.Timoth.c.1.

5. God is no accepter of perſons, to admit vnto life thoſe that haue not laboured in his name, and to refuſe others with their righteous workes: but hee giueth vnto euery one according to their workes, but not for, or becauſe of their workes: their workes as liuely teſtimonies of their faith, are a rule and meaſure of their reward, but no cauſe: men ſhall be both knowne here and iudged there by their workes, as the tree is deſcerned and iudged by the fruite. Auguſtine very well vpon theſe words, Matth.7.2. Matth.7.2. With what meaſure yee meete, ſhall be meaſured to you againe, &c. Eſt apud te menſura veniæ dandæ, inuenies apud me menſuram veniæ accipiendæ, &c. There is with thee a meaſure in giuing leaue or pardon, thou ſhalt finde with mee a meaſure of receiuing pardon: *in Pſalm.*143. Our workes then are a meaſure, whereby it ſhall be meaſured againe to vs, but no merite or deſert. Gregory ſaith, Reddendum eſt vnicuique ſecundum opera, ſed aliud eſt ſecundum, aliud propter opera reddere: It ſhall be rendred to euery man according to his workes: but it is one thing according another to render for workes, *in Pſalm.*142.

Argum. 4. The Doway gloſſemen doe alleage theſe places of Scripture to prooue merites.

Exod.1.21. 1. Exod.1.21. Vpon theſe words, becauſe the Midwiues feared God, hee built them houſes: they giue this marginall note, The feare of God is meritorious.

Pag.704. 2. Ruth 2.12. Boaz ſaith to Ruth: Our Lord render vnto thee for thy worke, and God graunt thou mayeſt receiue a full reward, &c. Where their marginall note is, Boaz doubteth not but reward was due to good workes. Good workes are meritorious, and rewardes are promiſed for the ſame, Leuit. 26. Pag.704.

*Contra.*1. The firſt note is grounded vpon a falſe tanſlation: for he built them houſes: that is, made them to proſper, is vnderſtood of the Iſraelites, that they encreaſed, not of the Midwiues: for the pronoune affix is of the Maſculine Gender, lahem, to them: it ſhould be lahen in the feminine, if it were referred to the Midwiues.

2. The ſecond place ſheweth, that good workes ſhall bee rewarded, which wee denie not, but not of merite; or the worthineſſe in them; but becauſe of faith, whereof they are teſtimonies: as it followeth in the ſame place, vnder whoſe wings thou art come to couer thee: it was her faith in God, which made her workes acceptable.

3. The bleſſings there promiſed, are not giuen for the merit or worthineſſe of their works, but becauſe of Gods promiſe, who crowneth in mercie the imperfect obedience of his children: as it is in the Pſalme, which crowneth thee with mercy. Pſal.103.4.

*Argum.*5. Now whereas diuers Fathers are alleaged for merits, as Ignatius epiſtol. ad Roman. Vt Deum poſſim promereri: That I may merite God: Hilar. c.8. in Matth. De noſtro eſt beata illa æternitas promerenda: We muſt merite heauen of our owne. Ambroſ. lib.1. de offic. c.15. Euidens eſt meritorum aut præmia aut ſupplicia manere poſt mortem: It is euident, that either reward or puniſhment of our merites doe remaine after death: Bellarm. c.4.

Our generall anſwere to theſe and the like places of the Fathers is this: Firſt, that this word promereri, to merite, ſometime ſignifieth nothing elſe but to pleaſe or be acceptable: as Heb.13.16. with ſuch ſacrifice, promeretur Deus, God is merited, as the vulgar latine readeth; the worde is [illegible] is pleaſed: and ſo the vulgar text tranſlateth, Hebr.11.6. Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God: and in this ſenſe Ignatius is to be vnderſtoode. Hebr.13.16. Hebr.11.6.

Secondly, promereri ſignifieth as much as ſatagere, for a man to endeuour or put forward himſelfe, or to doe ſeruice; as the Latine phraſe is vſed, mereri ſub aliquo, to ſerue vnder one: ſo Hilarie is to be interpreted: for otherwiſe, heauen is not merited, de noſtro, of our owne. And as it followeth, præſtandum aliquid eſt ex proprio, ſomewhat muſt be performed of our owne: but hee that meriteth, muſt not doe ſomewhat, but the whole: it ſignifieth therefore ſeruice rather and diligent endeuour, then deſert properly.

Thirdly, ſometime meritum, merit is taken abſolutely, for opus, worke: as Auguſtine ſo taketh it, Tract.3. in Ioann. Deus coronat dona ſua, non merita tua: (.i. opera) God crowneth his gifts, not thy merits, that is workes: for if they be properly merits, they ſhould be crowned. So then, merit noteth the ſubſtance of the worke, and not the qualitie: and thus the word alſo may haue a tolerable ſenſe.

Fourthly, the fathers vſe the word merit, properly referring it vnto the efficacie of Chriſts death, and the merits thereof: as Auguſtine ſaith, Mors eius meritum meum—non ſum meriti inops, quamdiu ille miſerationum Dominus non defuerit: His death is my merit—I am not without merit, as long as my Lord is not without mercy: Manual. c.22. In this ſenſe Bernard: Meum meritum miſeratio domini, non ſum inops meriti, quamdiu ille miſerationum non eſt: My merit is Gods mercy, I am not without merit, as long as he is not without mercie: Cantic.61. Gods mercy in Chriſt, or Chriſts merit by Gods mercy is our merit.

Fifthly, mereo, ſignifieth abſolutely to get, to compaſſe, obtaine: as Plaut. Meruit illa virum dote: She got or obtained an husband, with her dowrie. Thus Auguſt. ſerm. de tempor.252. Nullis præcedentib. meritis per gratiam dei meruimus fieri templum dei: Without any merits going before by grace we merited (that is obtained) to be the temple of God, &c. otherwiſe the grace of God properly is not merited. And how can we merit without merit, as here it is ſaid? And Ambroſe ſaith: Lex ſpiritus dat libertatem, ſolam fidem poſcens, &c. The law of the ſpirit giueth libertie requiring onely faith, that becauſe it beleeueth, that which it ſeeth not, de conditione erui mereatur, it may deſerue to bee deliuered: that is obtaine, in 2. Cor.3. for otherwiſe faith meriteth not: As Ambroſe againe, Veniam tanquam ex fide ſperemus, non tanquam ex debito, &c. Let vs hope for pardon as of faith, not of debt, lib.2. de pœniten. c.8. But if it were by the merit of faith, it ſhould be of debt. And Auguſtine: Non pro merito accipies vitam æternam, ſed pro gratia, fides enim gratia: Thou ſhalt not receiue life eternall for merit, but for grace, for if faith is grace, &c. Tract.3. in Ioann. Ergo, there is no merit of faith properly. If the fathers be vnderſtood in any of theſe ſenſes, when they ſpeake of merit, though the phraſe be not proper, it is tolerable: otherwiſe if they be conſtrued to aſcribe the kingdome of heauen any way to mans merit, they ſpeake contrary to themſelues, as after in our arguments followeth to be ſhewed.

The Proteſtants.

WE confeſſe a neceſſary vſe of good workes: As firſt, they doe ſerue as notable meanes and inſtruments to ſet forth Gods glorie by. Secondly, by them alſo our faith is ſhewed, publiſhed and made knowen, for the good example of others. Thirdly, our owne conſcience alſo is thereby quieted, and our election daily made more ſure vnto vs: wee doe grow and increaſe in the certaintie and aſſurance thereof. But we acknowledge no power, force, or efficacie at all in them to deſerue and merite any thing at the hands of God, neither doth the Scripture in any place ſo ſpeake. Matth.5.16. Iam.2.18. 2.Pet.1.10.

Dan.9.9.

*Argum.*1. If man conſider his deſerts, he ſhall finde, that he is worthy of nothing but death: To vs (ſaith the Prophet) belongeth ſhame, Dan.9.9. There is nothing els by debt due vnto vs: as Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Nihil praceſſerat in meritis noſtris, niſi vnde damnari deberemus: Nothing goeth before in our merits, but that whereby we ought iuſtly to be condemned, *in Pſal.*18.*expoſit.*2. And againe, *Omne peccatum noſtra eſt negligentia, omnis virtus & ſanctitas eſt Dei indulgentia, in Matth. ſerm.*7. All euill and ſinne in vs, is of our owne negligence; all goodnes and holines, of the free mercy of God. Si miſericordia Domini multa, multus ego in meritis: If the mercies of God be many, my merites are many, Gods mercies are our merites: *Manual.c.*22. our due debts are nothing els but puniſhment for ſinne.

Rom.8.18.

*Argum.*2. Betweene the deſert or merite, and the wages or recompence, there ought alwaies to be ſome proportion: a like ſtipend for a like labour: But heauen without compariſon exceedeth the worthines of our workes: Ergo, it is not giuen as a debt, but as a free gift: therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, that the afflictions that are preſent, are not worthie of the glory that ſhall bee reuealed, Auguſtine ſaith, Quàm paruo conſtat regnum cœlorum? duobus minutis emit vidua regnum cœlorum: How little doth the kingdome of God ſtand vs in? a certaine widow for two mites bought the Kingdome of heauen, *Homil.*8.—Shall we thinke that the widowes caſting in of two mites deſerued the kingdome of heauen? Farre be it from vs ſo to thinke: it is then a gift of fauour and mercy, not wages of debt.

*Argum.*3. Theſe places of Scripture do plentifully teſtifie againſt merits, aſcribing all to the mercie of God.

Pſal.103.4. 1. Pſal.103.4. Which crowneth thee in mercy and compaſſion.

Dan.9.18. 2. Dan.c.9.18. We do not preſent our ſupplications before thee, for our owne righteouſneſſe, but for thy great mercies.

Luk.17.10. 3. Luke 17.10. When yee haue done all, ſay ye are vnprofitable ſeruants.

Rom.6.23. 4. Rom.6.23. The wages of ſinne is death, but life eternall is the grace of God through Chriſt: Life eternall then is not ſo the wages of good workes; as eternall death is of euill.

Rom.8.18. 5. Rom.8.18. The afflictions of this preſent time, are not worthy of the glory, which ſhall be reuealed.

Rom.3.27. 6. Rom.3.27. Your reioycing is excluded by the law of faith: Ergo, workes merite not, for then we might reioyce in them.

1. Anſw. Firſt, the Crowne is ſaid to bee of mercie; becauſe the merites, which deſerue the crowne, are giuen vnto vs of mercy. Secondly, or Gods mercy is ſeene in pardoning our veniall ſins, while he giueth the crowne to our good workes. *Bellarm.c.*5.*reſponſ.ad argum.*1.

Rom.4.4.

1. Contra. Firſt, this is like the anſwere of the Pelagians, that graunted, that free will was of grace, becauſe it was Gods grace and gift in giuing freewill to man at the firſt; as here hee ſaith it is Gods mercy in giuing vs merites: But as Auguſtine anſwereth to that cauil, *epiſt.*95. Gratia iſto, &c. That we reade not of grace taken in that ſenſe with the Propheticall, Euangelicall, Apoſtolicall writings, &c. ſo neither do we reade of mercy, ſo taken. 2. The Prophet ſaith in the ſame verſe, which redeemeth thy life; and before, which forgiueth thy ſinne: they may ſay as well, that Gods mercy is ſeene in giuing men power to redeeme themſelues and their ſinnes, as in giuing them power to merite. 3. If man meriteth the crowne, and Gods mercy forgiueth onely veniall ſinnes, then man doth more then God: for, to get the crowne, is more, then to wipe away veniall and ſmall ſinnes: and if a man may merit the crowne, how is it, that by his merites he alſo cannot extinguiſh his veniall ſinnes? there is no coherence in this broken ſtuffe. 4. Mercie and merit, grace and worke cannot ſtand together. Rom.4.4. To him that worketh, it is not counted of fauour, but of debt: but this fellow correcteth the Apoſtle, and ſaith; Yes, it is of fauour and mercy that they merite, and ſo challenge as of debt. Auguſtine well ſaith, Non pro merito accipies vitam aternam, ſed tantum pro gratia; fides enim gratia eſt, & vita aterna eſt gratia pro gratia: Thou ſhalt not receiue life eternall for merite, but onely for grace; for faith is a gift or grace, and life eternall is grace for grace, *tract.*3.in Ioan. But this conſequent were not good, if the ſame thing were both grace and merite.

2. Anſw. Daniel in that place doth not deſire the crowne of life, but onely deliuerance from captiuitie, whereunto their ſinnes had brought them, *ibid reſp.ad loc.*2.

Dan.9.5.

*Contra.*1. If Daniel aſcribeth not a temporall deliuerance to his merite, but Gods mercie; how much leſſe can our eternall and ſpirituall deliuerance be deſerued. 2. Daniel vtterly excludeth himſelfe from all merite, in confeſſing with the reſt, We haue ſinned, and committed iniquitie: as Hierome ſaith, in 7.ad Roman. Daniel, quem iuſtum fuiſſe nonimus, quaſi de ſe dicit cum alijs, peccauimus: Daniel, whom we know to haue been iuſt, doth confeſſe as of himſelfe with others, we haue ſinned, &c. If a righteous and iuſt man be a ſinner, what place is there for merit? ſinners muſt claime mercy, not challenge merite: as the Publicane, O God be mercifull to a mee a ſinner.

Luk.18.13.

1. 3. Firſt, we are vnprofitable ſeruants of our ſelues, but by grace made profitable.

2. Secondly, we are ſaid to be vnprofitable in reſpect of God, becauſe the profite of our workes redoundeth not to him.

3. Thirdly, we are taught ſo to ſay for humilities ſake, though indeed we are not vnprofitable.

4. Fourthly, or the meaning is, that for all our ſeruice, wee can demaund no reward, ſeeing that God without reward might bind vs to do all we doe, but that gratuito pacto, hee dealeth with vs more graciouſly and liberally by his free couenant, in reſpect whereof we may ſay with the Apoſtle, There is a crowne of righteouſneſſe laid vp in ſtore for me. Bellarm.ad loc.3.

1. *Contra.*1. By grace indeed we are made profitable, becauſe it is not in vaine in vs, but not profitable to merite or deſerue any thing; but profitable, in that wee are not vnfruitfull: as the Apoſtle ſheweth. Tit.3.8.14. 2. Our ſauiour ſpeaketh here of ſeruants, and there of ſuch as are in the ſtate of grace; for before grace, we are not obedient ſeruants, but ſtubborne enemies: So Ambroſe ſaith, vpon this place; Agnoſce te ſeruum plurimis obſequijs defœneratum, neq; te iactes ſi bene feciſti, quod facere debuiſti: Acknowledge thy ſelfe a ſeruant diuerſly bound, neither boaſt, if thou haue well done, that which thou oughteſt to do, in 17. Luc. But we cannot do any thing well of our ſelues, but by grace: Ergo, euen hauing receiued grace, we are in this ſenſe vnprofitable ſeruants.

2. Firſt, it is true, that God in himſelfe is not by our ſinnes hindred, or by our righteouſneſſe furthered or profited, Iob.35.6. If thou ſinneſt, what doſt thou againſt him? if thou be righteous, what giueſt thou vnto him? Iob.35.8. Tit.3.8. and therefore good workes properly are ſaid to be profitable to men: And, though before men Gods glory be ſet forth by the ſeruice of the Saints, yet the profite, vſe and benefite thereof extendeth vnto themſelues. 2. Wherefore, euen in reſpect of our ſelues we are ſaid to be vnprofitable ſeruants: becauſe by our ſeruice we deſerue no thankes at Gods hands: Doth he thanke that ſeruant? Luk.17.9. and thus Ambroſe expoundeth; Sicut tu ſeruo tuo gratias non agis, &c, nec in te patitur Dominus vnius vſum eſſe operis, vel laboris, &c. As thou doeſt not giue thy ſeruant thankes, &c. ſo the Lord doth not ſuffer thee to haue vſe of any one worke or labour, becauſe as long as wee liue, wee muſt alwayes worke; in 17. Luc. The vſe then and profite of our ſeruice, wherein we are ſaid to be vnprofitable, is referred to our ſelues. 3. 3. Bernard ſhall here anſwere for vs, writing vpon theſe words, When yee haue done all that is commanded, ſay yee are vnprofitable ſeruants: Sed hoc inquies propter humilitatem monuit eſſe dicendum: planè propter humilitatem, nunquid contra veritatem: You will ſay, we are taught thus to ſpeake for humilitie: indeed for humilitie, but not againſt the veritie? ſerm. de triplic. cuſtod. 4. He anſwereth well, that wee cannot challenge the crowne and reward by our workes, but, ex gratuito pacto, of Gods gracious couenant: which is none other thing, then we our ſelues affirme: the crowne of righteouſneſſe, whereof Saint Paul ſpeaketh, dependeth not vpon the merite of our workes, but of Gods gracious promiſe: and ſo Bernard expoundeth the Apoſtle: There is laid vp for 2.Timoth.4.8. me a crowne of iuſtice, &c. Eſt ergo, quam Paulus expectat, corona iuſtitia, ſed iuſtitia Dei non ſua, iuſtum eſt enim vt reddat quod debet, debet autem, quod pollicitus eſt: & hac eſt iuſtitia Dei, de qua præſumit Apoſtolus, promiſſio Dei: There is then a crowne of righteouſnes, which the Apoſtle doth expect, but of the righteouſneſſe of God, not his owne: for it is iuſt that God ſhould render that hee oweth, and he oweth what he promiſed: this is the Iuſtice of God, whereof the Apoſtle preſumeth, euen his promiſe, lib. de liber. arbitr.

4. Bellarm. Eternall life is ſaid to be the grace of God, becauſe our merites whereby eternall life is 4. procured, are of grace: for otherwiſe eternall life is as well the ſtipend of iuſtice, as death is the ſtipend of ſinne: *Bellarm. reſp. ad loc.*4.

*Contra.*1. This is a moſt corrupt gloſſe, by grace to expound workes: for the Apoſtle maketh a diſiunction and oppoſition betweene workes and grace, If of grace, then not of workes, for then grace were no more grace. Rom.11.6. And if it be anſwered, he meaneth workes of nature, not of grace: the Apoſtle ſaith againe, Not by the workes of righteouſneſſe, but by his mercy he ſaued vs: Tit.3.5. Here euen workes of iuſtice and grace are oppoſed to mercy and grace: wherefore grace and workes being ſo diuers, the one cannot be contained in the other.

Secondly, Auguſtine ſaith, Non pro merito accipies vitam æternam, ſed tantum pro gratia, &c. Thou ſhalt not haue heauen by merite, but onely by grace; tract.3. in Ioan. This were no good diſiunction, if merite could be conteined in grace. And againe he ſaith, Deus videtur vitam æternam tanquam debitam reddere, cui debitum? fideli quia promeruerat: God ſeemeth to giue eternall life as due; but due vnto the faithfull for his faith, which is a gift or grace, &c. ibid. Due, not to the merite of faith, but the grace and gift of faith. Thus better doth he vnderſtand the Apoſtle, that life eternall is the gift of God, then this corrupt gloſſer.

Thirdly, Bernard ſaith, Merita omnia Dei dona ſunt, & ita homo magis propter ipſa Deo debitor eſt, quam Deus homini: All our merits are Gods gifts, and ſo a man rather for them is a debtor to God, then God to man, *de annunt. Mar. ſerm.*1. Therefore our good workes cannot merite of God, ſeeing he meriteth of vs, becauſe he giueth vs grace to bring forth good workes.

5. Our afflictions indeed are not worthy in themſelues of heauen, becauſe they are but ſhort, and the reward is eternall: but yet, as Chriſts paſſions being but ſhort, for the worthineſſe of his perſon, were æquiualent to euerlaſting puniſhment, ſo our afflictions for the worthineſſe of charitie, are worthie of euerlaſting glory: 2.Cor.4.17. as the Apoſtle ſaith, Our light affliction doth worke vnto vs an eternall waight of glory: Bellarm. c.3. argum.6.

*Contra.*1. It is not farre from blaſphemy to aſcribe the like force to charity in making our temporarie workes æquiualent to the eternall reward, as to the dignitie of Chriſts perſon in the execution of his paſſion to be worthy to ſatisfie for euerlaſting puniſhment.

Secondly, the Apoſtle in ſaying, Our affliction worketh, &c. expoundeth himſelfe in the 18. verſ. While we looke not on the things that are ſeene, but on the things which are not ſeene: which is the office of faith : affliction then as it ſheweth our faith, is ſaid to worke, not as the cauſe, but as the way and 1.Pet.1.7. meane: and the Apoſtle ſaith no otherwiſe then Saint Peter, That the triall of your faith, may be found vnto your praiſe,&c. Affliction then worketh, as the triall of our faith: and it worketh no otherwiſe, but becauſe it ſhall be found, and God will not forget the ſeruice of our loue. Thirdly, otherwiſe the Apoſtle ſaith directly, that the afflictions are not worthie,&c. that is, not at all worthie of ſo great a reward: So Ambroſe expoundeth, Quid poſſumus dignum facere præmijs cœleſtibus? what can wee do worthie of the heauenly reward? what merit can man bring, that this mortall ſhould put on immortalitie?

Indignæ ſunt huius temporis paſſiones ad ſuperuenturam gloriam: the paſſions of this life are vnworthie the glory to come, *ſerm.20.in Pſal.*119. So alſo Gregorie; Beatæ vitæ nullus poteſt æquari labor, nulla opera, paſſiones nullæ: To bleſſed life, no labour, worke, ſuffring can be equall, *in Pſal.*142.
Bernard; Quid ſunt merita omnia ad tantam gloriam? What are all our merits to ſo great glory?
ſerm.1.de annunt.Mar.

6. Bellarm. Faith doth indeed exclude their reioycing, that glorie in themſelues and their owne ſtrength but not that reioycing whereby we reioyce in our workes and merits by grace, *reſp.ad loc.*7.

Contra. 1. Faith excludeth all reioycing euen in good workes wrought by grace; for the Apoſtle ſaith, that reioycing is excluded by the law of faith, and not by the lawe of workes: if faith then Rom.4.2. exclude reioycing, wee muſt reioyce in nothing but faith. 2. The Apoſtle ſaith, If Abraham were iuſtified by workes, he hath wherein to reioyce, but not with God: hee ſpeaketh of Abraham as a faithfull man, and of his workes, as good workes; euen at that time when hee beleeued, and it was counted to him for righteouſneſſe; as it followeth in the next verſe. 3. Bernard alſo ſaith, Perfecta & ſecura gloriatio eſt, cùm veremur omnia opera noſtra, ſicut teſtatur Iob de ſeipſo; omnes iuſtitias noſtras non aliud eſſe quàm pannum menſtruatæ: then our reioycing is perfect, when we feare all our workes, as Iob teſtifieth: all our righteouſneſſe is as a ſtayned clout, ſerm.de triplic.gradu. A man then is not to reioyce in any of his workes, no not in his righteouſneſſe. 4. S. Paul further ſaith, Not of workes Epheſ.2.9.10. leaſt any man ſhould boaſt himſelfe: hee muſt not boaſt of workes: and what workes, the Apoſtle ſheweth in the next verſ.10. We are his workemanſhip created in Ieſus Chriſt to good workes: Ergo, we muſt not boaſt nor reioyce no not in good workes. And thus notwithſtanding all theſe cauils, I truſt it euidently appeareth by theſe Scriptures alleaged, that our workes are no way meritorious of life euerlaſting.

Rom.4.5. *Argum.*4. S.Paul ſaith, Faith is counted to him for righteouſneſſe, that worketh not: If it be of grace, it is no more of workes, for then grace were no more grace: If of worke, then not of grace; for then worke were no more worke. We ſee that the righteouſneſſe of faith or of grace, and the righteouſneſſe of Rom.11.9. workes, cannot ſtand together, nor be matched one with the other.

Our aduerſaries haue here two euaſions: Firſt they grant, that the beginning of our iuſtification, which they call the firſt iuſtification, is meerely of Gods grace, neither can wee haue any acceptable workes before we are iuſtified: but in the ſecond iuſtification, which is the increaſe of the former iuſtice, a man may merite by good workes, *Rhemiſt.*Rom.2.3.

Anſ. This is but a late and new deuice of the firſt and ſecond iuſtification: as afterward wee will ſhew in the proper place. The Scripture teacheth vs, that not onely the beginning of our righteouſneſſe, Epheſ.2.5.6. but the finiſhing and perfecting of it, is onely by grace in Chriſt, When wee were dead in our ſinnes, he hath quickened vs together in Chriſt, by whoſe grace yee are ſaued, and hath raiſed vs vp, and made vs ſit together in heauenly places: We ſee that this ſaluation by grace bringeth vs vp to heauen:
Ergo, both the firſt and ſecond iuſtification are of grace, for they can bring vs no further then to heauen.

*Rhemiſt.*2. Workes done of nature without, or before faith, cannot merite: but workes done by Gods grace may, and are ioyned with it as cauſes of ſaluation.

Anſw. Not onely the workes of nature, but euen of grace alſo are excluded: Wee are ſaued (ſaith the Apoſtle) by grace through faith, not of workes: And then he ſheweth what workes, namely good Epheſ.2.9.10. workes, ſuch as the Lord hath ordained for vs to walke in. Ergo, workes alſo of grace, wrought in vs by the ſpirit of God, are ſhut out from being any cauſes of our ſaluation. I conclude with Auguſtine Pſal.35.27. vpon thoſe words of the Pſalme, Let the Lord alway be magnified: Peccator es? magnificetur, vt vocet:
confiteris? magnificetur, vt ignoſcat: iam iuſte viuis? magnificetur, vt regat: perſeueras vſque ad finem?
magnificetur, vt te glorificet: Art thou a ſinner? Let God be magnified in calling thee: doſt thou confeſſe thy ſinnes? let him be magnified in forgiuing them: doeſt thou liue well? let him bee magnified in directing thee: doeſt thou continue to the end? let him be magnified in glorifying thee, &c. God is as much to be praiſed for all things wrought after our calling and conuerſion, as for mercy ſhewed before:
All then is wholy to be aſcribed to Gods grace and mercy: nothing is left for our merite or deſert.

De liber.arbitr. Bernard hath of this matter an excellent ſpeech: Si à Deo voluntas eſt, & meritum; Deus igitur author eſt meriti qui voluntatem applicat operi, & opus explicat voluntati: Alioqui, ſi propriè appellentur ea, quæ dicimus noſtra merita, ſpei quædam ſunt ſeminaria, occultæ prædeſtinationis indicia, futuræ fælicitatis præſagia; via regni, non cauſa regnandi; denique quos iuſtificauit, non quos iuſtos inuenit, magnificauit:
If our will be of God, then alſo our meriting: for God is the author of the merite, in applying our will to the worke, and fitting the worke to our will: otherwiſe to ſpeake properly, our merits ſo called, are but the ſeedeplat of our hope, the ſignes of predeſtination, and the forerunners of our happines, the way to the kingdome, not the cauſe thereof: laſtly, whom God hath iuſtified, not whom he found iuſt, he glorifieth,&c. What more euident teſtimonie can we haue againſt meriting of heauen? Bernard reteineth the name, but denieth the thing.

Concil. Arauſican. can. 18. Debetur merces bonis operibus ſi fiant, ſed gratia, quæ non debetur, præcedit, vt fiant: A reward is due to good workes, if they be done; but grace, which is not due nor of debt, goeth before, that they may be done,&c. All therefore is to be aſcribed to grace.

Now whereas wee doe alleage many teſtimonies of the Fathers againſt merites: Bellarmine would ſhift vs of with this anſwere, that they ſpeake of man, qualis eſt ſine gratia Dei, as he is without grace, that he cannot merit by his owne ſtrength: I will therefore ſhew out of the Fathers, that euen a man in the ſtate of grace cannot merit.

Ambroſe de vocat. gent. lib.1.c.5. Nulla tam præclara opera exiſtere, quibus hoc, quod gratis tribuitur, per retributionis indicium debeatur. There are no ſuch excellent works, to the which, that which is freely giuen, ſhould by way of retribution be owing,&c. if to no excellent workes, then not to the works of grace of man is God endebted.

De meritis in hoc ſeculo Chriſtianus extolli non debet, quia nemo in hac vita poſitus — dicit ſe eſſe ſine peccato, quicquid ergo in hac vita conſecutus fuerit, donum eſt, non meritum,&c.* A Chriſtian muſt not bee lifted vp for his merites in this world, becauſe no man here in this life can ſay he is without ſinne, whatſoeuer he hath in this life is a gift, not a merit,&c. hee ſpeaketh of Chriſtians that are vnder grace.

Bernard, Quærant alij meritum, nos gratiam inuenire ſtudeamus; Maria non pretendit meritum ſed gratiam quærit: Let other men ſeeke for merit, let vs ſtudie to finde grace: Marie pretendeth not merit, but ſeeketh grace,&c. *Serm. in natiu. 4. Thom. Waldenſ. ſaith, Simpliciter quis non meretur regnū cœlorum, niſi ex gratia Dei, Simply one deſerueth not the kingdome of heauen, but of grace,&c. Vatablus hath this marginall note, Non propter iuſtitiam,&c. God doth not giue any thing vnto men for their righteouſneſſe,&c. This note their Index would haue blotted out. Tom.6. ſacram. tit.1.c.7. Ann. in 9.c. Deut.15.

The holy Martyrs haue moſt confidently ſealed this truth: Alexander Seton Martyr: They that preach that workes doe merit, doe make workes the tree, which are but the fruit of iuſtice, wrought by him that is alreadie a iuſt man: Chriſt was promiſed to be our onely iuſtifier: God ſaid to Abraham, in thy ſeed ſhall all people be bleſſed; he ſaid not in thy ſeedes, or in the workes of thy ſeedes, but in thy ſeede, that is Chriſt. Againe, the ſame holy Martyr and Preacher thus witneſſeth moſt confidently: He that can ſhew me in any Scripture, that workes doe merit, or be any meanes to our iuſtification: for the firſt Scripture, I will, without any further iudgement, loſe both mine eares; for the ſecond, my tongue; for the third, my necke: Fox. pag.1206. Yea this holy Martyr, though no Scripture were ſhewed him, neither ſhall euer be ſhewed, yet he moſt conſtantly gaue his life in the defence of this truth. But in defence of Popiſh merits, I haue not heard of any that hath aduentured ſo farre.

AN APPENDIX, TO THIS PART, CONCERNING THE NAME OF MERITE.

The Papiſts.

Bellarmine would beare vs in hand, that the name of merit is either conteined in Scripture, or collected from the ſame: Lib.5. de iuſtif. c.2. 80. Error.

Argum. The places of Scripture, which he pretendeth for proofe hereof are theſe.

1. Eccleſiaſt.16.12. He iudgeth a man according to the merit of his workes. Ecclеſ.16.12.
2. Heb.13.16. With ſuch ſacrifices, promeretur Deus, God is merited. Hebr.13.16.
3. The Scripture maketh mention of dignitie or worthineſſe, which is the ſame that Merit is: That ye may be counted worthie of the kingdome of God: They ſhall walke with me in white, for they are worthie. 2. Theſſ.1.5. Apoc.3.4.
4. There is often alſo mention found in Scripture of reward: Your reward is great in heauen: Euery man ſhall receiue his wages according to his labour. And in diuers other places; as, The Lord ſaith to Abraham, I am thine exceeding great reward: But where there is a reward, there merit goeth before. Math.5.12. 1. Cor.3.8. Geneſ.15.1.

The Proteſtants.

1. Anſw. FIrſt, the Greeke text readeth only κατὰ ἔργα according to their works, not the merit of their works. Secondly, and in the ſame place he ſaith, As his mercie is great, ſo is his puniſhment: ſo that mens good works are rewarded not of merit, but of mercie. Thirdly, neither is it all one to ſay, according to their works, and after the merit of their works, as he might haue learned out of Gregorie alleaged before: Aliud eſt ſecundum, aliud propter opera reddere: It is one thing to render according, and another to render for works, in Pſal. 142. Fourthly, if we had no other anſwere, the authoritie of this booke bindeth vs not, being no part of the Canonicall Scripture.

Heb.11.6.15. 2. The word is εὐαρεστεῖται God is pleaſed: as Heb.11.6. the ſame word is vſed: Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God: We grant that God is well pleaſed with good works, as proceeding from our faith in Chriſt: for ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, verſ.15. Let vs by him offer the ſacrifice of praiſe. By faith then in Chriſt God is pleaſed with our ſacrifice: what is this to merit?

3. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith: That you may be counted worthie: Digni habeamini. This worthineſſe then is onely by imputation of Chriſts worthineſſe. Secondly, they are worthie to haue white robes: because their robes are made white in the blood of the Lambe, and the Lambe onely is found to be worthie, Apoc.8.4.9. The worthineſſe of the Saints is none other, but the worthineſſe of the Lambe, accounted theirs by faith: for if they be worthie, then is not the Lambe onely worthie.

Apoc.7.14. Apoc.8.4.9.

Rom.4.4. Pſal.103.4. 4. Firſt, the reward is counted of fauour as well as of debt: Which crowneth thee in mercie. Secondly, ſeeing God himſelfe is our reward, how is it poſſible, that man can merit God? Auguſtine ſaith, that none dare or will affirme, Filium hominis — meruiſſe vt dei filius eſſet: That the ſonne of man merited to be the ſonne of God: *de correpſ. & grat. c.*11. Euen ſo neither can man merit to haue God. Thirdly, further S. Ambroſe writing vpon that parable, Matth.20. where the laſt hired labourers receiued as much as the firſt, that did endure the heat of the day, concludeth thus: Vt intelligant donum ſe gratiæ, non operum accepiſſe mercedem: That they may vnderſtand that they receiued a gift of grace, not a reward of their labour: *de vocat. Gent. lib.*1.*c.*3. Thus we ſee, that out of the Scripture there can bee no ſhew made for the vſe of this word merit, being aſcribed to the works of men.

Matth.20.

In Pſal.35. And yet further, it is granted, that the Fathers vſed this word, merit, not ſignifying thereby any worthineſſe to deſerue, but, as much, as to obtaine: 1. As Auguſtine ſaith, the Apoſtles merited to be ſlaine of their owne Citizens: where it muſt not ſignifie a deſeruing, for the Apoſtles by their innocencie deſerued not to be put to death.

In Pſal.143. 2. Otherwiſe Baſile, to ſpeake properly ſaith, Non quod eo dignus ſum, ſed propter benignitatem tuam: Not that I am worthie of the reward of heauen, but of thy bountie.

Harm.ſect.9. p.300. 3. In this ſenſe, the confeſſion of Wirtemberg. c. 7. vſeth the word, deſerue: through the mercie of God, good workes deſerue their owne, either ſpirituall, or corporall rewards, &c. They meane not, that they properly merit, for where merit is, there is no neede of mercie or fauour, but good workes make one fit and meete to obtaine the reward, which is giuen of mercie to them, that are ſo prepared and diſpoſed.

Moral.lib.9. c.17. lib.8 de iuſtificat.c.8. 4. Gregorie the great vſeth the word merit, to ſignifie to obtaine, Paul when he ſought to extinguiſh the name of the redeemer in earth, Eius verba meruit de cœlo audire, merited to heare his voice from heauen: And hereupon, their owne Vega confeſſeth thus, I am not ignorant, that the fathers vſe this word (merit) Vbi nulla eſt ratio meriti, where is no reaſon or reſpect of merit.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE distinction of merits.

The Papiſts.

81. Error. Act.10. THey make two kindes of merit: Meritum de congruo, merit of congruitie: ſuch are the preparatiue workes before iuſtification, as were the prayers and almes-deedes of Cornelius, Act.10. which though they be not ſimply meritorious, ex debito iuſtitiæ, by the due debt of iuſtice, yet they deſerue at Gods hands of congruitie, becauſe hee doth graciouſly accept them, *Act.*10.*ſect.*5. The other kinde, they call Meritum de condigno, merit of condignitie, when the reward is iuſtly due by debt: ſuch are the workes done in the ſecond iuſtification, which are truly meritorious, and worthie of heauen, *Gabriel. Biel. Rhemiſt. Rom.*2.*ſect.*3.

Ex Tileman. loc.11.err.22.

The Proteſtants.

Rom.8.8. FIrſt, wee vtterly denie any ſuch merit of condignitie: for Saint Paul ſaith, That the afflictions of this life are not condigne of the glorie to come: Condignitie then is wholy remoued and taken away.

Secondly, a reward of congruitie in ſome ſort we grant, but neither for any thing done before faith or iuſtification: for it is impoſſible without faith to pleaſe God, or doe any thing acceptable vnto him, Heb.6.6. Neither is it of congruitie for the merit of our workes: but it is (congruum) it is agreeable to the mercie and iuſtice of God in reſpect of his promiſe graciouſly made in Chriſt, to reward the faithfull obedience of his ſeruants: ſo then the congruitie is on Gods behalfe, not in reſpect of our workes.

We are iuſtified, ſaith the Apoſtle, gratis per gratiam, freely by grace: Ergo, there is no merit either of congruitie or condignitie, ſeeing all is done freely. Rom.3.24.

1. Auguſtine ſaith, Quid ille latro attulerat de fauce ad iudicium, de iudicio ad crucem, de cruce in Paradiſum? I pray you what merit did the theefe bring with him from the priſon to iudgement, from the iudgement place to the croſſe, from the croſſe to Paradiſe? *In Pſal.*55. Here was neither merit of congruitie, nor condignitie.

Auguſtine againe ſaith, Væ etiam laudabili vitæ ſi remota miſericordia diſcutias eam domine: Woe vnto a moſt commendable life, if mercie remoued, thou doeſt examine it O Lord. Confeſſ.lib.9. c.13.

Tertullian, vpon that place, Rom.8. The afflictions of this life, are not worthie of the glorie, &c. et hic minora oſtendit incommoda præmijs ſuis, Here he ſheweth the incommodities of this life, to be inferiour then the rewards, &c. where is now the merite of condignitie? Lib. de reſurrect.carnis.

2. Ieremie the Patriarke approueth that ſaying of Chryſoſtome: No mortall man, if an exact account be taken of his life, can ſtand before God, Nec venia & beneuolentia eius dignus inueniri, nor bee found worthie of his pardon and mercie, there is then no dignitie or worthineſſe in any mans workes, &c. Cenſur.oriental.c.6.

3. Confeſſ. of Baſile.artic.1. They reigne with Chriſt, becauſe they confeſſed Chriſt to be their Sauiour,—without any addition of mans merite, &c. Saxonie.17. They call it a Pelagian dreame, that righteouſneſſe ſhould deſerue remiſſion of ſinnes either of congruitie or condignitie. Harm.ſect.2. p.23. Sect.9. p.283.

4. Vega affirmeth: Gregor. Ariminienſ. Marſilius, Burgenſ. Eckius all to be of this opinion, Nullum eſſe nobis meritum de condigno, &c. That wee haue no merite of condignitie, in reſpect of eternall happineſſe. Opuſcul. de meritis.q.5. p.784.

THE FIFTH PART, OF THE MANNER of meriting.

The Papiſts.

Ovr workes (they ſay) are pleaſing and acceptable vnto God, euen after the ſame manner, that Chriſt and his works were, *Tapper. ex Tileman. loc.*11.*err.*14. Chriſts paines of their owne nature, compared to his glorie, were not any whit comparable, yet they were meritorious and worthie of heauen, not for the greatneſſe of them, but for the worthineſſe of his perſon: So our workes, not of their owne nature, but as they are of grace, are meritorious of the ioyes of heauen, *Rhemiſt. Rom.*8.18. 82.Error.

The Proteſtants.

First, it is a great blaſphemie, to ſay, that Chriſts paſſions in themſelues deſerued not that glorie, which he hath purchaſed for vs: neither that there was any compariſon betweene them: for then, how could he haue fully ſatisfied the wrath of God? Chriſt hath payed the ranſome for our ſinnes: We are redeemed with his precious blood, as of a lambe vnſpotted: His blood was the price of our redemption: therefore of it ſelfe meritorious. It was not in reſpect of Chriſt, of grace; but of merit in him: Vnto vs his redemption is of grace: Whereſore his paſſion being the paſſion of the Sonne of God, was a full ſatisfaction, and worthie deſert of that glory, which he hath purchaſed for vs. 1.Pet.1.19. Rom.3.24.

Secondly, it is another great blaſphemie to match and compare in the way and manner of meriting, Chriſts workes and ours together. For firſt, there is no merit at all in vs vnto ſaluation: wee haue no merits but Chriſts, and are ſaued onely by faith in him, not by workes. Secondly, by your owne confeſſion, our workes are not of their nature meritorious, but of grace: but Chriſts works were of themſelues full of merit, without any externall help, or acceſſion of grace: for in himſelfe did all fulnes dwell. Epheſ.2.8. Coloſſ.1.19.

1. Auguſtine very well ſheweth the great difference in the way of meriting betweene Chriſt and vs, thus writing: Quantum intereſt, cum duo ſint in carcere, inter reum & viſitatorem eius:—illum cauſa premit, illum humanitas adduxit: ſic in iſta mortalitate nos reatu tenebamur, Chriſtus miſericordia deſcendit: Looke what difference there is, when two are in priſon together, betweene the priſoner, and his friend that commeth to viſite him; the one is there of neceſſitie, the other commeth of good will: ſuch difference there is betweene Chriſt and vs: for when we were detained in the priſon of this mortalitie, for the guilt of our ſinnes, Chriſt came in mercie to viſite vs: *tract.*2.in epiſt. Ioann. How can there now be any proportionable or like way of meriting, in the guiltie priſoner, and the innocent and friendly viſiter?

Tertullian calleth it donatiuum vitæ eternæ, the donatiue or gift of eternall life, &c. then in reſpect of Chriſts merit, it is no gift, but deſerued. Lib. de reſurrect. carnis.

2. Baſile ſaith, that euerlaſting reſt, non tanquam debitum operib. redditum, &c. is not as a debt, rendred vnto our workes, but as a gift of Gods munificence. in Pſal.114.

3. Bohemia. c.17. They are acceptable to God without any merite or worthineſſe of theirs — of meere grace. Harm. ſect.2. p.25.

4. Thomas Waldenſ. concludeth, Quia non ſimpliciter quis meretur regnum cœlorum, ſed ex gratia Dei: That ſimply one doth not merit the kingdome of heauen, but by the grace of God. Tom.8.ſacramtit.1.c.7.

THE SIXTH PART, OF THE QVALITIE and condition of merits.

The Papiſts.

83.Error. BEllarmine ſaith, that the good workes of the righteous, are properly and verily meritorious of eternall life, euen, ex condigno, of condignitie, or worthineſſe, in the higheſt degree: *Bellar.c.*16. and that non ſolum ratione pacti, ſed operis, in reſpect of the worke, as well as of the couenant or promiſe.

2.Tim.4.8. Argum. 2.Tim.4.8.S.Paul ſaith, that God the iuſt iudge ſhall giue him a crowne of glorie: but it is the part of iuſtice to giue vnto euery man as he hath deſerued: the Apoſtle therefore worthily deſerued this crowne: it was of iuſtice, not of mercie: Bellarm.ibid.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. THis crowne laid vp for the Apoſtle, was both of mercie, in that the Lord graciouſly promiſed it: Iam.1.12. He ſhall receiue the crowne of life, which the Lord hath promiſed to all, that loue him. It was alſo of iuſtice: Iuſtum eſt (ſaith Bernard) vt reddat, quod debet; debet autem, quod pollicitus eſt: It is right & iuſt, that God ſhould pay what he oweth: now he oweth that which he hath promiſed, &c. All therefore was of Gods mercie toward the Apoſtle, not of his deſert. Gods iuſtice in keeping his promiſe, reſpecteth not any deſert in man, but dependeth vpon the conſtancie and truth of his word in himſelfe. Iam.1.12.

Rom.8.18. Argum. S.Paul ſaith, The afflictions of this life are not condigne of the glorie, &c. Ergo, there is no ſuch condignitie.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that in their owne nature they are not worthie, but as they proceed from the grace of God, they are, *cap.*18.

*Contra.*1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh in this place of no other ſuffrings, but thoſe which are wrought by grace in the children of God: as verſ.17. Suffer with Chriſt, that ye may be glorified with him. Therefore the Apoſtle excludeth euen ſuch ſuffrings, as are wrought by the ſpirit. 2. Grace or fauour, and deſert cannot ſtand together: To him that worketh, the wages is not counted of fauour, but by debt. Wherefore if heauen be merited, it is of debt, grace and fauour is excluded: therefore to ſay, that works are meritorious by grace, and that their worthines & condignitie is partly of grace accepting, & partly of the work deſeruing, is to affirme contrarie things, and to match things of diuers and vnlike nature together. Rom.4.4.

Herein alſo he may be ouerthrowne by his owne poſitions: Firſt, hee ſaith that God doth reward, ſupra condignum, aboue the worthineſſe or condignitie of our workes, *cap.*19. then it will follow, that there is no ſuch condignitie, becauſe the reward exceedeth their worthineſſe: but betweene the wages and the worke, there ſhould be an equalitie. Againe, heauen is the greateſt reward that can be, and therefore if God doe giue a reward beyond their deſert, heauen is not deſerued, for a better reward then heauen there cannot be.

Secondly, Bellarmine confeſſeth, that neither the grace of iuſtification, *cap.*21. nor the gift of perſeuerance to the end, or a mans reparation after his fall, can be merited, ex condigno, of condignitie: much leſſe can the kingdome of heauen be ſo merited, which is a more excellent thing, then any of the other: our glorification farre exceedeth in excellencie our iuſtification and perſeuerance: if the leſſe then cannot be ſo merited, neither can the greater.

The author of the Sermons *de tempor.ſer.*210. Cum dies iudicij aduenerit, & ſi coronam non meremur accipere, vel ad peccatorum indulgentiam mereamur peruenire, &c. When the day of iudgement ſhall come, if wee deſerue not to receiue the crowne, let vs deſerue to attaine at the leaſt to pardon of our ſinnes, &c. Ergo, it is more to merit the crowne, than to merit forgiueneſſe: but this cannot be merited by their owne confeſſion: Ergo, not the other.

We haue witneſſe of a Synode of their owne: *Senonenſ.ſynod. decr.de fide.*16. *Faciet tandem miſericordia dei vnicuiq; locum iuxta meritum operum ſuorum, non abſoluta condignitate quidem, (neque enim condignæ ſunt paſſiones, &c. Rom.*8.18) ſed gratuita magis & liberali repromiſſione, &c. At the length the mercie of God ſhall make a place to euery one according to the merit of their workes, not by an abſolute condignitie, (for the afflictions of this life are not condigne, &c. Rom.8.18.) but rather by a gracious and liberall promiſe, &c. Ergo, our workes are not properly ex condigno, meritorious.

Diuers alſo of the Schoolemen are of the ſame opinion, that good workes, ex condigno, of condignitie, are not meritorious of life eternall: *Sic Thom.Waldenſ.tom.*3. *de Sacramental.c.*7. Durand.in 2.*ſenten.diſt.*27.*qu.*2. Gregor.in 1.*ſentent.diſt.*17.*qu.*1.*artic.*2. See before the further ratification of this point by the teſtimonie of other Churches. Error.81.

THE SEVENTH PART, WHETHER ANY confidence is to be repoſed in merits.

The Papiſts.

84.Error. FIrſt, Bellarmine ſaith, that the truſt which the righteous haue in God, ariſeth not onely of faith, but ſpringeth alſo from their merits: *lib.*5.*de iuſtificat.cap.*7.

1.Tim.3.13. 1. Argum. 1.Timoth.3.13. They that haue miniſtred well, get themſelues a good degree, and great li- bertie or confidence in the faith: Confidence or truſt is then wrought in vs by our faithfull ſeruice.

2. Rom.5.4. Patience bringeth forth experience, experience hope. Rom.5.4.

3. Heb.10.32.35. Ye endured a great fight of afflictions, caſt not therefore away your confidence. Heb.10.32.

4. If our heart condemne vs not, we haue boldneſſe toward God: Ergo, our confidence ariſeth vpon our workes: Bellar. ibid. 1.Iohn 4.

The Proteſtants.

1. Anſ. WE denie not, but that by a ſanctified life, and good workes, wee may grow vp to the aſſurance of our election, yet not by the merit or worthineſſe of the works, but as they haue relation vnto faith, whereof they are liuely ſignes: for to ſpeake properly, it is faith whereby we haue peace toward God, Roman.5.1. And in this place the Apoſtle ſaith, They haue confidence in the faith, which is in Chriſt: Their confidence is grounded vpon faith, vnto the aſſurance whereof they are conducted and guided by their faithfull ſeruice. Rom.5.1.

2. All theſe depend vpon the ſecond verſe: By whom we haue acceſſe through faith vnto this grace, &c. and not ſo onely, but we reioyce in tribulations. All theſe then are rehearſed, as fruites iſſuing from our faith, reioycing in tribulation, experience, hope. Againe, hope maketh not aſhamed, verſ.5. becauſe the loue of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts: but this loue of Chriſt we know no otherwiſe then by faith: Epheſ.3.17. That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith: then it followeth, verſ.19. and that ye may know the loue of Chriſt, &c. Epheſ.3.17.19.

3. This confidence ſpringeth of faith, verſ.32. After ye had receiued light, ye endured a great fight: and therefore verſ.22. it is called πληροφορία πίστεως, the aſſurance of faith. Heb.10.32.22.

4. The peace of conſcience worketh confidence; and faith bringeth this peace of conſcience, Rom.5.1. And in this place, verſ.19. Let vs not loue in word, &c. thereby we know we are in the truth, and ſhall before him aſſure our hearts: The being in the truth, which is faith, is the ground of this aſſurance; the way whereby to know it, is by loue. Theſe places will hold no water for them. Rom.5.1. 1.Iohn 3.19.

Argum. That workes of themſelues giue vs no aſſurance, but as they haue their actiuitie from faith, S.Peter teacheth vs, Giue diligence to make your calling ſure in doing theſe things: and what things hee meaneth, it is before ſhewed, verſ.5. Ioyne to your faith, vertue; with vertue, knowledge: workes then breede no aſſurance or confidence, but as they are ioyned with faith, and iſſue out from the ſame. Rom.5.1. Being iuſtified by faith, we haue peace toward God: Peace and confidence iſſueth from iuſtification by faith: Heb.10.22. The aſſurance of faith. Faith then giueth aſſurance. 2.Pet.1.10. Verſ.5. Rom.5.1. Heb.10.22.

The Papiſts.

BEllarmine againe ſaith, that our confidence ariſeth not onely from good workes, but that our confidence and truſt may be repoſed alſo in our merits: ſo that in his opinion, it hath both the beginning from thence, and againe hath recourſe thither. And thus merits (falſly ſo called) ſhall bee both the efficient cauſe of our confidence, as alſo the matter or obiect thereof, wherein it ſhould reſt and be repoſed. 85.Error.

1. Argum. 1.Timoth.4.7. I haue fought a good fight, I haue finiſhed my courſe, &c. henceforth is laid vp for me a crowne of righteouſneſſe, &c. S.Pauls confidence and aſſurance of life eternall, is grounded vpon his meritorious workes. Bellarm.

2. Nehem.5.19. Remember me O Lord in thy goodneſſe, according to that I haue done for this people.

3. Pſal.18.20. The Lord rewarded me according to my righteouſneſſe.

4. Iſay.38.3. Hezekiah thus prayeth: Remember me, O Lord, how I haue walked before thee in truth, and with a perfect heart, and haue done that, which is good in thy ſight: Ergo, we may repoſe confidence in our workes.

The Proteſtants.

1. Anſw. SAint Pauls confidence is not builded vpon his owne workes, but vpon the righteouſneſſe and ſureneſſe of Gods promiſes: which God the righteous iudge (ſaith the Apoſtle) ſhall giue me at that day: As Bernard ſaith: Eſt ergo, quam Paulus expectat corona iuſtitia, ſed iuſtitia dei, non ſua: hæc eſt iuſtitia, de qua præſumit Apoſtolus, promiſſio dei: It is the crowne of righteouſneſſe, which the Apoſtle looketh for, but not of his owne, but Gods righteouſneſſe: the promiſe of God is the righteouſneſſe, whereof the Apoſtle preſumeth: de liber. arbitr. S.Pauls confidence then is in the promiſe of God, not in his owne merits.

2. Nehemiah ſaith, Remember me in thy mercie. And chap.13.22. Remember me O Lord concerning this, and pardon me for thy great mercie: verſ.31. Remember me in thy goodneſſe. His confidence we ſee is not in his workes, but in Gods mercie. Nehem.13.22. 31.

3. Firſt, Dauid ſpeaketh not of his righteouſneſſe toward God, but of his innocencie againſt Saul: and who doubteth, but that the teſtimonie of a good conſcience, and the innocencie of a iuſt cauſe doth make vs bold and confident againſt our enemies? But the queſtion is of confidence toward God: in which reſpect Dauid ſaith, verſ.2. The Lord is my rocke, in him will I truſt. Hee doth not truſt in his owne innocencie. Pſal.18.2.

4. It was Hezekiah his truth (that is faith) wherein he walked, and the perfitneſſe of his heart, which is cauſed by faith (for by faith God purifieth our hearts, Act.15.9.) that made him confident: which his confidence of faith, was indeede ſealed vnto him, and confirmed by his godly life. Act.15.9.

Argum. Saint Paul vtterly diſclaimeth, and renounceth his owne workes: hee counteth all things

Philip. 3.8.9. but loſſe and dung in reſpect of Chriſt, that hee might be found in him, *not hauing his owne righteouſneeſſe, but that which is through faith in Chriſt. Againe, he ſaith, I know nothing by my ſelfe, yet am I not thereby iuſtified: Therefore hee hath no confident opinion in himſelfe: but his confidence is ſtayed vpon the loue of God in Chriſt Ieſus.

Bernard well ſaith: Diſcamus de noſtra omnino induſtria, magis autem de noſtris diffidere meritis: Let vs learne to diſtruſt our owne induſtrie, or rather our merits: in feſt. Paul. ſerm. 2.

OF GOOD WORKES IN PARTICVLAR, deuided into three parts, of prayer, faſting, almes-deedes.

THE FIRST PART, OF PRAYER.

THe ſeuerall queſtions are theſe: Firſt, of the fruits of prayer. Secondly, of the condition and qualitie of prayer. Thirdly, of the order.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF THE FRVITS.

SVch fruites of prayer, as we learne out of the word of God, we moſt willingly acknowledge. Firſt, Iam 5.13. it comforteth the ſoule being in heauineſſe: If any bee afflicted, let him pray. Secondly, it obtai- Iam.1.5. neth wiſedome for vs, and all ſpirituall grace. Thirdly, by prayer the good creatures of God are ſancti- 1.Tim.4.5. fied to our vſe. Fourthly, by prayer are wee preſerued from all ſpirituall danger: I haue prayed for Luk.22.31.32. thee Peter, &c. And other ſuch fruits and vſes prayer hath: But theſe fruits following we doe refuſe.

The Papiſts.

86.Error. B*Ellarmine* maketh theſe two fruits of prayer: that it is ſatisfactorie, and meritorious.

Argum. 1. For the firſt he reaſoneth thus: Euery good laborious worke is ſatisfactorie: prayer is a laborious worke: Ergo. lib. 1. de bon. operib. in particul. c. 3.

Anſw. 1. Though one man may ſatisfie and recompence another, yet no worke of ours can worke Coloſſ.1.20. any ſatisfaction before God: but Chriſt onely by his death, hath made ſatisfaction for vs all: All things are ſet at peace, through the blood of his croſſe. 2. Againe, whereas they muſt be good workes, whereby God ſhould be ſatisfied, ſeeing God is the giuer of euery good gift and worke, and all our good works proceed from him, he thus ſhould be ſatisfied with his owne; which were no ſatisfaction. 3. Further, prayer is no laborious worke to the ſpirituall man, though it be to the fleſh: for in the inner man there Rom.7.22. is a ſpirituall delight in all good things. 4. And what if it were laborious? as though God delighted in the puniſhment, ſorrow, and trauell of his children, as the Idolatrous Prieſts of Baal conceiued of their Idoll, that by launcing of their fleſh, they ſhould be the ſooner regarded and heard.

Argum. 2. That prayer alſo is meritorious, hee would thereby proue it, becauſe God is ſaid to re- Math.6.6. ward them openly, that pray ſecretly: his reaſon is this, reward is of merite, prayer is rewarded: Ergo, it is of merite.

Anſw. The propoſition is not true, for reward may as well be of fauour, as of deſert: He that gi- Math.10.42. ueth but a cup of colde water, ſhall not loſe his reward. Heauen is not merited by ſo ſmall a gift: this reward then is of mercie: wherefore this place ſheweth, that prayer is not in vaine, but is accepted of God, that it is meritorious it proueth not.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt prayer is not ſatisfactorie: no imperfect thing can ſatisfie before God, but our prayers are imperfect, We know not what to pray as we ought: Ergo. Againe, that onely ſatisfieth God, whereby his wrath is once for euer appeaſed; neither need that ſatiſfaction often to bee repeated: the reaſon is, becauſe if God be once ſatisfied, he is not mutable, he ſo continueth. But prayer muſt often be repeated, Onely Chriſt hath once for euer,&c: He hath once for all appeaſed the wrath of God, which ſatiſfaction cannot be repeated: Ergo, the death of Chriſt is onely ſatisfactorie: prayer is not. Auguſtine ſpeaking of Peters repentance, which was tempered (no doubt) with prayer, ſaith: Lachrymas lego ſatisfactionem non lego: I reade of Peters teares, but of no ſatisfaction: *de tempor.ſerm.*117. See more of this, *controu.*14.*queſt.*7.*part.*4.

Rom.8.26.
Heb.10.14.

Secondly, prayer is not meritorious, nor any other religious acte done by vs: where merite or deſert is, there ſomewhat is performed to him, at whoſe hands we deſerue: But by our workes, prayer, almes-deedes, or whatſoeuer, we profite not the Lord: as Iob.35.7. If thou be righteous, what giueſt thou vnto him, or what receiueth he at thy hand? verſ.8. Thy wickedneſſe may hurt a man, as thou art, and thy righteouſneſſe may profite the Sonne of man: Ergo, prayer doth not merite at Gods hand.

Iob.35.7.

Againe, we muſt not pray, as the heathen did, Matth.6.7. but they thought to be heard for the merite of their long prayers: Ergo, it becommeth not Chriſtians to pray with any opinion of merit to be heard. Further, that cannot merite at anothers hand, the benefit whereof wholy redoundeth to our ſelues: But prayer is wholy for our benefite; we doe pray for ſuch things, as we neede, Matth.6.8. therfore it cannot merite before God. Wee haue alſo a direct place in Scripture againſt the merite of prayer: Daniel 9.18. We doe not preſent our prayers before thee for our owne righteouſnes, but for thy great mercies.

Matth 6.7.
Daniel. 9.18.

1. Heſychius ſaith: Chriſtus nobis propitiatio facta eſt,&c. Chriſt is made our propitiation, therefore in him the ſacrifice of penance is adminiſtred and performed, Et omne quod quis ex pænitentia conſequitur, ad eum refertur: And whatſoeuer any obtaineth by repentance, it is referred to him, &c. Then prayer, which is a fruit of repentance, hath no merite in it ſelfe, but as it is referred to Chriſt.

In Leuit.7. lib.2.

2. Auguſtine ſaith: Pænitentia mea non ſufficit ad ſatisfactionem, certum eſt, quod miſerecordia tua ſuperat omnem offenſionem: My repentance ſufficeth not for ſatisfaction, it is certaine, that thy mercie goeth beyond all offences, &c. then prayer, which doth accompanie repentance, ſufficeth not neither to ſatisfie.

In Pſal.142.

3. Confeſſ.of Belgia.artic.2. We are at no hand to offer vp our prayers, truſting in our owne worthineſſe, but reſting vpon the onely worthineſſe and excellencie, of the Lord Ieſus Chriſt,&c. Wirtemberg.artic.16.ſect.2. God would not turne away his eyes from prayer, if of it owne worthineſſe it were a ſatisfaction for our ſinnes,&c. To this purpoſe they alleadge that ſaying of Bernard, No man ought to put his confidence in prayer, as though for his prayer, he ſhould obtaine that which he deſerueth,&c.

Harm.ſect.2. p.35.
Sect.15.p.475.

4. Gregorie Biſhop of Rome ſaith: Non in fletib. non in actis noſtris, ſed in aduocati noſtri allegatione confidamus: Let vs not put our confidence in our weeping, or other actes, but in the interceſſion of our aduocate, &c. there is then no merit or ſatisfactorie vertue in our prayer, for then we might repoſe our truſt therein.

Hom. 7. in Ezech.in fine.

Their owne champion Vega, confeſſeth, that diuers catholique and learned Diuines among them, doe hold, that their merit of congruitie is but recens inuentum, a new inuention, &c. there is not then in prayer ſo much as any merit of congruitie.

Lib.8.de iuſtif.c.8.

Bernard ſaith well: Conſiderare debet is, qui orat, in ſeipſo duo: vt pro ſuis meritis nihil ſe accepturum putet, ſed de Dei miſericordia impetraturum: Hee that prayeth muſt conſider two things in himſelfe, that hee thinke not to receiue any thing for his owne merites, but onely for the mercie of God. *In Pſalm.*91.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE CONditions required in Prayer.

THere be diuers conditions and qualities, which muſt alwaies concurre in a faithfull prayer: Firſt, that we pray in charitie, without wrath, 1.Tim.2.8. Secondly, wee muſt pray with the deuotion and intention of the heart: God will be worſhipped in ſpirit, Ioh.4.24. Thirdly, we muſt perſeuere and continue in prayer: 1.Theſſ.5.17. Pray continually. Fourthly, wee ſhould pray onely for things neceſſarie, Matth.6.32. Your heauenly father knoweth, you haue neede of all theſe things: Theſe and ſuch other conditions preſcribed in the word of God, we hold to be neceſſarie in prayer: but theſe following we refuſe.

1.Tim 2.8.
Iohn 4.24.
1.Theſſ.5.17.
Matth.6.32.

The Papiſts.

FIrſt, Bellarmine affirmeth, that it is not requiſite to pray with faith, whereby wee beleeue and are perſwaded, that God will heare vs: but it ſufficeth onely in generall to beleeue, that God is moſt mightie and moſt mercifull, both able and willing, to grant our prayer, if there be no defect in vs.

88.Error.

*Argum.*1. Dauid, when he prayed for the life of his childe, was not aſſured, that God would heare him: for hee ſaith, *Who can tell, whether God will haue mercie on me, that the chiide may liue? Bellarm. cap.*9.

2.Sam.12.22.

2.Cor.12.8. 2. So S.Paul prayed doubtfully, that the pricke of the fleſh might be taken from him: for he prayed of faith, and yet beleeued not, that hee ſhould obtaine that he prayed for, for then it ſhould haue beene a falſe faith, ſeeing he obtained not his requeſt: ibid.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. INdeede, when we pray for temporall things, we haue no warrant otherwiſe to receiue them, then as God ſeeth them to be good for vs: but for ſpirituall bleſſings, we may pray reſolutely with all aſſurance and confidence to be heard in Gods good time: As Dauid, though here praying for the temporall life of his ſonne, bee not ſure to obtaine; yet when hee prayeth for ſome ſpirituall grace, as for the forgiueneſſe of his ſinne, Pſalm.6.1. hee is aſſured, that his prayer is receiued, verſ.9. Pſal.6.1.9. The Lord hath heard my petition, he will receiue my prayer, This difference betweene the requeſt of things ſpirituall, and temporall, Auguſtine well noteth: Sanitatem quis non petit, cum ægrotat? & tamen fortè adhuc ei ægrotare vtile eſt, poteſt fieri vt hîc non exaudiaris: —at verò cum illud petis, vt det tibi Deus vitam æternam— ſecurus eſto, accipies, &c. Who will not aske health when he is ſicke? and is not heard, for it may be good for him yet to be ſicke; but when thou prayeſt for eternall life, be ſecure and out of doubt for this matter, thou ſhalt haue it, but the time is not yet: in Pſalm.59.

2. S.Paul alſo prayed inſtantly, euen thrice, and therefore he prayed with faith, not doubting: for though in that particular hee was not aſſured to be heard, yet hee doubted not but that God would grant to him that which was needfull; and therein he was heard: for the Lord ſaid, My grace is ſufficient for thee: So our Sauiour prayed for the paſſing away of the cup of death, therein he was not heard; yet he was heard in generall, in that he ſubmitteth his humane will to his Fathers will, and was heard in that which he feared, Heb.5.7. Shall we therefore inferre, that Chriſt prayed doubtfully? Heb.5.7.

*Argum.*1. That we ought to pray confidently with a liuely faith, nothing doubting, but that God will grant vs all things needfull which we aske in Chriſt, the Scripture euidently teſtifieth: 1.Tim.2.8. We muſt pray without doubting: let him aske in faith and wauer not: Iames 1.6. The prayer of faith ſhall ſaue the ſicke: Iames 5.15. This confidence in our prayers, ſpringeth, as we ſee, from faith, not from an vncertaine and doubtfull hope, as the Ieſuite ſeemeth to affirme. 1.Tim.2.8. Iam.1.6. Iam.5.15.

Iohn 16.23. Chriſt alſo ſaith, Whatſoeuer ye ſhall aske the father in my name, he will giue it you: Iohn 16.23. here is the ground of our confidence in prayer, the promiſe of God in Chriſt Ieſus, therefore all doubting muſt be remoued.

1. Chryſoſtome ſaith well, Si dixeris, niſi accepero non recedam, prorſus accipies: If thou ſaiſt, I will not goe away till I haue receiued that I aske, thou ſhalt ſurely receiue it: Homil.24.in Matth.

Ieremie Patriarke agreeth: Cum ſumma fiducia ad portum pænitentiæ recurramus, vt inueniamus miſericordiam, &c. Let vs with great confidence haue recourſe to the hauen of repentance, that wee may finde mercie, &c.

2. Auguſtines iudgement, we haue ſeene before.

Harm.ſect.2. p.30. Pag.38. Pag.40. 3. 4. Eſpenceus vpon theſe words: Iacob.1.6. Let him aske in faith doubting nothing: inferreth, Perſuaſos nos eſſe oportet, exauditum diuinitus iri: We muſt be perſwaded, that wee ſhall be heard in heauen: in 1.Tim.p.42:

The Papiſts.

89.Error. SEcondly, Bellarmine ſaith, that he that prayeth, muſt not be in any deadly ſinne, but come with an actuall and inherent righteouſneſſe: for God heareth not ſinners, vnleſſe it be extraordinarily ſomtime, or when they begin to repent them of their ſinne, whereof notwithſtanding they haue no certaintie, cap.9.

Pſal.66.18. Argum. Pſalm.66.18. If I regard wickedneſſe in my heart, the Lord will not heare me: Ergo, the prayer of wicked men is not heard.

Iſay.1.15. Iſay 1.15. Though ye make many prayers, I will not heare, for your hands are full of blood.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. WE grant, that they which delight and continue in their ſinne, are not heard of God, The ſacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord: yet it followeth not, but that the ſinner, vvhich repenteth him of his ſinne, though his conſcience be not yet fully cleared, may pray vnto God aright, and be very ſure that his prayer is heard. Pro.15.8.

Pſal.32.5. Argum. This is proued by Dauids experience: I acknowledged my ſinne before thee, neither did I hide mine iniquitie, &c. and thou forgaueſt the puniſhment of my ſinne: the prayer therefore of penitent ſinners is infallibly heard, which Bellarmine denieth. Wee haue not onely the examples of holy men, but the promiſe alſo of God, for the hearing of ſinners prayers: as it appeareth by Salomons prayer made at the dedication of the temple, with the which God was pleaſed: a part of vvhich prayer is this, that if they, vvhich haue ſinned, returne and pray vnto God, and confeſſe their ſinnes: Then heare thou in heauen, ſaith Salomon: God was pleaſed with this prayer of Salomon, and euery part thereof. 1.King.8.49.

1. Auguſtine ſaith, Si peccatores Deus non exaudiret, fruſtra publicanus oculos in terram demittens, & pectus ſuum percutiens diceret, Deus propitius eſto mihi peccatori: If God did not heare ſinners, in vaine

ſhould the Publican caſting his eyes downe vnto the ground, and knocking vpon his breaſt, haue ſaid, Lord be mercifull to me a ſinner. Tractat.44.in Iohann.

Bellarmine anſwereth, that ſinners are heard praying for any ſpirituall or temporall gift, when they are in the way to repentance, as the Publicane was: but then they are heard, Non ex iuſtitia, ſed ex miſericordia: Not of iuſtice as worthie, but of Gods mercie: neither are they heard certainly or infallibly.

*Contra.*1. Neither is the moſt righteous man heard for his righteouſneſſe, as Daniel was a righteous man: yet he prayeth thus, We preſent not our ſupplications before thee for our owne righteouſneſſe, but thy great mercies. Dan.9.18. 2. The Publicane was heard certainely being a ſinner, ſo are all other praying in faith, as our Sauiour ſaith, Whatſoeuer ye deſire, when ye pray, beleeue that ye ſhall receiue it, and it ſhall be done vnto you. Mark.11.24.

2. Chryſoſtome ſaith, Si quiſquam noſtrum, qui peccatis obnoxij ſumus, recedens à priſtinis malis, vere et ex animo promittat Deo, &c. If any of vs, which are ſubiect to ſinne, departing from his former wickedneſſe, doe truly and from his heart promiſe vnto God, neuer to returne to the ſame againe, the Lord requireth nothing elſe for ſatisfaction, &c. He then that is ſubiect to ſinne, may come to God to make promiſe in his prayer, not to returne to the ſame againe. De beat. Philogon.

3. Confeſſ. of Belgia. artic.26. They to this purpoſe alleage that ſaying, in as much as he being tempted hath ſuffered, he is alſo able to helpe thoſe that are tempted: They then which are tempted with ſinne, may haue acceſſe vnto God. Harm. ſect.2. p.35. Heb.2.18.

4. Gregorie, Biſhop of Rome ſaith: Iuſtus aduocatus noſter iuſtos nos defendet in iudicio, quia nosmetipſos & cognoſcimus, & accuſamus iniuſtos: Our righteous aduocate will defend vs as iuſt in iudgement, becauſe we know and accuſe our ſelues to be vniuſt, &c. hee then that knoweth himſelfe to be vniuſt, and accuſeth himſelfe may pray, &c. Hom.7. in Ezech.

THE THIRD QVESTION, OF THE ORDER and manner of Prayer.

IT hath theſe ſeuerall parts: firſt, of the time and number of canonicall houres: ſecondly, of the matter of prayer: thirdly, the manner: fourthly, of the perſons.

THE FIRST PART, OF CANONICALL HOURES.

The Papiſts.

THey haue their nocturne houres, and diurne or day houres appointed for prayer: In the night, the third, ſixth, ninth, and twelfth houre, which were called the foure watches of the night: In the day they obſerue the prime, the firſt houre, the third, the ſixth, the ninth, and the twelfth: and they haue their complin immediatly after the euening or twylight. 90. Error.

Argum. Theſe canonicall houres the Ieſuite would warrant by the example of Dauid, who prayſed God ſeuen times a day. Dauid alſo kept his nocturnes: At midnight will I riſe vp, and praiſe thee: Thou ſhalt heare my voice in the morning. Pſal.119.164. In theſe houres alſo the greateſt myſteries of our redemption were wrought by our Sauiour Chriſt: as in the veſpertine, or twelfth houre he inſtituted the Sacrament, at complin hee was taken, in the prime led to Pilate, in the third houre condemned, in the ſixth crucified, in the ninth he gaue vp the Ghoſt: theſe houres therefore are conſecrate by Chriſts example vnto prayer: Bellarm. cap.13.

The Proteſtants.

*Anſw.*1. FIrſt, we denie not, but that at all times and houres both of the day and night, it is lawfull to pray, ſo oft as we are aright diſpoſed thereunto, as the Prophet Dauid did.

Secondly, further we alſo grant, a politike vſe in the Church of ſet houres for prayer, both publikely in the Church, and priuately in families, for order and decencie ſake; ſo it be done without any ſuperſtitious opinion of the houre and neceſſarie limitation of our prayers thereunto: and in this ſenſe wee refuſe not the counſell of the author of the Epiſtle ad Demetriad, which goeth vnder Hieromes name: Quanquam nullam prorſus horam à ſpirituali profectu vacuam eſſe conueniat, &c. Although it bee not conuenient, that any houre ſhould be void of ſpirituall exerciſe, yet there ſhould be ſome determinate and appointed number of houres, quò plenius Deo vaces, & qui te ad ſummam animi intentionem quaſi lege quadam contineat: In the which you ſhould more fully be vacant for God, and which as by a law ſhould binde you to a greater intention of the minde: I thinke the morning the fitteſt time for this, and the greater part of the day, vſq; ad horam tertiam, till the third houre, or three a clocke, &c. Here are three reaſons giuen of ſet houres, which we miſlike not. 1. That we may ſet all other buſineſſe aſide, and be vacant onely for God. 2. That the houre comming, wee may prepare our ſelues more zealouſly to pray. 3. That the morning bee choſen, as the fitteſt time of the day: But of the veſpertine and complin and prime, here is no mention.

3. Yet it followeth not, that our prayer ſhould be tied and limited vnto certaine houres. Neither hath Dauid any ſuch meaning, in ſaying, ſeuen times a day, he meaneth, that often times in a day hee praiſed

Pſal.119.97. praiſed God: Verſ.97. He meditated in the law of God continually: And Pſalm,55,17. theſe ſeuen times, Pſal.55.17. he reduceth to three times, Euening, morning, and at noone will I pray: hee kept therefore no certaine time. Further, if they ſtand ſo ſtrictly vpon Davids example, why doe they not keepe their nocturne Pſal.119.62. houres? as David ſaith, He roſe at midnight, and his eyes preuented the night watches: Their nocturne watches are too painfull for them.

Secondly, concerning the example of Chriſt, we ſay that not onely theſe houres, but euery houre of Leo 1.epiſt.4. cap.4. the day and night was conſecrated with ſome vertuous act of his: that, as Leo ſaith of feſtiuall dayes, that if we ſhould keepe all dayes holy, wherein Chriſt did any notable thing, Omnia tempora continuatis erunt deputanda feſtis: All times ſhould be feſtiuall: ſo if all houres ſhould be obſerued for prayer, wherein Chriſt wrought any part of our redemption; then we ſhould doe nothing elſe, but pray. See our reaſons againſt their Popiſh nocturnes and canonicall houres: Contron.6.quaſt.6.part.3.& contron.9.quaſt.8.appendix.ad 4.partem.

Pſal.119.147. S. Ambroſe ſaith notably vpon theſe words, I preuented the morning light: Qui ergo Dominum deprecatur, non velut praſcripta pracipue tempora praſtoletur,&c. ſed ſemper in corde ſit Chriſtus, ſemper in ore ſit Chriſtus; He that prayeth to the Lord, let him not ſtay as it were, for the preſcript times; but let Chriſt be alwayes in his heart, alwayes in his mouth, ſerm.19.in Pſal.119.

Lib.aduerſ. Pſychicos. 1. Tertullian is here a plentifull witneſſe, for hauing made mention of the third houre, when the Apoſtles receiued the holy Ghoſt; of the ſixth, when Peter went vp to pray: Act.10. of the ninth, when he and Iohn went to the Temple: he thus inferreth; Cur non intelligamus ſalua plane indifferentia, ſemper & vbiq; & omni tempore orandum,&c. Why ſhould we not vnderſtand without any difference, that alwaies & euery where, and at all times we ought to pray,&c. yet he granteth that theſe three houres, the third, ſixth and ninth, vt inſigniores in rebus humanis,&c. as being more notable in humane affaires, becauſe they deuide the day, and diſtinguiſh buſineſſe, ita & ſolenniores fuiſſe in reb. diuinis, Were alſo more ſolemne in diuine matters: and further he ſaith, that Peter did obſerue the ninth houre ex vetere vſu, according to the olde vſe and cuſtome, meaning of the Iewes, and that it was now grounded onely vpon tradition, wanting the authoritie of Scripture. This was the iudgement of the elder Africane Church: but the moderne Æthiopike Church is ſomewhat declined: for they haue their ſeuen houres Damianus a Goes de morib.Æthiop. both by night and day, wherein they attend diuine ſeruice; yet vpon the Lords day, it ſeemeth, they obſerue them not, for they come together at the third houre, and ſpend the time in hearing the Prophets read, and in preaching: as Zaga Zabo their Biſhop teſtifieth.

Hom.14.in 8.c.ad Roman. 2. Chryſoſtome exhorteth ad matutinas & nocturnas orationes: to morning and euening prayer: other canonicall houres he ſpeaketh not of: and as he ſaith of the place, Chriſtianos ad certum aliquem locum non eſſe alligatos, That Chriſtians are not tied to any certaine place, as were the Iewes, the like reaſon may ſerue againſt the tying of prayer vnto times and houres.

Harm.ſect.15. p.477. 3. Confeſſ.of Wirtemberg.c.27. They ſimply miſlike not, that ſet times ſhould bee appointed for the reading of Scripture: but this they condemne, to appoint a ſpeciall kinde of Prieſts to chaunt out theſe canonicall houres, and to ſing them in a ſtrange tongue, and in ſome places in the night and day without intermiſſion, — and to make hereof a worſhip,&c.

4. They are not themſelues agreed concerning the time of their canonicall houres; as for completorium, the complin, Rabanus holdeth, that it ſhould bee celebrate hora vndecima, in the eleuenth houre, that is the houre before Sunne ſet, the laſt but one, lib.2.de inſtit.Cleric.c.8. Smaragdus Abbas ſaith horam duodecimam, that the twelfth, that is the laſt houre of the day, belongeth to Complin: comment.ad cap.16.regul.S.Benedic. The reſt doe generally holde, that Complin is in the beginning of the night.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE matter of diuine Seruice and Prayer.

91.Error. IN the matter of their ſeruice we take exception againſt two parts of their leiturgie chiefly; firſt, we miſlike the reading of the fabulous ſtories of their Saints liues in ſtead of the Scriptures, which onely
Nehem.8. ought to be reade in the Church, as it may thus appeare; Nehem.8. Ezra did reade from morning to midday only in the booke of the law: The Iewes did reade the Prophets onely in their Synagogues Act.13.27. 15.21. Iohn 5.39. vpon the Sabbath day: and Moſes, Act.15.21. And Chriſt ſendeth vs no whither but to the Scriptures: Search the Scriptures.

See the conſent of antiquitie: Concil.Laodicen.can.59. Non oportet libros extra canonem legere. Carthag.3.can.47. Placuit vt preter Scripturas canonicas nihil in Eccleſia legatur ſub nomine diuinarum Scripturarum: It was decreed, that nothing beſide the canonicall Scriptures, ſhould be read for Scripture in the Church.

Gelaſius alſo thus decreed of this matter: Geſta ſanctorum Martyrum, ſecundum antiquam conſuetudinem, ſingulari cautela, in Eccleſia Romana non leguntur, quia & eorum qui conſcripſerunt, nomina ignorantur, & multa ſuperflua, aut minus apta ſcripta putantur: The deedes of the Martyrs, we haue prouided, not to be read any more in the Romane Church, as afore time; becauſe their names are not knowne that writ them, and there is much ſuperfluous and vnfit matter there written: decret.de Apocryphis.

Yet for all this, the Ieſuite would beare vs downe, that it is a commendable vſe of the Church, to reade ſuch ſtories ſtill: Bellarm.cap.14.

Secondly, 1. We condemne that idolatrous and blaſphemous ſong, called (Salue Regina) endited to the honour of the Virgine Marie; but to the diſhonour of Chriſt. 92. Error.

2. They call her in this ſong, matrem miſericordia, the mother of mercie: which is a title proper vnto God, to be called the father of mercie, 2.Cor.1.3. 2.Cor.1.3.

3. They call her our life: but Chriſt only is the way, the truth and the life, Iohn 14.6. Iohn 4.6.

4. Another title is (dulcedo) our ſweetneſſe, or comfort: but the Lord our God, onely is the God of all comfort, 2.Cor.1.3. 2.Cor.1.3.

5. This ſong calleth Marie our hope: But the Scripture holdeth them accurſed that make man their confidence, Ierem.17.5. Ier.17.5.

6. They pray vnto Marie in this ſong, Vt poſt hoc exilium Ieſum oſtendat, That ſhe would ſhew vnto vs Ieſus after this life: contrarie to the Scripture; for God the father bringeth vs to Chriſt, Ioh.6.44. and it is the office of Chriſt to ſhew himſelfe to vs, Iohn.4.21. It is great Idolatrie then to aſcribe this office proper vnto God, to any other: yet notwithſtanding all theſe blaſphemies, this ſong is defended by the Ieſuite: cap.15. Iohn 6.44. Iohn 4.21.

Bellarmines anſwere is here moſt abſurd.

1. Marie is called or ſaluted by the name of Queene; as all other Saints are, Matth.5.3. Bleſſed are the poore in ſpirit, for theirs is the kingdome of heauen, lib.1.de bon.operib.c.15. and ſhe more ſingularly is called a Queene, being the mother of the King of Kings. Matth.5.3.

Contra. 1. If Marie be no otherwiſe a Queene then all other Saints are, as it is ſaid, He hath made vs Kings and Prieſts; then euery faithfull woman in earth is a Queene as well as ſhe. 2. Why doe you then rob other Saints of this title, and giue it onely to her, if it be common to the reſt? 3. We are all indeed Kings and Prieſts, but vnto God, that is, ſpiritually, by faith, we are not made Kings one to another. 4. As Marie was the mother of the King of Kings, ſo was ſhee the mother of God; if the firſt make her a Queene, the ſecond muſt make her a Goddeſſe: and ſeeing Chriſt was a King, while hee liued in the fleſh, and is noted to haue beene obedient to his parents, Luke 2.51. he ſhould haue done his mother wrong, in not giuing vnto her the name of Queene, which was due vnto her. Apoc.1.6. Luk.2.51.

2. She is called the Mother of mercie, becauſe ſhe was the mother of Chriſt, by whom wee obtaine mercie: and for that ſhe prayeth dayly for mercie for vs, and obtaineth, ibid.

Contra. 1. Chriſt alſo is called the Sonne of Dauid, and the ſonne of Adam: Say alſo, that Adam and Dauid were likewiſe Fathers of mercie. 2. Marie obtaineth no mercie for vs: he onely is our aduocate for mercie, that is the propitiation for our ſinnes. 3. Marie while ſhe liued, had need of mercie her ſelfe; acknowledging Chriſt to be her Sauiour. Luk.3.18. 1.Iohn 2.2. Luk.2.47.

3. She is called life, becauſe ſhe was the mother of Chriſt our life, and by him made the mother of all that liue ſpiritually; as Eua was the mother of all liuing the naturall life, Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. 1. It is a great blaſphemie to ſay that Marie is ſo the mother of the ſpirituall life, as Eua was of the naturall: what is this elſe, but to make Marie the Sauiour of the world? 2. The prerogatiue to be Chriſts mother ſpiritually, Chriſt giueth to all faithfull beleeuers and followers, Matthew 12.50. Will you ſay alſo that euery faithfull woman that ſpiritually beareth Chriſt, is life. 3. Ieruſalem, which is from aboue, is the mother of vs all: The Church of God is the mother of the ſpirituall life; haue we then two mothers? 4. Chriſt ſaith, I am the way and the life. If Marie be the life, make her alſo the way. Math.12.50. Galath.4.26. Iohn 14.6.

4. Shee is called the ſweetneſſe, becauſe of the innumerable benefites wherewith ſhee continually comforteth the afflicted, Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. 1. The Prophet Dauid ſaith: Taſte and ſee how ſweet the Lord is, bleſſed is the man that truſteth in him: will you haue alſo the Virgine Marie truſted in, or ſo truſted in, as that they are not bleſſed, that truſt not in her? 2. Chriſt ſaith, I will pray the Father, and he ſhall giue you another comforter: Doth he meane his mother ſhall be this comforter? or will you make two comforters, whereas Chriſt will ſend but another beſide himſelfe? how then is the Virgine Marie become a comforter of the afflicted? 3. S.Paul ſaith, God, which comforteth the abiect, comforted vs: Is not God ſufficient to comfort the afflicted, but yee muſt alſo make the Virgine Marie a comforter? miſerable comforters are ye, that driue vs to ſuch comforts. Pſal.34.8. Iohn 14.16. 2.Cor.7.6.

5. We may truſt in men, ſo that wee chiefly truſt in God: as Chriſt ſaith of the Iewes, There is one which accuſeth you, euen Moſes in whom ye truſt: and thus alſo may we truſt in the virgine Marie, Bellarm.ibid. Iohn 4.45.

Contra. 1. By truſting in Moſes, our Sauiour vnderſtandeth Moſes law or Moſes writings: as to beleeue Moſes, is to beleeue Moſes writings: And where it is ſaid, Moſes hath in euery Citie them that preach him: is it to bee vnderſtood of Moſes perſon, or Moſes doctrine? And thus the Iewes themſelues ſhew how they truſted in Moſes: We are Moſes diſciples, we know that God ſpake by Moſes: their truſt then was in his doctrine. 2. But, that God onely is to be truſted in, the Prophet teacheth: Whom haue I in heauen, but thee? S.Ambroſe well ſaith, writing vpon theſe words, 1.Cor.3. What is Paul, what is Apollos, but your Miniſters? Vt quia miniſtri ſunt, ſpes in his non ſit, ſed in Domino cuius miniſtri ſunt: Becauſe they are miniſters, let not truſt be in them, but in the Lord, whoſe Miniſters they are. Ioh.5.46.47. Act.15.20. Iohn 9.29. Pſalm.73.25. 1.Cor.3.

1.Tim.4.16. James.5.20. 6. Like as S.Paul ſaith to Timothie: Take heede vnto learning, and thou ſhalt both ſaue thy ſelfe and them that heare thee: and S.Iames, He that hath conuerted a ſinner,&c. ſhall ſaue a ſoule from death: as men may ſaue others by preaching,prayer,conuerting; ſo the Virgins prayer is ſaid to ſhew vs Chriſt by her interceſſion, Bellarmin.ibid.

Contra. 1. If Marie doe but ſhew you Chriſt by her mediation, then other Saints, whom yee make your mediators, doe as much: yet you doe not pray in theſe tearmes vnto them. 2. Men as inſtrumentall meanes by their preaching and prayers are ſaid to ſaue others, becauſe theſe are duties preſcribed, and commanded in the word: as Preaching, Take heede vnto doctrine: Prayer, Pray one for another: but where hath Marie any ſuch office committed to her to ſhew vs Chriſt, or to be a Mediator to that end? 3. Chriſt ſaith, I will ſhew mine owne ſelfe vnto him: What neede we then a Mediator to him, to ſhew himſelfe? Yea, and he himſelfe is our Mediator herein; Father I will, that they, which thou haſt giuen me, be with me,&c. that they may behold my glory: Do ye thinke that Chriſt is not a ſufficient Mediator of himſelfe, but that you muſt ioyne another with him? Thus we ſee, notwithſtanding all theſe ſhifts, and miſtie conceites, that they cannot bring any good defence or excuſe for this their idolatrous ſong of (Salue Regina.)

1.Tim.4.16. Iam.5.16. Iohn 14.21. Iohn 17.24.

Lib.7.in 24.c. Leuit. What was the matter of diuine ſeruice and prayer in the purer ages of the Church. 1. Iſychius of the Greeke Church teſtifieth: Sancta eſt oratio, ſancta diuina ſcriptura lectio, & interpretationis auditio: The prayer is holy, the reading of the diuine Scripture holy, and the hearing of the interpretation, and all things are holy, which are done in the Church ſecundum legem eius, according to his law,&c. Here is nothing done in the Church, but according to the rule of Gods law.

Apologet. 2. The ſame was the vſe of the Africane Church: as Tertullian ſheweth: Coimus ad diuinarum literarum commemorationem,&c. fidem ſanctis vocib. paſcimus: We come together to the rehearſing of the diuine Scriptures, we feede our faith with holy ſpeech,&c.

Harm.ſect. 15. pag.476. 3. Confeſſ.of Wirtemberg.c.7.They allow canonicall houres, wherein the whole holy Scripture ſhould be publikely ouerrunne euery yeere.

4. Now let vs ſee what teſtimonie wee haue from themſelues: Eſpenc. thus rehearſeth out of Algerus de Sacrament. lib. 3.c. 13. Multi aliqua erroris verba per imperitiam precatores effundunt,&c. in quibus multa reperiuntur contra catholicam fidem: Many in their prayers vnskilfully doe vtter erronious words,&c. wherein many things are contained, contrarie to the Catholique faith, digreſ.lib.1. cap.11.

2. Nicolaus Clamengius thus complained in his time: Qualiter hac tempeſtate legatur ſacer diuinæ legis Canon,&c. How in theſe dayes the diuine law is read, is manifeſt: vix ſola librorum capita inchoantur,&c. ſcarcely the titles of the bookes are read: I know a Cathedrall Church in this Kingdome, wherein, when the actes of the Saints are rehearſed, from the beginning to the end, when as they come to the reading of Scripture, Lector ſingulis lectionibus vix quatuor lineas explet: the reader hardly endeth foure lines: ex citation.Eſpenc.ibid. This was another fault in the Popiſh leiturgie, that they excluded the reading of Scripture.

3. Lodouicus Viues lib.2. de corrupt.actib. giueth this teſtimonie of their legend: Quàm indigna diuis & hominibus ſanctorum hiſtoria, quam neſcio cur auream Legendam appellent, cùm ſcripta ſit ab homine ferrei oris, plumbei cordis: quid fœdius dici poteſt illo libro? &c. How vnworthie a ſtorie both for God and men, which I ſee no reaſon, they ſhould call a golden legend, ſeeing it was made by a man of iron lips, and a leaden heart: what can be ſaid to be more filthie then that booke? &c. Yet out of this book the greateſt part of the leſſons vpon the Saints dayes were taken: Thus their leiturgie was filled with lies and fables.

4. Lindanus lib. 3.de interpret.ſcriptur.c.3. reporteth theſe words of Agobertus Biſhop of Lions, Antiphonarium correximus, amputatis, quæ ſuperflua, leuia, falſa, blaſphema, ridicula, phantaſtica multa videbantur: We haue corrected the Antiphonary, cutting off many things that ſeemed ſuperfluous, light, falſe, blaſphemous, ridiculous, phantaſticall,&c. Is not here a goodly bedrowle of the vertues and ſingular qualities of their holy leiturgie? and theſe are the complaints of their owne ſide: and therefore wee can iudge no leſſe, but that their Popiſh prayers and ſongs are ridiculous, blaſphemous, ſuperſtitious,&c.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE MANner of their Church-ſeruice.

CONcerning their Church muſicke, and the ſinging of their ſeruice, wee haue ſhewed our opinion before, where we entreated of the Canon of the Maſſe: We doe not condemne the commendable vſe of ſinging in the Church, which ſerueth to many good purpoſes, but we only would haue the abuſe remoued: the chiefe faults committed in Popiſh Church-muſicke are theſe.

1. The yrkeſome length and tediouſneſſe thereof, produced with their multiplicitie of vnedifying ſongs and leſſons: which abuſe hath beene much complained of in time paſt: Opuſcul.tripartit.lib.3. cap.1. In multis Eccleſijs faciunt lectiones adeo prolixas in matutinis, quòd ferè nullus audiat totas matutinas, & ſiqui remanent ibi, dormiunt: In many Churches they make their leſſons ſo long at morning ſeruice, that few tary the whole; and they that ſtay, fall aſleepe.

2. Their ſongs are ſet foorth in an vnedifying tongue, contrary to S. Pauls rule, 1. Cor. 14. But of this matter we haue alreadie entreated at large, Controu.1. appendic. ad tertiam quaeſtionem: ſo that we need not to handle it againe here.

3. They ſing that, which is not to be ſung, as the leſſons and lectures out of Scriptures, and prayers, which are to be ſaid, and not ſung: as Hierome ſaith; Non decet orantem canere: he that prayeth muſt not ſing: praefation. lib.2. in Habacucke.

The Apoſtle alſo diſtinguiſheth prayer and ſinging, Is any afflicted? let him pray: is any merry? let him ſing. Iam.5.13.

Concil. Bracarenſ.1.30. Placuit, vt nihil veteris Teſtamenti poetice compoſitum in Eccleſia pſallatur: That no part of the old Teſtament ſhould be ſung in verſe. The decree is againſt the ſinging of leſſons. Other corruptions and imperfections in their ſinging ſeruice, we haue noted before, in the treatiſe of the canon of the Maſſe, whither we referre the Reader. See alſo before in the firſt controuerſie, in the queſtion of the vulgar edition, and vſe of Scripture in diuine ſeruice.

THE FOVRTH PART OF THE PERSONS THAT are bound to the Canonicall houres.

This dutie, ſaith Bellarmine, belongeth onely to Monkes, and thoſe which are of the Clergie. 93. Error.

Argum. 1. Chron. 15.16. Dauid ſpake to the chiefe of the Leuites to appoint certaine of their brethren to ſing with inſtruments of Muſicke. As the Leuites were bound in the time of the law, to ſing the ſongs of the Church, ſo onely are the Monkes and Clergie now. 1. Chron. 15.16

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. First, the argument followeth not, becauſe the Leuites then were deputed to the office of ſinging, that therefore the Clergie is onely bound to doe it now: for that legall diſtinction betweene the Prieſts and the people, is now taken away: And Chriſt hath made vs all Kings and Prieſts now, to offer vp the ſpirituall ſacrifice of praiſe and thankeſgiuing. Apoc. 1.6. Secondly, the Leuites did not onely ſing the ſongs of the Church, but they as more skilfull men, were appointed to moderate the voice of the people, who did ſing together with the Leuites: All Iſrael (not the Leuites onely) brought vp the Arke with the ſound of inſtruments, Let all the people ſay, ſo be it, and praiſe the Lord. 1. Chron. 15.28 cap. 16.36. Thirdly, your Monkes either are, or ought to be no Prieſts, but lay men; and are not therefore of the Leuiticall order, and yet you permit them to ſing Pſalmes: why may not other lay men doe the like? Fourthlie, we grant that all things ſhould be done in the Church in order: and therefore that it is the office of the Miniſter to moderate the aſſemblies of the people in their Chriſtian exerciſes of giuing of thanks, and prayer: But notwithſtanding the people may ioyne with their Paſtor, both with voice and conſent of heart, in the common Pſalmes and prayer, ſo that all things bee done decently, and in order.

Argum. The people in Dauids time did vſe to praiſe God together with the Leuites, 1. Chron. 16.36. 1. Chron. 16.36 In Nehemiah his time, at the dedication of the Temple, the people praiſed God together with the Leuites, chap. 12.31. Nehem. 12.31. verſ. 38. I appointed two great companies to giue thanks, and the one went on the right hand of the wall, &c. And in theſe companies were the people, verſ. 38. halfe of the people was vpon the wall. The Ieſuite alſo brought in Dauids example, who praiſed God ſeuen times a day, for the warrant of his canonicall houres: But Dauid was neither Monke nor Prieſt: wherefore the office of praiſe and thankeſgiuing belongeth not onely to ſuch.

And for further euidence: 1. that the whole congregation had their part in the publike prayers and ſuffrages, Iuſtinus ſheweth; We all riſe together, and ſend vp our prayers: ἀνιστάμεθα κοινῇ πάντες καὶ εὐχὰς πέμπομεν Apolog. 2. So alſo Nicephorus writeth of Theodoſius the younger, that when tota eccleſia ſupplicationem fecit pro ſerenitate, when the whole congregation prayed for faire weather, Theodoſius went before in ſinging of Pſalmes, &c.

2. The ſame was the vſe in the Africane Church as Tertullian witneſſeth, Coimus in coetum & congregationem, vt ad Deum quaſi manu facta precationibus ambiamus orantes: Apolog. ad uerſ. Gentes. We come together into the congregation, that as with a band we compaſſe God with our prayers, &c. which place Franciſcus Zephyrus in his meditations thus expoundeth, Vt multiplicibus ex vno veluti impetu precib. Deum propitium reddamus: that wee may propitiate God, with multiplicitie of prayers, as with one brunt.

3. Confeſſ. of Wirtemberg. c. 27. They condemne that vſe of the popiſh Church: To appoint a ſpeciall kind of Prieſts, to chaunt out canonicall houres, — and that in ſome places in the night and in the day without any intermiſſion, new ſingers taking verie often one another's courſe, &c. Harm. ſect. 15. pag. 477.

4. Gregorie ſpeaketh generally to all Chriſtians: Stude quaeſo, & creatoris tui verba meditare, diſce cor Dei in verbis Dei: Lib. 4. epiſt. 40. Studie, I pray thee, and meditate the words of thy Creator, learne the mind of God in the words of God, &c. it belongeth then to all the people of God, to be familiarly acquainted with the holy prayers and Pſalmes in Scripture.

THE SECOND PART OF FASTING, the particulars whereof follow.

The Papiſts.

94. Error. FIrſt, they hold that the holy time of Lent, (as they call it, as though any time in their ſenſe were holier then another) is an Apoſtolike tradition, warranted by the example of Moſes, Elias, and our Sauiour Chriſt, that faſted 40. daies, Rhemiſt. Matth.4.ſect.2. Bellarm.lib.2.de bon.operib.cap.14. To the ſame purpoſe the Doway gloſſemen: annot.in biblio.p.934.

Bellarmine further ſheweth ſeauen cauſes of the inſtitution of Lent.

1. That Chriſtians may ſolemnely repent for the ſinnes of the whole yeere.

2. That they may be prepared to receiue the Communion at Eaſter.

Matth.9.15. 3. To fulfill that ſaying of Chriſt, Matth.9.15. When the Bridegrome ſhall be taken away, then ſhall they faſt.

4. That they may be prepared to celebrate the feaſt of Chriſts paſſion and reſurrection.

5. That they might faſt and pray, for ſuch as were newly conuerted to the faith, which were baptized at Eaſter.

6. That we might conſecrate by faſting vnto God the tenth part of our life, for 36. daies are the tenth of the yeere.

7. That hereby we ſhould imitate Chriſt, ſo neere as we can, that faſted 40. daies and 40. nights: Bellarm.cap.16.

The Proteſtants.

1. Anſ. FIrſt, ſhall it then ſuffice a man once in the yeere to repent for his ſins? Is not the Lords prayer daily to bee ſaid, wherein wee pray for remiſſion of ſinnes, which cannot bee obtained without repentance? Secondly, or was it Lent, when Peter exhorted the people to publike repentance, Act.2.38. Repent and be baptized. Thirdly, Quid enim differas, vt plura peccata committas? Why ſhould you deferre your repentance, to commit more ſinnes, ſaith Ambroſe de pœnit.lib.2.c.11. This therefore could be no cauſe of the inſtitution of Lent. Acts.2.38.

2. In the Primitiue Church they receiued the Communion often, euen euery Lords day at the leaſt: Actes 20.7. The firſt day of the weeke, (which is the Lords day) they came together to eate bread. Saint Ambroſe: Accipe quotidie, quod tibi quotidie proſit: qui non meretur quotidie accipere, non meretur poſt annum accipere: Receiue that daily, which thou haſt vſe of daily: hee that is not fit to receiue daily, is not fit after a yeere: de ſacram lib.5.c.4. If Lent were inſtituted vpon this occaſion, it was no Apoſtolicall inſtitution: for then the Communion was miniſtred often, and not onely at Eaſter. Act.20.7.

3. Firſt, that ſaying of Chriſt was ſpoken onely to his Apoſtles, that enioyed his carnall preſence. Secondly, if it be largely taken, then the Montaniſts did come neerer to the ſenſe, that obſerued the Lenton faſt ſtraight after Chriſts aſcenſion. Thirdly, or if they will expound the taking away of the Bridegrome, of Chriſts death, by this reaſon they ſhould not faſt before the celebration of the paſſion, but after.

4. Firſt, by this reaſon, we muſt haue a Lent alſo before the Natiuitie, and another before Pentecoſt, ſeeing theſe alſo are great feaſts, and a preparation ought to goe before. Secondly, this proueth Lent not to be Apoſtolicall, ſeeing the feaſt of Eaſter was not then vniformely obſerued, nor many yeeres after. Thirdly, the Sabbath was as great a feſtiuall as any beſide, being immediatly inſtituted of God: yet one day of preparation ſufficed for that.

5. Firſt, we haue now no Catechumeni, or Conuerts from Paganiſme: therefore by this reaſon, the Lenton obſeruation ſhould ceaſe, hauing no vſe that way. Secondly, neither did the Apoſtles deferre the baptiſme of Conuerts till Eaſter, but baptized them, as occaſion ſerued: Act.2.38. S. Peter ſaith at the feaſt of Pentecoſt, Repent and be baptized, &c. Wherefore this reaſon ſheweth, that Lent was not Apoſtolicall. Act.2.38.

6. Firſt, if 36. daies be the tenth of the yeere, why do you obſerue 40. daies for the Lenton faſt? Secondly, theſe fellowes will ſet God to ſchoole, that he ſhould rather haue taken the tenth day for the Sabbath, then the ſeuenth; ſo ſtrict they are in tithing of daies. Thirdly, not the tenth day, but euery day of our life ought to be conſecrate to God; as Ambroſe ſaith of Iob: Sanctus Iob quotidie pro filijs offerebat ſacrificium: Holy Iob euery day offered ſacrifice for his ſonnes: de ſacram.lib.5.c.4.

7. Firſt, Ambroſe ſerm.23. Quadrageſima quadraginta duos dies habet, &c. Lent hath 42. daies according to Moſes 42. manſions: ſerm.34. He deriueth this obſeruation from Noahs flood, quia tot dierum ſpatio pluuia defluxerant: becauſe ſo many daies the raine was in falling, &c. If this be ſo, then is it not grounded vpon the imitation of Chriſt. Secondly, Moſes faſted 40. daies, and Elias; yet none in the old law did inſtitute a faſt vpon this example: neither are wee to ground the like vpon Chriſts miraculous abſtinence now. Thirdly, that faſting of our Sauiour Chriſt, and the holy Prophets was miraculous, and no more to be imitated, then Chriſts walking on the ſea, or raiſing of the dead, as Auguſtine ſaith: Non tibi dicit, non eris diſcipulus meus, &c. Hee ſaith not, thou ſhalt not be, be my diſciple, vnleſſe thou walke vpon the ſea, or raiſe the dead, — but learne of me, becauſe I am humble and meeke: enarrat.in Pſal.9. Againe he ſaith, Non ergo, quia Chriſtus ſtatim poſt baptiſma ieiunauit, tanquam regulam obſeruationis tradidiſſe credendus eſt, ſed plane illo exemplo docuit ieiunandum eſſe, quando forte acriore luctamine cum tentatione confligitur: In that Chriſt faſted after his Baptiſme, it is not to be thought, that he gaue vs a rule to obſerue, but taught vs by his example, that then we muſt faſt, when we are more ſtrongly tempted: de tempor.ſer.157.

George Marſh holy Martyr thus witneſſeth: Let the faſting of Chriſt while he was tempted in the wilderneſſe, be vnto vs an example of ſober liuing, not for the ſpace of fortie daies, (as the Papiſts do fondly fanſie of their owne braine) but as long as we are in the wilderneſſe of this wretched life.

Further, that the obſeruation of Lent was no Apoſtolike tradition, it appeareth, becauſe it was not vniformely kept of the Church a long time after them: for as Ireneus witneſſeth, ſome faſted one day, ſome two daies, ſome fortie houres day and night: but if it had been neceſſarily inioyned and preſcribed by the Apoſtles, ſuch varietie of cuſtome could not haue ſprung vp; at the leaſt, not haue been ſuffered in the Church. Againe, Epiphanius ſaith, that the Wedneſdaies faſt was an Apoſtolike tradition; as likewiſe to obſerue the feaſt of the ſixe daies of Eaſter, with bread, ſalt, and water: which obſeruations are not kept amongſt the Papiſts themſelues, yet haue they as good teſtimonie of antiquitie to be Apoſtolike traditions, as the Lent faſt. Thirdly, in Auguſtines time, there was no neceſſary enforcemēt for euery man to keepe Lent: Si aliquis (ſaith he) ieiunare non poteſt, eleemoſyna ſine ieiunio bona eſt: If any man be not able to faſt, almes without faſting is good and profitable: Serm. de tempor.62. Wherefore ſeeing the Lent faſt was then voluntarie, it is euident that it was not an Apoſtolike preſcription, which ſhould haue bound all men neceſſarily.

That Lent is no Apoſtolicall tradition, it further appeareth, both becauſe of the vncertaine preſcript of the time, as alſo the diuerſitie of the manner in keeping the ſtrict time of Lent.

As touching the firſt, it was decreed: Concil. Aurelianenſ.4.can.2. Vt quadrageſima æqualiter ab omnibus teneatur, non quinquageſima, aut ſexageſima: That fortie daies ſhould be obſerued for Lent, not fiftie, or threeſcore. Agathenſ.can.12. Vt omnes in quadrageſima exceptis diebus dominicis ieiunent: That euery man ſhould faſt fortie daies, excepting the Lords daies. Gregorie the firſt, Quadrageſimali ieiunio 4. dies addidit, to the fortie daies faſt added foure daies more. Par.3.diſt.5.c.16. Teleſphorus Biſhop of Rome decreed, Vt 7. hebdomadas plenas ante paſcha omnes clerici à carne ieiunent: That Clergie men ſhould faſt ſeuen whole weekes before Eaſter, that is 49. daies. Diſt.4.c.4 Concil, Triburienſ.can.58. They which had committed murther, were inioyned thrice in a yeere to faſt fortie daies, before Eaſter, before S. Iohn Baptiſts day, and before the Natiuitie. And thus we ſee ſome faſted fortie daies, ſome fortie ſauing the ſixe Lords daies, ſome 44. ſome 49. ſome 120. daies, that is three Lents.

Further, thus it is extant in their owne decrees: Diſtinct.4.c.6. Gregor. Sacerdotes à quinquageſima propoſitum ieiunandi ſuſcipiant: The Prieſts muſt begin to faſt from the 50. day: contr.par.3 diſt.5. c.6. Quadrageſ.non quinquageſ.teneatur.

Diſtinct.76.c.8. Quadrageſimæ ieiunijs contriſtaremur: Wee muſt ſorrow with the faſt of fortie daies. Ambroſ.ſerm.23. Quadrageſima quadraginta duos dies habet: Lent hath 42. daies.

Diſt.76.c.10. Poſt paſcha, &c. After the Paſch to Pentecoſt, they that will may faſt: quia Antonius, Paulus, & cæteri patres his diebus in eremo leguntur abſtinuiſſe, neque ſoluiſſe abſtinentiam, niſi tantum die dominico: Becauſe Antonie, Paul, and other fathers are read to haue faſted theſe daies, neither to haue looſed their faſt, but onely vpon the Lords day, &c. Here is another Lenton faſt from the Paſch to Pentecoſt tolerated.

Par.3.diſt.5.c.16. Gregor. Sex dies dominici de abſtinentia ſubtracti, &c. Sixe Lords daies are taken from the faſt, and ſo there remaine but 36. and to fil vp the number of fortie daies, he borroweth foure daies from the weeke before.

Ibid.c.25. Quadrageſimam abſtinentiæ celebramus, cùm bene viuimus, &c. We keepe the Lenton faſt, when we liue well: ex Auguſtin. By this decree there ſeemeth to be no neceſſitie of the Lenton faſt at all. And this difference we find for the time of Lent.

The like diuerſitie is to be ſeene in the manner of the obſeruation: Liberius decreed, that the husband all Lent long ſhould abſent himſelfe from his wife. Concil.Triburienſ.can.35. That no Iudge ſhould keepe aſſiſes in Lent time: Yet the contrarie is practiſed euen among the Papiſts: Toletan.10. cap.1. Quadrageſima nihil conuenit, de ſanctorum ſolennitatibus celebrari: That no Saints daies ſhould be kept in Lent: Yet the Annunciation falleth in Lent, which they make a feſtiuall of our Ladie. Nicolaus 1. de bellis, can.4. That all Lent time they muſt abſtaine from warre. Salegunſtad.cap.19. Vt dum pœnitens quadrageſimam ieiunet, non migret à loco ad locum: That while the penitent man keepeth his Lent, he ſhould not trauell from place to place.

Beſide: Cod.lib.3.tit.12.leg.6. Tempore quadrageſimæ criminales cauſæ non agitandæ: In Lent time criminall cauſes muſt not be handled.

Cauſ.22.qu.5.c.17. Non iurandum à ſeptuageſima: From Septuageſima Sunday till Eaſter, no man muſt ſweare.

Cauſ.33.qu.4.c.3. Diebus ieiuniorum nullus coniungatur vxori: No man muſt in the faſting daies haue companie with his wife.

C.8. Non nuptias celebrare: It is not lawfull to celebrate mariage.
C.9. Nec natalitia martyrum: Nor the Saints daies.
C.11. Nec conuiuia facere: Nor to make feaſts in Lent.
Part.3.diſt.1.c.50. Non niſi veſpertina hora ieiunium ſoluant: The faſt muſt not be looſed till the euening.

Thus by thoſe vncertainties it may appeare, that the Lenton faſt is an humane inuention, rather then an Apoſtolicall inſtitution: for then it ſhould haue remained alwaies the ſame, without any addition, or alteration: the contrarie whereof we haue ſeene.

Lib.7.c.19. And further, 1. what was the practiſe of the Eaſterne and other Churches, and how variable touching the obſeruation of Lent: Sozomen ſheweth, how that in the Weſt, in Lybia and Egypt they obſerued ſixe weekes of faſt: at Conſtantinople, and the regions about, ſeuen: in ſome places but three Lib.5.c.21. weekes before Eaſter; in ſome but two: And Socrates ſaith, becauſe there was not mandatum ſcriptum, no written precept of this matter: the Apoſtles cuiuſuis voluntati reliquerunt liberum, left it free Lib.2.de primat.pag.73. to euery ones mind, &c. Nilus the Greeke Archbiſhop; rehearſeth the 55. canon of the ſixth generall ſynode, which condemneth the vſe of the Romane Church in faſting Saturdaies in Lent, and reuiueth an old Eccleſiaſtical canon; that if any clergy man faſted either vpon the Lords day, or Saturday, one only excepted, he ſhould be depoſed. And to this day the Greeke Muſcouian Church doth con- Sacranus elucidar.error 27. De religione Muſcouitar. demne the Roman Church for faſting Saturdaies in Lent. Ioannes Faber writeth, that the Muſcouites haue, as it were, foure Lenton faſts in the yeere, ſeuen weekes before Eaſter, and in Iune to the feaſt of S. Peter; in Auguſt to the feaſt of the aſſumption of Mary, and from the 10. day of Nouember vntill the Natiuitie.

Aduerſ.Pſychicos. 2. Tertullian ſheweth what was practiſed in the Africane Church: Duas in anno hebdomadas Xerophagiarum, nec totas; exceptis ſcilicet Sabbatis & dominicis offerimus: We conſecrate two weeks in a yeere of eating dry things, & not thẽ whole neither, the Saturdaies & Lords-daies being excepted, &c. Villamont.c.7. The Æthiopians obſerue fiftie daies before Eaſter, and likewiſe 50. daies after Eaſter, and as many after Pentecoſt.

Harm.ſect.16. pag.481. 3. Latter confeſſ. of Heluetia.c.24. The faſt of Lent hath teſtimonie of antiquitie, but none of the Apoſtles writings; and therefore ought not, nor cannot be impoſed vpon the faithfull. And to this purpoſe they alleage out of Irenaus, how ſome faſted one day, ſome two, ſome fortie daies, &c.

Pag.511. Confeſſ. of Sweueland, cap.7. they alleage out of Chryſoſtome. Chriſt doth not ſay that hee will haue his faſt to be followed, howbeit he might haue proponed theſe 40. daies vnto vs &c. Saxonie, ar- Sect.17.p.536. tic.20. The fourth error is the opinion of neceſſitie, for ſome doe write, that the faſting of Lent is neceſſarie. They condemne not the obſeruation of the Lenton faſt ſimply, but thinke it not to be held as neceſſary. And ſo in ſome reformed Churches, Lent is obſerued as a thing indifferent, not for religion, but as a politick conſtitution, for the benefit of the Commonwealth, in ſparing the bread and encreaſe of cattell.

4. Melchior Canus a learned Popiſh writer granteth that the Pope may diſpenſe with the Lenton faſt: and ſaith directly, that poterit contrarius populi mos inſtituta huius generis abrogare, that the contrarie cuſtome of the people may abrogate ſuch inſtitutions, and he giueth inſtance of Lent, &c. It is therefore neither of diuine nor Apoſtolike inſtitution.

The Papiſts.

95.Error. 1. A Second abuſe in their faſting, is to appoint preſcript times, neceſſarily to faſt in, as in Lent, on Friday, Saturday, and vpon Ember daies, which are preſcribed for the foure ſolemne times Actes 13.3. of giuing orders: And this alſo they ſay, is an Apoſtolike tradition, Actes 13.2. They faſted and prayed, and laid their hands vpon them, Rhemiſt. ibid. Bellarm. lib. 2. de bon. operib. in particul. cap.17.18.

Zachar.8.19. 2. Bellarmine alſo groundeth the foure quarters faſts vpon the example of the Iewes, Zach.8.19. that faſted the fourth, fifth, ſeuenth, and tenth moneths: but Chriſtians ſhould not be inferiour to them in faſting.

Actes 27.9. 3. Likewiſe, Act.27.9. where S. Luke ſaith, ſayling was now ieopardous, becauſe the faſt was paſſed: Bellarmine would haue this vnderſtood not of the faſt of the Iewes, but of the ſolemne faſt of the Chriſtians in the tenth moneth: Bellarm.c.19.

4. Other faſts alſo he vrgeth, as the faſt of Aduent, the faſt in Rogation weeke, the Vigill faſts, or on Saints eeues, as very ancient, and commendable, and fit ſtill to be retained, cap.20.21.22.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ.1. For prayer and faſting to be vſed at ſuch times as Miniſters are ordained, we doubt not but it is an Apoſtolike tradition, becauſe we find it written in the Acts of the Apoſtles: but it was faſting from all meate and drinke, which the Apoſtles vſed, not abſtinence from fleſh onelie, as vpon your Ember daies. Neither doe you obſerue thoſe daies of faſt for any ſuch purpoſe: for your Ember daies are kept amongſt you, though there bee no orders giuen in the whole dioces.

2. It is not fit that Chriſtians ſhould imitate the ſuperſtitious faſts of the Iewes: ſuch as theſe were not commanded of God, but inuented and taken vp by themſelues: as the Prophet Zacharie repro- Zachar.7.5. ueth them, Zach.7.5. When ye faſted and mourned in the fifth and ſeuenth moneth; did ye faſt vnto me?

2. Againe, thoſe faſts were taken vp among the Iewes vpon ſpeciall occaſions: the faſt of the fourth moneth, becauſe then the Citie was broken vp: of the fifth, when the Temple was deſtroyed: of the ſeuenth, when Gedaliah was ſlaine: of the tenth, when the Citie began to be beſieged. But ſeeing that the Chriſtians haue no ſuch occaſions, as theſe were to the Iewes, they haue no reaſon to keepe the like faſts. 3. Origen to this point ſaith well: Paulus dicit, &c. Paul ſaith, If thou wilt obſerue any one of the obſeruations of the law, thou art ſubiect to the whole law: Qui ergo obſeruat ieiunia, aſcendat ter in anno ad Ieruſalem: He therefore that wil obſerue their faſts, let him goe vp thrice a yeere to Ieruſalem: Hom.9. in Leuitic.

7. Ierem.52.6.7. Ierem.52.12. Ierem.41.1. Ierem.52.4.

3. S. Luke deſcribeth the ſolemne faſts of the Iewes, which was about October, when as ſayling began to be ieopardous; as both Chryſoſtome and Oecumenius doe interpret it: And whereas Bellarmine ſaith, that S. Luke wrote an hiſtorie for the Chriſtians, not for the Iewes: it is true, but yet hee diſtinguiſheth the times by the feaſts of the Iewes: as Act. 20. he nameth Pentecoſt: yea, hee refuſeth not by way of deſcription to vſe the Heathen names, as of Caſtor and Pollux, which was the badge of a ſhip. The ordinarie gloſſe referreth it to the faſt of the ſeuenth moneth, when Gedaliah was killed, or the faſt of the tenth moneth in Ianuarie, when the captiues in Babylon vnderſtood of the deſtruction of the Temple: but this latter cannot be, for ſayling beginneth to be ieopardous long before Ianuarie. Lyranus vnderſtandeth it of their faſting in the ſhip, which made them vnfit to labour in the ſhip: but the words following, becauſe the faſt had now paſſed, will not beare this ſenſe, which ſeeme to note rather the time of the yeere, wherein that ſolemne faſt was, then their preſent diſtreſſe, for ſo the faſt was not paſſed: for they continued faſting ſtill: the better ſenſe is, that the Apoſtle meaneth the ſolemne faſt of the Iewes about the middle of September, which anſwereth to our October, preſcribed in Leuiticus, for then winter approached, and the ſeas began to bee dangerous: as Beza obſerueth well out of Vegetius: from the third day before the Ides of Nouember (which is the 11. day) vnto the ſixth of the Ides of March (which is the 10. day) maria clauduntur, the ſeas are ſhut vp: Lyranus reaſon is but weake, that moſt were Gentiles, which were in the ſhip, who obſerued not thoſe faſts: for S. Luke writing the ſtory, obſerueth not what they did in the ſhip, but what was the general faſhion of his nation.

Act.28.11. Acts 29.7. Leuit.23.13.

4. As touching theſe ſet times of faſt, there hath been great diuerſity and vncertainty in the Church, whereby it appeareth to be a meere humane conſtitution.

Concerning the foure ſolemne faſts of the yeere: 1. at the firſt there were but three: Calixtus made them foure, diſt.76.c.1.2. They were appointed to be celebrated; the firſt weeke of March, the ſecond of Iune, the third week of September, the fourth week of December: ex Synod. Moguntin. diſt.76.c.2. 3. After this another rule was made, Synod. Salegunſtad. that if the Calends of March fell out vpon Friday, Saturday, Sunday, the quarter faſt ſhould be kept the ſecond weeke of March: and ſo vpon the like occaſion, the third weeke of Iune, the fourth weeke of September, &c. 4. Vrbanus concil. Placentin. taketh a new order, that the firſt time ſhould be in the beginning of Lent, the ſecond in Pentecoſt weeke, diſt.76.c.4. 5. Eliberin.c.23. Ieiunia per ſingulos menſes placuit celebrari, exceptis diebus Iulij, Augusti, ob eorundem infirmitatem, &c. Faſts muſt be kept euery moneth, except Iuly, Auguſt, which are but faint moneths. 6. Concil. Gerundenſ.c.2. Sequenti die poſt Pentecoſten, & calendis Nouembris per triduum ieiunetur: Let them faſt the day after Pentecoſt, and in the Calends of Nouember for three daies ſpace. 7. Turonn.c.18. Poſt quinquageſimam Monachi tota hebdomada ieiunent, poſtea vſque ad calendas Auguſti ter in Septimana, &c. After Pentecoſt the Monkes muſt faſt a whole weeke; and then till the Calends of Auguſt thrice in a weeke; September whole; in Nouember thrice in a weeke; in December till the Natiuitie euery day. 8. Matiſconenſ.1.9. A feria S. Martini vſque ad natalem, ſecunda, quarta, & ſexta ieiunent: From S. Martins day (which is the 11. of Nouember) vntill the Natiuitie, let them faſt, Monday, Wedneſday, Friday.

If all theſe times be laid together, we ſhould do nothing elſe but faſt all the yeere long: Thus it falleth out, that when men leaue the ſimplicitie of truth, and certaine direction of the word to follow their owne inuentions, they erre infinitely, and wander they know not whither.

5. Preſcript and ſet times of ciuill abſtinence from ſome meats, for the benefit of the Commonwealth, as your Lent and Imber daies, are ſtill retained in England, and no otherwiſe, wee condemne not: But to appoint ordinarie times of neceſſarie and religious faſting, without ſpeciall cauſe, was of the ancient Church accounted hereſie in Montanus, Euſeb. lib.5. cap.18.

This alſo was the practiſe of the Church of God in the old Teſtament, vpon ſpeciall occaſion, not at ſet and ordinarie times, to inioyne publike faſting, as the Prophet ſaith, Blow the Trumpet in Sion, ſanctifie a faſt, call a ſolemne aſſemblie: which ſheweth that their publike faſts were not vſuall and ordinarie, but eſpecially ſanctified, and ſolemnely proclaimed.

Ioel.2.15.

6. As for the fixed and ſet faſting daies in the weeke, in Auguſtines time, onely the Churches of Rome kept the Saturdaies faſt, al the Eaſt Churches, and many of the Weſt obſerued it not. And whereas ſome alleaged, that Peter faſted vpon Saturday, being the next day, which was the Lords day, to encounter with Simon Magus, Auguſtine ſaith, it was opinio plurimorum, the opinion of many, quam tamen falſam eſſe perhibent pleriq; Romani: yet many of the Romans hold it but for a fable. And ſo he generally concludeth, concerning preſcript daies of faſting: Quibus diebus non oporteat ieiunare, & quibus oporteat, precepto Domini vel Apoſtolorũ non inuenio definitũ: Vpon what daies we ought to faſt, vpon what daies not, I find it not defined by any precept giuen by our Lord or any of the Apoſtles, Epiſt.86.

Concil. Colonienſ.part.9.cap.4. Eccleſia liberum facit quolibet tempore quibuſlibet veſci, modo id vel charitas, vel neceſſitas ſuadeat, adhibito tamen vtriuſque medici ſi praeſto ſint, aut ſaltem alterius, i. animae conſilio: The Church giueth libertie to eate all things at all times, where charitie, or neceſſitie requireth, with the counſell of both Phiſitions, or at the leaſt of the phiſition of the ſoule: Ergo, preſcript times of faſt by this Councell are not allowed, where all things at all times are lawfull to bee eaten.

7. And concerning the Saturdaies faſt, it is directly forbidden in the ſixth generall Trullane Councel can.55. Si quis inuentus fuerit in ſancto dominico vel ſabbato ieiunans, ſi Clericus deponatur: If any man faſt the Lords day, or the Sabbath day, if he be a Clergie man, let him be depoſed; if a lay man, let him be put from the Communion.

Likewiſe, can. Apoſtol.65. Ieiunans diem dominicum aut Sabbatum, vno tantum dempto, deponitor: He that faſteth the Lords day, or Saturday, one day onely excepted, let him be depoſed.

How dare then Innocentius contradict the Apoſtles Canons, thus decreeing, epiſt.1.c.4. Sextaferia & ſabbato perpetuo ieiunandum eſſe: Friday and Saturday muſt be kept continually faſt.

Honor.3. doth alſo contradict this decree: That if the day of the Natiuitie fall vpon Friday, it ſhould not be kept faſt: decr.Greg.lib.3.tit.46.c.3. how then doth Innocentius decree ſtand, perpetuo ieiunandum, that we muſt faſt Friday for euer?

Galath.4.10.

8. It is euident, that this preſcription of faſting daies is contrarie to the doctrine of the Apoſtle: Galath.4.10. Ye obſerue daies, moneths, times, yeeres: ſo they faſt certaine daies euery weeke: and certaine moneths euery quarter, and certaine times euery yeere, as in Lent: and they obſerue alſo for yeeres the yeere of Iubile.

1. Origen wel ſaith, Hom.9.in Leuitic. Si vis ieiunare ſecundum Chriſtum, omne tibi tempus aptum eſt totius anni: If thou wilt faſt according to Chriſt, all the time of the whole yeere is fit, &c. And Hom. 10.in Leuitic. Eſt certe libertas Chriſtiana per omne tempus ieiunandi non obſeruantia ſuperſtitione, ſed virtute continentiae: It is Chriſtian libertie to faſt at any time, not of a ſuperſtitious obſeruation, but of a vertuous continencie.

Libro aduerſ. Pſychicos.

2. Tertullian ſaith: The Law and the Prophets, were vnto Iohn. De caetero indifferenter ieiunandum ex arbitrio, non ex imperio nouae diſciplinae pro temporibus & cauſis vnius cuiuſq̨, &c. Afterward it was indifferent to faſt, as men would, not by any command of the new diſcipline, as euery ones time and occaſion ſerued, neither did the Apoſtles impoſe any yoke of certaine faſts to be kept of al in common, — cum fides libera in Chriſto ne Iudaicae quidem legi abſtinentiam quorundam ciborum debeat, ſemel in totum marcellum ab Apoſtolo admiſſa, &c. Seeing faith being free in Chriſt, doth not owe ſo much to the Iewiſh law, as to abſtaine from certaine meates, being admitted by the Apoſtle whollie into the ſhambles, &c.

Harm.ſect.16. pag.512.

3. Confeſſ. of Sweueland, cap.8. They alleage out of Chryſoſtome thus, Faſting is good, but let no man be compelled thereunto.

Catharinus ſect.de praecept ieiun.aduerſ. Caietan.

4. Caietanus, their learned Cardinall doth hold, In eccleſia primitiua libera fuiſſe ieiunia: that in the primitiue Church faſting was free, and not tied to preſcript times.

Hierome alſo: Vtinam omni tempore ieiunare poſſimus, &c. I would we might faſt at all times, as the Apoſtles did in Pentecoſt, and vpon the Lords day: diſt.76.c.11. This ſuperſtitious addicting of times and daies to faſt, miſliked theſe fathers.

The holy Martyrs haue witneſſed this truth: Thomas Loſeby, Henry Ramſey, Thomas Thirtell, and others, put to death, for ſaying, that the appointing of daies for faſting, and abſtaining from fleſh vpon faſting daies, and eſpecially in the time of Lent, is not allowable by Gods word, but is hypocriſie, and that men ought to haue libertie at all times to eate all kindes of meate: Fox pag.1975.

The Papiſts.

Fox.pag.867.

3. A Third abuſe in popiſh faſting, is the difference that they make betweene meates and drinkes: as the forbidding of fleſh-eating vpon faſting daies for more holines, and the eating of egges, butter, and cheeſe in Lent: as it was decreed at Lucerna in Heluetia, anno 1524. Abſtinence alſo from ſome meates vpon certaine daies for religion, is warranted by the Rhemiſts; as God prohibited Adam the eating of ſome fruits in Paradiſe for obedience, and in the law for ſignification, Annot.1.Tim.4.ſect.6.

Bellarmine being here charged, that the Papiſts differ very little from the old Heretikes the Tatianes and Manichees, which condemned the eating of fleſh as vncleane in it ſelfe; would thus excuſe the matter.

Firſt, they condemne not fleſh abſolutely, becauſe out of Lent they allow it. Secondly, and in Lent to thoſe that are ſicke. Thirdly, and though ſome Monks, as of Bennets order and the Carthuſians do altogether abſtaine from fleſh, no man is compelled to be of that order; neither doe they iudge or condemne others that eate fleſh, Bellar.cap.4.

Anſw. Firſt, that which the Manichees counted alwaies vncleane, the Papiſts in times prohibited hold to be vncleane: what elſe moued B. Stokeſlie to cauſe poore Frebarnes pigge to be buried in Finſburie field, for the which his wife longed? See afterward Err.99. they are therefore halfe Manichees. Secondly, neither did the Manichees compel any to bee of their ſect, and as Auguſtine ſaith, Auditores ſuos permittunt carnibus veſci: They allowed their diſciples to eate fleſh: cont. Adimant. cap.15.

cap.15. as the Carthuſian Monkes allow others. Thirdly, this ſheweth they count fleſh vncleane, becauſe they vſe other delicate meates with wine and ſpices, which doe more prouoke luſt, then fleſh doth: as Auguſtine writeth of ſome: Ipſa vaſa, in quibus cocta carnes, &c. They feare as vncleane the Serm.57. veſſels wherein fleſh is ſod, but they feare not the immoderate filling of their bellie.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. FIrſt, now Antichriſt ſheweth himſelfe in his colours, making it as lawfull for him, to forbid the vſe of ſome meates for religion, now vnder the Goſpel, when God hath made them all lawfull and free, as God himſelfe might forbid the vſe of ſome, for obedience in Paradiſe, or ſignification in the Law. Secondly, S. Paul calleth it the doctrine of diuels, to command to abſtaine from meates, 1. Timothie 4.3. Againe, Let no man condemne you in meate and drinke, Coloſſ.2.16. The 1.Tim.4.3. Rhemiſts anſwere, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh in the firſt place againſt thoſe heretikes, that condem- Coloſſ.2.16. ned meates as euill by creation, ſuch were the Manichees: and in the ſecond, againſt the Iudaicall obſeruation of meates. But they onely prohibit the vſe of ſome meates for the chaſtiſing of the bodie.

Anſw. Firſt, not onely the Manichees and other heretikes preferred ſome meates before other, as more holy, but euen the Papiſts alſo in the preſcript times of their faſts do command to abſtaine from meates for pietie and religion: and therefore they are counted moſt holie amongſt them that neuer eate fleſh. And Durand teſtifieth, that fiſh in interdict daies, is rather vſed then fleſh, becauſe fleſh and Durand.lib.6. not fiſh was accurſed in the daies of Noah. Yea they command abſtinence from meates vnder paine de ieiuniis. of damnation: what is this elſe, but with the old heretikes to condemne the creatures of God themſelues? Secondly, the popiſh prohibition of meates, is no leſſe ſuperſtitious, then was the Iewes: For they prohibited ſuch meates alſo, as by the law were counted vncleane, as to eate beaſts that died alone, or were torne with beaſts, or ſtrangled, or touched any vncleane beaſt, as likewiſe they inioyned penance to them, that did eate or drinke, where a dogge or cat had lapped, or a mouſe had been drowned, and ſuch like, Fulk. annot. 1. Timoth. 4. ſect. 6.

Thus Pope Zacharie giuing inſtructions to Boniface, forbiddeth him to eate, Ciconias, & Lepores, Storkes, and Hares or Conies: and as touching Lardum, Larde or Porke, hee giueth counſell, that it ſhould not be eaten, priuſquam ſuper fumo ſiccetur, aut igne coquatur, before it be dried in the ſmoke, or boyled with fire.

So Synod. Trullan. can. 67. Damnamus eos, qui cuiuſcunque animalis ſanguinem aliqua arte condiunt, & ſic comedunt: We condemne thoſe, that doe dreſſe the blood of any beaſt by arte, and ſo eate it. A graue decree for a Councell to forbid the eating of puddings. Vormatienſ. can. 65. Si porci cadauer manducauerint, carnes eorum comedere non licet, vſque dum macerantur per annum: If ſwine chance to eate a carion, their fleſh muſt not be eaten, till they haue been dried a yeere.

I pray you how farre are they now from the ſuperſtition of the Iewes? Nay they goe beyond them: for the legall difference of meates for ſignification, was inſtituted of God for thoſe times: but this ſuperſtitious diſtinction of meates vnder the Goſpell, which giueth vs the free vſe of all the creatures of God, which are ſanctified by the word and prayer, 1. Tim. 4.5. is brought in by Antichriſt, who is an 1.Tim.4.5. enemie vnto God.

3. Neither doe they abſtaine from fleſh and other meates for chaſtiſing of the fleſh: for they per- De moribus mit the vſe of all other meates vpon their faſting daies, that may prouoke luſt, fleſh onely excepted, as Manich.lib.2. the eating of ſpices, and other daintie and delicate confections, the drinking of wine, and all kind of cap.13. fiſh. Euen like as Auguſtine reporteth of the Manichees, that would drinke no wine, nor eate fleſh: but in ſtead of wine, they had Pomorum nonnullorum expreſſos ſuccus vini ſpeciem ſatis imitantes, atque id etiam ſuauitate vincentes: The ſweete liquor of pleaſant fruites like to wine in colour, but excelling it in ſweetneſſe: and for fleſh, they had their ſtrange and exquiſite fruits, with great varietie of diſhes, ſeaſoned and ſtrawed with pepper. This was the Manichees faſt: and this is the popiſh cuſtome in their faſtings at this day.

Hereof Hierome thus complained: ad Neopotian. Audio quoſdam aquam non bibere, nec veſci pane, ſed ſorbitiunculas delicatas non calice ſorbere, ſed concha: I heare how ſome will drinke no water, nor eate bread, but yet drinke not out of a cup, but in a ſhell more delicate ſuppings.

Decret. 30. c. 13. Siquis carnem manducantem ex fide cum religione: If any man condemne one eating of fleſh in faith, with religion, let him be accurſed, &c. But the Papiſts condemne one eating fleſh in Lent; Ergo.

Decret. diſtinct. 41. c. 1. Fieri poteſt, vt ſine aliquo vitio cupiditatis ſapiens precioſiſſimo cibo vtatur, &c. It may ſo fall out, that a wiſe or godly man may vſe a moſt precious meate, without any vicious luſt, and affect ſinne in eating courſe herbes, &c. Sanius quiſque maluerit piſce veſci more domini, quam lenticula, &c. A man were better to eate fiſh as Chriſt did, then Lentiles with Eſau, &c.

Cabilonenſ. ſub Carolo, can. 35. Ille magis parſimonia ſeruire cenſendus eſt, qui ſibi non ſolum quarundam rerum perceptiones, ſed delectationes corporis penitus interdicit: He is thought to bee more giuen to parſimonie, which doth not only refraine from receiuing ſome things, but euen from the pleaſures of the bodie. Concil. Colonienſ. part. 9. cap. 5. Admonendus eſt populus, cùm ieiunandum erit non minùs prolixa & ſumptuoſa illa piſcium fercula, quàm carnium vitanda; bellaria item illa, magis, quàm carnes inflammantia: The people muſt bee admoniſhed, that when they faſt, they ought no leſſe to refraine from the long and ſumptuous ſeruices of fiſh, as from the fleſh diſhes, and from thoſe iunkets, that do inflame no leſſe then fleſh. But our aduerſaries are farre off from keeping theſe rules in their faſts.

George Marſh Martyr, thus witneſſeth: In this point doth our ſuperſtition exceede the ſuperſtition of the Iewes, when we abſtaine from one thing, and fill our bellies with another: Fox pag. 1570.

Lawrence Staple perſecuted becauſe he vſed to eate egges on Friday, and thought it was no great offence vnto God. pag. 1043.

Now if our aduerſaries forbeare ſome meates for chaſtiſement of the body, why might it not bee as lawfull to eate butter, and egges, in the time of Lent, as vpon other faſting daies: but that they make difference of the times, as one being holier then another, and ſo alſo a difference of meates, ſome being more agreeable to holy times, then other?

Wherefore to conclude this point: ciuill abſtinence from fleſh, as for policie ſake; and the better maintenance of the Common-wealth, that there ſhould be a vent for fiſh, as well as for fleſh, and that euery man might liue of his trade and calling: as alſo for the health of the body, to abſtaine from hurtfull meates: as likewiſe to keepe a temperate and ſober diet, and to take heede of ſurfetting and drunkenneſſe: theſe kindes of abſtinence, in making difference of meates, we miſlike not: but for pietie or religions ſake to diſtinguiſh them, it is too too great ſuperſtition.

Our arguments further out of Scripture againſt the difference of meates, are theſe.

Matth. 15.11. 1. Matth. 15.11. That which goeth into the mouth, defileth not the man.

1. Cor. 10.25. 2. 1. Corinth. 10.25. Whatſoeuer is ſold in the ſhambles, eate yee, asking no queſtion for conſcience ſake.

Coloſſ. 2.20. 3. Coloſſ. 2.20. If ye be dead with Chriſt from the ordinances of the world, why are ye burthened with traditions, touch not, taſte not, handle not?

1. Timoth. 4.3. 4. 1. Timoth. 4.3. Forbidding to marrie and commanding to abſtaine from meates, the Apoſtle calleth the doctrine of diuels: Ergo, a difference of meates for religion or conſcience ſake is ſuperſtitious.

1. Bellarm. Meates properly defile not the ſoule, but by reaſon of the concupiſcence ioyned with them; as in gluttonie, drunkenneſſe and diſobedience.

Contra. 1. In gluttonie, drunkennes, the concupiſcence commeth from within that defileth, namely the vnſatiable greedineſſe of the fleſh: otherwiſe it is not the quantitie or qualitie of the meate which entreth that defileth. 2. Likewiſe diſobedience proceedeth from the heart, compre-Matth. 15.19. hended vnder euill thoughts, Matth. 15.19. Out of the heart proceed euill thoughts: but diſobedience to ſuperſtitious and vnlawfull precepts is no ſinne; ſuch as are theſe in commanding abſtinence from meates for religion.

2. Yet S. Paul forbiddeth fleſh offered to idols to be eaten, if it offend the conſcience of our weake brother, much leſſe would he haue the Church faſt broken, to the great offence of others, Bellarm. c. 8.

Contra. 1. Not the breaking of ſuperſtitious lawes, but the obſeruing rather doth miniſter offence: ſtill he beggeth the thing in queſtion; that the ſuperſtitious inhibiting of eating of fleſh is a lawfull conſtitution of the Church. 2. If then fleſh may be ſafely eaten at all times, but where our brothers conſcience is offended, it is not ſimply vnlawfull: neither do we denie, but that in this Chriſtian li-
1. Cor. 10.29. bertie, reſpect is to be had to our brothers weakneſſe: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Why ſhould our libertie bee condemned of anothers conſcience? 3. Hereupon we inferre that there ought to be no other reſtraint of eating of fleſh for religion, but the conſcience of him that may be offended.

3. 4. In both theſe places the Apoſtle condemneth thoſe, which did forbid fleſh, as vncleane of it ſelfe, as though by the very handling thereof they were defiled, Bellarm. ibid. reſponſ. ad. 3.5.

Contra. 1. In the firſt place the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of ſuch, as with a ſhew of holineſſe refuſed to taſte meate: but there is no ſhew of holines, it is meere prophaneneſſe abſolutely to condemne meates,
1. Tim. 4.1. verſ. 3. and a plaine doctrine of diuels, therefore the Papiſts that place holineſſe in not touching or taſting of fleſh, and would not ſeeme ſimply to condemne them, are here ſignified. 2. In the ſecond place the Apoſtle ſpeaketh generally of all that forbid meates for any doctrine or religion: whenas they make it vnlawfull, to receiue them with thankeſgiuing, and refuſe them. 1. But thus do the Papiſts forbid meates for religion and doctrine, ſo that the creature of God is refuſed: Ergo, 2. The Apoſtle maketh but two impediments of not receiuing and eating meates: Want of faith and knowledge; Want of thankeſgiuing: but with them it is not lawfull for beleeuers, and ſuch as giue thankes, to receiue Gods creatures: therefore they are theſe forbiddders. 3. Againe the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the laſt times, and of ſuch as ſhould make a generall Apoſtaſie from the faith: this doth moſt fitly agree to the now preſent popiſh Church: the old heretikes the Tatianes and Manichees, were aboue a thouſand yeeres agoe, and neuer any heretikes ſwarued more vniuerſally in the whole body of religion from the faith, then they do.

1. Origen ſhall conclude, Abſtinere à cibis, quos Deus creauit ad percipiendum cum gratiarum actione, acceptum eſſe non poteſt Deo: To abſtaine from meats, which God hath created to bee receiued with thankeſgiuing, cannot be acceptable to God: homil. 9. in Leuitic.

Auguſtine: Non propter porcum, ſed propter pomum mortem primus homo inuenit; & Eſau primatus ſuos non propter gallinam ſed propter lenticulam perdidit: The firſt man found death, not for eating fleſh, but fruite: Eſau loſt his birthright, not for capons, but for lentiles: tract. 73. in Ioan. Ergo, there is no difference to be made of meates for religion.

Tertullian here is a plentifull witneſſe,that religion is not to be placed in abſtinence from meates; Qui per eſcas Dominum colit,prope eſt, vt Dominum habeat ventrem ſuum—cibus verus fides certa —Deus ſola gaudet fide noſtra, ſola innocentia—quæ habitant non in ventre,ſed in animo; He that worſhippeth the Lord by meates,is not farre from making his bellie his Lord: the true meate is a right faith,—God only is pleaſed with our faith,innocencie,— which dwell in the mind,not in the bodie.

Epiſtol.de cibis Iudaicis.

2. Ieremie the Patriarch alleageth to this purpoſe Baſil: Neq; illi, qui non comedunt,meliores ſunt comedentibus,ſi ipſum ſolum comedere ſpectes,neq; iterum illi qui comedunt,deteriores,&c. Neither they which eat not,are better then they which eate,if you only reſpect eating, neither are they which eate, worſe then thoſe that eate not.

3.Confeſſ. of Heluetia the latter,c.24. They doe not faſt at all—if they ſtuffe their bellies one day,and for a ſet or preſcribed time doe abſtaine from certaine meates, thinking that by the very worke wrought, they ſhall pleaſe God,&c. Baſil,artic.10.ſect.4. No man can forbid theſe things,which God hath permitted; therefore we thinke,that it is not by any meanes forbidden to receiue meates with thankeſgiuing, &c. Bohemia,c.18. What is to be thought of the choice of meates,euerie one may learne out of the doctrine of Chriſt,—That which goeth into the mouth,defileth not the man,&c.

4. Caſſander,one of their owne writers,ſpeaking againſt the ſtrict prohibition of eating of fleſh, ſaith: Tolerabilius exiſtimo,vt ſexcenti veſcantur carnibus citra neceſſitatem,quam vt vnus hac ſuperſtitione periclitetur de vita, I thinke it more tolerable that ſixe hundred eate fleſh,where no neceſſitie is,then that one by this ſuperſtition ſhould be in danger of his life.

De officio vir. perfect.p.159.

Lindanus,another of their writers thus complaineth of their faſtes: Ieiunia noſtra,quæ in vini copia natant,&c. Our faſts,which doe ſwim in plentie of wine, and varietie of fiſh, were vnknowne vnto the ancients,and ſeeme intolerable, &c. It is a groſſe ſuperſtition to abſtaine from fleſh meates, and to vſe wine,and other delicates,which doe more inflame.

Panopl.lib.3. cap.11.

The Papiſts.

FOurthly, their religious kind of faſting they hold not to be a generall abſtinence from all meates and drinkes, but onely from ſome certaine kindes, as from fleſh, and wine, as Timothie refrained from drinking of wine, and in ſtead thereof vſed water, 1.Timoth.5.23.Rhemiſt.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. FIrſt, for chaſtiſing of the body, it is lawfull to abſtaine either wholy for a time, or in reſpect of the quantitie or qualitie of the meates, which may more prouoke carnall luſtes, not in the prohibition of the whole kind, as the Papiſts do of all fleſh, be it neuer ſo groſſe or ſmall in quantitie. Likewiſe it is lawfull for chaſtiſing of a mans body to abſtaine from any kinde, as of wine, fruites, ſpices, fleſh, ſo that the vſe of them be not forbidden, as though in the very abſtinence there were religion. Daniel abſtained from pleaſant and laſciuious meate to be the better prepared for that heauenly viſion; Timothie refrained the drinking of wine, to keepe his body in ſubiection: but neither of them placed any religion herein;for he afterward by the aduiſe of the Apoſtle did drinke wine: and ſo Auguſtine in the like caſe ſaith, Quanto honeſtius eſt, vt qui &c. How much more honeſt a thing is it, that he which for the infirmitie of his ſtomacke cannot drinke water, ſhould vſe wine moderately? *Serm.*157.

Secondly, but the true and properly religious faſt of Chriſtians, is a generall abſtinence from all meates and drinkes, during the time of ſuch faſting: Eſther.4.16. Nehem.9.4. Where the manner of their faſt is deſcribed: how the law was read vnto them foure times in the day, and as oft did they worſhip the Lord and confeſſe their ſinnes. It was the cuſtome of the Church alſo in Auguſtines time, in the dayes of faſt, not to abſtaine onely from fleſh, or ſome certaine kinde of meate, as the Papiſts vſe, but altogether to continue faſting till the eeuen. Rogo vos (fratres) (ſaith he) vt in iſto ſacratiſſimo tempore,exceptis diebus dominicis,nullus prandere præſumat: I pray you,brethren,that in this holy time, none of you preſume to dine at all, except it be vpon the Lords dayes, de tempor.ſerm.66.

Eſther 4.16. Nehem.9.4.

So likewiſe was it concluded, Concil. Aurelianenſ.4.can.2. quadrageſima ab omnibus æqualiter teneatur: ſed neque per ſabbata abſque infirmitate quiſpiam ſoluat quadrageſimale ieiunium, niſi tantum die dominico prandeat: Let the Lent or 40. dayes faſt be kept indifferently of all, and let no man, no not vpon the ſaturdayes (vnleſſe for infirmities ſake) breake his lenton faſt,vnleſſe hee take his dinner vpon the Lords dayes onely. Their faſt then vpon other dayes, was continued from morning till night, without taking their dinner: Ergo, they that will keepe a true religious faſt, if they are able, ought for the time wholy to abſtaine.

Bellarmine here ſeemeth to conſent with vs, propounding this propoſition to proue, vnicam in ieiunio refectionem,&c. That there ſhould be but one refreſhing in a faſt, and that to be ſupper, cap.2. this he taketh vpon him to confirme by Scripture, as Iudg.20.26. They faſted all that day till the Euening: 2.Sam.3.31. Dauid would eate no bread till the Sunne went downe: he alleageth alſo to the ſame purpoſe diuers teſtimonies of the fathers: thus farre he agreeth with vs, but afterward hee turneth cat in pan (as we ſay) and alloweth the contrary practiſe in the popiſh Church, that vſe to take their dinner in their faſtes: But Auguſtine flatly reproueth this abuſe; Vidiſti alium indicto publico ieiunio velle prandere, cum dilectione admone: Thou ſeeſt another, that a publike faſt being inioyned, will take his dinner; admoniſh him in loue, de tempor.ſerm.201.

And yet further: 1. it appeareth to haue been a generall cuſtome in the Greeke Church, in their ſolemne faſts to abſtaine from all kind of meate vntill the ninth houre, which was about three in the afternoone, as Epiphanius teſtifieth.

2. Tertullian ſaith, Exceptio eduliorum quorundam, portionale ieiunium eſt: The excepting of certaine meates, is but a faſt in part, &c. and he ſaith, they doe dimidiam gulam Deo immolare, but offer vnto God halfe their throate or gut, &c. when as there is not a whole abſtinence but in part. The Papiſts.

Fifthly, they erre, in affirming faſting to be a meritorious worke, Rhemiſt. 1. Corinth. 15. verſ. 32. and immediatly and properly a part of Gods ſeruice, Bellarm. lib. 2. de bon. operib. c. 11. Bellarmine thus reaſoneth out of Scripture:

Luc. 2. 3. — 1. Luc. 2. 3. Anna ſerued the Lord with faſting and prayer night and day.

Rom. 12. 1. — 2. Rom. 12. 1. I beſeech you brethren, giue your body a liuing ſacrifice acceptable to God, &c. which is your reaſonable ſeruice of him. Faſting then, by the which the body is mortified, and made a ſacrifice, is a ſeruice acceptable to God.

1. Sam. 7. 6. 1. King. 21. 27. — 3. 1. Sam. 7. 6. The people faſted and prayed, and God was pleaſed: 1. Reg. 21. Ahab by his faſting did mittigate Gods wrath: the Niniuites by their faſting appeaſed Gods wrath: Ergo, faſting is ſatiſfactorie and meritorious, Bellarm. cap. 11.

1. Cor. 9. 27. 1. Cor. 7. 5. — Anſw. Firſt, we doubt not, but that faſting is a worke acceptable to God, being referred to the right end, as to chaſtiſe and humble the bodie, 1. Cor. 9. 27. and to make our prayers more feruent, 1. Cor. 7. 5. But otherwiſe there is no holines or vertue in faſting of it ſelfe; neither is it by the worke wrought of any merite or worthineſſe: For our prayers, which are a more principall worke, then faſting is, yet of themſelues by any worthineſſe in them, are not regarded of God: for Salomon ſaith, When thou heareſt, haue mercy, 1. King. 8. 30. It is of the Lords mercy, that our prayers are heard, not of any worthineſſe in them. — 1. King. 8. 30.

Now for our further anſwere in particular: 1. Anna her ſeruing of God, conſiſted chiefly in her prayer, vpon the which her faſting waited as an handmaid, to make it more feruent.

2. We denie not, but that faſting is a very good meane to helpe to mortifie the fleſh, and to make it ſeruiceable to God, and ſo an exerciſe by faith acceptable to God: but it followeth not, that immediatly and properly it is a part of Gods ſeruice, which conſiſteth in the inward worſhip: the Apoſtle ſaith, bodily exerciſe profiteth little, that is, of it ſelfe without faith and godlineſſe, it is not auayleable. — 1. Timoth. 4. 8.

3. Firſt, beſide the faſting of the people, they ſhedde teares in ſuch abundance, that they are ſaid to haue drawen water: they alſo confeſſed their ſinnes: their prayers and teares made their faſting acceptable; but they were ſo farre from ſatiſfying God, that for all this they were afraid, and deſired Saul to crie vnto God for them.

1. King. 21. 25. — As concerning Ahab, how could he ſatiſfie or merite, being a man ſold to worke wickedneſſe, 1. King. 21. 25. and ſo without faith? his temporall repentance was rewarded with a temporall reward: this was of Gods mercie, not of his merite.

Ionas 3. 10. — It was not the act of faſting in the Niniuites, but their true repentance ioyned with it, that pleaſed God, Ionas 3. 10. God ſaw their workes, that they turned from their euill wayes, &c. Neither did their repentance ſatiſfie: for they were fearefull and doubtfull, verſ. 9. Who can tell if God will turne? it was therefore Gods acceptance, they haue no confidence in their repentance.

The Proteſtants.

Our contrary arguments, that faſting is not a worke meritorious or ſatiſfactorie, nor properly the ſeruice of God, out of the Scripture are theſe.

Iſay 58. 5. — Arg. 1. Iſay 58. 5. Is this ſuch a faſt, that I haue choſen, that a man ſhould afflict his ſoule for a day? &c.

Ioel 2. 13. — 2. Ioel 2. 13. Rent your hearts, and not your cloathes: it is not then the affliction of the fleſh, but the contrition of the heart that God requireth.

1. Tim. 4. 7. 8. — 3. 1. Tim. 4. 7. 8. Exerciſe thy ſelfe to godlines, for bodilie exerciſe profiteth little, godlines is profitable to all things.

Luk. 18. 12. — 4. Luk. 18. 12. The Phariſee alleaging his faſting is not iuſtified.

Coloſſ. 2. 23. — 5. Coloſſ. 2. 23. Saint Paul calleth the religion, which is in not ſparing the bodie, ἐθελοθρησκείαν, a voluntary worſhip, deuiſed of man.

1. Bellarmin. The Lord doth not ſimplie reiect faſting, but onely ſuch a faſt, as is not ioyned with pietie and iuſtice: c. 12. reſp. ad. 1.

Contra. You haue anſwered well: for if faſting without godlines and iuſtice profite not, then is it not in it ſelfe meritorious, neither hath any force, but by the faith and true contrition of the heart:

iuſtice it ſelfe, and true contrition, which giue ſtrength to faſting, are not meritorious, much leſſe is faſting it ſelfe.

2. The renting of the garments is not ſimplie forbidden, but when it is not accompanied with the contrition of the heart, Bellarm.ibid.

*Contra.*1. Neither do we ſay that faſting is forbidden ſimplie, but that in it ſelfe it is the leſſe principall, and without the deuotion of the heart not at all accepted, and therefore it hath no merite, hauing no life, nor force of it ſelfe. Contrition of the heart meriteth not: for Dauid ſacrificing a contrite heart vnto God, Pſal.51.17. yet prayeth for mercy, verſ.1. Ergo, much leſſe doth faſting merite, Pſal.51.17. which is quickened by the deuotion of the heart.

3. By bodily exerciſe either may be vnderſtoode faſting without almes or mercy, or the exerciſe of the body: ſuch as champions vſed in their fight: which was vnprofitable to attaine any thing in the next life, Bellarm.ibid.

*Contra.*1. By godlines cannot properly almes be vnderſtoode, or any other externall or bodilie action: for the Apoſtle oppoſeth godlines to bodily exerciſe: but that which is contrary or oppoſite to bodily, is ſpirituall. 2. Yet admitting this expoſition, faſting cannot be meritorious, ſeeing it hath no power without almes, which neither are themſelues meritorious: with ſuch ſacrifice indeede the Apoſtle ſaith, God is pleaſed, Hebr.13.16. but offered vnto God through Chriſt, verſ.15. Hebr.13.16. verſ.15. 3. What need had Saint Paul to giue Timothie warning to take heede of bodily exerciſe, being ſo weake, and full of infirmities, that he giueth him counſell afterward to drinke wine? 1.Tim.5.23. 1.Tim.5.23. by bodily exerciſe then, he vnderſtandeth all externall ſeruices, and outward ceremonies, not tending to edifying by faith, 1.Tim.1.4. 1.Tim.1.4. which alſo include ſuperſtitious phariſaicall faſting.

4. The Phariſee was not iuſtified becauſe he thought to be iuſtified by his faſting, but becauſe hee boaſted of his workes and deſpiſed others, Bellarm.ibid.

Contra. The Phariſee is not onely reiected for his diſdaine and contempt to the poore Publicane: but for his hypocriſie in ſetting forth his owne righteouſneſſe, which notwithſtanding hee thanketh God for after a ſort. Firſt, the occaſion of the Parable doth inſinuate ſo much, verſ.9. Luk.18.9. He ſpake this Parable vnto certaine that truſted in themſelues, that they were iuſt and deſpiſed others: they truſted to be iuſt toward God by their workes, and alſo deſpiſed their brethren: heere are two faultes, both which the Phariſee was infected with. Secondly, this appeareth by the contrary in the Publicane, who pleadeth for mercy, as the other ſtoode vpon merite. Thirdly, ſo Ambroſe expoundeth, Verecundia prætulit Publicanum, qui ne oculos audebat leuare ad cælum: Modeſtie preferred the Publicance, who durſt not lift vp his eyes to heauen: *Offic.*1.*c.*18. The Publicans humilitie was toward God, in not preſuming to lift vp his eyes to heauen; therefore the Phariſees pride was toward God in boaſting of his workes.

5. 1. Will worſhip is not oppoſed to that which is not written, but to that which is not grounded vpon reaſon: for though it be not commanded, if it be reaſonable, it is no Will worſhip. 2. The Apoſtle reproueth them for their immoderate faſting, not yeelding neceſſary things to the fleſh. 3. They did abſtaine of a ſuperſtitious opinion, in abhorring fleſh as euill and vncleane in it ſelfe, Bellarm.ibid.

*Contra.*1. The Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe, verſ.22. Which are after the doctrines, and commandements of men: ſo that it is a Will worſhip which is after mans, and not Gods commandement: therefore all worſhip not preſcribed in the word, is Will worſhip: and this Will worſhip had a ſhew of wiſdome, and ſo of reaſon, yet was a voluntary ſeruice.

Secondly, this is not the cheiſe thing that is reprehended, the not ſparing of the fleſh (for herein, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, conſiſted their ſhew of wiſdome) but for that they followed the doctrines of men, and neglected the commandement of God, concerning the internall worſhip: and the not ſparing of the fleſh, is expounded, the not ſatisfying of the fleſh, which of it ſelfe is not ſo euill a thing: beſide many of their Monkes and Heremites haue offended this way, in pinching and pining their bodies, by their immoderate faſting to death, ſee before pag.351.

Thirdly, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of thoſe, which of Iewiſh ſuperſtition, rather then heathen prophanenes abſtained from meate. Firſt, there had bin no ſhew of wiſdome, in condemning the creatures of God ſimplie. Secondly, he calleth them στοιχεῖα, the elements of the world, verſ.20. which the Apoſtle Galath.4.9. c.3.17. expoundeth to be the ceremonies of the Iewes, Galath.4.9.3.verſ.17. they were ſuch ceremonies, as were ſhadowes of Chriſt: but theſe were the Iewiſh, not heathen obſeruances. Colos.2.14.20. Thirdly, hee ſaith, verſe 20. δογματίζεσθε, ye are burdened with traditions: which traditions, δόγμασι he ſaith were faſtened to Chriſts Croſſe, verſ.14 which were the traditions of the lawe, not of the Gentiles.

1. Auguſtine ſaith very wel, Si volumus bene ieiunare à cibis, ante omnia ieiunemus & à vitijs.—Quid prodeſt, pallidum eſſe ieiunijs, ſi odio & inuidia liueſcas? What doth it helpe to faſt from meate, if we faſt not from ſin? What auaileth it to be pale and wan with faſting, if thou fretteſt with hatred and enuie? *de tempor.Serm.*64. Ergo, the externall or outward acte of faſting of it ſelfe is little or nothing worth.

2. Ieremie Patriarch of Conſtantinople, ſpeaking of faſting and other ſuch exerciſes, ſaith: Cenſur.orient. cap.21. Quod gratis per Chriſtum peccata, & non propter aliqua merita & iuſtitias noſtras, nobis remittantur, confiteri debemus, &c. We muſt confeſſe, that our ſinnes are freely remitted for Chriſts ſake, not for any our merits or righteouſnes, &c. And to this purpoſe he alleageth Baſil, citing that place of the Apoſtle, 1.Cor.8.8. eſca nos Deo non commendat, meat doth not commend vs vnto God.

3. Confeſſ. of Wirtemberg. c.17 Harm.ſect.16, pag.501. We thinke that faſting is profitable, not to this end, that either by the merit of it worke, it might purge ſins before God, or apply the merit of Chriſt to him, that doth faſt, but that by ſobriety it may bridle the fleſh, &c. Sweueland, artic. 10. We muſt faſt, that we may the better pray and keepe the fleſh within compaſſe of it duty, and not before God to merit any thing for the ſame. Pag. 514.

4. Synod. Moguntin. cap. 47. Non exiſtiment Chriſtiani ſola carnis abſtinentia ſe Deo gratos eſſe, cum meminerint primos homines, qui carnem nondum guſtauerant, ob vitæ nequitiam diluuio deletos: ſed cum abſtinentia carnis, cæterorum ciborum moderationem & perpetuam ſobrietatem coniungant: Let not Chriſtians thinke, that they are accepted of God, onely for their abſtinence from fleſh, when they may remember, that the men of the old world, that taſted no fleſh, were for the wickedneſſe of their life deſtroyed in the flood: but let them ioyne with their abſtinence from fleſh, the moderate vſe of other meates, and the perpetuall ſobrietie of their life.

This truth the Martyrs haue ſealed, that our faſting, nor yet any thing elſe that we do, meriteth at Gods hand. George Marſh Martyr, holdeth it to be Iewiſh to thinke, that we doe God great pleaſure when we faſt, pag. 1570. In this faith died Iohn Warne, that we obtaine nothing at Gods hands through our workes, pag. 1581. col. 1.

S. Hierome ſaith, Caue ne ſi ieiunare cæperis, te putes eſſe iam ſanctum: hæc enim virtus adiumentum eſt, non perfectio ſanitatis: prouidendum eſt ne cum licita contemnas, hoc tibi illicitorum ſecuritatem faciat: Take heede, when thou beginneſt to faſt, that you thinke not your ſelfe to be holy: this vertue is a helpe, it is not the perfection of health: take heede, leaſt in contemning things lawfull, you be ſecure in vſing vnlawfull: ad Celantiam: Ergo, faſting is not meritorious.

The Papiſts.

99. Error. SIxtly, and laſtly, they grieuouſly offend in their faſtings, in laying ſo ſtreight and hard a yoke vpon mens ſhoulders, as charging them vnder paine of damnation to keepe their faſting daies, making it deadly ſinne, yea, hereſie to tranſgreſſe them, as one Lawrence Staple was troubled and perſecuted, Anno 1531. becauſe in Lent hauing no fiſh, he did eate egges, butter and cheeſe: Nay they were ſo cruell, that hardly they ſuffered women in childebed to haue any fleſh in their houſes, as Anno 1532. Two yong girles were conſtrained to abiure, becauſe they were found vpon Saint Peters euen eating broath made of mutton, their mother lying in childebed. How was poore Frebarne toſſed to and fro, and brought into great danger, becauſe a Pigge was found in his houſe in Lent time, for the which his wife longed? Fox p. 1043.

Argum. That Eccleſiaſticall lawes enioyning faſts for religion doe ſimply binde in conſcience, Bellarmine would thus proue out of Scripture.

1. Ierem. 35. 14. The Rechabites are commended for keeping the inſtitution of Ionadab their father, not to drinke wine. Ierem. 35. 14.

2. Heſter. 9. 22. Mordecai inſtituteth a new faſt to be obſerued for euer. Heſter. 9. 22.

3. Zachar. 8. 19. There is mention made of foure faſts; of the fourth, fifth, ſeuenth, tenth moneths, which were not commanded of God. Zachar. 8. 19.

4. Act. 15. 29. Abſtinence from ſtrangled and from blood is enioyned by the Apoſtles to be obſerued of all the Church, Bellar. c. 7. Act. 15. 29.

1. Anſw. Firſt, the inſtitution of Ionadab was according to the law of the Nazarites, preſcribed Numb. 6. that were to drinke no wine nor ſtrong drinke by Gods precept, and therefore it did binde the Rechabites in conſcience: but now there is no ſuch lawe of abſtinence giuen by Chriſt vnder the Goſpell, and therefore the argument followeth not. Secondly, neither did the Rechabites hold themſelues ſo bound in conſcience, but that by neceſſitie they might bee diſpenſed with: for one of their fathers precepts was, to dwell in tents, verſ. 10. yet becauſe the hoaſt of the Aſſyrians was in the land, for that time, they came and dwelt in the citie. Ierem. 35. 10.

2. Firſt, we reade of a feaſt inſtituted yeerely to be celebrated by Mordecai, not of a faſt. Secondly, yet we doubt not but that the Magiſtrates may enioyne a publike religious faſt, as Heſter did, chap. 4. 16. which is not a prohibition from fleſh meate, but a generall reſtraint of all meate, not for ſet and ſtinted times, but vpon extraordinarie occaſion. This maketh nothing for their eccleſiaſticall iniunctions, for the perpetuall reſtraint of ſome kinde of meate onely. Heſter. 4. 16.

3. Firſt, thoſe faſts mentioned in Zacharie are reproued by the Prophet, Zach. 7. 5. Did ye faſt vnto me? Secondly, Zach. 8. 19. He ſaith onely that the faſts ſhall be turned to ioy and gladnes: which is no approbation of them, but onely a declaration and promiſe, that the like calamities ſhall not fall vpon them, as before, by occaſion whereof they tooke vp thoſe faſts: ſuch were the ſacking of the citie, and deſtruction of the temple. Thirdly, in their faſts they abſtained wholy from all meate, weeping and ſeparating themſelues, Zachar. 7. 3. and their eating and drinking is oppoſed to their faſting, verſ. 6. what is this to popiſh faſting, which is not a totall abſtinence, but from ſome kinde onely? Zachar. 7. 5. Zachar. 8. 19. Zachar. 7. 3.

4. Firſt, Eccleſiaſtical gouernors haue not like authority now to make lawes to bind the conſcience, as the Apoſtles had. Secondly, they did not inhibite things ſtrangled for any religion in the abſtainer, but for the cõſcience of others, namely the Iewes that might be offẽded: which we hold to be the only religious reſtraint of not eating. Thirdly, this conſtitution of the Apoſtles was but to endure for a time: how doth this then warrant a perpetuall yoke of abſtinence for religion to be laid vpon the Church?

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, no poſitiue law not grounded vpon Scripture, can ſo bind any man, that in the breaking thereof hee ſhall ſinne deadlie, and of this ſort is the faſt of Lent and other daies for religion, which were ordained without warrant of Scripture: *Lambert ad articul.*17.*pag.*110. Ciuill and politike lawes for the reſtraint of fleſh at certaine ſeaſons, made by the godly and wiſe Magiſtrate for the benefit of the Common-wealth, not for any religion, are in conſcience to be obeyed ſo farre forth, as we by the law of God are bound in conſcience to obey the Magiſtrate in all lawfull things: but ſimply they doe not binde the conſcience in reſpect of the thing commanded. Seeing the reſt of the Sabbath being commanded of God, might yet vpon neceſſarie cauſe bee broken, how much greater libertie ought the people to haue had in the obſeruation of theſe daies which were onely enioyned by men? yet was it counted an heynous ſinnne, to eate fleſh vpon a day interdict, and a ſmall offence or none to violate the reſt of the Sabbath?

Secondly, S.Paul could ſee no ſuch neceſſitie of faſting and abſtinence, when he willeth Timothie to drinke wine, and no longer water, for his infirmitie ſake, 1.Tim.5.23. But if there were religion in faſting and abſtinence, it ought not to be intermitted for bodily health. 1.Tim.5.23.

Further, the Apoſtle calleth theſe the precepts and commandements of men, Touch not, taſte not, handle not; which things periſh with the vſing, Coloſſ.2.21. they concerne not the conſcience: but Gods precepts in religious matters doe not periſh with the vſing: but in the keeping or breaking thereof, the conſcience is either accuſed, or excuſed. Coloſſ.2.21.

S.Iames alſo ſaith, Iam.4.12. There is but one lawgiuer, that is able to ſaue and to deſtroy: Ergo, men haue no power to make lawes to binde mens conſciences, either to ſaue them by keeping thereof, or deſtroy them by breaking. Iam.4.12.

*Canon. Apoſtol.*68. Si quis impediatur imbecillitate corporis, non tenetur ieiunare quadrageſimam: If any be hindred by the weakneſſe of their body, they are not bound to keepe the Lenton faſt. Colonienſ.part.9.cap.4. Eccleſia liberum facit quolibet tempore quibuſlibet veſci, modo id vel charitas, vel neceſſitas ſuadeat: The Church giueth libertie at all times, to eate all manner things, if charitie or neceſſitie require. *Synod. Moguntin.cap.*47. Tempora ieiunandi, prout ſalubritati corporum & animarum expedire videbatur, ab eccleſia ordinata: The times of faſt were ordained by the Church, as it was thought meete for the health of bodie and ſoule. Men therefore are not bound to faſt, if thereby their health bee empaired: for no man euer hated his owne fleſh, as S.Paul ſaith.

1. In Auguſtines time there was no ſuch ſtrict neceſſitie of faſting: Qui ieiunare non praeualet, in domo ſua praeparet, quod accipiat: He that is not able to faſt, let him prepare in his houſe for his owne eating. And againe, Si poſſibilitas non fuerit ieiunandi, ſufficiat eleemoſyna ſine ieiunio: If a man haue not poſſibilitie to faſt, in ſtead of faſting, it ſhall ſuffice to giue almes: *ſerm.de tempor.*62. What is become now of your Lent and Ember dayes, which you preſcribe as neceſſarie to be kept of all?

2. Chryſoſtome ſaith: If thou muſt not faſt, yet thou mayeſt abſtaine from ſinnes, and this is not the leaſt thing, nor much differing from faſting, but fit to ouerthrow, euen the furie of the diuell: cited in the confeſſion of Wirtemberg, artic.18. Hom. 11. in c.2.Geneſ. Harm.ſect.16. pag.502.

3. Confeſſ. of Wirtemberg.artic.18. Vſe of faſting in time paſt was free, and there is a worthie ſaying among the auncient fathers: the difference of faſting, doth not breake off the agreement of faith: Sweueland.c.8. we had rather leaue the place, time, and manner both of praying, as alſo of faſting to the arbitrement of the holy Ghoſt, then to preſcribe them by certaine lawes, eſpecially ſuch, as cannot be broken without ſome ſacrifice of amends, &c. Ibid. Harm.ſect.16. pag.5[illegible].

4. They themſelues giue great libertie in freeing diuers ſorts of people from faſting: as firſt infirmitie of bodie excuſeth, as in the ſicke, or of complexion and conſtitution of bodie, or of age, as in them which are vnder 21. yeeres of age, or of ſexe & condition, as in women great with childe, or that giue ſucke. 2. Pouertie freeth from faſting, as in beggers. 3. Corporall labour, as in husbandmen, occupied in plowing, ſowing. 4. Pious offices excuſe, as in Preachers, Pilgrimes, Husbands in rendring their mutuall debt to their wiues, &c. To this purpoſe Tolet their Cardinall: faſting then by their owne rules is not to be vrged with ſuch ſtrict neceſſitie, yea vnder paine of damnation. Inſtruct.ſacerdotal. de fine ieiun.

THE THIRD PART, OF Almes-deedes.

THe difference betweene our aduerſaries and vs, is chiefly in theſe two points: firſt, concerning the fruits and benefits, that come by giuing of almes. Secondly, of the manner.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF THE fruits of Almes-deedes.

The Papiſts.

FIrſt, Bellarmine ſaith that almes deedes are meritorious; they doe merit eternall life. 100.Error.

Argum. Matth.25. Receiue the kingdome prepared for you: for when I was hungrie you gaue me meate, &c. Bellarm.cap.4.lib.3.de bonis operib.in particular. Matth.25.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. FIrſt this place prooueth not that almes-deedes merite heauen: but it rather ſheweth, that Chriſt in mercie crowneth the charitable workes of his children: heauen is giuen though not for their good works, yet according to their good works: this kingdome was prepared for them before the beginning of the world, before they had yet done any almes deeds: therfore they could not merit that which was prepared for them, and giuen them, before they had done any good thing.

Rom.6.23. Luk.17. Argum. Rom.6.23. Life eternall is the gift of God through Chriſt: If it be a franke gift, then is it not merited. No man can merit by doing that which was his dutie to doe: Luk.17. Doth the maſter thanke his ſeruant, becauſe he did that, which was commanded vnto him, I trow not? If the maſter be not bound to thanke his ſeruant, becauſe he did no more than his dutie, much leſſe is the Lord bound to reward vs. But all our almes deedes, and whatſoeuer elſe, that we doe, are but of dutie. Ergo.

1. Auguſtine ſaith: Ne putetis fratres, quia facienda ſunt quotidie adulteria, & quotidianis eleemoſynis mundanda ſunt, ad illa ſcelera maiora non ſufficiunt eleemoſynæ vt illa mundent: Thinke not brethren, that ye may commit adulterie daily, and by daily almes be cleanſed, Almes are not ſufficient to purge thoſe great ſinnes, de 10. Chord. cap. 11. If almes are not auaileable to purge our ſinnes, much leſſe to purchaſe heauen for vs.

In Pſal.143. 2. Baſile ſaith: Non quod dignus ſum, ſed propter benignitatem tuam, &c. Not that I am worthie, but for thy mercie, &c. he did not thinke, that there was any merit in any worke of his.

Harm.ſect.15. pag.475. 3. Wirtemberg. artic.18. What neede was there, to the taking away of our ſinnes, of Chriſt his paſſion and death, if ſinnes might be taken away by the merit of almes.

In Iob.lib.9. c.14. 4. Gregorie, Biſhop of Rome ſaith: Ad vitam non ex meritis, ſed venia conualeſco: I grow vnto life, not by merites, but by pardon and mercie, &c. then one groweth not by the merit of his almes, or any other worke.

The Papiſts.

101. Error. ALmes deedes are a diſpoſition vnto the grace of iuſtification proceeding from Gods motion, and by his ſpeciall helpe.

Pro.15.28. Argum. 1. Prou.15.28. By mercie and faith ſinnes are purged.

Luk.11.41. 2. Luk.11.41. Giue almes, and all things are cleane vnto you.

Luk.19.8. 3. Luke.19.8. When Zacheus had ſaid, halfe of my goods I giue to the poore, Chriſt ſaith vnto him, This day is ſaluation come to thy houſe.

Act.10.4. 4. Act.10.4. The Angell ſaith to Cornelius, Thine almes and thy prayers are come vp into remembrance before God: ſend therefore to Ioppa, and call for one Simon. Cornelius by his almes obtaineth faith: Bellarm. lib.3. de bon. operib. cap.4.5.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, there is no ſuch text in the Hebrue, nor yet in the old Latine copie: as may appeare by the annotations in the margent of the vulgar Latine vpon this place: yet admit the reading: it is faith working by almes that purgeth ſinnes, and not almes it ſelfe.

Luk.11.39. 2. Our Sauiour is to be expounded by the verſe going before, Luk.11.39. Ye make cleane the outſide of the cup, &c. but the inward part is full of rauening, &c. Our Sauiour then teacheth them how to make the inſide of the platter cleane alſo from couetouſnes by the contrarie vertue of liberalitie: he ſpeaketh not of cleanſing the heart before God, but how to cleanſe their outward acts before men, and to make amends by their almes for their greedie rauening. In like ſort Daniel aduiſed the King to breake off his ſinne of mercileſſe crueltie by almes and charitie, Dan.4.24. So then couetouſneſſe is cleanſed or broken off by almes and mercie, as drunkenneſſe and ſurfetting by abſtinence. This expoſition Bellarmine himſelfe miſliketh not, *cap.3. obiect.*1. Againe, Origen expoundeth it thus: Like as Chriſt ſaith here, giue almes of that which is within, [illegible] ſo Mat.23.26. he ſaith, cleanſe firſt the inſide of the platter: that is (ſaith he) the heart: Qui facit eleemoſynam vt gloriam ab hominibus conſequatur, &c. He that giueth almes to get the glorie of men, doth cleanſe the outſide of the cup, &c. & quicquid boni fecerit homo non ex conſcientia munda, &c. And whatſoeuer a man doth not of a good conſcience before God, he cleanſeth the outſide of the cup, but inwardly he is full of euill, *Hom.*25. in Matth. So in this ſenſe our Sauiour ſheweth in what manner the Phariſees ſhould giue almes, with a cleere and ſincere conſcience, and ſo the heart being cleane, all their outward acts ſhould be cleane. This place then maketh nothing for iuſtification by almes before God.

Dan.4.24. Math.23.26.

3. Firſt, Chriſt ſignifieth, that ſaluation was come to the whole houſe and family of Zacheus, becauſe he himſelfe was alreadie the childe of Abraham. Secondly, before this Chriſt had looked vpon Zacheus as he looked vpon Peter, and called him firſt, and inſpired him with grace. So Hierome well interpreteth: Chriſtus Zachæum latentem in arbore, quaſi in peccatorum tenebris obumbratum ſollicitè vt ouem perditam requirit aſpectu, & venire cunctantem vocat: Chriſt doth carefully ſeeke Zacheus as a loſt ſheepe with his ſight, lying hid in the tree as in the darknes of ſinners, and ſore-ſlowing to come he calleth him: de duob. filijs. Zacheus almes then was a fruit of his calling alreadie begun, not a preparation to his calling.

Act.10.2. Iam.5.15. 4. Neither was Cornelius without faith; for hee feared God, and prayed continually, Act.10.2. But prayer is a fruit of faith; Iam.5.15. The prayer of faith: From this faith proceeded his almes, which faith was afterward encreaſed and confirmed by the preaching of Peter.

Heb.11.6. Heb.13.15. Tit.1.15. Argum. But that almes being without faith, are no diſpoſition or preparation to iuſtification is euident: firſt, Hebr.11.6. Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God. Secondly, Hebr.13.15. By Chriſt we muſt offer vp our ſacrifices, by the which God is pleaſed. Thirdly, Tit.1.15. Vnto the pure all things are pure:

Act.15.9. Rom.3.24. pure: And our hearts are purified by faith, Act.15.9. Wherefore almes are impure, if the heart bee not firſt purified and cleanſed by faith. Fourthly, Rom.3.24. We are iuſtified freely by grace: Gratis per gratiam: If gratis, freely, then our works as almes deedes are no preparation, motiue, or inſinuation thereunto, for then it ſhould not be freely.

2.Cor.3.5. And whereas Bellarmine ſpeaketh of almes hauing Gods ſpeciall helpe, this is no other but the helpe of grace and faith, that is, Gods ſpeciall aſſiſtance; as S. Paul ſaith, Our abilitie or ſufficiencie euen to thinke that is good, is of God; Ambroſe alſo ſaith: Plenè & veraciter confitenda eſt gratia dei, de cuius hoc primum munere eſt, vt auxilium ipſius ſentiatur: Fully and truly the grace of God muſt be confeſſed, of whoſe gift this is firſt, that his helpe is felt or perceiued: Ambroſ. epiſtol. 84.

*Concil. Arauſican.2.can.*25. Hoc ſalubriter profitemur & credimus, quod in omni opere bono non nos incipimus, &c. This we ſafely profeſſe and beleeue, that in euery good worke we doe not begin, and afterward are helped by Gods mercie: Sed ipſe nobis nullis praecedentibus meritis fidem & amorem ſuiprius inſpirat, vt quæ ſibi ſunt placita, implere poſſimus: But hee without any merits of ours before going inſpireth faith and loue, that we may fulfill thoſe things which pleaſe him, &c. Ergo, faith is firſt inſpired before we can doe any thing that pleaſeth God.

*Decr. part.1. qu.1.c.*26. Gregor. Vbi Chriſtus non eſt fundamentum, nullum eſt boni operis edificium: Where Chriſt is not the foundation, there can no good worke be in the habitation: Ergo, almes goe not before iuſtification, becauſe the building is not before the foundation.

See the further ratification hereof before Error.69.76.77. of this Controuerſie.

The Papiſts.

102. Error. Tobie.4.10. THirdly, almes deedes are a ſufficient ſatisfaction for our ſinnes before God.

Argum. Toby 4. Almes doe deliuer from death, *Bellarm. c.ap.*4.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. FIrſt, the authoritie of this booke, being not Canonicall, bindeth vs not. Secondly, almes deliuer from death, and ſuffer not to goe into darkneſſe: that is, thereby we find fauour among men, and are preſerued from danger: So Toby expoundeth himſelfe: Thou laieſt vp a good ſtare for thy ſelfe againſt the day of neceſſitie, verſ.9. that is other men, which were before by him relieued, ſhall now in the time of his neceſſitie ſuccour him: and not ſuffer him to periſh in penurie and darkneſſe. So alſo Eccle.29.12.13 Eccleſiaſticus, lay vp thy almes, They ſhall keepe thee from affliction, chap.29.12. They ſhall keepe a mans fauour, verſ.13. They ſhall fight for thee againſt thine enemie, better then the ſhield of a ſtrong man: This it is then to be deliuered from death, and darknes, namely from outward perill and danger among men: if theſe Apocryphall bookes doe yet aſcribe more vnto almes deeds, as making them auaileable to redeeme our ſinnes, which is contrarie to the Scripture, we doe refuſe them.

Argum. Pſalm.49.7. A man can by no meanes redeeme his brother, he cannot giue his ranſome to God, verſ.8. So precious is the redemption of their ſoules: All ſoules are of alike price, and are redeemed alike, a man cannot any way redeeme another mans ſoule, and ſo conſequently not his owne: almes deedes therefore haue no force to redeeme the ſoule: they are of too great a price.

1. Auguſtine thus writeth: Fateor, quia peccaui, &c. ſed pœnitentia mea non ſufficit ad ſatisfactionem; ſed certum eſt, quod miſericordia tua ſuperat omnem offenſionem: I confeſſe I haue ſinned, but my repentance ſufficeth not to make ſatisfaction, but thy mercy exceedeth all my offences, *lib. meditation. cap.*39. *tom.*9. If repentance worke no ſatisfaction, much leſſe almes deedes, which are farre inferiour vnto it.

2. De beat. Philogon. Chryſoſtome ſaith: I do teſtifie, that if any of vs being ſubiect to ſinne, departing from his former euil life, do promiſe from his heart, neuer to returne vnto them againe: Nihil aliud deus requirat ad ſatisfactionem: That God requireth nothing elſe for ſatisfaction, &c. almes deedes then, neither any other Cenſur. oriental.c.12. works are ſatisfactorie for ſinne: Ieremie Patriarke vſeth diuers ſimilitudes to this end: as if thou didſt owe vnto a man a thouſand pound, and he promiſeth to releaſe thee of this debt, ſo thou wilt giue him that which thou haſt, being but three farthings, or if one ſhould promiſe to ſell thee the whole world, ſo that thou wouldeſt forgoe but one of thy poſſeſſions, wouldeſt thou not willingly doe it? &c. ſo he compareth the giuing of almes to obtaine heauen: but as three farthings is no ſatisfaction for a debt of a thouſand pound, no more are our almes deeds, or other works for our ſinnes.

3. Harm.ſect.17. pag.476. Confeſſ. of Wirtemberg. c.18. We teach, that almes doth thus take away ſinne, not that of it ſelfe it is a worthie worke, whereby ſinne may either be purged, or the merit of Chriſt applied, but that it is a worke of charitie, whereby we doe teſtifie our faith, &c.

4. Moral. lib.9. c.1. Gregorie Biſhop of Rome confeſſeth, Omne virtutis noſtræ meritum vitium eſſe, That all the merit of our vertue, is but vice, &c. how then is it able to ſatisfie for ſinne?

This alſo is the confeſſion of the holy Martyrs, that there is no ſatisfaction for ſinne, in our owne workes. Iohn Warne Martyr, I doe beleeue, that my ſinnes are forgiuen onely through Ieſus Chriſt, of whom I profeſſe, that I haue my whole and full ſaluation, which commeth not through our workes, but freely by grace: ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, that through the blood of his croſſe, he hath reconciled all things in heauen and in earth, Coloſſ.1. Fox. p.1581.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE MANner in diſtributing of Almes.

2.Cor.9.7. THat almes ought to be giuen, firſt cheerefully, the Scripture teacheth vs, God loueth a cheerefull giuer, 2.Cor.9. Againe readily without any delay: Say not to thy neighbour goe and come to morrow, Prou.3.28. 1.Cor.8.3. 2.Cor.8.3. if it be in thy power to giue him now, Prou.3. Further, we muſt giue bountifully, when occaſion ſerueth, and other mens neceſſitie requireth, 1.Cor.8.3, to their power, and beyond their power they were willing, 2.Cor.8.3. Theſe and other ſuch conditions are to be obſerued in chriſtian almes, but we deny this that followeth.

The Papiſts.

103.Error. Math.6.2. ALmes muſt be done, intentione placendi Deo, with an intention to pleaſe God thereby.

Argum. Math.6.2. Our Sauiour Chriſt reproueth the Phariſes, becauſe they gaue almes to haue praiſe of men: but we muſt giue our almes in ſecret, that God may reward vs, verſ.5. As they ſeeke the praiſe of men, ſo we muſt ſeeke the praiſe of God: *Bellarm. cap.*13.

The Proteſtants.

Anſw. OVr Sauiour Chriſt biddeth vs not in this place in giuing our almes to propound, and ſet before vs the praiſe and reward of God: but onely to take heede of the praiſe of men, and to ſhun the ſame by giuing in ſecret: the praiſe or reward at Gods hand followeth vpon this ſimplicitie and ſinglenes of heart in giuing of almes: but we muſt doe well for conſcience ſake, not onely for hope of reward: although we graunt that our almes deedes are well pleaſing and acceptable vnto God through Chriſt: Hebr.13.16. With ſuch ſacrifice God is pleaſed: Yet wee ought to doe them of duetie, without any other reſpect.

Hebr.13.16.

Rom.13.5. Argum. If Magiſtrates muſt be obeyed for conſcience ſake, Rom.13.5. not for feare of puniſhment or hope of reward: if ſeruants muſt yeeld obedience to their maſters in ſinglenes of hart and with good will, Epheſ.6.6. much more for very conſcience ſake muſt we ſerue the Lord: if they muſt be obeyed for the Lords ſake, much more the Lord for his owne ſake. But now if in giuing almes we reſpect the reward at Gods hands, then doe we it not of conſcience, nor for the Lords ſake, but for the rewards ſake.

Epheſ.6.6.

Auguſtine ſaith: Da de quo dederat tibi Deus: ipſe te diuitem fecit, ergo illi redde, quod ſuum eſt: Giue of that, which God gaue to thee: he made thee rich; therefore render to him his owne: *Homil.*47. We are bound therefore of dutie to giue, which is ſufficient to moue vs, without reſpect to the reward.

Lib. de diligend.deo. Bernard alſo ſaith notably: Cauſa diligendi Deum Deus eſt, modus ſine modo diligere: non ſine præmio diligitur Deus, etſi abſque præmij intuitu diligendus: God himſelfe is the cauſe why we loue God: hee is not beloued without a reward, yet is he to be loued without reſpect had to the reward: See more before, Error 66, 67. of this controuerſie.

The Papiſts.

104.Error. LAſtly, the Rhemiſts charge vs very vntruely, to be enemies to good workes: and moſt ſlaunderouſly affirme of vs, that we condemne them as vncleane, ſinfull, hypocriticall; in c.2. to the Romans, *ſect.*3. and it is the generall accuſation of the Papiſts againſt vs, that we preaching only faith, haue deſtroyed good workes, and ſlaked mens charitie and deuotion thereunto.

The Proteſtants.

THis is an vncharitable ſclaunder, and a moſt falſe accuſation, that the doctrine of faith is a deſtruction of manners: or that we, preaching iuſtification onely by faith, do hinder good workes: for firſt, for the doctrine it ſelfe, though we affirme, that faith onely iuſtifieth; yet we alſo vrge good works as neceſſarie fruites, and liuely teſtimonies of our faith. Secondly, concerning our ſelues; we do continually call vpon the people to ſhew their faith, by their workes: we ſay with S. Paul, that they, which haue beleeued in God, might be carefull to ſhew forth good workes, Tit.3.8. and let ours alſo learne to ſhew forth good workes for neceſſarie vſes, that they be not vnfruitfull: verſe 14. Yet the ſame Apoſtle aſcribeth iuſtification to faith onely without workes, Rom.3.28. Wee alſo ſay with Hierome, Inter Chriſtianum & Gentilem non fides tantum debet ſed vita diſtinguere; & diuerſam religionem per diuerſa opera monſtrare: Betweene a Chriſtian and a Gentile, not faith onely, but our life muſt make a difference; and wee muſt ſhew a diuers religion, by diuers and differing workes, Hieron. ad Celantiam. Thirdly, that it may appeare to all the world, how ſhameleſſe theſe men are in forging vntrue reports of vs, I will by particular inſtance of ſome ſpeciall charitable workes, done vnder the Goſpell, and eſpecially within theſe fiftie yeeres ſince the beginning of the happie raigne of our late renowned Soueraigne, briefly ſhew, that the doctrine of faith hath not beene among vs vnfruitfull. But it ſhall not be done in this place, I will reſerue this Catalogue of theſe charitable workes for the end of this Treatiſe of the Controuerſies: both becauſe I will not interrupt this buſineſſe, and hinder the Readers courſe, and beſide, for that I had not receiued ſufficient information in the particulars of theſe Chriſtian workes of charitie, when the Printer was come vnto this place: I ſay therefore here with Tertullian: Si cui minus quid hic egiſſe videamur, ſperet reſeruatum ſuo tempori: If here I ſeeme to any man to haue performed too little, let him thinke it reſerued for a fitter time and place, &c. *lib.*1. cont. Marcion. Here an end alſo of this Centurie.

To God onely be praiſe through Chriſt Ieſus.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE THOMAS EARLE OF EXETER LORD BVRGHLEY, KNIGHT OF THE MOST noble order of the Garter, of his Maieſties moſt honorable priuie Counſell: And to the right Honourable Sir Iulius Cæſar, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and of his Maieſties moſt honourable priuie Counſell, Grace and peace.

Right Honourable, I am bold to ioyne your Honors together in the Dedication of this part of my booke, who are both ioyntly admitted to the Counſell of State, and in whom there is a ioynt and like affection, both in zeale to religion, and loue to learning: whom then God and the King haue as it were coupled together, the one by the ſame bond of pious deuotion, the other by the like honour of prudent conſultation, I thought it not fit in this worke to diſioyne and ſeuer: that here I may vſe Ambroſe words: Quemadmodum illic omnia fuere vobis communia, ita hic ius diuiduum neſciatis: as in all things you haue there a communion, ſo here you ſhould know no diuiſion.

In obit. Satyr.

Your late ſingular bountie (Noble Earle of Excester) to Clare Hall in Cambridge, doth ſhew your Chriſtian care for the encreaſe of learning, and propagation of religion: you haue no need of that caueate which one giueth to rich and noble men, Caue diues, ne in te erubeſcant tuorum maiorum merita: Take heed thou rich man, leſt thy anceſtors merits, bee not obſcured and abaſhed in thee: your Honour hath herein equalized, if not exceeded your worthy anceſtors: But I ſay rather with the ſame father thus writing of a noble Earle, that had built a Church: The Centurion excuſed himſelfe, that he was not worthie that the Lord ſhould enter vnder his roofe: Ecce dignus eſt comes noſter, ſub cuius tectum hodie ſaluator ingredietur: Behold our Earle is worthy vnder whoſe roofe our Sauiour will enter: ſo Chriſt will vouchſafe in his poore members releeued by your Honours gift, to enter vnder the roofe of that Colledge, which is by your prouident care ſo liberally maintained: and ſo I ſay againe with Ambroſe in the ſame place: Sapiens, qui ſicut comes imperatoris ita comes Chriſti eſſe deſyderat: He is truly wiſe, who as he is a Count of the Empire, ſo deſireth to be a Peere of Chriſts.

An annuitie of an 108. pounds giuen to maintaine ſchollarſhips and fellowſhips.

Ambroſ. in lib. 1. Luc.

And to your honour likewiſe (Right Honorable Sir Iulius Cæſar) giue me leaue thus much to ſay, that as your affection to religion, loue to learning, hatred of ſuperſtition, hath rightly honoured you, ſo you proceed euery way to adorne your eminent calling: you I know will approue of that ſaying, Prærogatiuam generis ſimilitudo morum magis ſibi vendicat, quàm ordo maiorum, The congruitie of maners not the petegree of aunceſtors hath the prerogatiue of noble birth: your ſingular deuotion to learning appeareth herein: that you would haue your ſonne the heire of your poſſeſſion, to take vpon him that excellent [a] profeſſion of the law, by the which your H. hath aſcended that ſcale of honor, to the which the Lord hath aduanced you: for it is indeed, a worthie calling, and by the Imperiall conſtitutions much extolled: The Emperour Leo maketh profeſſors of the lawes, not inferior to Captaines, which defend their countrey by their ſword: Non minus prouident humano generi quàm qui prælijs patriam ſaluat. The Emperour Anaſtaſius dignifieth aduocates after the depoſition of their office, with the title and honour of Earles, iubemus comitiis perfrui dignitate. Herein your Honours example, may abaſh and make aſhamed many in theſe daies both of the Eccleſiaſticall function and other, who diuert their ſons to other profeſſions,

then they themſelues were encreaſed by: The Lord hath exalted your Honour to this eminent place, to make triall of your faithfull ſeruice, and happie ſhall you be, if therein you approue your ſelfe to God and his Church, as we truſt: God hath made you of the number of thoſe, which are able to doe good, not which need good to be done unto: You remember the ſaying of our bleſſed Sauiour, Happie is the ſeruant whom his Maſter, when he commeth ſhall find ſo doing.

Now to both your Honors ioyntly giue me leaue, to ſay this one word: That you in your honorable places, labor to maintaine and patronize the truth, and ſinceritie of faith, impugned by Papiſts, contemned by Atheiſts, neglected of many worldlings both in Court and Countrey: of whom (I feare me) that complaint of the Apoſtle may bee taken vp: All ſeeke their owne, and not that which is Ieſus Chriſts. Tertullian ſaith well: Quis non libentiſſime tantum habeat pro vero erogare, quantum alij pro falſo? Who will not willingly beſtow ſo much for the truth, as others do for that is falſe? Popiſh religion hath found many Princes and great men in the world to countenance it, many martiall men to fight for it, many ſubtill wits to defend it: And ſhall the truth find fewer friends? God forbid: Wee muſt all then ſet our hands to the Lords worke: your Honors by your power and authoritie to maintaine it, we Diuines and Preachers by our pennes and tongues to publiſh it, all good Chriſtians are bound to loue and receiue it: Goe on then and proſper in your honorable courſe. Aduance religion, expel ſuperſtition, execute iuſtice, relieue the oppreſſed, heare the cryes of the poore: thinke it no loſſe but gaine, whatſoeuer coſt or labour is beſtowed vpon the truth, Lucrum eſt pietatis nomine facere ſumptum. Pardon, I beſeech you my boldnes, that thus write: I may here ſay againe with Tertullian, Non tantus ſum vt ego vos alloquar veruntamen gladiatores perfectiſſimos, non tantum magiſtri & præpoſiti, ſed etiam idiotæ, & ſuperuacui quique adhortantur de longinquo: I am no body to ſpeake to you, yet the moſt excellent champions are exhorted not onely by their skilfull maſters, but by the ſimple ſtanders by, and called vnto a farre off: I ende with that ſweete promiſe of our bleſſed Sauiour pronounced to all his faithfull ſeruants: Be faithfull vnto the death, and I will giue thee the crowne of life: Amen.

THE TWENTIETH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE.

WE haue now, through Gods gracious aſſiſtance, entreated of all thoſe queſtions, wherein we diſſent from our aduerſaries, both as touching all the offices of Chriſt, his Propheticall office, kingdome and Prieſthood: as likewiſe concerning the benefits purchaſed by the death of Chriſt, the benefits of our redemption, and ſaluation. Now, in the laſt place wee are to proſecute ſuch matters in queſtion betweene vs, as doe concerne the natures of Chriſt: and this treatiſe containeth three Controuerſies. Firſt, of the humane nature of Chriſt. Secondly, of his diuine nature. Thirdly, of them both conſidered together.

THE FIRST PART, OF THIS CONTROVERSIE, concerning the humane nature of Chriſt.

THis part is diuided into theſe queſtions. Firſt, of the vbiquitie of the humanitie of Chriſt. Secondly, whether he encreaſed in wiſedome. Thirdly, whether he ſuffered in ſoule. Fourthly, whether he deſcended into hell. Fifthly, concerning the place of hell.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF THE VBIQVITIE of the bodie of Chriſt, whether his humanitie be euery where.

The Papiſts.

THey doe ſeeme in words mightily to impugne this opinion of the Vbiquitaries, as they are called, which doe erroniouſly hold, that the humanitie of Chriſt is euery where, as his Deitie is, and that the proprieties of one nature are really imparted vnto the other: whereupon it followeth, that the humanitie of Chriſt is euery where, becauſe it is verily vnited, and made one perſon with the Godhead in Chriſt. This opinion the Papiſts would be thought to deteſt and abhorre: and Bellarmine beſtoweth great paines by ſundrie arguments to confute it: as by diuers places of Scripture, Matth. 28. He is riſen, he is not here: Ieſus ſaid, Lazarus is dead, and I am glad for your ſakes, that I was not there, Ioh. 11. 4. Ergo, Chriſt, as he is man, is not euery where. Againe, the opinion of the Vbiquitaries doth ouerthrow the article of Chriſts aſcenſion: for if Chriſts body be euery where, as they hold, he can neither aſcend nor deſcend: Bellarm. de Incarnat. verbi. lib. 3. cap. 11. 12. 1. Error. Matth. 28. 6. Iohn 11. 4.

The Proteſtants.

IT is true Catholike and ſound doctrine, that the humane and diuine nature are truly vnited in Chriſt, and doe make but one perſon, or hypoſtaſis, neither by confuſion of the natures, nor conuerſion of one into the other, but by vnitie of perſon: for as the bodie and ſoule make one man, ſo God and man is one Chriſt. And the better to vnderſtand this myſterie, we muſt ſet downe theſe three poſitions.

1. Though the two natures in Chriſt be ſo vnited, that they make but one perſon, yet neither the natures are confounded, nor yet the proprieties: but as Chriſt is both God and man, ſo there is in him a double power, will, and vnderſtanding, one humane and created; the other diuine and vncreated.

2. By reaſon of this vnion, all the excellent graces of the ſpirit in the higheſt degree, and aboue meaſure, are giuen and beſtowed vpon the humanitie of Chriſt, Ioh. 3. 34. but ſuch notwithſtanding, as deſtroy not his humane nature, but are qualities created, as his humanitie alſo was created.

3. There is alſo a mutuall communication of the proprieties of both natures each to other, though not really in reſpect of the natures: So we ſay in Concreto, in the concrete, that is, taking the whole perſon of Chriſt, that Chriſtus homo, that is, the man Chriſt is omnipotent, is euery where: and Chriſtus Deus, that is, Chriſt being God, dyed for vs, was buried, roſe againe: but in the abſtract it is great blaſphemie to ſay; that the Godhead of Chriſt dyed, was buried, or roſe againe, or that the humanitie of Chriſt is omnipotent, or in euery place.

The Vbiquitaries now hold, that there is a reall communication of the proprieties of both natures: and therefore doubt not to ſay, that the fleſh and bodie of Chriſt is euery where in all places at once.

The Papiſts in outward ſhew are enemies to that opinion: but in deede, and in truth, as it ſhall now appeare, they are not farre off from being in the ſame error.

Firſt, the ſame arguments which they vrge againſt the Vbiquitaries, doe returne vpon themſelues: for although they will not ſay, that Chriſts bodie is euery where, yet they hold that it may be in a thouſand places at once, yea and more too, if the Sacrament be at once in ſo many places celebrated: for Chriſts bodie they hold to be really and corporally in the Sacrament. But thoſe places alleaged, He is riſen, he is not here, and the reſt, doe proue that Chriſt can be but in one place at once. This their opinion alſo is againſt the article of Chriſts aſcenſion, and abiding in heauen till the day of iudgement: for if the ſame bodie wherein Chriſt ſitteth in heauen, be in the Sacrament; either when he is preſent in earth, he is abſent in heauen, contrarie to the ſcripture, Act. 3. 21. which ſaith, The heauens muſt containe him till that all things be reſtored; or elſe, if he be in both places at once, they muſt needes make his bodie infinite, and ſo deſtroy the nature of his humanitie, which can be but in one place. If they ſay it is another bodie and fleſh, which Chriſt by his diuine power maketh to be preſent in the Sacrament, that were much more abſurd: for then Chriſt ſhould haue many bodies, and other fleſh then that which was borne of the Virgin Mary. Wee ſee then they are not farre off from the opinion of the Vbiquitaries.

Secondly, the Rhemiſts doe approue that argument, whereby *Hierome*proueth that the Saints may Reuel. 14. 4. euery where be preſent at their bodies and monuments: They follow the Lambe, whither ſoeuer he goeth, Apocal. 14. 4. but the Lambe is in euery place: therefore they that be with the Lambe Chriſt, be preſent euery where. Whereupon it followeth, that the Lambe Chriſt in humanitie muſt be euery where: for how can he be preſent elſe in innumerable places at once, where any reliques or monuments of Saints are? Neither can they excuſe this vbiquitarie preſence of the humanitie of Chriſt and the ſoules of Saints, by their agilitie and celeritie: becauſe they can quickly paſſe from one place to another: for if they muſt be preſent at their monuments, whenſoeuer they are called vpon, they muſt of neceſſitie be often in many places at once: for in one and the ſame inſtant, men may reſort to their monuments which are in diuers places farre aſunder. Thus they are driuen not onely to graunt an vbiquitie or omnipreſence of the humanitie of Chriſt, but euen of Saints alſo: which thoſe whom they call Vbiquitaries would neuer graunt.

Thirdly, the bodie of Chriſt is viſible and palpable now in heauen, and hath a place according to the quantitie of his bodie: Bellarmine confeſſeth as much, cap. 12. But that bodie which is in the Sacrament hath none of theſe properties, it is neither ſeene, nor felt, neither hath a place according to the quantitie of a bodie, for they cloſe it vp in ſmall round cakes. Wherefore deſtroying theſe properties of the humanitie of Chriſt, they may as well, and doe in effect, take away the other, namely, the being of Chriſts bodie in one place: for it is as proper to the bodie of Chriſt to be ſeene and felt, as to be in one place at once.

Fourthly, Bellarmine graunteth, being vrged with that argument, that Chriſts ſoule was in Paradiſe after his paſſion, and therefore not in hell: he confeſſeth, that it was not impoſſible that Chriſts ſoule ſhould be in two places at once, lib. 4. de Chriſti anima, cap. 15. Yea he ſaith, that Chriſt may, if he will, turne all the world into bread, and the bread ſo made conuert into his fleſh; and ſo his bodie may be as well in euery place of the world, as now it is in the Euchariſt, lib. 3. de incarnat. cap. 11. What great oddes now, I pray you, is there betweene the opinion of the Vbiquitaries and of the Papiſts? but that they ſay, that the bodie of Chriſt is euery where ordinarily by the power of the Godhead: the other ſay, his fleſh is in many places at once by a myracle. The one ſaith, Chriſts bodie actually is in euery place: the other ſaith, it is actually in many places at once, and may be in all places, if Chriſt will: which is true in reſpect of his omnipotent will, if Chriſt would deſtroy his bodie: but wee are ſure Chriſts will cannot be contrarie to it ſelfe, to deſtroy his owne bodie. We confeſſe then with Hierome: Stultum eſt illius potentiam vnius corpuſculi paruitate finiri, quem non capit cœlum, & tamen qui vbique erat in filio hominis totus erat: in omnibus locis verſabatur, cum Thoma in India, &c. It is a fooliſh thing, that the power of Chriſt ſhould be determined in the ſmalnes of a little bodie, whom the heauen is not able to receiue: and yet he that was euery where, was all and whole in the ſonne of man: in all places he was conuerſant, with Thomas in India, Peter at Rome, with Andrew in Achaia, Paul in Illyricum, &c. tom. 4. Marcell. All this we acknowledge to be true of Chriſt as he is God, according to his owne promiſe made to his Diſciples, I am with you to the end of the world, Matth. 28. 20. But to imagine Chriſts bodie to be in all places, or many places at once, is to limit his power and preſence within the compaſſe of his bodie, which Hierome here ſaith is a fooliſh matter.

And further, that Chriſts bodie is neither in all places, nor in more places at once preſent at the ſame time: this further euidence we haue.

Lib. de expoſition. fid. 1. Of the Greeke Church Iuſtinus Martyr ſaith: Corpus manet verum corpus, &c. His bodie remaineth a true bodie, &c. but the propertie of a true bodie is to be in one place at one time; Nazianzene περιγραπτὸν σώματι ἀπερίγραπτον θεότητι, ad Cle-dou. ep. 1. ſaith, that Chriſt, is circumſcriptible in his bodie, but incircumſcriptible in his Deitie: if Chriſt be circumſcriptible in his bodie, then is it but in one place at once.

2. Of the Africane Church Tertullian ſaith, Salua eſt vtriuſq; proprietas ſubſtantia, the propertie of each ſubſtance is preſerued, &c. then this propertie of Chriſts bodie remaineth: to bee but in one place at once. Likewiſe Auguſtine, as hee is cited in the confeſſion of Bohemia: Our Lord is aboue vntill the end of the world, but the truth of the Lord is here alſo, for the bodie of our Lord, wherein hee roſe againe, muſt of neceſſitie be in one place, but his truth is diſperſed euery where,&c.

Harm ſect.6. pag.100. Ibid p.103.

4. Bellarmine confeſſeth, that both Thomas, and other Schoole men doe thinke, Non poſſe vnum corpus eſſe in duob. locis localiter: That one bodie cannot bee in two places at once locally,&c. The Maſter alſo of the Sentences ſaith well: Chriſtus vbique totus eſt, ſed non totum; totū ad naturam refertur, totus ad hypoſtaſin: Whole Chriſt is euery where, but not wholly: whole is referred to his perſon, wholly to his natures. lib.3.diſtinct.22.liter.c.

THE SECOND QVESTION, WHETHER OVR SAuiour Chriſt did verily encreaſe in knowledge and wiſedome, as he was man.

2.Error.

Chriſt, they ſay, in the very firſt creation of his ſoule, and from his conception, was endued with the fulneſſe of all wiſedome, grace, and knowledge; neither can he be ſaid properly to haue encreaſed in any of theſe gifts.

1. Chriſt was annoynted from his mothers wombe; and then the ſpirit of God was vpon him: for the Angels that appeared to the ſhepheards call him Chriſt, Luk.2.11. And S.Iohn ſaith, The word was made fleſh, full of grace and truth: Therefore euen then hee had receiued all abundance of grace and knowledge, Bellarm.de Chriſti anima.lib.4.2.

Luk.2.11. Iohn 1.11.

*Anſ.*1. We grant, that our Sauiour was the Ieſus and the Chriſt euen from his Natiuitie: not that then he actually ſtraightwaies entred into thoſe offices, or receiued plenarie power of all the graces of the ſpirit in his humanitie, but becauſe he was euen from his mothers wombe conſecrated and appointed thereunto: for it no more followeth, becauſe he is called Chriſt, that hee then had his actuall annointing fully, then that, becauſe hee was called Ieſus from his Natiuitie, hee had actually performed our redemption. The full annointing of the ſpirit was fulfilled in his Baptiſme, when the holy Ghoſt came downe in the likeneſſe of a Doue: and then beginning to preach, in his firſt Sermon at Nazareth, he ſhewed the accompliſhment of the prophecie of Eſay, The ſpirit of the Lord is vpon me,&c: Luk.4.18.

Luk.4.18.

2. Neither doe the words of Iohn import ſo much, as they gather. The word was made fleſh, and dwelt amongſt vs, full of grace and truth: which is not to bee vnderſtood onely of the very firſt aſſuming of the fleſh, but of the dwelling of the word in the fleſh amongſt vs, and ſo appeared to be full of grace and truth. As it followeth, Iohn 1.16. Of his fulneſſe haue we receiued grace for grace: this receiuing of the fulneſſe of Chriſt, was not performed in his infancie, but afterward by his holy doctrine and preaching, and the Apoſtle ſaith, That when he aſcended vp on high, he led captiuitie captiue, and gaue gifts vnto men: Epheſ.4.8. We denie not but that this fulneſſe of grace was in Chriſt in his firſt incarnation, yet after encreaſed and made more full in his humane nature.

Iohn 1.16. Epheſ.4.8.

3. But leaſt there might be here any miſtaking: wee muſt thus diſtinguiſh of the graces and gifts which were conferred vpon the humanitie of Chriſt, that they are of three ſorts, habituall and infuſed, actuall and manifeſted, experimentall, that is by experience had and obtained. We grant, that the habituall graces were infuſed in as great fulneſſe in the firſt inſtant of Chriſts bleſſed conception, as at any time afterward: like as the ſoule commeth into the bodie furniſhed with all the habituall faculties and powers thereof: and ſo Chriſt encreaſed not in theſe gifts: but in reſpect of the manifeſtation and declaration, theſe gifts and graces encreaſed, when as they were produced more and more into act, the organes of the bodie being fitted thereunto: and in reſpect of his experimentall knowledge alſo Chriſt verily encreaſed: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Though he were the Sonne, yet learned he obedience, through the things which he ſuffered.

Heb.5.8.

*Argum.*2 Chriſt was the Sonne of God in his very incarnation, and euen then was the humanitie perfectly vnited to the Godhead: therefore immediately vpon this vnion and coniunction of both natures in one perſon, muſt needes follow the fulneſſe of grace in the humane nature. Againe, Adam was created in perfect wiſedome, therefore much more the ſecond *Adam. Bellarmine. cap.*4.

*Anſwere.*1. If preſently vpon the vniting of the two natures together, it had beene neceſſarie that the humane nature of Chriſt ſhould haue receiued whatſoeuer by the preſence of the diuine nature was to bee conferred vpon it, then Chriſt ſtraight-waies muſt alſo both in bodie and ſoule haue beene glorified: for it cannot be denied, but that as the bodie of Chriſt after the reſurrection receiued more glorie then before; ſo alſo his ſoule being the other part of his humanitie, was more glorified.

rified. By this it is euident, that the humanity receiued not at once the fulneſſe of all grace and glory in the firſt vniting of the Godhead.

2 Adam was created perfect in body and ſoule: and if Chriſt therefore ought to haue his fulneſſe of the gifts of the ſoule in his natiuity as Adam had his in the creation, why ought hee not alſo to haue had a perfect body, as Adam was created withall? Wherfore as it was no diſhonour to Chriſt to grow vp in ſtature of body, ſo neither was it to encreaſe in the gifts of the minde.

Againe we confeſſe, that Chriſts ſoule in his perfect growth was farre more excellent then Adams in his perfection of creation. 3. in the firſt inſtant of his conception we doubt not alſo, but it exceeded in heauenly grace all the ſoules that euer came into the bodie by natiuitie; yea and Adams ſoule likewiſe, if it had been ſent into the like body. 4. and the like equiualent perfection being admitted in Chriſts ſoule, proportionable to the excellency thereof: yet as Adams ſoule ſhould haue encreaſed, if he had not fallen; ſo Chriſts ſoule being moſt perfect in that infantile eſtate might and did receiue a greater fulneſſe.

Argum. 3. Firſt, Chriſt created his owne ſoule. Secondly, he himſelfe by his deuine power infuſed knowledge and grace into it: therefore at the firſt he gaue vnto it the very fulneſſe and perfection of knowledge. Thirdly, Chriſt is the head of men and Angels, therefore he had a moſt wiſe ſoule, it is not fit that the head ſhould be leſſe wiſe then the members. Bellarm.c.4.

Anſw. 1. Wee denie not but that Chriſt, if it had pleaſed him, could haue created himſelfe a moſt perfect ſoule that ſhould not haue receiued afterward any acceſſion of knowledge: but it pleaſed him to be herein like vnto vs, that as hee grew vp in ſtature of body, ſo likewiſe to encreaſe in the inward graces. 2. As he created himſelfe a ſoule; ſo likewiſe hee made his owne body: as hee infuſed grace to his ſoule; ſo he did giue life to his fleſh: yet it followeth not, that Chriſt did or was to make at the firſt incarnation a perfect body to himſelfe. 3. We acknowledge notwithſtanding the ſoule of Chriſt in his growth and perfection to haue been moſt wiſe, and exceeding the wiſdome of the ſoules of any of his members: for God gaue not him the ſpirit by meaſure. Iohn 3.34. as others haue.

The Proteſtants.

THat Chriſt was euen from his birth and firſt conception perfect God, and perfect man; wee doe aſſuredly beleeue, and that in the very incarnation, the diuine and humane nature were vnited together. Alſo we grant, that the Lord Chriſt might haue created to himſelfe a ſoule full of all wiſedome and knowledge, as he might haue made himſelfe a perfect body: but ſeeing it pleaſed him to be borne of a woman, and firſt to dwell in the body of an infant, wee doubt not to ſay, as the Scripture teacheth vs, that he alſo encreaſed in wiſedome.

Heb.2.17.4. Argum. 1. He was in all things like to his brethren, onely ſinne excepted, Heb. 2.17.4.15. Ergo, he grew vp and encreaſed in knowledge, according to the manner of men, which may bee done without ſinne.

Bellarmine anſwereth, he was like vs in all things which concerned the perfection of nature, and the worke of redemption: for if he ſhould haue been like vs in all things; then could hee not haue beene borne of a virgin, nor free from the rebellion of the fleſh. Bellarm.c.5.

Contra. 1. He did not take vpon him the perfection only, but the imperfections alſo of our nature, ſuch as he might receiue without ſin, as in the body, hunger, thirſt, wearines; in the ſoule, ſorrow, feare, &c. 2. It was requiſite euen to the worke of our redemption, that he ſhould be like vs in euery reſpect Heb.2.17. both in ſoule and body without ſinne: That hee might bee mercifull, and a faithfull high Prieſt in things concerning God: Hebr. 2.17. 3. From this ſimilitude of Chriſt with vs, ſin is excepted, Heb.4.15. and ſo both the cauſe of ſinne which is originall corruption, and therefore Chriſt was to bee borne of a virgin, and the effects of ſinne, as is the rebellion of the fleſh; which could not any way bee faſtened vpon Chriſt being free from ſinne.

Argum. 2. The Scripture ſaith plainly, which cannot lie, that Ieſus grew vp and encreaſed in wiſLuk.2.52. dome and ſtature, Luk.2.52. And leaſt they ſhould anſwere, that this encreaſing was onely in the opinion of men, it followeth, And in fauour with God and men: he encreaſed in wiſdome, ſtature and fauour, not onely in ſhew before men, but in truth before God: and as verily and indeed hee grew vp in ſtature, ſo alſo in wiſedome.

Argum. 3. Chriſt teſtifieth of himſelfe, that neither the Angels nor the Sonne of man, as he is man, Mark.13.32. knoweth of the day or houre of his comming to judgement, but the father onely, Mark. 13.31. Ergo, Chriſt as he was man had not at once all fulnes of knowledge. Bellarmine thus expoundeth this place, Filius dicitur neſcire, quia non ſciebat ad dicendum alijs: The Sonne is ſaid not to know becauſe he knew it, not to reueale it to others, but to keepe it ſecret to himſelfe.

Anſw. Firſt, then by the ſame reaſon, the Angels doe know it alſo: but that they are charged not to declare it to men: for the text ſaith, that neither the Angels, nor the Sonne of man knoweth the time. Secondly, in this ſenſe alſo the Father might be ſaid not to know it: for neither hath hee reuealed it to any. Laſtly, although we do affirme according to the Scripture, that the child Ieſus did encreaſe in the gifts of the minde, as he did in the ſtature of his body; yet we doe put great difference betweene him and all other children that euer came into the world: for as his conception and birth were not after the common manner; (for hee was conceiued by the holy Ghoſt, and brought forth without trauell and labour: as Auguſtine ſaith, Nec concipiendo libidinem, nec pariendo perpeſſa eſt dolorem:

In conceiuing ſhe felt no carnall deſire, in bearing ſhe ſuffered no paine, De 5.Hæreſ.cap.5.) ſo likewiſe, the holy and bleſſed babe, in the conſtitution both of bodie and ſoule excelled the common condition of all other infants: for as he was void of originall ſinne, ſo he was without the effects and fruits thereof, which doe ſhew themſelues in children: for neither ſuffered he the like pangs and infirmities in bodie, being in his infancie, as other children doe, that are vexed and tormented in bodie: neither was he ſubiect to the vnreaſonable and brutiſh motions of the mind, which are in children. Therefore Auguſtine ſaith, Quam ignorationem nullo modo crediderim fuiſſe in infante illo,&c. Which ignorance of mind, I cannot thinke to haue been in that infant, in whom the word was made fleſh: lib.2. de peccator. merit.& remiſſion.c.29. And what ignorance and infirmitie hee meaneth, afterward he expreſſeth, Cum motibus irrationabilibus perturbantur, nulla ratione, nullo imperio — cohibentur: When their brutiſh and vnreaſonable motions come vpon them, they are ruled neither by reaſon, nor any other gouernment, ibid. Theſe infirmities both in body and ſoule we denie to haue been in Chriſt: and yet we doubt not to conclude, that, as Chriſt grew in ſtature of bodie; as Auguſtine ſaith, Mutationes ætatum perpeti voluit ab ipſa exorſus infantia: He paſſed through the ages of mans life, beginning with his infancie: ibid. So likewiſe, as the Scripture ſaith, he encreaſed in wiſedome, Luke 2.52.

S. Ambroſe: Senſu hominis profecit, ſicut ſcriptum eſt, & Ieſus proficiebat ætate & ſapientia, profectus ætatis, profectus ſapientiæ, ſed humanæ; ætas non diuinitatis, ſed corporis eſt: Ergo ſi proficiebat ætate hominis proficiebat ſapientia hominis ſapientia autem ſenſu proficit, quia à ſenſu ſapientia: ſenſus ergo proficiebat humanus, ſenſum ergo ſuſcepit humanum: He encreaſed in the ſenſe or vnderſtanding of man, as it is written, Ieſus encreaſed in age and wiſedome: the encreaſe of age, is the encreaſe of wiſedome, but humane; for age is not of the diuinitie, but of the bodie: therefore if hee encreaſed in the age of man, he encreaſed in the wiſedome of man: but wiſedome encreaſeth by ſenſe, for wiſedome is of the ſenſe: wherefore humane ſenſe encreaſed in him, and he tooke vpon him humane ſenſe: lib. de incarnat.c.7. Ambroſe thinketh, that Chriſt verily encreaſed in wiſedome, not in the opinion of men only, as the Maſter doth gloſſe vpon him: lib.3.diſt.13.liter E. His reaſons are theſe: firſt, hee exempteth nothing from encreaſing but his diuine nature, then all the reſt encreaſed. Secondly, as he increaſed in ſtature of bodie, ſo likewiſe in wiſedome. Thirdly, his wiſedome encreaſed as his ſenſe and experience encreaſed; which was verily and indeed, not in opinion onely.

Hierome: Virginitat.laus Dominus noſter, qui nobis viuendi exemplum reliquit, proficiebat non ætate tantum corporea, ſed ſapientia & gratia,&c. Our Lord, who left vs an example of liuing, did encreaſe not onely in his bodily age, but in wiſedome and grace, before God and men, &c. Here alſo are three reaſons: firſt, Chriſt encreaſed to giue vs an example: but we muſt not encreaſe onely in opinion. Secondly, he encreaſed not onely in bodie, but in ſoule: Ergo, he encreaſed in ſoule. Thirdly, before God and men: but there is no encreaſing before God in opinion onely.

Origen alſo vpon theſe words, Ieſus encreaſed in wiſedome and ſtature, Luk.2.52. Quis eſt hominum? &c. There is no man, but doth encreaſe in ſtature, this is no great matter to be written of Chriſt: therefore vnderſtand ætate animæ proficiebat, he encreaſed in the ſtature of his ſoule: whereupon the Apoſtle vnderſtanding this ſtature to be vnderſtood of the inward man, writeth: Vntill we all meet together to a perfect man, to the meaſure of the age of the fulneſſe of Chriſt, Epheſ 4.13. Hom.12.Leuit. He doubteth not to affirme, that we muſt encreaſe and grow in the inward man, as Chriſt did: Ergo, he did verily and in truth encreaſe.

Now to cõclude this point: there are diuers waies wherby Chriſt may be ſaid to encreaſe in knowledge and other giftes of the mind: 1. Per noui habitus acceſſionem, by the acceſſion of a new habite: as when one of ignorant, becommeth skilfull and attaineth vnto knowledge: ſo Chriſt increaſed not, being in his firſt conception both God and man, and his bleſſed ſoule illuminated in that inſtant by the vniting to the Godhead. 2. By a mentall ſeparation, as Damaſcene ſaith: ſo Chriſt aſſumed our humanity, which in it ſelfe conſidered, is ignorant, ſeruile, and ſo apt to encreaſe: but conſidered in Chriſt as vnited to the Godhead, his humanity is none of theſe. 3. In reſpect of the manifeſtation toward vs, and our opinion, Chriſts graces encreaſed: So Damaſcene, and before him Nazianzene. 4. The gifts of the mind may be ſaid to encreaſe, per productionem, & dilatationem, by the production and dilating thereof, as Tertullian ſaith, like as, cum maſſa auri in laminam laxatur, when a maſſe of gold is beaten into a thin plate, it is made greater, Per dilatationem, non per adiectionem, dum extenditur, non dum augetur, by the dilatation thereof, not by any adiection, while it is extended rather, then encreaſed: and ſo crementa animæ reputanda, non ſubſtantiua, ſed prouocatiua, the incrementes of the ſoule are not ſubſtantiall, but by way of prouocation and production: and in this ſenſe alſo Chriſt encreaſed in wiſedome. 5. As the maſter is ſaid in diſcipulo proficere, to encreaſe in his ſcholar, when he encreaſeth: ſo Chriſt may be ſaid to encreaſe, becauſe he maketh vs encreaſe. Clicton. annot. in Damaſc. lib. 3. cap. 22. but this is not ſo fit here. 6. And beſide theſe, there is another encreaſing in graces, and that is, per acquiſitionem, by an experimentall getting and acquiring of knowledge, which is two waies: either, per inuentionem, by ones owne inuention and obſeruation; or, per diſciplinam, by diſcipline and inſtruction of others: this encreaſe of experimentall knowledge was in Chriſt the firſt way, not the ſecond, for he came to be the teacher of others, and not to learne of any. And that Chriſt thus verilie encreaſed, this further euidence we haue.

3. The learned writers of the reformed Churches do herein concurre, that Chriſt verely encreaſed in wiſedome and knowledge: as *Luther in homil. 1. Dominic. poſt Epiphan. AN APPENDIX, OF THE MANNER of Chriſts birth.

3. Error.

THey ſay, Chriſt came out of his mothers wombe, the clauſure not ſtirred: as he paſſed thorow the doores when he came in to his diſciples, the doores being ſhut, Iohn 20. 19. and as he paſſed thorow the ſtone, ariſing out of the Sepulchre, Rhemiſt. annot. Iohn 10. ſect. 2. Bellarm. de Eccleſ. lib. 4. cap. 9 ſect. quartus error.

3. p. q. 35. act. 6.

Argum. Thus they would prooue their aſſertion: 1. Thomas thus reaſoneth; Becauſe Marie did bring forth without paine, therfore her wombe was not opened, Quia dolor parientis cauſatur ex apertione meatuum: The griefe of a woman in trauell is cauſed by opening of the wombe. 2. Becauſe Marie remained a virgine in that holy birth; and ſo they make it all one, virginitatem amittere, and vuluam ſeu matricem aperire, to looſe the virginitie, and to open the wombe. [a] Bellarm. [b] Maldonate Ieſuit. [c] Gregor. Valent. And before them, [d] Thomas.

Anſw. 1. It followeth not, that becauſe Marie brought forth without paine, that therefore her wombe was not opened in the birth: for Tertullian, who holdeth the latter, as ſhal be afterward ſhewed, affirmeth alſo the other, that ſhe brought foorth, Non ſubita dolorum concuſſione, not with the ſuddaine panges of griefe: and that puniſhment, to bring forth in ſorrow, was laid vpon woman, being now in tranſgreſſion: ſo that where the conception is without ſin, the birth ſhall be without griefe, as it was only in Chriſt. So [e] Bonauenture, to whom [f] Pererius ſubſcribeth, ſaith, that if man had knowne woman in the time of his innocency, fuiſſet ibi clauſtrorum apertio, non tamen pœnalis paſſio, there ſhould haue been an apertion of the wombe, but no painefull paſſion.

2. The apertion or opening of the womb is one thing, the amiſſion or violation of the virginity another: for otherwiſe, both Theophylact, Origene, Tertulliã, Ambroſe, ſhould be charged with the hereſie of Heluidius, that Marie continued not a virgine, who all are of opinion as preſently ſhall be ſhewed, that the wombe of the virgine was opened in the birth: Nay, if they wil beleeue their owne Ianſenius, Chriſts opening of the wombe was ſo far, from empairing the integritie of his mothers virginity, that it did rather argue the holineſſe of the birth; As, ſaith he, with Ambroſe, it is proper to Chriſt to open the wombe of his mother, (becauſe in other birthes the man firſt openeth the wombe) ſo alſo that which followeth (he ſhall be called holy vnto the Lord) is peculiar to Chriſt; ſolus enim ipſe vere ſanctus, &c. for he onely was trulie holy among the firſt borne, whereas many other are moſt wicked.

The Proteſtants.

1. IT can neuer bee prooued, that Chriſts bodie came either thorow the wood of the doores, or thorow the ſtone of the Sepulchre, or clauſure of his mothers wombe. And concerning the laſt, the Scripture is euident to the contrarie, where it is ſaid, that our Sauiour Chriſt was preſented to the Lord, according as it is written: Euerie male that firſt openeth the matrix, &c. Luke 2. 29.

Luk. 2. 29.

But to this place a double anſwere is made, firſt, that the opening doth not here ſignifie the vncloaſing of the wombe, but onely exitum prolis, the comming foorth of the child out of the wombe, ſic [a] Thomas. 2. The Virgine Marie was not ſubiect to this law, &c. yet obſerued the cuſtome of other women. So the [b] Doway men.

[b] Annot. in Leuit. 12. 1.

*Contra.*1. It is ſtrange, ſeeing the words directly are, Euery male, that firſt openeth the matrix, that the opening here ſpoken of, ſhould not ſignifie the opening of the matrix. 2. And the text is as direct, that Marie did herein, as it was commanded in the law; Marie therefore was ſubiect to this law: yea, their owne Ianſenius, as he is alleaged before thinketh, that this law ſpecially had reference to Chriſt, becauſe he onely among all the firſt borne, was truly holy.

Luke 2.24.

2. We grant, that both the birth of Chriſt, his riſing out of the graue, his comming in, the doores being ſhut, was ſtrange and miraculous, becauſe one ſubſtance gaue place to another for a time, and after the paſſing of his bodie, the place remained whole and ſhut as before: but not in the very inſtant of paſſing. The red ſea gaue place to the Iſraelites while they paſſed, and cloſed together againe: ſo did the priſon doores open miraculouſly to the Apoſtles, Act.5.19. An incredulous Iew ſeeing the eare of Malchus ſo ſoone healed, would not haue thought that Peters ſword went betweene it & his head, as we are ſure it did: So we ſay concerning the birth of Chriſt, that the place gaue way while he paſſed, and cloſed vp afterward againe as before. Againe Auguſtine ſaith, Spatia locorum tolle corporibus, nuſquam erunt, & quia nuſquã erunt, nec erunt: Take away ſpace of place from bodies, and they ſhal be no where; and if they be no where, then are they not at al: Epiſt 57. &c. And againe, Tolle corpora ipſa qualitatib. corporũ, non erit vbi ſint, — ſi moles ipſa corporis auferatur non erit vbi qualitates ſint: And take the bodies from the qualities, and they ſhal be no where, — and if the quantitie or bigneſſe of the bodie, be it great or ſmall, be taken away, the qualities ſhall be no where, ibid. But the Papiſts in ſaying that Chriſt went thorow the very ſubſtance and corpulency of things, doe take away from his bodie his proper place, and conſequently the qualitie and corpulencie thereof: for two ſubſtances cannot be in one place; and therefore they deſtroy the nature of his bodie.

Act.5.19.

And yet further concerning this point: 1. Theophylact vpon theſe words, Luk.2.23. Euery man child, that firſt openeth the wombe, &c. writeth to this purpoſe, that ipſe ſolus aperuit vuluam matris ſuæ, cum alijs aperiat vir vterum: He onely opened the wombe of his mother, where as to others the man openeth the wombe.

Luke.2.23.

2. To the ſame purpoſe Origene: Omnium mulierum non partus infantis ſed coitus viri vuluam reſerat, &c. In all other women, not the birth of the infant, but the companie of the man openeth the wombe, &c. but Chriſt onely opened his mothers wombe. But before him Tertullian is herein a pregnant and euident witneſſe: Virgo quantum à viro, non virgo quantum à partu, — Etſi Virgo concepit, in partu ſuo nupſit, non nupſit, ipſa patefacti corporis lege — quis proprie vuluam adaperuit, quam qui clauſam patefecit? — agnouit adapertæ vuluæ nuptialem paſſionem, &c. She was a virgine in reſpect of man, not a virgine in the birth, — although ſhe conceiued a virgine, in the birth ſhe was as married, and not married, by the manner of opening the bodie, — who more properlie opened the wombe, then he that opened it being ſhut? — ſhe felt the nuptiall paſſion of opening the wombe, &c.

Hom.14.in Luc.

Lib.de carne Chriſti.

3. Bucer, and Molineus in 3.part.vnion.Euangel. affirme according to the Scriptures and the ancient writers, that Chriſt in his birth opened the wombe of Marie: ſee alſo before error 2. the conſent of the reformed Churches, that Chriſts bodie retained the properties and dimenſions of a natural and humane bodie, whereof this is one, that one bodie cannot penetrate another bodie, without the making of ſome way, and opening of a paſſage.

In 3.part. Vnion.

4. The Romaniſts are here of diuers opinions: ſome thinke that it belonged to a glorious bodie, to enter the doores being ſhut: it is ſhewed, (ſaith Gregorie) that his bodie, was eiuſdem naturæ, ſed alterius gloriæ, of the ſame nature, but of another glorie: then by this opinion before Chriſts bodie was glorified, it had not that propertie to enter through without a paſſage: ſome thinke that Chriſts bodie from his birth was endued dono ſubtilitatis, with the gift of ſubtilitie, that is, thinneſſe, to bee able to paſſe thorow another bodie: but this opinion is refuſed of Thomas: who thinketh that Chriſts bodie in the birth paſſed thorow the wombe not opened, by a miracle: and yet, as forgetting himſelfe, he ſaith, that Chriſt before his paſſion, permittebat carni ſuæ agere & pati, quæ propria, &c. Did ſuffer his fleſh to doe and ſuffer according to the propertie thereof: but it is contrarie to the propertie of a bodie, to glide, as it were, through another. B. Rhenanus ſeemeth to approue the former ſentence of Tertullian; and therefore in their Index expurgat. they haue left out that clauſe; ſo alſo Ianſenius ſeemeth to concurre with Theophylact and Origene, as they are before recited:

Argum.in lib. Tertul.de carn.Chriſti.

Gaij decret. Iacuit in ſepulchro, & reuoluto lapide monumenti tertia die caro reſurrexit: He lay in the graue, and the third day the ſtone being rolled away, his fleſh roſe againe, &c. This decree ſaith, that Chriſts bodie went not thorow the ſtone, but the ſtone was firſt remoued.

But this matter I haue entreated of at large before, *Controuerſ.*13. *err.*17. *argum. Pap.*2. whither I referre the reader.

THE THIRD QVESTION, WHETHER Chriſt ſuffered in ſoule.

First, before I come to the handling of this queſtion in the ſeuerall parts thereof, I will lay open the ſlanderous and malicious accuſations, which the Papiſts charge this opinion with, and eſpecially one Frier Feuardentius, that hath directly of this argument written againſt Maſter Caluine, that worthie Miniſter of Chriſt of bleſſed memorie. And againſt this Frier, together with Bellarmine and the Rhemiſts, I purpoſe to deale ex profeſſo, in this queſtion. If any other from amongſt our ſelues haue therein written ſomewhat diuerſly from the common opinion, I leaue them to their owne beſt thoughts: and being deſirous to maintaine peace, and not to encreaſe domeſticall contentions, I ſay with Hierome writing to Auguſtine: Non audeo ſcribere contra Epiſcopum communionis meæ.

Error ſeu falſ. 5.

Firſt, then he chargeth Caluine and others, as though they ſhould denie Chriſts prayer and requeſt in the garden to be holy, iuſt, righteous: Feuard. de Chriſto patiente p.415. p.418. Firſt, Maſter Caluine himſelfe confeſſeth, Affectus in Chriſto vitio caruiſſe: That Chriſts affections were without fault, being framed to the obedience of God: in cap.11. Ioan. verſ.33. And Chriſt tooke vpon him mans affections, but without any diſorder. Secondly, where M. Caluine then is alleaged to ſay, Chriſtum votum correxiſſe, that Chriſt did correct his vow, which he brake into through griefe; and, inconſiderate effluxiſſe, and that it came from him inconſiderately: in cap.12. Ioann. verſ.27. though this ſpeech ſeeme ſomewhat hard, yet he is to be expounded by himſelfe, and not his words to be ſo much preſſed, as his meaning to be accepted: for Caluine is farre, from charging Chriſt, with any imperfection or corruption in his deſire: but doth interprete himſelfe, that Chriſt prayed, ex ſenſu carnis, from the ſenſe of his humane nature, and of a meere humane deſire, which may without ſinne wiſh to eſcape griefe and trouble, conditionally ſo it may ſtand with Gods will, as here our Sauiour prayeth. Thirdly, Maſter Beza may very well explicate Maſter Caluines meaning: whoſe words and ſenſe cannot be miſtaken, where he ſaith, that theſe words of our Sauiour, Yet not my will, &c. are not a correction, but the explication of the condition: neither doth this ſhew a repugnancie or contrarietie of Chriſts humane will, and Gods, but onely a diuerſitie: Bez. annot. in 26. Mat. v.39. As Damaſcene well ſaith, οὐκ ἐν ἐναντίῳ θελήματι, ἀλλ᾽ ἐν ἰδιάζοντι τῆς φύσεως: Chriſt prayed not with a contrarie will, but proper to his humane nature: lib.3. de fide. cap.14.

Secondly, Caluine is charged to ſay, that Chriſt had forgotten, that he was ſent to bee the Redeemer of the world, and that hee refuſed to accompliſh the worke of our redemption: Feuard. p.423.426.

Maſter Caluines words are theſe, that Chriſt through the vehemencie of his agonie remembred not, or thought not vpon the heauenly decree: Vt non reputaret in ipſo momento, &c. That hee did not thinke in that moment, that he was ſent, hac lege, with this condition to be the Sauiour of the world: in cap. 26. Matth. c.39. And againe in the ſame place: Mediatoris officio defungi, quantum in ſe eſt, renuit: He refuſeth, as much as in him lieth, or in his humane nature, to doe the office of a Mediatour.

Firſt, I here ſay with Auguſtine, if Maſter Caluine ſhould ſeeme to any ſomewhat to exceede in termes: Nunquam errari tutius exiſtimo, quam cum amore nimio veritatis & reiectione falſitatis erratur: I thinke a man cannot erre more ſafely, then in the too much loue of the truth, and reiecting of falſehood.

Secondly, Maſter Caluine is very farre himſelfe from charging Chriſt with any ſuch forgetfulneſſe or vnwillingnes: for thus he ſaith: Quia non deſtitit mundi eſſe ſeruator, &c. Becauſe hee neuer ceaſed to be the Sauiour of the world, he was alwaies endued with an heauenly power to the fulfilling of his office: neither can it be, that he ſhould forget thoſe, which doe commend their ſaluation vnto him: in Luc.23:43. how then could he be forgetfull of himſelfe, and his owne office?

Thirdly, Maſter Caluine further expoundeth himſelfe in theſe very words: firſt, he ſaith, In ipſo momento, in that very moment onely, and, quantum in ſe eſt, in reſpect of his humane nature, Chriſt prayed, that the cup might paſſe, his humane nature now fullie ſhewing it ſelfe: ſo that this paſſion in Chriſt proceeded onely from his humane infirmitie; and it was but for a moment, Chriſt in that verie inſtant remembring himſelfe: Iohn 12.27. What ſhall I ſay? Father ſaue me from this houre, but therefore cam I into this houre.

Fourthly, S. Auguſtine ſaith as much: Hæc humana voluntas erat proprium aliquid & priuatum volens: This was his humane will, praying now for ſomewhat proper and priuate to himſelfe, par.1. in Pſal.32. If it were priuate that he praied, then it was beſide the publike office of the Mediatorſhip. And againe, Pſal.93. Oſtendit hominis voluntatem, & ſi in illa voluntate permaneret iam prauum cor oſtendere videretur: He ſhewed the will of a man, and if he had continued in that will, his heart had not been vpright. So then Auguſtine affirmeth, that for a moment Chriſts humane will deſired ſomething priuate: Caluine ſaith no more.

Damaſcene alſo ſaith, that Chriſts humane will, τῆς φυσικῆς ἀσθενείας πειρασθεῖσα, being firſt tempted of his naturall infirmitie, νευρωθεῖσα, was afterward ſtrengthened by his diuine will, and receiued courage againſt death: lib.3. de fid. c.18. Wherefore Feuardent. ſheweth his Frierly cauilling ſpirit, in wreſting that as ſpoken of Chriſt abſolutely as he was the Mediatour, which onely brake foorth from his humane infirmitie, yet without ſinne; and maketh that to be as a ſetled diſpoſition in Chriſt, which was but a momentanie paſſion.

Error ſeu falſ. 6.

Thirdly, he chargeth Caluine, as though he ſhould ſay, that the bodily death of Chriſt profited nothing: and therefore he taketh vpon him to prooue, that the bodily death of Chriſt did much further the ſaluation of mankind: which no man is ſo impious to denie.

Firſt, theſe are Caluines words: Nihil actum erat, ſi corporea tantum morte defunctus fuiſſet. Nothing had been done, if Chriſt had onelie performed a bodilie death: lib.2. Inſtitut. c.16 ſ.10. He denieth not the profitable and neceſſarie vſe of the bodilie death; but ſaith it was not auaileable alone without

vntill the end of the world, but the truth of the Lord is here alſo, for the bodie of our Lord, wherein hee roſe againe, muſt of neceſſitie be in one place, but his truth is diſperſed euery where,&c.

THE SECOND QVESTION, WHETHER OVR SAuiour Chriſt did verily encreaſe in knowledge and wiſedome, as he was man.

The Papiſts.

CHriſt, they ſay, in the very firſt creation of his ſoule, and from his conception, was endued with the fulneſſe of all wiſedome, grace, and knowledge; neither can he be ſaid properly to haue encreaſed in any of theſe gifts.

2.Error.

1. Chriſt was annoynted from his mothers wombe; and then the ſpirit of God was vpon him: for the Angels that appeared to the ſhepheards call him Chriſt, Luk.2.11. And S.Iohn ſaith, The word was made fleſh, full of grace and truth: Therefore euen then hee had receiued all abundance of grace and knowledge, Bellarm. de Chriſti anima.lib.4.2.

Luk.2.11.
Iohn 1.11.

*Anſ.*1. We grant, that our Sauiour was the Ieſus and the Chriſt euen from his Natiuitie: not that then he actually ſtraightwaies entred into thoſe offices, or receiued plenarie power of all the graces of the ſpirit in his humanitie, but becauſe he was euen from his mothers wombe conſecrated and appointed thereunto: for it no more followeth, becauſe he is called Chriſt, that hee then had his actuall annointing fully, then that, becauſe hee was called Ieſus from his Natiuitie, hee had actually performed our redemption. The full annointing of the ſpirit was fulfilled in his Baptiſme, when the holy Ghoſt came downe in the likeneſſe of a Doue: and then beginning to preach, in his firſt Sermon at Nazareth, he ſhewed the accompliſhment of the prophecie of Eſay, The ſpirit of the Lord is vpon me,&c. Luk.4.18.

Luk.4.18.

2. Neither doe the words of Iohn import ſo much, as they gather. The word was made fleſh, and dwelt amongſt vs, full of grace and truth: which is not to bee vnderſtood onely of the very firſt aſſuming of the fleſh, but of the dwelling of the word in the fleſh amongſt vs, and ſo appeared to be full of grace and truth. As it followeth, Iohn 1.16. Of his fulneſſe haue we receiued grace for grace: this receiuing of the fulneſſe of Chriſt, was not performed in his infancie, but afterward by his holy doctrine and preaching, and the Apoſtle ſaith, That when he aſcended vp on high, he led captiuitie captiue, and gaue gifts vnto men: Epheſ.4.8. We denie not but that this fulneſſe of grace was in Chriſt in his firſt incarnation, yet after encreaſed and made more full in his humane nature.

Epheſ.4.8.

3. But leaſt there might be here any miſtaking: wee muſt thus diſtinguiſh of the graces and gifts which were conferred vpon the humanitie of Chriſt, that they are of three ſorts, habituall and infuſed, actuall and manifeſted, experimentall, that is by experience had and obtained. We grant, that the habituall graces were infuſed in as great fulneſſe in the firſt inſtant of Chriſts bleſſed conception, as at any time afterward: like as the ſoule commeth into the bodie furniſhed with all the habituall faculties and powers thereof: and ſo Chriſt encreaſed not in theſe gifts: but in reſpect of the manifeſtation and declaration, theſe gifts and graces encreaſed, when as they were produced more and more into act, the organes of the bodie being fitted thereunto: and in reſpect of his experimentall knowledge alſo Chriſt verily encreaſed: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Though he were the Sonne, yet learned he obedience, through the things which he ſuffered.

Heb.5.8.

*Argum.*2 Chriſt was the Sonne of God in his very incarnation, and euen then was the humanitie perfectly vnited to the Godhead: therefore immediately vpon this vnion and coniunction of both natures in one perſon, muſt needes follow the fulneſſe of grace in the humane nature. Againe, Adam was created in perfect wiſedome, therefore much more the ſecond *Adam. Bellarmine. cap.*4.

*Anſwere.*1. If preſently vpon the vniting of the two natures together, it had beene neceſſarie that the humane nature of Chriſt ſhould haue receiued whatſoeuer by the preſence of the diuine nature was to bee conferred vpon it, then Chriſt ſtraight-waies muſt alſo both in bodie and ſoule haue beene glorified: for it cannot be denied, but that as the bodie of Chriſt after the reſurrection receiued more glorie then before; ſo alſo his ſoule being the other part of his humanitie, was more glorified.

rified. By this it is euident, that the humanity receiued not at once the fulneſſe of all grace and glory in the firſt vniting of the Godhead.

2 Adam was created perfect in body and ſoule: and if Chriſt therefore ought to haue his fulneſſe of the gifts of the ſoule in his natiuity as Adam had his in the creation, why ought hee not alſo to haue had a perfect body, as Adam was created withall? Wherfore as it was no diſhonour to Chriſt to grow vp in ſtature of body, ſo neither was it to encreaſe in the gifts of the minde.

Againe we confeſſe, that Chriſts ſoule in his perfect growth was farre more excellent then Adams in his perfection of creation, 3. in the firſt inſtant of his conception we doubt not alſo, but it exceeded in heauenly grace all the ſoules that euer came into the bodie by natiuitie; yea and Adams ſoule likewiſe, if it had been ſent into the like body. 4. and the like equiualent perfection being admitted in Chriſts ſoule, proportionable to the excellency thereof: yet as Adams ſoule ſhould haue encreaſed, if he had not fallen; ſo Chriſts ſoule being moſt perfect in that infantile eſtate might and did receiue a greater fulneſſe.

Argum. 3, Firſt, Chriſt created his owne ſoule. Secondly, he himſelfe by his deuine power infuſed knowledge and grace into it: therefore at the firſt he gaue vnto it the very fulneſſe and perfection of knowledge. Thirdly, Chriſt is the head of men and Angels, therefore he had a moſt wiſe ſoule, it is not fit that the head ſhould be leſſe wiſe then the members. Bellarm.c.4.

Anſw. 1. Wee denie not but that Chriſt, if it had pleaſed him, could haue created himſelfe a moſt perfect ſoule that ſhould not haue receiued afterward any acceſſion of knowledge: but it pleaſed him to be herein like vnto vs, that as hee grew vp in ſtature of body, ſo likewiſe to encreaſe in the inward graces. 2. As he created himſelfe a ſoule; ſo likewiſe hee made his owne body: as hee infuſed grace to his ſoule; ſo he did giue life to his fleſh: yet it followeth not, that Chriſt did or was to make at the firſt incarnation a perfect body to himſelfe. 3. We acknowledge notwithſtanding the ſoule of Chriſt in his growth and perfection to haue been moſt wiſe, and exceeding the wiſdome of the ſoules of any of his members: for God gaue not him the ſpirit by meaſure. Iohn 3.34. as others haue.

The Proteſtants.

That Chriſt was euen from his birth and firſt conception perfect God, and perfect man; wee doe aſſuredly beleeue, and that in the very incarnation, the diuine and humane nature were vnited together. Alſo we grant, that the Lord Chriſt might haue created to himſelfe a ſoule full of all wiſedome and knowledge, as he might haue made himſelfe a perfect body: but ſeeing it pleaſed him to be borne of a woman, and firſt to dwell in the body of an infant, wee doubt not to ſay, as the Scripture teacheth vs, that he alſo encreaſed in wiſedome.

Heb.2.17.4.

Argnm. 1. He was in all things like to his brethren, onely ſinne excepted, Heb. 2.17.4.15. Ergo, he grew vp and encreaſed in knowledge, according to the manner of men, which may bee done without ſinne.

Bellarmine anſwereth, he was like vs in all things which concerned the perfection of nature, and the worke of redemption: for if he ſhould haue been like vs in all things; then could hee not haue beene borne of a virgin, nor free from the rebellion of the fleſh. Bellarm.c.5.

Heb.2.17.

Contra. 1. He did not take vpon him the perfection only, but the imperfections alſo of our nature, ſuch as he might receiue without ſin, as in the body, hunger, thirſt, wearines; in the ſoule, ſorrow, feare, &c. 2. It was requiſite euen to the worke of our redemption, that he ſhould be like vs in euery reſpect both in ſoule and body without ſinne: That hee might bee mercifull, and a faithfull high Prieſt in things concerning God: Hebr. 2.17. 3. From this ſimilitude of Chriſt with vs, ſin is excepted, Heb.4.15. and ſo both the cauſe of ſinne which is originall corruption, and therefore Chriſt was to bee borne of a virgin, and the effects of ſinne, as is the rebellion of the fleſh; which could not any way bee faſtened vpon Chriſt being free from ſinne.

Luk.2.52.

Argum. 2. The Scripture ſaith plainly, which cannot lie, that Ieſus grew vp and encreaſed in wiſdome and ſtature, Luk.2.52. And leaſt they ſhould anſwere, that this encreaſing was onely in the opinion of men, it followeth, And in fauour with God and men: he encreaſed in wiſdome, ſtature and fauour, not onely in ſhew before men, but in truth before God: and as verily and indeed hee grew vp in ſtature, ſo alſo in wiſedome.

Mark.13.32.

Argum. 3. Chriſt teſtifieth of himſelfe, that neither the Angels nor the Sonne of man, as he is man, knoweth of the day or houre of his comming to iudgement, but the father onely, Mark. 13.31. Ergo, Chriſt as he was man had not at once all fulnes of knowledge. Bellarmine thus expoundeth this place, Filius dicitur neſcire, quia non ſciebat ad dicendum alijs: The Sonne is ſaid not to know becauſe he knew it, not to reueale it to others, but to keepe it ſecret to himſelfe.

Anſw. Firſt, then by the ſame reaſon, the Angels doe know it alſo: but that they are charged not to declare it to men: for the text ſaith, that neither the Angels, nor the Sonne of man knoweth the time. Secondly, in this ſenſe alſo the Father might be ſaid not to know it: for neither hath hee reuealed it to any. Laſtly, although we do affirme according to the Scripture, that the child Ieſus did encreaſe in the gifts of the minde, as he did in the ſtature of his body; yet we doe put great difference betweene him, and all other children that euer came into the world: for as his conception and birth were not after the common manner; (for hee was conceiued by the holy Ghoſt, and brought forth without trauell and labour: as Auguſtine ſaith, Nec concipiendo libidinem; nec pariendo perpeſſa eſt dolorem:

In conceiuing ſhe felt no carnall deſire; in bearing ſhe ſuffered no paine, De 5. Hæreſ. cap. 5.) ſo likewiſe, the holy and bleſſed babe, in the conſtitution both of bodie and ſoule excelled the common condition of all other infants: for as he was void of originall ſinne, ſo he was without the effects and fruits thereof, which doe ſhew themſelues in children: for neither ſuffered he the like pangs and infirmities in bodie, being in his infancie, as other children doe, that are vexed and tormented in bodie: neither was he ſubiect to the vnreaſonable and brutiſh motions of the mind, which are in children. Therefore Auguſtine ſaith, Quam ignorationem nullo modo crediderim fuiſſe in infante illo, &c. Which ignorance of mind, I cannot thinke to haue been in that infant, in whom the word was made fleſh: lib. 2. de peccator. merit. & remiſſion. c. 29. And what ignorance and infirmitie hee meaneth, afterward he expreſſeth, Cum motibus irrationabilibus perturbantur, nulla ratione, nullo imperio — cohibentur: When their brutiſh and vnreaſonable motions come vpon them, they are ruled neither by reaſon, nor any other gouernment, ibid. Theſe infirmities both in body and ſoule we denie to haue been in Chriſt: and yet we doubt not to conclude, that, as Chriſt grew in ſtature of bodie; as Auguſtine ſaith, Mutationes ætatum perpeti voluit ab ipſa exorſus infantia: He paſſed through the ages of mans life, beginning with his infancie: ibid. So likewiſe, as the Scripture ſaith, he encreaſed in wiſedome, Luke 2.52.

The teſtimonie of Cyrill is here moſt notable, De incarnat. Domini cap. 12. Deus verbum humanitatem ſuam more ſuo proficere permittebat: & quaſi paulatim diuinitatis ſuæ voluit gloriam declarare, & cum corporis ætate ſua extendere: corporale quidem augmentum, & profectus gratiæ & ſapientiæ humanitatis magis menſuræ conueniat: ipſum Deum verbum per ſuam naturam perfectiſſimum confitemur, non egenum profectus ſapientiæ vel gratiæ: God the word ſuffered his humanitie to grow, and by little and little, as the age of his bodie encreaſed, ſo it pleaſed him to ſhew forth his diuine power: the growth of the bodie, and his encreaſe in grace and wiſedome belong to his humane nature: as he was God he was moſt perfect, and needed no encreaſe. Hence we gather this argument: As Chriſt encreaſed in bodie, ſo in gifts of the mind, but he verily did grow in bodie. Ergo.

S. Ambroſe: Senſu hominis profecit, ſicut ſcriptum eſt, & Ieſus proficiebat ætate & ſapientia, profectus ætatis, profectus ſapientiæ, ſed humanæ; ætas non diuinitatis, ſed corporis eſt: Ergo ſi proficiebat ætate hominis, proficiebat ſapientia hominis: ſapientia autem ſenſu proficit, quia à ſenſu ſapientia: ſenſus ergo proficiebat humanus, ſenſum ergo ſuſcepit humanum: He encreaſed in the ſenſe or vnderſtanding of man, as it is written, Ieſus encreaſed in age and wiſedome: the encreaſe of age, is the encreaſe of wiſedome, but humane; for age is not of the diuinitie, but of the bodie: therefore if hee encreaſed in the age of man, he encreaſed in the wiſedome of man: but wiſedome encreaſeth by ſenſe, for wiſedome is of the ſenſe: wherefore humane ſenſe encreaſed in him, and he tooke vpon him humane ſenſe: lib. de incarnat. c. 7. Ambroſe thinketh, that Chriſt verily encreaſed in wiſedome, not in the opinion of men only, as the Maſter doth gloſſe vpon him: lib. 3. diſt. 13. liter E. His reaſons are theſe: firſt, hee exempteth nothing from encreaſing but his diuine nature, then all the reſt encreaſed. Secondly, as he increaſed in ſtature of bodie, ſo likewiſe in wiſedome. Thirdly, his wiſedome encreaſed as his ſenſe and experience encreaſed; which was verily and indeed, not in opinion onely.

Hierome: Virginitat. laus Dominus noſter, qui nobis viuendi exemplum reliquit, proficiebat non ætate tantum corporea, ſed ſapientia & gratia, &c. Our Lord, who left vs an example of liuing, did encreaſe not onely in his bodily age, but in wiſedome and grace, before God and men, &c. Here alſo are three reaſons: firſt, Chriſt encreaſed to giue vs an example: but we muſt not encreaſe onely in opinion. Secondly, he encreaſed not onely in bodie, but in ſoule: Ergo, he encreaſed in ſoule. Thirdly, before God and men: but there is no encreaſing before God in opinion onely.

Origen alſo vpon theſe words, Ieſus encreaſed in wiſedome and ſtature, Luk. 2.52. Quis eſt hominum? &c. There is no man, but doth encreaſe in ſtature, this is no great matter to be written of Chriſt: therefore vnderſtand ætate animæ proficiebat, he encreaſed in the ſtature of his ſoule: whereupon the Apoſtle vnderſtanding this ſtature to be vnderſtood of the inward man, writeth: Vntill we all meet together to a perfect man, to the meaſure of the age of the fulneſſe of Chriſt, Epheſ. 4.13. Hom. 12. Leuit. He doubteth not to affirme, that we muſt encreaſe and grow in the inward man, as Chriſt did: Ergo, he did verily and in truth encreaſe.

Now to cõclude this point: there are diuers waies wherby Chriſt may be ſaid to encreaſe in knowledge and other giftes of the mind: 1. Per noui habitus acceſſionem, by the acceſſion of a new habite: as when one of ignorant, becommeth skilfull and attaineth vnto knowledge: ſo Chriſt increaſed not, being in his firſt conception both God and man, and his bleſſed ſoule illuminated in that inſtant by the vniting to the Godhead. 2. By a mentall ſeparation, as Damaſcene ſaith: ſo Chriſt aſſumed our humanity, which in it ſelfe conſidered, is ignorant, ſeruile, and ſo apt to encreaſe: but conſidered in Chriſt as vnited to the Godhead, his humanity is none of theſe. 3. In reſpect of the manifeſtation toward vs, and our opinion, Chriſts graces encreaſed: So Damaſcene, and before him Nazianzene. 4. The gifts of the mind may be ſaid to encreaſe, per productionem, & dilatationem, by the production and dilating thereof, as Tertullian ſaith, like as, cum maſſa auri in laminam laxatur, when a maſſe of gold is beaten into a thin plate, it is made greater, Per dilatationem, non per adiectionem, dum extenditur, non dum augetur, by the dilatation thereof, not by any adiection, while it is extended rather, then encreaſed: and ſo crementa animæ reputanda, non ſubſtantiua, ſed prouocatiua, the incrementes of the ſoule are not ſubſtantiall, but by way of prouocation and production: and in this ſenſe alſo Chriſt encreaſed in wiſedome. 5. As the maſter is ſaid in diſcipulo proficere, to encreaſe in his ſcholar, when he encreaſeth: ſo Chriſt may be ſaid to encreaſe, becauſe he maketh vs encreaſe. Clictou. annot. in Damaſc. lib. 3. cap. 22. but this is not ſo fit here. 6. And beſide theſe, there is another encreaſing in graces, and that is, per acquiſitionem, by an experimentall getting and acquiring of knowledge, which is two waies: either, per inuentionem, by ones owne inuention and obſeruation; or, per diſciplinam, by diſcipline and inſtruction of others: this encreaſe of experimentall knowledge was in Chriſt the firſt way, not the ſecond, for he came to be the teacher of others, and not to learne of any. And that Chriſt thus verilie encreaſed, this further euidence we haue.

3. The learned writers of the reformed Churches do herein concurre, that Chriſt verely encreaſed in wiſedome and knowledge: as *Luther in homil. 1. Dominic. poſt Epiphan. The Papiſts.

3. Error. THey ſay, Chriſt came out of his mothers wombe, the clauſure not ſtirred: as he paſſed thorow the doores when he came in to his diſciples, the doores being ſhut, Iohn 20. 19. and as he paſſed thorow the ſtone, ariſing out of the Sepulchre, Rhemiſt. annot. Iohn 10. ſect. 2. Bellarm. de Eccleſ. lib. 4. cap. 9 ſect. quartus error.

3. p. 4 35. act. 6. Argum. Thus they would prooue their aſſertion: 1. Thomas thus reaſoneth; Becauſe Marie did bring forth without paine, therfore her wombe was not opened, Quia dolor parientis cauſatur ex apertione meatuum: The griefe of a woman in trauell is cauſed by opening of the wombe. 2. Becauſe Marie remained a virgine in that holy birth; and ſo they make it all one, virginitatem amittere, and vuluam ſeu matricem aperire, to looſe the virginitie, and to open the wombe. [a] Bellarm. [b] Maldonate Ieſuit. [c] Gregor. Valent. And before them, [d] Thomas.

Anſw. 1. It followeth not, that becauſe Marie brought forth without paine, that therefore her wombe was not opened in the birth: for Tertullian, who holdeth the latter, as ſhal be afterward ſhewed, affirmeth alſo the other, that ſhe brought foorth, Non ſubita dolorum concuſſione, not with the ſuddaine panges of griefe: and that puniſhment, to bring forth in ſorrow, was laid vpon woman, being now in tranſgreſſion: ſo that where the conception is without ſin, the birth ſhall be without griefe, as it was only in Chriſt. So [e] Bonauenture, to whom [f] Pererius ſubſcribeth, ſaith, that if man had knowne woman in the time of his innocency, fuiſſet ibi clauſtrorum apertio, non tamen pænalis paſſio, there ſhould haue been an apertion of the wombe, but no painefull paſſion.

2. The apertion or opening of the womb is one thing, the amiſſion or violation of the virginity another: for otherwiſe, both Theophylact, Origene, Tertulliā, Ambroſe, ſhould be charged with the hereſie of Heluidius, that Marie continued not a virgine, who all are of opinion as preſently ſhall be ſhewed, that the wombe of the virgine was opened in the birth: Nay, if they wil beleeue their owne Ianſenius, Chriſts opening of the wombe was ſo far, from empairing the integritie of his mothers virginity, that it did rather argue the holineſſe of the birth: As, ſaith he, with Ambroſe, it is proper to Chriſt to open the wombe of his mother, (becauſe in other birthes the man firſt openeth the wombe) ſo alſo that which followeth (he ſhall be called holy vnto the Lord) is peculiar to Chriſt; ſolus enim ipſe vere ſanctus, &c. for he onely was trulie holy among the firſt borne, whereas many other are moſt wicked.

The Proteſtants.

1. IT can neuer bee prooued, that Chriſts bodie came either thorow the wood of the doores, or thorow the ſtone of the Sepulchre, or clauſure of his mothers wombe. And concerning the laſt, the Scripture is euident to the contrarie, where it is ſaid, that our Sauiour Chriſt was preſented to the Lord, according as it is written: Euerie male that firſt openeth the matrix, &c. Luke 2. 29. Luk. 2. 29.

But to this place a double anſwere is made, firſt, that the opening doth not here ſignifie the vncloaſing of the wombe, but onely exitum prolis, the comming foorth of the child out of the wombe, ſic [a] Thomas. 2. The Virgine Marie was not ſubiect to this law, &c. yet obſerued the cuſtome of other women. So the [b] Doway men.

[b] Annot. in Leuit. 12. 1.

*Contra.*1. It is ſtrange,ſeeing the words directly are, Euery male,that firſt openeth the matrix, that the opening here ſpoken of, ſhould not ſignifie the opening of the matrix. 2. And the text is as direct, that Marie did herein,as it was commanded in the law; Marie therefore was ſubiect to this law: yea, their owne Ianſenius, as he is alleaged before thinketh,that this law ſpecially had reference to Chriſt, becauſe he onely among all the firſt borne,was truly holy.

Luke 2.24.

2. We grant,that both the birth of Chriſt,his riſing out of the graue, his comming in, the doores being ſhut,was ſtrange and miraculous,becauſe one ſubſtance gaue place to another for a time, and after the paſſing of his bodie, the place remained whole and ſhut as before:but not in the very inſtant of paſſing. The red ſea gaue place to the Iſraelites while they paſſed, and cloſed together againe: ſo did the priſon doores open miraculouſly to the Apoſtles,Act.5.19.An incredulous Iew ſeeing the eare of Malchus ſo ſoone healed,would not haue thought that Peters ſword went betweene it & his head, as we are ſure it did:So we ſay concerning the birth of Chriſt,that the place gaue way while he paſſed, and cloſed vp afterward againe as before.Againe Auguſtine ſaith,Spatia locorum tolle corporibus,nuſquam erunt,& quia nuſquā erunt,nec erunt: Take away ſpace of place from bodies,and they ſhal be no where;and if they be no where,then are they not at al:Epiſt 57.*&c.*And againe,Tolle corpora ipſa qualitatib.corporū, non erit vbi ſint,—ſi moles ipſa corporis auferatur non erit vbi qualitates ſint: And take the bodies from the qualities,and they ſhal be no where,— and if the quantitie or bigneſſe of the bodie,be it great or ſmall,be taken away, the qualities ſhall be no where, ibid. But the Papiſts in ſaying that Chriſt went thorow the very ſubſtance and corpulency of things, doe take away from his bodie his proper place,and conſequently the qualitie and corpulencie thereof: for two ſubſtances cannot be in one place; and therefore they deſtroy the nature of his bodie.

Act.5.19.

And yet further concerning this point: 1. Theophylact vpon theſe words,Luk.2.23. Euery man child,that firſt openeth the wombe,&c. writeth to this purpoſe, that ipſe ſolus aperuit vuluam matris ſuæ,cum alijs aperiat vir vterum: He onely opened the wombe of his mother, where as to others the man openeth the wombe.

Luke.2.23.

2. To the ſame purpoſe Origene: Omnium mulierum non partus infantis ſed coitus viri vuluam reſerat,&c. In all other women,not the birth of the infant, but the companie of the man openeth the wombe,&c.but Chriſt onely opened his mothers wombe.But before him Tertullian is herein a pregnant and euident witneſſe: Virgo quantum à viro, non virgo quantum à partu, —Etſi Virgo concepit, in partu ſuo nupſit,non nupſit,ipſa patefacti corporis lege—quis proprie vuluam adaperuit,quam qui clauſam patefecit? — agnouit adapertæ vuluæ nuptialem paſſionem,&c. She was a virgine in reſpect of man, not a virgine in the birth,—although ſhe conceiued a virgine,in the birth ſhe was as married,and not married,by the manner of opening the bodie,—who more properlie opened the wombe,then he that opened it being ſhut? — ſhe felt the nuptiall paſſion of opening the wombe,&c.

Hom.14.in Luc.

Lib.de carne Chriſti.

3. Bucer,and Molineus in 3.part.vnion.Euangel. affirme according to the Scriptures and the ancient writers,that Chriſt in his birth opened the wombe of Marie: ſee alſo before error 2.the conſent of the reformed Churches,that Chriſts bodie retained the properties and dimenſions of a natural and humane bodie,whereof this is one, that one bodie cannot penetrate another bodie, without the making of ſome way,and opening of a paſſage.

In 3.part. Vnion.

4. The Romaniſts are here of diuers opinions: ſome thinke that it belonged to a glorious bodie, to enter the doores being ſhut: it is ſhewed,(ſaith Gregorie) that his bodie,was eiuſdem naturæ, ſed alterius gloriæ,of the ſame nature, but of another glorie: then by this opinion before Chriſts bodie was glorified,it had not that propertie to enter through without a paſſage: ſome thinke that Chriſts bodie from his birth was endued dono ſubtilitatis,with the gift of ſubtilitie,that is,thinneſſe,to bee able to paſſe thorow another bodie: but this opinion is refuſed of Thomas: who thinketh that Chriſts bodie in the birth paſſed thorow the wombe not opened,by a miracle: and yet,as forgetting himſelfe, he ſaith, that Chriſt before his paſſion, permittebat carni ſuæ agere & pati,quæ propria,&c. Did ſuffer his fleſh to doe and ſuffer according to the propertie thereof: but it is contrarie to the propertie of a bodie,to glide,as it were,through another. B. Rhenanus ſeemeth to approue the former ſentence of Tertullian; and therefore in their Index expurgat. they haue left out that clauſe: ſo alſo Ianſenius ſeemeth to concurre with Theophylact and Origene, as they are before recited:

But this matter I haue entreated of at large before, *Controuerſ.*13.*err.*17.*argum.Pap.*2. whither I referre the reader.

THE THIRD QVESTION, WHETHER Chriſt ſuffered in ſoule.

First,before I come to the handling of this queſtion in the ſeuerall parts thereof, I will lay open the ſlanderous and malicious accuſations, which the Papiſts charge this opinion with, and eſpecially one Frier Feuardentius, that hath directly of this argument written againſt Maſter Caluine,that worthie Miniſter of Chriſt of bleſſed memorie. And againſt this Frier, together with Bellarmine and the Rhemiſts, I purpoſe to deale ex profeſſo, in this queſtion. If any other from amongſt our ſelues haue therein written ſomewhat diuerſly from the common opinion, I leaue them to their owne beſt thoughts: and being deſirous to maintaine peace, and not to encreaſe domeſticall contentions, I ſay with Hierome writing to Auguſtine: Non audeo ſcribere contra Epiſcopum communionis meæ.

Error ſeu falſ. 5. Firſt, then he chargeth Caluine and others, as though they ſhould denie Chriſts prayer and requeſt in the garden to be holy, iuſt, righteous: Feuard. de Chriſto patiente. p. 415. p. 418. Firſt, Maſter Caluine himſelfe confeſſeth, Affectus in Chriſto vitio caruiſſe: That Chriſts affections were without fault, being framed to the obedience of God: in cap. 11. Ioan. verſ. 33. And Chriſt tooke vpon him mans affections, but without any diſorder. Secondly, where M. Caluine then is alleaged to ſay, Chriſtum votum correxiſſe, that Chriſt did correct his vow, which he brake into through griefe; and, inconſiderate effluxiſſe, and that it came from him inconſiderately: in cap. 12. Ioann. verſ. 27. though this ſpeech ſeeme ſomewhat hard, yet he is to be expounded by himſelfe, and not his words to be ſo much preſſed, as his meaning to be accepted: for Caluine is farre, from charging Chriſt, with any imperfection or corruption in his deſire: but doth interprete himſelfe, that Chriſt prayed, ex ſenſu carnis, from the ſenſe of his humane nature, and of a meere humane deſire, which may without ſinne wiſh to eſcape griefe and trouble, conditionally ſo it may ſtand with Gods will, as here our Sauiour prayeth. Thirdly, Maſter Beza may very well explicate Maſter Caluines meaning: whoſe words and ſenſe cannot be miſliked, where he ſaith, that theſe words of our Sauiour, Yet not my will, &c. are not a correction, but the explication of the condition: neither doth this ſhew a repugnancie or contrarietie of Chriſts humane will, and Gods, but onely a diuerſitie: Bez. annot. in 26. Mat. v. 39. As Damaſcene well ſaith, ἐκ ἐναντίων γνώμης, ἀλλ' ἰδιότητι τῆς φύσεως: Chriſt prayed not with a contrarie will, but proper to his humane nature: lib. 3. de fide. cap. 14.

Secondly, Caluine is charged to ſay, that Chriſt had forgotten, that he was ſent to bee the Redeemer of the world, and that hee refuſed to accompliſh the worke of our redemption: Feuard. p. 423. 426.

Maſter Caluines words are theſe, that Chriſt through the vehemencie of his agonie remembred not, or thought not vpon the heauenly decree: Vt non reputaret in ipſo momento, &c. That hee did not thinke in that moment, that he was ſent, hac lege, with this condition to be the Sauiour of the world: in cap. 26. Matth. c. 39. And againe in the ſame place: Mediatoris officio defungi, quantum in ſe eſt, renuit: He refuſeth, as much as in him lieth, or in his humane nature, to doe the office of a Mediatour.

Firſt, I here ſay with Auguſtine, if Maſter Caluine ſhould ſeeme to any ſomewhat to excede in termes: Nunquam errari tutius exiſtimo, quam cum amore nimio veritatis & reiectione falſitatis erratur: I thinke a man cannot erre more ſafely, then in the too much loue of the truth, and reiecting of falſehood.

Secondly, Maſter Caluine is very farre himſelfe from charging Chriſt with any ſuch forgetfulneſſe or vnwillingnes: for thus he ſaith: Quia non deſtitit mundi eſſe ſeruator, &c. Becauſe hee neuer ceaſed to be the Sauiour of the world, he was alwaies endued with an heauenly power to the fulfilling of his office: neither can it be, that he ſhould forget thoſe, which doe commend their ſaluation vnto him: in Luc. 23. 43. how then could he be forgetfull of himſelfe, and his owne office?

Thirdly, Maſter Caluine further expoundeth himſelfe in theſe very words: firſt, he ſaith, In ipſo momento, in that very moment onely, and, quantum in ſe eſt, in reſpect of his humane nature, Chriſt praied, that the cup might paſſe, his humane nature now fullie ſhewing it ſelfe: ſo that this paſſion in Chriſt proceeded onely from his humane infirmitie; and it was but for a moment, Chriſt in that verie inſtant remembring himſelfe: Iohn 12. 27. What ſhall I ſay? Father ſaue me from this houre, but therefore cam I into this houre.

Fourthly, S. Auguſtine ſaith as much: Hac humana voluntas erat proprium aliquid & priuatum orans: This was his humane will, praying now for ſomewhat proper and priuate to himſelfe, par. 1. in Pſal. 32. If it were priuate that he praied, then it was beſide the publike office of the Mediatorſhip. And againe, Pſal. 93. Oſtendit hominis voluntatem, & ſi in illa voluntate permaneret iam prauum cor oſtendere videretur: He ſhewed the will of a man, and if he had continued in that will, his heart had not been aright. So then Auguſtine affirmeth, that for a moment Chriſts humane will deſired ſomething priuate: Caluine ſaith no more.

Damaſcene alſo ſaith, that Chriſts humane will, τῆς φυσικῆς ἀσθενείας πειραθεῖσα, being firſt tempted of his naturall infirmitie, ἀγωνιῶσα, was afterward ſtrengthened by his diuine will, and receiued courage againſt death: lib. 3. de fid. c. 18. Wherefore Feuardent. ſheweth his Frierly cauilling ſpirit, in wreſting that as ſpoken of Chriſt abſolutely as he was the Mediatour, which onely brake foorth from his humane infirmitie, yet without ſinne; and maketh that to be as a ſetled diſpoſition in Chriſt, which was but a momentanie paſſion.

Error ſeu falſ. 6. Thirdly, he chargeth Caluine, as though he ſhould ſay, that the bodily death of Chriſt profited nothing: and therefore he taketh vpon him to prooue, that the bodily death of Chriſt did much further the ſaluation of mankind: which no man is ſo impious to denie.

Firſt, theſe are Caluines words: Nihil actum erat, ſi corporea tantum morte defunctus fuiſſet: Nothing had been done, if Chriſt had onelie performed a bodilie death: lib. 2. Inſtitut. c. 16 ſ. 10. He denieth not the profitable and neceſſarie vſe of the bodilie death; but ſaith it was not auaileable alone without the ſoule. The Frier himſelfe ſaith in effect as much: Dial.5.p.452. Tales fuerunt pœnæ, quas non tantum ſecundum corpus,&c. Such were the paines which Chriſt onely ſuffered, not for vs according to his bodie, which without the ſoule is altogether impaſſible, but in the ſoule alſo.

Secondly, Damaſcene ſaith, ἡ ψυχὴ παθητὴ οὖσα συμπάσχει τῷ σώματι, The ſoule being paſſible, doth ſuffer together with the bodie, lib.3.de fid.cap.26. If then the bodie without the ſoule is impaſſible, and the ſoule doth ſuffer with the body, why is Caluine blamed for ſaying, that Chriſts bodily death only had not been auaileable?

Thirdly, Maſter Caluine himſelfe euery where magnifieth the bodily death of Chriſt: as hee is alleaged by Feuard. Quiſquis nutritiam ſibi eſſe cupit Chriſti carnem, &c. Hee that deſireth the fleſh of Chriſt to be his nouriſher, muſt conſider the ſame offered vpon the croſſe, as the price of our reconciliation: in Luc.c.22.verſ.16. How then is he not aſhamed to charge him with ſo notorious a lie, as though he held the bodily death of Chriſt altogether vnprofitable?

Fourthly, Feuardentius ſlaundereth Caluine, as though he ſhould ſay, Chriſtum omnia reprobis & damnatis debita ſupplicia pertuliſſe: That Chriſt did beare all the puniſhments due vnto the reprobate: p.443. And thereupon inferreth, that whereas theſe foure are the puniſhments of the reprobate: 1. That they ſhall for euer want the viſion or ſight of God. 2. They ſhall for euer bee perplexed with the horror of a guiltie conſcience. 3. By their owne fault, they are depriued of all the gifts of the ſpirit. 4. In ſtead of vertues, they are defiled with all wickedneſſe: p.446.447. He would by Calumes ſentence force all theſe vpon Chriſt. Error ſeu falſ.7.

Contra 1. Though in ſome ſenſe Chriſt may bee ſaid to haue ſuffered the paines of the damned, though not all, nor in that manner, as they ſuffer them; yet, becauſe the Scripture ſo ſpeaketh not, I could wiſh, for feare of offence, that ſuch phraſes had been forborne: that neither the aduerſary ſhould haue catched any aduantage thereby, nor the weake conſcience taken offence.

2. That Chriſt notwithſtanding did beare ſome puniſhments due vnto the reprobate, as deſertion for a while and dereliction, the Scriptures (we ſee) doe warrant it.

3. Whereas Caluin ſaith: Vt dependeret omnes, quæ ab illis expetendæ erant pœnas,&c. that he might pay all puniſhments to bee required of them: Inſtitut.lib.2.c.16.ſect.10 hee meaneth, as Auguſtine in the like caſe expoundeth the word (omnis, omnia) not ſingula generum, but genera ſingulorum, not euerie paine in particular, but in generall: as by all puniſhments, the kinds of all puniſhments are vnderſtood, that is in the bodie, and ſoule, though not euery particular puniſhment in the bodie and ſoule.

4. Caluine himſelfe excepteth the manner: Excepto, quod doloribus mortis,&c. It muſt bee excepted, that Chriſt could not be held in the ſorrowes of death, as the reprobate are: ibid. The puniſhment then, which Chriſt did beare, and the reprobate ſuffer, differ in the perpetuitie: wherefore the Frier impudently doth obiect the two firſt puniſhments produced, which doe include a continuance and perpetuitie for euer.

5. Caluine according to the Scriptures profeſſeth, that Chriſt in al his actions and puniſhments was immaculate and without ſinne: ſuch puniſhments then of the reprobate, as are not ſuffered without ſinne, of the which ſort are the two laſt rehearſed, Chriſt by the ſentence of Caluine is to bee freed: ſo then none of thoſe foure puniſhments can be faſtened vpon Chriſt in Caluins iudgement: ſo that the Frier is ſent away here with a flea in his eare.

Fifthly, he obiecteth, that Caluin ſhould affirme, that Chriſt doubted of his eternall ſaluation: Theſe are Caluins words, Inſtitut.lib.2.c.16.ſect.12. Some will crie out againſt me, as though I did great iniurie to Chriſt: Quia minimè conſentaneum fuerit eum de anima ſalute timere: Becauſe it is not conuenient, that he ſhould feare the ſaluation of his ſoule: Feuard.p.458. Error ſeu falſ.8.

Firſt, Maſter Caluine is flat of a contrarie iudgement, that Chriſt neuer doubted his ſaluation, neither did his faith faile: in eius diro cruciatu illæſa fuit eius fides: in his greateſt perplexitie his faith was not violated: fixa ſtetit fides eius in corde, his faith ſtood firme in his heart: in c.27.Mat.ver.46. He might be aſhamed therefore to preſſe Caluins words againſt his owne meaning.

Secondly, timere, to feare, is not dubitare, to doubt: for feare may proceed from the infirmitie of nature without ſinne, but doubtfulneſſe ſpringeth of diffidence or diſtruſt. And here Damaſcene helpeth vs with a very good diſtinction of feare: There is δειλία φυσική, a naturall feare; and a feare, ἐξ ἀπιστίας, that proceedeth of diffidence or diſtruſt: the firſt was in Chriſt; as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.5.7. He was heard in that he feared; but not the ſecond: Damaſ.de fid.lib.3.c.23.

Thirdly, why doth not the Frier open his throte againſt Ambroſe, who doubteth not to ſay of Chriſt: Dubitatio illa nos firmat, ne tu ſi caperis dubitare deſperes: His doubting doth ſtrengthen vs, leſt thou, when thou beginneſt to doubt, ſhouldeſt deſpaire: de incarn.c.4.

Sixthly, another lye wherewith the Frier ſlaundereth Caluine is this, that he ſhould ſay, that Chriſt was, re ipſa peccator, a ſinner indeed: non tantum noſtrorum, ſed propriorum peccatorum reum, not guiltie onely of our ſinnes, but of his owne: p.462. Error ſeu falſ.9.

Firſt, Caluine onely ſaith: Oportuit eum ſiſti ad dei tribunal, vt cunctorum noſtrorum maleficiorum reum: Hee was to ſtand before Gods iudgement ſeate, as guiltie of all our ſinnes. Hee tooke vpon him our perſon, and vndertooke our ſinnes; as the Prophet ſaith, Iſay 53.6. God hath laid vpon him the iniquitie of vs all: And the Apoſtle ſaith, He was made ſinne for vs, that knew no ſinne, that we ſhould be made righteouſneſſe in him. As we are ſinners in our ſelues, yet made righteous by imputation of his righteouſneſſe; ſo Chriſt being righteous in himſelfe, was a ſinner for vs, and in our perſon by imputation of our ſinnes. This is neither hereſie nor blaſphemie.

Secondly, Damaſcene hath a diſtinction to this purpoſe: that there is οἰκείωσις φυσικὴ, ϗ προσωπικὴ, an appropriation naturall and perſonall; the naturall appropriations in Chriſt are ſuch, as hee receiued together with our nature: the perſonall, which agreed not to him, but as hee tooke vpon him our perſon, as to be forſaken, to bee accurſed, lib.3.de fid.c.25. ſo Chriſt in our perſon ſtood as guiltie before God.

Error ſeu falſ.10. Seuenthly, he challengeth Caluine to ſay, Quod Chriſtum Deus exhorreret, deteſtaretur,&c. That God hated, deteſted and abhorred Chriſt: *Fenard.*pag.468. Caluine ſaith not ſo, but thus; Species Chriſto obiecta eſt, quaſi Deo aduerſo,&c. It ſo ſeemed vnto Chriſt (for that moment) as though God were his aduerſarie, in c.26.Matth. Now it is one thing for God to bee an enemie indeed, another to bee felt and feared for a time as an enemie: Iob complaineth in the bitterneſſe of his ſoule of God, He counteth me as one of his enemies, Iob 19.11. Though Iob ſo feared, yet neither was God his enemie, nor he as one of Gods enemies, yet beloued of God: ſo Chriſt was alwaies the beloued Son of God, yet in that inſtant, the puniſhment of our ſinnes lying vpon him, he felt the wrath of God as of an enemie. 2. This is agreeable to the Apoſtle, who ſaith, that Chriſt vpon the croſſe hath ſlaine hatred in himſelfe, Epheſ.2.16. but otherwiſe, how hath hee ſlaine it, but by bearing it for vs. 3. Beda ſaith, 3.ad Galat. Quid mirum ſi maledictum eſt Deo, quod odit Deus,&c. No maruell, if that bee curſed of God, which God hateth: Chriſt then vndergoing the curſe and malediction, did beare alſo the hatred. 4. Here then theſe conſiderations are neceſſarie, 1. that Chriſt was not wholly or finally accurſed, hated or forſaken of God, but ex parte, in part, and for a time: 2. that it was rather in Chriſts ſenſe and feeling, then in Gods reiecting of him: 3. that Chriſt in himſelfe was alwaies beloued and bleſſed of God: he ſtood onely accurſed for vs by reaſon of our ſinnes laid vpon him: as Auguſtine ſaith, Benedictus in iuſtitia ſua; maledictus ob peccata noſtra: Bleſſed in his innocencie, curſed for our iniquitie, lib.14.contr.Fauſt.ad c.12.

Epheſ.2.16.

Error ſeu falſ.11. Eightly, he belieth Caluin to ſay, Patrem reipſa filium ſuum, cùm pateretur, deſeruiſſe: That the father did truly and indeed forſake his ſonne, when he ſuffered, pag.472.

Caluine ſo ſaith not: his words are theſe, Alienationem Dei mente concepit, ſicut ſenſus dictabat: He conceiued in his mind, that he was alienated from God, according to his preſent ſenſe and feeling: in c.27.Matth.verſ.46. Nec verò ficte conqueritur ſe à patre derelictum: Neither doth he fainedlie complaine that he was forſaken of God, Inſtit.lib. 2. c.16.ſect.12. It is one thing to be indeed forſaken finally and totally of God; another, ſo to thinke and conceiue for the time: Dauid ſaid in his haſte, I am caſt out of thy ſight, Pſalm.31.22. Yet was he not caſt wholly out: for it followeth, Yet thou heardeſt the voice of my prayer: So Beda witneſſeth in 15.Marc. Vt homo loquitur meos circumferens metus, quod in periculis poſiti à Deo nos deſeri putamus: He ſpeaketh as a man bearing about in himſelfe our feare; becauſe being in danger, we thinke wee are forſaken: the ſame ſaith Caluin, and no otherwiſe, that Chriſt truely complained in his owne ſenſe, that he was forſaken of God; yet God in his eternall purpoſe neuer did forſake him.

Pſalm.31.22.

Error ſeu falſ.12. In the ninth place, the Frier obiecteth, that Caluine ſhould affirme, that Chriſt deſpaired: pag.480. Caluines words are theſe: Abſurdum videtur elapſam Chriſto deſperationis vocem,&c. It may ſeeme abſurd, that a voice or word of deſperation fell from Chriſt, the anſwere is eaſie, that this deſperation proceeded from the ſenſe of the fleſh, in cap. Matth.27.

Firſt, Frier Feuardentius needed not to haue taken ſuch exception againſt Caluine for theſe words, ſeeing his fellow Frier Verus hath the like: nay, he ſaith more, Non ſolum ſupplicium à nobis meritum, verum etiam deſperationem noſtram in ſe tranſtulit: Chriſt did not onely take vpon himſelfe our deſerued puniſhment, but alſo our deſperation: And againe, Vt deſperationem deſperatione, mortem morte, infernum inferno vinceret: That he might ouercome deſperation with deſperation, death by death, hell with hell, lib.4.in Matth.27.

Secondly, he reporteth M. Caluins words otherwiſe then they are: for thus he writeth: Sed abſurdũ videtur Chriſto elapſam eſſe deſperationis vocẽ: ſolutio facilis eſt, quanquam ſenſus carnis exitium apprehenderet, fixam tamen ſtetiſſe fidẽ eius in corde, qua Deũ præſentem intuitus eſt, de cuius abſentia conqueritur: It ſeemeth abſurd, that a voice of deſperation ſhould fall from Chriſt: the ſolution is eaſie; although the ſenſe of the fleſh did apprehend deſtruction, yet faith was fixed in his heart, whereby hee did behold God as preſent, of whoſe abſence he complaineth. And againe, Diſcrimen notauimus inter naturæ ſenſum, & fidei notitiam,&c. We haue noted a difference betweene the ſenſe of nature, and the notice of faith: ſo that nothing hindreth, but that Chriſt both in his mind might conceiue an alienation of God, according to his common ſenſe, and yet together by faith, did hold or reteine God to be mercifull: Thus we ſee, how maliciouſlie this Frier clippeth and culleth, changeth and turneth Caluins words, contrary to his owne mind: he is farre from aſcribing deſpaire vnto Chriſt; but only affirmeth that he was tempted of the infirmitie of his fleſh: Cum deſperatione luctatus eſt, non tamen victus, neque enim qui deſperati ſunt poſſunt Deum appellare ſuum: he did wraſtle with deſpaire, but was not ouercome; for they that are deſperate cannot call God, their God, in Matth.24.v.46.

Damaſcene affirmeth as much, that Chriſt was tempted of his naturall infirmitie, but ſtrengthened ned by the diuine will: and theſe were, φυσικῆς δειλίας τὰ ῥήματα. the words of his naturall feare or infirmitie, *lib.3.de fid.c.*18. And though from vs ſuch words cannot proceede without ſinne, yet we muſt ſo thinke of the integritie of Chriſts nature, that he had the very force and fulneſſe of humane affections, yet without corruption, though we be not able to iudge of it: as Auguſtine ſaith, that we cannot iudge de moribus ſanctorum, of the manners of the Saintes by our ſelues, Sicut de ciborum ſuauitate febrientes iudicare non ſinimus, wee do not ſuffer thoſe that are ſicke of feuers, to iudge of the taſte or ſweetneſſe of meate: *contr.Fauſt.lib.22.c.*48. If we muſt not meaſure the acts of the Saints by our owne, how much more vnable is the corruption of our fleſh to comprehend the perfection of Chriſts humane nature: So then it is euident, that this is but a frierly tricke, and a lowde lie, that either Caluine or any other Proteſtant beſide chargeth Chriſt with deſpaire.

Error ſeu falſ. 13.

In the tenth place this doctrine is charged with a great abſurditie, or rather blaſphemie, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer the death of the ſoule or the ſecond death: *Feuard.*p.453.lin.3. which is contrary to the Scriptures: which euery where teſtifie of Chriſt, 1. That hee is life, and gaue life to the world, Ioh.1.3. how then could he die the death of the ſoule? *Feuard.*297.l.19. 2. It is alſo contrary to reaſon: for ſeeing as the departure of the ſoule is the death of the bodie; ſo the departure of God is the death of the ſoule: as Auguſtine ſaith, Deus amiſſus mors animæ, anima emiſſa mors corporis: God being loſt is the death of the ſoule, the ſoule being ſent out is the death of the bodie, &c. *de verb.Domin.ſerm.*5. Chriſt being perſonally vnited to God, could not die the death of the ſoule, *Feuard.*pag. 474.l.19. Thirdly, the fathers make but two deaths of the ſoule: the firſt is ſinne in this life, the other damnation in the next, but neither of theſe agree to Chriſt. Auguſtine ſaith, *Epiſtol.*99. Certè anima Chriſti, nullo mortificata peccato, vel damnatione punita eſt,&c. Surely the ſoule of Chriſt was neither mortified with ſinne, nor puniſhed with damnation; for which two cauſes the death of the ſoule is vnderſtood: and Fulgentius ſaith, Anima Chriſti inferni doloribus non torquebatur: Chriſts ſoule was not tormented in hell, *Feuard.pag.*357.*lin.*26.

1. Contra. Firſt, we willingly giue conſent to theſe Scriptures, reaſons, and fathers, that Chriſt cannot be ſaid in any ſuch ſenſe to die the death of the ſoule, either by ſinne or damnation, either by a voluntary or neceſſary ſeparation from God: therefore all that labour may be ſpared, to accumulate reaſons, or multiplie teſtimonies of fathers, to free Chriſt from ſuch death of the ſoule, which without blaſphemie cannot be affirmed of Chriſt.

Secondly, though the concluſion be granted, yet the premiſſes are too weake to enforce it: firſt, it followeth not, Chriſt is life in his ſoule: Ergo his ſoule died not: as it is no conſequent, Chriſts body giueth life, Ergo, it died not: the contrary rather is inferred, that Chriſts fleſh by dying, gaue life to the world, Iohn 6.51. Secondly, it is no good argument, Chriſts ſoule was neuer ſeparated, but perſonally vnited vnto the word, Ergo, it died not: for his body was alwayes perſonally vnited to the ſoule ὑποστατικῶς, though not τοπικῶς, as Damaſcene ſaith, *cap.*27. Hypoſtatically, though not locallie: ſo likewiſe was the body alwayes perſonally vnited to the Godhead, euen then, when it lay in the graue, yet the body died.

Thirdly, neither do we much preſſe or vrge this phraſe of ſpeech, that Chriſt died the death of the ſoule. Firſt, becauſe we finde it not ſo euidently vſed in Scripture. Secondly, and we haue other phraſes as fit to expreſſe the ſufferings of Chriſt in ſoule. Thirdly, for that it may giue occaſion of ſtumbling to the weake, and of gaineſaying and exception to the contrary minded.

Laſtly, yet notwithſtanding, becauſe ſome in defence of this truth haue ſo ſpoken and written, I will briefly ſhew in what tolerable ſenſe Chriſt is affirmed to die in the ſoule: and that there is another death of the ſoule, then either by ſinne or damnation.

Firſt, as the body is not ſaid onely to dye, when the ſoule departeth from it, but when it is preſſed with dangerous and deepe afflictions, which threaten death: ſo in like ſenſe the ſoule may be ſaid after a ſort to die, not only, when it is finally ſeparated from God, but perplexed and troubled with the horror and feeling of Gods wrath and indignation. The firſt is proued by Saint Paul, 1.Cor.15.31. He there ſaith, I dye daily: that is in reſpect of his great afflictions and perſecutions, that threatned death: otherwiſe the body by the ſeparation of the ſoule dieth but once, and not daily: Thus Chriſt then in ſome ſort is affirmed to die in ſoule, not in any ſeparation made betweene his ſoule and God, but in the feeling and fearing of Gods indignation, which in the reprobate is the forerunner of their finall ſeparation.

1.Cor.15.31.

Secondly, whereas the Lord threatneth Adam thus: In the day that thou eateſt thereof, morte moriemini, ye ſhall die the death: Geneſ.2.17. This muſt be vnderſtoode of the death of the ſoule: as Felix. epiſtol.ad Petrum Antiochen. expoundeth it: Adam quo die comedit ex ligno in ipſo ſecundum animam mortuus, nam ipſius corporis mors poſt 930. annos contigit: Adam the ſame day hee did eate of the tree, died according to his ſoule; for the death of his body followed 930. yeares after: and this death of the ſoule which Adam incurred, was not his ſinne, but cauſed by it, for his diſobedience in eating was puniſhed by this death: this death of his ſoule was a puniſhment of the firſt death by ſinne: And S. Ambroſe well noteth this difference betweene, morte mori, and vita mori: vita moritur, qui viuit corpore, ſed actu moritur ſuo, He in liuing dieth, that liueth in bodie; but dieth in his act or worke: as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1.Tim.5.6. She that liueth in pleaſure, is dead, while ſhe liueth: but to die the death, is to die both in body and ſoule: *de paradiſ.c.*9. Neither was this death of the ſoule, whereinto

1.Tim.5.6.

Adam fell, actuall condemnation for euer; for Adam was not condemned but ſaued by faith in Chriſt: Ergo, by this death of the ſoule, a third kinde is ſignified, namely, the feare or debt, horror or danger of the proper death of the ſoule, which is condemnation: yet of Chriſts ſoule no ſuch death can be affirmed, by the feare, doubt, horror, debt, or danger of damnation, as it may be of ours, but onely by the feeling and fearing of Gods wrath and indignation: as is ſhewed before, and ſtill I affirme, that Chriſts ſoule in any ſenſe is very improperly ſaid to dye.

Thirdly, this threatning of Adam, Thou ſhalt die the death, was truly performed in Chriſt: but if this death to Adam threatned be the death of the ſoule, and not of the body, as I haue proued, becauſe Adams bodie died not in that day, &c. how could the death of Adams ſoule bee truely performed in Chriſts bodie? ſo that this maketh a ſtrong argument, to proue a kinde of dying in ſoule in Chriſt: that death which was to Adam threatned, Chriſt ſuffered: I thinke this will be confeſſed; that it was truely performed in Chriſt, but not in his body, Ergo in his ſoule: And ſo it followeth in the epiſtle of Felix before alleaged: Itaque Deus donum dimidiatum non fecit, ſed totum ſimul Adam ex virginis vtero ſumpſit, vt etiam perditum totum ſaluum faceret: God gaue not halfe a gift, but he tooke whole Adam of the virgins wombe to ſaue the whole, that was loſt: the reaſon thus ſtandeth: to redeeme the whole, Chriſt muſt die in the whole, for he tooke the whole to redeeme the whole; if it had not been needfull to die or ſuffer in the whole, he needed not to haue taken the whole; but Chriſt redeemed the whole, Ergo, he died in the whole. Thus then it appeareth, how both without feare of ſinne or damnation, a kinde of death may be affirmed to haue been ſuffered by Chriſt in his ſoule: which phraſe of ſpeech notwithſtanding vpon the reaſons before alleaged, I wiſh rather to be more ſparingly vſed, or rather altogether forborne and diſcontinued.

Thus haue I ſhewed what vntrue accuſations this holy truth of the ſufferings of Chriſt is charged with, and how it is againe diſcharged: for we neither affirme; 1. That Chriſts prayers in the Garden were vniuſt or vnholy, but ſober, temperate, godly, onely ſhewing his humane deſire to eſcape death, yet conformable to his fathers will. 2. Or that Chriſt was forgetfull of his office. 3. Or that his bodily death profited not. 4. Or that Chriſt ſuffered all the puniſhments of the damned and reprobate. 5. Or that Chriſt doubted of his ſaluation. 6. Or that hee was verilie, and in deed a ſinner. 7. Or that God in deed hated, and deteſted Chriſt. 8. Nor yet that Chriſt was indeed forſaken of God. 9. Nor that Chriſt deſpaired. 10 Nor that he ſuffered the true and proper death of the ſoule. Theſe ten ſeuerall chalenges, whereby they practiſe to make this doctrine odious, I haue anſwered: and all thoſe blaſphemies, which they would faſten vpon vs, and Chriſts holy cauſe, wee wipe them off, as Paul did the Viper, without any hurt to our cauſe, no more then the Viper did to the Apoſtles hand.

Wherefore, that the truth may appeare to the ſight of all men of vnderſtanding, I will ſpeake of euery thing diſtinctly, and deuide this queſtion of Chriſts inward ſufferings into theſe conſiderations following.

1. Whether the bodily paſſion of Chriſt were ſufficient for the redemption of the world.
2. Of the feare and aſtoniſhment of Chriſt, and the cauſe thereof.
3. Whether he ſuffered properly and immediatly in ſoule.
4. Whether he ſuffered the ſorrowes and paines of hell.

And to this queſtion is adioyned as an appendix, whether hell fire and torment bee onely corporall.

5. Whether Chriſt ſtoode before God, as guiltie of our ſinnes in our perſon.
6. Whether in Chriſt there were any horror or perplexitie of conſcience for the ſinne of the world, which he bare.
7. Whether Chriſt in Gods iuſtice ought to haue dyed for vs as our ſurety.

Hereunto is added as an appendix, whether Chriſts blood were giuen to the diuell as a price for our redemption.

8. Whether Chriſt felt the wrath of God in his ſoule.
9. Whether he truely complained as forſaken of God.
10. Whether he did beare the curſe of God in his ſoule.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE BODILIE death of Chriſt were ſufficient for mans redemption.

The Papiſts.

34.Error. THis is ſo affirmed by the Rhemiſts: Annot. Mat. 27. ſect. 3. Bellar. c. 8. de Chriſti anim. arg. 1. Feuar. dialog. 5. de Chriſto patiente. p. 439. The leaſt droppe of blood, the leaſt teare, the leaſt grone in Chriſt had been ſufficient in reſpect of the dignitie of the ſufferer: Feuard. p. 450. they reaſon thus.

Argum. 1. The Scriptures euery where aſcribe our whole redemption to the death, and blood of Chriſt: Epheſ. 1. 7. We haue redemption thorough his blood. Coloſſ. 1. 20. He hath ſet at peace thorough the blood of his croſſe, &c. Hebr. 9. 12. Chriſt by his owne blood entred once into the holy place: and euery where the Scripture ſetteth forth the death and blood of Chriſt: Ergo, that onely was ſufficient, without any other ſuffering: Bellarm. ibid. argum. 1. Feuard. p. 441.

*Anſw.*1. If theſe places be litterally preſſed, for the ſufficiency of Chriſts blood only, firſt then all his ſufferings before in his life, his hunger, thirſt, buffetings, reproches, ſlaunders were ſuperfluous. Secondly, then his fleſh alſo ſhould be excluded, which is not his blood: for his fleſh is our meate, his blood our drinke, Iohn 6.55. Thirdly, ſeeing Chriſt ſhed not onely blood vpon the croſſe but water: as S. Iohn ſaith, he came by water and blood, 1. Iohn 5.6. if blood bee ſtrictly taken, then the water was ſpilt in vaine out of his ſide: wherefore by the blood of Chriſt by a figuratiue ſpeech, the reſt of his painefull ſufferings both in bodie and ſoule are inſinuated.

1.Ioh.5.6.

2. For if blood be taken ſimplie, we ſhall finde, that it was no part of his death, for his ſide was pearced after he had giuen vp the Ghoſt, yea after he had ſaid, it is finiſhed, that is the worke of our redemption: Iohn 19.30.34. And ſo S. Ambroſe ſaith, Poſt mortem, percuſſus eſt non ante, vt exitus eius voluntarius non neceſſarius videretur: He was pierced after death, not before, that his departure might ſeeme voluntary, not neceſſary. In deede his croſſe was embrued with his blood before, which the nayles forced from his hands and feete, and the thornes from his temples, and the whipping before from his ſide: but that blood which iſſued forth with water, which Saint Iohn eſpecially noteth, came out of his ſide after the ſurrendring of his ſpirit: which was the moſt notable part of his bodilie ſufferings as Origene ſaith: Petra niſi fuiſſet percuſſa non dabat aquas, ſic percuſſus Chriſtus in cruce noui teſtamenti fontes produxit: Vnleſſe the rocke had bin ſmitten, it had yeelded no water, and Chriſt being ſtricken, brought forth the fountaines or ſtreames of the new Teſtament: *Hom.*11. in Exod.

Ioh.19.30.34.

3. Neither is this vnuſuall in Scripture: by one part to expreſſe the whole: as when the word is ſaid to be made fleſh, Ioh.1.14. the ſoule is vnderſtoode: for Chriſt tooke not a ſoule without a body. Likewiſe Hebr.10.5. A body thou haſt ordained: certainely a body with a ſoule alſo: and hee tooke the ſeede of Abraham, Hebr.2.16. that is both humane fleſh and ſoule: and he was made of the ſeede of Dauid according to the fleſh, Rom.1.3. The Apoſtle hereby expreſſeth the whole humane nature of Chriſt: In like manner in the death of Chriſts bodie, ſuffering of his fleſh, ſhedding of his blood, euen the paſſions of his ſoule are comprehended.

Ioh.1.14.
Heb.10.5.
Heb.2.16.

4. Wherefore, as in theſe places alleaged, we reade the blood of Chriſt, or the blood of the croſſe, ſo other where in more generall tearmes the Apoſtles call it the dying of Chriſt, 1.Cor.4.10. the ſufferings of Chriſt, 1.Pet.4.13.

1.Cor.4.10.

5. S. Ambroſe giueth this reaſon, why the ſoule of Chriſt is ſignified by the blood: Caro ſaluatoris pro ſalute corporis, ſanguis pro anima noſtra effuſus eſt: ſanguis enim pro anima, ſicut præfiguratum eſt in Moſe. in 1.Cor.11. The fleſh of our Sauior for the ſauing of ÿ body, his blood was ſhed for our ſoule: for the blood is the life or the ſoule, as was prefigured in Moſes: for ſo it is written, the blood is the life, Geneſ.9.4. 6. Firſt, that the blood of Chriſt in Scripture is ſaid to redeeme, cleanſe, ſanctifie vs, &c. it is euident: but by blood, we muſt vnderſtand the other ſufferings and partes of Chriſt, as I haue ſhewed before: if blood alone ſufficed, what did Chriſts fleſh? what did the water, whereby Chriſt came, and not onely by blood, 1.Ioh.5.8. or Chriſts ſpirite, which he ſurrendred vnto God, are they excluded? Secondly, Chriſts blood we confeſſe in Gods omnipotencie to haue been ſufficient to redeeme vs, though but one droppe had been ſhed; but it ſo ſtoode not with the decree and purpoſe of God: wherefore from his power to his will, from his omnipotencie to his ordinance, from that he can doe, to that which he will doe, the argument followeth not.

1.Ioh.5.8.

7. Neither is an vnregenerate ſoule onely called by the name of fleſh in Scripture, as Bellarmine imagineth, *lib.*5. *de ſtat. peccat. c.*7.2. For of Adam and Eue it is ſaid, before ſinne entred, or the ſoule was vnregenerate, or corrupted, they two ſhall be one fleſh, Geneſ.2.24. which ſignifieth not onely a coniunction of body, which is in wicked couples, but an vnitie of ſoule and affection: and where S. Paul ſaith, We are members of his body, of his fleſh, and of his bones, Epheſ.5.30. ſpeaketh the Apoſtle of the vnregenerate parte? Likewiſe, where the Scripture ſaith: Videbit omnis caro ſalutare Dei: All fleſh ſhall ſee the ſaluation of God, Luk.3.6. S. Auguſtine proueth by this place, that the ſoule is comprehended vnder the name of fleſh, *lib.*83. *qu.q.*80. And it is euident, that the regenerate and faithfull are here vnderſtoode: for the vnbeleeuers and vnfaithfull cannot ſee the ſaluation of God. Ambroſe alſo thus expoundeth theſe words of Chriſt, the ſpirit is ready, the fleſh is weake: Vt in ſpiritu Deum, in carne hominem ſignificaret: To ſignifie God in the ſpirit, and man in the fleſh: in 8. ad Rom. Chriſts whole humanitie then is ſignified by fleſh.

Epheſ.5.30.
Luk.3.6.

8. It is euident, that by Chriſts fleſh, in Scripture his whole humanitie, and ſo conſequently his ſoule is expreſſed. Firſt, the Apoſtle thus teſtifieth, Rom.1.3. Chriſt was made of the ſeede of Dauid according to the fleſh, and declared mightilie to be the ſonne of God, touching the ſpirit of ſanctification, &c. Here whole Chriſt is deſcribed vnto vs as God and man: the ſoule then of Chriſt is comprehended vnder the name of fleſh, or elſe it is excluded, and ſo the Apoſtle ſhould ſet before vs an vnperfect Chriſt: But it will be here obiected, that, if the ſoule be here comprehended vnder the name of fleſh, it would follow, that the ſoule is deriued ex traduce, from the parents, becauſe Chriſt is ſaid to be made of the ſeede of Dauid according to the fleſh. Hereunto I anſwere: 1. that Origen indeed by reaſon of this doubt, wil not haue Chriſts ſoule comprehended vnder the terme of fleſh, but thinketh it to be vnderſtood in the next clauſe, touching the ſpirit of ſanctification, by the holineſſe thereof alwaies adhering to the ſpirit. 2. But I rather allow Beza his iudgement, who thinketh the whole humanitie of Chriſt conſiſting of ſoule and body to be here ſignified, and yet he will haue onely the bodie and fleſh of Chriſt to be aſſumed and taken of the virgin. 3. Chriſt then is ſaid to be made of the ſeed of Dauid according to the fleſh, that is in his ſoule and body, but not after the ſame manner: his fleſh hee receiued of the Virgin Marie, which came of Dauid, originaliter, originally and materially: his ſoule only occaſionaliter, as by the occaſion of the bodie: his fleſh being conceiued in and of the Virgine Marie, then was his bleſſed ſoule infuſed into that holy bodie ſo conceiued: ſo alſo, whereas Saint Peter ſaith, he was put to death concerning the fleſh: both bodie and ſoule are here implied, yet not to die in the ſame manner: the bodie died properly and verily, the ſoule occaſionally onely, (that I may ſo ſpeake) being diſſolued from the bodie by the death thereof; ſo that whereas in another place I ſeeme to denie, the ſoule of Chriſt to be vnderſtood vnder the name of the fleſh, in either of theſe places giuen in inſtance: I meane in reſpect of the manner onely: that the ſoule is not ſo comprehended vnder the name of fleſh, as to haue the like beginning with it in the one place, or the like end in the other: ſo that the ſubſtance of the ſoule is included, but not the qualitie, propertie, or manner of the beginning, or end thereof: Therefore a certaine cauiller needed not to haue obiected herein temeritie and inconſtancie, or groſſe contradiction, if he had as friendly weighed my meaning, as he would haue his owne words in the like caſe conſtrued. Auguſtine, where the Scripture ſaith, The Word was made fleſh; by fleſh, vnderſtandeth the whole nature of man conſiſting of bodie and ſoule: A parte totum, carne nominata intelligitur homo, By a part the whole, the fleſh being named, man is vnderſtood, &c. de ciuit. Dei. lib.14.c.2. And yet he is of opinion, that Chriſt had not his ſoule from Adam by propagation, ne per illius hominis inobedientiam peccator conſtituatur: leſt that he by the diſobedience of that man, might alſo be ſuppoſed to be a ſinner: de Geneſ. ad liter. lib.10.c.18. Like as then theſe two in Auguſtines opinion, without any contradiction may ſtand together, that Chriſt was made fleſh of Dauid, both in reſpect of his bodie and ſoule, and yet his ſoule was not deriued by propagation from Dauid; ſo is the contradiction before obiected healed, as hath been ſhewed: vnder fleſh then in this place the ſoule is alſo vnderſtood in reſpect of the being, but not of the like beginning.

Lib.14.de ciuit.Dei.c.2. Rom.3.20. Galath.3.11. Heb.2.14.

Secondly to proceed, in other places likewiſe is the ſoule vnderſtood by fleſh, as Auguſtine giueth inſtance in that place. Rom.3.20. by the workes of the law ſhall no fleſh be iuſtified: that is, no man, as the Apoſtle himſelfe expoundeth it: by the workes of the law ſhall no man be iuſtified, &c. Likewiſe, Heb.2.14. For as much as the children were partakers of fleſh and blood he alſo himſelfe tooke part with them: tooke he part with them in the fleſh only, and not in the ſoule alſo? Thirdly, where it is ſaid, the word was made fleſh, the ſoule is not only here by conſequence implied, but properly in the ſignification included. 1. The Apollinariſt heretikes confeſſed humane fleſh in Chriſt, and denied him an humane ſoule, ſupplying it by his diuine ſpirit; they therefore tooke this conſequent not to be neceſſarie: wherefore it is more ſafe to affirme here an incluſiue ſignification, then an excluſiue implication only of the ſoule, becauſe of the hereſie of the Apollinariſts, as we reade of one Euſtathius, a Monothelite heretike, condemned in the Councell, Chalcedon act.1. who affirmed: Hominem non aſſumpſit Chriſtus ſed carnem aſſumpſit, &c. Chriſt tooke not man, but tooke onely fleſh.

Phil.2.7.

2. Saint Paul doth very well expound the Euangeliſts meaning, when he ſaith, Chriſt being in the forme of God, &c. tooke vpon him the forme of a ſeruant, &c. and was found in ſhape as a man, Phil.2.7. This is that which the Euangeliſt ſaith, The word was made fleſh, that is man, and dwelt among vs.

3. Thus the Fathers expound by fleſh in this place the whole humane nature: Cyrill. de incarnat. Vnigenit.c.23. Carnem accipiens ex muliere exijt homo idem ſimul & deus: Chriſt taking fleſh of the woman, came forth man, and the ſame alſo God. Athanaſ. in.9.can. Epheſin. ſynod. Confitemur vnum Chriſtum filium dei ſecundum ſpiritum, filium hominis ſecundum carnem: Wee confeſſe one Chriſt the ſonne of God in the ſpirit, the ſonne of man after the fleſh. Ambroſ. in Pſal 119. vpon theſe words: Particeps ſum omnium timentium te: I am partaker with all thoſe that feare thee: Chriſtus habet participes carnis, quia carnem ſuſcepit, &c. Chriſt hath vs partakers of his fleſh, becauſe hee tooke fleſh; partakers of Baptiſme, becauſe he was baptized, &c. In all theſe places by the fleſh the Fathers vnderſtand the whole humanitie of Chriſt.

Arg. 2. The true ſacrifice for ſinne was ſhadowed and foreſhewed by the ſacrifices of the Law: but thoſe ſacrifices onely foreſhewed a bodily and bloody ſacrifice: Ergo, the true ſacrifice for ſinne was made by the body and blood of the Redeemer. So reaſoneth Bellar. arg.3. Feuardent. p 439. artic.9.

1. Anſw. Firſt, the propoſition if it be generall is falſe: for all the true ſacrifice for ſinne and euery part thereof was not, neither could be ſhadowed forth by the ſacrifices, they onely ſignified the viſible part, which they were apt to expreſſe: the inuiſible part by the viſible ſacrifices of beaſts could not be deſcribed: as the blood of the propitiatory ſacrifice muſt be the blood of the ſonne of God: this the ſacrifices could not point at, nor yet the inuiſible ſuffrings of the ſoule. If the propoſition bee not generall, then the argument concudeth not conſiſting all of particulars. 2. Wee grant alſo the concluſion, if it be but particular, not of the whole true ſacrifice, but of a part: for we confeſſe that the blood of Chriſt was a part of the true ſacrifice, but not the whole: chuſe then, which you will: if the propoſition be generall, we denie it; if particular, it concludeth not.

Leuit.16.8.

2. Secondly, we denie the aſſumption: 1. For in the ſacrifices of the Law there may bee found ſomewhat, which may repreſent the ſuffring of Chriſt in ſoule: as Leuitic.16.8. there were two hee goates preſented vnto the Lord, the one of them was ſacrificed, the other ſent into the wilderneſſe, verſ.21. The ſcape goate may ſignifie Chriſts ſoule, which died not vpon the croſſe as his bodie did. 2. Againe, the holocauſts or burnt offrings which were wholy conſumed and burnt vpon the altar, may betoken the whole and abſolute offring of Chriſt in ſoule and body.

3. Thirdly, though the ſcape or liue goate were not ſacrificed to death, yet was he preſented before the Lord, verſ.8. reconciliation was made by him, verſ.10. the iniquities of the people laid vpon him, verſ.21. So although Chriſts ſoule died not, as his bodie, yet was it in the proper ſuffrings thereof a meane of reconciliation together with the bodie.

4. What though ſome of the Fathers expound the ſcape goate to bee the wicked of the people? yet all are not of that minde, neither the ſame alwayes hold that ſenſe. 1. Origene thus expoundeth, Hom.9. Leuitic. Si ira aſcendit in cor tuum, ſi inuidia &c. paratus eſto, vt abijcias in eremum: If anger riſe into thy heart, if enuie, caſt it forth, and ſend it as the ſcape goate into the deſert, &c. He expoundeth the ſcape goate not to bee wicked men, but carnall affections in good men. 2. It is maniſeſt that the ſcape goate was a figure of Chriſt: for as the ſinnes of the people were put vpon the head of the goate, verſ.21. ſo God did lay vpon Chriſt the ſinnes of vs all, Iſai.53.6. and the prieſt Iſay 53.6.
by this ſcape goate did make reconciliation: wherefore it is but wreſted to ſignifie the wicked: wee muſt take heede that the Fathers fanſies leade vs not from the euident ſenſe of Scripture. 3. Origene himſelfe that is alleaged applieth the ſcape goate vnto the croſſe of Chriſt, Hom.9. in Leuitic. In eo quod dicitur, quia affixit cruci ſuæ poteſtates, ſortem in eis apopompæi compleuit, & tanquam homo paratus abduxit in eremum: In that it is ſaid, he faſtened the powers to his croſſe, &c. he fulfilled in them the lot of the ſcape goate, and as a man ready or prepared carried them into the wilderneſſe. Thus Origene referreth the accompliſhment of that figure of the ſcape goate to the croſſe of Chriſt: who in reſpect of his bodie that died, was not ſo properly that homo paratus, that ready meſſenger: Ergo, in reſpect of his ſoule.

Fifthly, in what ſenſe the ſacrifice of the croſſe is called an holocauſt, Saint Cyprian ſheweth ſerm. de paſſion. Sine hoc holocauſto poterat deus tantum condonaſſe peccatum, &c. God without that holocauſt might haue forgiuen ſo great ſinne, &c. And elſewhere he giueth the reaſon, why he calleth it an holocauſt: Chriſtus totum effudit ſpiritum in cruce vt nos reſpiraremus, quicquid erat humoris aquei reliquum expreſſit vt nos ablueremur, quicquid reſederat in corde ſanguinis emiſit, vt nos confirmaremur: Chriſt did ſhed forth his whole ſpirit vpon the croſſe, that we might be refreſhed, the water that was left in his body he ſent forth, that we might be waſhed: the reſidue of his blood came forth, that wee might be cleanſed, &c. lib. de duplici martyr. Thus Chriſt then made an holocauſt or whole ſacrifice of himſelfe, both in his ſpirit and in his blood.

*Argum.*3. The Sacraments of the Goſpell doe ſet forth vnto vs the memoriall of Chriſts paſſion: but they repreſent not the ſuffrings of Chriſts ſoule, but onely the paſſion of his bodie: Ergo, his bodily paſſions were ſufficient, *Bellar. cap.8. lib.4 de Chriſti anima, argum.3. Feuardent. pag.440. artic.*11.

Anſw. Firſt, for the propoſition, if Chriſts paſſion be taken for the effect of Chriſts croſſe in the remiſſion of ſinnes, it is true, that the ſame is ſealed vnto vs and ſet forth in the Sacraments: but if by Chriſts paſſion all the neceſſarie parts, circumſtances and concurrences of Chriſts croſſe bee implied, the propoſition wanteth his due waight: for therein is not repreſented the Godhead of Chriſt, which was the onely vpholder of his croſſe: nay, all the viſible parts of the croſſe are not expreſſed in the Euchariſt; as the water, which iſſued out of Chriſts ſide. 2. The viſible parts then of Chriſts croſſe are repreſented by the elements, and in theſe viſible parts ſpirituall graces and effects: the inuiſible power of his Godhead and the ſpirituall ſuffrings of his ſoule cannot ſo well by terrene elements bee deſcribed.

Secondly, for the aſſumption: 1. it is not true that the body and blood of Chriſt onely are repreſented in the Euchariſt: for the body and blood of Chriſt is not ſet before vs as dead fleſh or blood without a ſoule: for Chriſt dieth now no more, Rom.6.9. If then the life and ſoule of Chriſt is ſignified Rom.6.9. together with his bodie and blood, why not the ſuffrings alſo of the ſoule? 2. Saint Ambroſe (whom I alleaged before) ſheweth how the ſoule is reſembled by the blood: Sanguis pro anima, ſicut transfiguratum eſt in Moſe: The blood is taken for the ſoule, as it was prefigured in Moſes: in 11. 1. ad Corinth. 3. And therefore it is called calix ſanguinis, the cup of his blood: and by the cup is ſignified not onely the bodily ſuffrings of Chriſt, but his ſoule ſorrowes: as when he prayed to his father, that the cup might paſſe, he did not meane onely his bodily death, but his ſpirituall agonie alſo.

3. Thirdly, the argument may be returned thus: In Baptiſme is ſealed vnto vs the true propitiation for our ſinnes: in Baptiſme is ſealed onely the blood of Chriſt ſhed for vs ſignified by water: Ergo, the blood of Chriſt onely without his fleſh or body is the true propitiation. What other anſwere can here be made, then the ſame which was giuen before, that either all the circumſtances and concurrences of Chriſts paſſion are not ſet forth in Baptiſme, but the effects onely, or that by one part of the croſſe the reſt are expreſſed?

*Argum.*4. The Rhemiſts ſeeme to frame an argument from the nature of a teſtament: Chriſts death (ſay they) *was neceſſary for the full confirmation, ratification and accompliſhment of the new teſtament: Annot. in Hebr.9. verſ.*20. where if their meaning be, that Chriſts death was neceſſary to the confirmation of the teſtament, and that without it could not be ratified, we willingly yeeld: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, a teſtament is confirmed when men are dead, Hebr.9.17. But if they will further preſſe this Heb.9.17.

of Chriſt to be aſſumed and taken of the virgin. 3. Chriſt then is ſaid to be made of the ſeed of Dauid according to the fleſh, that is in his ſoule and body, but not after the ſame manner: his fleſh hee receiued of the Virgin Marie, which came of Dauid, originaliter, originally and materially: his ſoule onely occaſionaliter, as by the occaſion of the bodie: his fleſh being conceiued in and of the Virgine Marie, then was his bleſſed ſoule infuſed into that holy bodie ſo conceiued: ſo alſo, whereas Saint Peter ſaith, he was put to death concerning the fleſh: both bodie and ſoule are here implied, yet not to die in the ſame manner: the bodie died properly and verily, the ſoule occaſionally onely, (that I may ſo ſpeake) being diſſolued from the bodie by the death thereof; ſo that whereas in another place I ſeeme to denie, the ſoule of Chriſt to be vnderſtood vnder the name of the fleſh, in either of theſe places giuen in inſtance: I meane in reſpect of the manner onely: that the ſoule is not ſo comprehended vnder the name of fleſh, as to haue the like beginning with it in the one place, or the like end in the other: ſo that the ſubſtance of the ſoule is included, but not the qualitie, propertie, or manner of the beginning, or end thereof 1. Therefore a certaine cauiller needed not to haue obiected herein temeritie and inconſtancie, or groſſe contradiction, if he had as friendly weighed my meaning, as he would haue his owne words in the like caſe conſtrued. Auguſtine, where the Scripture ſaith, The Word was made fleſh; by fleſh, vnderſtandeth the whole nature of man conſiſting of bodie and ſoule: A parte totum, carne nominata intelligitur homo, By a part the whole, the fleſh being named, man is vnderſtood, &c. de ciuit. Dei. lib. 14.*c.*2. And yet he is of opinion, that Chriſt had not his ſoule from Adam by propagation, ne per illius hominis inobedientiam peccator conſtituatur: leſt that he by the diſobedience of that man, might alſo be ſuppoſed to be a ſinner: *de Geneſ. ad liter. lib.*10.*c.*18. Like as then theſe two in Auguſtines opinion, without any contradiction may ſtand together, that Chriſt was made fleſh of Dauid, both in reſpect of his bodie and ſoule, and yet his ſoule was not deriued by propagation from Dauid; ſo is the contradiction before obiected healed, as hath been ſhewed: vnder fleſh then in this place the ſoule is alſo vnderſtood in reſpect of the being, but not of the like beginning.

Lib.14.de ciuit.Dei.c.2. Rom.3.20. Galath.3.11. Heb.2.14.

Secondly to proceed, in other places likewiſe is the ſoule vnderſtood by fleſh, as Auguſtine giueth inſtance in that place. Rom.3.20. by the workes of the law ſhall no fleſh be iuſtified: that is, no man, as the Apoſtle himſelfe expoundeth it: by the workes of the law ſhall no man be iuſtified, &c. Likewiſe, Heb.2.14. For as much as the children were partakers of fleſh and blood he alſo himſelfe tooke part with them: tooke he part with them in the fleſh only, and not in the ſoule alſo? Thirdly, where it is ſaid, the word was made fleſh, the ſoule is not only here by conſequence implied, but properly in the ſignification included. 1. The Apollinariſt heretikes confeſſed humane fleſh in Chriſt, and denied him an humane ſoule, ſupplying it by his diuine ſpirit; they therefore tooke this conſequent not to be neceſſarie: wherefore it is more ſafe to affirme here an incluſiue ſignification, then an excluſiue implication only of the ſoule, becauſe of the hereſie of the Apollinariſts, as we reade of one Euſtathius, a Monothelite heretike, condemned in the Councell, *Chalcedon act.*1. who affirmed: Hominem non aſſumpſit Chriſtus ſed carnem aſſumpſit, &c. Chriſt tooke not man, but tooke onely fleſh.

Phil.2.7.

2. Saint Paul doth very well expound the Euangeliſts meaning, when he ſaith, Chriſt being in the forme of God, &c. tooke vpon him the forme of a ſeruant, &c. and was found in ſhape as a man, Phil.2.7. This is that which the Euangeliſt ſaith, The word was made fleſh, that is man, and dwelt among vs.

3. Thus the Fathers expound by fleſh in this place the whole humane nature: *Cyrill. de incarnat. Vnigenit.c.*23. Carnem accipiens ex muliere exijt homo idem ſimul & deus: Chriſt taking fleſh of the woman, came forth man, and the ſame alſo God. *Athanaſ. in.*9.can. Epheſin. ſynod. Confitemur vnum Chriſtum filium dei ſecundum ſpiritum, filium hominis ſecundum carnem: Wee confeſſe one Chriſt the ſonne of God in the ſpirit, the ſonne of man after the fleſh. Ambroſ. in Pſal 119. vpon theſe words: Particeps ſum omnium timentium te: I am partaker with all thoſe that feare thee: Chriſtus habet participes carnis, quia carnem ſuſcepit, &c. Chriſt hath vs partakers of his fleſh, becauſe hee tooke fleſh; partakers of Baptiſme, becauſe he was baptized, &c. In all theſe places by the fleſh the Fathers vnderſtand the whole humanitie of Chriſt.

*Arg.*2. The true ſacrifice for ſinne was ſhadowed and foreſhewed by the ſacrifices of the Law: but thoſe ſacrifices onely foreſhewed a bodily and bloody ſacrifice: Ergo, the true ſacrifice for ſinne was made by the body and blood of the Redeemer. So reaſoneth *Bellar.arg.*3.Feuardent.p 439.*artic.*9.

1. Anſw. Firſt, the propoſition if it be generall is falſe: for all the true ſacrifice for ſinne and euery part thereof was not, neither could be ſhadowed forth by the ſacrifices, they onely ſignified the viſible part, which they were apt to expreſſe: the inuiſible part by the viſible ſacrifices of beaſts could not be deſcribed: as the blood of the propitiatory ſacrifice muſt be the blood of the ſonne of God: this the ſacrifices could not point at, nor yet the inuiſible ſuffrings of the ſoule. If the propoſition bee not generall, then the argument concudeth not conſiſting all of particulars. 2. Wee grant alſo the concluſion, if it be but particular, not of the whole true ſacrifice, but of a part: for we confeſſe that the blood of Chriſt was a part of the true ſacrifice, but not the whole: chuſe then, which you will: if the propoſition be generall, we denie it; if particular, it concludeth not.

Leuit.16.8.

2. Secondly, we denie the aſſumption: 1. For in the ſacrifices of the Law there may bee found ſomewhat, which may repreſent the ſuffring of Chriſt in ſoule: as Leuitic.16.8. there were two hee goates preſented vnto the Lord, the one of them was ſacrificed, the other ſent into the wilderneſſe, verſ.21. The ſcape goate may ſignifie Chriſts ſoule, which died not vpon the croſſe as his bodie did. 2. Againe, the holocauſts or burnt offrings which were wholy conſumed and burnt vpon the

PAGINATION

Fifthly, in what ſenſe the ſacrifice of the croſſe is called an holocauſt, Saint Cyprian ſheweth ſerm. de paſſion. Sine hoc holocauſto poterat deus tantum condonaſſe peccatum, &c. God without that holocauſt might haue forgiuen ſo great ſinne, &c. And elſewhere he giueth the reaſon, why he calleth it an holocauſt: Chriſtus totum effudit ſpiritum in cruce vt nos reſpiraremus, quicquid erat humoris aquei reliquum expreſſit vt nos ablueremur, quicquid reſederat in corde ſanguinis emiſit, vt nos confirmaremur: Chriſt did ſhed forth his whole ſpirit vpon the croſſe, that we might be refreſhed, the water that was left in his body he ſent forth, that we might be waſhed: the reſidue of his blood came forth, that wee might be cleanſed, &c. lib. de duplici martyr. Thus Chriſt then made an holocauſt or whole ſacrifice of himſelfe, both in his ſpirit and in his blood.

*Argum.*3. The Sacraments of the Goſpell doe ſet forth vnto vs the memoriall of Chriſts paſſion: but they repreſent not the ſuffrings of Chriſts ſoule, but onely the paſſion of his bodie: Ergo, his bodily paſſions were ſufficient, *Bellar.cap.*8. *lib.*4 *de Chriſti anima, argum.*3. *Feuardent.pag.*440. *artic.*11.

Anſw. Firſt, for the propoſition, if Chriſts paſſion be taken for the effect of Chriſts croſſe in the remiſſion of ſinnes, it is true, that the ſame is ſealed vnto vs and ſet forth in the Sacraments: but if by Chriſts paſſion all the neceſſarie parts, circumſtances and concurrences of Chriſts croſſe bee implied, the propoſition wanteth his due waight: for therein is not repreſented the Godhead of Chriſt, which was the onely vpholder of his croſſe: nay, all the viſible parts of the croſſe are not expreſſed in the Euchariſt; as the water, which iſſued out of Chriſts ſide. 2. The viſible parts then of Chriſts croſſe are repreſented by the elements, and in theſe viſible parts ſpirituall graces and effects: the inuiſible power of his Godhead and the ſpirituall ſuffrings of his ſoule cannot ſo well by terrene elements bee deſcribed.

Secondly, for the aſſumption: 1. it is not true that the body and blood of Chriſt onely are repreſented in the Euchariſt: for the body and blood of Chriſt is not ſet before vs as dead fleſh or blood without a ſoule: for Chriſt dieth now no more, Rom.6.9. If then the life and ſoule of Chriſt is ſignified together with his bodie and blood, why not the ſuffrings alſo of the ſoule? 2. Saint Ambroſe (whom I alleaged before) ſheweth how the ſoule is reſembled by the blood: Sanguis pro anima, ſicut transfiguratum eſt in Moſe: The blood is taken for the ſoule, as it was prefigured in Moſes: in 11.1. ad Corinth. 3. And therefore it is called calix ſanguinis, the cup of his blood: and by the cup is ſignified not onely the bodily ſuffrings of Chriſt, but his ſoule ſorrowes: as when he prayed to his father, that the cup might paſſe, he did not meane onely his bodily death, but his ſpirituall agonie alſo. — Rom.6.9.

3. Thirdly, the argument may be returned thus: In Baptiſme is ſealed vnto vs the true propitiation for our ſinnes: in Baptiſme is ſealed onely the blood of Chriſt ſhed for vs ſignified by water: Ergo, the blood of Chriſt onely without his fleſh or body is the true propitiation. What other anſwere can here be made, then the ſame which was giuen before, that either all the circumſtances and concurrences of Chriſts paſſion are not ſet forth in Baptiſme, but the effects onely, or that by one part of the croſſe the reſt are expreſſed?

*Argum.*4. The Rhemiſts ſeeme to frame an argument from the nature of a teſtament: Chriſts death (ſay they) *was neceſſary for the full confirmation, ratification and accompliſhment of the new teſtament: Annot. in Hebr.*9.*verſ.*20. where if their meaning be, that Chriſts death was neceſſary to the confirmation of the teſtament, and that without it could not be ratified, we willingly yeeld: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, a teſtament is confirmed when men are dead, Hebr.9.17. But if they will further preſſe this ſimilitude, and reaſon thus: A mans death is ſufficient to confirme his teſtament, without any other — Heb.9.17.

ſuffrings in ſoule, therefore Chriſts bodily death was ſufficient to confirme his teſtament: we doe then further anſwere as followeth.

Great difference betweene Chriſts teſtament and others.

Anſw. Firſt, ſimilitudes muſt not be forced to agree in euery point, as in this example there is great difference betweene the teſtaments of men, and the teſtament of Chriſt: firſt, the reaſon why mens teſtaments ſtand, is giuen in the lawe, Quia aliud velle non poſſunt: Becauſe they can now will no more; Conſtantin. Cod. lib.1.tit.5.l.1. but Chriſt is able to will ſtill. Secondly, it is a rule in law, that Scripta voluntas diſpoſitiuè valet, non enunciatiuè: A written will is of force in diſpoſing, but not in affirming, Diocletian. Cod. lib.3.tit.38.leg.10. that is, whatſoeuer is affirmed in a will, is not alwayes receiued; but whatſoeuer is bequeathed or diſpoſed, ſtandeth: but it were blaſphemie to ſay, that Chriſts teſtament doth not hold affirmatiuely. Thirdly, by the law a will ſtandeth not, ſi liberos praterierit in tabulis, if a man doe paſſe by his ſonnes in his will, and bequeath them nothing, Cod. lib.6.tit.12.leg.1. Alexander. yet Chriſt in his teſtament reiected the Iewes, and receiued the Gentiles: yet who will ſay, that his will herein ſtandeth not? Fourthly, if any man did contra leges teſtari, aut iuri publico derogare, did make a will contrary to the publike lawes, it was of no force, Diocletian. Cod. lib.6.tit.23.leg.13. But Chriſts teſtament did derogate and abrogate the ceremoniall lawes of Moſes, yet notwithſtanding remaineth in force. Fifthly, the Apoſtle ſaith, the will of men is of no force, as long as hee that made it is aliue, Hebr.9.17. but Chriſt now liueth, and henceforth dieth no more, Rom.6.9. yet his teſtament is in force, though much be preſumed in the world againſt it; as Auguſtine ſaith: Mortuus ſine ſenſu iacet, & valent verba ipſius; ſedet Chriſtus in cœlo, & contradicitur teſtamento eius: in Pſal.21. A man lieth dead without ſenſe, and his laſt words ſtand; Chriſt ſitteth in heauen, and yet his teſtament is contradicted, &c. Sixthly, in ſome caſes by the Ciuill law a will vnwritten preuailed againſt a will written: Cod. lib.3.tit.36.leg.5. Alexander. If a man in his teſtament, did bequeath or award his ſeruant to bonds, and afterward change his mind, licet non ſcripſerit, valebit, although he wrote it not, it ſhall ſtand: but nothing that is vnwritten ought to bee receiued againſt the written teſtament of Chriſt. In theſe and many ſuch other points Chriſts teſtament and mans teſtaments doe differ: they therefore muſt be made to agree onely, wherein the Apoſtle compareth them, that as touching the death of the body, it is neceſſary for the confirmation both of mens teſtament and Chriſts: but as concerning the ſpirituall paine of the ſoule the reaſon is not alike, there is no cauſe or neceſſitie thereof toward the conſtitution of a mans will, as there was in Chriſt toward the finiſhing of the ſacrifice of the new teſtament.

Heb.9.17.

Secondly, the Apoſtle concludeth, that no death, but of the bodie, is neceſſary for the confirmation of a teſtament: which we grant, and further acknowledge that Chriſt onely died properly in his bodie: the proper death of the ſoule (which is either by ſinne or damnation, in the finall ſeparation of Gods fauour) Chriſt died not: ſuch a death and damnation of the ſoule who is ſo blaſphemous to attribute to Chriſt? in confuting that, which no man denieth, labour may well be ſpared. And therefore as Hierome ſaith, Non poſſum te exiſtimare victorem, niſi aduerſarium videro vulneratum: He cannot haue the victorie, that doth not wound the aduerſarie, Apolog. ad Pammach. Therefore theſe darts, which they caſt in the ayre, Feuard.p.453. pierce not our cauſe, neither can thoſe ſtrokes wound the body, that touch it not.

What conditions are required toward the making of a teſtament.

Thirdly, the Apoſtle by this ſimilitude onely inferreth, that without the death of the body a teſtament is not ratified: as verſ.18 neither was the firſt ordained without blood: So without Chriſts death the new teſtament could not be confirmed: doth it therefore follow that nothing elſe is required? Many things beſide the bodily death muſt concurre to make a mans teſtament: firſt, he muſt bee ſana mentis, of a ſound and perfect minde; and therefore a mad man, except he haue dilucida interualla, ſome intermiſſion of his fits, cannot make a will, Cod. lib.6.tit.22.leg.9. Secondly, Pupillus non poteſt teſtari: A pupill, that is vnder the gouernment of others, cannot make a will: ibid.tit.21.leg.12. Iuſtinian. Thirdly, Filius familias non poteſt: A ſonne that is vnder his father cannot: ibid.tit.22.leg.11. Fourthly, Si teſtes non fuerint in conſpectu teſtatoris, &c. If the witneſſes be not in the ſight of the teſtator, the will is not good, Cod. lib.6.tit.23.leg.9. Diocletian. Fifthly, Si compulſus ſit teſtari, &c. If a man be compelled to make a will, it is not good, lib.6.tit.34.leg.1. Sixthly, Mutus non poteſt, niſi ſciat ſcribere: A dumbe man by the Ciuill law cannot make a will, vnleſſe he can write, lib.6.tit.22.leg.10. Iuſtinian. Theſe conditions and many beſide, are required as neceſſary for the conſtitution of wils: ſo that the death of the body is not onely ſufficient to adde ſtrength to a will, though without it, it ſtandeth not in force. In like manner without the death of Chriſts body the new teſtament was not ratified, and yet not onely by it: the innocency of Chriſts birth, the righteouſneſſe of his life, his obedience in his ſuffrings vpon the croſſe muſt concurre with his death to eſtabliſh the new teſtament. Wherefore the argument followeth not, the new teſtament was confirmed by Chriſts bodily death: Ergo, he ſuffred not the terrors of ſoule.

Fourthly, if this reaſon conclude any thing, it taketh away all compaſſion, ſorrow, and affection in the ſoule of Chriſt, (which they themſelues grant, Feuard.p.452.lin.25.) as well as the terrors of conſcience: for if the bodily death be ſufficient for the eſtabliſhment of the teſtament, then the ſoule neede not any way to be affected at all. So then they may here ſay as Hierome, though not in the like caſe: Noſtra contra nos dimicat armatura: Our owne weapons doe fight againſt vs: ad Ioann. Hieroſolymitan.

Argum.5.

*Arg.*5. Chriſt was more effectuall to ſaue vs, then Adam to condemne vs, *Feuard.p.*383.cauſ 4. & 454.*lin.*20. But Adams fleſh by the which ſinne entred, was ſufficient to deſtroy vs: Ergo, ſo muſt Chriſts fleſh be to redeeme vs.

2. Againe, the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom.5.19. As by one mans diſobedience many are made ſinners, ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous: This obedience of Chriſt was in his death, Feuard ibid. Ergo, by the obedience of Chriſt to death we are made righteous.

Anſw. Firſt, the aſſumption is falſe, if it be vnderſtood ſo, that Adams fleſh onely infected his poſteritie: firſt, it would follow hereupon, that the fleſh is the ſeate of ſinne, which is a popiſh error, and maintained by *Bellarm. de ſtat. peccat. lib.*3.*c.*7.*vid. ſupra contr.*18.*qu.*4.*par.*5. Diſeaſes and other outward infirmities are the infection of the bodie, but ſinne is properly the infection of the ſoule; for ſeeing ſinne is a ſpirituall euill, and the fleſh but a terrene and earthly veſſell, how can it be, that ſinne ſhould be propagated onely by the fleſh?

2. The Scriptures are contrarie: Adam begat a child in his owne likeneſſe after his owne image: was this image in the bodie onely, and not in the ſoule alſo? whereby is vnderſtood, that Adam begot a ſonne in the like ſinfull and corruptible ſtate: Which are borne not of blood, nor of the will of the fleſh, not of the will of man, &c. Where is the fleſhly will, whereof men are borne, but in the ſoule? That which is borne of the fleſh is fleſh, that which is borne of the ſpirit is ſpirit: By fleſh here is ſignified the vnregenerate part both of the ſoule and bodie: whatſoeuer then is fleſhly and carnall in vs, whether in ſoule or bodie, is borne of the fleſh: and ſo ſinne propagated by them both.

Geneſ.5.3.
Iohn 1.13.
Iohn 3.6.

3. Obiect. Then it will follow, that the ſoules of men, as well as their bodies are deriued from their parents, if originall infection be propagated by both.

Anſw. Firſt, I ſay with Auguſtine thus writing to S. Hierome of this very matter: Illa de animarum nouarum creatione ſententia ſi hanc fidem fundatiſſimam non oppugnat (i. de originali peccato) ſit & mea; ſi oppugnat, non ſit & tua: This ſentence of the creation of new ſoules, if it doe not impugne this grounded faith, (that is, of originall ſinne,) let it be my opinion alſo, if it doe, let it not be yours neither; *Epiſt.*28. So I ſay, that if it did neceſſarily follow, if ſoules be created of God; that pollution ſhould come onely by the fleſh, I had rather leaue that vncertaintie, then go againſt a certaine truth: for what were this elſe, but to extenuate originall ſinne, and in effect to make it no ſinne at all; ſeeing it is the ſoule, not the fleſh, that ſinneth: as the Prophet ſaith, The ſoule that ſinneth ſhall die.

Whether the ſoule be propagated from the parents.

Secondly, neither is it neceſſarie to grant, that ſoules ſhould be deriued from the parents, if ſinne be propagated both by the bodie and the ſoule: S. Auguſtine ſheweth how, *lib.*3.*de liber. arbitr. cap.*20. Quod ſi ſigillatim in ſingulis fiunt animæ, conuenientiſſ. eſt, vt malum meritum prioris eſſet natura ſequentis, vt bonum meritum ſequentis natura prioris ſit: Though that euery ſoule ſhould ſeuerally bee made in the bodie, yet it is moſt conuenient, that the euill merite of the firſt man ſhould be the nature of the ſecond, as the good merit (that is vertue) of the ſecond is the nature of the firſt, &c. that is, like as the image of grace renewed in Adams poſteritie, is the ſame that Adams nature was before his fall: ſo the euilneſſe in Adam corrupted, is become the nature of his corrupt poſteritie.

The Maſter of the ſentences is not here to be refuſed: Ipſius carnalis concupiſcentiæ cauſa non eſt in anima ſola, nec in carne ſola, ex vtroque enim fit, &c. The cauſe of carnall concupiſcence is not in the ſoule alone, nor in the fleſh alone, but is made of them both, *lib.*3.*diſtinct.*17.b.

Like as a fountaine ſpringing vp in a clay ground, preſently receiueth of the nature of the ground: this clay water is neither of the fountaine, for there is no clay, nor of the earth alone, for there is no water, but ioyntly from them both: ſo is the ſoule corrupted at the very firſt coniunction with the body: the ſinne is not in the ſoule, which is created pure, nor in the fleſh, which is not capable of ſinne, but it ſpringeth forth of the coniunction, and commixtion of them both.

4. How is it like, that Adams fleſh ſhould only infect his poſteritie; ſeeing it was not the fleſh, that firſt infected himſelfe? as Magiſter ſententiar. thus reporteth out of Auguſtine, lib 2.*diſt.*32.liter.E. Non fuit corruptio corporis, quæ aggrauat animam, cauſa primi peccati, ſed pœna; nec caro corruptibilis animam peccatricem fecit, ſed peccatrix anima carnem corruptibilem fecit: The corruption of the fleſh, which preſſeth downe the ſoule, was not the cauſe of the firſt ſinne, but the puniſhment: neither the corruptible fleſh made the ſoule ſinfull, but the ſinfull ſoule made the fleſh ſubiect to corruption, &c. Sinne then entred into Adam by his ſoule firſt, and then his fleſh: and ſo doth it enter vpon his poſteritie.

Secondly, 1. though the croſſe and paſſion of Chriſt did chiefly ſhew the obedience of Chriſt: For he learned obedience by the things which he ſuffered, Heb.5.8. yet his obedience to his Father was ſeene through his whole life: as Iohn.4.34. My meate is, that I may do the will of him that ſent me. 2. Chriſts obedience is ſet againſt Adams diſobedience: As then Adams diſobedience ſignifieth the whole maſſe of corruption in him; ſo Chriſts obedience betokeneth all his iuſtice and righteouſneſſe. 3. So the Apoſtle expoundeth it himſelfe, Rom.5.18. calling it the iuſtifying of Chriſt. 4. And though his obedience in his death were onely inſinuated, where was this obedience, was it not in his will, when he ſaith, Not my will, but thine be done? and he ſubmitteth himſelfe to drinke of the cup, not onely to taſte of the bodily death, but to endure all ſorrowes beſide, that ſhould be laid vpon him.

Chriſts obedience muſt be conſidered not onely in his death, but in his whole life.
Heb.5.8.
Iohn 4.34.
Rom.5.18.

S. Ambroſe euidently declareth his mind of this matter, *de vocat. Gentium lib.*1.*c.*3. inde (ex hominis præuaricatione) Multiplex corporis animique corruptio, inde ignorantia, difficultas, &c. From Originall ſinne is not onely from the fleſh, but by the ſoule alſo. mans tranſgreſſion proceedeth the manifold corruption of ſoule and body, as ignorance, hardneſſe of vnderſtanding, curæ inutiles, ſacrilegi errores, &c. vaine cares, ſacrilegious errors: if ignorance, error be propagated from Adam, then is not this propagation onely by the fleſh, which is not ſubiect to ignorance, error; but the ſoule only: Origen alſo thus witneſſeth, hom. 8. in Leuit. Audi Dauidem dicentem, in iniquitatibus conceptus ſum, oſtendens, quod quacunq́, anima in carne naſcitur, iniquitatis & peccati ſorde polluitur: Heare Dauid ſaying, I was conceiued in iniquitie, ſhewing that any ſoule whatſoeuer is borne in the fleſh, is polluted with the filthineſſe of iniquitie and ſinne. The ſoule then in the very firſt birth is polluted, and ſo the corruption is ſpread as well by the ſoule as the body.

Argum. 6. The leaſt teare, the leaſt groane, the leaſt drop of blood in Chriſt had been ſufficient, becauſe of the excellencie of the perſon of the ſufferer: how much more his whole painefull paſſion in his bodie? Feuardent p. 450.

Anſw. Firſt, the argument followeth not; the Sonne of God was able with his blood onely to redeeme vs, Ergo, he thought good ſo to doe: he had been able without his blood, or death at all, in his omnipotent power to haue ſaued vs; but it ſeemed not good vnto him ſo to doe.

Secondly, if Chriſts blood onely did it, then were theſe ſorrowes of his ſoule, which you confeſſe he felt, ſuperfluous: if they were not in vaine, his teares, his heauineſſe, his groanes; then his blood only without theſe redeemed vs not.

Thirdly, Bernard reporteth this to haue been the Error of one Abaillardus, epiſt. 191. Cur redemit nos per ſanguinem, cùm potuit per ſermonem? Why did hee redeeme vs by his blood, when hee might haue done it by his word? Bernard anſwereth, Quid prodeſt, quod nos inſtituit, ſi non reſtituit? What had it auailed vs, if he had giuen vs inſtitution, but not reſtitution? &c. In like ſort is it now vrged; what needed Chriſt to redeeme vs by his ſoule, ſeeing he did it in his bodie? we may alſo anſwere, Quid prodeſt ſi nos reſtituit, ſi non plenè reſtituit? What had it auailed vs, if he reſtored vs, but fully had not reſtored vs?

Fourthly, we grant, that Chriſt in reſpect of his great power, might haue redeemed vs not onely without his ſufferings in ſoule: but in bodie alſo: as Maſter Caluin ſaith, Potuit nos Deus verbo, aut nutu redimere: God might haue redeemed vs with his word, yea, with a becke: in 15. Ioan. verſ. 13. But this was not agreeable to Gods iuſtice; who had otherwiſe determined, that his Sonne ſhould Iſay 53.10. pay by his ſuffering the full price of our redemption: and therefore the Prophet Eſay ſaith, 53.10. The will of the Lord ſhall proſper in his hand. And here Origen hath a very good diſtinction, Quod ad potentiam Dei omnia poſſibilia, quod ad iuſtitiam Dei poſſibilia ſolum, quæ iuſta ſunt: In reſpect of Gods power, all things are poſſible; in reſpect of his iuſtice, thoſe things are onely poſſible, that are iuſt: in Matth. tract. 35. So in reſpect of Gods power, Chriſt needed not to haue ſuffered, but in his bodie, nor yet in that neither: but in regard of his iuſtice, it was not poſſible, but that Chriſt in himſelfe ſhould beare the whole and entire puniſhment due vnto our ſinnes.

Laſtly, whereas the fathers do moſt worthily amplifie the bodily ſufferings of Chriſt, and the death of his fleſh, denying that he died in ſoule, and to this purpoſe they may eaſily bee produced: Our anſwere is this: 1. That concerning the death of the ſoule, we willingly condeſcend, that it is not to be admitted in Chriſt. 2. If the fathers vrge the blood of the Croſſe, and the offering of Chriſts fleſh, they muſt be vnderſtood according to the phraſe of the Scripture, which by one part ſetteth forth the reſt: and Chriſts blood is eſpecially mentioned, becauſe it was the moſt viſible and conſpicuous part of his paſſion. 3. Yet not one of the fathers can be brought forth, which denieth Chriſt ſuffering in ſoule. 4. Nay, they do witneſſe and teſtifie for the ſame: as Cyril ſaith, Neceſſe erat cum ſuo corpore adunatam ei animam dolere, vt dum timebat paſſiones ſubditam ceruicem Deo ſubmitteret: It was neceſſary that his ſoule ſhould be grieued with the bodie, that while he feared his paſſions, he ſhould ſubmit his necke vnto God, de incarnat. vnigen. c. 7. If Chriſts blood ſtrictly taken had ſufficed, the griefe of the ſoule had not been neceſſarie. And if it be anſwered, that hee meaneth the griefe of the ſoule, ariſing from the ſuffering of the body: I ſay further, 1. that if it were ſo, yet this griefe is ſomewhat elſe beſide his blood, which was before affirmed to be ſufficient: a ſufficiencie is without the neceſſitie of other things: but he ſaith there was a neceſſitie of the griefe of the mind: Ergo, without it there was not a ſufficiencie. 2. He meaneth a deeper griefe, feare and ſuffering, then ariſing from the ſuffering of the bodie: he feared his paſſions; but the paſſion of his bodily death he feared not; that had been great Heb.5.7. weakeneſſe: and he was heard in that he feared, Heb. 5.7. but in reſpect of his bodily death, that it might paſſe, he was not heard: therefore it was a greater griefe and feare that perplexed his mind.

The Proteſtants.

That the bodily death of Chriſt was not the whole ſuffering and ſacrifice of his Croſſe, neither in reſpect of Gods iuſtice the whole and full price of our redemption; though in reſpect of Gods power, leſſe might haue ſufficed; thus we ſhew it:

Argum. 1. That which Chriſt tooke, he offered: Chriſt tooke not the body or fleſh of man only: Ergo, he offered not his body onely.

Anſw. If any thing be here denied, it will be the propoſition, which is further thus confirmed.

Heb.2.14. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb. 2.14. For as much as the children were partakers of fleſh and blood, hee tooke part with them, that he might deſtroy through death, &c. and that he might deliuer all them, which for feare of death were all their life long ſubiect to bondage: from this place I reaſon thus: that which Chriſt by his death deliuered vs from, hee tooke part with vs in: but hee deliuered vs not onely from the death of the bodie, but from the feare and bondage of the ſoule: Ergo, herein hee tooke part with vs.

Secondlie, they are Saint Ambroſe words, Hoc obtulit Chriſtus, quod induit: Chriſt offered that, which hee tooke or put on, de incarnat.c.7. Ergo, he offered not his fleſh onely, becauſe hee tooke it not alone.

Thirdly, he giueth this reaſon in the ſame place: Quæ erat cauſa incarnationis, niſi vt caro, quæ peccauerat per ſe redimeretur: What cauſe was there of his incarnation, but that the fleſh, that had ſinned, ſhould be redeemed by it ſelfe? The reaſon ſtandeth thus: 1. That which Chriſt tooke of mans nature, he tooke to redeeme by ſuffring in it: but Chriſt tooke not onely the fleſh of man, but his ſoule: Ergo, he redeemed mans ſoule, by ſuffring in it. 2. That part of man, which had ſinned, muſt be redeemed by it ſelfe: not mans fleſh onely, but his ſoule alſo had ſinned: Ergo, not the fleſh only, but the ſoule muſt be by it ſelfe redeemed.

Argum.2. The ſecond reaſon I take out of Cyprian; and it is framed thus: That which Chriſt offered vpon the Croſſe, he ſuffered in: Chriſt offered not his bodie onely: Ergo, he ſuffered not in bodie onely.

First, the propoſition or firſt part is prooued by the Apoſtle, Heb.9.25.26. Not that he ſhould offer himſelfe often, &c. for then he muſt haue often ſuffered: So then there is no offering of Chriſt without ſuffering: and therefore he is ſaid to haue offered a ſacrifice for ſinnes, Heb.10.12. But a ſacrifice is not offered without ſuffring: for the ſacrifice was firſt killed, and then offered.

Heb.9.25.26.
Heb.10.12.

Secondly, S. Cyprian proueth the aſſumption, as I haue alleaged him before, lib. de duplic. Martyr. who applieth that place of Iohn. There are three that beare record in earth; the ſpirit, water and blood; vnto the oblation of Chriſt vpon the Croſſe: Triplex à Chriſto teſtimonium accepimus, &c. Wee haue receiued a threefold teſtimonie from Chriſt; of the ſpirit, water, and blood: Totum effudit ſpiritum, &c. He did ſend forth his whole ſpirit, that we might be refreſhed; the water, that we might bee waſhed; the blood that was left, that we might be confirmed: So there was nothing in Chriſt, that was not powred out vpon the Croſſe; his ſoule firſt and ſpirit, then all the moiſture and blood left in his bodie: Chriſt then offered not his bodie onely vpon the Croſſe: for he further ſaid, Father, into thy hands I commend my ſpirit: Ergo, he ſuffered not onely in body.

1.Iohn.5.8.

Argum.3. That which Chriſt tooke of our nature, he ſanctified in himſelfe, Heb.2.11. Hee that ſanctifieth, and they which are ſanctified, are all of one: Our reaſon then ſtandeth thus: that which Chriſt ſanctified in himſelfe, hee ſanctified by ſuffering in it: So ſaith the Apoſtle, Heb.2.10. that Chriſt was conſecrate through afflictions: and by the ſame meanes did Chriſt ſanctifie himſelfe, whereby wee are ſanctified: Iohn 17.19. For their ſakes doe I ſanctifie my ſelfe, that they alſo may bee ſanctified: But we are ſanctified by Chriſts oblation vpon the croſſe, Heb.10.14. With one offering hath he conſecrated for euer them that are ſanctified. The propoſition then is true, that Chriſt was ſanctified by his ſuffering and offering vpon the croſſe, but both his bodie and ſoule was ſanctified: Ergo, he ſuffered not in bodie onely, but both in bodie and ſoule. This reaſon and euery part thereof is grounded vpon Scripture.

Heb.2.11.
Heb.2.10.
Iohn 17.19.
Heb.10.14.

Argum.4. Chriſt offered the true ſacrifice of himſelfe in the true tabernacle: his bodie alone is not, but bodie and ſoule both are this true tabernacle: Ergo, he offered himſelfe a ſacrifice not in bodie onely, but both in bodie and ſoule.

First, the propoſition is affirmed by the Apoſtle, Heb.8.2. that Chriſt is a miniſter of the true tabernacle, that is, by the offering of himſelfe, who is both the Prieſt, the ſacrifice and tabernacle.

Secondly, the aſſumption is thus prooued: firſt, his humane nature is called the true tabernacle, becauſe it is not to be ſhifted or changed, as the old tabernacle was, but to remaine for euer: and in this ſenſe though the fleſh of Chriſt was the true tabernacle, becauſe it was incorruptible, yet his ſoule more properly: for his fleſh was laid aſide, and put off by death, but his ſoule remained with him ſtill: herein then it was the true tabernacle indeed, being eternall and immortall. Secondly, Heb.9.11. It is called a tabernacle not made with hands, which God pight and not man, Heb.8.3. This more properly agreeth to his ſoule: for though his fleſh was borne of a virgin, and ſo brought foorth without the helpe or hands of man, in reſpect of the common birth; yet receiued he his fleſh of his mother, ouerſhadowed by the holy Ghoſt: but his ſoule was immediatly and wholly ſent from God, and ſo this tabernacle was not at all pight by man. Thirdly, that is the true temple and tabernacle, wherein the holy Ghoſt dwelled bodily, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Col.2.9. In him dwelleth the fulnes of the Godhead bodily: but the Godhead dwelt not only in Chriſts bodie, but in his ſoule: Ergo, both made this holy temple, and true tabernacle. Fourthly, to this purpoſe Auguſtine thus reſembleth the holy ſoule of Chriſt, he calleth it vas vnguenti, the veſſel of the holy oyntment, of the ſpirit; & tanquam ferrum ignitum; and as an yron red hot, in euery part thereof receiueth the fire: ſo was the fulnes of the Godhead in the ſoule of Chriſt, de Trinitat. vnitat. cap.3. It followeth then, that ſeeing not the body and fleſh of Chriſt only make the true tabernacle, but his ſoule alſo, and that in the true tabernacle the true ſacrifice of atonement was offered, that Chriſt offered not this ſacrifice in his bodie onely.

Heb.9.11.
Coloſ.2.9.

Argum.5. If the bodilie ſufferings of Chriſt had been ſufficient, then his other ſufferings in his ſoule had been ſuperfluous; as the heauineſſe of his ſoule, where hee ſaith, My ſoule is heauie vnto death, Matth.26.38. his ſighs and grones, Ioh.11.38. his feare, Heb.5.7. But theſe and the like paſſions in Chriſt, were not ſuperfluous: for the Prophet ſaith, Iſay 53.11. He ſhall ſee of the trauell of his ſoule: Ergo, his bodily ſufferings were not alone ſufficient.

Argum.6. We will reaſon ex confeſſis: It is granted by the reſt, that Chriſt alſo beſide his bodilie ſufferings had inward feare and griefe: Bellarm.cap.8.reſponſ. ad argum.3. Vt redemptio eſſet copioſa, voluit etiam pœnam mœroris, & timoris ſubire: That the redemption might be the more full, Chriſt would vndergoe the paine of griefe and feare. Feuardentius thus confeſſeth, p.455. Tantam concepit de his triſtitiam, &c. Chriſt conceiued ſuch ſorrow and griefe for the ſinnes of the world, vt omnem verè reſipiſcentis anima pœnitentiam exuperauerit, &c, that he exceeded the griefe and ſorrow of a ſoule truly penitent. Againe, Tanta animi pœnitudine dolet, vt par ei nemo vnquam fuerit: He was ſo much grieued in his ſoule, as that no man was euer equall to him. Theſe ſorrowes in Chriſts ſoule, were neither bodily, nor yet procured by his bodilie paines, being occaſioned by the ſinnes of the world: This being then their owne confeſſion, how can they aſcribe our redemption wholly to the bodily ſufferings of Chriſt, vnleſſe they will make thoſe other afflictions of Chriſt either fained, or ſuperfluous, which farre be it from any Chriſtian heart to thinke?

Argum.7. The Fathers iudgement againſt the ſole bodily ſuffrings of Chriſt, I haue alleaged before: as Cyrill.reſp.ad argum.7. Ambroſe argum.1. Cyprian argum.2. and ſo I will conclude this place with another ſentence of Cyprian: Sine hoc holocauſto poterat deus tantum condonaſſe peccatum, ſed facilitas veniæ laxaret habenas peccatis effrenibus, quæ etiam Chriſti vix cohibent paſſiones, &c. God could haue forgiuen vs our great ſinne without this holocauſt, or whole burnt offring: but then the facilitie of pardon would haue let looſe the raines vnto vnruly ſinnes, which are hardly reſtrained by the paſſions of Chriſt, &c. Out of this ſentence I obſerue firſt, that Cyprian calleth Chriſts ſacrifice an holocauſt, an whole ſuffring, which could not be of one part only, but of both: for that is not whole, which wanteth a part. Secondly, hee granteth, that God in his infinit power could haue found out forgiueneſſe of ſins by ſome other meane, but it pleaſed him otherwiſe: that by the manifold paſſions, which were laid vpon Chriſt for our ſinne, we ſhould be brideled from committing the ſame.

τὸ ἀπρόσληπτον, ἀθεράπευτον: Damaſc. lib.3. cap.16.

πάντα ἀνέλαβεν, ἵνα πάντα ἁγιάσῃ: Ibid. cap.20.

Beſide theſe teſtimonies of Cyprian and Cyrill of the South Church. Of the Greeke Church, Damaſcene alſo thus witneſſeth: that whole Chriſt tooke whole man, To giue ſaluation to the whole: (for what was vnaſſumed of Chriſt, was vncured. Chriſt then by his ſuffering, gaue ſaluation to our ſoule and bodie, by ſuffering in both: againe he ſaith, Chriſt tooke all (our paſſions, and ſorrowes) to ſanctifie all: but he ſanctified our paſſions by his ſuffrings; it will then follow, that he ſuffered the very inward paſſions of the ſoule.

Harm. ſect.6. pag 99. Harm. p.104.

The ſame is the confeſſion of the reformed Churches. French confeſſ. artic.14. Chriſt tooke vpon him our nature, that he might ſuffer both in bodie and ſoule. Belgia. artic.21. Chriſt being iuſt, ſuffered in ſoule and bodie for the vniuſt, in ſuch ſort, that feeling the horror of thoſe puniſhments that were due vnto our ſinnes, he did ſweate water and blood, &c.

3.p.q.46. ar.5. Lib.10. de Trinitat. 3.p.q.46. art.6. Artic.7.

Their ſeraphicall Doctor Thomas Aquine is a plentifull witneſſe in this point: For theſe three poſitions of his, that Chriſtus ſuſtinuit omnes paſſiones, that Chriſt ſuſtained all paſſions: as Hilarie ſaith, that Chriſt conſummaſſe ſe omne humanarum genus paſſionum teſtatur, teſtifieth he had finiſhed all kind of humane paſſions, when he ſaid, it is finiſhed: and that Chriſtus paſſus eſt ſecundum totam animam, Chriſt ſuffered in his whole ſoule: and that dolor paſſionis Chriſti, &c. The griefe of Chriſts paſſion exceeded all griefes, &c. Theſe three aſſertions of his will conclude the inward and proper ſufferings of Chriſts ſoule: for otherwiſe in reſpect of his bodily ſufferings, the Martyrs might ſeeme to haue ſuffered more, as Laurence, that was broiled on a grediron, and Vincentius, whoſe fleſh was torne off with fleſh hookes: as is in the ſame place obiected. So then we conclude;

1. If what Chriſt tooke of the nature of man, he offered vpon the croſſe;
2. If Chriſt ſuffered in all that, which he offered;
3. If that by his ſufferings he ſanctified the whole nature of man;
4. If in the true tabernacle of body and ſoule he offered the ſacrifice;
5. If all other griefes and ſorrowes, which Chriſt endured in his ſoule ſhould be ſuperfluous;
6. Seeing it is confeſſed by the aduerſarie part, that Chriſt had greater ſorrow in his ſoule, then euer any man had;
7. The Fathers likewiſe ſet forth the holocauſt or whole offering of Chriſt: Then it doth neceſſarily follow, that Chriſts ſufferings and ſmart in his fleſh onely wrought not our redemption; which though in themſelues, in reſpect of Gods great power, had been ſufficient, yet it ſo ſtood with Gods iuſtice and euerlaſting purpoſe, that his ſon in his owne perſon, ſhould make a full ſatisfaction both in his body and ſoule for our ſinnes.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE FEARE AND aſtoniſhment of Chriſt, and the cauſe thereof, that it proceeded from the very feare and feeling of Gods wrath, which Chriſt did beare and endure for our ſinnes.

THE OBIECTIONS AND CONTRARIE arguments anſwered.

The Papiſts.

FIrſt, their opinion is, that the feare and agonie of Chriſt proceeded not from any feeling of Gods 15.Error.
wrath or indignation, but humani ſenſus mortem exhorreſcentis affectum,&c. effundebat: But hee onely ſhewed the affection of humane ſenſe fearing death, *Feuard.p.*430.ſic Bellarm.cap. 8.reſp.ad argum.6. They reaſon thus:

*Argum.*1. There are other cauſes of Chriſts heauines, feare, and agonie: Firſt, the reiection of the Iewes. Secondly, the diſperſion of the Apoſtles, *Bellarm.reſp.ad argum.*8. Thirdly, the lamentation for mans ſinne: Omnem verè reſipiſcentis anima pœnitentiam exuperauit: He went beyond or exceeded the greateſt repentance of the ſoule that may be, *Feuard.pag.*455. Fourthly, the ſeueritie and iuſtice of God vpon him the Redeemer of the world, *Feuard.p.*456. *lin.*13. Fifthly, he feared death in his humane ſenſe, *Feuard.p.*430. Ergo, Chriſts feare and agonie ariſing of theſe cauſes, cannot be aſſigned to any other.

Anſw. Firſt, the argument followeth not: theſe were the cauſes of Chriſts agonie: Ergo: the other was not: for they may all ſtand well together: that the conſideration of theſe forenamed cauſes might mooue Chriſt; and yet the feeling of Gods heauie wrath and diſpleaſure for ſinne mooue and trouble him much more.

Secondly, that Chriſt was heauy for the reiection of the Iewes, and diſperſion of his Apoſtles, though 1.
it be granted for reuerence to the Fathers; Hilarie, Ambroſe, Hierome, that ſo thinke; yet it concludeth 2.
not againſt vs: firſt, at other times thoſe thoughts for the Iewes, and his Apoſtles troubled Chriſt; as Matth.23.37. he prophecieth with griefe of the deſolation of Ieruſalem: Iohn 17.11. he had commended Matth.23.37.
his Apoſtles to the protection and keeping of his Father: ſo that though they ſhould be diſperſed Iohn 17.11.
by his death, yet he knew they ſhould be gathered together againe and ſtrengthened: as hee ſaith of Peter, I haue prayed for thee, that thy faith faile not, Luke 22.32. Chriſt therefore for that Luke 22.32.
matter was ſetled. Secondly, but now it is euident, that Chriſt is properly touched with ſome inward obiect: in that he prayeth the cup might paſſe from himſelfe: how could either the reiection of the Iewes, or the diſperſion of his Apoſtles be this cup? Thirdly, he prayeth that that houre might paſſe from him, Marke 14.35.
Mark.14.35. but neither the reiection of the Iewes, nor the diſperſion of his Apoſtles fell out in that houre or inſtant. Fourthly, Chriſt was heard in that he feared, Heb.5.7. but he was not heard in this, that the Iewes ſhould not be reiected, nor his Apoſtles diſperſed: Ergo, this was not that he feared.
Fifthly, though the Fathers conceit here be admitted, it concludeth not againſt vs: for none of them affirme, that Chriſt onely was troubled for theſe cauſes pretended.

Thirdly, Chriſts ſorrow and lamentation for ſinne by way of compaſſion or commiſeration, cauſed 3.
not this agonie: firſt, for ſo hee wept at other times for the ſinne of the citie, Luk. 19.41. hee wept onely drops of water, not drops of blood, as now: but if it had been the ſame cauſe, it would haue then brought forth the ſame effect. Secondly, Chriſt ſpeaketh here of an houre, to the which this griefe was peculiar: but to ſorrow in compaſſion, was at all houres and times in Chriſt, and ought to be alwaies in Chriſts members. Thirdly, if Chriſt onely had ſorrowed for the ſinnes of other in compaſſion, what needed hee to haue been comforted by the Angell? Luke 22.43. the obiect therefore of this Luke 22.43.
griefe was inward. He ſorrowed not now by way of compaſſion, but he ſorrowed for ſin by way of appropriation:
our ſinnes were now as appropriated to his perſon, and this godly ſorrow for ſinne, among 2.Cor.7.11.
other effects in the ſoule, hath feare and puniſhment, 2.Cor.7.11. then conſequently in the ſoule of Chriſt, there was feare and chaſtiſement for our ſins, now his by imputation, which is the ſame thing we affirme.

Fourthly: firſt, if the preſence of the Maieſtie of God were the cauſe of Chriſts feare and agonie in his prayer, why did not the like agonie fal vpon him, at other times, when he preſented himſelfe before the Maieſtie of God in prayer? Secondly, and Chriſt being innocent, iuſt and perfect, what cauſe had he to tremble in the preſence of God in reſpect of himſelfe, ſeeing that the Saints his members haue ſuch confidence to ſtand forth boldly in Gods preſence? Iſay 8.18. Behold, (ſaith the Prophet) here Iſay 8.18.
am I, and the children which thou haſt giuen me. Thirdly, Chriſt feared then and trembled before God as a Iudge, readie to execute wrath againſt ſinne: Gods wrath then is cauſe of this agonie, which is the very point by vs maintained.

Fifthly, if Chriſt feared his bodily death and corporall affliction aboue his ſtrength, hee feared more then Saint Paul, 1.Cor.10.13. God is faithfull, which will not ſuffer you to be tempted aboue that you are 1.Cor.10.13.

able. If Chriſt feared the ſeparation of the ſoule from the bodie by death, he ſhould haue ſhewed himſelfe weaker then his members. Auguſtine ſaith, Paulus ſeruus exultat, cupio diſſolui, &c. Chriſtus imperator triſtis eſt: Paul the ſeruant deſireth to be diſſolued, and to be with Chriſt; and is Chriſt the captaine heauie? in Pſalm.93. And as for the ſeparation of the humanitie from the Diuine nature, if any man ſay Chriſt feared it, he is in a great error: for the bodie ſtill lying in the graue was hypoſtatically vnited to the Godhead, as Damaſcene ſoundly ſaith, ἡ θεότης ἀχώριστος ἀμφοτέρων διέμεινε: The diuinitie remained inſeparable from them both: de fid.lib.3.c.27. He neuer feared therefore the diſſolution of the vnitie of his perſon.

Argum. 2. If the ſenſe and feeling of Gods wrath was the cauſe of Chriſts agonie, they muſt ceaſe with the agonie; for the cauſe remaining, the effect alſo muſt continue: but his agonie ended in the garden, his helliſh ſorrowes (you ſay) endured vpon the croſſe: Ergo, they were not the cauſe. And if the things which Chriſt afterward ſuffered, as his whipping, piercing of his hands and feete, and death it ſelfe did not amaze or aſtoniſh Chriſt; how much leſſe did the feare and griefe thereof perplexe him in the garden, which were but ſimplicia praludia, but forerunners only of his ſufferings that followed? Feuard.p.424.conf.4.

Anſ. First, Chriſts feare in the garden proceeded not from the expectation of his bodily ſufferings that followed, but as they were accompanied with the wrath of God: that which then he feared and trembled at, he afterward felt in his ſoule, namely the wrath of God: and vpon the croſſe hee was no leſſe perplexed, but indeed more vehemently touched in ſoule, when he cried out he was forſaken, then before in the garden. And as Chryſoſtome well ſaith, Chriſtus pluribus in morte vexatus doloribus, quàm omnes tragœdi ſcribere poſſunt, expirauit: Chriſt being vexed with more ſorrowes in his death, then all tragicall writers can deſcribe, gaue vp his ſpirit: Hom.31. in Matth.

Secondly, for further anſwere to the argument: firſt, the propoſition followeth not, that the cauſe ſhould ceaſe, when the effect ceaſeth; the cauſe indeed leaueth working, when the effect ſtaieth; but it hath ſtill a being: Like as in the bodie vexed with tertian or quartan feuers, there is an intermiſſion of the fits for a time, yet the ſame cauſe ſtill liueth and raigneth in the bodie, which when it beginneth to worke againe, the fits are renued; ſo is it in the vexation and agitation of the mind. Secondly, 1. for the aſſumption, we ſay that there was in Chriſt an intermiſſion of that inward perplexitie and vexation of his ſoule, that ſore fit and agonie being paſt, which was afterward reuiued vpon the croſſe. 2. The griefes and comforts of the ſoule doe ebbe and flow, compared in this behalfe to the waues of the ſea, Pſal.42.4. when one is lift vp by the waue he ſeeth the comfortable light; when he is caſt downe, he beholdeth nothing but darkneſſe. 3. This was Iobs caſe: firſt in griefe he complaineth, Iob 19.11 he counteth me as one of his enemies: then againe he receiueth ſtrength, verſ.25. I know my redeemer liueth: after this his ſoule is caſt downe againe; Iob.30.21. Thou turneſt thy ſelfe cruelly againſt me. 4. Auguſtine very fitly thus reſembleth this matter, writing vpon theſe words of the Pſalme 10. Palpebræ dei: The eye-lids of God doe examine the ſonnes of men: Interdum clauſis dei oculis exercentur vt quærant; interdum apertis illuminantur vt gaudeant: Sometime they are exerciſed or troubled, when God ſhutteth his eies, that they may ſeeke; ſometime they are illuminate with his open eies, that they may reioyce, &c. As is then the ſhutting and opening of the eies; ſo ſometimes the ſoule is obſcured with griefe, ſometimes lightened with ioy. In Chriſt then as the agonie ceaſed, ſo there was an intermiſſion of the inward terror that cauſed it.

Iob 30.21.
The condition of a perplexed ſoule deſcribed.

Argum. 3. Chriſts anſwere to Caiphas, his prayer for his enemies, his promiſe to the theefe vpon the croſſe, his commending of his ſpirit to God, do ſhew that Chriſt was not all this while aſtoniſhed: ſic Bellar.lib.4.de Chriſti anima cap.8. argum.2. & Feuardent. p.425.6. Thus they conclude that Chriſt was not amazed or aſtoniſhed at all with the feare and feeling of Gods wrath.

Anſw. Firſt, there is none that affirmeth, that this amazing or aſtoniſhment of Chriſt continued ſo long together, from the beginning of his agonie to the end of his paſſion. M. Caluine ſaith onely, In ipſo momento non reputabat: In that moment he did not bethinke himſelfe, in 26. Mat. verſ.39. Saint Peter giueth a reaſon, Actes 2.24. that it was impoſſible that Chriſt ſhould be held of the ſorrowes of hell, as their vulgar Latine readeth.

Actes 2.24.

Secondly, the anſweres then of Chriſt at his examination, condemnation, ſuffering, do ſhew that he was not then as a man amazed or aſtoniſhed: for in the beginning of his agonie in the garden he was afrighted and perplexed; but this his aſtoniſhment continued not in that meaſure, he eftſoones recouered himſelfe: As Origen writeth, Non ſcriptum eſt, quia pauit, vel triſtatus eſt, ſed cœpit pauere: pij guſtant tantum dolorem, impij guſtant tantum fidem, Heb.6.5. It is not written, that hee was afraid or ſorrowfull, but began to be afraid: the godly only taſte griefe, the vngodly only haue a taſte of faith: in Matth. tract.35.

Heb.6.5.

Thirdly, neither neede it ſeeme ſtrange, that our Sauiour ſo ſoone correcteth, or rather directeth his naturall infirmitie, ſaying, not my will, &c. for as Auguſtine ſaith, Si in illa voluntate permaneret, vtique prauum cor oſtendere videretur: If Chriſt had continued in his firſt will or deſire, hee had ſhewed an heart not aright, in Pſal.93. Therefore it became Chriſt forthwith to ſubmit his naturall infirmitie to Gods will and pleaſure, being free from all ſinne and diſobedience. Alſo Damaſcene confeſſeth, that Chriſts wil was firſt τῆς φυσικῆς ἀσθενείας πειρασθεῖσαν, tempted of his natural infirmity, and by and by ſtrengthened by the diuine will.

Fourthly,

Pſalm.31.22.

Fourthly, the children of God are often ſoone recouered from the gulfe of griefe: as Iob in the ſame place, chap.19.11.25. as I euen now alleaged, is an example of comfort, and diſcomfort. Dauid with the ſame breath ſaith, I am caſt out of thy ſight: And againe, Thou heardeſt the voice of my prayer, when I cried vnto thee, Pſal.31.22. If the members of Chriſt ſo ſoone ouercame thoſe brunts of griefe; it is no maruell if Chriſt were (though not altogether rid) yet eaſed of it and refreſhed. Yet notwithſtanding, if it be granted that this perplexitie of Chriſt did hang vpon him ſtill in ſome meaſure, from the beginning of his agonie vntill his death, as Origen ſeemeth to thinke: Non ſemper, ſed vſque ad tempus mortis in me eſt, vt cum mortuus fuero peccato, moriar & vniuerſa triſtitia: This heauineſſe is not alwaies in me, but vnto the time of death, that when I am dead to ſin, I ſhall be dead to all ſorrow, Hom.35. in Matth. All this being admitted, yet Chriſt might both pray in faith, and confidently commend his ſoule vnto God, and make wiſe anſwers vnto his perſecutors: Firſt, his faith failed not in his agony, though his carnal ſenſe were afrighted and aſtonied, and therfore he might and did effectuallie pray. Secondly, the vehement fits of his agonie were ſometime ſlaked and intermitted, and as the terme of the law is, though in another kind, as men naturally diſquieted in their mind, may haue dilucida internalla, lightſome ſeaſons, when they come to themſelues, Cod.lib.6.tit.22.leg.9. So Chriſt in this ſupernaturall aſtoniſhment, had ſome ſpaces of intermiſſion. Thirdly, this agonie and combat which hee had with the wrath of God, did not make him the more vnfit in his carriage to men; but that hee might and did exhort his Apoſtles, reprooue and refute his aduerſaries: like as Iob, though he complained of the terrors of God in his ſoule, Iob 6.4. yet knew well how to anſwere the deceitfull and comfortleſſe obiections and oppoſitions of his friends; ſo Chriſt in this agonie hauing to doe with God, not with men, though toward God hee were aſtoniſhed in his ſenſe, his faith ſtill remaining ſound, yet toward men he was notwithſtanding moſt readie and expert in his heauenly anſweres and oracles. Iob 6.4.

1. Argum.4. First, Chriſts prayers were meritorious: Precibus & meritis patrem nobis cæleſtem propitium reddidit: By his prayers and merits hee made his father well pleaſed with vs. But what merite could there be in his prayer if he were aſtoniſhed? Feuard.p.421.conf,12.lin.4.

2. Secondly, Quæ conſtantia, &c. What conſtancie, what fortitude of mind, if through feare and aſtoniſhment Chriſts memorie failed? Feuard p.423.conf.2.lin.7.

But Chriſt ſhewed in his agonie, faith, conſtancie, fortitude, obedience: Ergo, hee was not aſtoniſhed.

3. Thirdly, if Chriſt feared his Fathers wrath, then hee doubted: ſo Feuardentius inferreth vpon Caluines words, that becauſe he ſaith, Chriſtum timere, that Chriſt did feare, therefore hee doubted, p.458.

4. Fourthly, Saint Peter ſaith, Chriſt ſuffered for vs, leauing for vs an example that we ſhould follow his ſteppes, 1 Pet.2.21. but it were hard for vs, if Chriſt were aſtoniſhed with feare, and ſo beſide himſelfe, therein to imitate him: this place of the Apoſtle is vrged by the Frier, p.361.conf.4. lin.4. 1.Pet.2.21.

1. Anſw. Firſt, 1. if Chriſt had continued ſtil amazed and afrighted, and not eftſoone recouered himſelfe, the firſt argument might haue ſome colour, but the ſhortneſſe of that brunt nothing hindered his meritorious working. 2. It was a meanes rather to encreaſe his merite, in that he yeelded not to this naturall feare and infirmitie, but in wreſtling againſt it, and ſubduing his humane will to Gods will, his obedience became meritorious. 3. Yet I further boldly ſay, that euen this feare and aſtoniſhment of Chriſt being without ſinne, and all other his naturall infirmities, of hunger, thirſt, wearieneſſe in the bodie, feare, griefe, with the like in his ſoule, were meritorious: as Hierome well ſaith, Manifeſtum ei eſſe poterit, qui Euangelia ſollicita mente perlegerit, quomodo & cibus & potus eius & deambulatio, & vniuerſa quæ geſſit in corpore ſalutem hominum procurarint: It may be manifeſt to him that carefully readeth the Goſpell, how that Chriſts meate and drinke, his walking and all which he did in his body, did procure our ſaluation, tom. 4.de fil.prodig. 4. Chriſt amazed, aſtoniſhed, merited not indeed for himſelfe, neither did he at any other time elſe: but for vs euen then and there he merited.

2. Secondly, 1. there was no diſtempered humor in Chriſt; but euen in his agonie, his heart was ſetled, his faith firme and fixed, without any diſtruſt, or deſpaire. 2. It is vntrue, that there can bee no faith, obedience, conſtancy, fortitude, while a man is in a traunce or aſtoniſhed; for Peter ſhewed both, Act.10. when he fell into a traunce: Firſt his faith, verſ.14. I haue neuer eaten any thing vncleane: his obedience, verſ.15. in that he reſted notwithſtanding in the anſwere of God, ſubmitting himſelfe thereunto. 3. Chriſt continued not in this aſtoniſhment long, but preſently plunged out of it: and therefore all his prayer-while, he was not in this traunce; but as on the one ſide hee was aſſaulted in his humane ſenſe with feare and griefe; ſo he recouered himſelfe by his faith, and encountred with that brunt of ſorrow: ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, that Ieſus for the ioy that was ſet before him, endured the Croſſe; Heb.12.2. And Cyprian thus witneſſeth, Sanguineo ſudore madeſiens, noſtræ naturæ in ſe expreſſit imbecillitatem, ne nos in deſperationem caderemus, ſi quum omnia mortem præſentem intentant, horrorem naturæ ſenſerimus, &c. Chriſt dropping with his bloodie ſweate, did expreſſe the imbecillitie of our nature, leſt we ſhould fall into deſpaire, if we feele the horror of nature, when all things threaten preſent deſtruction, de duplic. Martyr. Chriſt then felt our ſorrowes, but fainted not, he was diſtreſſed, but deſpaired not, vexed, but not vanquiſhed.

Act. 10.14.15.
Heb.12.2.

3. Thirdly, the argument followeth not, neither is it true, that feare is more intollerable in Chriſt then doubting. 1. Damaſcene vſeth a good diſtinction of feare, lib. 3. de fide c. 23. that there is δειλία φυσική, and κατὰ φύσιν, a naturall feare, ſuch as this was in Chriſt to decline death; and a feare vnnaturall, which proceedeth from diffidence or diſtruſt, which was not in Chriſt: all feare hath not diſtruſt, but al doubting is ioyned with diſtruſt and diffidence; therefore there may be feare naturall, where neither ſin is nor diſtruſt. 2. The Scriptures teſtifie of Chriſt, that he began to be afraid, Marke 14.33. ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι, but doubtfulnes or diſtruſt is no where mentioned to haue been in Chriſt, therefore the one was in Chriſt, and not the other. 3. Origen ſaith, Proprium eſt omnis hominis primum quidem nolle pati aliquid doloris: It is proper to euery man, firſt not to be willing to ſuffer any griefe, &c. In Mat. Tract. 35. Chryſoſtom. Neque nolle mori carnem reprehenſio: Neither is it to be reprehended, if the fleſh be vnwilling to die: Ex Epiſtol. Agathon. ad Conſtantin: Thus theſe Fathers doubt not to aſcribe vnto Chriſt a naturall feare, and deſire to eſcape ſorrow, without ſinne or doubtfulneſſe.

Mark. 14.33.

4. Fourthly, whereas the reaſon is thus framed: Chriſt in his ſufferings is to be imitated of vs; but in his aſtoniſhment and amazednes, he is not to be imitated, or in that he was beſide himſelfe: Ergo, he was not in any of his ſufferings ſo aſtoniſhed or beſide himſelfe.

Anſw. 1. It is deuiſed onely by them, not affirmed by vs, that Chriſt, in his agonie, was beſide himſelfe, which is nothing elſe, but to be mad: we affirme onely according to the Scripture, that Chriſt began to be amazed, and with feare to be aſtoniſhed: Marke 14.36. So the word ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι there vſed, ſignifieth. 2. Chriſt is not to be imitated in all parts of his ſuffering, neither can be: for who is able to beare ſuch a heauie burthen of Gods wrath and diſpleaſure, as he did, which cauſed him to be aſtoniſhed? Chriſt is to be imitated, wherein he may be imitated of vs, as he himſelfe ſaith, Learne of mee, for I am humble and meeke: ſo Auguſtine ſaith, In Pſalm. 90. præfat. In quo imitaturi-ſumus Chriſtum, nunquid hoc à nobis exigit, vt talia miracula, qualia ipſe fecit, faciamus, &c. Wherein are wee to imitate Chriſt, doth he require of vs to doe ſuch miracles as hee did? &c. he ſaith, Learne of me, for I am humble and meeke. If Chriſt be not to be imitated in his miracles, then not in this his aſtoniſhment: for ſo to be aſtoniſhed as hee was, and not faile in faith, was a great miracle. 3. Yet wee haue here in Chriſt, that which is worthy and fit to be imitated of vs, namely his ſubmiſſion and obedience: that though his naturall deſire caried him one way, yet he ſubdued it to the will of God, ſaying, not my will, but thy will be done: as Auguſtine ſaith: Statim fac, quod ideo fecit, vt te doceret, non quod ego volo, &c. Doe ſtraightway as he did, to the end to teach thee, not that I will, &c.

Marke 14.36.

Arg. 5. Hilarie may be obiected, as he is alleaged by the Maſter of Sentences, Lib. 3. diſt. 15. tit. 9. Nec fieri poteſt, vt timor eius ſignificetur in verbis, cuius fiducia continuatur in factis: It cannot be, that his feare ſhould be ſignified in word, whoſe fiduce is continued in fact, Lib. 10. de trinitat. Hilarie ſeemeth to exempt Chriſt from all feare and infirmitie, in his bloodie ſweate and agonie; rather aſcribing the drops of blood to his power and diuine omnipotencie, then to his naturall infirmitie.

Anſw. 1. Peter Lombard in the ſame place bringeth in this anſwere, Neceſſitas timendi non fuit in Chriſto? There was not the like cauſe and neceſſitie of feare and griefe in Chriſt, which is in vs, and ſo hee ſaith Hilarie is to bee vnderſtood, not denying feare to be in Chriſt, but the like cauſe of feare. 2. It is true, that it was not infirmitie in Chriſt, but power to ſtand out in this agonie, and to ſtriue againſt it, euen vnto blood, but yet the beginning of it proceeded of feare: Damaſcene ſaith, that our naturall paſſions were in Chriſt κατὰ φύσιν, ὑπὲρ φύσιν: according to nature, and aboue, or beyond nature: according to nature, in that he had them; but aboue nature, in that he gouerned and moderated them: Lib. 3. de fide. c. 20. So Hilarie ſaith, Non ſecundum natura conſuetudinem geſſit, &c. Hee did it not after the cuſtome of nature: for hee did gouerne and execute them aboue nature. 3. But otherwiſe, that his naturall feare and infirmitie gaue beginning to this agonie: Ambroſe teſtifieth: Audi vtramque vocem & carnis infirmæ, & ſpiritus prompti: pater, ſi poſſibile, tranſeat calix, hac carnis eſt vox; non quod ego volo, habes deuotionem ſpiritus: Heare both voices, both of weake fleſh, and of the readie ſpirit: Father, if it be poſſible, let this cup paſſe, this is the voice of fleſh; not that I will, here is the deuotion of the ſpirit, lib. 4. in Luc.

THE TRVTH CONFIRMED.

The Proteſtants.

CHriſt thorough the very feare and feeling, ſight and ſenſe of Gods heauie wrath and diſpleaſure againſt our ſinne laid vpon him, was in an exceeding great agonie, and therein his humane nature for a while was ſo amazed and aſtoniſhed, that in that moment, he wiſhed to ſhunne the cup prepared for him for the worke of our redemption; yet ſo, that he preſently conformeth his will and deſire, to the will and pleaſure of God.

Heb. 5.7.

Argum. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt when hee prayed in the daies of his fleſh, With ſtrong cries and teares, was heard in that he feared, but he was not heard nor deliuered from his bodily death, Ergo, it was not that which he feared: and ſo conſequentlie it was the heauie wrath of God in his ſoule which he feared.

Anſw. 1. Bellarmine anſwereth, that Chriſt was heard in that which he deſired, namelie, that the will of God might be done in his death, or that he might be deliuered from death by his reſurrection: reſp. ad argum.6

2. It may alſo be anſwered, that Chriſt was heard in that he feared, and deliuered from his feare; he felt not then that which he feared: ſo then if he feared Gods wrath, he was deliuered from it before he felt it: Feuard to this effect. *p.464 cont.4.lin.*11.

3. It will be anſwered, that εὐλάβεια muſt be expounded, not feare, but reuerence: and ſo Bellarmine affirmeth, that Chryſoſtome, Theophylact, Oecumenius do ſo enterpret this place, that Chriſt was heard, pro ſua reuerentia, for his reuerence to his Father, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw 1. Bellarmine confeſſeth, that this prayer of Chriſt, which the Apoſtle ſaith, he made with ſtrong cries and teares, is the ſame which the Euangeliſts make mention of, when Chriſt was in his agonie in the garden: Bellar. ibid. Firſt, but that prayer proceeded from griefe and feare: for his words ſhew his griefe, My ſoule is heauie to death; his geſture, in ſweating drops of blood declareth his feare: yet Chriſt neither grieued at, neither feared the ſucceſſe of his paſſion, that Gods will ſhould not bee done in it, or his releaſe from death by his reſurrection: Ergo, in theſe things, at this time, and in this Prayer, he was not heard. Secondly, the ſumme of his requeſt is, that the cup might paſſe, which petition he limiteth in deed with ſubiection to Gods will; but the paſſing of the cup, cannot be referred to the reſurrection: neither is the paſſing of the cup, the performing of Gods will in the not paſſing of the cup: this were to expound one contrary by another. Thirdly, that thing againſt which Chriſt praieth, made him heauy, but neither the redemption of man by his death, nor the hope of the reſurrection could make him heauie, but rather ioyous, as the Apoſtle ſaith, He endured the croſſe for the ioy ſet before him: Heb.12.2. Theſe were not then the ſubiect of his petition at this time, though I deny not, but Chriſt continually did pray, both for the finiſhing of our redemption, and the perfecting of the ſame by his reſurrection: Wherefore ſeeing Chriſt was deliuered from his feare, but not from death, therefore death he feared not: as Hierome ſaith, Erubeſcant, qui putant ſaluatorem mortem timuiſſe, & paſſionis pauore dixiſſe, &c. Let them bluſh at it, that thinke our Sauiour feared death, and thorow this feare ſaid, My ſoule is heauie, &c. In Matth 26. Heb.12.2.

Secondly, that fearing is a kind of inward feeling in the ſoule, 1. the Scripture confeſſeth, 1.Iohn 4.18. Feare hath puniſhment, κόλασιν: there can be no paine or puniſhment without feeling: Luk.22.44. conſtitutus ἐν ἀγωνίᾳ, being ſet or pitched in an agonie: an agonie is not without feeling. 2. This is that which Bernard ſaith, that Chriſt had in his life, actionem paſſiuam, an action paſſiue; and in his death paſſionem actiuam, a paſſion actiue: ſo was this paſſion of feare actiue, working a ſenſe and feeling in Chriſts ſoule. 3. But feare goeth before griefe, and the ſame thing is not felt which is feared, eſpecially where there is a deliuerance from the thing feared. Anſw. 1. Neither doe wee ſay that Chriſt felt the ſame meaſure of Gods wrath, which he feared: for Chriſt might feare to be left comfortleſſe, and to be forſaken of Gods helpe in that combate: from this feare he was deliuered, for he was ſupported and vpheld in this terrible aſſault, that he did not ſincke downe in it. 2. So S. Paul prayed, that the meſſenger of Satan, the pricke of his fleſh, might bee taken from him, which hee obtained not, but a ſupplie of grace was giuen him, whereby he ſhould ſtand faſt in that tentation, 2.Cor. 12. as S. Paul was heard, not by remouing of the temptation, but by giuing of grace to ouercome it: ſo Chriſt was aſſiſted with the preſence of Gods power, the abſence whereof hee feared, and from this feare hee was heard and deliuered, but not from all ſenſe and feeling of Gods wrath in his ſoule. 1.Iohn 4.18. Luke 22.44. 2.Cor.12.9.

Thirdly, concerning the vſe of the word εὐλάβεια. 1. Wee denie not, but that both in Scripture and prophane authors, the word is taken for a religious warines, and reuerence. 2. In like maner, it muſt be granted, that it is alſo vſed to ſignifie feare, both in Scripture, and eccleſiaſticall and prophane writers: firſt, in the Scripture, Act.23.10. εὐλαβηθεὶς, timens; the Tribune feared leſt Paul ſhould haue been pulled aſunder, &c. Heb.11.7. Noe fearing, prepared the Arke: what or for whom the Tribune feared, it skilleth not; we onely ſhew the vſe of the word, that it cannot be here tranſlated reuerence but feare: We grant alſo that Noah his feare was ioyned with faith, but Chriſts much more; a feare it was notwithſtanding, though not diſtruſtfull. Act.23.10. Heb.11.7.

3. Nazianzene reckoneth εὐλάβειαν, feare, among the infirmities of Chriſt, orat.2.de filio: And Theodoret alſo followeth the ſame ſenſe vpon this place.

4. And for prophane writers, Plutarch. in Pericle teſtifieth that εὐλαβεῖτο, he feared the people, when he ſpake vnto them. Sophocles ſaith, εὐλαβοῦμαι πεσεῖν, I am afraid to fall. 5. The circumſtance of the place alloweth this ſenſe: for both before mention is made of his teares, and prayers, and verſ.8. Hee learned obedience by the things which he ſuffered: which doe argue his feare rather then reuerence. 6. The vulgar Latine in the two places before alleaged tranſlateth the word εὐλαβηθεὶς, timens, fearing, and our vulgar tranſlation allowed with priuiledge readeth in this place, he was heard in that hee feared: the firſt ought to moue the Papiſts; the other ſhould preuaile with Proteſtants, who are not ſuddenly to depart from the receiued tranſlation.

*Argum.*2. If the feare of the death of the bodie had ſo aſtoniſhed Chriſt, and caſt him into ſuch an agony, hee ſhould haue ſhewed himſelfe weaker then many of his members, the Martyrs, that went boldlie without feare to their death: Ergo, it was not the feare of bodily death, that troubled him.

*Anſw.*1. This is the difference betweene the ſeare of death in Chriſt, and others: they do feare of neceſſitie, but Chriſt timuit, quia voluit, feared willingly: and therefore at other times, when hee thought vpon his Paſſion, as at the inſtitution of his laſt Supper, he feared not, becauſe then he would not: but now in the garden he beginneth to feare, quia voluit, becauſe he would ſo doe, *Bellarm. reſp. ad argum.*3.

2. If Martyrs feare not death, it is becauſe God giueth them greater comfort, this benefite they receiue from Chriſt, Bellarm. ibid.

3. Chriſtus, vt copioſa eſſet redemptio,&c. Chriſt to make our redemption more full, would alſo take vpon him our feare, Bellarm. ibid. Chriſt then had greater cauſe to feare, in reſpect of his perſon and office being appointed to be our redeemer.

*Contra.*1. Firſt, in ſome ſenſe it is true, that all Chriſts affections were voluntary, in reſpect of his voluntary aſſuming of our fleſh: as Auguſtine ſaith, Hos humanæ infirmitatis affectus ſicut ipſam carnem infirmitatis humanæ & mortem carnis humanæ, non humanæ conditionis neceſſitate, ſed miſerationis voluntate ſuſcepit: Theſe affections of humane infirmitie like as fleſh it ſelfe and death, Chriſt tooke, not by neceſſitie of humane condition, but by the willingnes of his compaſſion, *in Pſal.*87. but after Chriſt was incarnate, as it was neceſſary he ſhould haue our fleſh; ſo it was neceſſary he ſhould haue the infirmities and affections thereof without ſinne: but as Peter Lombard ſaith, Hanc neceſſitatem habuit, non ex neceſſitate conditionis,&c. Chriſt had this neceſſitie of retaining our affections, not of the neceſſitie of his condition, but willingly: it was now then a neceſſitie in Chriſt, which at the firſt was voluntary, *lib.*3.*diſt.*16 liter.a.

2. Another difference betweene Chriſts affections and ours is this, in vs they are violent, and immoderate; in Chriſt they were ſo temperate and ordered, that he alwayes ſubmitted them to the will of his Father: ſo that not the hauing of them, but the moderating of them was voluntary in Chriſt: So Hierome ſaith, Verè contriſtatus eſt, ſed non paſſio eius dominatur animæ: He truely ſorrowed, but the paſſion did not rule ouer his ſoule, *in Matth.*26.

3. Otherwiſe the affections of Chriſts ſoule were as neceſſary, as the infirmities of his body, as hunger, thirſt, ſleepe: els Chriſt ſhould not haue been like vs in all things, if hee had not been ſubiect to the ſame infirmities without ſinne: and this were to make Chriſts agonie to be in ſhew onely, what needed he to pray againſt this cuppe, to ſweat drops of blood, to be comforted of the Angel, if he had been acceſſary to his owne griefe, and might of himſelfe as man haue auoided them?

2. Secondly, as Chriſt gaue power to his members to die boldly, ſo much more had hee power himſelfe to be emboldned againſt the feare of death. 2. Whereas the Martyrs were armed with his example of patience againſt death; now ſhould they haue been diſarmed with his example of feare and weakeneſſe, if he had feared onely the death of the body.

3. Thirdly, 1. Chriſt had no greater cauſe in himſelfe to feare bodily death, nor ſo great as others haue, becauſe he was without ſinne, and ſo death to him was without ſting; for the ſting of death is ſinne: but no man els, though neuer ſo perfect is without ſinne. 2. In reſpect of vs and our redemption, as Chriſt had greater cauſe, &c. ſo had he greater ſtrength to beare it.

4. Fourthly, the fathers haue allowed and approued this argument, Theodoret vpon that place Hebr.5.7. If bleſſed Paul feared not death, but deſired to be diſſolued, &c. how did God the word feare death? *Auguſt. expoſit. in Pſal.*93. Nullo modo formidaret moriturus, quod non formidauit Paulus in fine ſeculi reſurrecturus, cupio diſſolui, &c. Chriſt knowing that he ſhould riſe after the third day, in no wiſe would feare that which Paul feared not, being to riſe againe not before the end of the world; I deſire to be diſſolued,&c. for then the ſeruant ſhould be better then the Maſter. Heb.5.7.

*Argum.*3. Our third argument is taken from the prayer of Chriſt in the garden, Matthew 26.39. O my father, if it be poſſible, let this cuppe paſſe from mee; neuertheleſſe not as I will, but as thou wilt. Matth.26.34.

1. First, heere Chriſt prayeth for a thing, in reſpect of Gods decree not poſſible, that the cuppe might paſſe from him: and therefore afterward he ſaith, verſ.42. If this cuppe cannot paſſe away from mee,&c.

2. Secondly, he prayeth for that, which was not granted, that the cuppe of death and ſorrow prepared for him might paſſe.

3. Thirdly, he prayeth in his humane and naturall deſire ſomewhat diuerſly from Gods will; yet with ſubmiſſion of his will vnto the will of God: what elſe could cauſe Chriſt in this manner to pray againſt his cuppe and croſſe, but the exceeding feare and feeling of Gods heauie wrath, and irefull indignation, wherewith he was ſo amazed at the firſt and aſtoniſhed, that in his humane weakenes hee was carried (his diuinitie now hiding and repreſſing it ſelfe) to deſire the paſſing of that cuppe, which he was to drinke of, for the redemption of mankinde.

1. Anſw. Firſt Feuardentius anſwereth, that it was not impoſſible with God to ſaue his ſonne from death, and to redeeme the world without his death or croſſe; for Chriſt ſaith, Mark.14.36. All things are poſſible to thee. And Hebr.5.7. the Apoſtle ſaith, He offered prayers to him, that was able to ſaue him from death. p.418. Mark.14.36. Hebr.5.7.

Secondly, againe he ſaith, Chriſtum rem impoſſibilem, &c. That Chriſt did not aske a thing impoſſible: Vel abſolutæ voluntati repugnantem, or repugnant to Gods abſolute will: Feuardent. ibid.

*confutat.*2. So then, he ſeemeth thus to take this clauſe, If it bee poſſible, that is, agreeable to thy will.

Contra. Firſt, we deny not, but in reſpect of Gods abſolute power, it had been poſſible for Chriſt not to haue died, and man ſome other way to haue been ſaued; and ſo the places alleaged are to bee vnderſtood: but in reſpect of Gods iuſtice, which could not otherwiſe bee appeaſed, then by the death of his Sonne, it was not poſſible: thus the Scripture ſpeaketh, Act.4.12. There is giuen no other name vnder heauen, whereby we muſt be ſaued: Reuel 5.3. No man in heauen was able to open the booke but the Lambe. Saint Ambroſe bringeth in this diſtinction of things impoſſible: Aliud ſecundum naturam: Some things are impoſſible in nature, but ſo nothing is impoſſible to God, Matth. 19.26. Aliud per definitionem immutabilis conſilij: Some things are impoſſible in reſpect of the decree of Gods immutable counſell, as Hebr.6.18. It is impoſſible that God ſhould lie, lib.4.de fide.c.3. and in this ſenſe it was impoſſible, that Chriſt ſhould not dye, becauſe God had ſo determined: and Origene vpon this place, Quod ad potentiam Dei omnia poſſibilia; quod ad iuſtitiam Dei poſſibilia ſolum, quæ iuſta ſunt: In reſpect of Gods power, all things are poſſible, in reſpect of his iuſtice, thoſe things are onely poſſible, that are iuſt: *In Matth.tract.*35. Their owne Thomas alſo here thus diſtinguiſheth: that ſimplie it was not impoſſible to God to redeeme man, without the death of Chriſt, but ſuppoſita præſcientia, Gods preſcience being preſuppoſed, it was impoſſible, becauſe he had ſo determined. part.3.qu.46.art.3.

Reuel.5.3.
Matth.19.26.
Hebr.6.18.

Secondly, that the poſſibilitie expreſſed in the firſt clauſe of Chriſts prayer, hath no reference to Gods will, it thus appeareth: firſt, Chriſt ſaith in generall, all things are poſſible vnto thee, Mar.14.36. but if no more be poſſible to God, then he will; then it would follow, that he can doe no more then he doth, or will doe, which is a great error. Secondly, if this were the meaning, if it bee poſſible, that is, ſtand with thy will, what needed that limitation, or explanation following, yet not my will, ſeeing he had expreſſed ſo much before? Thirdly, in reſpect of Gods will, it was impoſſible the cup ſhould paſſe: as our Sauiour ſaith, verſ.43. If this cup cannot paſſe away from me, but that I muſt drinke it, thy will be done: how could the ſame thing be both poſſible and impoſſible in regard of Gods will? Fourthly, Chriſt was not ignorant of the will of God, and therefore knew well enough that it was not poſſible, neither ſtood with Gods will, that the cup ſhould paſſe: this clauſe therefore, if it be poſſible, cannot be referred to the will of God, but rather to his power.

Mark.14.36.

2. Secondly, it is replied, that Chriſt obtained that he asked: firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, Hebr.5.7. he was heard. Secondly, our Sauiour ſaith to his father, Ioh.11.42. *Thou hearest me alwayes: Feuard.p.*464. *con.*4. Thirdly, Origene thinketh, that the cuppe of Gods euerlaſting wrath did paſſe both from Chriſt and vs, and ſo in that behalfe he obtained that he deſired: Orig.in hunc locum.

Ioh.11.42.

1. Contr. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, he was heard in or from his feare: Chriſt in his humane infirmitie (his diuine power for the time withdrawing it ſelfe) feared a greater meaſure of Gods wrath, leaſt hee ſhould haue been left alone in it; from this feare he was heard and deliuered. So then the cup of Gods wrath paſſed not from him, as in the beginning of his prayer his humane will tempted (as Damaſcene ſaith) of his naturall infirmitie deſired, but from the manner and meaſure thereof which he feared.

2. Secondly, Chriſt was indeede alwayes heard of God, ſo was he in this place: for though hee was in that moment ſtirred in his humane deſire to wiſh the eſcaping of that cuppe (for it is a naturall inſtinct, and not in it ſelfe ſinfull, to wiſh to decline euery thing that is hurtfull) yet he limiteth this deſire, and ſquareth his will to his fathers: ſo that this was the ſumme of his prayer, that howſoeuer his humane deſire wiſhed to eſcape that cup, yet he was contented Gods will might ſtand; and ſo it did, and thus Chriſt was heard: though not in the ſudden wiſh of humane infirmitie, yet in the aduiſed requeſt of his filiall conformitie.

3. Thirdly, Origene indeede hath ſuch a conceite: Expediebat omnibus, vt tranſiret calix ab eo propterea quod biberat eum ſaluator: It was expedient for all men, that the cup ſhould paſſe from Chriſt, becauſe he dranke of it: ſo he thinketh, that the cuppe of Gods euerlaſting wrath paſſed from Chriſt and vs, by his drinking of it. This is contrary to the Scripture: If this cup cannot paſſe, but that I muſt drinke of it, thy will be done, Matth.26.42. Chriſts meaning was then, that the cup might ſo paſſe, that he might not drinke of it: how then could it paſſe by his drinking and taſting of it? Secondly, Chriſt feared not eternall vengeance after death, and ſo euerlaſting deſtruction, it were not farre from blaſphemie ſo to affirme: but he was heard in that which he feared: Ergo, herein he was not heard, neither did he deſire the cup to paſſe in that ſenſe, in the appeaſing of Gods euerlaſting wrath, which was indeede an effect of Chriſts croſſe, but not of that part of his prayer in the garden, for the paſſing of the cup: though in the explanation, limitation and condition of his prayer I doubt not but that effect is comprehended.

Obiect. If Chriſt neither feared the death of the bodie, nor euerlaſting death; what then did hee feare?

Anſw. I ſay with Cyprian: Metus ille infirmitatis humanæ communem exprimebat affectum, vt difficultas extremi exitus timeretur: That feare of humane infirmitie did expreſſe a common affection, that the difficultie of the laſt end ſhould be feared, ſerm.de paſſion. So then Chriſt feared not the end of his life, but the difficultie thereof, that is, the bitternes of his fathers wrath, and the anguiſh of ſoule, that was ioyned with death. To this purpoſe the ordinarie gloſſe vpon the third to the Galathians:

lathians: Inſipiens honorificentia, Chriſtum à maledicto, quod morti coniunctum eſt, ſeparat: it is a fooliſh honouring of Chriſt to exempt him from the curſe, which was ioyned with death, &c. So then it was Gods wrath and curſe, which did concurre with Chriſts bodily death, which did ſo afflict and perplexe his ſoule.

Thirdly, it is replied that Chriſt prayed not contrary to Gods knowne will: Firſt, Chriſt prayed in faith, and was moſt aſſured his prayer ſhould take effect, Feuar. p. 464. conf. 4. lin. 13. Therefore not againſt the knowne will of God. Secondly, he prayed the ſame prayer thrice, which had been a voluntary ſpurning againſt Gods will, if he had prayed againſt it. Thirdly, he taught his Apoſtles to pray aright, and reproued the ſonnes of Zebedee, You know not what ye aske: much more doth he pray himſelfe aright: Feuard. p. 421. conf. 11. Fourthly, if he prayed directly contrary to the will of God, he had ſinned: but his prayers were iuſt and pure: Feuar. p. 419. conf. 7.

Contra. Firſt this replie is altogether impertinent: Firſt, we ſay not, that Chriſts will or prayer was contrary to Gods will, but diuers onely from it. Secondly, his whole prayer was not contrary, or diuers or different, but onely the ſhort motion in the beginning of his prayer was ſomewhat diuers. Thirdly, though Gods will were knowne vnto Chriſt, yet in this moment, wherein he ſtoode amazed and aſtoniſhed, ſeeing his diuine power and knowledge, by the which Gods will was reuealed vnto him, did now withdrawe and repreſſe it ſelfe, how could it otherwiſe be, but that this knowledge and reuelation of Gods will, was for the time as ſuſpended alſo, and not obiected to Chriſts humane ſenſe, being now fully poſſeſſed of this agonie?

Mark. 11.13.

Secondly, for anſwere to the arguments. Firſt, notwithſtanding the diuerſitie of deſire in Chriſts humane will, yet he prayed in faith, in that he ſubmitted his will in all obedience to his Fathers. Secondly, he might repeate the ſame requeſt of his naturall deſire thrice, becauſe ſo long his agonie continued, without any repugnance to Gods will, ſtill remembring the ſame condition, in ſubmitting his naturall deſire to his fathers heauenly will. Thirdly, the prayer of the ſonnes of Zebedee was raſh and ignorant, becauſe it was not conditionall nor limited, but humorous and diſordered; failing both in the occaſion, which was ambitious; and the manner, which was peremptorie and abſolute: but Chriſt prayed from the feeling and neceſſitie of his humane infirmitie, and with the moſt obedient condition of his fathers will: and therefore his prayer ſo begun, and ſo ended and limited, was neither raſh nor ignorant. Fourthly, firſt he prayed not contrary to Gods will, but a diuers thing hee asked, yet with a ſubordination to Gods will. Secondly, it is not ſinne for the naturall affection to deſire to decline that which is hurtfull or contrary vnto life: as Origene ſaith, whom I alleaged before: Proprium eſt omnis hominis fidelis primum nolle pati aliquid doloris, &c It is proper euen to euery faithfull man, to be vnwilling to ſuffer any trouble, Tract. 35. in Matth. So it was no more ſinne in Chriſt in his humane ſenſe to deſire to ſhun griefe and trouble, then it was for him, being hungrie, to couet to eate of the fruit of the figge tree, where was no fruit but leaues, Mark. 11. 13. Thirdly, but it will be obiected, that Chriſt knew Gods will to the contrary, and therefore ſhould haue ſinned in making any ſuch requeſt.

Exod. 32. 33.
Rom. 9. 3.
Rom. 8. 38.

Anſw. Firſt, I ſay with Auguſtine: Si in illa voluntate permaneret, &c. If Chriſt ſhould haue ſtaied in that minde or will, then his heart might haue ſeemed not to be aright, expoſit. in Pſal. 93. Wherefore the preſent moderation of his humane deſire, and the ſubmiſſion of it to Gods will, doe free our Sauiour from all corruption. Secondly, ſome doe giue this ſolution: Non ideo petijt, vt impetraret, &c. He did not therefore aske to obtaine, for he knew God would not doe it: ſed vt membris formam præberet, but to giue his members an example how to ſubmit their will and deſire to Gods: ſic Magiſter. lib. 3. diſt. 17. liter. c. Thirdly, I anſwere, that in this very moment Chriſts humane infirmitie being aſtoniſhed with this vehement obiect of griefe, and all amazed, did not turne it ſelfe to conſider of Gods ſecret will and decree herein: Like as Moſes and Paul knew very well, that they were both Gods elect ones, and could not finally periſh: yet in the exceſſe of their zeale, beſide this their knowledge, they wiſh one to be raſed out of the booke of life; the other to be anathema, that is, accurſed for the people of Gods ſake, Exod. 32. 33. Rom. 9. 3. Did Saint Paul ſinne againſt his owne knowledge, who hauing firſt ſaid, that nothing could ſeparate him from the loue of God in Chriſt, Rom. 8. 38. preſently in his great zeale wiſheth to be ſeparated from Chriſt? If this were no ſinne in the member, how could it be in the head? Further, we muſt conſider now of Chriſt as a perfect man (his Godhead now not ſhewing it ſelfe) and that, as Damaſcene ſaith, he tooke vpon him ἀγνοοῦσαν φύσιν, a nature of it ſelfe ignorant, but that it was by the conioyning of the diuine nature enriched with the knowledge of future thinges, lib. 3. de fide. c. 21. Whereupon our Sauiour doubteth not to confeſſe himſelfe, as hee is man, ignorant of Gods ſecret will, Mark.13.32. what inconuenience then is it to grant, that Chriſt as man (the light of his diuine knowledge for a time withholding the beames thereof) being plunged in this agonie in his humane ſenſe, did either preſently not know or not remember his fathers ſecret determination concerning his drinking of this cup? Mark.13.32.

Thirdly, that Chriſt prayed at the firſt for ſomewhat not obtained, and that he deſired and willed a diuers thing from his fathers will in that inſtant: the fathers doe thus teſtifie: Auguſt. Hæc humana voluntas erat proprium aliquid & priuatum volens: This was his humane will, willing ſomewhat proper and priuate, in Pſal.32.part.1. Hieronym. in Marc.14. Hic oſtendit humanam voluntatem, quæ propter infirmitatem carnis recuſat paſſionem, & diuinam, quæ prompta eſt perficere diſpenſationem: Here he ſheweth an humane will, which becauſe of the infirmitie of the fleſh, refuſeth the paſſion, and a diuine will, which is readie to performe the diſpenſation. Origen. tract.35. in Matth. Hæc voluntas, quam dicit, non ſicut ego volo, &c. This will, which he ſaith, not as I will, is not according to his diuine and impaſſible ſubſtance, but his humane, and infirme. Chryſoſt. ex epiſtol. Agath. ad Conſtantin. Si in diuinitate dictum eſt, aliqua eſt contradictio; ſi de carne, nullum eſt ſcandalum: If it bee ſaid of his diuinitie, there is ſome contradiction; if of his fleſh, (not as I will, &c.) there is no offence. Theſe fathers tooke this as a pregnant place to proue two wils in Chriſt, his diuine and humane, againſt the Monotholite heretikes: if Chriſt had then two wils, hee had two deſires, and one diuers from the other: it is euident then, that Chriſt in his humane deſire wiſhed ſomewhat diuerſly from his diuine, yet without ſinne, becauſe hee eſt-ſoones ſubmitted his humane affection to the diuine diſpoſition.

*Argum.*4. That Chriſt was exceedingly amazed and aſtoniſhed being in his agonie, the Scripture euidently teſtifieth: he began ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι ϗ ἀδημονεῖν, to be aſtoniſhed with feare, and to faint or fall away in his ſoule: for ſo the words ſignifie: what elſe could bee the cauſe thereof, then the preſent ſenſe, which he had in his ſoule, of the wrath and indignation of God againſt ſinne? what elſe cauſed him to pray ſo earneſtly, to ſweat drops of blood, to be all amazed, to neede to be comforted of the Angell? the feare of bodily death could not do it, Chriſt was not ſo weake and infirme: if it were not the ſenſe of bodily danger, it was the feeling of ſpirituall griefe and terror of ſoule, which procured it.

Anſw. Firſt, the expiation of the ſinnes of the world before God, whoſe iuſtice was to be ſatisfied, and the contemplation and beholding of the ſame in the ſoule of Chriſt, cauſed this great heauineſſe in Chriſt, and in ſuch meaſure, vt par ei nunquam fuerit, that no man was euer like him, Feuardent. p.455. lin.37. So then the preſence of Gods Maieſtie, and the pitiſull beholding of mans miſerie, did thus aſtoniſh him.

Secondly, the conſtant continuing of the ſame prayer three ſeuerall times, with intermiſſion of time, Feuard. p.486. conf.8. lin.11. and admonition to his Diſciples, proueth he had not forgotten himſelfe, Feuard. p.425. conf.5. lin.8.

Thirdly, this religious aſtoniſhment, though it might for the preſent ſuſpend all other thoughts in our Sauiour, yet is there no neede it ſhould depriue him of vnderſtanding, ſenſe and memorie, Feuard. p.425. conf.6. lin.4.

Contra. Firſt, 1. If the pietie of Chriſt, or preſence of Gods Maieſtie had thus aſtoniſhed Chriſt, why was he not at other times aſtoniſhed, when he came into Gods preſence? as Ioh.17.13. hee ſaith in his prayer, now I come vnto thee: and pietie there was alwaies in Chriſt: if the ſame cauſe, why not the ſame effect? 2. What cauſe had Chriſt to feare the Maieſtie of God in himſelfe, being the dearely beloued ſonne of God, moſt iuſt, righteous, holy, but onely as our pledge and ſuretie, preſenting himſelfe in our perſon, to anſwere our debts? 3. And if commiſeration of humane miſerie, had ſtricken into him this aſtoniſhment, it muſt 1. follow, that either he was without commiſeration at other times, which were blaſphemie to ſay; or that his commiſeration wrought not in him this proper effect, namely aſtoniſhment, which were great raſhneſſe to auouch. 2. When Chriſt wept ouer Ieruſalem, foreſeeing their vtter deſolation for euer, why did not this commiſeration then alſo aſtoniſh him? 3. And where Chriſt prayeth to bee deliuered from that houre, Mark.14.35. will they tye Chriſts pietie and charitie, which they ſay was now the cauſe of this aſtoniſhment, onely to this houre? Whereſore theſe were not the cauſes now: for at other times they could not haue wanted the ſame effects. Iohn 17.13. Mark.14.35.

Secondly, 1. his repeating of his prayer thrice, his admoniſhing of his Apoſtles, doe proue that hee had not forgotten himſelfe, wee grant; neither doe we ſo affirme, as it is vnderſtood; that Chriſt had cleane forgotten and was as beſide himſelfe: he was not ſo amazed or aſtoniſhed, but that he had ſome intermiſſion and breathing time, and comforts mixed with his tentations: neither yet ſo confounded, as that he either forgot pietie in his obedience to God, or charitie and pitie in warning his Diſciples. 2. The repeating of his prayer thrice for the paſſing of the cup, his praying to bee deliuered from that houre, the comforting of the Angell, doe ſhew a continuance of the agonie and aſtoniſhment: and the text ſaith, hee was γενόμενος, conſtitutus, ſet or ſetled in an agonie, Luk.22.44. you muſt then either grant no agonie or aſtoniſhment at all, or elſe continue it all the while of his prayer, as the Euangeliſts doe: but yet there was ſome intermiſſion of the agonie fittes, and the infirmitie, as Ambroſe calleth it, or tentation of his fleſh, as Damaſcene: had their entercourſe: ſo it continued, but not alwayes in the ſame meaſure or degree of working, as hath beene ſhewed before: par.2. reſ.2. & 4. ad 3. arg. paſſiar. this then is not contrarie to that which is affirmed before, that all his prayer while he was not in that traunce: that is in the ſame meaſure and degree without intermiſſion, ibid. reſp.2. artic.3. ad 4. argum. Luk.22.44.

Thirdly, there is no neede, notwithſtanding Chriſt were amazed and perplexed with the feare of Gods iudgements, and ſo caſt into a moſt vehement agonie, that he ſhould be depriued of ſenſe, vnderſtanding, or memorie: 1. If his memorie in one point were not extinguiſhed, but ouer-ruled or ouercaſt with the vehement ſenſe of his preſent agonie, muſt he therefore be wrapped in a totall confuſion or obliuion? 2. In the middeſt of theſe ſtormes hee had ſome comfortable blaſts; and though death and hell were before his ſenſe, yet he was quickened and reuiued in his ſpirit. 3. Moſes and Paul rauiſhed with zeale, wiſhed they might be caſtawaies; yet at other times their ſaluation was manifeſtly reuealed vnto them: ſhall wee conclude therefore that they wanted ſenſe, vnderſtanding, memorie? Thus (I truſt) are thoſe obiections anſwered.

Argum.5. Laſtly, I will produce the teſtimonie of the Fathers, that Chriſt was not thus aſtoniſhed for feare of the death of the bodie: Hilarie lib.10 de Trinitat. Anne timuit mori, qui armatis obuius prodit, &c. pungenda carnis metu triſtis eſt, cuius attactu caro poſt cædem ſanatur: Did he feare to die, which came againſt the armed troupes? was he ſorrowfull for the pricking of his fleſh, who by his touch healed the eare that was ſmitten off? Auguſt in expoſit. in Pſal.93. Si ſciret ſe poſt triduum reſurrecturum, nullo modo formidaret moriturus: Chriſt did not feare to die, being to riſe againe the third day. And againe, in Pſal.100. Non vere ille timebat mortem, qui poteſtatem habuit ponendi animam, &c. He could not verily feare death, that had power to lay downe his ſoule, and to take it vp againe.

Againe, Hilarie ſaith, Triſtis eſt anima mea vſque mortem, nunquid ait triſtis eſt anima propter mortem? aliud eſt vſque, aliud propter id metuere: My ſoule is heauie vnto death; doth he ſay my ſoule is heauie for or becauſe of death? it is one thing to feare till death, another becauſe of death: c.31. in Matth.

Ambroſe: Non propter mortem, ſed vſque ad mortem: quia eum conditio corporalis affectus, non formido mortis offendit: Not becauſe of death, but vnto death, for the condition of his corporall or naturall affection, not the feare of deadly affliction doth offend him, in Luc.12. And our country man Beda vſeth the very ſame words, in 14. Mark.

Some other of the Fathers affirme, that Chriſt non timuit infernum chaos, & torrentes flammas, that Chriſt feared not the infernall gulfe, or the ſcorching flames, Hilarie lib.10. de Trinitat. Bellarm.reſp. ad argum.7.

We willingly grant that Chriſt feared not hell fire, nor euerlaſting deſtruction: thoſe authorities preſſe not vs, but rather helpe our cauſe: for if Chriſt neither feared temporall, nor euerlaſting death, as theſe Fathers witneſſe, and the Apoſtle ſaith he feared, Hebr.5.7. what then remaineth, but that he feared the cup of Gods wrath mixed with death? And as Cyprian ſaith before cited, Difficultatem extremi exitus: The difficultie or hardneſſe of his laſt paſſage, that is, in reſpect of Gods wrath tempered with it. Heb.5.7.

Vnto theſe fore recited teſtimonies of the Eaſt and South Church, I will adde the conſent of the reformed Churches. Saxonic. artic.3. There was ſo great loue in the Sonne toward vs, that he deriued vnto himſelfe this true and exceeding great anger. Scotland, artic. of Chriſts death and paſſion: Hee ſuffered not onely the cruell death of the croſſe, — but alſo for a ſeaſon the wrath of his Father, &c. Harm.ſect 6. pag.108.

Thomas their oracle thus acknowledgeth; Doloris interioris cauſa fuit primo peccata omnia humani generis, pro quib. ſatisfaciebat patiendo, &c. The cauſe of his inward griefe was firſt all the ſinnes of mankinde for the which he ſatisfied by ſuffring, which hee aſcribed as vnto himſelfe, &c. If then all our ſinnes were laid vpon Chriſt as his owne, how did he not alſo vndergoe for the time the burthen of his fathers wrath, which was due vnto our ſinnes, which Chriſt bare. Part.3.q.46. ar.6.

This then is the ſumme: firſt, that ſeeing Chriſt was ſaued from that he feared, yet was he not ſaued from death; ſecondly, ſo he ſhould haue beene weaker than many Martyrs, that were not afraid of the death of the bodie; thirdly, ſeeing hee was ſo aſtoniſhed being in his agonie, that hee prayed for the paſſing of the cup, which was neither paſſible, nor granted; fourthly, and was ſo aſtoniſhed with feare, that his ſoule fainted within, his bodie did ſweat blood without; fifthly, ſeeing the Fathers confeſſe, that this agonie proceeded not from any feare of bodily ſuffrings: it followeth that the feare and feeling of his fathers wrath thus troubled his ſoule. And thus much of this ſecond part or argument, of the cauſe of Chriſts agonie and aſtoniſhment in the garden.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER CHRIST SVFfered properly and immediatly in ſoule.

THE OBIECTIONS ANSWERED.

The Papiſts.

16.Error. THeir opinion is, that Chriſt did not ſuffer in ſoule properly, but either, ex corporis coniunctione & condolentia: His griefe proceeded from the coniunction and fellow-feeling with the bodie, Feuardent.p.454. or elſe from the commiſeration and compaſſion that he had for the ſinnes of his myſticall bodie: for the which, tanta totius cordis pœnitudine dolet, vt par ei nemo vnquam fuerit: He did ſo grieue throughout in his heart, that no man was euer like vnto him, p.455. So he concludeth, pœnas peccatis debitas in corpore portaſſe, &c. igitur non in anima, that he bare the puniſhment due to our ſinnes in his bodie, and not in his ſoule, p.448. To the like purpoſe Bellar. Defixit mentem in omnia tormenta impendentia:

confutat.2. So then, he ſeemeth thus to take this clauſe, If it bee poſſible, that is, agreeable to thy will.

Contra. First, we deny not, but in reſpect of Gods abſolute power, it had been poſſible for Chriſt not to haue died, and man ſome other way to haue been ſaued; and ſo the places alledged are to bee vnderſtood: but in reſpect of Gods iuſtice, which could not otherwiſe bee appeaſed, then by the death of his Sonne, it was not poſſible: thus the Scripture ſpeaketh, Act.4.12. There is giuen no other name vnder heauen, whereby we muſt be ſaued: Act.4.12. Reuel 5.3. No man in heauen was able to open the booke but the Lambe. Reuel.5.3. Saint Ambroſe bringeth in this diſtinction of things impoſſible: Aliud ſecundum naturam: Some things are impoſſible in nature, but ſo nothing is impoſſible to God, Matth. 19.36. Aliud per definitionem immutabilis conſilij: Some things are impoſſible in reſpect of the decree of Gods immutable counſell, as Hebr.6.18. It is impoſſible that God ſhould lie, lib.4.de fide.c.3. Matth.19.26. Hebr.6.18. and in this ſenſe it was impoſſible, that Chriſt ſhould not dye, becauſe God had ſo determined: and Origene vpon this place, Quod ad potentiam Dei omnia poſſibilia; quod ad iuſtitiam Dei poſſibilia ſolum, quæ iuſta ſunt: In reſpect of Gods power, all things are poſſible, in reſpect of his iuſtice, thoſe things are onely poſſible, that are iuſt: In Matth.tract.35. Their owne Thomas alſo here thus diſtinguiſheth: that ſimplie it was not impoſſible to God to redeeme man, without the death of Chriſt, but ſuppoſita præſcientia, Gods preſcience being preſuppoſed, it was impoſſible, becauſe he had ſo determined. part.3.qu.46.art.3.

Secondly, that the poſſibilitie expreſſed in the firſt clauſe of Chriſts prayer, hath no reference to Gods will, it thus appeareth: firſt, Chriſt ſaith in generall, all things are poſſible vnto thee, Mar.14.36. Mark.14.36. but if no more be poſſible to God, then he will; then it would follow, that he can doe no more then he doth, or will doe, which is a great error. Secondly, if this were the meaning, if it bee poſſible, that is, ſtand with thy will, what needed that limitation, or explanation following, yet not my will; ſeeing he had expreſſed ſo much before? Thirdly, in reſpect of Gods will, it was impoſſible the cup ſhould paſſe: as our Sauiour ſaith, verſ.43. If this cup cannot paſſe away from me, but that I muſt drinke it, thy will be done: how could the ſame thing be both poſſible and impoſſible in regard of Gods will? Fourthly, Chriſt was not ignorant of the will of God, and therefore knew well enough that it was not poſſible, neither ſtood with Gods will, that the cup ſhould paſſe: this clauſe therefore, if it be poſſible, cannot be referred to the will of God, but rather to his power.

Secondly, it is replied, that Chriſt obtained that he asked: firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, Hebr.5.7. he was heard. 2. Secondly, our Sauiour ſaith to his father, Ioh.11.42. Thou heareſt me alwayes: Feuard.p.464. con.4. Heb.5.7. Thirdly, Origene thinketh, that the cuppe of Gods euerlaſting wrath did paſſe both from Ioh.11.42. Chriſt and vs, and ſo in that behalfe he obtained that he deſired: Orig.in hunc locum.

Contr. First, the Apoſtle ſaith, he was heard in or from his feare: Chriſt in his humane infirmitie 1. (his diuine power for the time withdrawing it ſelfe) feared a greater meaſure of Gods wrath, leaſt hee ſhould haue been left alone in it; from this feare he was heard and deliuered. So then the cup of Gods wrath paſſed not from him, as in the beginning of his prayer his humane will tempted (as Damaſcene ſaith) of his naturall infirmitie deſired, but from the manner and meaſure thereof which he feared.

Secondly, Chriſt was indeede alwayes heard of God, ſo was he in this place: for though hee was 2. in that moment ſtirred in his humane deſire to wiſh the eſcaping of that cuppe (for it is a naturall inſtinct, and not in it ſelfe ſinfull, to wiſh to decline euery thing that is hurtfull) yet he limiteth this deſire, and ſquareth his will to his fathers: ſo that this was the ſumme of his prayer, that howſoeuer his humane deſire wiſhed to eſcape that cup, yet he was contented Gods will might ſtand; and ſo it did, and thus Chriſt was heard: though not in the ſudden wiſh of humane infirmitie, yet in the aduiſed requeſt of his filiall conformitie.

Thirdly, Origene indeede hath ſuch a conceite: Expediebat omnibus, vt tranſiret calix ab eo propterea quod biberat eum ſaluator: 3. It was expedient for all men, that the cup ſhould paſſe from Chriſt, becauſe he dranke of it: ſo he thinketh, that the cuppe of Gods euerlaſting wrath paſſed from Chriſt and vs, by his drinking of it. This is contrary to the Scripture: If this cup cannot paſſe, but that I muſt drinke of it, thy will be done, Matth.26.42. Chriſts meaning was then, that the cup might ſo paſſe, that Matth.26.42. he might not drinke of it: how then could it paſſe by his drinking and taſting of it? Secondly, Chriſt feared not eternall vengeance after death, and ſo euerlaſting deſtruction, it were not farre from blaſphemie ſo to affirme: but he was heard in that which he feared: Ergo, herein he was not heard, neither did he deſire the cup to paſſe in that ſenſe, in the appeaſing of Gods euerlaſting wrath, which was indeede an effect of Chriſts croſſe, but not of that part of his prayer in the garden, for the paſſing of the cup: though in the explanation, limitation and condition of his prayer I doubt not but that effect is comprehended.

Obiect. If Chriſt neither feared the death of the bodie, nor euerlaſting death; what then did hee feare?

Anſw. I ſay with Cyprian: Metus ille infirmitatis humanæ communem exprimebat affectum, vt difficultas extremi exitus timeretur: That feare of humane infirmitie did expreſſe a common affection, that the difficultie of the laſt end ſhould be feared, ſerm.de paſſion. So then Chriſt feared not the end of his life, but the difficultie thereof, that is, the bitternes of his fathers wrath, and the anguiſh of ſoule, that was ioyned with death. To this purpoſe the ordinarie gloſſe vpon the third to the Galathians:

lathians: Inſipiens honorificentia, Chriſtum à maledicto, quod morti coniunctum eſt, ſeparat: it is a fooliſh honouring of Chriſt to exempt him from the curſe, which was ioyned with death, &c. So then it was Gods wrath and curſe, which did concurre with Chriſts bodily death, which did ſo afflict and perplexe his ſoule.

Thirdly, it is replied that Chriſt prayed not contrary to Gods knowne will: Firſt, Chriſt prayed in faith, and was moſt aſſured his prayer ſhould take effect, Feuar. p. 464. conf. 4. lin. 13. Therefore not againſt the knowne will of God. Secondly, he prayed the ſame prayer thrice, which had been a voluntary ſpurning againſt Gods will, if he had prayed againſt it. Thirdly, he taught his Apoſtles to pray aright, and reproued the ſonnes of Zebedee, You know not what ye aske: much more doth he pray himſelfe aright: Feuard. p. 421. conf. 11. Fourthly, if he prayed directly contrary to the will of God, he had ſinned: but his prayers were iuſt and pure: Feuar. p. 419. conf. 7.

Contra. Firſt this replie is altogether impertinent: Firſt, we ſay not, that Chriſts will or prayer was contrary to Gods will, but diuers onely from it, Secondly, his whole prayer was not contrary, or diuers or different, but onely the ſhort motion in the beginning of his prayer was ſomewhat diuers. Thirdly, though Gods will were knowne vnto Chriſt, yet in this moment, wherein he ſtoode amazed and aſtoniſhed, ſeeing his diuine power and knowledge, by the which Gods will was reuealed vnto him, did now withdrawe and repreſſe it ſelfe, how could it otherwiſe be, but that this knowledge and reuelation of Gods will, was for the time as ſuſpended alſo, and not obiected to Chriſts humane ſenſe, being now fully poſſeſſed of this agonie?

Of Chriſts prayer in the garden for the paſſing of the cup, how to be vnderſtood.

Secondly, for anſwere to the arguments. Firſt, notwithſtanding the diuerſitie of deſire in Chriſts humane will, yet he prayed in faith, in that he ſubmitted his will in all obedience to his Fathers. Secondly, he might repeate the ſame requeſt of his naturall deſire thrice, becauſe ſo long his agonie continued, without any repugnance to Gods will, ſtill remembring the ſame condition, in ſubmitting his naturall deſire to his fathers heauenly will. Thirdly, the prayer of the ſonnes of Zebedee was raſh and ignorant, becauſe it was not conditionall nor limited, but humorous and diſordered; failing both in the occaſion, which was ambitious; and the manner, which was peremptorie and abſolute: but Chriſt prayed from the feeling and neceſſitie of his humane infirmitie, and with the moſt obedient condition of his fathers will: and therefore his prayer ſo begun, and ſo ended and limited, was neither raſh nor ignorant. Fourthly, firſt he prayed not contrary to Gods will, but a diuers thing hee asked, yet with a ſubordination to Gods will. Secondly, it is not ſinne for the naturall affection to deſire to decline that which is hurtfull or contrary vnto life: as Origene ſaith, whom I alleaged before: Proprium eſt omnis hominis fidelis primum nolle pati aliquid doloris, &c. It is proper euen to euery faithfull man, to be vnwilling to ſuffer any trouble, Tract. 35. in Matth. So it was no more ſinne in Chriſt in his humane ſenſe to deſire to ſhun griefe and trouble, then it was for him, being hungrie, to couet

Mark. 11. 13. to eate of the fruit of the figge tree, where was no fruit but leaues, Mark. 11. 13. Thirdly, but it will be obiected, that Chriſt knew Gods will to the contrary, and therefore ſhould haue ſinned in making any ſuch requeſt.

Anſw. Firſt, I ſay with Auguſtine: Si in illa voluntate permaneret, &c. If Chriſt ſhould haue ſtaied in that minde or will, then his heart might haue ſeemed not to be aright, expoſit. in Pſal. 93. Wherefore the preſent moderation of his humane deſire, and the ſubmiſſion of it to Gods will, doe free our Sauiour from all corruption. Secondly, ſome doe giue this ſolution: Non ideo petijt, vt impetraret, &c. He did not therefore aske to obtaine, for he knew God would not doe it: ſed vt membris formam praberet, but to giue his members an example how to ſubmit their will and deſire to Gods: ſic Magiſter. lib. 3. diſt. 17. liter. c. Thirdly, I anſwere, that in this very moment Chriſts humane infirmitie being aſtoniſhed with this vehement obiect of griefe, and all amazed, did not turne it ſelfe to conſider of Gods ſecret will and decree herein: Like as Moſes and Paul knew very well, that they were both Gods elect ones, and could not finally periſh: yet in the exceſſe of their zeale, beſide this their knowledge, they wiſh one to be raſed out of the booke of life; the other to be anathema, that is, ac-

Rom. 9. 3. knowledge, who hauing firſt ſaid, that nothing could ſeparate him from the loue of God in Chriſt,

Rom. 8. 38. Rom. 8. 38. preſently in his great zeale wiſheth to be ſeparated from Chriſt? If this were no ſinne in the member, how could it be in the head? Further, we muſt conſider now of Chriſt as a perfect man (his Godhead now not ſhewing it ſelfe) and that, as Damaſcene ſaith, he tooke vpon him ἀγνοοῦσαν φύσιν, a nature of it ſelfe ignorant, but that it was by the conioyning of the diuine nature enriched with the knowledge of future thinges, lib. 3. de fide. c. 21. Whereupon our Sauiour doubteth not to confeſſe himſelfe, as hee is man, ignorant of Gods ſecret will, Mark.13.32. what inconuenience then is it to grant, that Chriſt as man (the light of his diuine knowledge for a time withholding the beames thereof) being plunged in this agonie in his humane ſenſe, did either preſently not know or not remember his fathers ſecret determination concerning his drinking of this cup? Mark.13.32.

Thirdly, that Chriſt prayed at the firſt for ſomewhat not obtained, and that he deſired and willed a diuers thing from his fathers will in that inſtant: the fathers doe thus teſtifie: Auguſt. Hæc humana voluntas erat proprium aliquid & priuatum volens: This was his humane will, willing ſomewhat proper and priuate, in Pſal.32.part.1. Hieronym.in Marc.14. Hic oſtendit humanam voluntatem, quæ propter infirmitatem carnis recuſat paſſionem, & diuinam, quæ prompta eſt perficere diſpenſationem: Here he ſheweth an humane will, which becauſe of the infirmitie of the fleſh, refuſeth the paſſion, and a diuine will, which is readie to performe the diſpenſation. Origen.tract.35.in Matth. Hæc voluntas, quam dicit, non ſicut ego volo, &c. This will, which he ſaith, not as I will, is not according to his diuine and impaſſible ſubſtance, but his humane, and infirme. Chryſoſt.ex epiſtol. Agath.ad Conſtantin. Si in diuinitate dictum eſt, aliqua eſt contradictio; ſi de carne, nullum eſt ſcandalum: If it bee ſaid of his diuinitie, there is ſome contradiction; if of his fleſh, (not as I will, &c.) there is no offence. Theſe fathers tooke this as a pregnant place to proue two wils in Chriſt, his diuine and humane, againſt the Monotholite heretikes: if Chriſt had then two wils, hee had two deſires, and one diuers from the other: it is euident then, that Chriſt in his humane deſire wiſhed ſomewhat diuerſly from his diuine, yet without ſinne, becauſe hee eftſoones ſubmitted his humane affection to the diuine diſpoſition.

*Argum.*4. That Chriſt was exceedingly amazed and aſtoniſhed being in his agonie, the Scripture euidently teſtifieth: he began ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι ϗ ἀδημονεῖν, to be aſtoniſhed with feare, and to faint or fall away in his ſoule: for ſo the words ſignifie: what elſe could bee the cauſe thereof, then the preſent ſenſe, which he had in his ſoule, of the wrath and indignation of God againſt ſinne? what elſe cauſed him to pray ſo earneſtly, to ſweat drops of blood, to be all amazed, to neede to be comforted of the Angell? the feare of bodily death could not do it, Chriſt was not ſo weake and infirme; if it were not the ſenſe of bodily danger, it was the feeling of ſpirituall griefe and terror of ſoule, which procured it.

Anſw. Firſt, the expiation of the ſinnes of the world before God, whoſe iuſtice was to be ſatisfied, and the contemplation and beholding of the ſame in the ſoule of Chriſt, cauſed this great heauineſſe in Chriſt, and in ſuch meaſure, vt par ei nunquam fuerit, that no man was euer like him, *Feuardent.p.455. lin.*37. So then the preſence of Gods Maieſtie, and the pitifull beholding of mans miſerie, did thus aſtoniſh him.

Secondly, the conſtant continuing of the ſame prayer three ſeuerall times, with intermiſſion of time, *Feuard.p.*486.*conf.*8.*lin.*11. and admonition to his Diſciples, proueth he had not forgotten himſelfe, *Feuard.p.*425.*conf.*5.*lin.*8.

Thirdly, this religious aſtoniſhment, though it might for the preſent ſuſpend all other thoughts in our Sauiour, yet is there no neede it ſhould depriue him of vnderſtanding, ſenſe and memorie, *Feuard. p.*425.*conf.*6.*lin.*4.

Contra. Firſt, 1. If the pietie of Chriſt, or preſence of Gods Maieſtie had thus aſtoniſhed Chriſt, why was he not at other times aſtoniſhed, when he came into Gods preſence? as Ioh.17.13. hee ſaith in his prayer, now I come vnto thee: and pietie there was alwaies in Chriſt: if the ſame cauſe, why not the ſame effect? 2. What cauſe had Chriſt to feare the Maieſtie of God in himſelfe, being the dearely beloued ſonne of God, moſt iuſt, righteous, holy, but onely as our pledge and ſuretie, preſenting himſelfe in our perſon, to anſwere our debts? 3. And if commiſeration of humane miſerie, had ſtricken into him this aſtoniſhment, it muſt 1. follow, that either he was without commiſeration at other times, which were blaſphemie to ſay; or that his commiſeration wrought not in him this proper effect, namely aſtoniſhment, which were great raſhneſſe to auouch. 2. When Chriſt wept ouer Ieruſalem, foreſeeing their vtter deſolation for euer, why did not this commiſeration then alſo aſtoniſh him? 3. And where Chriſt prayeth to bee deliuered from that houre, Mark.14.35. will they tye Chriſts pietie and charitie, which they ſay was now the cauſe of this aſtoniſhment, onely to this houre? Wherefore theſe were not the cauſes now: for at other times they could not haue wanted the ſame effects. John 17.13. Mark.14.35.

Secondly, 1. his repeating of his prayer thrice, his admoniſhing of his Apoſtles, doe proue that hee had not forgotten himſelfe, wee grant; neither doe we ſo affirme, as it is vnderſtood; that Chriſt had cleane forgotten and was as beſide himſelfe: he was not ſo amazed or aſtoniſhed, but that he had ſome intermiſſion and breathing time, and comforts mixed with his tentations: neither yet ſo confounded, as that he either forgot pietie in his obedience to God, or charitie and pitie in warning his Diſciples. 2. The repeating of his prayer thrice for the paſſing of the cup, his praying to bee deliuered from that houre, the comforting of the Angell, doe ſhew a continuance of the agonie and aſtoniſhment: and the text ſaith, hee was γενόμενος, conſtitutus, ſet or ſetled in an agonie, Luk.22.44. you muſt then either grant no agonie or aſtoniſhment at all, or elſe continue it all the while of his prayer, as the Euangeliſts doe: but yet there was ſome intermiſſion of the agonie fittes, and the infirmitie, as Ambroſe calleth it, or tentation of his fleſh, as Damaſcene: had their entercourſe: ſo it continued, but not alwayes in the ſame meaſure or degree of working, as hath beene ſhewed before: *par.*2.*reſ.*2. & 4. ad 3.arg. papiſtar. this then is not contrarie to that which is affirmed before, that all his prayer while he was not in that traunce: that is in the ſame meaſure and degree without intermiſſion, *ibid.reſp.*2.*artic.*3.ad 4.argum. Luk.22.44.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, there is no neede, notwithſtanding Chriſt were amazed and perplexed with the feare of Gods iudgements, and ſo caſt into a moſt vehement agonie, that he ſhould be depriued of ſenſe, underſtanding, or memorie: 1. If his memorie in one point were not extinguiſhed, but ouer-ruled or ouercaſt with the vehement ſenſe of his preſent agonie, muſt he therefore be wrapped in a totall confuſion or obliuion? 2. In the middeſt of theſe ſtormes hee had ſome comfortable blaſts; and though death and hell were before his ſenſe, yet he was quickened and reuiued in his ſpirit. 3. Moſes and Paul rauiſhed with zeale, wiſhed they might be caſtawaies; yet at other times their ſaluation was manifeſtly reuealed vnto them: ſhall wee conclude therefore that they wanted ſenſe, vnderſtanding, memorie? Thus (I truſt) are thoſe obiections anſwered.

*Argum.*5. Laſtly, I will produce the teſtimonie of the Fathers, that Chriſt was not thus aſtoniſhed for feare of the death of the bodie: *Hilarie lib.*10 de Trinitat. Anne timuit mori, qui armatis obuiam prodit, &c. pungenda carnis metu triſtis eſt, cuius attactu caro poſt cædem ſanatur: Did he feare to die, which came againſt the armed troupes? was he ſorrowfull for the pricking of his fleſh, who by his touch healed the eare that was ſmitten off? *Auguſt in expoſit. in Pſal.*93. Si ſciret ſe poſt triduum reſurrecturum, nullo modo formidaret moriturus: Chriſt did not feare to die, being to riſe againe the third day. And againe, *in Pſal.*100. Non verè ille timebat mortem, qui poteſtatem habuit ponendi animam, &c. He could not verily feare death, that had power to lay downe his ſoule, and to take it vp againe.

Againe, Hilarie ſaith, Triſtis eſt anima mea vſque mortem, nunquid ayt triſtis eſt anima propter mortem? aliud eſt vſque, aliud propter id metuere: My ſoule is heauie vnto death; doth he ſay my ſoule is heauie for or becauſe of death? it is one thing to feare till death, another becauſe of death *c.*31. in Matth.

Ambroſe: Non propter mortem, ſed vſque ad mortem: quia cum conditio corporalis affectus, non formido mortis offendit: Not becauſe of death, but vnto death, for the condition of his corporall or naturall affection, not the feare of deadly affliction doth offend him, *in Luc.*12. And our country man Beda vſeth the very ſame words, in 14. Mark.

Some other of the Fathers affirme, that Chriſt non timuit infernum chaos, & torrentes flammas, that Chriſt feared not the infernall gulfe, or the ſcorching flames, *Hilarie lib.*10. de Trinitat. Bellarm. reſp. ad argum. 7.

Heb.5.7.

We willingly grant that Chriſt feared not hell fire, nor euerlaſting deſtruction: thoſe authorities preſſe not vs, but rather helpe our cauſe: for if Chriſt neither feared temporall, nor euerlaſting death, as theſe Fathers witneſſe, and the Apoſtle ſaith he feared, Hebr.5.7. what then remaineth, but that he feared the cup of Gods wrath mixed with death? And as Cyprian ſaith before cited, Difficultatem extremi exitus: The difficultie or hardneſſe of his laſt paſſage, that is, in reſpect of Gods wrath tempered with it.

Harm.ſect 6. pag.108.

Vnto theſe fore recited teſtimonies of the Eaſt and South Church, I will adde the conſent of the reformed Churches. Saxonic. artic.3. There was ſo great loue in the Sonne toward vs, that he deriued vnto himſelfe this true and exceeding great anger. Scotland. artic. of Chriſts death and paſſion: Hee ſuffered not onely the cruell death of the croſſe, — but alſo for a ſeaſon the wrath of his Father, &c.

Part.3.q.46. ar.6.

Thomas their oracle thus acknowledgeth: Doloris interioris cauſa fuit primo peccata omnia humani generis, pro quib. ſatisfaciebat patiendo, &c. The cauſe of his inward griefe was firſt all the ſinnes of mankinde for the which he ſatisfied by ſuffring, which hee aſcribed as vnto himſelfe, &c. If then all our ſinnes were laid vpon Chriſt as his owne, how did he not alſo vndergoe for the time the burthen of his fathers wrath, which was due vnto our ſinnes, which Chriſt bare.

This then is the ſumme: firſt, that ſeeing Chriſt was ſaued from that he feared, yet was he not ſaued from death; ſecondly, ſo he ſhould haue beene weaker than many Martyrs, that were not afraid of the death of the bodie; thirdly, ſeeing hee was ſo aſtoniſhed being in his agonie, that hee prayed for the paſſing of the cup, which was neither paſſible, nor granted; fourthly, and was ſo aſtoniſhed with feare, that his ſoule fainted within, his bodie did ſweat blood without; fifthly, ſeeing the Fathers confeſſe, that this agonie proceeded not from any feare of bodily ſuffrings: it followeth that the feare and feeling of his fathers wrath thus troubled his ſoule. And thus much of this ſecond part or argument, of the cauſe of Chriſts agonie and aſtoniſhment in the garden.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER CHRIST SVFfered properly and immediatly in ſoule.

THE OBIECTIONS ANSWERED.

The Papiſts.

26.Error.

Their opinion is, that Chriſt did not ſuffer in ſoule properly, but either, ex corporis coniunctione & condolentia: His griefe proceeded from the coniunction and fellow-feeling with the bodie, *Feuardent.p.*454. or elſe from the commiſeration and compaſſion that he had for the ſinnes of his myſticall bodie: for the which, tanta totius cordis pœnitudine dolet, vt par ei nemo vnquam fuerit: He did ſo grieue throughout in his heart, that no man was euer like vnto him, *p.*455. So he concludeth, pœnas peccatis debitas in corpore portaſſe, &c. igitur non in anima, that he bare the puniſhment due to our ſinnes in his bodie, and not in his ſoule, *p.*448. To the like purpoſe Bellar. Defixit mentem in omnia tormenta impedentia:

dentia: He fixed his ſoule to behold all the torments readie at hand, lib.4. de Chriſti anima, cap.8. reſp. ad argum.3. otherwiſe he confeſſeth no ſuffring in Chriſts ſoule. Let vs ſee their arguments.

Argum. Feuard, thus reaſoneth: Firſt, 1.Pet.2.24. He bare our ſinnes in his bodie on the tree. Secondly, 1. S.Paul ſaith, God forbid that I ſhould reioyce but in the croſſe of the Lord Ieſus, Galat.6.14. And 1.Cor.2.2. 2. I eſteemed not to know any thing among you, ſauing Ieſus Chriſt and him crucified: but his ſoule was not crucified. Thirdly, our Sauiour ſaid, It is finiſhed, Ioh.19.30. Ergo, if all his ſuffrings were finiſhed vpon 3. the croſſe, there remained nothing to be ſuffered afterward, Feuard. p.448.8.450.12.

Anſw. Firſt, this place maketh rather againſt them: for the Apoſtle ſaith directly, he bare our ſinnes: 1. the fleſh properly is not ſaid to beare ſinne, but the ſoule. Secondly, neither can ſinne be here taken for the puniſhment of ſinne onely, but for ſinne it ſelfe: for S.Peter expoundeth the Hebrew (נשא naſah) vſed by the Prophet Iſay. 53.4. as the Septuagint doe, by the Greeke, φέρειν, ἀνήνεγκε, which ſignifieth to beare: ſo Matthew ſaith ἔλαβε, he tooke our ſinnes and infirmities, Matth.8.17. as the Hebrew word is vſed, Matth.8.17. 1.Sam.17.34. and Saint Iohn 1.Ioh.3.5. vt tolleret, ἄρῃ, that he might take away ſinnes: in which ſenſe alſo 1.Sam.17.34. the Hebrew is taken, Amos 6.10. Wherefore if Chriſt ſo bare our ſinnes, as Peter ſaith, that hee tooke 1.Ioh.3.5. them vpon him, as Matthew expoundeth, and tooke them alſo away, as S.Iohn inferreth; then hee did not onely beare the puniſhment, but the ſinne alſo: for he did not take away, nor take vpon him the puniſhment onely, but the ſinne alſo. Thirdly, neither can the word ἁμαρτία ſinne, vſed by S.Peter, ſignifie properly the puniſhment of ſinne: for S.Iohn ſaith, that ἁμαρτία is ἀνομία: that ſinne is tranſgreſſion, &c. 1.Ioh.3.4. and the Septuagint vſe both theſe words, expounding the one by the other: Iſay.53.5. Hee 1.Ioh.3.4. was wounded for our ſinnes, and broken for our iniquities: ſinne therefore doth no more betoken the Iſay.53.5. paine of ſinne, than tranſgreſſion, ἀνομία. Fourthly, the Prophet ſaith, He hath taken our infirmities or ſinnes, and caried our ſorrowes, Iſay.53.4. the puniſhment or effect of ſinne, the ſecond clauſe of the ſentence expoundeth by ſorrowes or diſeaſes: ſo that vnleſſe we will make a ſuperfluous repetition of the ſame thing, in the firſt clauſe, ſinne it ſelfe, the cauſe of theſe ſorrowes, muſt be contained: and the phraſe alſo giueth this ſenſe: for our ſinnes ἔλαβε, he tooke, our ſorrowes and diſeaſes, ἐβάστασε, baiulauit, he did carrie or beare, as S.Matthew expoundeth. Fifthly, S.Peter himſelfe ioyneth together, the obedience, and ſprinkling of the blood of Ieſus, 1.Pet.1.2. the one in his ſoule, the other in his bodie: and 1.Pet.1.2. therefore it is farre from the Apoſtle to exclude the merit of Chriſts ſoule by his obedience and ſuffring. Sixthly, it will be obiected, that the Apoſtle ſaith, he bare our ſinnes in his bodie vpon the tree, and with his ſtripes μώλωπι, we are healed: which ſignifie the ſtripes of his bodie.

Anſw. Firſt, wee grant hee bare our ſinnes vpon the tree of the croſſe, for that was the very Altar 1. where this ſacrifice was offered, the field where this battell was fought, and the very theater where Chriſt was to play the redeemers part. 2. and in his bodie, for his ſoule was not out of 1. his bodie, when he ſuffered: 2. and the bodie was the inſtrument of the ſoule: 3. and the viſible part of his ſufferings, and therefore namely expreſſed: 4. or elſe by a Synecdoche in the bodie the other part is ſignified: as where the Scripture ſaith, a bodie thou haſt giuen me, Hebr.10.5. he receiued not a bodie with- Heb.10.5. out a ſoule: 5. otherwiſe, when the Apoſtle ſpeaketh diſtinctly he expreſſeth both parts: Heb.10.10. Heb.10.10. By the which will we are ſanctified by the offring of the bodie of Ieſus: we are ſanctified both by the obedient will of Chriſt in his ſoule, and by the offring of his bodie.

2. The word ſignifieth properly, liuorem, the blewneſſe or ſcarres remaining after ſtripes & wounds, Prou.20.30. wherein a figure muſt be admitted; by one part the whole being expreſſed: otherwiſe if Pro.20.30. Chriſts ſcarres and ſtripes of his fleſh onely healed vs, then his blood and death ſhould bee excluded: And it is no vnuſuall thing in Scripture, to attribute wounds and ſtripes to the ſoule; as Luk.2.35. A Luk.2.35. ſword ſhall pierce thy ſoule: And 1.Cor.8.12. τύπτοντες, beating or wounding their conſcience: there is no rea- 1.Cor.8.12. ſon to the contrarie, but that ſtripes may be taken in the ſame ſenſe here. Thus Saint Ambroſe: Sicut mors eius mortem abſtulit: liuor eius vulnera noſtra ſanauit: ita mœror eius, mœrorem noſtrum aboleuit: As his death tooke away ours, his ſtripes healed our wounds: ſo his griefe aboliſhed ours, lib.2. de fid. c.3.

Secondly, 1. By the croſſe of Chriſt all Chriſts ſuffrings whatſoeuer are ſignified: 1.Cor.1.17. leſt 2. the croſſe of Chriſt ſhould be of none effect: all the effectuall ſuffrings of Chriſt are contained in the croſſe. S.Peter ſo vnderſtandeth Chriſts ſuffrings, 1.Pet.2.21. Chriſt ſuffered for vs, &c. 23. when he was reuiled, 1.Pet.2.21. reuiled not againe, &c. but all his reuilings were not incident to his croſſe properly. 2. Yea in Chriſt crucified we vnderſtand not onely his bodie launced and whipped, but his ſoule alſo with ſorrow pierced: and S.Paul muſt be ſo vnderſtood: whereby (ſaith he) the world is crucified vnto me, and I vnto the world: S.Paul was not crucified and mortified in bodie onely to the world, but in ſoule and affection: ſo was alſo Chriſt crucified. 3. S.Ambroſe affirmeth the ſame, lib.5. in Luc. Mens mea in Chriſto crucifixa eſt: My minde and ſoule was crucified in Chriſt: He ſaith not by Chriſt onely, that is, by the power of his croſſe our ſoule is crucified, but in Chriſts perſon our humane ſoule, which hee tooke together with our bodie, was crucified: as the ſame Ambroſe ſaith in Luc.22. Suſcepit animam meam, ſuſcepit corpus meum: He tooke my ſoule, he tooke my bodie.

Thirdly, 1. This place vrgeth not vs: for we affirme not, that Chriſt ſuffered any thing in ſoule af- 3. ter his death, all his ſuffrings in ſoule and bodie were performed vpon the croſſe. 2. It rather maketh againſt them: for ſeeing it was needfull that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer for vs both in bodie and ſoule; as the Apoſtle ſaith, He tooke away the hand-writing of ordinances that was againſt vs, which was contrarie to vs, Coloſſ.2.14. and faſtened it to the croſſe, Coloſſ.2.14. If hee faſtened to the croſſe whatſoeuer decree was againſt vs and contrarie to vs, then the decree againſt our ſoules, as well as againſt our bodies: then it will follow, that if Chriſt faſtened not to his croſſe this decree againſt our ſoules, which muſt be by ſuffring in his ſoule, then hee was to ſuffer ſomewhat afterward. Let the Frier take heede of his owne net, our foote is not entangled in it.

1. Iohn 1.14. Argum.2. Firſt, Geneſ.3.15. The ſeede of the woman ſhall breake thy head, but thou ſhalt bruſe his heele: Feuardentius expoundeth this, by that place Iohn 1.14. The word was made fleſh: So his meaning ſeemeth to be this, that that part onely, which was of the ſeede of the woman, namely the fleſh of Chriſt, was onely bruſed of the Serpent, *Feuardent.p.276.conf.8.lin.*17.21.

2. Secondly, none of the Prophets did write ſo of Chriſt, that he ſhould ſuffer the anger of God in his ſoule, *Feuard.p.*440.*lin.*3.469.*conf.*1.*lin.*8. So he thinketh, that the Prophets and Patriarkes beleeued the bodily ſuffrings of Chriſt onely, and by that faith were ſaued.

3. Thirdly, Hebr.10.12. With one offring hath he conſecrated for euer them that are ſanctified: with one offring, that is, of his bodie and blood, not with two offrings, of bodie and ſoule, *Feuardent.p.*449. *conf.*10.*lin.*6.

1. Anſw. Firſt, 1. Similitudes and allegories doe not conclude certainly in euery point, but wherein the compariſon ſtandeth: as here the ſimilitude is taken from the nature of Serpents, that being trode vpon, doe bite and ſting the foote againe of him that preſſeth them: this ſimilitude holdeth ſtrongly for the victorie of Sathan, to the which end this promiſe is made to our parents: but if wee apply it to other purpoſes, we ſhall ſtraine it too farre.

What is meant by bruſing of the heele. Gen.3.15. 2. Some by Chriſts heele doe vnderſtand his members; as *Origen hom.*4.*in Pſal.*36. Ille noſtrum obſeruat calcaneum, cui vtique nunquam oportet nos nudam præbere plantam, ſed ſemper eſſe debemus calceati pedes in præparatione Euangelij: He doth obſerue our heele, to whom we muſt not offer our ſelues barefooted, but ſhod with the preparation of the Goſpell of peace, &c. This I take to bee the proper meaning of Chriſts heele.

3. S. Hierome alſo giueth a good expoſition of this place: *Tradition. in Geneſ. tom.*4. Quia noſtri greſſus prepediuntur à colubro, dominus conteret Satanam ſub pedibus: Becauſe our goings are hindred by the Serpent, the Lord ſhall tread downe Sathan vnder our feete, &c. By our footſteps may bee vnderſtood our ſinnes and infirmities which giue aduantage to the tentation of Sathan: and this expoſition is agreeable alſo to the Scripture, Pſalm.49.5. Why ſhould I feare, when, iniquitas calcaneorum circundabit me, The iniquitie of my heeles doth compaſſe me? And Iob.13.26.27. he calleth peccata adoleſcentiæ veſtigia pedum, The ſinnes of his youth the print of his heeles. In the firſt place the ſame Hebrew word is vſed, in the next the ſame ſenſe of the word is retained.

Pſal 49.5. Iob.13.26,27.

Pſal.89.51. 4. This place alſo may be expounded by the like, Pſal.89.51. Probro afficiunt veſtigia: They ſlander the footſteps of thine annointed. Whereby is ſignified the continuall practiſe of Sathan and his Miniſters, to ſlaunder the profeſſion of the Goſpell of Chriſt, whereby Chriſt is knowne and diſcerned in the world, as by the prints of his feete: All theſe expoſitions are ſound, and conſonant to the Scripture, and not much varying the one from the other: whether of theſe we take, this place maketh nothing for the collection enforced.

Exod.33.23. 5. Or if we doe apply it to Chriſts perſon, why may not his whole humanitie be here comprehended, which is the inferiour part to his Godhead: and ſo this place may be expounded by that Exod. 33.23. where Moſes ſaw poſteriora dei, the backe parts of God: Origen ſaith, Nouiſſima pars hominis pes: A mans foote is his laſt or hinder part, in 17. Matth. and ſo expoundeth this of Chriſts being in the fleſh, when Moſes ſaw him in the Mount. And Auguſtine likewiſe vnderſtandeth his fore-parts to be his face of maieſtie, wherein he is equall to God: his backe parts, becauſe he appeared in the end of the world, *lib.*2.*de Trinitat.c.*17. So then by Chriſts heele or back parts, his whole humanitie may be implied, which is but as his backe and meaner parts, in reſpect of his diuine Maieſtie.

Iohn 14.30. 6. And this ſenſe the text it ſelfe giueth, and the force of the ſimilitude; for like as that part is bitten of the Serpent, wherewith he is troden vpon; ſo Sathan aſſailed that part in Chriſt, wherewith he was ouercome: but hee ouercame him not onely with his fleſh, but with the iuſtice and innocencie of his ſoule: as Chriſt ſaith, Ioh.14.30. The Prince of this world commeth, and hath nought in me. And as Auguſtine ſaith: Nihil ei extorquens extorſit violento dominatu, ſed ſuperans eum lege iuſtitiæ. Chriſt did not wreſt any thing from him by violent ſubduing, but ouercame him by the law of iuſtice, *de liber. arbit. lib.*3.*cap.*10. Wherefore as Chriſt by the innocencie of his ſoule, together with his holy and obedient fleſh ſubdued Sathan: ſo he ſeeketh to bite and vexe him in the ſame. Whether this text then, be vnderſtood of Chriſt or his members, or both, the argument propounded concludeth not.

2. Pſal.18.5. Iſay 53.10,11. Secondly, the Fathers of the law and the Prophets beleeued not onely the bodily death, but the ſpirituall and ſoule ſuffrings of Chriſt: as Dauid prophecying of Chriſt, ſaith, Pſal.18.5. The ſorrowes of hell compaſſed me: but the Prophet Iſay of all other ſaith moſt plainly, Iſay.53.10. He ſhall make his ſoule an offring for ſinne: verſ.11. He ſhall ſee of the trauell of his ſoule, and ſhall be ſatisfied: and therefore as Auguſtine ſaith: Eadem fides & in illis, qui nondum nomine, ſed reipſa fuerunt Chriſtiani, & in iſtis, qui non ſolum ſunt, ſed vocantur, Moſes veteris teſtamenti miniſter, hæres noui: The ſame faith was in them, which not yet in name, but indeede were Chriſtians, and in theſe, which not only be, but are ſo called. Moſes was a miniſter of the old teſtament, but an heire of the new, &c. *contr.*2.*epiſtol.Pelag.*3.1.

Thirdly, 1. Chriſts ſacrifice conſiſting both of bodie and ſoule, is but one entire ſacrifice: as in the 3. holocauſt and burnt offring of the law there were diuers parts of the ſacrifice, yet but one whole ſacrifice. 2. Where the Apoſtle exhorteth that we ſhould offer vp our bodies, θυσίαν ζῶσαν, a liuing ſacrifice, Rom.12.1. doth hee meane our bodie without a ſoule? yet hee calleth it a ſacrifice, one, not many. Rom.12.1. 3. Whereas it is obiected, that the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe, what one ſacrifice he meaneth, namely of his bodie, Heb.10.10. verſ.19. By the blood of Ieſus we may be bold to enter: verſ.20. He hath prepa- Heb.10.10, red away by his fleſh. I anſwere: firſt, Chriſts bodie, fleſh and blood, are not all one, his fleſh and blood 19,20. are diuers parts of his bodie: then as by theſe ſeuerall parts named by themſelues wee vnderſtand the reſt; by blood, his bodie and fleſh; by fleſh, his blood and bodie: ſo what letteth, but that in theſe ſpeeches all other neceſſarie parts of his ſuffring may be comprehended? Secondly, the Apoſtle doth chiefly ſtand vpon the externall part of Chriſts ſuffring, as the offring of his bodie, ſhedding of his blood, becauſe it did more fitly anſwere to the blood of buls and goates, and the ſacrifice of beaſts, whereof the Apoſtle entreateth, chap.9.10. Thirdly, the Apoſtle alſo ſpeaketh in more generall termes: Chriſt offered himſelfe, Heb.9.24. Chriſt was offered, verſ.28. If Chriſt, if himſelfe, how Chriſt without a Heb.9.24,28. ſoule, how himſelfe without a ſoule? If Chriſt then being both God and man, is but one, as Leo ſaith, Vnus atque idem in vtraque forma Chriſtus: One and the ſame Chriſt in both formes and natures, epiſtol. 81. ſo likewiſe his bodie and ſoule being parts of the ſame nature, doe make but one ſacrifice.

*Argum.*3. 1. Chriſt neither taſted nor ſuffered the death of the ſoule, as Auguſtine ſaith: Quod anima fuit mortificatus Ieſus, quis audeat dicere cum mors animæ non ſit niſi peccatum? Who dare ſay that Chriſt was mortified in his ſoule, ſeeing the death of the ſoule is nothing but ſinne? therefore he was mortified in the fleſh, quia ſecundum ſolam carnem mortuus, becauſe he died only in the fleſh, *epiſt.*99.

2. The Apoſtle ſaith, Epheſ.1.7. Wee haue redemption through his blood, euen forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: Epheſ.1.7. *Feuard.p.*442.*conf.*15.*lin.*11. 1.Ioh.1.7. The blood of Ieſus Chriſt cleanſeth vs from all ſinne, Feuard.p. 1.Iohn 1.7. 441.*conf.*13.*lin.*5. If the ſhedding of the blood of Chriſt be the iuſt and full redemption of all ſinnes, what neede the ſuffrings of his ſoule?

3. Chriſt ſuffered wrongfully, 1.Pet.3.18. He ſuffered the iuſt for the vniuſt, *Feuard.*448. But hee 1.Pet.3.18. could not ſuffer the death of the ſoule wrongfully, becauſe it is Gods immediate action: Ergo, he died not in ſoule.

4. All Chriſts ſuffrings were voluntarie: Ioh.10.18. No man taketh away my life, I lay it downe of my Iohn 10.18. ſelfe, *Feuard.p.*448.*conf.*10.*lin.*8. but the death of the ſoule he did not willingly ſuffer, becauſe it is an alienation from God, which cannot be without ſinne.

5. Chriſt is the Lambe that was ſlaine, Apocal.5.9. *Feuard.p.*441.*conf.*13.*lin.*15. but his ſoule was not Apoc.5.9. killed of the Iewes: Ergo, he was not crucified in ſoule, neither died any other death, beſide the death of the bodie, *Feuard.p.*440.*lin.*4.

6. The Prophet ſaith, The ſame ſoule, that ſinneth ſhall dye, Ezech.18.20. God in ſpirituall puniſh- Ezech.18.20. ments, doth not puniſh one for another, *Bellarm.lib.*2.*de amiſſ.grat.c.*8.*arg.*5. Therefore Chriſt was not ſpiritually puniſhed in his ſoule for vs.

Anſw. 1. Wee moſt willingly confeſſe, that Chriſt in Auguſtines ſenſe dyed not the death of the 1. ſoule: we approue that ſentence of his: Mors domini noſtri non fuit in anima, ſed in carne ſola: mors noſtra non in carne ſola, ſed in anima; in anima propter peccatum, in carne propter pœnam peccati: ille vero, quia peccatum non fecit, nec habuit in anima, non eſt mortuus niſi in carne tantum: igitur ſimpla eius mors profuit duplæ noſtræ, &c. The death of our Lord was not in his ſoule, but in his fleſh onely; our death is not in our fleſh onely, but in our ſoule alſo; in our ſoule becauſe of ſinne, in our fleſh for the puniſhment of ſinne: but he becauſe he did no ſinne, neither had any in his ſoule, died but in his fleſh onely, therefore his ſimple death was profitable to our double death, &c. *ſerm.*181.*c.*5. 2. But it followeth not, Chriſt dyed not in ſoule, Ergo, he ſuffered not in ſoule: or hee dyed not this death of the ſoule by ſinne, or damnation; Ergo, hee cannot be ſaid any waies to haue dyed in ſoule. But I will forbeare to vſe this phraſe of Chriſts dying in ſoule, though it may haue a tolerable ſenſe, as I haue ſhewed before, reſp.ad 10.calumniam. Yet Auguſtine ſeemeth to me not to denie a ſenſe of death in Chriſts ſoule, his words are theſe: firſt, hauing affirmed, that Chriſt deſerued not hell fire: Quia hæc mors non conditionis eſt, ſed criminis: For this death is criminall, not conditionall. Hee then propoundeth this obiection: Sed iniquies, mortem dei filius & in anima non pertulit, nec in maieſtate ſenſit: You will ſay, the ſonne of God, did he not ſuffer and feele it in the maieſtie (thereof) death in his ſoule? Et ſenſit & pertulit, ſed participatione morbi alieni non proprietate vulneris ſui: He did both feele and beare it, but by the partaking of anothers diſeaſe, not by the propertie of any wound or infirmitie in himſelfe, Contra Felician. *cap.*18. But whatſoeuer Auguſtines iudgement was herein, we ſimply denie the argument: for it followeth not, Chriſt dyed not in ſoule: Ergo, he ſuffered not in ſoule.

Secondly. 1. I haue ſhewed before how the Apoſtle is to be vnderſtoode, when hee maketh men- 2. tion of the blood of Chriſt: *part.*1.*reſp.ad argum.*1. that by one part the reſt are ſignified: for if blood be taken ſtrictly, then Chriſts fleſh is excluded, and beſide his blood, there iſſued out alſo water: all theſe were neceſſarie parts of Chriſts paſſion: the Apoſtle then ſo ſpeaketh of one part, as hee doth not except or exclude the reſt. 2. It is vſuall in Scripture, by the fleſh, to comprehend the whole man not vnregenerate onely, but regenerate: as Ambroſe interpreteth theſe words of Chriſt, The ſpirit is Matth.26.41. readie, the fleſh is weake, Matth.26.41. Vt in ſpiritu deum, in homine carnem ſignificaret: That hee might ſignifie God in the ſpirit, man in the fleſh. But for more full anſwere, I referre the reader to that place before remembred.

3. How God was the author of Chriſts ſufferings. Thirdly, 1. concerning the death of the ſoule, which could not without iniurie be inflicted vpon Chriſt, I anſwere, that this queſtion is altogether impertinent, and the argument ſuperfluous: for we affirme not any ſuch death in the ſoule of Chriſt. 2. Yet we are bold to auouch, that God was the author of the afflictions of Chriſts ſoule: So the Prophet ſaith, Iſay.53.4. He was plagued and ſmitten of God: Act.2.23. He was deliuered vp by the determinate counſell of God. Yea euen the terrors and inward afflictions of Gods children proceede from God: Iob.6.4. The arrowes of God are in me, and the terrors of God fight againſt me. 3. Yet God is not vniuſt, neither iniurious, in giuing vnto his ſonne this cup to drinke: 1. Becauſe Chriſt willingly offered himſelfe to vndertake this puniſhment for vs: Pſal.40. Pſal.40.7. 7. Then ſaid I, Loe I come, I deſire to doe thy will O God. 2. Becauſe God layd vpon him the iniquitie of vs Iſay.53.6. all, Iſay.53.6. he being the ſuretie for our ſinnes, was in iuſtice to ſatisfie the debt. 3. Becauſe God herein intended the redemption of mankinde, not hauing a pleaſure in the death of his ſonne; as Origen well ſaith of the tentation of Iob: Non delectabatur, vt Iob torqueretur, ſed vt diabolus vinceretur: God was not delighted, that Iob ſhould be tormented, but that Sathan ſhould be conquered, in 2.cap.Iob. 4. The ſame obiection may be made as well concerning Chriſts ſuffrings in bodie, for Zachar.13.7. God alſo was the author of them: as where the Prophet ſaith, Smite the ſhepheard, Zach.13.7. yet the Matth.26.31. Euangeliſt ſaith in Gods perſon, I will ſmite the ſhepheard, Matth.26.31. Euangeliſta auſus eſt Propheta verba ad dei transferre perſonam: The Euangeliſt is bold to referre the Prophets words to the perſon of God, Hieron. ad Pammach. Whether God were the author mediatly or immediatly in reſpect of iuſtice, there is no difference: the Iudge that decreeth vniuſt things, and the writer or executor there- Iſay.10.1. of are alike guiltie of iniuſtice. Iſay.10.1. Woe vnto them that decree wicked things, and write grieuous things: wherefore if the ſuffrings of Chriſt in ſoule were vniuſt in reſpect of Gods decree, his ſuffrings in bodie ſhould be ſo likewiſe; which we confeſſe notwithſtanding in reſpect of the malice of Sathan, and the Iewes which procured them, and the innocencie of Chriſts perſon to haue bin moſt wrongfull and iniurious.

4. Fourthly, 1. ſuch a death of the ſoule, as bringeth with it a ſeparation from God, Chriſt neither ſuffered willingly, nor vnwillingly: wee denie any ſuch death of ſoule to haue beene in Chriſt; and therefore all the obiections, which preſſe this abſurditie, are altogether impertinent. 2. Concerning ſuch paſſions in ſoule as we affirme Chriſt to haue endured, wee anſwere as of the ſuffrings in his bodie; that he did beare them both willingly: for though in his humane and naturall deſire without ſinne, he wiſhed the paſſing of the cup, yet conforming his will vnto Gods, he was obedient and willing: this the Scripture teſtifieth, that Chriſt prayed, that the cup might paſſe, which ſheweth a will in him to haue eſcaped it: but yet he ſubmitteth himſelfe to his Fathers pleaſure: not as I will, but as Matth.26.39. thou wilt, Mat.26.39. Thus the fathers do note two wills to haue bin in Chriſt when he made this requeſt. Athanaſ. Humana voluntas propter infirmitatem carnis refugiebat paſſionem, diuina prompta erat: The humane will for the infirmitie of the fleſh, refuſed the paſſion; the diuine will was ready: exepiſt. Agathon. ad Conſt. Origen: Capit trepidare, & maſtus eſſe non quia trepidauit deitas, ſed quia carnis infirmitatem oſtendit: He began to feare and to be ſad, not that his deity trembled, but becauſe he ſhewed, the infirmity of his fleſh: lib.3.in Iob. The Latine fathers ſpeake more diſtinctly: Hieron. in 14.Marc. Hîc oſtendit humanam voluntatem qua propter infirmitatem carnis recuſat paſſionem, & diuinam, que Two willes in Chriſt. prompta eſt perficere diſpenſationem: Here he ſheweth an humane will, which becauſe of the infirmitie of the fleſh refuſeth the paſſion; and a diuine, which was ready to fulfill the diſpenſation. Ambroſ. Scias vitam in voluntate eſſe hominis, quia mortem timemus; paſſionem autem Chriſti in voluntate diuina, vt pateretur pro nobis: Know, that life is in the deſire and will of man, becauſe we feare death; but the paſſion of Chriſt in the diuine will, that he might ſuffer for vs, lib.2.de fid.c.3. Thus we ſee, that although Chriſt would not die in his humane infirmity, yet he was moſt willing in his obedient conformity. Peter Lombard. lib.3.diſt.17.b. vſeth to this purpoſe a good diſtinction, which ſafely may be receiued: that as there is in man duplex affectus, rationis & ſenſus; a double affection, or deſire of ſenſe and reaſon; ſo likewiſe was there in Chriſt, vt mentis affectu vellet mori: He was willing to die in the affection of his mind, ſenſualitatis affectu nollet; but in his ſenſuall affection vnwilling, as he ſheweth Iohn 21.18. out of Auguſtine in the example of Peter, to whom Chriſt ſaid, Iohn 21.18. When thou art old, thou ſhalt ſtretch forth thy hands, and another ſhall gird thee and leade thee whither thou wouldeſt not: whereupon Auguſtine thus writeth, Ad illam moleſtiam nolens venit, ſed volens eam vicit: Peter came vnwillingly to this trouble, but he willingly ouercame it: and this affection not to be willing to die, is ſo naturall, vt eum Petro nec ſenectus abſtulerit: that it left not Peter in his old age: the like affection and deſire he ſheweth to haue beene in Chriſt, when he ſaid, Let this cup paſſe, &c.

5. Fihſtly, 1. the argument followeth not, the Iewes crucified not Chriſts ſoule: Ergo, he was not crucified, or did not ſuffer in ſoule: for the Iewes onely crucified the externall fleſh of Chriſt: but God gaue him the cup of inward ſorrow to drinke: and therefore he prayeth his Father, that the cup Rom.8.32. might paſſe, hee prayeth to him to remoue it, that had prepared it; Rom.8.32. God is ſaid to haue giuen his owne ſonne to death. Auguſtine: Ille quanti te æſtimat vide, qui proprio filio non pepercit: See how much hee eſteemed thee, who ſpared not his owne Sonne: in Pſal.143. 2. This argument may be retorted: for if Chriſt ſuffered no more, then the Iewes inflicted vpon him; then he ſuffe-red nothing at all in ſoule, neither by compaſſion nor commiſeration, which is on the contrary part affirmed.

How children are puniſhed for their fathers ſinnes.

Sixthly, 1. The Prophet ſpeaketh not onely of ſpirituall, but of corporall puniſhments, that this is the perpetuall rule of Gods iuſtice, that one ſhall not be puniſhed any way for anothers ſinnes: for ſo was the Prouerbe among the Iewes; Our fathers haue eaten ſowre grapes, and our teeth are ſet on edge, Ezech.18.2. They complaine not of ſpirituall and eternall puniſhment, but of thoſe outward calamities, which they ſuffered: ſo then, neither are children puniſhed temporally for their parents ſinnes, vnleſſe they continue in the ſame; for then God will viſite the iniquitie of the fathers vpon the children, to the third and fourth generation of them, that hate him, as it is in the ſecond commandement; if both the fathers and children be alike haters of God: So Augustine ſaith, Malorum imitatio facit, vt non ſolum ſua, ſed eorum quos imitantur, merita ſortiantur: The imitating of the euill, cauſeth that they only are not partakers of their owne, but of their deſerts, whom they imitate, *in Pſal.*108. Good children of wicked parents, if they bee chaſtiſed, it is not a iudgement for their fathers ſinnes, to puniſh them, but Gods louing correction to admoniſh them. In this ſenſe then, Chriſt who needed not by any correction to be admoniſhed, ſhould not for vs, no not corporally haue beene puniſhed.

2. The ſame ſoule, that ſinneth, ſhall die: This rule alſo holdeth in Chriſt, for his ſoule died not: the ſuffrings of ſoule we admit, but not euerlaſting death, whereof the Prophet ſpeaketh: for that death of the ſoule which followeth the ſinne of the ſoule, is euerlaſting death; but Chriſts ſoule as it was free from ſinne, ſo was it from euerlaſting death, or the feare thereof. Thus Augustine alſo ſaith, Mortibus corporum legimus quoſdam mortuos propter non ſua, ſed aliena peccata, vbi magis eſt in dolore cordis plaga viuentium, quàm in reſolutione carnis pœna morientium: — animarum verò morte alius pro alio non plectitur: By the death of the body wee reade that ſome haue died, not for their owne but others ſinnes, where it was rather a plague of the liuing in the griefe of their heart, then a puniſhment of the dead in the reſolution of their fleſh, but in the death of the ſoule none dieth for another: cont. aduerſ. leg. lib. 1.*c.*16. This death of the ſoule then Chriſt died not.

Iſay.53.11.

3. The Prophet alſo ſaith, The ſonne ſhall not beare the iniquitie of his father, &c. but euery man ſhal beare his owne iniquitie: who ſeeth not, that the Prophet maketh exception of the perſon of the Mediator: for the Scripture teſtifieth of him, that he bare our iniquities, Iſay.53.11. therefore as he bare our ſinnes in himſelfe, ſo alſo in Gods iuſtice, hee was to beare the puniſhment for the ſame: then according to this rule, the ſame ſoule, that ſinneth, ſhall dye; ſo becauſe man had ſinned, the man Chriſt taking vpon him the ſinnes of mankinde, was puniſhed: Thus Origen writeth according to the Scriptures; Chriſtus ſine dubio, pro peccato, quod ex nobis ſuſceperat, quia peccata noſtra portauit, carnem incontaminatam obtulit hoſtiam: Chriſt without doubt, for ſinne, which he tooke of vs, becauſe hee bare our ſinnes, did offer vp in ſacrifice his vndefiled fleſh, *hom.*3. in Leuit. As Chriſt then tooke vpon him our ſinnes; ſo he alſo anſwered the puniſhment.

Reuel.5.9.

Argum. 4. The Scripture ſheweth euidently, that our ſoules are redeemed by Chriſtes blood, 1.Iohn 1.7. *The blood of Chriſt cleanſeth vs from all ſinne: Feuard. p.*441. *conſ.*13. *lin.*5. The ſoule is cleanſed as well as the bodie, Heb.9.14. *The blood of Chriſt doth purge our conſcience from dead workes. Feuard. pag.*442. *conſ.*16. *lin.*8. The conſcience is a member of the ſoule, Reuel.5.9. Thou haſt redeemed vs by thy blood, ſay the bleſſed Saints in heauen, whoſe bodies remaine in the earth: *Feuard. p.*441. *conſ.*13. *lin.*13.

Reuel.5.10.

Reuel.4.8.

c.6.10.

Iam.5.15.

Anſw. 1. All this being admitted, that our ſoules are redeemed by the blood of Chriſt, we feare not the conſequent, as preſently followeth to be ſhewed; the places of Scripture alleaged directly proue the ſame; ſauing that the collection out of the laſt place may be excepted againſt: for thoſe 24. Elders doe not deſcribe the ſtate of the Saints in heauen, but repreſent the Church militant on earth, whoſe conuerſation notwithſtanding is in heauen: this firſt the text giueth, 1. verſ.10. Wee ſhall raigne on the earth, that is, by their faith and vertue, it is not ſaid in heauen. 2. They are ſaid to be Kings & Prieſts; which chap.1.6. is expounded of the liuing. 3. And indeede the office of our ſpirituall Prieſthood in preſenting our prayers vnto God, is more fit and proper for this life, then for the next; in the which, though we denie not, but the Saints doe ſing continually to the praiſe of God, as the Angels doe, Apocal.4.8. and doe make their requeſts vnto God, for the accompliſhing of his Kingdome, Apocal.6.10. yet the prayer of faith, which is the ſpeciall obiect of our ſpirituall Prieſthood, Iam.5.15. is onely incident to this life, for the which faith onely ſerueth. 3. And indeede verſ.9. they ſeeme to ſpeake of the whole number of the elect, redeemed out of euery kindred and people.

The fathers alſo thus expound this place, of the faithfull in earth: Beda vpon the 10. verſ. Here is more plainely declared, that the beaſts and Elders are the Church, which is redeemed by the blood of Chriſt, and gathered of the nations. Alſo he ſheweth in what heauen they are, ſaying: They ſhall raigne vpon the earth. Haymo ſaith, all the Elect are Kings, becauſe they ſuffer not the tyrannie of vices to riſe vp in themſelues, &c. While they doe this by the law of vertue, they raigne as it were vpon the earth.

2. We grant, that our ſoules are redeemed by Chriſts blood, but it doth not follow, that they are not redeemed by his ſoule alſo, and therefore that his ſuffring in ſoule ſhould be ſuperfluous: for by the ſame reaſon you might conclude againſt Chriſts fleſh: our ſoules and bodies are redeemed by Chriſts blood: Ergo, not by his fleſh: and ye may as well inferre out of theſe and ſuch like places, that Chriſt had no ſoule, as that he ſuffered not in ſoule, becauſe the Apoſtles ſtill make mention of blood.

3. Cyrill ſaith, Carnem ſuam in redemptionis pretium pro omnium carne dependit; & animam ſuam ſimiliter pro omnium anima in redemptionis pretium conſtituit: Chriſt yeelded his fleſh the price of redemption for our fleſh, and his ſoule the price of redemption for our ſoule, de rect.fid.ad Theodoſ. Cyrill ſpeaketh not of the ſympathie of the ſoule of Chriſt, with his ſuffring fleſh, for all this is but caro pro carne, his fleſh giuen for our fleſh: but he inſinuateth ſuch proper paſſions of the ſoule, as are the price of redemption for our ſoules: hee ſpeaketh of the price of redemption in the ſoule, and in the fleſh, not of one and the ſame price, and therefore not of one kinde of paſſions: though in effect and in the whole all is but one price and one redemption, yet there are diuers parts and members of it.

4. We ſay then, that though in the vſe and application of Chriſts ſacrifice we ſpeake diſtinctly, that Chriſts ſoule was giuen for our ſoule, his fleſh for our fleſh, as Cyrill ſaith; thereby to ſet forth the proportion of Gods iuſtice, which muſt be ſatisfied with the price both of body and ſoule, for the redemption of our body and ſoule: yet we doe not ſeuer nor deuide the power and vertue of Chriſts ſacrifice, but aſcribe the redemption of our bodie and ſoule ioyntly and equally to the ſacrifice of his body and ſoule. After the like manner in the Euchariſt, by way of application we ſeuerally and diſtinctly receiue the ſignes and pledges of Chriſts body and blood, namely the conſecrated bread and wine, the vertue notwithſtanding whereof is one and the [a] ſame.

[a] There is the ſame ſpirituall efficacie of Chriſts bodie and blood, yet a diuers ſacramentall vſe and application.

THE CONTRARIE PART CONFIRMED THAT Chriſt ſuffered properly and immediatly in his ſoule, and not by way of compaſſion or fellow-feeling onely with his body.

*Argum.*1. THat which Chriſt aſſumed or tooke of our nature, he aſſumed to this end, to ſuffer in it, and by ſuffering to ſaue and redeeme it.

But he tooke the whole nature of man, both bodie and ſoule: Ergo, hee ſuffered in both: it will be here anſwered, that his ſoule ſuffered but by way of compaſſion and ſympathie onely with his bodie, Bellarm.Fenard.vbi ſupra.

Contra. This naturall or compaſſionate ſuffering of Chriſts ſoule, did not properly make to that part of our redemption, which was to be performed by his ſoule, neither was abſolutely neceſſarie to make Chriſts fleſh to haue life and ſenſe: ſeeing the deitie of Chriſt could haue giuen life, ſenſe and feeling to the fleſh, in ſtead of a ſoule: as Felicianus the Arrian obiected to Auguſtine, Cur filij Dei habitus inſtar animæ communis animam eius non animaret: Why might not the habite or forme of the ſonne of God, inſteed of a common ſoule animate or quicken his fleſh? *Cont.Felician.c.*13.

1. It is not here affirmed, that the compaſſion of the ſoule with the bodie, did not properly belong to our redemption ſimply, but to that redemption which was to be wrought by the ſoule. 2. And by way of ſuppoſition, becauſe it was not abſolutely neceſſarie, that the ſoule ſhould be giuen to the bodie onely, to giue life and ſenſe vnto it: becauſe as the Arrians obiected Chriſts deitie, might haue beene inſteede of the ſoule: and we ſee that there may be ſenſe and feeling in the bodie, without a reaſonable ſoule: the motion and feeling belongeth to the ſenſitiue facultie, not to the intellectuall part: And to this purpoſe Iodocus Clictoueus, a writer of their owne vſeth this diſtinction, that, Anima non fuit medium neceſſitatis, ſed congruitatis vniens deitatem cum carne: That Chriſts ſoule was not a meane of neceſſitie, but onely of congruitie, to vnite the Godhead with the fleſh: *Enarrat. in lib.*3. *de fid. Damaſc.c.*27.

I will further confirme and ratifie our argument thus. Firſt, the aſſumption is euident, and neede no proofe, that Chriſt tooke vpon him both our ſoule and bodie: the Apoſtle ſaith, In all things it became him to be like vnto vs, Hebr.2.17. Therefore hee had both bodie and ſoule, as we haue. Secondly, concerning the propoſition, That what Chriſt tooke of our nature, he tooke it, by ſuffering in it properly and immediatly to redeeme vs: firſt, it is confirmed by Scripture: Chriſt tooke part with them, that hee might deſtroy through death, him that had power of death &c. That he might deliuer all them, which for feare of death, were all their life time ſubiect to bondage: Hence I reaſon thus, that, wherein Chriſt deliuered vs, he tooke part with vs in, he deliuered vs from feare of death: Ergo, he did therein communicate with vs: but this feare was the proper and immediate paſſion of the ſoule, namely the feare of death, and Gods anger. And the text giueth this ſenſe: Becauſe the feare of this death kept them in bondage: but the feare onely of the bodily death doth not bring vs into ſuch bondage: ſo is it expounded in the ſong of Zacharie: That we being deliuered from the hand of our enemies ſhould ſerue him without feare: This then is a ſpirituall feare, from the which Chriſt did deliuer vs: Ergo, hee did communicate with vs in this feare: for the Apoſtle ſaith: In that, wherein hee ſuffered and was tempted, hee is able to ſuccour vs, verſ.18.

Luk.1.74.

Obiect. If Chriſt could deliuer vs from nothing, which he ſuffered not, then he doth not deliuer vs from eternall death, which he ſuffered not.

Anſwere. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of Chriſts diuine power, and abſolute abilitie, but of the poſſibilitie of his condition: that wherein he ſuffered, he is able to ſuccour vs by the feeling of our infirmities, wherewith hee was touched, and by the experience which he had in his owne fleſh: ſo the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe, Heb.4.5. Wee haue not a Prieſt that could not be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. Secondly, though Chriſt neither felt nor feared euerlaſting death, yet he both felt and feared his Fathers wrath and diſpleaſure that cauſeth it: and ſo he was not altogether without experience and feeling of our infirmities in that behalfe.

Obiect. If the feare that Chriſt deliuered vs from, be the feare of euerlaſting damnation: this Chriſt neuer feared: and therefore he did not therein partake with vs.

Anſw. It is not neceſſarie, that Chriſt ſhould partake with vs in euery part and ſpeciall kinde of our infirmities, and in the ſame manner: but it was ſufficient that he taſted of them in ſuch meaſure and degree, as became the dignitie of his perſon, and condition, being without ſinne: and ſo we affirme, that though he feared not euerlaſting death actually in himſelfe, yet hee feared and felt the wrath of God, which ſtriketh into vs a feare of damnation. Thomas here reſolueth well, giuing this anſwere to a place of Hilarie, Intelligendum eſt quantum ad omnia genera paſſionum, non quantum ad omnes ſpecies: It muſt be vnderſtoode according to all the kindes of ſuffrings in generall, not in particular, &c. 3. *part. qu.*46.5.

4. The Fathers alſo doe thus ſtrengthen our argument. Auguſt. Si totus homo perijt, totus beneficio ſaluatoris indiguit, &c. Si ſolum carnem aſſumpſit, anima pœnæ addicta—primæ tranſgreſſionis ſine ſpe veniæ remanſit: If whole man periſhed, whole man needed a Sauiour, Chriſt therefore tooke whole man, body and ſoule: if he had taken onely fleſh, the ſoule ſhould remaine addict to puniſhment of the firſt tranſgreſſion without hope of pardon, cont. Felician. c. 13. By the ſame reaſon Chriſt muſt alſo ſuffer properly in ſoule, because not by taking our ſoule, but by ſatisfying in his ſoule, our ſoule is deliuered.

Damaſcene: πάντα τοίνυν πάθη ἀνέλαβε, ἵνα πάντα ἁγιάσῃ: He tooke all our paſſions or affections, to ſanctifie them all in himſelfe: but Chriſt was ſanctified and conſecrate by his death, Hebr. 5.9. and ſo doth hee conſecrate vs, Hebr. 10.14. With one offering hath he conſecrated for euer them that are ſanctified: Ergo, by his offering of our ſoule, and ſuffering in our ſoule, hath hee conſecrated our ſoule and affections.

Heb.5.9.

Ambroſe: Suſcepit affectum meum, vt emendaret: He tooke my affection to amend it, &c. Now he hath amended it, in that he conſecrated it by his offering, Heb. 10. 14. Illud pro nobis ſuſcepit, quod in nobis amplius periclitabatur: He hath taken that for vs, which was moſt in danger in vs, &c. that is, our ſoule, as he expoundeth it, *de incarnat. c.*7. But Chriſt hath not otherwiſe deliuered vs from the danger, but by entring into the danger for vs: this danger of the ſoule is the feare and feeling of Gods wrath.

Argum. 2. Whereby Adam, and wee euer ſince do moſt properly commit ſinne, by the ſame hath Chriſt the ſecond Adam made ſatisfaction properly for our ſinne: but Adam and wee all doe properly commit ſinne in our ſoules, our bodies being but the inſtruments: Ergo, Chriſt by and in his ſoule hath properly made ſatisfaction.

Firſt, 1. the propoſition is confirmed by the Apoſtle, Rom. 5.19. As by one mans diſobedience we are made ſinners; ſo by the obedience of one, many ſhall be made righteous: Chriſt then ſatisfied for vs by the ſame wherein Adam diſobeyed, and Chriſt obeyed, that is in his ſoule: for obedience belongeth to the ſoule, as Agatho epiſt. ad Conſtantin. vpon theſe words, Philip. 2.8. He became obedient vnto death: Quis non intelligat obedientiam humanæ competere voluntati: Who doth not vnderſtand, that obedience doth belong to the humane will?

Philip.2.8.

2. It will be obiected, that Chriſt ſatisfied onely by his bodily death, *Fenard. p.*400. *lin.*4. and therefore not by his ſoule, becauſe it dieth not: I anſwere, all Chriſts painfull labours in his life, his hunger, faſting, tentations, whippings, mockings, were meritorious and ſatisfactorie for our ſinnes: without death indeede the ſatisfactorie ſacrifice was not accompliſhed, but not onely by the very paſſion of death; for then the reſt ſhould haue beene ſuperfluous: and this to bee the Apoſtles meaning, appeareth by the verſe following, veſ. 16. Where a teſtament is, there muſt be the death, &c. He ſheweth only a neceſſitie of death, that without death the Sacrifice was not perfected.

All the ſufferings of Chriſt in his death and life ſatisfactorie.

3. That there is a kinde of dying in the ſoule, when it is pierced with griefe, beſide the death of the ſoule either by ſinne or damnation, is not diſagreeing to the Scriptures: Simeon ſaith to Mary, Luk. 2. verſ. 35. A ſword ſhall pierce through thy ſoule: As then the bodie dieth, being pierced with a ſword; ſo the ſoule may be ſaid to die or languiſh, when it is pierced with griefe: what elſe is crucifying, but dying? but the ſoule is ſaid to be crucified, as S. Paul ſaith, Galath. 6.14. I am crucified to the world, when as yet his bodie was aliue: So Ambroſe doubteth not to ſay, Mens mea in Chriſto crucifixa eſt: My ſoule was crucified in Chriſt, *lib.*5. in Luc. that is, Chriſt in his ſoule was crucified: which hee calleth our ſoule, becauſe he did aſſume our ſoule and bodie: as elſe-where he ſaith, Mea eſt voluntas, quam ſuam dixit, mea eſt triſtitia quam meo ſuſcepit affectu: It is my will, which he calleth his, it is my heauineſſe, which he tooke with my affections, *lib.*2. *de fid. c.*3. Yet was it properly and perſonally Chriſts ſoule and will, but ours by communitie of nature.

Luk.2.35.
Galath.6.14.

Secondly, for the aſſumption, 1. Howſoeuer it be admitted, that the bodie is the inſtrument of the ſoule, both in ſinning and ſuffring, yet the concluſion is this; that becauſe ſinne is committed in the ſoule principally and properly, therefore the ſatisfaction muſt bee made in the ſoule principally and properly: if this concluſion be granted, wee haue that we would: for the bodily paines affecting the ſoule, are not the proper paſſions of the ſoule; neither is the ſoule ſaid to ſuffer properly, when the bodie bodie ſuffreth, but by way of compaſſion and conſent. 2. Wee graunt, that in the proper and immediate ſuffrings of the ſoule, the bodie alſo is affected: as when Chriſt was in his agonie in the garden, his whole bodie was therewith ſtirred and moued, that it did ſweat drops of blood: but it is one thing, when the griefe beginneth immediatly in the ſoule, and ſo affecteth the bodie, and when the paine is firſt inflicted vpon the bodie, and ſo worketh vpon the ſoule: there the ſoule ſuffreth properly and principally, of which ſuffrings we ſpeake; here neither properly nor principally, which is not the thing in queſtion. 3. It is not the reaſonable ſoule, that is affected with the bodie; for it is a ground in Philoſophie, (that the ſoule ſuffreth not) but onely the ſenſitiue part: but the griefe that we ſpeake of, which is ſatisfactorie for ſinne, muſt be in the very reaſonable ſoule, where ſinne taketh beginning: and ſo Ambroſe ſaith, vpon theſe words of Chriſt, My ſoule is heauie to death: Ad rationabilis aſſumptionem animæ, & naturæ humanæ refertur affectum: It is referred to the aſſumption of the reaſonable ſoule, and humane affection, de incarnat.cap.7.

2. The beginning of ſinne in the ſoule.

2. We confeſſe, that in the tranſgreſſion, both Adams ſoule and bodie did properly ſinne: yet not in euery act of the tranſgreſſion: for Adam committed ſome ſinnes, wherein the bodie was no inſtrument; as namely pride and infidelitie: as Ambroſe ſaith, Non Euam cibus flexerat, non mandatorum deſtituerat obliuio, ſed promiſſi honoris ambitio illecebroſa decepit: The meat did not turne Eue, nor the obliuion of the commandements did not ouertake her, but the ambitious deſire of the honor, which was promiſed, deceiued her, lib.4.in Luc. Againe, Peccatum Adæ non longè eſt ab idololatria, præuaricatus eſt, ſe hominem putans Deum: The ſin of Adam was not far from Idolatrie, he ſinned, thinking that he being man, might be God: in 13.Luc. Theſe ſins of pride and infidelitie began in the ſoule, and had their determination there: in the committing of thoſe ſinnes, the bodie had no part: indeed with the eare they heard the ſuggeſtion of Sathan, but it was no ſinne, till in their mind they had conſented vnto it: wherefore ſeeing the firſt ſinne committed was properly and wholly in the ſoule, for the ſame the ſoule muſt properly and wholy ſatisfie.

3. Then, becauſe ſinne tooke beginning from Adams ſoule, the ſatisfaction alſo muſt begin in Chriſts ſoule: as Ambroſe ſaith, Incipio in Chriſto vincere, vnde in Adam victus ſum: I begin there to win in Chriſt, where in Adam I was ouercome, lib.4. in Luc. then it followeth, that the ſuffrings of Chriſts ſoule tooke beginning there, and were not deriued by ſympathie from the ſtripes and payne of the bodie. We infer then that therefore Chriſts ſoule had proper and immediate ſufferings, beſide thoſe which proceeded from the ſympathie with the bodie, and all Chriſts ſuffrings were ſatisfactorie: Ergo Chriſt, did ſatisfie for our ſinnes properly and immediatly in his ſoule.

Math.26.38.

Argum.3. The Propet Iſay ſaith, 53.10. He ſhall make his ſoule an offring for ſinne: Ergo, Chriſt offered his ſoule, as well as his bodie. Againe, our Sauiour himſelfe ſaith, Matth.26.38. My ſoule is very heauie vnto death. It was not the bodily death, which Chriſt feared; for then he ſhould haue beene weaker then many Martyrs: therefore his ſoule was verily and properly ſtricken with heauineſſe, not with the beholding of the bodily torments onely.

Iohn 10.17.

Anſw. 1. It will be here anſwered, that ſoule in the Prophet is taken for life; as Iohn 10.17. I lay downe my ſoule, that is life, Feuard.p.440.conf.10.lin.8.

2. Chriſt, though he feare death, is not weaker then the Martyrs: for they are rid from feare, becauſe God doth miniſter greater comfort vnto them: Sed Chriſtus timuit, quia voluit, Chriſt did not feare of neceſſitie, but willingly, for it was in his power not to haue feared: And ſo Auguſtine ſaith, Eum non infirmitate, ſed poteſtate turbatum: That Chriſt was troubled not through infirmities, but by his omnipotencie and power, Bellarm.reſp.ad argum.3.lib.4.c.8.

Pſal.16.10.
Iob.33.22.
Luke 12.50.
1.Pet.2.14.
Iohn 11.33.

Contra. 1. That, anima, ſoule is taken for life we graunt; as Pſal.16.10. Thou wilt not leaue my ſoule, or life in graue, &c. And Iob.33.22. His ſoule draweth to the graue, and his life to the buriers, yet in this place of the Prophet it muſt be vnderſtood properly for ſoule: 1. as it may appeare by the next verſ.11. He ſhall ſee of the trauaile of his ſoule, and be ſatisfied. Here the ſoule muſt be vnderſtood properly, and the trauaile of Chriſts ſoule is not the inſtruction of his life, but his ſuffring vpon the croſſe, as it followeth, he ſhall beare their iniquities: this was the trauaile of his ſoule vpon the croſſe in bearing our iniquities. Againe, he ſhall be ſatisfied, which was fulfilled, when he ſaid, conſummatum eſt, it is finiſhed; before his death he was not ſatisfied, but longed continually for the finiſhing of our redemption vpon the croſſe: Luke 12.50. I muſt be baptized with a baptiſme, and how am I grieued, till it be ended? 2. The Prophet alſo maketh immediate mention of Chriſts knowledge: verſ.11. By his knowledge he ſhall iuſtifie many: but knowledge is an adiunct properly of the ſoule, not of the life. 3. Verſ.11. He ſhall beare their iniquities: verſ.12. He bare the ſinnes of many: this was not onely in his bodie, but in his ſoule; as Saint Peter expoundeth, He himſelfe bare our ſinnes in his bodie, 1.Pet.2.24. that is, his ſoule bare our ſinnes in his bodie.

1. Whereas Auguſtine ſaith, Hee was not troubled through infirmitie: hee expoundeth that place Chriſt ἐτάραξεν ἑαυτὸν, troubled or ſtirred himſelfe when he came to Lazarus graue, that is, was moued in compaſſion toward him: there is great difference betweene that trouble of Chriſts ſoule, and this heauineſſe; there he ſtirred himſelfe to compaſſion, here he is ſtirred of God; that paſſion proceeded of his pitie and loue vnto man, this is cauſed by the feare and expectation of Gods wrath. There are paſſions ordinarie and naturall, as of loue, pitie, which the [a] heart raiſeth, and againe alayeth; there are paſſions extraordinary & beyond nature, as whē God caſteth darts and terrors into the ſoule, Iob.6.4.

[a] Not ſimply, as hauing an abſolute power herein of it ſelfe, but comparatiuely in reſpect of the extraordinarie paſſions which it hath leſſe power of: as the Wiſeman ſaith, The preparations of the heart are in man, but the anſwere of the tongue is from the Lord, Prouerb.16.1. not that the preparation of the heart is ſimply in mans power, but more then the other.

and theſe the heart hath no power of: wherefore Auguſtines ſentence cannot be applied to this agonie of Chriſt.

2. Or it is true which Auguſtine ſaith, euen of theſe extraordinarie paſſions of Chriſt, which ſhewed not his humane infirmitie onely, but his diuine power, in that he ſubdued theſe paſſions of his humane nature, and ſubiected them to the will of his father; ſo that as Damaſcene well ſaith, *lib.3. de fid.c.*20. Our affections were in Chriſt two wayes, κατὰ φύσιν, ὑπὲρ φύσιν, according to nature, and aboue nature; naturally he deſired the cup might paſſe; ſupernaturally he was contented with his fathers will.

3. That Chriſt procured this ſorrow to himſelfe, is to make him acceſſarie to his owne death: his humane will was, to haue the cup paſſe; how then is it true, timuit, quia voluit, he feared, becauſe he was willing to feare? he feared, becauſe it was proper to our humane nature to feare, which he tooke, as Auguſtine himſelfe ſaith: Ex quo homo, ex hoc & infirmus; ex quo infirmus, ex hoc & orans; As he was man, he was weake; as he was weake, he prayed, Pſal.29.præfat.in enarrat.2. And if he had not feared and been perplexed indeede, what neede the Angell to haue been ſent to comfort him? Luk.22.43. Wherefore as Ambroſe well ſaith: Scias vitam eſſe in voluntate hominis, quia timebat pati, paſſionem in voluntate diuina, &c. Know that life was in his humane deſire, becauſe he feared to ſuffer, but death in the heauenly will to ſuffer for vs, lib.2.de fid.c.3. Wherefore notwithſtanding any thing alleaged by Bellarmine, there yet appeareth no difference betweene the feare of Chriſt and his members, nor any prerogatiue in the head aboue the members, if Chriſt had feared onely the death of the bodie. See before for a more full anſwere, part.2.argum.2.replicat.ad Bellar.

*Argum.*4. The Apoſtle ſaith, Philip.2.7. Chriſtus ἐκένωσε, exinaniuit, Chriſt did emptie or euacuate himſelfe: And as Tertullian expoundeth contra Marcion.lib.5. exhauſit, he drew out himſelfe, or was exhauſt: which is agreeable to the propheſie of Daniel.9.26. Meſſias ſhall haue nothing. Hence we conclude, that if Chriſt were exhauſt vpon the croſſe, if nothing was left him, that he ſuffred in body and ſoule, that there was no part within or without free from the croſſe, but all was emptied and powred out for our redemption. Philip.2.7.

Againe, Heb.9.14. Chriſt through the eternall ſpirit offered himſelfe to God: whatſoeuer was in Chriſt, did either offer, or was offered, his eternall ſpirit onely did offer; Ergo, his whole humane nature both bodie and ſoule was offered. Thus Origen witneſſeth in theſe words, Vide quomodo verus pontifex Ieſus Chriſtus adſumpto batillo carnis humanæ, & ſuppoſito igni altaris, anima ſine dubio illa magnifica, cum qua natus eſt in carne, adiecto etiam incenſo, qui eſt ſpiritus immaculatus, medius inter viuos & mortuos ſtetit, &c. See how our true prieſt Ieſus Chriſt taking the cenſor of his humane fleſh, putting to the fire of the altar, that is, his magnificent ſoule, wherewith he was borne in the fleſh, and adding incenſe, that is, an immaculate ſpirit, ſtoode in the middeſt betweene the liuing and the dead, Hom.9.in Leuitic. He maketh Chriſts ſoule a part of the ſacrifice. Hebr.9.14.

*Argum.*5. Chriſts loue vnto man in ſuffring for him, was in the higheſt degree and greateſt meaſure, that could be: as the Lord ſaith, Iſay.5.4. What could I haue done any more for my vineyard that I haue not done vnto it? But if Chriſt had giuen his bodie onely, and not his ſoule for vs, he had not done for vs all he could, and ſo his loue ſhould greatly be empayred, and diminiſhed: Ergo, he gaue his ſoule alſo together with his bodie to be the full price of our redemption. Iſay.5.4.

1. It will be anſwered, that Chriſt ſaith, Iohn.15.13. Greater loue hath no man than this, when one layeth downe his life for his friends, Bellarm.lib.1.de baptiſ.cap.6. And the Apoſtle ſaith, God commended his loue toward vs, that when we were ſinners, Chriſt dyed for vs, Rom.5.7. *Bellarm.lib.4. de Chriſt.anima, cap.8.argum.*1. Chriſts loue is ſet forth in his death: A greater loue there cannot be then this: Ergo, his ſoule ſuffered not, for that ſhould haue been a greater loue. Iohn 15.13. Rom.5.7.

2. Chriſt was the more beloued of God, for giuing his life for vs: Iohn 10. Therefore doth my father loue me, Fenard.p.470.conf.3. Then conſequently he did not loſe his fathers loue, in giuing his ſoule for vs, and bearing his fathers wrath. Iohn 10.17.

Contra. 1. If that ſentence of Chriſt be applied ſtrictly to himſelfe, this ſenſe cannot hold: for firſt Chriſt dyed for his enemies, Rom.5.10. therefore this is not ſimply the greateſt loue for a man to dye for his friends: it is a greater loue for one to dye for his enemies. Againe, Moſes wiſhed to be raſed out of the booke of life, Exod.32. Paul to be accurſed for the Iewes ſake, Rom.9.3. As Hierome ſaith, Pro charitate Chriſti nolit habere Chriſtum: For the loue of Chriſt hee will not haue Chriſt, Algaſ.qu.9. This was a greater loue, then to lay downe the bodily life onely: but a greater loue could not be in the members then in Chriſt. 1. Rom.5.10. Exod.32.32. Rom.9.3.

2. Firſt then the text muſt be vnderſtood according to the ſubiect of the ſentence: Chriſt ſpeaketh of his friends, and toward friends there can not be a greater loue then to dye for them, ſo that here the greatneſſe of Chriſts loue conſiſteth in the thing which is done, not in the perſons for whom it is done: for in that conſideration Chriſts loue hath far exceeded, in that he dyed for vs being ſinners, and his enemies, as the Apoſtle there ſheweth. Secondly, by anima, ψυχὴ, life or ſoule in this place, if it be applied to Chriſt, it is not neceſſarie to vnderſtand the bodily life onely, but the whole ſtate of man: as where Matthew ſaith, chap.16.26. What would it profit a man to winne the whole world, and loſe (animam) his ſoule or life? Saint Luke ſaith, If he loſe himſelfe, Luk.9.25. ſo that a mans ſoule or life is taken for himſelfe, that is the whole man. So, where Saint Iohn ſaith, that Chriſt layd downe Math.16.26. Luk.9.25.

1.Ioh.3.16. Epheſ.5.2. Act.2.27. his life for vs: S. Paul writeth thus: he hath loued vs, and giuen himſelfe for vs. Thirdly, what reaſon is there, that anima, properly ſignifying the ſoule, ſhould be taken for the bodie? which interpretation of the word, Bellarmine refuſeth and condemneth as coacted: Act.2,27. Thou ſhalt not leaue my ſoule in graue, Bellarm.lib.4.de Chriſt.anim.c.12.loc.4.

3. 1. Saint Paul ſaith, that Gods loue is commended herein, that hee dyed for vs, that is, as Saint Iohn ſaith, Herein wee haue perceiued loue, that Chriſt dyed for vs, 1.Iohn 3.16. And chap.4.9. In this [illegible] appeared, or was made manifeſt Gods loue toward vs: So that indeede by Chriſts bodily death, being conſpicuous and viſible (his other ſufferings being inuiſible and not apparant) the loue of Chriſt was made manifeſt. 2. By the death of Chriſt all other concurrents and adiuncts of his croſſe are ſignified, his ſtripes, rebukes, blood, ſorrow, griefe, and whatſoeuer concurred either in his bodie or ſoule appertaining to, or accompanying his death: for by all theſe the loue of Chriſt was expreſſed.

2. Secondly, 1. neither doe we affirme, that Chriſt loſt his fathers loue or fauour, by entring into that agonie: Iob, when he complained in the anguiſh of his ſoule, that God was his enemie, Iob.30.21. and Dauid when he ſaid, I am caſt out of thy ſight, Pſal.31.22. had they then loſt Gods fauour? 2. Nay, this trauaile and labour of Chriſts ſoule was moſt acceptable vnto God, Iſay,53.verſ.12. Therefore I will giue him a portion with the great, becauſe he hath powred out his ſoule vnto death, &c. and bare the ſinnes of many.

Iob.30.21. Pſal.31.22. Iſay.53.12.

Thirdly, we ſee then notwithſtanding theſe doubts and obiections, that the force of this argument remaineth inuiolable; that the ſuffring of Chriſt in ſoule together with his body, doth more fully and amply commend and ſet forth vnto vs the loue of God, ſeeing now, as the Prophet ſaith, He could not doe any thing more for vs, which he had not done: So I conclude with that ſaying of Ambroſe, in Luc.c.22. Minus contulerat, ſi meum non ſuſcepiſſet affectum, debuit dolorem ſuſcipere, vt triſtitiam vinceret, non excluderet: He had beſtowed but little, if he had not taken mine affection: he ought to take my ſorrow, to ouercome my heauineſſe, and not to exclude it.

Beſide the teſtimonies of the Fathers, diſperſedly alleaged before in our ſeuerall arguments and anſweres, theſe alſo doe witneſſe with vs for the ſuffring of Chriſt both in ſoule and bodie.

Ambroſe: Chriſtus ex nobis ſuſcepit, quod proprium offerret pro nobis, vt nos redimeret: Chriſt hath taken of vs, which he ſhould offer as proper for vs, to redeeme vs, de incarnat.cap.6. Againe, Quicquid induit, obtulit: Whatſoeuer Chriſt tooke of vs, hee offered, de incarnat.c.6. Ergo, hee offered bodie and ſoule, for he tooke both.

Concil.Hiſpalenſ.2.c.13. vpon theſe words, My ſoule is heauie: Anima paſſionibus obnoxia, diuinitas libera: His ſoule was ſubiect to paſſions, his diuinitie was free, &c. If nothing were free but his diuine nature, then his ſoule was ſubiect to the proper and immediate paſſions thereof.

Hierome: Perſpicuum eſt, ſicut corpus flagellatum, ita animam verè doluiſſe, ne ex parte veritas, ex parte mendacium credatur in Chriſto: It is euident, that as his bodie was whipped, ſo his ſoule was verily and truly grieued, leſt ſome part of Chriſts ſuffering ſhould be true, ſome part falſe, in 53.cap.Iſaia: Ergo, Chriſts ſoule as properly and truly ſuffered as his bodie: the ſoule had her proper griefe, as the bodie had whipping: the whipping then of the bodie was not the proper griefe of the ſoule.

Fulgentius: Totus homo ſemetipſum tradidit, & totus homo ſemetipſum obtulit: Whole Chriſt gaue himſelfe, and whole Chriſt offered himſelfe: ad Thraſimund. lib.3. Ergo, hee offered his ſoule, not onely to ſuffer by way of compaſſion with his bodie, as it may be anſwered: but hee offered it as a ſacrifice, and ſuffered all paſſions whatſoeuer incident to the ſoule, as the ſame author expoundeth himſelfe: Quia totum hominem Deus ille ſuſcepit, ideo totius hominis in ſe paſſionis in veritate monſtrauit, & animam quidem rationalem habens quicquid fuit infirmitatis animæ ſine peccato ſuſcepit, & pertulit, &c. Becauſe this God tooke whole man, therefore he ſhewed in truth in himſelfe, the paſſions of whole man; and hauing a reaſonable ſoule, what infirmitie ſoeuer of the ſoule without ſinne, hee tooke and bare: ad Thraſimund.lib.3. If Chriſt then did take and beare all the paſſions of the ſoule without ſinne, then the proper and immediate griefe and anguiſh thereof, and not the compaſſion onely with the bodie.

To theſe places may be added the teſtimonies of the Fathers before alleaged: as of Ambroſe.reſponſ. ad 1.argum.part.1.art.6. & part.2. Of Auguſtine, argum.1.art.4. Of Damaſcene and Ambroſe againe ibid. Of Origene argum.4.

Harm.p.99. ſect.6. Hereunto I will adde the conſent of the reformed Churches: French confeſſ. Chriſt did ſuffer both in bodie and ſoule, and was made like vnto vs in all things, ſinne onely excepted.

3.Par.qu.46. artic.5. Thomas granteth that Chriſt ſecundum genus paſſus eſt omnem paſſionem humanam, in generall ſuffered all humane ſuffrings: as in his ſoule, heauineſſe, feare, &c.

Now then to conclude: 1. If whatſoeuer Chriſt tooke of our nature, he tooke to this end, to ſuffer in it properly and abſolutely. Argum.1. If wherein Adam properly ſinned, Chriſt properly muſt make ſatisfaction, Argum.2. If Chriſt was heauie in ſoule, verily and in deede, and gaue his ſoule for our ſinne, Argum.3. If hee exinanited and emptied himſelfe, and offered his whole humanitie, Argum.4. If Chriſts loue ſhould be thereby obſcured and empayred, if he with-held to giue his ſoule for vs; Argum.5. Many of the Fathers alſo affirming the ſame, that Chriſt was crucified in his ſoule, that hee gaue his ſoule a price of redemption for our ſoule: who can then doubt of this, but that Chriſt verily, properly, immediatly, ſuffered in his ſoule in all the proper paſſions thereof, as hee endured paines and torments in his fleſh?

THE FOVRTH PART, WHETHER CHRIST SVFfered in his ſoule vpon the Croſſe the torments of Hell.

THE OBIECTIONS ANSWERED.

THe Rhemiſts call it blaſphemie, that Chriſt in his ſoule ſuffered the paines of hel vpon the Croſſe: Annot. in 2. act. ſect. 11. Bellarmine alſo denieth: Chriſtum pertuliſſe dolores inferni: That Chriſt did beare the ſorrowes of hell, lib. 4. de Chriſti anima. c. 8. reſp. ad argum. 5. Feuardentius agreeth with them, Chriſto non fuiſſe certamen cum inferni doloribus: That Chriſt in his death, had no combate with the ſorrowes of hell, p. 448. 8.

Art. 17.

Obiect. 1. The bodily ſufferings and paſſions of Chriſt, were ſufficiently meritorious, and efficiently ſatiſfactorie for our redemption; therefore ſuch infernall ſufferings are ſuperfluous: Feuardentius to this effect, p. 448. 8. and to this purpoſe they doe amplifie Chriſts bodily paines in this manner: hee had a moſt pure, tender, delicate bodie, and a moſt quicke, liuely, and feeling ſoule, ſo that the hurts and wounds, which ſeeme but light vnto vs, were moſt grieuous and ſharpe to him: to adde then any other ſufferings to theſe, were to diminiſh and empaire the glory of them, Feuard. p. 453.

Anſw. 1. We doe alſo magnifie and extoll the holy and painefull ſufferings of Chriſt as much as they, and doe glorie in them; and with the Apoſtle doe reioyce in the croſſe of Chriſt, Galath. 6. 16. And we meditate vpon the grieuous torments, which Chriſt endured for vs in his fleſh: as Auguſtine doth thus excellently deſcribe them: Intuere dulcem natum toto corpore extenſum, cerne manus innoxias pie manantes ſanguine, — candet nudatum pectus, rubet cruentum latus, tenſa arent viſcera, decora languent lumina, regia pallent ora, procera rigent brachia, crura pendent marmorea, &c. Behold the ſweet ſonne ſtrained in his whole bodie, ſee his holy hands ſtreaming with blood, — his white naked breaſt appeareth, his ſide is red with blood, his bowels are pent with ſtraining, his beautifull eies doe languiſh, his princely countenance waxeth pale, his comely armes are ſtiffe, his marble legges hang downe: lib. 1. meditat. c. 6. tom. 9.

Galath. 6. 16.

2. As we doe behold the manner of his ſuffering, and the greatneſſe of his paine, ſo we acknowledge the price, merite, and efficacie thereof: we doubt not to ſay with S. Ambroſe: Chriſtus ille Naboth qui vineam ſanguine defendit: Chriſt is that Naboth, that defended his vineyard with his blood: exhort. ad virgines: with S. Hierome, Flammea illa romphaea cuſtos paradiſi in Chriſti ſanguine extincta: That fierie blade, the keeper of Paradiſe, is extinct in Chriſts blood, Epitaph. Nepotian. with Bernard: Chriſtus perfoſſo latere tanquam conſciſſo ſacco pretium effudit redemptionis: Chriſts ſide being opened, as out of a treaſure bagge, iſſued the price of our redemption: but this extolling of the ſufferings of his bodie, is no derogation to the holy conflicts of his ſoule: neither doth the argument follow: Chriſt ſuffered in bodie, Ergo, his ſoule ſufferings were ſuperfluous.

3. We grant, that the leaſt paine of Chriſts bodie, and the leaſt drop of blood had been ſufficient, in reſpect of Gods power, and the dignitie of Chriſts perſon, to haue redeemed vs: as it is in your owne law confeſſed: extrau. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 2. Clemens 6. Gutta ſanguinis modica propter vnionem ad verbum pro redemptione totius humani generis ſuffeciſſet: The leaſt dop of Chriſts blood for the vnion of Chriſt to the word, had ſufficed for the redemption of whole mankind, &c. As then the leaſt drop of blood had been ſufficient, if God had ſo purpoſed, yet was not therfore the great ſtreame of blood, that came from him ſuperfluous: ſo neither doth the ſhedding of his blood with other paines in his fleſh, being in themſelues of great ſufficiencie, exclude the neceſſitie of his ſorrowes in ſoule: for it pleaſed God by the death of his Sonne, not to ſhew ſo much his abſolute power whereby he could haue ſaued vs without his death, but his vnſpeakeable loue in giuing his Sonne for vs, Rom. 8. 32. and the fulneſſe of our redemption, in that Chriſt left nothing vndone, that could bee done for vs, Iſay 5 4. So that Chriſt now hauing paied the full price of our redemption, both in his bodie and ſoule, we may boldly ſay with the Prophet: Apud eum copioſa redemptio: With him is plenty of redemption, or a plentifull redemption, Pſalm. 130. 7.

One drop of Chriſts blood how ſufficient.

Rom. 8. 32.
Pſalm. 130. 7.

Obiect. 2. In hell theſe things are to be conſidered: firſt, inward and outward darkenes: ſecondly, lake of fire and brimſtone: thirdly, fire vnquenchable. Feuard. 444. conf. 2. Fourthly, the worme and pricke of conſcience: fifthly, malediction: ſixthly, deſperation: Feuard. 446. conf. 5. Seuenthly, ſecond death and deſtruction of bodie and ſoule for euer: Feuard. p. 453. lin. 3. But Chriſt felt none of theſe puniſhments: Ergo, he ſuffered not the torments of hell.

Anſw. 1. In this queſtion of Chriſts ſuffering hell ſorrowes, that we may walke ſafely and without offence this firſt muſt be premiſed, that theſe ſuffrings & ſorowes be no otherwiſe attributed to Chriſt, they as they may ſtand with the dignitie and worthines of his perſon, the holines of his nature, and the performance of the office and worke of our redemption: firſt then for the ſoule of Chriſt to ſuffer in the locall place of hell, to remaine in the darkeneſſe thereof, and to bee tormented with the materiall flames there, and eternally to be damned, was not for the dignity of his perſon, to whõ for his excellency and worthines, both the place, manner and time of thoſe torments were diſpenſed with. Secondly, finall reiection, and deſperation, with the worme of conſcience for his owne ſinne, agreeth not with the holineſſe of his nature, who was the immaculate lambe, and therefore we doe not aſcribe them to him. Thirdly, deſtruction of bodie and ſoule, ſecond death; could not fall vpon Chriſt; for this were to haue deſtroyed the worke of our redemption, if he had been ſubiect to deſtruction.

What paines of hell Chriſt was free from.

Pſalm.59.5.

2. For the worme of conſcience, though Chriſt in himſelfe being moſt holy and harmeleſſe, was free from it, yet as bearing our perſon, and taking vpon him our iniquities, he was not exempted, no not from our griefe and ſorrow for ſinne; ſo the Prophet ſaith, hee was a man full of ſorrowes, Iſay 53.3. And he was ſmitten and plagued of God, verſ.4. Hierome alſo doubteth not to applie theſe words, Pſalm.59.5. My faults are not hid from thee, vnto Chriſt: Hoc ex perſona Chriſti dicitur, ſi ille, qui peccatum non fecit, pro nobis doluit, & peccata noſtra portauit, quanto magis nos debemus vitia noſtra confiteri: This is ſpoken in the perſon of Chriſt, if he that did no ſinne, ſorrowed for vs, and bare our ſins, how much more ought we to confeſſe our ſins, &c. he affirmeth Chriſt to haue ſorrowed for our ſins, as confeſſing them to be his owne.

Galath.3.13.

How Chriſt is ſaid to haue been forſaken of God.

3. Firſt, reiection with deſperation, and finall malediction could not be faſtened vpon Chriſts ſoule: yet the Scripture teſtifieth; that he was forſaken of God for the preſent in his ſenſe and feeling, ſo complaining vpon the croſſe, and that hee was made a curſe for vs, Gal.3.13. Chriſt then was, as the Scripture ſaith, forſaken, that is, reiected of God and accurſed. Secondly, but here diuers neceſſary conſiderations muſt be had: firſt, that Chriſt in the holines of his owne nature was neuer accurſed, or reiected, but alwaies beloued of God: but as now our perſon was appropriated to him, and as he ſtood a pledge and ſuretie for vs to pay our debt, ſo he was for the time reiected and accurſed. And to this purpoſe Damaſcene hath a good diſtinction, which I haue before remembred: that there are δύο οἰκειώσεις, two kinds of appropriations in Chriſt, φυσικὴ καὶ οὐσιώδης, one naturall and ſubſtantiall, the other προσωπικὴ καὶ σχετική, perſonall or habituall: to the firſt belong all the properties of the humane nature, which Chriſt verilie tooke with his fleſh: of the ſecond ſort are thoſe, which are attributed to Chriſt, as bearing our perſon, in which reſpect he aſſumed to himſelfe our dereliction and malediction. Damaſcen.lib.3.de fid.c.25. Secondly, as Ambroſe hath a diſtinction of election: that ſome are elected, Non de praſcientia ſed de praeſenti iuſtitia, Not of Gods preſcience, but of their preſent iuſtice, Ambr.in 8.ad Rom So likewiſe we may ſay of Chriſts reiection, that he was neuer reiected in Gods preſcience, but according to the preſent ſenſe and feeling which was in his ſoule. Thirdly, thus then the contrarie arguments may be anſwered: firſt, that this reiection of Chriſt, neither enforceth deſperation, ſeeing Chriſt was ſupported by the innocencie of his owne ſoule, nor yet a ſeparation from the vnitie of the Godhead, ſeeing this reiection was not finall: ſo that as Chriſts bodie was without life in the graue, yet not hypoſtatically ſeparated from the Godhead, ſo his ſoule was a while without feeling of Gods fauour; yet ſtill vnited in perſon to the Godhead. Secondly, Chriſt thus being made a curſe for vs, was not therefore made vnable to bleſſe vs; but the Apoſtle inferreth a contrarie concluſion, that Chriſt hath redeemed vs from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for vs: becauſe he was accurſed for vs, we are bleſſed thorough him.

Galath.3.13.

4. Concerning hell flames: firſt, in that they are not eternall in Chriſt, the worthines of his perſon obtained: for his temporall enduring of hell ſorrowes was as effectuall and meritorious, as if they had been perpetuall.

Obiect. And why I pray you may not the dignitie of his perſon diſpenſe with the ſufferings of the ſoule altogether, and that his bodily torments only might be accepted? Fenard.p.450.con.13.lin.7.

Anſw. Firſt the dignitie of his perſon did beare him out in that, which was not meete for him to ſuffer, not fit in reſpect of our redemption: for if hee ſhould haue ſuffered eternally, our redemption could not haue been accompliſhed: but for him to ſuffer in ſoule as he did in bodie, was neither derogatorie to his perſon, nor preiudiciall to his worke. Secondly, by the ſame reaſon by the dignitie of his perſon he ſhould be exempted alſo from his bodily ſufferings, and ſo ſuffer nothing at all: ſo then the dignitie of his perſon was ſo farre forth diſpenſed with, as yet Gods iuſtice and equitie in the full redemption of man muſt be ſatisfied.

Whether all hell flames are materiall.

Pſalm 89.46.
Matth.3.12.
Luke 11.50.
Iſay 6.7.

Secondly, 1. For hell flames, though we deny not, but they ſhall be materiall, though after a ſpirituall manner to worke vpon the immortall and neuer dying bodies of the damned; yet it muſt needs be confeſſed, that al the flames and fire of hell are not corporall and material: As that fire was not wherein the rich man was tormented, as Auguſtine ſaith to this effect, Talem fuiſſe flammam quales oculi, &c. qualis lingua, &c. It was ſuch a flame, as the eies, as the finger, &c. lib.21.de ciuitat.c.10. 2. That Chriſt felt in his ſoule the fierie flames of Gods wrath, which may bee called the flames of hell, it need not ſeeme ſtrange, ſeeing the Scripture reſembleth the wrath of God vnto fire, Pſalm.89.46. Shall thy wrath burne like fire? and as Chriſt baptized with the ſpirit and fire, Matth.3.12. ſo it was fit hee himſelfe ſhould be ſo baptized firſt, Luke 12.50. S. Ambroſe to this purpoſe applieth that place, Iſay 6.7. where the Prophets lippes were purged with a coale from the altar: Chriſtus velut carbo ſecundum carnem exuſſit peccata noſtra: Chriſt as a coale in his fleſh burned vp our ſinnes. And againe, Sicut habes in Zacharia, nonne hic titio eiectus ab igni, & ille erat Ieſus indutus veſtimento ſordido: As you haue in Zacharie, is not this a firebrand taken out of the fire? and this was Ieſus clothed with filthie rayment, Lib.1.de ſpirit.c.9. Thus Chriſt was firſt as a brand himſelfe, touched or ſcorched with the fire of his Fathers wrath, and then as the coale from the altar he alſo purgeth vs.

Thus then we feare not to confeſſe with the Scriptures and fathers, that Chriſt bearing our ſinnes in himſelfe vpon the croſſe, did feele himſelfe during that combate, as reiected and forſaken of God, and accurſed for vs, and the flames of his Fathers wrath burning within him: ſo that to the honour of Chriſts paſſion we confeſſe, that our bleſſed Redeemer refuſed no part of our puniſhment, but endured the very paines of hell ſo farre, as they tended not neither to the derogation of his perſon, deprauation of his nature, deſtruction of his office.

Thus alſo is Feuardentius further anſwered, who maketh theſe foure the puniſhments of the reprobate. 1. They ſhall for euer want the viſion or ſight of God. 2. They ſhall euer be perplexed with the horror of a guiltie conſcience. 3. They are depriued of all the gifts of the ſpirit. 4. In ſtead of vertues, they are defiled with wickedneſſe, pag. 446. Of theſe foure, the firſt is a diſhonour to Chriſts glorious perſon, wherein he is perpetually vnited to God, and ſo cannot euer want the viſion of God; the ſecond ſhould be an hinderance to the worke of our redemption: for he could not ſaue vs from our ſins, if he were guiltie of his owne: the two laſt cannot be committed nor had without ſinne, and therefore are a diſgrace to the holineſſe of his nature: wherefore none of theſe puniſhments, without blaſphemie, can be laid vpon Chriſt.

*Obiect.*3. Firſt, none in this life are in the true paines of hell: Ergo, neither Chriſt, *Bellarm.lib.*4. *cap.*8.*argum.*3.

2. Hell paines are not meritorious, but Chriſts paſſions and ſufferings are meritorious: Ergo, hee ſuffered not the paines of hell; *Feuard.pag.*421.*conf.*12.*lin.*3.4.

3. Hell paines are euerlaſting, there is fire that neuer goeth out or is extinguiſhed, *Feuardent.pag.*444.*conf.*2.*lin.*9. Ergo, Chriſt was not in thoſe flames.

4. Chriſt was mightier then hell, he looſed the ſorrowes of hell: Ergo, he was not tormented in hell, *Feuard.pag.*475.*lin.*3.ex Fulgent.

5. The Apoſtle ſaith, Rom.8.17. If we ſuffer with him, we ſhall be glorified with him: wee by partaking with Chriſt in the like paſſions, ſhall attaine to bee fellowes with him in his kingdome, Rhemiſt. annot.in hunc locum: Muſt we ſuffer then the paines of hell, before we can attaine heauen? Rom.8.17.

6. S.Peter ſaith, Chriſt ſuffered for vs, leauing vs an example to follow his ſteppes: this place is vrged by *Feuard.pag.*361.5. If Chriſt then muſt be imitated of vs in all things, then in his hell-ſufferings.

7. Chriſtus eſt purior cunctis angelicis choris: Chriſt is purer then all the companie of Angels, *Feuard.pag.*454.*lin.*12. if Chriſt were not free from hell, how can they be; ſeeing he was perſonaliter vnitus, perſonally vnited to the Godhead, *pag.*474.*lin.*20. as the Angels are not: and if the elect members of Chriſt are ſure they ſhall not fall from their election, and ſo conſequently not come into hell, much more Chriſt, &c. *Feuard.p.*483.*conf.*3.

8. There is no goodneſſe, charitie, vertue, in hell, therefore Chriſt full of all grace and vertue, could not be there, *Feuard.p.*447.*conf.*6.

Anſw. 1. The argument followeth not, men in this life cannot feele the true paines of hell, Ergo, not Chriſt: for who but Chriſt did beare the iniquities of men? as the Prophet ſaith, Iſay 53.6. Fecit in eum concurrere peccata omnium: God made all our ſinnes to runne together as in an heape vpon him: who then but Chriſt could feele and ſuffer the true puniſhment of ſinne in this life? 2. The true paines, though not the full paines of hell may bee felt in this life; as likewiſe the true, though not the full ioyes of heauen: firſt, for the ioyes of heauen, the Apoſtle ſaith, Epheſ.2.6. He hath made vs ſit together in the heauenly places in Chriſt Ieſus: What is this elſe, but euen while we liue, by faith to poſſeſſe the very ioyes of heauen? So Paul, not yet out of his body, was taken vp into Paradiſe, 2.Corin.12.4. whereof Hierome thus writeth: Paulo in tertium cœlum patuit aſcenſus, quem neq; ignea illa romphea ab aditu Paradiſi potuit excludere: A way was open for Paul to aſcend into Paradiſe, whom the fierie blade could not ſhut out, ad Marcellam. Auguſtine alſo ſaith, Tu ſi vis, cœlum eris; ſi vis eſſe cœlum, purga de corde tuo terram: Thou mayeſt be heauen, if thou wilt, purge earth out of thy heart, and thou ſhalt be heauen, *in Pſal.*96. Wherefore euen a man while he liueth, may feele the true ioyes of heauen.

1. Iſay 53.6. Heauen and hell in part in this life. Epheſ.2.6. 2.Cor.12.4.

If the ſoule may in this life haue a taſte of the true ioyes of heauen, then conſequently it may be perplexed with the true ſorrowes of hell, though not in that manner nor meaſure: for if horrible deſperation, and a comfortleſſe conſcience of ſinne belong to the true paines of hell, what did Cain want of the feeling of hell torments, when he ſaid, His ſinne was greater then could be forgiuen, Geneſ.4.13? Auguſtine ſaith, Iudicis tribunal in mente tua, ſedet ibi Deus, adeſt accuſator conſcientia, tortor timor: The Iudges tribunall ſeat is in thy ſoule, God ſitteth there as Iudge, thy conſcience is the accuſer, feare is the tormentor: *in Pſal.*57. If then in the ſoule there be a Iudge; an Accuſer; a Tormentor; there is alſo a true taſte of the torments of hell.

2. 1. The leaſt paines, which Chriſt ſuffered for vs, and the leaſt labour and trauell, which hee endured, were meritorious; his hunger, thirſt, faſting, wearines, whippings, buffetings, were in reſpect of the worthines of his perſon meritorious, much more the ſufferings of his ſoule. 2. Hell torments in themſelues are not meritorious, nor yet the ſhedding of mans blood; yet in Chriſt, becauſe of the holines of his perſon, both the one and the other were full of merit: As Bernard well anſwered to the like obiection: Nunquid mors innocentis filij tantum placuit deo? Did the death of his innocent ſon ſo much pleaſe God? Non mors, ſed voluntas placuit ſponte morientis: non requiſiuit deus ſanguinē innocentis filij, ſed acceptauit oblatum, non ſanguinem ſitiens, ſed ſalutem, quia ſalus erat in ſanguine: Not the death, but the the will of him, that died of his owne accord, was acceptable; God required not the blood of his innocent ſonne, but accepted it being offered; not thirſting for blood, but for mans ſaluation, which was in his blood, epiſt.191. As then theſe three things, the perſon of Chriſt being the ſonne of God, his obedience in being willing, his end and intention to ſaue mankind, made his blood acceptable and meritorious: ſo alſo in the foreſaid reſpects his ſoule merited by the ſufferings and paſſions thereof. 3. Neither by theſe ſufferings was the vnion to the Godhead ſeparated, but the fruition only a while ſuſpended. 4. And it is not thankworthie, ſimply to wiſh to be ſeparated from God, but with a charitable affection to wiſh ſuch a ſeparation, was no doubt acceptable in Paul: who, as Hierome ſaith, Pro charitate Chriſti nolit habere Chriſtum. For the loue of Chriſt would not haue Chriſt: but in Chriſt it was truly meritorious.

3. 3. 1. The paines of hell, which Chriſt ſuffered, though they were not infinite in time, yet were they of an infinite price and value, for the dignitie of the perſon that ſuffered them, his abundant charitie whereby he ſuffered them, the great vtilitie for the which he ſuffered them, namely the ſaluation of man. 2. Otherwiſe infinitely in time Chriſt was not to ſuffer: as Ambroſe wel ſaith vpon theſe words,

Rom.5.6.

Rom.5.6. Chriſt died, ſecundum tempus, in time, or according to time: Tempora in mundo ſunt, vbi oritur & occidit ſol; huic ergo tempori mortuus eſt; vbi autem tempus non eſt, ibi non ſolum viuus, ſed victor repertus eſt: Times are in the world, where the Sunne riſeth, and ſetteth, vnto this time he died: but where there is no time, there he was found not onely liuing, but conquering: in 5. ad Roman.

Heb.2.14.
Math.10.29.

4. 4. 1. Chriſt was not bound of Satan, though he encountered with Satan; neither was hee weaker then hell, becauſe he entred into hell, but mightier, becauſe hee ouercame hell: and as hee deſtroyed death by his death, Heb.2.14. ſo he vanquiſhed hell by his hell, which he ſuffered in ſoule. 2. Chriſt did by his death enter into the ſtrong mans houſe to ſpoile his goods, Matth.10.29. And as Ruffinus ſaith in the ſymbole, which goeth vnder his name: Chriſtus non damno aliquo patitur, ſed vt rex carcerem ingreſſus, vt ſoluat catenas in carcere fuiſſe dicitur, ſed nō ea conditione, qua cæteri; illi vt pœnas ſoluerent, hic vt pœnas abſolueret: Chriſt ſuffereth not to any loſſe, but as a King entring into priſon to looſe the chaines, is ſaid to haue been in priſon, but not with that condition, that others are; they are there to pay debt, he to releaſe them of paine and debt, &c. So Chriſt by entring into death and hell for vs, hath releaſed vs of our paine, and payed our debt, though not as they, which are condemned to hell.

Matth.5.10.
1.Pet.2.23.

5. 5. Bernard well noteth three things in Chriſts death: In Chriſti paſſione tria ſpecialiter conuenit intueri, opus, modum, cauſam: It behoueth vs ſpecially to conſider in Chriſts paſſion the worke, the manner, the cauſe, ſerm. de paſſion. In the cauſe he was innocent, in the manner patient, in the worke excellent: in his innocencie and humilitie wee muſt ſuffer as hee did, that is, not to ſuffer as euill doers, but for righteouſnes ſake, Matth.5.10. We muſt ſuffer patiently, as he did, who being reuiled, reuiled not againe, 1.Pet.2.23. but in the worke of redemption, for the which hee ſuffered in bodie and ſoule, wee cannot ſuffer as he did; vnleſſe you will make men redeemers of ſoules: nay, who can endure the like bodily ſufferings as he did in euery reſpect? wherefore in this behalfe we are not required by the Apoſtle to ſuffer with Chriſt, neither is it poſſible.

How farre, and wherein Chriſt is to be imitated.
1.Pet.4.15.

6. 6. 1. The ſame anſwere may ſerue for the next obiection: for the Apoſtle in the ſame place ſheweth wherein Chriſt is an example to vs, in his innocencie, there was no guile in his mouth, 1.Pet.2.23. in his patience, he reuiled not againe, verſ.23. 2. To the ſame effect the ſame Apoſtle exhorteth vs to be partakers of Chriſts ſuffrings, that is, not to ſuffer as euill doers, 1.Pet.4.15. 3. S. Auguſtine ſheweth wel wherein Chriſt is to be imitated: Non dixit Chriſtus, diſcite à me mundū fabricare, aut mortuos ſuſcitare, ſed diſcite, quia mitis ſum: Chriſt ſaid not, learne of me to make the world, or to raiſe the dead; but learne of me, becauſe I am meeke, *de ſanct. virginit. c.*35. To redeeme the world, is no leſſe a worke then to make the world: and therefore vnleſſe Chriſt had bid vs to learne of him to redeeme the world, how doth it belong to vs to imitate his meritorious and ſatisfactorie ſufferings both in bodie and ſoule? 4. Yet we haue ſomewhat alſo euen in Chriſts ſoule-ſufferings to imitate: that as hee being plunged as it were in the depth of hell, and in the floods of ſorrowes, yet was not ſwallowed vp of the gulfe of deſpaire, but ſtill truſted vnto God, ſaying, My God, my God: ſo we likewiſe ſhould bee confident in our trouble of mind. And to this point alſo Auguſtine ſaith well: Chriſtus exemplum ſanis ad permanendum, infirmis ad conualeſcendum, morituris ad non timendum, mortuis ad reſurgendum: Chriſt is an example to the whole to continue, to the weake to grow in ſtrength, to the dying not to feare, to the dead to riſe againe, *de Trinitat.*7.2.

Iohn 10.17.18.

7. 7. 1. It followeth not, Chriſt is vnited into one perſon with God, therefore he did not ſuffer the paines of hell: for by the ſame reaſon he ſhould not haue ſuffered in bodie: the vnion of his perſon could haue preſerued him from the one ſuffering and the other, and no man compelled him to vndertake this difficult worke, but his owne vnſpeakeable loue vnto mankind: ſo he ſaith, Iohn 10.17. Therfore doth my father loue me, becauſe I lay downe my life: verſ.18. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it downe of my ſelfe: If the ſonne of God had been conſtrained to ſuffer, and for himſelfe, then both men and Angels might feare; but as Bernard (before alleaged) ſaith: voluntas ſponte morientis, placuit deo: The willingneſſe of him that died, pleaſed God: who offered himſelfe to be the redeemer of the world: Pſalm.40.7. Then ſaid I, loe I come.

2. We need not maruell, that the ſonne of God doth beare for vs the brunt of hell, who was able to ſubdue it; wee might rather haue muſed and maruelled, if either men or Angels had entred into the combat, who muſt needes haue yeelded vnto it. Auguſtine here well ſaith: Mirum eſſe non debet à deo factum miraculum, mirum eſſet ſi homo feciſſet, magis gaudere quam mirari debemus, quia dominus noſter homo factus eſt, quam quod diuina inter homines fecit; plus eſt enim ad ſalutem noſtram, quod factus eſt propter homines, quam quod fecit inter homines: It need not ſeeme ſtrange to vs, that God did a miracle, it were ſtrange if man had done it, wee ſhould rather reioyce and not maruell, becauſe our Lord was made man, then that amongſt men he did diuine things; it is more to our ſaluation, that hee was made for men, then that he did make ſuch things among men, Tract. in Euangel. Ioan. 17. We neede not then aske the queſtion, how Chriſt ſuffered the paines of hell, and did other great workes for vs, but rather reioyce, that God became man for our ſakes to doe ſuch things for vs.

3. The Saints of God need not feare hell, becauſe Chriſt felt it, but they by his hell ſorrowes are deliuered from hell: let them rather looke to this danger, that would make vs beleeue, that the hell ſorrowes of the ſoule haue not yet by ſuffering them, been ſatisfied for: for ſeeing they muſt be endured, and you ſay Chriſt hath not endured them for vs, this wil rather ſtrike into the mind a feare of hell, that theſe ſorrowes remaine yet to be ſuffered, then the meditation of Chriſts hell in his ſoule, whereby our ſoules are deliuered. Wherefore the Saints need not feare hell flames, becauſe they were kindled in Chriſts ſoule, but to be bold againſt them, becauſe Chriſt in his ſoule hath quenched them; ſo that now, as the Apoſtle ſaith, there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus, Rom.8.1. And as Saint Ambroſe well ſaith: Ille fleuit, ne tu homo diu fleres; lachryma illa nos lauant, fletus illi nos abluunt, dubitatio illa nos firmat, ne ſi tu caperis dubitare, deſperes: Hee wept, that thou O man ſhouldeſt not long weepe: thoſe teares waſh vs, thoſe weepings cleanſe vs, his doubting doth ſtrengthen vs, leſt thou, when thou beginneſt to doubt, ſhouldeſt deſpaire, *lib.2. de fid. cap.*4. By Chriſts ſufferings then bodie and ſoule we are deliuered from the like.

4. And in that Angels are freed from hell flames, it is the fauour of the Creator, and in ſome ſort alſo the benefit of the Redeemer of the world: ſome Angels fell by their ſinne, for whom the lake of fire is prepared, the reſt doe ſtand by grace: for as we vtterly reiect the erronious conceit of Origen vpon theſe words, Col.1.20. To ſet at peace, through the blood of his croſſe, the things that are in earth, & the things in heauen: who thinketh that Chriſt, pro cœleſtibus hoſtia oblatus eſt, was offered a ſacrifice for the celeſtiall ſpirits in heauen, hom.1. in Leuit. neither doth Auguſtine fully touch the point, applying the redemption of man to the Angels in theſe two reſpects: firſt, he ſaith, Ruina illius Angelica detrimenta reparantur, Becauſe the ruines & decaies of the Angels are made vp, by the redemption of men. And againe a little before, Cum eis redit in gratiã: The Angels are become our friends by the redemption, *Enchirid. c.*61. So we doubt not to ſay, though the Angels are not redeemed as we are by Chriſts death, for he tooke not the nature of Angels, Heb.2.17. yet the benefit thereof for the ſuretie and preſeruation of their ſtate extendeth vnto them. As Ambroſe well ſaith: Aliter eget miſericordia angelus, aliter homo; angelica natura eget miſericordia, ne poſſet errare, & auerſa à ſe dei gratia, labatur in vitium; homo propter contractorum ſeriem peccatorum miſericordiam dei quærit: The Angell needeth mercie one way, man another; the angelicall nature needeth mercie, leſt it may erre, and, if Gods grace turne from them, fall into ſinne; man ſeeketh for mercie for ſinnes alreadie contracted, *ſerm.*8. in Pſalme 119. Likewiſe Bernard: Qui hominibus ſubuenit in tali neceſſitate, ſeruauit angelos à tali neceſſitate, &c. Hee that helped man in ſuch neceſſitie, ſaued the Angels from the like neceſſitie; hee that in his loue to men made them ſuch, that they ſhould not continue ſuch, by the like loue hath giuen to the Angels not to bee ſuch, lib. de diligend. deo. In that the elect Angels then are ſure to bee preſerued from hell, they are therein beholding to the bountifull Redeemer, who as hee hath deliuered vs from thence; ſo hee preſerueth and keepeth them from comming thither.

Coloſ.1.20.

How the Angels receiue benefit by the Redeemer of the world.

Heb.2.17.

8. 1. In the locall place of the damned, which is properly called hell, there is neither holineſſe, vertue, goodneſſe; but thither we ſend not the ſoule of Chriſt: who notwithſtanding he felt the ſorrowes of hell in his ſoule, euen the very ſenſe of his fathers wrath againſt ſinne, yet his faith failed not, neither did he loſe his confidence, but in that inſtant, when he complained he was forſaken, hee with full truſt and aſſurance ſaid, My God, my God. 2. Then as the ioyes of heauen may be truly, though not fully felt in this life, ſo may the paines of hell: and thus Chriſt in his ſoule while he liued felt them, without any decay or empairing of his holie vertues. Wherefore to vrge vs with the inconueniences, that accompanie the locall place of hell, and the very ſtate and condition of the damned, is too iniurious, ſeeing none doth, or hath ſo affirmed.

And further to explaine our meaning, as touching the ioyes of heauen and torments of hell in this life: firſt, a feare of hell which is euerlaſting deſtruction, or any griefe proceeding from that feare, wee are farre off from imagining to haue been in Chriſt: yet this preſent hell which he had in his ſoule, in labouring vnder the heauy burthen of our ſins and Gods wrath due to the ſame, we affirme that he felt it and feared it, as the Apoſtle ſaith, he was heard in that he feared, Heb.5.7. Secondly, we deny alſo this disiunction, that in this life all that is perceiued of heauen, is either the hope thereof, or the ioy ariſing vpon that hope: for then it would follow, that there is no ioy of heauen preſently had but in hope. An equalitie betweene the ioyes here felt, and eternall bliſſe to bee afterward poſſeſſed, no man is ſo void of ſenſe to affirme: and yet according to the Scripture we ſay, that we haue more ioy then in hope only: our Sauiour ſaith, Iohn 14.23. If any man loue me, &c. my father will loue him, and we will come vnto

Heauen ioyes and hell ſorrowes, how farre felt in this life.

Iohn 14.23.

to him, and dwell with him: where there is a dwelling, there is a preſent poſſeſſion: as Auguſtine then ſaith, Cœlum (inquit deus) mihi ſedes eſt, anima iuſti ſedes ſapientia — qui (i. iuſti) facti ſunt cœlum, Heauen (ſaith the Lord) is my ſeate, the ſoule of the righteous is the ſeate of wiſdome — the iuſt then Prou. 15.15. are heauen, in Pſalm. 121. The Wiſeman ſaith, A good conſcience is a continuall feaſt, Prou. 15.15. where a feaſt is, there is good cheare preſent, and not hope or expectation only. In ipſo homine latitia quedam conſcientia paradiſus eſt: In man the ioy of the conſcience is a paradiſe: Auguſt. lib. 12 de Geneſ. ad liter. c. 34. Thirdly, wherefore as the ioy of heauen may in ſome meaſure, not in hope onely, but in preſent feeling be perceiued in this life: ſo alſo there may be a liuely ſenſe of hell, as I haue ſhewed before, reſp. ad artic. 1. of this third generall argument or obiection. And ſo Origen ſaith, anſwering to a queſtion, how God doth now ſhew vengeance vpon diuels: Super omnia tormentorum genera eſt, cum videant aliquem verbo dei operam dare, in hoc eorum flamma eſt, in iſto vruntur incendio: It is beyond all torments when they ſee any man occupied in Gods word, this is their flame, and in this fire they are burned, Hom. 27, in Leuitic.

Obiect. Chriſt neuer did forget, that he was the Emmanuel, that God ſaid vnto him, thou art my beloued ſonne, that all which his father had, was his; he could not then be out of Gods fauour, Feuard. p. 486. conf. 7. and ſo conſequently not in hell, vnleſſe you will ſay, the ioyes of heauen are in hell: and ſo Chriſt ſhould be both in heauen and hell at once.

Anſw. 1. In the locall place of heauen and hell it is not poſſible for any neither to be at once, nor yet at ſundrie times ſucceſſiuely: for there is no paſſing from heauen to hell, or from hell to heauen: Luke 16.26. Luk. 16.26. They which would goe from hence to you cannot, &c. 2. Concerning the ſpirituall ſenſe of heauen and hell, though in one and the ſame inſtant they are not in the ſoule, yet many times in a verie Pſalm. 31.22. ſhort ſpace the one doth ſucced the other: as Pſalm. 31.22. the Prophet ſaith in his griefe of heart, I am caſt out of thy ſight; and yet he reuiueth againe immediatly, and ſaith, Yet thou heardeſt the voice of my prayer when I cried. 3. Chriſt was neuer deſtitute of faith and hope of this ioy propoſed; but the ſenſe and feeling thereof was for a while ſuſpended in his ſoule, while he wreſtled with hell: for like as Philip. 3.20. S. Paul by faith alwaies had his conuerſation in heauen: Philip. 3.20. yet ſometime minded the neceſſarie things of this life; as Hierome ſaith, Putaſne Apoſtolum Paulum eo tempore, quo ſcribebat, penulam affer tecum, &c. de cœleſtibus cogitaſſe myſterijs, & nō de his, quæ vſui communis vitæ neceſſaria ſunt; Doe you thinke the Apoſtle Paul at that time, when he wrote, Bring my cloake with thee, &c. did thinke of heauenly myſteries, and not of thoſe things, which were neceſſarie for the vſe of the common life, lib. 3. aduerſ. Pelagian. though by faith Pauls ſoule was in heauen, yet in his preſent ſenſe he intended worldly neceſſaries: ſo the ſoule of Chriſt being in the preſent ſenſe and feeling of hell ſorrowes, though his faith and hope languiſhed not, might haue ſome intermiſſion of the ioy conceiued; like as the ſoule liueth, when the body is aſleepe, yet worketh not, as when the body is awaked, to attend vpon the operatiō of the ſoule: So Auguſtine fitly cōpareth Chriſts ſuffering vpon the croſſe to ſleep, Dormienti Chriſto in cruce, facta eſt coniux Eccleſia de latere: While Chriſt ſlept on the croſſe, the Church his ſpouſe was made out of his ſide, Pſal. 56. So though the preſent hope and feeling of this ioy ſlept as it were in Chriſt, yet was it not extinct: it was intermitted, not ſubuerted; ſuſpended, not excluded, ceaſing for a while in feeling, but not dying in being. And thus far for the anſwer of theſe obiectiōs.

THE QVESTION CONFIRMED, THAT CHRIST in Soule ſuffered the paines of hell.

BEfore I produce our arguments, I will firſt declare our opinion: Firſt, this holy truth of Chriſts ſufferings, is either ignorantly miſtaken, or elſe wittingly charged with ſome things that no man holdeth. 1. That we ſhould affirme, that Chriſt ſuffered in his ſoule the whole paines of the damned in hell: and all the puniſhments due to the reprobate, Feuard. p. 443. This we ſimply denie, and it is a great wrong to lay it vnto our charge: I haue anſwered this cauill before, in the beginning, Err. 7. 2. It is ſuppoſed, as though we ſhould ſend Chriſts ſoule to the locall place of torment, and vpon this ſuppoſition we are vrged with the helliſh darkeneſſe, and fierie flames, and endleſſe torments, which are adiuncts to the locall place of the damned, not conſequents of the hell, which Chriſt ſuffered in ſoule, Feuard. p. 444. conf. 2. 3. It is conceiued, as though wee ſhould enwrap Chriſts ſoule within thoſe paines of the damned, which are not endured without ſinne, as deſperation, indignation, finall reiection, Feuard. pag. 446. conf. 5. Farre be it from vs to haue any ſuch meaning.

Secondly, for the further declaration of our mind, we affirme hell paines in Chriſts ſoule, with theſe three conditions: that there be neither indignitie offered to his heauenly perſon; iniurie to his holy nature; nor impoſſibilitie to his glorious worke: all ſuch paines of hell then, as Chriſt might haue ſuffered, his perſon not diſhonoured, his nature with ſinne not defiled, his worke of our redemption not hindered; we do conſtantly beleeue accordingly by our bleſſed Sauiour to haue been ſuſtained.

Thirdly, becauſe it is expected that leauing generall and ambiguous termes, we ſhould expreſſe in particular, what ſorrowes of hell our meaning is to aſcribe vnto Chriſts ſufferings; I will alſo, for full ſatisfaction in that behalfe, deſcend to ſome ſpeciall points.

In hell then wee conſider: 1. the neceſſarie adiuncts: 2. the effects: 3. the puniſhment it ſelfe: The inſeparable adiuncts and neceſſarie members of hell are theſe, 1. The place, which is infernall.

A deſcription of the torments of hell.

2. The time, perpetuall. 3. Darkeneſſe vnſpeakeable. 4. The miniſters and tormentors, the ſpirits and diuels irreconciliable. 2. The effects are chiefly theſe two: Firſt, the depriuation of all vertue, grace, godlineſſe: Secondly, the reall poſſeſſion of all vice, impiety, blaſphemy. All theſe we doe remoue as farre off from the holy ſoule of Chriſt, as heauen is from hell; the Eaſt from the Weſt; darkenes from light. 3. The puniſhment of hell it ſelfe conſiſteth in theſe foure: firſt, there is an horrible ſight and guiltie conſcience of ſinne: as Origene ſaith, Quandam veluti ſcelerum hiſtoriam vident ante oculos ſuos expoſitam: They ſee as a certaine ſtorie of their ſinnes ſet before their eyes: this is the worme that dyeth not, Mark.9.44. Secondly, they feele the moſt iuſt wrath of God lying vpon them for their ſinne; hereof is their weeping, Matth.8.12. Thirdly, there is cruell indignation in them, horrible outcries, blaſphemie, fretting, for the horrible torments, which they ſuffer: hence proceedeth the gnaſhing of their teeth, Matth.8.12. Fourthly, they lie tormented in endleſſe paine, without all hope or comfort: and this is the fire, that neuer goeth out, Mark.9.44. So then theſe foure; a fearefull impreſſion of ſinnes, comfortleſſe dereliction, horrible indignation, endleſſe deſperation; that is, the worme not dying, weeping, gnaſhing of teeth, the fire neuer going out; do make vp the iuſt meaſure of the torments of hell: The two laſt of theſe, impatient indignation, violent deſperation Chriſt muſt needes be freed from, who both patiently endured his Fathers correction, and confidently expected his deliuerance, and reſtitution: the other two were in Chriſt, though not as in the reprobate; impreſſion of ſinnes, not his owne, but ours laid vpon him, and griefe for the ſame; and dereliction or rejection for the time of his feeling. Firſt, the adiuncts of hell Chriſt is freed from for the dignitie of his perſon: it was not fit, that the Sonne of God, the heire of heauen, ſhould be ſhut vp in hell, or that he ſhould euer be tormented, who is neuer from Gods preſence ſequeſtred, or that the light of the world ſhould be cloſed vp in darkeneſſe: or he that bindeth the ſpirits, to be bound of them. Secondly, the effects or rather defects of hell, the neceſſitie of the worke of Chriſt doth exempt him from: for if hee had bin either void of grace, or poſſeſſed with vice, he could not haue bin the redeemer of the world: for the want of vertue, he could not haue redeemed others; for the preſence of ſinne, he ſhould haue beene redeemed himſelfe. Thirdly, from fretting indignation, and fearefull deſperation, the pietie and ſanctitie of his nature doth preſerue him: who being without ſinne, could neither by indignation diſpleaſe his father, nor by deſperation deſtroy himſelfe.

Mark.9.44.

What ſorrowes and paines of hell, Chriſt was freed from.

Fourthly, thus then we doubt not to deliuer our opinion, that our bleſſed Sauiour, as in himſelfe he bare all the ſinnes of the elect; ſo he alſo ſuffered the whole puniſhment of body and ſoule in generall due vnto vs for the ſame, which we ſhould haue endured if hee had not ſatisfied for it: and ſo conſequently we affirme, that he felt the anguiſh of ſoule, and horror of Gods wrath, and ſo in ſoule entred into the torments of hell for vs, ſuſtained them and vanquiſhed them.

Thus that reuerend Paſtor and Miniſter of Chriſt, in honour of Chriſts paſſion hath written, Cum iram Dei ſibi propoſitam videret, quatenus ad eius tribunal totius mundi peccatis oneratus ſe ſiſtebat, neceſſe illi fuit, profundam mortis abyſſum exhorreſcere: When he ſaw the wrath of God ſet before him, preſenting himſelfe before Gods tribunall, loaden with the ſinnes of the whole world; it was neceſſarie for him to feare the deepe bottomleſſe pitte of death: Caluin. in Matth.26.v.39. And againe: Cum ſpecies Chriſto obiecta eſt, quaſi Deo aduerſo iam eſſet exitio deuotus, horrore correptus eſt, quo centies cuncti mortales fuiſſent abſorpti, ipſe autem mirifica ſpiritus virtute victor euaſit: Such an obiect being offered to Chriſts view, as though, God being ſet againſt him, he were appointed to deſtruction he was with horror affrighted, which was able an hundred times to haue ſwallowed vp all mortall creatures; but he by the wonderfull power of his ſpirit eſcaped with victory, Caluin. in Matth.27.v.46.

To the like effect, that excellent learned man, hath maintained the truth in the name of the whole Church of England, in his anſwere to the Rhemiſts: What diſhonour was it to our Sauiour Chriſt, to ſuffer that, which was neceſſary for our redemption, namely, that torment of hell, which we had deſerued, and which the iuſtice of God required, that he ſhould endure for our redemption: or rather, what is more to the honour of Chriſt, then that he vouchſafed to deſcend into hell for vs, and to abide that bitter paine, which we had deſerued to ſuffer eternally: and what may rather be called hell, then the anguiſh of ſoule, which he ſuffered, when he being yet God, complained, that hee was forſaken of God? Fulk. in 2. Act. ſect.11. This is deliuered by this worthy diuine, as the opinion of the Catholike Church of God, and the true teachers thereof: as may appeare in the title to the booke. Therefore accordingly wee confidently affirme, that Chriſt in ſoule deſcended into hell for vs, and endured the bitter paines and torments thereof, which we had deſerued and ſhould otherwiſe haue payed, if he in his owne perſon had not ſatisfied for them.

Certaine conditions to bee conſidered in Chriſts ſoule-ſufferings.

Fifthly, we will remoue certaine doubts which may here ariſe, becauſe it is obiected, that the ſoule ſufferings of Chriſt ſhould haue diſſolued the vnion of his perſon, Feuar. p.474. lin.21.

1. As the ſenſe of damnation and ſeparation in Dauid, when hee complained hee was forſaken of God, Pſal.22.1. And caſt out of his ſight, Pſalme 31.22. did not extinguiſh grace or faith in Dauid; much leſſe did they in Chriſt. 2. And we doe diſtinguiſh in Chriſt, Inter ſenſum naturæ & fidei notitiam, Betweene the preſent ſenſe of his nature, and the knowledge of faith: as that learned interpreter ſaith, Caluin. in. 27. Matth. v.46 That Chriſts faith and hope failed not, though in his naturall ſenſe and feeling he was perplexed. 3. His ſoule tormented with ſorrow, was no more ſeparated from the Godhead, then his body yeelding to death.

Pſal.31.22.

2. Deeper in deſpaire and ſinfull aſſaultes we confeſſe others to haue been then Chriſt : but ſuch a ſpectacle of all fearefull and vnſpeakable torments in body and ſoule endured without ſinne neuer was, as Chriſt : we muſt not ſo extenuate Chriſts ſufferings, which were a ſatisfaction for all mens ſinnes, as to make other mens temptations equall to them. This were a great iniurie to his paſſion, and notable vnthankfulnes in vs to make ſo light account of them.

Chriſt ſuffered more in ſoule, then by way of compaſſion onely.

Heb.2.18.

3. Firſt, Chriſt ſuffered that hell, which we ſhould, which was more then the paines of hell metaphorically taken. 2. And hell paines were due vnto vs other wiſe, then by contemplation of them; we ſhould not haue knowne or pittied them in others, but felt them in our ſelues : and Chriſt by way of pitty and piety prayed for them that crucified him: Father forgiue them, they know not what they doe, Luk.23.34. But when he complaineth, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken mee, here is more then contemplation, or commiſeration of others; for he ſpeaketh of himſelfe, & from his own feeling. Thirdly, if 1. Chriſt ſuſtained Gods wrath, as you ſay, then he felt the aſſaults of ſorrow in his ſoule, there was more then an offer or attempt onely: 2. When Sathan tempted Chriſt in the deſert, he did not conquer him by repelling him at the firſt, but by fighting with him, and entring into the liſtes as it were with him, he ſubdued him. 3. And the Apoſtle ſaith, He ſuffered when he was tempted, Hebr.2.18. He was not onely aſſaulted with temptation in his ſoule, but encountred with ; not tempted onely but ſuffered: yet we grant, that ſome temptations Chriſt wreſtled with, and repelled at the firſt, not faſtening at all vpon him, ſuch as were accompanied with ſinne: Cum deſperatione luctatus eſt : As hee wreſtled with deſperation, but was not ouercome : Caluin. in Matth.27.v.46. But ſuch ſorrowes of ſoule which hee ſuſtained without ſinne, he was not onely aſſaulted, but for the time poſſeſſed with, as the Prophet ſaith : he was, Vir dolorum, a man of ſorrowes, and had experience of our infirmities : and as the Septuagint do well tranſlate it: ἄνθρωπος ἐν πληγῇ ὤν, καὶ εἰδὼς φέρειν : A man ſet in the plague, and knowing how to beare, &c. Chriſt then had in his ſoule actuall experience of our ſorrowes. 5. Neither do we ſay that Chriſt ſuffered the ſame paines, which the damned doe, for they ſuffer them not without ſinne and deſperation, nor in the ſame manner, for they ſuffer them eternally : but with theſe two exceptions of iniquitie and eternitie, we ſay that Chriſt endured more in his ſoule, then euer any ſoule in the world did or could doe.

Isay 63.3.

Sixthly, though we miſlike not Caluines ſenſe, where he ſaith, Chriſtus diros in anima cruciatus damnati & perditi hominis pertulit: Chriſt ſuffered in his ſoule the horrible torments of a damned and forlorne man: *Inſtitut.lib.2.c.16.ſect.*10. yet we will forbeare to vſe this phraſe, becauſe the Scripture ſo ſpeaketh not, and leaſt the weake might take offence at it : yet the Scripture vſeth words equiualent vnto them, for what elſe, is derelictus, deſertus, forſaken, then damnatus, perditus, for the time to be forlorne and as damned ? but this we confidently deliuer as agreeable to the Scriptures, that ſinne and perpetuitie ſet apart, Chriſt more ſharpely and vehemently felt Gods wrath then any man euer did or ſhall, yea, we except not the very reprobate and damned. Firſt, becauſe the Scripture ſaith, that God laid vpon him the ſinnes of vs all, Iſay 53.6. then all the ſinnes of the world concurring together, muſt needs bring with them a greater horror, then the ſinnes of one man. Secondly, Chriſt was more able to beare this burthen, then all men in the world, though their ſtrength were ioyned together : ſo that he alone was able to treade the winepreſſe of Gods wrath, Iſay 63.3. Thirdly, Chriſts hell ſorrowes were meritorious, and fully ſatisfactory for our euerlaſting puniſhment, and therefore in greatnes were to exceede all other, as being anſwerable to Gods iuſtice, but no mans ſufferings beſide haue merite or ſatisfaction.

Seuenthly, that it may appeare, how Chriſt ſuſtained the wrath of God, felt the ſorrowes of hell, and was as forſaken of God, yet without ſinne ; there are foure conſiderations neceſſary to be remembred, as the Fathers haue obſerued them.

1. Chriſt is now ſet before vs as a meere man, his diuine power repreſſing and withdrawing it ſelfe: as Ambroſe ſaith, when Chriſt had cried out, that he was forſaken, Euidens manifeſtatio conteſtantis Dei ſeceſſionem diuinitatis & corporis : An euident manifeſtation of God conteſting the departure of the diuinitie and his bodie : *In Luk.*22. he meaneth not a ſeparation of the vnion of the Godhead, but an intermiſſion onely of the operation.

Certaine conditions to bee conſidered in Chriſts ſoule-ſuffrings.

2. Chriſt muſt be conſidered, as now hauing taken our perſon vpon him, who in himſelfe was holy, harmeleſſe, innocent, yet now for vs preſented vnto God as a pledge for our ſinnes: as Ambroſe ſaith, Pro me & in me doluit, qui pro ſe nihil habuit, quod doleret : For me and in me he ſorrowed, that had nothing to ſorrow for in himſelfe, lib.2.de fid.c.3.

3. We muſt make a difference betweene the aſſurance of faith in Chriſt, and the ſenſe of his humane nature : who at the ſame time when he complained in his humane ſenſe, yet was firme and ſtable in faith: as may appeare in that he ſaid, My God, my God; which ſheweth his confidence: So Ambroſe againe ſaith, Senſu hominis dixi animam meam eſſe turbatam ; ſenſu hominis eſuriui; ſenſu hominis rogaui: In the humane ſenſe and feeling I ſaid, My ſoule is troubled, in humane ſenſe I was hungrie, I prayed, &c. de incarnat.c.7.

4. We muſt not meaſure Chriſts actions according to our owne affections : to imagine, that becauſe we in temptation are diſtempered, that Chriſt therefore in this agonie could not be ſetled : as Auguſtine fitly vſeth this reſemblance : Quemadmodum ſolet accidere, vt quando tranſeuntes nubes per obſcura noctis intuemur, earum caligine ſic acies noſtra turbetur, vt in contrarium nobis ſydera currere

videantur, &c. Like as it falleth out, when we ſee the clowdes gliding in the ayre in a darke night, they doe obſcure our ſight, that we thinke the ſtarres goe a contrary way, de diuerſ. ſerm. 15. So the darknes of our mindes, and corruption of our nature is the cauſe, that we iudge amiſſe of Chriſts holy actions, meaſuring them by our ſelues. Theſe foreſaid reſpects then being obſerued, and Chriſt in this manner conſidered, there can follow no inconuenientie, in attributing to Chriſts ſoule the ſorrowes of hell. But I haue ſtayed too long in the explanation of our opinion: the arguments now follow.

Pſal. 18.5.
Pſal. 86.3.

Argum. 1. Pſal. 18.5. The ſorrowes of hel, circumdederunt me, did compaſſe me round about. Pſal. 88.3. My ſoule is filled with euils, and my life draweth neere to hell. Pſal. 86.13. Thou haſt deliuered my ſoule from the neathermoſt hell. In theſe places the Prophet ſpeaketh in the perſon of Chriſt: and the Papiſts doe admit, that the Hebrue ſheol, is here taken for hel properly and not for the graue: therefore against them and in their ſenſe theſe places do ſtrongly conclude for the hel-ſorrowes or ſufferings of Chriſt.

Pſal. 124.7.

1. For the further ſtrengthening of this argument, firſt we do not ſay, that Chriſts ſoule was oppreſſed or vanquiſhed of hell, but yet it was more then attempted or aſſaulted onely, for hee ſaith, thou haſt deliuered my ſoule from hell, Pſal. 86.13. therefore before he was in the ſorrowes of hell, out of the which he was deliuered, as the Prophet ſaith, Pſal. 124.7. Our ſoule is eſcaped as a bird out of the ſnare of the fouler: the ſnare is broken and we are deliuered. If the bird had not been in the ſnare, what neede the ſnare to be broken to deliuer the bird?

Pſal. 18.43.50.

2. Firſt, in theſe Pſalmes there are euident propheſies of Chriſt: as Pſal. 18.43. Thou haſt made me head of the heathen, a people whom I haue not knowne ſhall ſerue me: verſ. 50. Great deliuerances hee giueth to the King, and ſheweth mercy to Dauid and his ſeede for euer: this euerlaſting ſeed of Dauid is to be referred to Chriſt. Secondly, but becauſe it may be obiected, that although ſome places are vnderſtood of Chriſt, yet it followeth not that theſe ſhould: I anſwere, that the very place alleaged, Pſal. 88.3. is by the Fathers applied to Chriſt: as that in the next verſe, Liber inter mortuos, free among the dead, Auguſtine applieth to Chriſt, epiſt. 99. And S. Ambr. Liber inter mortuos, qui mortis vincula neſciuit, non captus ab inferis, ſed qui operatus ſit in inferno: Free among the dead, which knew not the bands of death, he was not captiued of hell, but wrought in hell, lib. 3. de fid. c. 3. He knew not the bands of death, to be held of them, or ſo to be bound as his vertue be hindred. I alleage this teſtimony onely to ſhew, that the Fathers vnderſtoode this text of Chriſt, not medling here with their opinion of Chriſts locall deſcent to deliuer the Patriarkes.

Pſal. 88.3.15.

3. Firſt, neither can this place be vnderſtood of the locall place of hell: for he ſaith, Pſal. 88.3. My ſoule is filled with euils: verſ. 15. Thy terrors haue I ſuffered from my youth: but the Fathers, that hold a locall deſcent of Chriſts ſoule into hell, do cleere him of all ſuffring there: as Auguſtine writeth thus, Eos dolores ipſum ſoluiſſe credimus, quibus ipſe teneri non poterat, ſed quibus alij tenebantur: We beleeue he looſed thoſe ſorrowes, with the which he could not be held, but wherewith others were held, epiſt. 99. Wherefore if neither the locall place of hell be here vnderſtood, nor yet the materiall graue, which is no place for the ſoule; it remaineth, that this pit, graue, darknes, depth, hell (for all theſe names it hath) be referred to the ſorrowes of Chriſts ſoule: as Ambroſe againe expoundeth the third verſe: Anima mea repleta malis; anima mea vtique, non diuinitas: My ſoule is filled with euils, my ſoule, not my diuinitie, lib. 3. de fid. c. 3.

Act. 2.24.

Argum. 2. Another place, which I vrge againſt the Papiſts, is Act. 2.24. where wee reade thus, as their vulgar Latine text tranſlateth: Solutis doloribus inferni: The ſorrowes of hell being looſed, for it was impoſſible he ſhould be holden of it: the Greeke hath the ſorrowes of death, but I preſſe them with their owne and onely authentike tranſlation, the ſorrowes of hell being looſed: but Chriſt felt not the ſorrowes of hell after death: Ergo, he felt them in his ſoule, while he liued.

Anſw. Firſt, Chriſt looſed the ſorrowes of hell, not becauſe he was held or caught of them, but leſt he might be caught: like as the ſnare of the hunter may be ſaid to be broke, leſt it might catch or entangle, not becauſe it hath already taken.

2.

2. Chriſt is ſaid to haue looſed the ſorrowes or bands of hell, wherewith others were held, and not himſelfe, Bellarm. lib. 4. de Chriſti anima c. 8. reſp. ad argum. 5.

Matth. 7.8.

Contra. 1. The firſt expoſition is contrary to the text that followeth, verſ. 27. Thou wilt not leaue my ſoule in hell: If Chriſts ſoule be not left or forſaken in hell, yet it followeth it was in hell. 2. The word, κρατεῖσθαι, to be holden, betokeneth properly, a faſt or ſure holding, as Matth. 7.8. Yee hold faſt the tradition of the elders: ſo that the meaning is not, it was impoſſible he ſhould be caught, but not held, bound or detained. 3. The phraſe of the Scripture is otherwiſe, Pſal. 124.7. Our ſoule is eſcaped as a bird out of the ſnare of the fouler, the ſnare is broken and we are deliuered; the eſcaping is out of the ſnare, as the bird is firſt taken, and then deliuered. 4. Origene alſo ſo expoundeth vpon theſe words, Cantic. 2.10. Ariſe my loue: Surrexi à mortuis fractis mortis iannis & inferni vinculis diſſolutis: I roſe from the dead the gates of death being broken, and the bands of hell looſed, &c. The bands of hell were looſed, as the gates or barres of death broken: but the gates of death were broken, not before Chriſt entred into death, but after he had yeelded to death: ſo then were the bands of hell looſed after they had faſtened vpon Chriſt.

2. 1. The ſecond expoſition is contrary to the very words: it was impoſſible for him (he ſaith not for other) but for himſelfe to bee held of them. 2. In the next verſe, 25. the Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe ſaying, Dauid ſaith concerning him, &c. he ſpeaketh of Chriſts perſon, and not of any other.

3. The Apoſtle giueth this as a reaſon, why God raiſed vp Chriſt, looſing the ſorrowes or bands of death: for him then the bands were broken, who was raiſed vp againe: but Chriſt was onely raiſed vp againe.

Argum. 3. That the whole puniſhment of bodie and ſoule which was due vnto vs, Chriſt our redeemer was in generall to ſuffer and ſatisfie for in his owne perſon. But the torments and terrors of hell, and the vehement ſenſe of Gods wrath, are that puniſhment which did belong to the ſoule: Ergo, Chriſt did ſuffer the terrors of hell.

Anſw. If Chriſt ſuffered the whole puniſhment of hell due vnto vs: then darknes, Feuard. p. 444. conf. 2. lin. 10. damnation, malediction, deſperation. 446. conf. 5. ſecond death and deſtruction for euer, p. 453. lin. 3.

How Chriſt bare our whole puniſhment both of ſoule and body.

Contra. 1. The whole puniſhment implieth the whole kinde or ſubſtance of the puniſhment, not all the circumſtances, and the very ſame manner: the whole puniſhment then is the whole kinde of puniſhment, that is in bodie and ſoule which Chriſt ought to haue ſuffered, though not in the ſame manner and circumſtance: neither for the place of hell, locally, nor for the time eternally, nor for the manner, ſinfully. The firſt of theſe excludeth vtter darknes, which is an inſeparable adiunct of the place of hell; the ſecond freeth Chriſt from eternall damnation; the third doth cleere him from deſperation, which cannot be committed without ſinne. 2. And in making theſe exceptions do wee otherwiſe

Heb.2.17.

ſpeake, then the Scripture doth, which ſaith, Heb. 2. 17. It became him in all things to bee made like his brethren: will you here take the Apoſtle ſhort, and inferre, he was therefore like vs in ſinne? therefore giue vs leaue to expound our meaning, as the Apoſtle doth, Heb. 4. 15. He was in all things tempted in like ſort, yet without ſinne. So then like as, when we ſay, Chriſt tooke our whole nature, which is a true Catholike ſaying, and vſed of the Fathers: Totum hominem deus ille ſuſcepit: God tooke whole man, Fulgent. ad Thraſimund. lib. 3. we meane not, that he tooke our ſinfull nature: ſo in this ſaying, Chriſt was to ſuffer our whole puniſhment, al ſuch puniſhments as cannot be ſuffered without ſinne, as deſperation, finall reprobation, are manifeſtly excepted.

Act.2.24.

3. If you will allow vs this exception of ſinne in Chriſts ſatisfactorie ſacrifice, I truſt you will diſpenſe alſo with the perpetuitie, which includeth an impoſſibilitie: for the Apoſtle ſaith, it was impoſſible, that Chriſt ſhould be held of the ſorrowes of death, Act. 2. 24. and the reaſon is, becauſe Chriſt was without ſinne, and therefore could not for euer be held in deaths bondage: If then where there is no iniquitie, there can be of puniſhment no perpetuitie, you muſt alſo yeeld vs this ſecond exception of perpetuitie, becauſe of Chriſts holines and pietie.

Matth.25.41.
Luk.16.26.
2.Pet.2.4.
Epheſ.2.2.

4. For the third exception of the place of hell: firſt, the holines of Chriſts perſon doth exempt him, becauſe it is prepared onely for the deuill and his angels, and the euerlaſtingly accurſed, Matth. 25. 41. Secondly, if Chriſt by his innocencie is freed from the perpetuitie, ſo is he alſo from the very place and obſcuritie, becauſe they that are there neuer come from thence, Luk. 16. 26. Thirdly, it is alſo a queſtion worth the asking, where the ſite of hell ſhould be; whether the place make hell, or rather the wrath and abſence of God doth not cauſe it; and whether the diuels be not in hell? S. Peter ſaith, they are caſt downe to hell, and kept in chaines of darknes, 2. Pet. 2. 4. and S. Paul calleth the deuill, the prince that ruleth in the ayre, Epheſ. 2. 2. the ayre then is the diuels hell. So Bernard ſaith, In pœnam ſuam diabolus locum in aëre iſto medium inter cœlum & terram ſortitus eſt, &c. The diuell for his puniſhment is allotted to haue his place in the ayre in the midſt betweene heauen and earth, in Cantic. ſerm. 54.

Of the place of hell.
Where the deuils hell is.

And Auguſtine before him thus expoundeth S. Peter: Mali angeli, &c. quamuis pœnaliter hunc infernum i. caliginoſum aërem tanquam carcerem acceperint: The euill angels are reſerued in chaynes of darknes for the day of iudgement, as S. Peter ſaith, though euen now they haue their priſon, penally, this infernall and darke ayre, de natur. bon. cap. 33. Yet neither Auguſtine, nor we do thinke, but that the diuels are appointed to a further puniſhment at the day of iudgement: ſo the Apoſtle expreſſeth 2. Pet. 2. 4. So the deuill himſelfe feareth and expecteth: Luk. 8. 31. The ſpirits deſire, not to be ſent into the deepe. Thus much Auguſtine confeſſeth: Diabolo mors alterius generis præparatur in æterno igne tartari: Another kinde of death is prepared for the diuell in euerlaſting fire, lib. 4. de Trinitat. c. 13. Yet thus much we haue gained, that, ſeeing this ayre is the diuels preſent hell, hell may bee in this world: and therefore it is neither impoſſible, nor improbable, that the croſſe was Chriſts hell.

2.Pet.2.4.
Luk.8.31.

Coloſſ.2.11.

5. Like as Chriſt then is ſaid to beare all our iniquities, Iſay 53. 11. (all is not there expreſſed: but who doubteth, that he bare all and not onely ſome) ſo is he truly ſaid to beare all our puniſhment: but he bare our ſinnes without ſinne, neither was he to beare them for euer, nor to carrie them downe to hell with him; in all which manner wee ſhould haue borne them, but to faſten them onely to his croſſe, Coloſſ. 2. 11. ſo giue vs leaue to ſay, he did beare all our puniſhment, though not as we ſhould haue borne it, that is, ſinfully, eternally and helliſhly; but to finiſh all vpon the croſſe, and in ſuch ſort, as Gods iuſtice was ſatisfied, his perſon not diſgraced, nor his holines defiled, and yet mans ſaluation fully perfited.

6. And leſt this phraſe of ſpeech, that Chriſt ſuffered whatſoeuer wee ſhould haue ſuffered, might be thought onely now to be taken vp; Saint Hierome long before hath ſo ſpoken and written: Factus eſt pro nobis maledictum, vt nos liberaret à maledicto, quod enim nos pro noſtris debebamus ſceleribus ſuſtinere, ille pro nobis paſſus eſt, &c. He was made a curſe for vs, to deliuer vs from the curſe: for that, which we ought to haue ſuſtained for our ſinnes, he ſuffered for vs, in Iſai. cap. 53. And it followeth:

Ex quo perſpicuum eſt ſicut corpus flagellatum,&c.ita animam verè doluiſſe: By the which it is manifeſt, as his body was whipped, ſo his ſoule was truly grieued, &c. But it will be here ſaid vnto vs, that Hierome ſaith not, Chriſt ſuffered all, that was due to our ſinnes.

*Anſw.*1. As though an indefinite propoſition is not for the moſt part equiualent to an vniuerſall, though it haue not the note of vniuerſalitie: as when we ſay, men are mortall, it is euident, that wee meane all: but it is not ſo properly ſaid, men are good, wiſe, &c. becauſe theſe ſpeeches are particular, all are not ſo. Yea the Scripture ſo vſeth to ſpeake, Ioh.1.29. Behold the Lambe of God that taketh away the ſinne of the world; I hope all ſinne be vnderſtood: for there is no ſinne for the which Chriſt died not: Mark 16.16. He that beleeueth,&c. I hope the meaning be, omnis qui credit, euery one that beleeueth, though the note be not expreſſed.

2. Saint Hieromes meaning is plaine, that Chriſt ſuffered all: for he was made that by ſuffring, which we are deliuered from, as his firſt wordes do import; but we are deliuered from the curſe both of body and ſoule: Ergo. 2. He ſheweth in the latter part of the ſentence, that he meaneth all both the whipping of the bodie, and true griefe of the ſoule: and ſo I hope this teſtimony is cleered.

Hilary is yet more euident: The onely begotten Sonne of God to finiſh the ſacrament of his death, conſummaſſe ſe omne humanarum genus paſſionum teſtatur, doth teſtifie, that hee had finiſhed euery kind of humane paſſions, when he ſaid, It is finiſhed: lib.10.de Trinitate. And Tho. Aquine confeſſeth, as he is cited before, that Chriſt, ſecundum genus, in generall ſuffered euery humane paſſion. 3. pag.qu.46.art.52.

*Argum.*4. The Prophet Iſay ſaith, he carried our ſorrowes, Iſay.53.4. that is, all: Ergo, he did beare the ſorrowes of hell.

Iſay 53.4.

For the further explication of our meaning, and ſtrengthening of this argument: though the Prophet doe not put to the ſigne all, yet Matthew doth, that beſt knew the Prophets meaning, Mat.18.16. He healed all that were ſicke, that it might be fulfilled, &c. he tooke our infirmities and bare our ſickneſſes: If Chriſt fulfilled the Prophet in healing all ſickneſſes, then the Prophet ſpake of all. And againe, Matth.4.23. He healed euery diſeaſe, and euery ſickneſſe: not ſome, but all.

Matth.18.16.

Matth.4.23.

2. Chriſt indeede bare theſe ſorrowes for vs, but they were his ſorrowes, not ours; as the words following do well declare, he was wounded,&c. were not the wounds of his body his? ſo were the ſorrowes. 2. If they were our ſorrowes, not his, then our owne ſorrowes redeeme vs, which I thinke is no good doctrine. 3. Ambroſe in deede ſaith, Doles domine Ieſu non tua ſed mea vulnera; quid mirum quod pro omnibus doluit, qui pro vno fleuit,&c. Thou lamenteſt Lord Ieſus not thy wounds, but mine (that is ſinnes) no maruaile if he grieued for all, that wept for one, lib.2.de fid.c.3. The occaſion of Chriſts griefe was the wound of our ſinnes: but the griefe was his owne: as the griefe was his owne when he ſorrowed for Iudas, ſo was it, when he grieued for all. And againe in the ſame place he ſaith, Mæror eius mærorem noſtrum aboleuit: His griefe did aboliſh ours: He maketh a manifeſt difference betweene Chriſts griefe and ours: therefore Chriſts griefe in propertie was not ours, &c.

3. Whereas Fenardentius by theſe ſorrowes vnderſtandeth onely the infirmities of the body, as hunger, thirſt, wearines, &c. p.415 lin.1. I anſwere, 1. The Septuagint tranſlate, τὰς ἁμαρτίας ἡμῶν φέρει. He bare our ſinnes. 2. If he refuſe the Septuagint, let him take Hieromes expoſition, Si ille qui peccatum non fecit pro nobis doluit & peccata noſtra portauit,&c. If he, which did no ſinne, grieued for vs, and bare our ſinnes, how much more we, lib.2.aduer.Pelag. 3. If Hierome content him not, Peters interpretation cannot bee refuſed, who following the Septuagint in the ſame words and ſenſe ſaith, He bare our ſinnes in his bodie, &c. 1.Pet.2.24. But he will ſay, what is this to the purpoſe? Yes very much, for if the Apoſtle interpreteth ſinnes, where the Prophet ſaith ſorrowes, what are they elſe but the ſorrowes of Chriſts ſoule for our ſinnes? 4. If by ſorrowes wee vnderſtand infirmities, I hope the infirmities of the ſoule ſhall haue place heere, as well as the infirmities of our bodies, ſeeing Chriſt tooke all our infirmities, as Matthew expoundeth; and ſo ſaith Fulgentius, Animam rationalem habens, quicquid fuit infirmitatis animæ ſine peccato ſuſcepit & pertulit: Chriſt hauing a reaſonable ſoule, did take alſo and beare without ſinne, whatſoeuer infirmitie of the ſoule: lib.3. ad Thraſimund. If then he bare all the infirmities of the ſoule, then the internall ſorrow and ſoule ſuffrings for ſinne.

*Argum.*5. I will adde ſome teſtimonies of the fathers: Origene maketh Chriſts hell vpon the croſſe: Vnumquodque peccatorum, ob quæ Chriſtus iturus ad inferos, portæ ſunt inferorum: Euery ſinne, for the which Chriſt was to goe into hell, are the gates of hell, Tract.1.in Matth. But I truſt no man will ſay that Chriſt after his death went into hell, to ſuffer for our ſinnes. Againe, Ille dominabatur in nobis donec daretur ei pro nobis redemptio anima Ieſu, decepto videlicet. & exiſtimanti, quaſi poſſet dominari eius, & non videnti, quod non poterit ſuſtinere in tenendo eam tormentis; data autem anima eius in redemptionem pro multis non manſit apud eum, cui fuerat data; propter hoc dicit propheta, quoniam non derelinques animam meam in inferno: The diuell had rule ouer vs, till the ſoule of Chriſt was giuen him for our redemption; he being deceiued, and thinking that he might alſo beare rule ouer it, and not perceiuing, that he could not endure to hold it long in torment: but Chriſts ſoule being giuen to be a redemption for many, did not ſtay with him, to whom it was giuen; and for this the Prophet ſaith, Thou wilt not leaue my ſoule in hell, Tract.12.in Matth. Heere Origene affirmeth, that Chriſts ſoule was tormented in hell, which was not after his death: Ergo, it was while he liued: the reſt that Origene ſaith, that Chriſts ſoule was giuen as a price of our redemption to the deuill, and by him him tormented, ſeemeth ſomewhat hard, and to that end I alleage him not, but onely to proue the hell torments of Chriſts ſoule, which is here affirmed.

S. Ambroſe thus witneſſeth: Quæ erat cauſa incarnationis, niſi vt caro, quæ peccauerat, per ſe redimeretur: quod peccauerat igitur, hoc redemptum eſt: non eſt ergo immolata diuinitas Chriſti, quia non peccauerat diuinitas Chriſti: hoc obtulit Chriſtus quod induit; induit autem, quod non habuit: What other cauſe was there of Chriſts incarnation, but that the fleſh, which had ſinned, might be redeemed by it ſelfe; therefore Chriſts deitie was not ſacrificed, becauſe it had not ſinned: Chriſt offered that which he tooke, he tooke that which he had not: de incarnat. c.6. Though he giue an inſtance onely of the fleſh, yet his reaſons doe alſo hold for the ſoule. Firſt, that which was to be redeemed, was redeemed by it ſelfe, the fleſh by the fleſh: Ergo, the ſoule by the ſoule. Secondly, whatſoeuer had ſinned, was to be ſacrificed: Ergo, the ſoule alſo which properly ſinneth, the diuine nature onely is excepted. Thirdly, whatſoeuer Chriſt tooke that he had not before, was offered: but he tooke a ſoule as well as fleſh. Ergo.

Bernard; Non derelinques animam meam in inferno: infernus quidem & carcer animæ, rea conſcientia eſt: Thou ſhalt not leaue my ſoule in hell: the hell and priſon of the ſoule is a guilty conſcience, in aſſumpt. ſerm.4. He maketh the griefe of Chriſts ſoule his hell. Againe, Sunt gradus in aſcendendo & deſcendendo; in deſcendendo primus gradus à cœlo vſque ad carnem, ſecundus ad crucem, tertius ad mortem: ecce quouſque deſcendit, nunquid amplius potuit? poterat iam certè dicere rex noſter, quid vltra debui facere & non feci? There are degrees in aſcending, and deſcending: the firſt degree in Chriſts deſcending was from heauen to the fleſh; the ſecond to the croſſe, the third to death: behold how farre he deſcended, could he deſcend any more? ſurely our King might haue ſayd, what could I haue done more, and I did it not? ſerm. paru. 18. He maketh the whole deſcenſion of Chriſt to be finiſhed before and in his death: therfore in his ſentence Chriſts ſoule deſcended into hel vpon the croſſe, or not at all.

But it will be obiected againe out of Bernard where he ſaith: Semel ille deſcendit (i. ad inferos) non ſanguis, ſed anima, cum corpus penderet exanime ſuper terram: He once deſcended to hell, not his blood, but his ſoule, while his body did hang without life vpon the earth, Cantic. 75. I anſwere: firſt, this word (exanime) doth not alwayes ſignifie dead, but aſtonied, or halfe dead, as we ſay, exanimatus metu, aſtonied or halfe dead for feare: ſo Chriſts body might be ſaid to be as dead, in that long ſilence vpon the croſſe, his body being as exanimated with the grieuous tortures of his ſoule: I had rather ſo take Bernard, then to make him ſpeake contraries. Secondly, hee ſaith againe, Qui traduxit aereas poteſtates & affixit cruci ſuæ, claret quia ſuper infernales officinas poteſtatem accepit: Which did traduce the ayrie powers and faſtened them to his croſſe, it is cleere that he receiued power ouer the infernall regions, &c. in die aſcenſ. ſerm.2. If Chriſt then did triumph and conquer the infernall powers and regions vpon the croſſe, what other cauſe can be aſſigned of his deſcenſion, vnleſſe wee will ſay, he went thither to deliuer the Patriarkes? but Auguſtine thinketh, that Abraham and the Prophets were in ſinu Abrahæ, in the boſome of Abraham, and not in hell, epiſt.99. Thirdly, and if it be granted that Bernard being carried away with the error of that time, to thinke that Chriſt went downe locally to hel to deliuer the Patriarkes, yet he may very wel hold the ſpirituall deſcending of Chriſt to hell by the ſuffrings of his ſoule, as I haue ſhewed: ſeeing the local deſcenſiõ was not to ſuffer, but to conquer.

To theſe teſtimonies may be adioyned thoſe which are diſperſedly alleaged before: as firſt, of Ambroſe. argum.1. artic.4. ſecondly, Origene argum.2. artic.1. thirdly, Fulgentius argum.3. artic.1. fourthly, Auguſt. argum.3. artic.4. fifthly, Hierome argum.3. artic.6. ſixthly, Ambroſ. argum.4. artic.2. Athanaſius alſo is an euident witneſſe for vs: who hauing made mention of Adams double puniſhment, and the ſentence giuen againſt his bodie, that it ſhould returne to duſt, and againſt his ſoule, thou ſhalt dye the death, proceedeth further thus: Ac proinde opus fuit illo ipſo iudice, qui hoc decretum tulerat, vt ipſe per ſe ſententiam ſolueret ſub ſpecie condemnati, incondemnatum ſe, ſyncerumque à peccatis oſtendens, vt hominem deo reconciliaret, hominemque totum in libertatem vindicaret: And therefore it was needfull that the ſame Iudge, which made the decree, ſhould by himſelfe diſſolue the ſentence vnder the ſhew of a man condemned, ſhewing himſelfe vncondemned and ſincere from ſinne, to reconcile man vnto God, and reſtore whole man to libertie, de incarnat. Chriſti. If Chriſt, ſub ſpecie condemnati, vnder the ſhew of a man condemned, muſt reſtore whole man to libertie, and diſſolue the whole ſentence giuen both againſt mans body and ſoule: but he could not preſent himſelfe as a man condemned in ſoule, in the locall place of hell, (for there he ſuffered not) it followeth then that he ſhewed himſelfe as a man condemned in ſoule vpon the croſſe.

Obiect. It will be anſwered, that Athanaſius ſaith not he was condemned in ſoule, and that we do wreſt him againſt his minde: ſeeing he manifeſtly affirmeth Chriſts locall deſcenſion.

*Contr.*1. That muſt be Athanaſius meaning, that hee was as a man condemned in ſoule: for there he was as a man for vs condemned, where in himſelfe he was vncondemned and free from ſinne: but Chriſts innocencie was in his ſoule, therefore there was the condemnation chiefly.

2. He by himſelfe looſed the ſentence to reſtore whole man; as by himſelfe he looſed the ſentence for the body by being condemned and ſuffring in the body; ſo by himſelfe to looſe the ſentence againſt the ſoule, he muſt ſuffer alſo and be as condemned in ſoule.

3. We grant Athanaſius doth hold the locall deſcenſion otherwhere; that nothing hindreth the ſenſe here: for that deſcenſion was not to ſuffer, but to conquer: but this deſcenſion and ſuffering is of a man in ſhew condemned: for like as the bodie of Chriſt ſuffered vpon the croſſe, yet afterward triumphed ouer death in the reſurrection; ſo he might thinke, that Chriſts ſoule though ſuffering vpon the croſſe, might notwithſtanding afterward make a more full conqueſt of hell.

Beſide the teſtimonies of Origene, Athanaſius, Fulgentius of the South Church before alleaged; may be ioyned that ſaying of Chryſoſtome the great Patriarke of the Greeke Church: Chriſtus plurib. in morte vexatus dolorib, quam omnes tragœdi ſcribere poſſunt, expirauit: Chriſt being vexed with more ſorrowes, then all the tragedians in the world can expreſſe, gaue vp the ghoſt: homil.31.in Matth, but what are thoſe ſorrowes that no tongue or penne can expreſſe, other then the deepe griefe of the ſoule, and as it were the ſorrowes of a kinde of hell for the time in the minde.

French confeſſ. artic. 14. That hee might ſuffer both in ſoule and bodie, and be made like vnto vs in all things, &c. The ſorrowes then of hell, which take hold many times of the righteous, Chriſt was not free from, that he might be like vnto his members. Harm.ſect.6. pag 99.

Cuſanus their Cardinall doubteth not to ſay, Illam pœnam ſenſus conformem damnatis in inferno pati voluit: That paine of ſenſe conformable vnto the damned in hell, he would ſuffer to the glory of his father, &c. Excitat. lib.10. ex ſermon. qui per ſpiritum ſanctum ſeipſum obtulit, &c.

The concluſion of all is this, that ſeeing the Prophet Dauid before ſpake of Chriſt, that the ſorrowes of hell did compaſſe him about, argum.1. and that Chriſt looſed the ſorrowes of hell, wherewith hee could not be held, argum.2. and it was neceſſarie that Chriſt ſhould ſuſtaine the whole puniſhment of bodie and ſoule due vnto vs, argum.3. ſeeing alſo Chriſt bare all our ſorrowes, argum.4. and the Fathers herein together witneſſe with the Scriptures: it remaineth that Chriſt entred in ſoule into hell, and ſuſtained the very ſorrowes thereof for vs vpon his croſſe, in ſuch manner as is before declared.

AN APPENDIX CONCERNING THE FIRE OF hell, whether it be onely materiall and corporall.

THE OBIECTIONS ANSWERED.

BEllarmine vſeth this as a ſpeciall argument, againſt Chriſts ſuffering in ſoule the ſorrowes of hell, because that hell is not in this life, neither can the flames thereof be kindled here, Bellarm. lib.4. c.8. argum.5. And againe, he taketh vpon him to prooue that hell fire is corporall; and ſo hee imagineth his Purgatorie fire to be, which onely worketh vpon ſoules, lib.2. de Purgat. c.11. So that he ſeemeth thus to thinke, that hell fire, which ſhall torment mens ſoules and bodies, is corporall onely and materiall: and that the ſenſe of Gods wrath is no part of the ſorrowes of hell, lib.4. de Chriſt. anim. c.8. argum.5. Artic. 18.

Obiect.1. Hee reaſoneth thus from the Scripture: In euery place the puniſhment of the wicked is ſaid to be fire, and that the Lord ſhall iudge them, and puniſh them with fire, which muſt be taken properly, where no abſurditie followeth: and therefore the fire of hell is corporall, lib. 2. de Purgat. c.11.

Anſwere. 1. Some places of Scripture doe deſcribe the manner of Gods comming to iudgement, which ſhall be with fire conſuming the heauens, the earth and the mountaines: which we denie not, but that the world at the day of iudgement being a materiall ſubſtance, ſhall be conſumed with materiall and corporall fire: as Hierome ſaith, Igneus dominus totus adueniet: The Lord ſhall come all fierie, de ſanct. diuin. legis. And Ambroſe: Teneamus hic poſiti humilitatem, vt cum vnuſquiſq; noſtrum venerit ad iudicium dei, ad illos ignes, quos tranſituri ſumus, dicat, vide humilitatem meam: Let vs hold faſt humilitie, that when euery one commeth to iudgement, to thoſe fires, which we muſt paſſe thorow, hee may ſay, behold my humilitie, ſerm.20. in Pſal.119. All this we grant: but it followeth not, becauſe the fire of that day ſhall be materiall, burning but for a time, and conſuming things corporall, that therefore hell fire tormenting ſpirits as well as bodies, ſhall onely be corporall.

2. Other places make mention of hell fire, but whether it is corporall or ſpirituall they ſhew not: the mentioning of brimſtone together with fire, Reuel. 21.8. doth no more prooue it to be corporall, then, where the Prophet deſcribing hell ſaith, the burning thereof is fire and much wood, Iſay. 30.33. we may imagine that hell fire is kindled with wood. 2. The Prophet ſheweth in the ſame place what this brimſtone is, The breath of the Lord like a riuer of brimſtone doth kindle it. Reuel.21.8. Iſay 30.33.

3. We grant a corporal and material fire in hell, but not only, neither are all hell flames corporal, but as Bernard ſaith: In carne cruciabuntur per ignem, in ſpiritu per conſcientia vermem: They ſhall in their fleſh be tormented with fire, in the ſpirit by the worme of conſcience, Meditat. c.4.

Obiect.2. Here diuers Fathers alſo are alleaged to prooue the fire of hell to be corporall and materiall; as Gregorie, Auguſtine: Bellarm. lib.2. de purg. cap.11.

Anſw. Firſt, Gregorie in flat termes calleth it ignem incorporeum, incorporall fire: but it is anſwered that Gregorie is falſified: incorporeum, incorporall, being put for corporeum, corporall: for he ſaith afterward, that this fire doth corporaliter vrere, burne corporally. And Bellarmine doth further anſwere, that it is, mendum ſcriptorum, the fault of the writer, lib.2. de purgat. c.11.

Contra. 1. If Bellarmines copie, and our copies, and conſequently all bookes of Gregorie, haue incorporall, how is it like to be the writer or Printers fault? it is ſtrange that there ſhould be no true corrected copie of Gregorie. 2. We may rather ſay, that corporaliter comming after, is crept in for incorporaliter, incorporally. 3. If Bellarmine alleage Gregorie for purgatorie fire, how can it ſerue for hell fire, ſeeing the one they imagine to be temporall, the other is eternall? 4. Admitting Gregorie to be corrupted, yet he is farre from affirming all hell fire and flames to be corporall.

3. 1. Auguſtine, as he is alleaged by Bellarmine, lib. 21. de ciuitat. dei cap. 10. doth ſhew indeede how incorporall ſpirits after a meruailous manner may be afflicted with the paine of corporall fire: but he is farre from thinking, that there is no paine or fire in hell but materiall and corporall; nay hee concludeth the contrarie, and thinketh it to be more likely, that the bodie ſhould be afflicted with fire, the ſoule with a kinde of ſorrow as it were a worme, &c. ſo that by no meane any man thinke the bodies in hell to be ſuch, that they ſhall not be touched with the paine of fire. 2. Auguſtine himſelfe thinketh elſewhere, that the ſoules of Lazarus and the rich man, were not in loco corporali, in any corporall place, de Geneſ. lib. 8. c. 5. and that the fire wherein the rich man was tormented, was no more corporall, then his tongue or finger, lib. 21. de ciuit. dei, c. 10. and he reſolutely concludeth, Subſtantiam inferorum non eſſe corporalem, ſed ſpiritualem: That the ſubſtance of hell is not corporall, but ſpirituall, lib. 12. de Geneſ. c. 32. And hee proueth, that there is an hell by this experiment, becauſe many being terrified in their dreames, metuunt ne rurſus dormiant, are afraid to ſleepe againe, ibid. But this ſheweth hell to be rather a ſpirituall paine, then a corporall. Wherefore Auguſtine is farre from limiting hell to a corporall fire or paine, making the chiefe part and ſubſtance thereof ſpirituall.

THE QVESTION CONFIRMED.

THAT THE FLAMES OF HELL FIRE ARE not onely materiall and corporall

THat as the bodies of the damned and reprobate ſhall be tormented in hell; ſo it is not vnlike but they ſhall burne euen with a materiall fire vnquenchable, it is very probable: though it be not fit that we ſhould too curiouſly ſearch into theſe ſecrets, which the faithfull ſhall neuer haue experience of. Auguſtine ſaith well: Melius eſt dubitare de occultis, quam litigare de incertis: It is better to doubt of vnknowne things, than to ſtriue for vncertaine, de Geneſ. ad liter. lib. 8. c. 5. It is ſufficient for vs to know that hell fire is prepared for the diuell and his angels, and the damned companie. And I doubt not to ſay with Ruffinus: Siquis negat diabolum æternis ignibus mancipandum, partem cum ipſo æterni ignis accipiet, vt ſentiat, quod negauit: If any man denie that the diuell ſhall be ſubiected to euerlaſting fire, he ſhall receiue part of euerlaſting fire with him; that he may feele that, which he denied, &c. But what manner of fire this ſhall be, it is not ſo euident: yet we are moſt ſure, that as hell paine ſhall worke vpon the ſoule, ſo there is a ſpirituall fire and torment, wherewith the ſame ſhall be afflicted: which if it be proued, then one of the chiefeſt arguments faileth them, which is vrged againſt the hell ſorrowes, which Chriſt felt in his ſoule vpon the croſſe.

Iam. 3. 6. Argum. 1. S. Iames ſaith, that the tongue is a fire, which ſetteth on fire the courſe of nature, and is inflamed or ſet on fire of hell, Iam. 3. 6. Such as is the fire, ſuch is the flame, the euilneſſe of the tongue is a firebrand, or flame of hell fire; it is not a corporall or materiall flame; no more is that fire of hell, wherewith it is inflamed.

Mark. 9. 44. Againe, our Sauiour thus deſcribeth hell: Where the worme dyeth not, and the fire goeth not out, Mark. 9. 44. Beſide fire, there is the perpetuall gnawing worme of the conſcience. So Bernard well expoundeth: Duo mala ſunt vermis & ignis, altero roditur conſcientia, altero concremantur corpora: There are two euils, the worme and fire; with the one the conſcience is bitten; with the other, bodies are burned, par. ſerm. 16.

Luk. 16. 23, 24. Argum. 2. The rich man is ſaid to be in hell torments, and to be tormented in the flame, Luke. 16. 23. 24. but this was no materiall fire, no more then his finger was materiall, or the drop of water, which he craued: ſo much Auguſtine confeſſeth, lib. 21. de ciuitat. dei, c. 10. And that this was a ſtorie done, and not a ſimilitude borrowed, S. Chryſoſtome teſtifieth: Parabolæ ſunt, vbi exemplum ponitur, tacentur nomina: Thoſe be parables, when the example is ſet downe, and the names concealed, &c. But in this place, ſi verus eſt Abraham, verus eſt Lazarus, as there is a true Abraham; ſo there is a true Lazarus, &c. Hence then I conclude, that there is a fire of hell, not materiall.

Math. 25. 41. Argum. 3. The euerlaſting fire of hell is prepared for the diuell and his angels, Matth. 25. 41. The diuels are ſpirits, and cannot properly be tormented with corporall fire: Ergo, their proper puniſhment is ſpirituall.

Though it be granted, as Auguſtine ſeemeth to inſinuate, lib. 21. de ciuitat. cap. 10. that incorporall ſpirits may be afflicted with corporall fire, after a miraculous and extraordinarie manner, as the ſoule is afflicted with the torments of the bodie, yet the force of this argument holdeth: for we ſpeake of the proper puniſhment of diuels: 1. The ſoule though it ſuffer by way of ſympathie with the bodie, yet it hath a proper griefe beſide of it owne. 2. Diuels can haue no ſuch affliction by way of ſympathie, ſeeing they haue no bodies to ſuffer by. 3. That God is able by his omnipotent power to make ſpirits

Whether the diuels ſhall be tormented with materiall fire in hell.

ſeele the paine of fire, wee grant; but becauſe hee can doe it, therefore he doth and will, is but a ſilly kinde of reaſoning. 4. It is as vſuall for the body to ſuffer with and from the ſoule, as for the ſoule to be affected and afflicted with the body: the care and griefe of the ſoule doth ſooner weaken the body, then the ſickneſſe of the bodie doth diſtreſſe the ſoule: may not we as well reaſon from Gods power; that he is able to make a corporall ſubſtance, to feele an incorporall paine, and therfore euen the bodies of the damned ſhall be tormented with an incorporall fire in hell? 5. But that the diuels haue a ſpirituall puniſhment beſide the corporall fire of hell (to yeeld ſo much for this time) it is thus euident; becauſe the diuels are now in torment. S. Peter ſaith, they are in hell, and kept in chaines of darknes, 2. Pet. 2. 4. in hell they cannot be without paine: but in fire they are not; for they are Princes of the ayre, as S. Paul ſaith, Epheſ. 2. 2. there is their place; as Bernard ſaith, Elige tibi locum in aëre non ad ſedendum, ſed ad volandum, vt qui tentaſti concutere ſtatum æternitatis, pœnam ſentias propriæ fluctuationis: Chuſe thy place in the ayre, not to ſit, but to flit, that as thou diddeſt try to ſhake eternitie, ſo thou maiſt be now puniſhed with mutabilitie: de 12. gradib. The diuell then is in the ayre, and now in torment: but in the ayre is no fire, Ergo, he is in torment without materiall fire. Origen ſpeaketh to the ſame purpoſe, cited vpon another occaſion before: that when the diuell ſeeth a man giuen to ſtudie the word of God, in hoc eorum flamma eſt, in iſto vruntur incendio, here is their flame, and in this fire are they ſcorched, &c. The fire of enuie then and malice, without any materiall flame, doth ſcorch the euill ſpirits.

2. Pet. 2. 4.

I omit here Origens reaſons againſt the corporall fire of hell: firſt, becauſe hell is full of darkneſſe, and the propertie of corporall fire is to lighten or illuminate: but ſo ſhall not that fire in hell: Neſcio, ſi ille ignis, qui in futuro ſeculo incendit, habeat & aliquid, quod illuminet: I cannot tell (ſaith he) whether that fire, which ſhall burne in the next world, haue any thing to giue light with, Hom. 13. Exod. Secondly, he vſeth a better reaſon then this, grounded vpon S. Pauls words, The things which are ſeene are temporall, 2. Cor. 4. 18. Neceſſe eſt ergo ſi viſibilis ſit ignis vt ſit temporalis: It is neceſſarie therefore, if fire be viſible, that it be but temporall, Tract. 34. in Matth. So he concludeth hell fire to be inuiſible; if it be inuiſible, then alſo incorporall: for it is the propertie of corporall fire to be viſible. But I vrge not Origens reaſons, I only produce them: neither doe rely vpon his iudgement in this point, ſeeing Hierome noteth this to be one of Origens errors: Gehennæ tormenta non ponit in ſupplicijs, ſed in conſcientia peccatorum: He doth not place hell torments in puniſhment, but in the conſcience of ſinne, Hieron. ad Auitum. But neither of them is to be excluded.

2. Cor. 4. 18.

I conclude then with S. Ambroſe: Ibi erit ſtridor dentium, ſtridor dentium prodit indignantis affectum, eò quòd ſerò vnumcunque pœniteat, &c. There ſhall be gnaſhing of teeth, gnaſhing of teeth bewrayeth an angrie affection, becauſe they repent too late, &c. in 12. Luc. Likewiſe Auguſtine, who reckoneth theſe among the puniſhments of hell: Vermis conſcientiæ, ignitæ lachrymæ, — dolor ſine remedio — abſentia Chriſti, quæ ſola — omnibus pœnis intolerabilior: The worme of conſcience, fierie teares, remedileſſe griefe, the abſence of Chriſt more intolerable, then all griefe beſide, de triplic. habitat. 1. 2. Ergo, in hell, beſide corporall fire, there is ſpirituall torment: So alſo Theophylact vnderſtandeth the worme of a biting and gnawing conſcience: in Marc. 9. v. 44. ſo alſo our moderne interpreters doe expound that place, as Bucer, and Muſculus, in Matth. 8. v. 12. quos conſcientia mali cruciat, the conſcience of ſinne doth torment them: ſo auncient Ephrem, conſcientiæ ſuæ verberib. cruciati, tormented with the beating of their owne conſcience: lib. de extrem. iudic. c. 4: and againe, whereas the Goſpell maketh mention of vtter darkneſſe, hee inferreth vndoubtedly, ſunt etiam & interiores, there are alſo inner darkneſſe.

Thomas agreeth, that this worme is ſpirituall, which he interpreteth to be remorſus conſcientiæ, the biting of the conſcience: ſupplem. 3. par. q. 97. ar. 2. ſo alſo Lyranus annot. Marc. 9. 44.

THE FIFTH PART, WHETHER CHRIST APpeared before Gods tribunall, as guiltie of our ſinnes.

FEuardentius, that cauilling Frier, hauing nothing to obiect againſt this poſition of Caluin; Oportuit Chriſtum ſiſti ad dei tribunal, vt cunctorum noſtrorum maleficiorum reum: It was behoouefull that Chriſt ſhould ſtand before Gods tribunall as guiltie of all our ſinnes, Inſtitut. lib. 2. c. 16. ſer. 12. He inuerteth, or rather peruerteth the queſtion, and propoundeth to himſelfe to proue, that Chriſt was not reipſa peccator, was not indeede a ſinner: confuting that, which no man affirmeth.

Artic. 19.

Argum. Iohn 1. 29. Chriſt is the lambe of God that taketh away the ſinne of the world: Ergo, he is no ſinner; for then he could not take away ſinne. Heb. 4. 15. he was in all things tempted in like ſort, yet without ſinne. Heb. 7. 26. ſuch an high Prieſt it became vs to haue, which is holy, harmeleſſe, vndefiled. Feuarden. p. 463.

Iohn. 1. 29.
Heb. 4. 15.
Heb. 7. 26.

To this end Bernard is alleaged: electe puer, &c. holy childe, what haſt thou committed worthie of ſo great confuſion? truely nothing, Ego homo perditus, totius perditionis tuæ cauſa extiti: I O man of perdition, was the cauſe of thy perdition, &c. ſerm. de paſſion. p. 465.

Anſw. Firſt, I anſwere the Frier, as Auguſtine did Petilian the Donatiſt, who impudently charged him with a cleane contrarie matter: Quemadmodum ſi mihi diceres, quod ego Petilianus ſum, non inuenirem, quomodo te refellerem, niſi aut iocantem riderem, aut vt inſanientem dolerem: hoc mihi nunc faciendum eſſe video, ſed quia te iocari non credo, vides quid reſtat : Like as if you ſhould ſay to me, that I am Petilian, I could not finde how to refute you, but either to laugh at your folly, or to grieue for your phrenſie; ſo I muſt doe at this time, but becauſe the Frier ieſteth not, but is in good earneſt, you know what remaineth : cont. Petilian. 2.38. Thus dealeth the Frier with Caluine, charging him with that hee neuer held, as if he ſhould ſay to him, that he was Fenardentius, not Caluine, Auguſtine would haue iudged this either to be fooliſhneſſe or madneſſe in him.

Iohn 14. 30.

2. I ſay with Hierom, Poſſum omnes propoſitionum riuulos vno veritatis ſole ſiccare, I can drie vp all thoſe allegations with the ſunne of truth : for wee confeſſe Chriſt to be the vnſpotted lambe, to haue beene tempted without ſinne, to be an holy and vndefiled Prieſt : farre be it from vs to thinke or ſpeak otherwiſe of Chriſt; hee himſelfe ſaith : The Prince of this world commeth and hath nought in me : Iohn 14.30. and we confeſſe with Auguſtine, Iſte eſt agnus qui in altari crucis hoſtia viua deo patri pro nobis in odorem ſuauitatis oblatus eſt : This is the lambe, which was offered on the altar of the croſſe a liuing ſacrifice vnto God his father for vs to be a ſauour of ſweetneſſe. ſerm. de tempor. 150. But all this being confeſſed and granted, that Chriſt in himſelfe was the vnſpotted and vndefiled lambe, it followeth not, but that for vs and in our perſon he taking vpon him our ſinnes, ſtood as guiltie thereof before God.

THE QVESTION RESOLVED.

CHriſt was in himſelfe moſt holy, moſt pure, moſt innocent, hereunto we moſt willingly ſubſcribe: yet notwithſtanding, he tooke vpon him the burthen of our ſinnes, and made our debt his owne, and ſo as our ſuretie preſented himſelfe as indebted for vs, and in our perſon guiltie of our ſinnes : this the Frier denieth, p.467. 10. But we proue it thus :

Eſay 53.11.

Argum. 1. The Prophet Eſay ſaith, He ſhall beare their iniquities, Eſay. 53.11. How otherwiſe could he beare them, but by laying them vpon himſelfe?

Anſw. By ſinne the Prophet vnderſtandeth the puniſhment for ſinne, which Chriſt vndertooke. p.467.10. Fenarden.

1.Pet.2.24.

Contra. 1. S. Peter otherwiſe expoundeth the Prophet, 1. Pet. 2.24. who in his bodie bare our ſinnes, that we being deliuered from ſinne ſhould liue in righteouſneſſe : as he ſaith we are deliuered from ſinne, ſo Chriſt bare our ſinnes, but we are deliuered not onely from the puniſhment of ſinne, but from ſinne it ſelfe to liue in righteouſneſſe, Ergo.

2. The Prophet alſo expoundeth himſelfe : God hath laid vpon him the iniquitie of vs all : verſ. 6. here iniquitie is taken for ſinne it ſelfe, as the fore-part of the verſe ſheweth, we like ſheepe are gone aſtray, &c. and then it followeth, he hath laid vpon him, &c. He ſpeaketh not of our ſmart, but of our fault, not of the terrors of our life, but the errors.

Pſal.69.5.

3. Thus Hierome alſo expoundeth the Prophet : vpon theſe words, Pſal. 69.5. My faults are not hid from thee : Hoc ex perſona Chriſti dicitur, ſi ille qui peccatum non fecit, pro nobis doluit & peccata noſtra portauit, &c. This is ſpoken in the perſon of Chriſt, if hee, which did no ſinne, grieued for vs, and did beare our ſinnes, how much more we? lib. 2. aduerſ. Pelagian. Here Hierome ſaith that Chriſt ſo bare our ſinnes, as he did no ſinne himſelfe, and in ſuch ſort, that he counteth our ſinnes his.

2.Cor.5.21.

Argum. 2. 2. Cor. 5.21. He made him to be ſinne for vs, that knew no ſinne, that we might be the righteouſneſſe of God in him : the Apoſtle ſaith directly, that Chriſt was made ſinne for vs, that is, our ſinne was imputed vnto him.

Anſwere. By ſinne here is vnderſtood the ſacrifice for ſinne, or the puniſhment for ſinne, Feuard. p.467. ſo Auguſtine and Ambroſe expound it.

Contra. 1. Ambroſe indeed ſo expoundeth, but he excludeth not the other ſenſe, but ſaith hee was offered both a ſacrifice for ſinne, and as a ſinner himſelfe : Chriſtus quoniam oblatus eſt pro peccatis, non immerito peccatum factus dicitur : Chriſt becauſe he was offered for ſinne, is ſaid not amiſſe to be made ſinne, &c. And againe, Chriſtus quaſi peccator occiſus eſt, vt peccatores iuſtificarentur apud deum : Chriſt was ſlaine as a ſinner, that ſinners might be iuſtified before God : in 2. Cor. c. 5.

How Chriſt is ſaide to bee made ſinne for vs.

2. The text it ſelfe giueth this ſenſe, that ſinne is to be taken properly, he is made ſinne, as he knew no ſinne : but he knew not ſinne properly, nor the puniſhment of ſinne : Ergo, he was made ſinne, not the puniſhment onely. Againe, as wee are made righteouſneſſe before God, ſo is he made ſinne; but his righteouſneſſe is verely imputed to vs : Ergo, our ſinnes are imputed to him : ſo then as we are ſinners in our ſelues, yet righteous by the imputation of his righteouſneſſe; ſo he being moſt righteous in himſelfe, is made ſinne by the imputation of our ſinnes.

Gal.3.13.

3. Hierome alſo thus expoundeth : Deus qui eum dicitur feciſſe maledictum, ipſe pro nobis eum fecit peccatum : God which is ſaid to haue made him a curſe for vs, hath made him alſo ſinne for vs : in 3. ad Galat. As the Apoſtle then ſaith, he was made a curſe for vs; Galat. 3.13. ſo was he made ſinne : but hee was not onely made a ſacrifice or a puniſhment for our curſe, but the curſe it ſelfe. Ergo, ſo was he made ſinne.

We doe not then ſay, that Chriſt was polluted, or defiled with our ſinnes, but onely reputed and taken for vs and in our perſon as a ſinner : and thus in charitie we are to vnderſtand them, that haue ſomwhat here exceeded in termes, and not ſo to wreſt and turne their words, as though they did meane to blemiſh Chriſt with the leaſt touch of ſinne : for as Hierome well ſaith : Quid prodeſt vulneribus tuis, ſi ego fuero vulneratus,&c. What ſhall it helpe your wounds to ſee others wounded? apolog.3.aduerſ. Ruffin. So it is no defence or excuſe of ones error, to ſee another to erre. I finde that in the councell of Baſil.ſeſſ.22. this aſſertion of one Auguſtine Archbiſhop of Nazareth was condemned, who ſhould ſay, Chriſtus quotidie peccat, & ex quo fuit Chriſtus quotidie peccauit: That Chriſt daily ſinneth, and euer ſince Chriſt was he ſinned daily: quam aſſertionem pia fidelium aures ſine horrore audire nequeunt: Which aſſertion godly eares cannot heare without trembling,&c. although this Archbiſhop might haue ſome tolerable ſenſe in this ſentence, yet becauſe the ſpeech was vnuſuall and offenſiue, it was miſliked: ſo, though Chriſt were in our perſon preſented vnto God as guiltie of our ſinnes by imputation, yet we wiſh that all hard and vnwonted phraſes of ſpeech be carefully auoided, as to ſay Chriſt was the greateſt adulterer, blaſphemer,&c. becauſe all the ſinne of the elect were laid vpon his backe: it is ſufficient for vs to ſay with the Apoſtle in generall, that Chriſt was made ſinne for vs, and not to deſcend to particulars.

Chriſt is not to be counted a ſinner in particular.

So then I conclude this place with that ſaying of S.Hierome: Ieſus filius Ioſedech quod interpretatur iuſtus domini, ſacerdos magnus deſcribitur veſtibus ſordidis, qui peccata noſtra non fecit, & tamen peccata noſtra portauit,&c. diciturq́; ei poſt pugnam & victoriam, auferte veſtem ſordidam ab eo; ecce abſtuli à te iniquitatem,&c. Ieſus the ſonne of Ioſedech, which is interpreted the Lords iuſt one, the high Prieſt is deſcribed with filthie garments, which did no ſinne, and yet bare our ſinne: and it is ſaid vnto him after the fight and victory, take away the filthie garments from him; behold I haue taken away thy ſin,&c. thus Hierome expoundeth that place, Zach.3.4. where we ſee that our ſinnes which were as the filthie garments put vpon Chriſt, are called his ſinnes.

Zachar. 3.4.

Likewiſe where the Prophet Iſay ſaith, Vidimus eum & non habuit ſpeciem & decorem: We ſaw him, and he had neither forme nor beautie, Eſay.53.2. thoſe words Auguſtine expoundeth thus: Ecce pulcher ille & ſpecioſus præ filijs hominum veniebat ad fœdam, vt faceret pulchram; dicam & hoc, quia in ſcripturis inuenio, ipſe fœdus factus eſt,&c. Behold he that was the faireſt among the ſonnes of men came to her that was filthie to make her faire: yea I will ſay further, becauſe I finde it in Scripture, he himſelfe was made filthie,&c. *in Pſal.*103.*part.*1. What elſe was this filthineſſe which Chriſt tooke, but the imputation of our ſinnes? for otherwiſe the iniuries which were offered to his bodie made him more beautifull, in that they commended his patience, inſomuch that the Centurion confeſſed he was a iuſt and a good man, Luke 23.50. And though the ſouldiers mocked him, when they cloathed him with purple, and ſet a crowne of thornes vpon his head, and bowed vnto him, yet they did ignorantly honour, whom they in their heart deſpiſed: and ſo Cyprian expoundeth that place, Cantic.3.11. Come forth ye daughters of Ieruſalem, and ſee the crowne wherewith his mother crowned him, of the crowne of thornes, which Ieruſalem Chriſts mother after the fleſh ſet vpon him. Cyprian in ſymbol. So likewiſe Saint Ambroſe: Illis licet defuit boni operis affectus, deo tamen ſuus non defuit honor, quia ſalutatur vt rex, coronatur vt victor, vt deus & dominus adoratur: Though they in ſo doing had no deuotion, yet God wanteth not his honour, for he is ſaluted as a King, crowned as a conqueror, worſhipped as God, in 22.Luc.

Iſay.53.2.

Cantic.3.11.

Laſtly, where the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom.8.3. De peccato damnauit peccatum in carne: Through ſinne he condemned ſinne in the fleſh; Origene thus interpreteth: Chriſtus ſine dubio pro peccato, quod ex nobis ſuſceperat quia peccata noſtra portauit, carnem incontaminatam obtulit hoſtiam: Chriſt out of doubt for ſinne, which he tooke of vs, becauſe he bare our ſinnes, did offer his fleſh an vndefiled ſacrifice. Hom.3. in Leuit. And againe. Per peccatum ſuum.i. carnem in crucem actam in qua noſtra peccata ſuſceperat, nos credentes liberauit à peccato: By his ſinne, that is his fleſh put to the croſſe, wherein hee had taken our ſinnes, hee deliuereth vs beleeuers from ſinne: Ibid. From this ſentence of Origene I gather, 1. that Chriſts fleſh is called ſinne, not becauſe it was a ſacrifice for ſinne, or was puniſhed for ſinne, but becauſe it tooke our ſinne. 2. that we are deliuered from that ſinne, which Chriſt tooke, which was not the puniſhment of ſinne, but ſinne indeede. 3. that notwithſtanding the bearing of our ſinnes in his fleſh, yet it was an vndefiled ſacrifice vnto God.

Rom.8.3.

Iuſtine Martyr thus alleageth the Prophet, the Lord deliuered him vp, ταῖς ἁμαρτίαις ἡμῶν, to our ſinnes: our ſinnes then were laid vpon him. Confeſſ.Scotic. Hee ſuffered for a ſeaſon the wrath of his Father, which ſinners had deſerued artic. of Chriſts death and paſſion: But Chriſt could not be ſubiect to feele the wrath of God due vnto our ſinnes, if he had not aſſumed our ſinnes.

Dialog. cum Tryphon.

Thomas ſaith, that the head and the members are vna perſona myſtica, one myſticall perſon, and ſo his ſatisfaction is the members, as his ſatisfaction is ours, ſo our ſinnes were made his: how elſe are the head and members one myſticall perſon.

Pag.3. q.48. art.2.

The ſumme of all this: that ſeeing all our iniquities were laid vpon Chriſt, *Argum.*1. Seeing hee was made ſinne for vs, *Argum.*2. He was clothed with our filthie rayments, *Argum.*3. Hee became deformed and without beautie for vs, *Argum.*4. He by his ſinne, that is his fleſh, wherein hee bare our ſinne condemned our ſinne, *Argum.*5. We doubt not to affirme and verely beleeue to our endleſſe comfort, that Chriſt was reputed before God, as guiltie of all our ſinnes, which hee willingly vndertooke, and ſo ſatisfied for them for euer.

THE SIXTH PART, WHETHER CHRIST WERE GRIEued and perplexed in his conſcience and ſoule for the ſinnes of the elect, which were laide vpon him.

THE OBIECTIONS ANSWERED.

FEuardentius cannot in any caſe endure this, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer or feele any thing in his conſcience: *Non in conſcientia ſua patiendo,p.*449.10.but onely admitteth an exceſſiue griefe in Chriſt, by way of contemplation in beholding the ſorrowes of the world: as hauing reckoned vp in particular a great number of ſinnes, he concludeth thus: Hæc & alia totius mundi ſcelera illico expianda ſibi animo amplectens, &c. tanta totius cordis animique pœnitudine dolet vt par ei nemo vnquam fuerit: theſe and other ſinnes of the whole world Chriſt beholding in his mind to be by him expiated, is grieued with ſuch penſiueneſſe of minde, as no man was euer like to him,p.455. So then by way of compaſſion and contemplation he doth acknowledge Chriſt to haue beene grieued and not otherwiſe.

Coloſſ.2.20.

Argum. Speciall reaſons and arguments for this their opinion they haue none, but ſuch as haue beene before obiected in generall againſt the ſuffring of Chriſt in ſoule: as Hebr.10.13. With one offring hath he conſecrated for euer, them that are ſanctified: Coloſſ.2.20. Pacifying by the blood of his croſſe,&c. Perfite reconciliation was wrought by the blood of his croſſe, and by one oblation, not many: Ergo, no ſuch griefe or perplexitie was neceſſarie, *Feuarden.p.*449.*conf.*10.

Heb.9.26.
19,20.

Anſw. 1. Though Chriſt ſuffered both in bodie and ſoule, yet was it but one ſacrifice, which the Apoſtle calleth the ſacrifice of himſelfe, Hebr.9.26. for the ſoule and bodie made but one Chriſt, yet this ſacrifice had diuers parts: as Hebr.10.10. it is called the offering of his bodie, verſ.19. his blood is mentioned, verſ.20. he ſpeaketh of his fleſh; will ye make as many ſacrifices, as were parts of Chriſts ſufferings?

Coloſſ.1.22.

2. If ye vrge blood ſtrictly, and aſcribe all vnto the blood and nothing elſe, how will ye reconcile the Apoſtle in the ſame place, Coloſſ.1.22. In the bodie of his fleſh thorough death: the blood is not his bodie, not his fleſh. 2. The Apoſtle aſcribeth our reconciliation to his death: but his blood was ſhed after his death, as may appeare, Iohn 19. Chriſt giueth vp the ghoſt, verſ.30. and afterward his ſide is pierced, verſ.34. This is well noted by S. Ambroſe, Poſt mortem percuſſus eſt non ante, vt exitus eius voluntarius non neceſſarius videretur: He was pierced after death, not before, that his death might ſeeme voluntarie, *In Luc.c.*22. Wherefore ye are forced againſt your wils, by one part of the croſſe to vnderſtand the reſt, vnleſſe you will exclude Chriſts blood. 3. If any man ſay, though Chriſts ſide were pierced after his death, yet he ſhed much blood before, when he was whipped, and pricked with thornes, and nayled to the croſſe.

Chriſts ſide pierced after his death.

1.Iohn 5.6.

Anſw. Though we extenuate not the leaſt drops of Chriſts blood: yet the blood which iſſued with water out of his ſide, is eſpecially obſerued by the Apoſtle, 1.Iohn 5.6. And Bernard ſaith, Perfoſſo latere in cruce veluti conſciſſo ſacco pecuniam quæ latebat in pretium noſtræ redemptionis effudit: His ſide being launced vpon the croſſe, as if the treaſure bagge had beene opened, the money was powred out, that payed our price, *in natal. Dom.ſerm.*2.4. And where the Apoſtle ſaith, Ieſus came by water and blood, 1.Iohn 5.6. if blood be ſtrictly vrged, then the water is excluded, which was alſo a neceſſary part of the ſacrifice: Chriſtus venit non in aqua ſolum, ſed in aqua & ſanguine: Moſes in aqua ſolum venit, vnde & nomen habet, ſed non redemit: Chriſt came not in water onely, but in water and blood; Moſes came in water onely, whereof he hath his name, but he redeemed vs not, Bernard. ibid.

The ſoule cōprehended vnder the word fleſh.

3. Some will ſay, we yeeld you that all Chriſts bodily ſufferings may figuratiuely be expreſſed by ſome one part or other, as by blood, fleſh, &c. but it were improper thereby to ſignifie the ſoule ſuffrings. Anſw. Yet it is not vnuſuall, by fleſh to vnderſtand the ſoule alſo, and ſo conſequently by the ſuffrings of the one to inſinuate the paſſions of the other: as Auguſtine ſheweth againſt the Apollinariſts, Videbit omnis caro,&c. All fleſh ſhall ſee the ſaluation of God: where fleſh is taken for the whole man, yea for the man regenerate, for carnall men cannot ſee the ſaluation of God: *lib.qu.*83.*qu.*80. And againe, ſeeing it is euident in Scripture, that Chriſt had anguiſh in ſoule, when he ſaith, My ſoule is heauie vnto death: they muſt comprehend this alſo vnder the blood of the croſſe, or elſe it is excluded: But Bernard for that excellently ſaith, Totum propter nos agebatur, vt non modo paſſio corporis, ſed cordis affectio pro nobis faceret: all was done for vs; that not only the paſſion of his body, but the affection of his heart ſhould make to our ſaluation, *in die S. Andreæ ſerm.*1.

Gal.6.4.

4. By the croſſe alſo of Chriſt, not the materiall tree onely, whereon he ſuffered, or the viſible torments which he endured, but the whole myſterie of our redemption, which by his chaſtiſements was puniſhed, is expreſſed: as S. Paul ſaith, he will not reioyce but in the croſſe of Chriſt, whereby he was crucified to the world, Galath.6.14. It was not the materiall croſſe, whereby Paul was crucified, but the ſpirituall force and efficacie of Chriſts ſacrifice: So in the ſame place verſ.12. he ſpeaketh of ſuffering perſecution for the croſſe of Chriſt, that is, the Goſpel and faith of Chriſt: So alſo Auguſtine taketh the croſſe: Nemo poteſt tranſire mare huius ſeculi, niſi cruce Chriſti portatus; No man can paſſe through the ſea of this world, vnleſſe he be borne vp by the croſſe of Chriſt, &c. and afterward he expoundeth himſelfe, Crede in crucifixum, & poteris peruenire; Beleeue in him, that was crucified, and thou maiſt goe through, tract.2. in Euangel. Ioan. Thus then I truſt it is euident; that neither the blood, nor the wood of Chriſts croſſe doe aboliſh or diminiſh the bleſſed ſufferings of Chriſt in his ſoule.

THE QVESTION CONFIRMED.

CHriſt in himſelfe being holy, innocent, vndefiled was touched with no conſcience of ſin; as Auguſtine well ſaith, Inter iudicem iuſtum, & conſcientiam tuam, noli timere niſi cauſam tuam: Betweene the Iuſt iudge and thy conſcience, feare nothing but thy cauſe, *in Pſal.*37. yet we doe beleeue to our great comfort, that as Chriſt in great compaſſion toward vs, did aſſume and appropriate our ſinnes to himſelfe, making them as it were his owne; ſo he alſo in his ſoule and conſcience did trauaile with exceeding griefe and ſorrow for our ſinnes, as for his owne.

*Argum.*1. The Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.2.17. It became him in all things to be made like vnto his bretheren; and Heb.4.15. He was tempted in like ſort, yet without ſinne: If Chriſt then had experience of all our tentations and ſorrowes, but without ſinne; then of the trouble alſo and perplexity of conſcience, which is in vs, but in him without ſinne: ſo Fulgentius ſaith; Rationalem animam habens, quicquid fuit infirmitatis anima ſine peccato ſuſcepit & pertulit, vt dum humana anima paſſiones in anima quam accepit, vinceret, noſtras quoq; animas ab infirmitatibus liberaret: Hauing a reaſonable ſoule, whatſoeuer infirmity of the ſoule without ſin he tooke & bare, that while he ouercame the paſſions of mans ſoule in his ſoule which he took, he might alſo deliuer our ſoules frō infirmities, *ad Thraſimund. lib.*3. Damaſcene to the like effect: τὰ πάθη ὑπέμεινεν τὴν κατ᾽ αὐτῶν νίκην βραβεύων: he endured our griefes, preparing for vs the victory ouer them, *de fid. orthodox. lib.*3.*c.*24. What aſſurance then ſhould wee haue, not to bee ſwallowed vp of griefe, when we are touched with conſcience of ſinne, but that Chriſt in himſelfe ouercame theſe our tentations? And ſeeing S. Peter ſaith, that he bare our ſinnes, 1.Pet.2.24. And the Prophet ſaith, that God laid vpon him the iniquities of vs all, Iſay.53.6. how could our ſinnes bee diuorced and ſeparated from their ſorrows? if Chriſt then truely bare our ſinnes, he ſuſtained allſo the greefe of conſcience for them, which is the inſeparable companion of our ſinnes. Therefore as Origen ſaith, Quoniam ſemel aſſumpſerat hominem, vtitur omnibus quæ ſunt in homine: Becauſe hee once tooke vpon him man, hee vſeth all, that is in man: *homil.*13. in Matth. and S. Ambroſe: Minus mihi contulerat, niſi meum ſuſcepiſſet affectum: ergo pro me doluit, qui nihil habuit, quod pro ſe doleret: ſuſcepit triſtitiam meam, vt mihi ſuam lætitiam largiretur, debuit dolorem ſuſcipere, vt vinceret triſtitiam, non excluderet: Hee had done little for me, if hee had not taken mine affection; therfore he was grieued for me, who had nothing to be grieued for in himſelfe; hee tooke my ſorrow, to giue me his ioy: he was to take my ſorrow to extenuate my griefe, not to exclude it: in 22. Luc. S. Ambroſe giueth three notable reaſons of our griefe in Chriſt: 1. becauſe if he had not taken all our affections, he had not done for vs what he could. 2. He tooke greefe to giue vs ioy, but ioy of conſcience he giueth vs: Ergo, hee had griefe of conſcience. 3. No ſorrow in vs is ouercome, which was excluded from Chriſt, therefore if he had not the contrition and trouble of ſpirit, we haue no hope to ſubdue it.

Heb.2.17.
Heb.4.15.
1.Pet.2.24.
Iſay.53.6.

*Argum.*2. That heauineſſe and griefe of ſoule, which Chriſt had vpon the croſſe, and before in his agonie; at other times he had not: for the ſame griefe would haue wrought the ſame effects, as to cauſe him to ſweat drops of blood, and to complaine of his forſaking: but Chriſt before did ſorrow in compaſſion and commiſeration, as when he wept ouer Ieruſalem: yea and Origen ſaith, that euen now our ſinnes are a greefe to Chriſt: Saluator meus luget etiam nunc peccata mea, ſaluator meus lætari non poteſt, dum ego in iniquitate permaneo: eſt tam diu in mœrore, donec ego perſiſto in errore: my Sauiour doth euen now mourne for my ſinne: my Sauiour cannot reioyce, while I of ſinne make choyce: he is in ſorrow, as long as I am in ſinne, *Hom.*7. in Leuitic. Which is agreeable to the ſaying of the Apoſtle, Grieue not the ſpirit, Epheſ.4.30. But Chriſts ſorrow vpon the croſſe, was not that wherewith he was touched before, and in ſome ſort ſince; Ergo, it was not a ſorrow onely in compaſſion or commiſeration.

Epheſ.4.30.

*Argum.*3. The Fathers are heere very plentifull, beſide theſe teſtimonies alleaged: Firſt, Hierome, Pſalm.69.5. Tu noſti inſipientiam, dominus & ſaluator noſter ſub perſona aſſumpti hominis loquitur: Lord thou knoweſt my fooliſhnes; our Lord and Sauiour ſpeaketh in the perſon of man, whom hee tooke. If Chriſt doe confeſſe our ſinnes as his owne, then his heart could not be without the griefe of them: as Auguſtine ſaith, Quot habes in corde compunctiones facinorum, tot habe illic punctiones confeſſionum: As many compunctions of ſinne as are in the heart, ſo many confeſſions there ſhould be. *in Pſalm.*74.

2. Ambroſe ſeemeth to make this the cauſe of Chriſts long ſilence vpon the croſſe: Illo ſilentio paſſionis ſuæ clamorem omnem in poſterum impiæ vocis aboleuit: By the ſilence of his croſſe he aboliſhed all clamors and complaints of the voyce of ſinners, *ſerm.*14. *in Pſalm.*119. As he in ſilence mourned for our ſinnes, and felt the burthen, ſo hath he ſtayed for euer the deſperate outcryes and complaints of his members for ther ſinnes.

3. Origen: Chriſtus ſacerdos eſt, qui comedit peccata populi: audi ſcripturam, deus noſter ignis conſumens: quid conſumit deus ignis, nunquid ligna aut ſtipulam? conſumit deus ignis humana peccata, ipſe peccata noſtra ſuſcepit, & in ſeipſo tanquam ignis ea comedit & abſumit: Chriſt is the prieſt, which doth eate the ſinnes of the people: heare the Scripture, our God is a conſuming fire: what doth God the fire con-

ſume wood, or ſtubble? God the fire doth conſume mens ſinnes; he tooke our ſinnes, and in himſelfe as a fire did deuoure and conſume them, Hom.5.in Leuitic.6. So Ambroſe againe ſaith, Chriſtus velut carbo ſecundum carnem exuſſit noſtra peccata: Chriſt was as that coale (taken from the Altar, Iſai.6.) which in his fleſh, burned, or conſumed our ſinnes, lib.1.de ſpirit.c.9. And what this inward fire is, the Prophet Dauid ſheweth, Pſal.39.3. My heart was hot within me, and while I muſed, the fire kindled. The inward griefe and trouble of ſoule in Chriſt was this fire, wherewith our ſinnes are conſumed.

Thus haue we the teſtimonies of Origene, Fulgentius of the Africane and South Church, Damaſcene of the Greeke, Hierome, Ambroſe of the Latine, for the inward griefe and trouble of Chriſt in his ſoule.

Harm. ſect.6. pag.108. The ſame is the confeſſion of ſome of the reformed Churches, Saxonic. artic.3. Chriſt deriued vnto himſelfe this true and exceeding great anger: but this great anger of God could not be felt in Chriſts ſoule without exceeding griefe and horror for the time.

3.p.q.46.art.6. Thomas ſaith, Doloris interioris cauſa, &c. That the cauſe of the inward griefe of Chriſt, was firſt the ſinnes of all mankinde which he aſcribed vnto himſelfe, as it is in the Pſalm.21.2. verba delictorum meorum, the words of my ſinnes: ſo alſo Lyranus vpon that place, he calleth the ſinnes of the people his, becauſe of the affinitie of the head and members.

If then our Sauiour Chriſt was tempted like vnto vs in all ſorts, ſinne onely excepted, arg.1. If together with our ſinne he bare the ſorrowes of ſinne, arg.2. If at other times he ſorrowed in compaſſion, and commiſeration, but vpon the croſſe more, arg.3. If the Fathers affirme, that Chriſt hath taken our ſorrow to giue vs ioy, that hee hath in himſelfe as a fire conſumed our ſinnes, arg.4. there remaineth no doubt, but that Chriſt verily in his ſoule was troubled and perplexed with ſorrow for our ſinnes.

THE SEVENTH PART, THAT CHRIST BY HIS death did fully ſatisfie the iuſtice of God, and appeaſed his wrath in paying the ranſome for our ſinnes, which he tooke vpon him, together with the puniſhment thereof, in which reſpect he is truly ſaid to haue dyed iuſtly, and as a debtor to the law of Gods iuſtice for vs.

THE OBIECTIONS ANSWERED.

Art.21. 1. OBiect.1. Ezech.18.20. The ſame ſoule that ſinneth, ſhall dye: from this place Bellarmine inferreth, Iniquum eſſe, &c. That it is vniuſt that one man ſhould be puniſhed for another, tom.3.p.152.d. Ergo, it was not iuſt that Chriſt, though our ſuretie, ſhould be put to death for vs.

2. 2. Chriſt dyed for vs of loue, and moſt willingly without conſtraint he laid downe his life for vs: No man taketh it away from me, Iohn.10. Feuard.p.427.lin.6. That which Chriſt then did of loue, he was not forced vnto by law.

3. 3. Chriſt muſt not be conſidered onely as a faithfull ſeruant, but as coequall vnto God, &c. ſuch an one was our Mediatour, Feuard.p.378.conf.3.lin.13.24. If Chriſt then as a ſeruant or ſuretie were bound by the law to dye, how could he be our Mediatour?

4. 4. Chriſts ſatisfaction, was pluſquam ſufficiens, more than ſufficient, Feuard.p.382.conf.3.lin.7. therefore he was not bound vnto it by law.

1. Anſw. 1. Where the debt is but of money, the ſuretie indeede, neither by Gods law nor mans, is compelled to giue life or ſoule: but where the debt is of bodie and ſoule, it cannot otherwiſe be payed in the law of iuſtice, but by giuing bodie and ſoule. 2. In ſome caſes by the law of God the ſuretie gaue life for life; as the Prophet ſheweth to Ahab by this parable: A man was taken in battell, and committed to another to keepe, vnder this condition, If he be loſt, thy life ſhall goe for his life, or elſe thou ſhalt pay a talent of ſiluer: a price of equall value to his life, that went away: but in the application of this parable, the Prophet leaueth out the talent, becauſe God cannot be waged with money, and ſaith vnto Ahab precisely, thy life ſhall goe for his life, 1.King.20.verſ.39.42. 1.King.20.39.

3. Firſt, as the Prophet ſaith, The ſoule that ſinneth, ſhall dye: ſo he ſaith, euery man ſhall beare his iniquitie: he may as well conclude, that Chriſt did not beare our ſinnes, as that hee was not puniſhed for vs in iuſtice. Secondly, as the wickedneſſe of the wicked ſhall be vpon him, ſo the righteouſnes of the righteous ſhall be vpon him: If he will conclude from hence, that our wickednes did not lye vpon Chriſt, hee muſt exclude the righteous alſo from the righteouſnes of Chriſt. I may ſay here with Hierome: De praeſenti compede vtcunque erue pedem: You muſt eft-ſoones deliuer your ſelfe of theſe doubts, & your feet from theſe fetters. Fourthly, yea, you will ſay, this is ſoone done; for it is not inferred from hence, that Chriſt did not beare our ſinnes and dye for the ſame, but not in iuſtice, as indebted, or bound vnto it. Rom.3.26. I anſwere, as it was iuſt with God to iuſtifie vs that are of the faith of Ieſus, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom.3.26. ſo is it iuſt that Chriſt ſhould be condemned for our ſinnes: it is as much of iuſtice, that our ſinnes imputed to him, ſhould cauſe his death, as for his righteouſnes imputed to vs to bring vs to life. So Origene ſaith, Chriſtus ſine dubio pro peccato, quod ex nobis ſuſceperat, quia peccata noſtra portauit — carnem incontaminatam obtulit hoſtiam: Chriſt out of doubt for ſinne, which he tooke of vs, becauſe hee bare our ſinnes, offered his fleſh an vndefiled ſacrifice, Hom.3.in Leuitic. If then the bearing of our ſinnes cauſed the ſacrifice of Chriſts fleſh, how was it not iuſt? if it were not iuſt, it was no cauſe.

2. Firſt, who doubteth but that both Gods loue and Chriſts loue vnſpeakeable appeareth in his death: as Auguſtine well ſaith; Angelus virga tetigit Petram & exijt ignis — ſic crux tetigit Chriſtum, & de Petra, quæ erat Chriſtus ignis exijt charitatis: The Angell touched the rocke with a rod, and fire came forth: Iud.13.19. ſo the croſſe touched Chriſt, and out of the rocke, which was Chriſt, the flame of charitie iſſued forth, *Ser.de temp.*108. but the argument followeth not, Chriſt died of loue, Ergo, not in iuſtice, for loue firſt cauſed him to ſubmit himſelfe to the law: and iuſtice to pay our debt. 2. Like as the ſuretie firſt of loue and good will to his neighbour ſtriketh hands for him, and giueth his word: but then his word being once paſt, he is bound by law to pay the debt, and he cannot ſhift it, Then he is taken with the words of his owne mouth, Prou.6.1.2. So Chriſt firſt of loue vndertooke for vs, but this office of loue being once vndertaken, it is now performed and executed of debt. 3. This may be further manifeſted by this inſtance: ſinne in our firſt parents was voluntarie, but now in their poſteritie it is neceſſarie: hee might haue not ſinned if he would, but hauing once ſinned, hee could not abſtaine though he would: he brought himſelfe and his poſteritie voluntarily into neceſſarie bondage: as S. Peter ſaith, Of whatſoeuer a man is ouercome, to the ſame he is in bondage, 2.Pet.2.19. So Auguſtine: Illi ſine peccato data eſt libera voluntas, & eam fecit ſeruire peccato, horum cum fuerat voluntas ſerua peccati, liberata eſt per illum, &c. To Adam was giuen free will, which he made the ſeruant of ſinne, but in vs our will being the ſeruant of ſinne is freed by him, that ſaid, if the Sonne make you free, then are you free in deed: *de corrept.grat.c.*12. We ſee then how that which in the election is voluntarie, is in the execution neceſſarie. 4. But a fitter example we cannot take, then from Chriſt himſelfe: for the firſt aſſuming of the humane nature to the Godhead was of grace; as Auguſtine ſaith: Quod Chriſtus eſt vnigenitus, æqualis patri, non eſt gratia, ſed natura, quod autem in vnitatem perſonæ vnigeniti aſſumptus eſt homo, gratia eſt, non natura confitente euangelio, & gratia Dei erat cum illo: That Chriſt is the onely begotten ſonne equall to his father, it is not grace but nature; but that man is taken into the vnitie of perſon of the onely begotten, it is grace, not nature, the Goſpel confeſſing, the grace of God was with him: Tract.in Ioan. 77. But though the aſſuming of the humane nature was of grace, yet the vnion of the diuine and humane nature is not by grace, as it was concluded, Concil.Conſtantin.5.c.4. Si quis dicit ſecundum gratiam factam vnitionem verbi ad hominem, anathema: If any man ſay that the vnion of the word with man, is of grace, let him be accurſed, &c. the firſt aſſumption of mans nature was of grace, but the coniunction is not of grace, but by vnion of perſon: the worſhip now giuen vnto the humanitie of Chriſt, is not giuen him of fauour and grace, but due vnto him becauſe of his perſon, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.1.6. when he bringeth in his firſt begotten ſonne into the world he ſaith, let all the Angels of God worſhip him. In like manner, Chriſts aſſuming vpon him to pay our debt was of grace and voluntarie, but now the performing thereof is of debt, and neceſſarie. So then as the exalting of the humane nature in Chriſt, was in the firſt ſuſception of benignitie, but now in the perſonall vnion and coniunction, is of dignitie: ſo in the humbling of himſelfe to dye for vs, hee firſt ſhewed his free beneuolence, and then ſubmitted himſelfe to iuſtice and patience.

How a thing at the firſt voluntarie, afterward is neceſſarie.

Prou.6.1.2.

2.Pet.2.19.

The vnion of the two natures in Chriſt not of grace, though the firſt aſſumption of the humane nature were of grace.

Heb.1.6.

3. 1. That one may be both a ſuretie and a mediator, the example of Iudah ſheweth: who firſt was a mediator to his father, to intreat him to let Beniamin goe with them, ſaying, ſend the boy with me, that we may riſe and goe, that we may liue and not die: Gen.43.8. then he ſaith, verſ.9. I will be ſuretie for him, of mine hand ſhalt thou require him.

Gen.43.8.

2. Who can be a more effectuall mediator, then he that hath payed the debt, of whoſe faithfulneſſe the creditor hath alreadie experience: as Paul to Philemon is a moſt efficient mediator for Oneſimus, becauſe he was a ſufficient ſuretie: If he hath hurt thee, or oweth thee ought, put it vpon mine accounts, I Paul haue written with mine owne hand, I will recompence thee: Philem.verſ.18. Then the Apoſtle boldly maketh his requeſt, verſ.20. yea brother let me obtaine this pleaſure of thee in the Lord. So the mediation of Chriſt is not empaired by his ſuretieſhip, but grounded vpon it, his propitiation for our ſinnes is the ſtrength of his aduocation: We haue an aduocate with the father, and he is the reconciliation for our ſinnes.

Philem.18.

3. Though other ſureties could not be mediators, it is otherwiſe with Chriſt, who is both God and man: as man, he is a ſuretie and ſuffered for vs; as God and man he is our mediator, and ſufficeth for vs: his ſuffering and ſatisfaction doth onely concerne his manhood: the Godhead did not ſatisfie, but was ſatisfied: therefore as he is a ſufferer and ſatisfactor for vs, ſo he is not properly a mediator: to the which office both the nature of his humanitie, and power of his diuinitie is required: as Bernard well ſaith; ſicut mediator, &c. as our mediator hath ioyned together in one perſon his humanitie and diuinitie; ſo euery one of his workes muſt of neceſſitie appertaine to one or other nature, &c. Ad hanc ſcilicet miſeria, ad illam pertinet potentia: quicquid ergo miſeria paſſus eſt. ex homine contraxit; quicquid potenter operatus eſt, à patre habuit: To his humane nature belongeth his miſerie; to his diuine, his power and dignitie: what he ſuffered in miſerie, he had of man; what he wrought powerfully, he receiued of his father: ſerm.de verb.ſapient.

giue meaſure? 2. Chriſt in reſpect of the efficacie, 1. of his croſſe, and 2. dignitie of his perſon, and 3. innocencie of nature, paied more then the law required: For 1. he only did not redeeme vs, but hath endued vs with righteouſnes, and ſo as the Apoſtle ſaith, grace ὑπερεπερίσσευσεν hath ſuperabounded, Rom. 5.20. 2. Neither could the law haue required the ſonne of God to haue ſuffered for vs: and therefore as the Apoſtle ſaith, Herein appeared the loue of God toward vs, becauſe he ſent his onely begotten ſonne, 1. Iohn. 4.9. And he was not indebted any thing to the law in reſpect of his owne innocencie: for as S. Peter ſaith, he did not ſinne, neither was there any guile found in his mouth: and ſo Auguſtine ſaith, Venit ille ſine debito, quia ſine vllo peccato,— & quæ nō rapuerat exoluens nos à ſempiterno debito miſericorditer liberauit: He came without debt, becauſe without ſinne, and paying that hee neuer tooke mercifully hath freed vs from our euerlaſting debt, de diuerſ. ſer. 8. Wherefore in reſpect of the manner and qualitie of Chriſts ſuffrings, he paid more then was owing, but for the ſubſtance of the debt, which was the whole puniſhment of bodie and ſoule, hee paied the ſame which the law required. And if Chriſts ſatisfaction were more then ſufficient; if hee ſuffered more then was requiſite: with what face can the Frier denie that he ſuffered not in ſoule, which was neceſſarie to our redemption: There cannot be an exceeding where any thing is wanting.

Rom. 5.20.

1. Iohn 4.9.

And concerning the fathers which may be obiected, I anſwere, that they doe obſerue diuers ends and vſes of Chriſts death, and alleage ſundrie cauſes thereof: as Auguſtine ſheweth theſe, 1. Gods loue appeareth. 2. the priuiledge of humane fleſh, ſeeing our nature is coupled with the diuinitie. 3. the grace of God without our merits, 4. we learne humilitie and obedience by Chriſts death. 5. and the reward of obedience, lib. 13. de trinitat. c. 17. And againe, Auguſtine further writeth thus in effect of this matter, &c. God could haue armed an Angell againſt the diuell: but it was meet that Chriſt ſhould vndergoe this buſines, 1. leaſt iniurie might be offered to God, if man ſhould be redeemed by another, then by whom he was created. 2. ſeeing Sathan did make himſelfe a God in earth: It behoоued him to come, which ſhould worthily be worſhipped of euery creature. 3. The iniury was offered to the ſecond perſon in the trinitie: For Satan next to God the father would be worſhipped: ex vtroq; mixtim. q. 113.

Cyprian allſo rendereth another reaſon: Sine hoc holocauſto poterat deus tantum condonaſſe peccatum, ſed venia facilitas laxaret habenas peccatis effrænibus, quæ etiam vix Chriſti cohibent paſſiones: God without this holocauſt could haue pardoned ſo great ſinne, but the facilitie or eaſineſſe of pardon would haue giuen libertie to the raynes of ſinne, which Chriſts paſſions doe ſcarcely reſtraine: ſerm. de paſſion. Theſe fathers thus ayming and geſſing at the cauſes of Chriſts death, denie not, but it was neceſſary for Chriſt to die to pay our debt, and conſequently that it was iuſt ſo to be: as Auguſtine before ſaith: non alium oportuit venire: it behoоued him and none other to come ex vtroq; mixtim. qu. 113. And againe he ſaith to this effect: though God might haue taken man otherwhere, then from Adams ſtock to be the mediator: liberatū per eū oportuit qui non erat in crimine, quamuis eſſet ex genere: Yet man ought to be deliuered by him, which was of the poſteritie, though not in the ſame iniquitie. de trinit. lib. 13. c. 17. whence commeth this oportet, it ought to be, or why muſt Adam be deliuered by Adams ſeed, but that iuſtice ſo required, that man ſhould ſuffer for mans offence?

Obiect. But it may be thus further obiected: If Chriſt dyed according to the iuſtice of the law, then the Iewes, together with Pilate and the high Prieſts, did but that which was iuſt; and ſo ſhould bee freed from the guilt of Chriſts blood.

Anſ. 1. Auguſtine doth very well reſolue this queſtion: Facta eſt traditio à patre, facta eſt à filio, facta eſt à Iuda; vna res facta eſt: ſed quæ res diſcernit, &c? quia hoc fecit filius & pater in charitate, Iudas in proditione: Chriſt was deliuered by his father, by himſelfe, by Iudas: there is one act: how are they diſcerned? becauſe the father and ſonne did this in charitie, Iudas in treacherie: in Epiſtol. 1. Ioann. tractat. 7.

Likewiſe Origen to the ſame effect: Deus tradidit Chriſtum propter miſericordiam in genus humanum, &c. Iudas propter auaritiam; ſacerdotes propter inuidiam, diabolus propter timorem: God deliuered Chriſt in mercie to man, Iudas of couetouſnes, the Prieſts for enuie, the diuell for feare, Tract. 35. in Matth. Wherefore though Chriſt were deliuered vp by the determinate counſell of God, and in reſpect thereof his death was iuſt and profitable: yet the inſtruments for the execution being malicious are not excuſable, but their act againſt Chriſt was moſt vniuſt and damnable.

How Chriſt was deliuered vp by the determinate counſell of God.

2. The Iewes are ſo farre from excuſe, that euen Pilate, who ſeemed to haue ſome reuerence of Chriſts perſon, and openly waſhed his hands, was not innocent. There is greater queſtion made of Pilats wife, which ſuffered many things in her dreame of Chriſt, and acknowledged Chriſt to be a iuſt man, and ſent word to Pilate to haue nothing to doe with him, Matth. 27.19. Some doe thinke, that the diuell, being in a great doubt what to doe, as he ſet the Iewes a worke on the one ſide to put Chriſt to death, ſo he cauſed a dreame to fall vpon Pilats wife, thereby to hinder Chriſts death; thus thinketh Rabanus in gloſſ. ordinar. Lyra, with others. But I rather approue Chryſoſtomes iudgement and Theophylacts vpon that place, who thinke, that this dreame was Gods worke: Factum eſt ſomnium non vt Chriſtus abſolueretur, ſed vt ſeruaretur vxor: This dreame was wrought, not that Chriſt ſhould be deliuered, but Pilats wife ſaued. Likewiſe Auguſtine: In natiuitate mundi vxor ducit virum ad mortem: in paſſione Chriſti vxor prouocat ad ſalutem: In the creation or natiuitie of the world, the woman bringeth her husband to death: in the paſſion of Chriſt the wife doth prouoke the man to ſaluation, de tempor. ſer. 121.

Math. 27.19.

Pilate not innocent.

Of Pilates wife and of her dreame.

Howſoeuer it was with Pilats wiſe, who had a good perſwaſion of Chriſt, and was guiltleſſe of his death: yet Pilate could no way be innocent; he waſhed his hands in hypocriſie, but his heart was full of crueltie; as Cyprian well ſaith: Non excuſas, ſed accuſas, cauſam tibi facis cum Iudæis communem; illi ſe proditione, tu parricidio te condemnas; illi lingua, tu ferro occidis: Thou doeſt not excuſe but accuſe, thou art in the ſame cauſe with the Iewes; they by treacherie condemne themſelues, thou by murther and crueltie; they kill him with their tongues, thou with the ſword, ſer. de paſſion. So Ambroſe: Pilatus ipſe iniquitatis ſuæ teſtis, qui ore abſoluit, corde condemnat; lauerit licet manus, tamen facta non diluit: Pilate is a witneſſe of his owne iniquitie, which doth commend Chriſt with his mouth, and condemne him in his heart; he doth waſh his hands, but cleanſeth not his deedes, ſerm.49. Wherefore if Pilate, who made ſome ſemblance of loue and reuerence toward Chriſt, was yet guiltie of his blood, how much more worthie of condemnation were the Iewes, that with will, word and workes did perſecute him to death, and killed the Lord of life, Act. 3.15. And as Origen well ſaith: Quantum putas erroris fuit, ipſam principalem omnem vitam ream mortis pronunciare? How great an error was it, to pronounce the chieſe and principall life worthie of death? Tract.35. in Matth. Act.3.15.

THE QVESTION CONFIRMED.

1. THat Chriſt in himſelfe was moſt holy, innocent and iuſt, and in that behalfe moſt wrongfully and vndeſeruedly put to death of the Iewes, we hold it blaſphemie not to acknowledge it: the Scriptures doe teſtifie, that the Iewes denied the holy and iuſt one, and killed the Lord of life, Act.3.14.15. And Auguſtine ſaith: Dominus mortem pro nobis indebitam reddidit, vt debita nobis non noceret: The Lord did pay for vs an vndue death, that due death might not hurt vs, lib.4. de Trinitat. cap.13. Act.3.14,15.

2. Againe, we moſt thankfully acknowledge in the death of Chriſt the moſt vnſpeakeable loue of Chriſt, 1.Ioh.3.16. Herein haue we perceiued loue, that he layd downe his life for vs: which loue of Chriſt Auguſtine thus deſcribeth Diuina charitas in Chriſto ad ignoſcendum, — inter opprobria ſecura, inter odia benefica, inter iras placida, inter inſidias innocens, &c. There was a diuine charitie of Chriſt in forgiuing, ſtedfaſt among taunts, bounteous againſt hatred, calme againſt rage, innocent though wronged, ſerm.39. de tempor. 1.Iohn 3.16. Chriſts exceeding loue to mankinde.

3. Our bleſſed Sauiour alſo moſt willingly offered himſelfe vpon the croſſe for vs, and was obedient to the will of his father: Heb.5.8. Though he were the ſonne, yet learned he obedience. So Bernard ſaith, Non mors filij, ſed voluntas placuit ſponte morientis: Not the dying of his ſonne pleaſed God, but that he was willing, epiſt.191. Heb.5.8.

4. All this being confeſſed, that Chriſt was in himſelfe innocent, toward vs louing and beneficent, in his death willing and patient: yet ſeeing he as our ſuretie payd our debts, it was iuſt before God, that as he in himſelfe bare our ſinnes, ſo he alſo ſhould pay the price and diſcharge the debt, and ſo anſwere his fathers iuſtice.

Argum.1. S.Paul ſaith, Rom.3.25.26. God hath ſet forth Chriſt to be a reconciliation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteouſnes by the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes which are paſſed, &c. to ſhew at this time his righteouſnes, that he might be iuſt, and a iuſtifier of him, which is in the faith of Ieſus: From hence I reaſon thus; imputation of ſinne is vnto condemnation, as imputation of righteouſnes is vnto iuſtification: but it is iuſt with God to iuſtifie vs by the righteouſnes of Chriſt, therefore it was iuſt before God, that Chriſt for our ſinnes ſhould be condemned to death. Bernard thus giueth witneſſe hereto: Iuſtum eſt, vt reddat deus quod debet; debet autem, quod pollicitus eſt: It is iuſt, that God ſhould render that which he oweth; and he oweth what he promiſed, lib. de liber. arbitr. So then as it is iuſt with God to performe ſaluation vnto vs in Chriſt which he hath promiſed: ſo it was iuſt with Chriſt to pay that debt which he vndertooke to be performed. Rom.3.25.26.

Argum.2. God decreeth no vniuſt thing: but he decreed the death of Chriſt; as S.Peter ſaith, hee was deliuered vp by the determinate counſell and foreknowledge of God, Act.2.23. God did not onely foreknow it, but decree and determine it: by the determinate counſell, ſaith the Apoſtle, [illegible], and therefore God is ſaid to ſend his ſonne to dye for vs, 1.Ioh.4.16. God then was the author of his ſonnes death, but he is not the author of euill things or vniuſt: therefore Chriſts death in reſpect of Gods decree was not vniuſt. Auguſtine ſaith well: Deus aliud fecit & ordinauit; aliud non fecit, ſed ordinauit: God did or decreed ſomewhat to be done, and diſpoſed and ordered it; ſomething he doth not, but yet diſpoſeth and ordereth, in Pſal.7. As in this caſe, the malice of the Iewes God decreed not, but he diſpoſed of their malice to a good end: but the death of Chriſt he both decreed and diſpoſed. Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Peccatores in malis præſcitos tantum non prædeſtinatos, &c. Sinners are onely foreſeene in their euill actions, not predeſtinate, contr. Pelag. Hypognoſtic. artic.6. But Chriſt was not onely foreſeene to dye, but was predeſtinate thereto: Ergo, it was not euill. How God decreed Chriſt to die. Act.2.23. 1.Iohn 4.16.

Arg.3. If Gods iuſtice be fully ſatisfied, and his wrath deſeruedly appeaſed by the death of Chriſt, it followeth that Chriſt died iuſtly: But the firſt is euident, becauſe Chriſt hath by his croſſe ſlaine the hatred betweene God and vs, Epheſ.2.16. and before hee dyed for vs, wee were the children of wrath, Epheſ.2.3. Ergo, Chriſt dyed in reſpect of our ſinnes to anſwere Gods iuſtice iuſtly. Epheſ.2.16. Epheſ.2.3.

The propoſition, which is onely doubted, is thus proued: firſt, nothing can ſatisfie Gods iuſtice, but that which is iuſt: if Chriſts death then were not iuſt before God, Gods iuſtice could not be ſatisfied by it. Secondly, neither can any thing pleaſe God, or appeaſe his wrath by way of ſatisfaction, but that which is iuſt: Chriſts death pleaſed God, it was a ſacrifice of a ſweet ſmelling ſauour vnto God, Epheſ. 5.2. Thirdly, S. Paul ſaith, Rom.8.3. God ſpared not his owne ſonne: not to ſpare is of iuſtice, to ſpare is of loue and mercie: it was mercie to vs, but iuſtice in Chriſt, that he dyed for the redemption of our ſinnes. Fourthly, Bernard ſaith, Non potuit expiari Adæ peccatum, niſi Chriſti morte: Adams ſinne could not be expiated, but by the death of Chriſt, epiſt. 191. It could not be otherwiſe done, becauſe Gods iuſtice could not otherwiſe be ſatisfied: expiation then by death and blood belongeth to Gods iuſtice.

How Chriſtians accurſed for vs.

*Argum.*4. None are forſaken of God, or ſtand accurſed by the law vniuſtly: for God is iuſt, and the law is iuſt, holy, good, Rom.7.12. But Chriſt was as forſaken of God in part in the inſtant of his paſſion: as he himſelfe complaineth, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? Matth.27.46. he was alſo by the law made a curſe for vs, Galath.3.13. Ergo, Chriſt in reſpect of our ſinnes, in the ſight of God ſuffered iuſtly. Beda witneſſeth with vs: Quid mirum ſi maledictum eſt deo, quod deus odit niſi enim deus odiſſet peccatum & mortem noſtram non ad eam ſuſcipiendam & delendam filium ſuum mitteret: What marueile if that be accurſed of God, which God hateth? for vnleſſe God had hated ſinne and death, hee would not haue ſent his ſonne to take it, and aboliſh it, in 3. ad Galath. Chriſt then ſtood as accurſed before God, becauſe he took vpon him that which God hateth, namely our ſinne, and death the fruit of ſinne.

1.Timoth.4.8.
Iohn 11.50.

*Argum.*5. Theſe three, vtilitie, neceſſitie, equitie, are inſeparable companions: that onely is profitable, which is good and iuſt: Theſe things are good and profitable, 1.Timoth.4.8. but Chriſts death was profitable; as Caiphas propheſied, συμφέρει, It is expedient, profitable for vs that one man dye for the people, and the whole nation periſh not, Iohn 11.50. Chriſts death then is both neceſſarie and profitable, and therefore both good and iuſt.

2.Theſ.1.6.

Obiect. The afflictions of the Saints are profitable to themſelues to correct them, to others for their example, yet are they not iuſt: as the Apoſtle ſaith, It is iuſt with God to recompence tribulation, to them that trouble you, 2.Theſſ.1.6. If they which afflict Gods children are puniſhed iuſtly, then they did trouble them vniuſtly.

Pſal.119.161.
Luk.23.41.

Anſw. The afflictions of the Saints, in reſpect of their perſecutors, are vniuſt: as the Prophet Dauid ſaith, Pſal.119.161. They haue perſecuted me without a cauſe: yet he confeſſeth in reſpect of himſelfe toward God, that his afflictions were iuſt and good: verſ.71. It is good for me, that I haue beene afflicted, that I may learne thy ſtatutes: verſ.75. I know that thy iudgements are right, and that thou haſt afflicted me iuſtly, or in truth: So Chriſts death, in reſpect of the malice of his enemies and his owne innocencie, was vniuſt, as the thiefe confeſſed, Luk.23.41. We are righteouſly here, but this man hath done nothing amiſſe. But as Chriſt was our ſuretie and bare our ſinnes, ſo it was iuſt that he ſhould ſuſtaine the puniſhment of them.

Luk.10.42.
Rom.7.12.
Heb.2.17.10.

Againe, that which is neceſſarie is iuſt: for that which is neceſſarie is good: Luk.10.42. One thing is neceſſarie, Mary hath choſen the beſt part. So then, neceſſarium is optimum, the neceſſarie thing is the beſt thing: and that which is good is iuſt: as Rom.7.12. the law is ſaid to be δικαία, ἀγαθή, iuſt and good. Chriſts death is neceſſarie, Heb.2.17. ὤφειλε, debuit, he ought to be like vs in all things, &c. that he might be a faithfull high Prieſt: and verſ.10. ἔπρεπε, it became him: that which is neceſſarie and comely is iuſt: Chriſts death was expedient, comely, neceſſarie: Ergo, iuſt.

Gods iuſtice how ſatisfied by Chriſts death.

For the neceſſitie and expediencie of Chriſts death the Fathers doe thus teſtifie: Ambroſ. Triſtis eſt, quia mori neceſſe eſt: He is ſad, becauſe it was neceſſarie he ſhould dye, in 22.cap.Luc. But in another place: Intellige non ex neceſſitate, ſed voluntariam Chriſti paſſionem: Vnderſtand that Chriſts paſſion was voluntarie, not of neceſſitie, lib.4.in Luc. So then Chriſts death was neceſſarie, and it was not: it was not neceſſarie, that is, violent or compulſorie in reſpect of Chriſts obedience and willingneſſe; it was neceſſarie in reſpect of Gods determination.

Againe, he ſaith, Quæ alia erat cauſa incarnationis, niſi vt caro quæ peccauerat per ſe redimeretur, quod peccauerat ergo, redemptum eſt: What other cauſe was there of Chriſts incarnation, but that the fleſh which had ſinned, ſhould be redeemed by it ſelfe, that which ſinned therefore was redeemed, *de incarnat.cap.*6. But this is the iuſtice of God, that the ſame that ſinned, ſhould be by it ſelfe redeemed.

Auguſtine thus ſheweth the expediencie and neceſſitie of Chriſts death: Heliſeus inclinauit ſe vt ſuſcitaret puerum, — ſic Chriſtus humiliauit ſe factus obediens vſque ad crucem, quia paruuli eramus, paruulum ſe fecit — & os quodammodo ſuper os poſuit: Helyſa bowed himſelfe to raiſe the childe, — ſo Chriſt humbled himſelfe being obedient to the croſſe, and becauſe we were little ones, he made himſelfe a little one, and as it were layd his mouth vpon ours, *de tempor.*206.

Likewiſe vpon theſe words, Pſalm.51.4. That thou maiſt ouercome, when thou art iudged: Non eſt iudicatus deus pater, non eſt iudicatus ſpiritus ſanctus, non inuenimus niſi ſolum filium in iſta carne iudicatum — vicit non de Pilato nec de Iudæis, ſed de diabolo, &c. The father was not iudged, nor the holy ſpirit, we finde none iudged but the ſonne onely in the fleſh: — he ouercame not Pilate, nor the Iewes but the diuell, &c. *ſerm.de temp.*49. It was neceſſarie then, that Chriſt ſhould be iudged by death, that he might, in being iudged, ouercome.

Bernard ſaith excellently: Verbum dei, vt ad nos veniret, propria benignitas inuitauit, miſericordia traxit, veritas, qua ſe venturũ prædixerat, compulit: The word of God to come vnto vs inuited his owne benignitie, he was moued by his mercie, compelled by his veritie, whereby he foretold his cõming, &c. *die Pentecoſt.ſerm.*2. and this is his equitie: So then in Chriſts death there is both neceſſitie and equitie.

1. Origen ſhall conclude, who thus writeth vpon theſe words of Chriſt, Father if it be poſſible let this cup paſſe, Matth. 26. 39. Quod ad potentiam dei omnia poſſibilia, — quod ad iuſtitiam, — poſſibilia ſolum, quæ iuſta ſunt: In reſpect of Gods power all things are poſſible, in reſpect of his iuſtice, thoſe things that are iuſt are onely poſſible, in Matth. tract. 35. Therefore it was not poſſible for the cup to paſſe from Chriſt, becauſe it was not iuſt. Matth. 26. 39.

2. Theodoret ſaith, that Chriſt, Peccatorum tanquam peccator mortem ſuſtinuit, peccati iniuſtitiam coarguit. Chriſt as a ſinner did ſuſtaine the death of ſinners, and reprooued a ſinne of iuſtice, that it deliuered that bodie vnto death, which was not ſubiect to ſinne, &c. Hence it is inferred, that although Chriſt in himſelfe conſidered died vniuſtly, yet taking vpon him our ſinnes, it was fit, that as our Redeemer, he ſhould beare the puniſhment due thereunto. In 3. cap. ad Coloſſ.

3. Confeſſ. of Belgia, artic. 20. We beleeue that God, which is both perfectly mercifull, and perfectlie iuſt, did ſend his Sonne to take that nature vpon him, which thorow diſobedience had offended, that in the ſelfe ſame nature he might ſatisfie for ſinne, and by his bitter death and paſſion pay the puniſhment, that was due vnta ſinne, &c. In Chriſts death then both Gods iuſtice and mercie appeared. Harm ſec. 6. pag. 104.

4. as Thomas well declareth, In that God deliuered Chriſt to death, — oſtenditur & Dei ſeueritas — & bonitas, &c. is ſhewed both the ſoueritie of God, which would not forgiue ſin without puniſhment, as the Apoſtle ſaith, which ſpared not his owne ſon; and his merite and goodneſſe, &c. in giuing one to ſatisfie for vs, when man could not ſufficiently ſatisfie for himſelfe. 3. p. q. 47. art. 3.

The ſumme is this: that if it be iuſt with God to iuſtifie vs by the imputation of Chriſts iuſtice, arg. 1. if God decree no vniuſt thing, but he decreed Chriſts death, arg. 2. if by Chriſts death Gods iuſtice bee ſatisfied, his wrath iuſtly appeaſed, arg. 3. if Chriſt were as forſaken of God in his death in part for our ſinnes, and accurſed by the law, but the law accurſeth none vniuſtly, arg 4. if that which bringeth true vtilitie, and is ioyned with neceſſitie, cannot be without equitie; but in Chriſts death were both vtilitie and neceſſitie, arg. 5. Then we conclude that Chriſts death, as he was our ſuretie, and tooke vpon him our ſinnes, could not in the decree and counſell of God be vniuſt. If Chriſt then ſuffered according to Gods iuſtice, and died to ſatisfie Gods iuſtice, how could his death be vniuſt?

AN APPENDIX TO THIS PART, THAT CHRISTS blood was not giuen as a price of our redemption to the diuell.

THE QVESTION EXPLANED.

WE grant, that God by the price of Chriſts blood deliuered vs from the power of Satan: but the price was not giuen to Satan, but payed vnto God: Satan was but the miniſter of Gods iuſtice, and as it were the Iaylor and tormentor that kept vs in feare: and therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt through death deſtroyed him that had power of death, that is the diuel, Heb. 2. 14. he had power of death no otherwiſe, then as Gods miniſter and executioner: by Chriſts death then wee were deliuered from Satans kingdome; and he was vanquiſhed vpon the croſſe of Chriſt: as Origen ſaith, Triumphauit poteſtates in ligno crucis, He triumphed ouer the principalities vpon the croſſe, &c. So he expoundeth Saint Paul, homil. 17. in numer. Coloſſ. 2. 15. and Cyprian witneſſeth: Vbi ventum eſt ad ſanguinem, deiectum eſt Satanæ regnum: When they came to blood, Satans kingdome was deſtroyed, de duplic. martyr. So then Satan was not as compoundeth with, but confounded by Chriſts blood; not entreated, but defeated; not hired with wages, but required againſt his will, to let his priſoners go: Chriſt gaue nothing to him, but tooke from him, he waged him not, but wreſtled with him; he rendred nothing to him, but rent the captiues from him. Art. 22. Heb. 2. 14. Coloſſ. 2. 15.

Ruffinus thus inferreth: Non damno aliquo patitur Chriſtus, ſed vt rex carcerem ingreſſus, vt ſoluat catenas, &c. Chriſt ſuffered not to any loſſe, but as a King entreth the iayle to looſe the chaines: ſymbol. Ruffin. If Chriſt be the King, and death the priſon, and conſequently Satan hauing power of death the iaylor, how can the King giue a raunſome to the iaylor?

Auguſtine thus witneſſeth: Neſcit diabolus quanta bona de illo fiunt, etiam cum ſæuit, ſæuiens intrauit cor Iudæ, ſæuiens tradidit Chriſtum, ſæuiens crucifixit, &c. The diuell knoweth not to what good his rage turneth, he raging entred into the heart of Iudas, raging hee deliuered vp Chriſt, and in his rage crucified him: and Chriſt being crucified, the world was redeemed, in Pſal. 130. If Satan receiued a price to content him, how doth he rage againſt Chriſt to torment him? if he deliuered him, then was he not deliuered as a price to him.

S. Ambroſe alſo thus teſtifieth: Serpens primus crucifigitur recte, vt quia primus apud deum peccauerat diabolus, primus crucis ſententia feriretur: The Serpent is firſt crucified vpon the croſſe, and good reaſon, that becauſe the diuell was the firſt that had ſinned before God, he ſhould firſt bee ſtricken with the ſentence of the croſſe, Ambr. ſerm. 55. If Satan were crucified by the croſſe, he was not ſatisfied; if he were ſurprized by Chriſts blood, then was it not prized to him; if he were as ſold himſelfe thereby into captiuitie, how could we be bought from him and his captiuitie, it could not be both a compenſation of our debt vnto him, and an obligation more ſurely to bind him: if Chriſts death were his confuſion, he did not then accept it as a condition.

If any of the Fathers haue ſomewhat written diuerſly from this, which is alleaged, as I denie not but ſome of them, as both Auguſtine and Ambroſe do ſpeake to ſuch effect, that Chriſts blood was accounted as a price to the diuell for our deliuerance, they muſt not be ſo vnderſtood, as though either God couenanted, or Satan was contented for that price to let vs goe: but that Chriſts blood, was in regard of the efficacie thereof as a price; that we thereby were as fully and effectually deliuered, as if we had bin out of Satans hand, by a great price giuen vnto him, redeemed. Otherwiſe if we take the fathers in thus writing to ſpeake properly, we ſhall make them each to other, and to themſelues alſo contrary.

THE QVESTION CONFIRMED.

Coloſſ.1.13. THat Chriſt by his death and the price of his blood hath deliuered vs from the power of darkneſſe and hell, it is our holy faith, according to the Scriptures, Coloſſ.1.13. This price was paid vnto God to ſatisfie Gods iuſtice, it was not giuen vnto Satan: for God is the iudge, Satan is the iaylor, to whom the iudge did deliuer vs becauſe of our ſinnes, Luke 12.38. the debt, wherein we ſtood bound, was vnto our Lord and maſter, and he in iuſtice deliuered vs to the iaylour, till we ſhould pay all that was due, Matth.18.34. Chriſt came and paid our debt vnto God, not to the diuel: the debt being paid, the iaylour hath no longer charge nor power to keepe vs in priſon.

Luke 12.38.

Matth.18.34.

*Argum.*1. The price of our redemption was paid to our creditor to whom we were indebted: the diuell is not our creditor; the Lord abſolutely denieth it, Quis eſt creditor meus, cui vendidi vos? Who is the creditor to whom I haue ſold you? Iſay 50.1 None is our creditor but God, and to him onely we are indebted, who onely is able to releaſe vs of our debt, as we are taught to pray, Mat.6.12. Forgiue vs our debts, ὀφειλήματα, therefore the price of our debts was onely paied to God.

Iſay 50.1.

Matth.6.12.

2. The price which was tendred and offered for our redemption was giuen to him, to whom the ſacrifice of Chriſts blood was offered: for the Apoſtle maketh προσφορὰν, and θυσίαν, an offering, tender, or oblation and a ſacrifice to be all one, Epheſ.5.2. But Chriſt did giue himſelfe a ſacrifice of ſweete ſauour to God, ibid. God forbid, that any man ſhould thinke, that Chriſts blood was ſacrificed to the diuell: Ergo, it was not offered nor giuen as a gift or price to the diuell.

Epheſ.5.2.

3. Our Sauiour Chriſt is compared to a victorious man, that bindeth the ſtrong man, which is the diuel, & entreth by force into his houſe, and ſpoileth him of his goods, that is, deliuereth them, whom Satan held as his owne proper goods as captiues in priſon, Matth.12.29. Chriſt entred by force, then not by a price; by aſſaulting, not by aſſenting; by warre, not by wages; by fettering the ſtrong man, not by feeing him; by looſing our bands, not by giuing any thing into Satans bands: as Auguſtine to this purpoſe is alleaged fitly by the Maſter of Sentences, *lib.*3. *diſt.*19. liter.a. Vnde nos diabolus tenebat, deletum eſt ſanguine redemptoris; non enim tenebat nos, niſi vinculis peccatorum noſtrorum; iſta erant catenæ captiuorum: venit ille, alligauit fortem vinculis paſſionis ſuæ, intrauit in domum eius, i. in corda eorum, vbi ipſe habitabat, & vaſa eius, i. nos eripuit: That wherewith the diuell held vs, was taken away by the death of Chriſt, he came and bound the ſtrong man with the bands of his death, and entred into his houſe, that is, our hearts, where he dwelt, and tooke away his veſſels or goods, that is, our ſelues, &c. Here is no price offered to Satan, but a force inferred; not any thing giuen to him but all taken from him. Vpon this ground he concludeth thus: Chriſtus ſe in ara crucis, non diabolo, ſed deo trinitati obtulit: Chriſt in the altar of the croſſe did offer himſelfe, not to the diuell, but to God the Trinitie: *diſt.*20. liter.c.

Matth.12.29.

Origen ſaith: Diabolus tradidit Chriſtum per timorem, ne auelleretur (genus humanum) de manu eius per doctrinam ipſius: The diuell deliuered Chriſt for feare, leſt mankind ſhould be pulled from his hand by his doctrine, *Tract.*35. Matth. The diuell then expected no pay for mans libertie, but deuiſeth by Chriſts death to keepe him ſtill in captiuitie.

Auguſt. in this behalfe maketh Sampſon a figure of Chriſt: Sampſon aduerſarios ſuos interemptus oppreſſit, ſic Chriſti paſſio interfectio facta eſt perſequentium. Sampſon dying killeth his enemies: ſo Chriſts paſſion was the deſtruction of his perſecutors, *ſerm.*107. And as the Philiſtims made themſelues ſport in Sampſons miſerie, which turned to their captiuitie: ſo ſaith Auguſtine, Diabolus trophæo ſuo victus eſt — exultauit, quando mortuus eſt Chriſtus, & ipſa morte Chriſti victus eſt: The diuell was ouercome in his owne policie: he vaunted himſelfe, when Chriſt died, but he was vanquiſhed by his death, *ſerm.*174. So then as Sampſon gaue no price to his enemies to be excluded, but vſed a practiſe whereby they were all concluded; he did not promiſe them any thing to content them, but preuailed by prayer in his death to confound them: ſo Chriſt gaue not his blood to Satan to taſte for his delight, but to waſte his kingdome by our deliuery; not to pay him wages for vs, but to ſtay his raging againſt vs.

Againe, the author of the Sermons de ſanctis, vnder Auguſtines name, *ſerm.*28. compareth Chriſt to Tobias fiſh: Cuius iecore per paſſionem aſſato, fugatus eſt diabolus: By whoſe fleſh and liuer as broyled vpon the croſſe, the diuell was chaſed away, &c. Chriſts blood then was giuen no more a price to the diuell, then that fiſhes liuer (if we admit the ſtorie for veritie, though not for authoritie) to the vncleane ſpirit: but I will ground no argument vpon the Apocryphall ſtorie of Tobias, but onely ſhew the meaning of the Fathers.

Hierome doth more truly and fitly reſemble Chriſt to Ionas, death and the diuell to the whale: Dum aſſumpti corporis ſollicitaris illecebra, & auidis faucibus prædam putas, interiora tua adunco dente confoſſa ſunt, ſunt,&c. O death, while thou art entiſed with the baite of his bodie, and thinkeſt to get a pray for thy greedy iawes, thy inward parts are pierced with the hooke; Epitaph. Nepotian. As Ionas was a pray, not a price to the fiſh to appeaſe the wind; ſo Chriſt, though Satan prayed and raged vpon his body, was a price to God to aſſwage his wrath.

Iſychius ſaith: Chriſtus pro peccatis noſtris conuenienter ſacrificium obtulit: Chriſt for our ſinnes did conueniently offer vp ſacrifice,&c. but ſacrifices are offered onely vnto God: therefore the price of our redemption was paid onely to him, to whom the ſacrifice of atonement was offered. So the confeſſion of Belgia, artic. 21. Chriſt offered himſelfe in our name before his father, with a full ſatisfaction for the pacifying of his wrath. Thomas toucheth this point directly, thus determining, Quantum ad pœnam homo principaliter erat obligatus Deo vt ſummo iudici, diabolo vt tortori: In reſpect of the puniſhment, man was chiefly endebted vnto God, as the chiefe iudge, vnto the diuell, as the tormenter, &c. And ſo he reſolueth: therefore Chriſt is ſaid to haue offered his blood, the price of our redemption, non diabolo ſed Deo, not to the diuell, but vnto God.

To conclude: if then we are indebted onely to God, not to the diuell, arg.1. if Chriſts bodie were only giuen in ſacrifice to God, arg.2. if Chriſt by his death did forcibly bind the ſtrong man, arg.3. then was not Satan hired as with a price to let his priſoners goe, neither was Chriſts blood counted as a raunſome to him for our deliuerance.

THE EIGHT PART, THAT CHRIST IN HIS ſoule did truly feele his fathers wrath kindled againſt him for our ſinne.

Feuardentius denieth, that Chriſt had any ſenſe or feeling of Gods wrath in his ſoule, or that God did ſhew himſelfe as angrie towards him for our ſinne, p.469. Artic.23.

Argum.1. Chriſt was alwaies the beloued ſonne of God, Matth.3.17. God did not change in turning his loue to hatred. Matth.3.17.

2. God loued him the more dearelie for his obedience to death; hee was not therefore angrie with him: Iohn 10.17. Therefore doth my father loue mee, becauſe I lay downe my life. pag.470. Iohn 10.17.

3. If ye ſay God loued him as his ſonne, yet hated him as our ſuretie, or became a ſeruant for vs; ye fall into Neſtorius hereſie, and ſo make two perſons of Chriſt one beloued, an other hated: if yee ſay, that God was not angrie indeed, but Chriſt ſo perſwaded; you will coyne a new hereſie, that Chriſt had a falſe opinion of his father: Feuard.p.471.

1. Anſw.1. Gods temporall wrath vpon Chriſt doth not either change or diſcontinue his euerlaſting loue: for with Chriſts perſon being holy, innocent, righteous, God was neuer offended: our ſinnes laid vpon Chriſt were the obiect and matter of Gods wrath: a father that doth loue his childe dearely, yet may be angrie with his childs faults, and in his anger correct them. 2. Abraham loued Iſaac moſt dearely, Geneſ.22.2. God bid him take his onely ſonne Iſaac whom he loued: yet at Gods commandement he ſtretched out his hand to haue killed him, verſ.10. Abraham in this inſtant loued the perſon of his ſonne: yet in his holy anger and rage, he would kill him: I thinke to kill is no fruit or effect of loue. If Abraham then at the ſame inſtant retained a fatherlie loue toward Iſaac, and yet in an holy and iuſt zeale would haue killed him, why ſhould it ſeeme ſtrange that God not changing his euerlaſting loue toward his ſonne, yet was angrie with our ſinnes which hee ſuſtained? 3. Auguſtine well ſaith: Vſque adeo non omnis qui iraſcitur odit, vt aliquando magis odiſſe conuincatur qui non iraſcitur: Many time he that is angry is ſo farre from hating, or not louing, that hee is found rather to hate, which is not angrie: in Matth.ſer.16. He giueth an inſtance of a child, which through his fathers lenitie runneth into apparant danger of his life. I prooue by this ſimilitude, that as there may bee wrath in a father without a deſtruction of loue; ſo Gods eternall loue did ſtand inuiolable toward Chriſt without any change, though his wrath appeared in the inſtant of Chriſts death, not ſhewing any alteration in God, but a diuerſitie of diſpenſation in Chriſt, who now ſuſtained our perſon. Geneſ.22.2. How anger and loue may ſtand together.

2. The next obiection hath the ſame anſwere, ſauing that it ſeemeth to affirme that Chriſt by his obedience to death purchaſed a greater meaſure of loue to himſelfe, which is an errour: 1. Becauſe the loue of God toward his ſonne being from euerlaſting, was alwaies the ſame, neither increaſing nor decreaſing: for this were otherwiſe to make God mutable and changeable, which the Apoſtle denieth, Iames 1.17. if Gods loue ſhould ſometime abate, and ſometime abound. Secondlie, Chriſt did not merite any thing to himſelfe but all for vs: as Ambroſe well ſaith: Chriſtus non emerendæ gratiæ ſuæ cauſa, ſed noſtræ eruditionis gratia ieiunauit: Chriſt did not faſt to merit fauour or grace to himſelfe, but onely for our erudition ſake: lib.3.de fid.c.2. The like may be ſaid of all other actions of Chriſt: Chriſt obtained not an amplification of his loue by his obedience, but a manifeſtation of it only; Chriſtus hoc natus accepit, vt poſt crucem manifeſtaretur, quid à patre, dum generaretur, accepit, non enim tunc accepit; à patre, quando à creatura cœpit fieri: Chriſt in his birth receiued this, that after his death it might be manifeſted, what he receiued of his father in his generation: for hee did not then firſt receiue it, when the creature began to worke it: Ambroſe in 2.Phil. Chriſts glory then, and

Gods loue toward him was due vnto his humanity in his very firſt incarnation, by right of his God-
John 17.5. head, as our Sauiour himſelfe ſaith, Iohn 17.5. Glorifie me with that glorie, which I had with thee before the world was: This glorie was manifeſted in time, which was due to Chriſts perſon before all time.

3. 1. Neither doth it follow, that we ſhould make two perſons in Chriſt, when wee affirme that at the ſame inſtant God did both loue him with an eternall loue, and was angrie with him with a temporall wrath; Auguſtine will teach you how this may be: Moſes famulus dei quomodo oderat peccatores cum pro eis orabat, quomodo non oderat cum eos occidebat: —— ea namque perfectione ſic oderat iniquitatem, quam puniebat, vt diligeret humanitatem pro qua orabat: Moſes the ſeruant of God, how did he hate the ſinners, when he prayed for them; how did he not hate them, when he killed them; with ſuch perfection he hated iniquitie, which he puniſhed, that he loued their humanitie, for the which he prayed. in Pſal. 138. So God in Chriſt loued his holines and innocency, but was angrie with our ſinnes and iniquitie which were vpon him: Here then are not two perſons, but one and the ſame perſon diuerſly conſidered. 2. This then is no Neſtorianiſme: take you heed of Manichiſme, that you make not Chriſt to haue done all things fantaſtically and in ſhew, while he ſweateth drops of blood, complaineth that he was forſaken, as though God were throughly angry with him, and yet no ſuch matter. 3. Neither do we ſay that Chriſt was onely ſo perſwaded of his father, that he was angrie, but indeed hee was ſo for the time, and he verely in his ſoule felt it ſo to be. Dauid was a man greatly beloued of God, where-
Pſal.38.3. of he hath his name, yet he truly complaineth of Gods wrath, Pſalm.38.3. There is nothing ſound in my fleſh, becauſe of thine anger: And how this may be, that God may be temporally offended with the Rom.11.28. elect, that are eternally beloued, S. Paul ſheweth, Rom. 11. 28. Concerning the Goſpell, they are enemies for your ſakes, but as touching the election they are beloued for the fathers ſake: as the Iewes were temporally reiected; yet eternally in Gods counſell elected; ſo it is in this caſe, as S. Ambroſe well ſheweth: De præſenti Deus iuſtitia iudicat, non de præſcientia: God doth iudge according to preſent iuſtice, not according to preſcience: in 9. ad Roman. And he further declareth how ſome may bee ſaid to be elected in reſpect of their preſent iuſtice which are not in Gods preſcience: and ſo of the contrary, ſome may be for a time in Gods temporall wrath ſuſpended, to whom euerlaſtingly ſaluation is intended: ſo Chriſt was eternally elected and dilected or beloued of God, but in reſpect of our ſinnes hanging vpon him, he was for a time as forlorne and reiected.

4. Laſtlie, wee muſt diſtinguiſh in Chriſt betweene the faith of his ſoule, and ſenſe of his fleſh: his faith alwaies apprehended Gods fauour euen in the midſt of his deepeſt torments, as hee ſaith, I ſet God alwaies before me, Pſalm. 16. 8. but in his preſent ſenſe hee felt and perceiued the wrath of God: Our Sauiour himſelfe doth warrant this diſtinction: ſaying of himſelfe, The ſpirit is readie, the fleſh
Math.26.41. is weake, Matth. 26. 41. Vpon the which words Saint Ambroſe thus writeth: Audi vtramque vocem & carnis infirmæ, & ſpiritus prompti (pater ſi poſſibile eſt tranſeat calix) hæc eſt carnis vox (ſed non quod ego volo) habes deuotionem ſpiritus: Heare each voice of a weake fleſh, and prompt ſpirit: father if it be poſſible let the cup paſſe, this is the voice of the fleſh, (but not as I will,) here is the deuotion of the ſpirit.

THE QVESTION CONFIRMED.

THat the wrath of God lay heauily vpon Chriſt as our ſuretie, and that as he bare all our ſinnes, ſo he truly felt in his ſoule the wrath of God kindled againſt the ſame: thus we doe make it manifeſt out of Scripture.

Iſay 53.4. Argum. 1. Iſay 53. 4. We iudged him, as plagued, ſmitten of God, and humbled: but no man is plagued, or ſmitten but of God being angrie; Ergo.

Anſw. 1. This ſmiting is referred onely to the temporall death of Chriſt by Hierome and others. 2. This might be done without Gods anger: for as Abraham would haue ſacrificed his ſonne without hatred or anger, he loued him ſtill: ſo God did ſuffer his ſonne to be ſlaine without anger. Bellarm. lib. 4. de Chriſti anima. c. 8. reſp. ad argum. 1.

Contra. 1. It is euident, that the Prophet ſpeaketh not of Chriſts bodily death: for he ſaid before in the beginning of the verſe, he bare our infirmities, that is as the Septuagint tranſlate ἁμαρτίας ſinnes, 1.Pet.2.24. whom S. Peter followeth, 1. Pet. 2. 24. But whence proceedeth the plague due vnto ſinne, then from Gods wrath? Againe, his bodily ſufferings are more properly expreſſed in the next verſe: He was wounded for our tranſgreſſions.

2. Hierome doth ſo vnderſtand the Prophet: Factus eſt pro nobis maledictum, vt nos à maledicto liberaret; quod nos pro noſtris debebamus ſceleribus ſuſtinere, ille pro nobis paſſus eſt: ex quo perſpicuum eſt, ſicut corpus flagellatum, ita animam verè doluiſſe: Hee was made a curſe for vs, to deliuer vs from the curſe: for what wee ſhould haue ſuſtained for our ſinnes, hee ſuffered for vs: whence it is manifeſt that as his bodie was whipped, ſo his ſoule was truly grieued, in Iſay c. 53. It is therefore vntrue which Bellarmine here affirmeth, that Hierome vnderſtandeth Chriſts bodily death onely.

Rom.5.12. 3. Euen the death of the bodie alſo ſheweth the wrath of God againſt ſinne, as the Apoſtle ſaith: That death entred by ſinne: Rom. 5. 12. And the Prophet teſtifieth thus: When thou with rebukes doſt chaſtiſe man for iniquitie, thou makeſt his beautie to conſume as a moth. Pſalm.39.11. The mortalitie then of man doth proceed from the rebukes of God, and his rebukes declare his wrath: Chriſt then euen in his bodily death alſo had experience of his fathers wrath againſt ſinne: though we grant, that death in Chriſts death is vanquiſhed, and the ſting thereof extinguiſhed, 1.Cor.15.56.57. And as Ambroſe well ſaith: Chriſtus habet oleum lætitiæ, qui facit exultare morituros, mœſtæ fœtorem mortis aboleuit: Chriſt hath the oyle of gladnes aboue his fellowes, which cauſeth men readie to die to reioyce, and hath aboliſhed the ſtench, and extinguiſhed the ſting of death. lib.1. de ſpirit. c.8.

1.Cor.15.56.

4. Abraham in ſacrificing his ſonne did not ceaſe to loue him; though in that very act, in his holy zeale, his fatherly affection was for a while ſuſpended: ſo a father notwithſtanding he loueth his child, may in his iuſt anger correct him: as Auguſtine ſaith, Quanto melius eſt, ſi iraſceris & corrigis, quam ſi non iraſcendo perire permittas: How much better is it, if you be angrie and correct your ſonne, then by not being angrie to ſuffer him to periſh. ſerm.16. in Matth. Like as then Abrahams holy rage againſt his ſonne, which was but in part and for a moment, doth not aboliſh the perpetuall and totall loue to his child: ſo by this example we ſee how Chriſt was eternally and totally beloued of God, yet for a while and in part taſted of Gods wrath.

Of Abrahams ſacrificing of his ſonne.

*Argum.*2. Iſay 53.5. The chaſtiſement of our peace was vpon him: or παιδεία, the diſcipline of our peace, as the Septuagint reade: Chriſt then was to beare that diſcipline and chaſtiſement, which appertained to vs, and whereby our peace is purchaſed: but Gods wrath was not otherwiſe appeaſed, but by ſatisfying it; he did not otherwiſe ſatisfie it, then by ſuffering, Heb.5.8. He learned obedience by the things, which he ſuffered: Ergo, he ſuffered and endured Gods wrath for vs.

Iſay 53.5.
Heb.5.8.

Anſw. If the whole chaſtiſement due vnto vs, was laid vpon Chriſt: then he muſt haue been puniſhed eternally in hell, for that was due vnto vs: if Chriſts temporall puniſhment did ſatisfie for our eternall in regard of the worthineſſe of his perſon; by the ſame reaſon his bodily ſufferings may ſuffice and ſatisfie for the death of our ſoules, *Bellarm. reſp. ad argum.*2.

*Contra.*1. Chriſt was to ſuffer the whole puniſhment due vnto ſinne, ſo farre as it became the dignitie of his perſon, and the neceſſitie of the worke: but if he had ſuffered eternally, neither could the worke of our redemption haue been accompliſhed, and his perſon ſhould haue endured that, which him not beſeemed: and therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.2.10. It became him to be conſecrated through afflictions. Chriſt then was onely to paſſe through thoſe afflictions, which became him.

Heb.2.10.

2. It followeth not, becauſe Chriſt is exempted from that puniſhment which became not his perſon, that therefore he ſhould be freed from thoſe ſufferings alſo, which are no derogation vnto him: we attribute ſo much to the dignitie of Chriſt, as that we aboliſh not the equitie of God: ſo farre with Chriſts perſon it muſt be diſpenſed, as that yet Gods iuſtice be ſatisfied: to ſuffer in ſoule, Gods iuſtice required, neither was Chriſts perſon thereby diſhonoured; therefore thoſe ſufferings he was to endure for vs: as our Sauiour himſelfe ſaith, Ought not Chriſt to haue ſuffered theſe things, and ſo to enter into his glory, Luke 24.25. Auguſtine well ſaith, Potuerat Dominus noſter hoſtem humani generis ſola maieſtate proſternere, ſine incarnationis humilitate, ſine certamine paſſionis, ſed homo, &c. non violentia liberandus fuit, ſed miſericordia redimendus, — iuſto igitur ordine, &c. The Lord could haue ſubdued the enemie of mankind onely with his maieſtie, without either the humilitie of his incarnation, or difficultie of his paſſion: but man which had made himſelfe guiltie by his owne tranſgreſſion was not by violence to bee deliuered, but by mercy and indulgence to be redeemed, therefore in iuſt order, &c. *ſerm.*156. It was meet then and iuſt, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer as he did for vs.

Why Chriſt ſuffered as he did for man.
Luk.24.25.

*Argum.*3. Heb.4.15. Chriſt was in all things tempted in like ſort, yet without ſinne: as Chriſts members are tempted, ſo was he, but his members doe feele in their ſoules the terrors of conſcience, and haue experience of Gods wrath: as Iob complaineth, Iob 6.4. The arrowes of God are in me, and the terrors of the almightie fight againſt me: and Pſalme 89.46. Shall thy wrath burne like fire? much more then did Chriſt feele the burthen of his fathers wrath, bearing all the ſinnes of the elect in himſelfe.

Heb.4.15.

Anſw. If Chriſt muſt be tempted in all things like to vs, then he muſt haue been burned, beheaded, torne in pieces: he ſhould haue been ſubiect to diſeaſes, as the gowte, the dropſie, the palſey, for all theſe are incident to his members, *Feuard.p.*445.

*Contra.*1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of temptations, which are for the moſt part ſpirituall, not of bodily paſſions, therefore this anſwere is impertinent. 2. Yet becauſe the Apoſtle ſaith elſewhere, Heb.2.17. It became him in all things to be made like his brethren: that is, both as touching his bodie and his ſoule: I anſwere againe: 1. that this clauſe in all things, is not to be vnderſtood of euery particular paſſion, but of the generall kind: not that Chriſt ſuffered euery particular maladie of the bodie, for that had been impoſſible, but euery kind of griefe, both of bodie and ſoule. 2. It is abſurd to obiect ſo many kinds of death, ſeeing it was impoſſible for Chriſt to haue died often, Heb.9.25.28. 3. Neither was it comely for Chriſt to ſuffer all, that wee doe, in that manner and meaſure: whereof the Apoſtle maketh manifeſt exception: it became him, &c. in ſufferings not comely Chriſt was not to be like vs. 4. Againe, ſinne is excepted, and in ſinne alſo the cauſe, and effects thereof are comprehended: ſo then Chriſt could not be like vnto vs in our conception, which is the beginning and cauſe of ſinne; nor yet in our ſickneſſes and diſeaſes, which are the proper and immediat fruites and effects of ſinne; as it is in the Pſalme, There is no reſt in my bones, becauſe of my ſinne, Pſal.38.3.

How Chriſt was in all things like vnto vs.
Heb.2.17.
Heb.9.25.
Pſalm.38.3.

3. The Apoſtle alſo giueth a reaſon, why it became Chriſt to be like vs in his ſufferings and temptations: He is able thereby to ſuccour them, that are tempted, in that he ſuffered and was tempted, Heb. 2. 18. Where the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of Chriſts abſolute power, whereby hee is able without experience had of our temptations, to ſuccour vs, but of his humane compaſſion, whereby he is able by his owne feeling to haue pitie of vs: and, though hee ſuffered not in bodie euery particular griefe as wee doe, as our diſeaſes and ſickneſſes, yet by the experience which he had in other of our infirmities, hee hath a feeling alſo of thoſe, and therein in his pitifull compaſſion is able to helpe: wherefore, that Chriſt might be able alſo to ſuccour vs in his owne feeling, when we are vexed in ſoule with terror of conſcience, and the ſenſe of Gods wrath, it became him in his owne ſoule to feele the like. And ſo I conclude with S. Ambroſe; Qui corpus ſuſcepit, omnia debuit ſubire quæ corporis ſunt, vt eſuriret, ſitiret, angeretur, &c. He that tooke a bodie, muſt vndergoe all things belonging to the body, as to bee hungrie, thirſtie, to be grieued: in 12. cap. Luc. As he here ſaith of Chriſts bodie, ſo likewiſe of his ſoule: Minus mihi contulerat, ſi non meum ſuſcepiſſet affectum, &c. He had done little for me, if hee had not taken mine affection: and againe, Debuit dolorem ſuſcipere, vt vinceret triſtitiam non excluderet: He was to take my ſorrow to ouercome it, not to exclude it: in Luc. 22. By this ſentence then, thoſe ſorrowes of ours, which Chriſt excluded from himſelfe, are not yet vanquiſhed nor ouercome.

Heb.2.18.

Bernard ſaith, Vt quos viuificauit mors tua, tua nihilominus trepidatio robuſtos, mœſtitia lætos, turbatio quietos redderet: That thoſe whom thy death quickened, thy trembling might ſtrengthen, thy heauineſſe might cheare, thy troubles might quiet: in die. S. Andr. ſerm. 1. Our peace then and quietneſſe of ſoule is purchaſed by the like trouble and terror in Chriſts ſoule.

Auguſtine alſo in this behalfe maketh Noah a figure of Chriſts paſſion, who was drunken and vncouered in his tent: ſo Chriſt ſaith he, Calice paſſionis adeo factus eſt ebrius, vt ipſo tegmine corporis nudaretur, &c. So Chriſt was drunken as it were with the cuppe of his paſſion, that hee was left naked of the couering of his bodie: ſerm. 153. he expreſſeth but one effect of this ſpirituall drunkennes; the Prophet ſheweth another, Ierem. 23. 9. I am like a drunken man, for the preſence of the Lord: It is then the wrathfull preſence of God, which is the cauſe as it were of the ſpirituall drunkenneſſe of the ſoule: when it taſteth ſo deepely of the cup of Gods wrath, that it is ſo rauiſhed and ouerwhelmed, like as the bodie, when it is intoxicate with ſtrong drinke.

Ierem.23.9.

Now then to conclude this point, 1. Theodoret ſaith: vnde factum eſt, vt aliena peccata aſſumeret, cum propria non haberet, ille ſiquidem peccata noſtra tulit, & pro nobis afflictus eſt: Whereupon it commeth to paſſe, that Chriſt aſſumed our ſinnes, hauing none of his owne, for hee tooke our ſinnes, and was afflicted for vs, &c. if Chriſt tooke vpon him our ſinnes, hee of neceſſitie alſo did vndergoe the wrath of his father for vs, which was due vnto our ſinnes.

Queſt.9.in numeros.

2. Tertullian ſaith: Reliquit, dum non parcit, ſic reliquit, dum tradit: God left his Sonne in not ſparing him, he left him in deliuering him to death: but not to ſpare, to giue vp vnto death are effects of wrath.

Wherefore if Chriſt were ſmitten and plagued of God for our ſinnes, argum. 1. If the whole chaſtiſement of our peace was vpon him, argum. 2. If he was tempted in all things like vs, argum. 3. then it remaineth that out of all doubt, he felt the terrors of ſoule, and had experience of the wrath of God againſt our ſinne: for ſuch temptations are the members of Chriſt ſubiect vnto.

THE NINTH PART, THAT CHRIST DID TRVLY complaine vpon the Croſſe, that he was forſaken of God, and that he verily felt himſelfe in his ſoule for our ſinne, for the time, as reiected of God in part, though not totally or finally.

THE OBIECTIONS ANSWERED.

Feuardentius thus obiecteth and reaſoneth. 1. If Chriſt were truly forſaken of God, it would follow that the hypoſtatical vnion was diſſolued, and that Chriſt was perſonally ſeparated from God, for otherwiſe he could not be forſaken. Feuarden. p. 473. confut. 1.

Artic.24.

2. The Centurion notwithſtanding Chriſt ſo complained and cried out, yet confeſſeth thus of him; this truly was the Sonne of God, he was a righteous man: Math. 27. Farre off was hee, from imagining Chriſt to be forſaken of God. Feuardent. p. 474. lin. 17.

Math.27.54.

3. Chriſt was alwaies moſt holy, innocent, iuſt, and therefore acceptable vnto God, hee was not then reiected or forſaken. Feuardent. p. 475. confut. 3.

4. Out of Fulgentius, Diuinitas Chriſti animam in inferno non deſeruit: Chriſts diuinity did not leaue his ſoule in hell: Ergo, his ſoule was not forſaken. Feuarden. p. 474. lin. 32.

5. If Chriſt had been verily forſaken, then he ſo crying out ſhould haue deſpaired, which were horrible blaſphemie to affirme. Bellarm. argum. 6. Feuarden. p. 485. conf. 6.

Luk.23.34.

6. Chriſt prayeth for them which crucified him, ſaying: Father forgiue them, they know not what they do. Luk.23.34. How could Chriſt pray vnto God, or aſſure himſelfe to be heard, if he were forſaken. *p.*488.*conf.*12.

7. How could Chriſt promiſe Paradiſe to the theefe vpon the Croſſe, if he were himſelfe forſaken, and not ſure of Paradiſe: *Feuard.p.*448.*lin.*32.

Anſw. 1. If Chriſt had bin totally and eternally forſaken, the perſonall vnion muſt haue bin diſſolued: but vpon this temporall and partiall reiection there followeth not a perſonall diſſolution or general dereliction. 2. As the body of Chriſt being without life, was ſtill hypoſtatically vnited to the Godhead, ſo was the ſoule of Chriſt, though for a time without feeling of his fauour: the dereliction of the one doth no more diſſolue the hypoſtaticall vnion, then the death of the other: if life went from the body, and yet the deitie was not ſeparated in the perſonall conſociation, but onely ſuſpended in operation: ſo the feeling of Gods fauour, which is the life of the ſoule, might be intermitted in Chriſt, and yet the diuine vnion not interuerted. 3. Auguſtine doth well ſhew, how this may be: when hee ſaith, that Paſſio Chriſti dulcis fuit diuinitatis ſomnus: The paſſion of Chriſt was the ſweet ſleepe of his diuinitie. lib.de eſſent.diuin. Like as then in ſleepe the ſoule is not departed, though the operation thereof be deferred: ſo in Chriſts ſleepe vpon the croſſe, the Godhead was not ſeparated, though the working power thereof were for a time ſequeſtred.

The hypoſtaticall vnion not diſſolued by Chriſts ſuffring in ſoule.

2. 1. The Centurion being a Romane vnderſtood not the language, wherein Chriſt complained crying out, he was forſaken, ſeeing the Iewes themſelues miſtooke his words, ſaying, he called for Elias. Matth.27.47. 2. And the Euangeliſt euidently ſheweth, that not the hearing of thoſe words, but the ſeeing of the earth-quake and other things which were done, drew that confeſſion from the Centurion, that Chriſt was the ſonne of God. Matth.27.54. 3. Who denieth, but that notwithſtanding Chriſt truely complained he was forſaken, yet he was the ſonne of God ſtill? for the hypoſtaticall vnion was not hereby diſſolued, as I haue anſwered to the firſt obiection: for like as the ſoule of Chriſt being parted from his body, was ſeparated only from it τοπικῶς not ὑποστατικῶς, locally, not hypoſtatically: *Damaſcene.lib.*3.*de Fid.c.*27. The ſoule ceaſed working in the body, yet was not diuorced in the perſonall being from the body: ſo the filiall vnion was not diſſolued, though the effectuall feeling were for a while diſcontinued.

The elect how for a time may be forſaken.

3. 1. It followeth not becauſe Chriſt was alwayes the beloued ſonne of God in himſelfe, that therefore he could not be forſaken for a time in reſpect of our ſinnes, which he as our ſuretie anſwered for: If they can tell me, how theſe two can ſtand together, that firſt God ſhould promiſe as concerning Dauid, his ſeed ſhall endure for euer, Pſal.89.36. and yet the Church complaineth, *thou haſt reiected and abhorred, and beene angry with thine annointed, Ibid.v.*38. then will I anſwere them how both theſe may be at once in Chriſt, dilection and dereliction? like as then the elect members of Chriſt may be forſaken not totally, or finally, but ex parte, in part, and for a time, and yet their election remaine firme ſtill; the ſame may be the caſe of our head, that he was ex parte derelictus, onely in part forſaken, and for a time, alwayes beloued for his owne innocency, but for vs and in our perſon, as our pledge and ſuretie deſerted.

2. Auguſtine very wel ſheweth, how one man may at the ſame time both loue and hate another: Hominem deus fecit, prauaricatorem ſe ipſe fecit; ama in illo, quod deus fecit, perſequere in illo, quod ipſe ſibi fecit: God made man, and he made himſelfe a ſinner, loue that which God made, perſecute that which he made himſelfe. in Pſal.100. So Chriſt in reſpect of his holines and innocency the fruits and graces of the ſpirit, was beloued of God, but in regard of our ſinnes which were our owne workes, now laide vpon Chriſt, as his owne, he was as forſaken: ſee more for a fuller anſwere to this argument. *part.*8.*reſp.ad obiect.*1,*et.*3.

Act.2.27.

2.Cor.4.9.

Pſal 22.1.

Chriſt not forſaken totally or finally.

4. 1. Chriſt indeed was not forſaken finally neither his ſoule in hell, nor his body in the graue, and ſo is S. Peter to be vnderſtood. Act.2.27 Thou wilt not leaue my ſoule in the graue or hell: for like as Chriſts body was forſaken for a time in that it died, but not forſaken finally, becauſe it roſe from death: ſo his ſoule was forſaken in part while the terrors of God were in it, but not totally or generally, becauſe he ſubdued theſe ſorrowes of hell, wherewith he was compaſſed. 2. S. Paul in the one ſenſe ſaith. 2.Cor.4.9. We are perſecuted, but not forſaken; that is, vtterly or finally: Dauid in the other ſenſe complaineth, that he was forſaken, Pſal.22.1. that is in part, and for a time in his owne ſenſe and feeling: And ſo Auguſtine well ſaith: Vnuſquiſque pro peccatis neceſſario flagellatur, ſed ab eo, ſi Chriſtianus eſt, miſericordia dei non diſpergitur: Euery man is neceſſarily whipped for his ſinne, but he is not ſtripped of Gods mercy, if he be a Chriſtian, *in Pſal.*88.*concion.*2. So there are two kinds of dereliction or forſaking, one is for a time and in part; ſo the elect may be, and Chriſt was vpon the croſſe forſaken: another which is totall, finall, and generall, and ſo neither Chriſt nor his members are forſaken.

Chriſt complaineth he was forſaken without all deſpaire.

5. 1. Neither doth it follow, that Chriſt vttered words of deſperation, if hee had felt himſelfe indeed in his ſoule forſaken: for we muſt diſtinguiſh betweene the faith of Chriſt, which was alwayes ſound and firme, and the ſenſe of his humane infirmity, which cauſed him to complaine; ſo that in the deepeſt bottome of the anguiſh of his ſoule he is vpheld and ſuſtained by his faith, ſaying, my God, my God: whereby he ſheweth his ſingular confidence and truſt in God, notwithſtanding the preſent ſenſe of his wrath.

2. Bellarm. 1. If Chriſt did ſuffer the puniſhment of the damned and of hell, as Caluine affirmeth, then he alſo deſpaired : for deſperation is an eſſentiall part of the paine of hell. 2. This ſpeech of Chriſt it was either deliberate and aduiſed, or indeliberate and vnaduiſed : if the firſt, then Chriſt verily deſpaired ; if the ſecond, his paſſions were inordinate, which is not to be admitted.

3. Neither can it be imagined, that the firſt clauſe (my God, my God) ſhould bee aduiſedly ſpoken, and the other (why haſt thou forſaken me) to be vnaduiſedly vttered ; was Chriſt ſo weake and inconſtant, that he could not continue foure words in faith ?

4. And if the firſt words, my God, my God, are a correction of the other, then the correction goeth before the error, which were abſurd. Bellarm.lib.4.de anim.c.8.arg.6.

Contra. 1. Such puniſhment of hell, as Chriſt might endure without ſinne, wee doubt not to aſcribe vnto him : but deſperation is a deteſtable ſinne, and therefore farre from Chriſt : the Apoſtle teacheth vs to make this exception, Heb.4.17. that Chriſt was tempted in all things as we are, ſinne onely excepted : wherefore this is a meere cauill to obiect that, which is by the Apoſtle directly excepted. And Auguſtine alſo ſaith : Solus Chriſtus ſine peccato, peccati pœnam ſubire dignatus eſt : Onely Chriſt without ſinne, vouchſafed to vndergoe the puniſhment of ſinne, contr.2.epiſt.Pelag.4.4. Therefore no puniſhment which is neceſſarily accompanied with ſinne, can be faſtened vpon Chriſt. Heb.4.17.

How our bleſſed Sauiour at the ſame time ſheweth both his humane infirmitie and conſtancy of faith.

2. The whole ſpeech of Chriſt was aduiſed and deliberate, and yet no deſpayre at all : in which deliberatiue ſpeech both he cryeth out in the feeling of his ſorrow, that it might appeare what he endured for vs, and he alſo vttereth his faith and confidence, to teach vs by his example to be confident in our trouble. Damaſcene ſaith well for the firſt, οὐ ἐκπτώματι φύσεως, &c. ἀλλ' εἰς δεῖξιν ὑπάρξεως, that which was ſaid and done proceeded not from the fault or deprauation of nature, but for the demonſtration of his true exiſtency and humanity : lib.3.de fid.c.22. For the other S. Ambroſe ſpeaketh : Dubitatio illa nos firmat, ne tu ſi cœperis dubitare deſperes : His doubtfulnes doth ſtrengthen vs, leſt thou, when thou beginneſt to doubt, ſhouldeſt deſpaire, lib.2.de fid.c.4.

3. 1. Neither doth the faith of Chriſt conclude it ſelfe within theſe wordes onely, My God, my God, but is continued throughout the whole ſenſe and ſentence : for at the ſame time Chriſt both ſheweth his humane infirmitie, and his conſtant fidelitie, his exceeding great paſſion, and his excellent confeſſion : As Damaſcene ſaith : φυσικῆς ἀσθενείας πειρασθεῖσα, his will was firſt tempted of his naturall infirmitie, and againe, νευρωθεῖσα, it was corroborate and ſtrengthened by his diuine will, lib.3.de fid.cap.18. 2. Neither is this ſo ſtrange a thing, for nature and faith to appeare at once : as the Prophet Dauid ſheweth in himſelfe, Pſal.31.22. I ſaid in my haſte, I am caſt out of thy ſight : here is Dauids infirmitie : yet thou heardeſt the voyce of my prayer : here is his faith and ſtabilitie.

4. Neither do we ſay, that one part of the ſentence is a correction of the other : but the whole ſheweth a ſingular moderation and direction by faith of Chriſts naturall affection in the middeſt of his deepeſt paſſion : So the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.5.8. that he learned obedience by the things which he ſuffered. And Auguſtine witneſſeth : Vnde patefacit, quod & humanam habuit voluntatem, per quam obedijt patri, & immaculatam ab omni peccato eandem voluntatem : Whereby he ſheweth, that he had both an humane will, by the which he was obedient to his father, and the ſame will immaculate and free from all ſinne : ex epiſt. Agathon. ad Conſtantin. Hebr.5.8.

6.7. Chriſt notwithſtanding this ſenſe of his dereliction, might and did both promiſe paradiſe to the theefe, whereof he doubted not, and pray in charity for his perſecutors : for his faith, hope and charity failed not in the deepeſt of his agonie : for though he felt Gods wrath in his humane ſenſe and infirmitie, yet his faith was ſtedfaſt in all godly conſtancie : and ſo as Ambroſe ſaith of the like requeſt of Chriſt, when he prayed that the cup might paſſe, &c. that there was both vox carnis, & deuotio ſpiritus, the voyce of the fleſh, and the deuotion alſo of the ſpirit. In like manner in this place Chriſt ſheweth in the complaint his humane ſenſe, as alſo his godly confidence, Ambr.lib.4.in Luc.

THE QVESTION CONFIRMED.

THat our bleſſed Sauiour bearing our ſinnes in himſelfe vpon the croſſe, did verily feele Gods wrath in his ſoule, and truly complained in reſpect thereof, that he was forſaken of God : he himſelfe thus euidently teſtifieth.

Argum. Our Sauiour cryeth out and complaineth vpon the croſſe : My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? Matth.27.46. Theſe words were vttered in truth, not in colour or ſhew : as Athanaſius ſaith : φύσει, καὶ ἀληθείᾳ, οὐ δοκήσει τὰ πάντα ἐγένετο, All things were done naturally and in truth, not in opinion, or ſhew : ad Apollinar. Ergo, Chriſt did feele himſelfe in his ſoule forſaken of God. Math.27.46.

Anſ. 1. One anſwere is, that Chriſt ſpeaketh in our perſon, and not in his owne ; to the which ſenſe ſome of the Fathers ſeeme to incline : as Damaſcene lib.3.de fid.c.24. he ſaith, he was forſaken, becauſe we were iuſtly forſaken for our ſinnes.

2. But the moſt common anſwere is this, that Chriſt was forſaken in reſpect of his body and fleſh, which was yeelded vp into the hands of the Iewes to kill and crucifie, and vſe at their pleaſure, and therefore Chriſt complaineth, that God would not deliuer him : ſic Bellar.reſp.ad arg.4. as if Chriſt in effect had thus ſaid : My God, which diddeſt deliuer Noe from the flood, Abrahã from Vr of the Chaldees, Iſaac from the ſword of his father, Iacob from the hand of his brother, Iſrael out of Ægypt, Ioſeph out of priſon, Dauid from Goliah, &c. why haſt thou left me without any helpe? ſic Feuard.p.477.

3. To this purpoſe the Frier alleageth diuers Fathers, as *Tertullian, Origene, Epiphanius, Cyrill, Hierome, Bernard,p.*479. whoſe teſtimonies ſhall be examined afterwards.

Contra. 1. It is euident, that Chriſt ſpeaketh in his owne perſon, ſaying, why haſt thou forſaken me? 2. As Origene ſaith, Non fas eſt credere mentiri Chriſtum dicentem, quare,&c. It is not ſafe to beleeue that Chriſt lyed when he ſaid, why haſt thou forſaken me? *Tract.*35.in Matth. But if Chriſt had ſaid he was forſaken, and yet was not, it had been an vntruth. 3. As for Damaſcens ſentence, it is reiected by Iodocus Clictoueus in his enarrations vpon that place. 4. And yet Damaſcene may very well be interpreted otherwiſe:for he ſaith that Chriſt thus ſpake, [illegible] hauing put on, aſſumed, or inhabiting our perſon : which is as he expoundeth himſelfe, *cap.*25. [illegible], receiuing our perſon, that is, [illegible] being ordained with vs, that is, made like vs: So then his meaning is, that Chriſt in our perſon, that is, in reſpect of his humanitie taken from vs, thus complained.

2. Neither can it be referred to the leauing of Chriſt in his bodily death and torments. 1. The ſenſe of theſe words muſt be deriued from the 22.Pſal. verſ.1. where the Prophet complaineth not ſo much of any outward affliction, but that he was without ſpirituall comfort, Why art thou ſo farre from my health, and the voyce of my roring? And to the like effect he prayeth, Pſal.51.11. Caſt me not away from thy preſence, and take not thy holy ſpirit from me: verſ.12. Reſtore me to the ioy of thy ſaluation. To bee caſt away then, or forſaken, is to be left comfortleſſe of Gods ſpirit.

Chriſt not forſaken onely in reſpect of his bodily death.

2. If Chriſt ſhould haue ſo cryed out, and, as the Prophet ſaith, roted, in reſpect of his bodily death, he ſhould haue ſhewed himſelfe weaker, then many of his members, who were cheerefull in the middeſt of their torments, being inwardly comforted.

3. If this forſaking of Chriſt, were the leauing of him to the pleaſure of his perſecutors, it is likely that Chriſt would haue vttered this voyce in the beginning of his paſſion, being now already nayled to the croſſe, for euen then had they wrought their will vpon him; but he ſo cryed not till three houres after:and at the ninth houre being ready to giue vp the ghoſt, and hauing wreſtled all this while in his ſoule with the terrors of hell, and hauing felt the abſence of Gods fauour within, as the world wanted the Sunne light without, then he cryed out and complained, My God, my God,&c.

4. Neither doth the Scripture vſe to call this a dereliction, or deſertion, when a man is left to his perſecutors ; as Saint Paul ſaith, we are perſecuted, but not forſaken, 2.Cor.4.9.

2.Cor.4.9.

5. In this complaint of Chriſt, the whole perſon of Chriſt conſiſting of both his natures is expreſſed, the one part or nature of Chriſt forſaketh, that is his deitie, the other is forſaken, namely his humanitie; then the ſoule of Chriſt is alſo in this inſtant forſaken, as well as his body : for it either forſaketh, or is forſaken ; but not the firſt, for it was the Godhead onely that left him, not in eſſence but in ſenſe; not in being, but in feeling : Ergo, his ſoule was forſaken.

6. Neither did the perſecutors force Chriſts ſoule out of his body, that in that behalfe hee ſhould complaine as forſaken : for he laid downe his life of himſelfe, no man tooke it from him, Ioh.10.18. And as Ambroſe writeth vpon theſe words, Emiſit ſpiritum, He gaue vp the ghoſt ; Quod emittitur voluntarium ; quod amittitur neceſſarium eſt : That which is emitted or ſent forth is voluntary ; that which is amitted is neceſſary, *in Luc.*22.

Ioh.10.18.

7. Chriſt was forſaken, but in deeper degree and meaſure of feeling, yet without ſinne as his members do often finde themſelues forſaken : but his members do feele the terrors of conſcience, and for the time are as forſaken in their feeling : as it appeareth in Dauid, Pſal.31.20. I am caſt out of thy ſight: In Iob 30.21. Thou art an enemy vnto me,&c. Ergo, ſo was Chriſt forſaken : for as Ambroſe ſaith, Flagellatus eſt ipſe, ne nos flagellaremur: He was ſcourged, that we ſhould not be ſcourged, *in Luc.*22. So he was forſaken, that we ſhould not be forſaken.

Pſal.31.20.

3.

1. Tertullian ſaith, Reliquit dum non parcit : God left his ſonne in not ſparing him, he left him in deliuering him, lib. ad Praxean. To this not ſparing belongeth the ſpirituall forſaking : this teſtimonie is not againſt vs.

2. Origene ſaith, Derelictus fuit, comparatione gloriæ,&c. ad confuſionem : He was forſaken, comparing his glory which he had with his father to this preſent confuſion vpon the croſſe, *Hom.*35. in Matth. As thoughh the dereliction of his ſoule doth not properly belong vnto this confuſion.

3. Epiphanius ſaith: Non ſeparata deitate,&c. Chriſt did not thus crye out, as though his deitie were ſeparated, *contr. hereſ.*69. As though any man ſaith, that Chriſt was forſaken of his Godhead: this ſentence is improperly alleaged.

4. Cyrill: Opus erat ad fidem noſtram,&c. It was neceſſary to our faith, that Chriſt ſhould ſhew himſelfe a true man in his paſſion:and therefore leſt any man ſhould doubt, as a man hee crieth out, *My God, my God:lib.*10.*Theſaur.c.*3. This teſtimonie rather maketh againſt the Frier : for if Chriſt by thus crying out would declare himſelfe to be a perfect man, who conſiſteth of body and ſoule, it muſt follow, that the whole man Chriſt complaineth, that hee was in his whole humanitie forſaken.

5. Hierome ſaith : Chriſtus derelictus pro parte carnis : Chriſt was forſaken on the behalfe of his fleſh, *in Pſal.*21. By fleſh he vnderſtandeth the whole humanitie of Chriſt : as in the ſame place, Humanitas loquitur quomodo derelicta fuerit in Adam : His whole humanitie ſpeaketh how it was forſaken in Adam : which was both in body and ſoule.

6. Bernard ſaith: Quædam ibi derelictio fuit, vbi nulla fuit in tanta neceſſitate virtutis exhibitio, nulla

oſtenſa maieſtatis: It was a kind of dereliction, when in ſuch neceſſitie there was no vertue exhibited, no maieſtie declared, ſerm. 5. de verb. Iſaiæ. This may be referred as well to the fayling of inward comfort, as to the aſſayling of outward croſſes: for neither in the one nor the other, did the diuine maieſtie comfort and vertue declare it ſelfe.

4. Now on the contrary ſide I will produce the Fathers teſtifying for the truth. 1. Origene: Forſitan videns peccata hominum, pro quibus patiebatur, dixit, &c. It may bee that Chriſt ſeeing the ſinnes of men, for the which he ſuffered, cryed out, that he was forſaken. And againe, Non exiſtimo humano more iſta dixiſſe propter calamitatem, quæ eum comprehenderat in cruce: I do not thinke that he ſaid thus after the manner of men, becauſe of the calamitie, which faſtened vpon him on the croſſe; Tract. 35. in Matth. Origene then maketh not the outward calamitie of the croſſe, but the inward ſuffring for our ſinnes, the ground and cauſe of Chriſts dereliction.

2. Ambroſe: Quoniam delicta aliena ſuſcepi, etiam delictorum alienorum verba ſuſcepi, vt me derelictum à patre dicam: Becauſe I haue taken other mens ſinnes, I haue alſo taken the words of their ſinnes to ſay, I am forſaken of my father, de incarnat. c. 5. This dereliction then of Chriſt proceeded from the conſideration of our ſinnes, which lay vpon him. And againe, Dubitatio illa nos firmat, ne & ſi tu deſperare cœperis, deſperes: His dubitation is our confirmation, that in our doubting we fall not into deſperation, lib. 2. de fid. c. 4. He calleth the perplexitie and dereliction of Chriſt in his ſoule, dubitation, or doubtfulnes; though to ſpeake properly Chriſt doubted not at all.

3. Hierome: Chriſtus ſic orauit in cruce, deus, deus, quid dereliquiſti me? longè à ſalute mea verba delictorum meorum, &c. Chriſt thus prayed vpon the croſſe, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? far from my health are the words of my ſinnes, lib. 3. aduerſ. Pelag. Chriſts dereliction then was grounded vpon our ſinnes, which he bare. Againe he ſaith, Deſpectus erat & ignobilis, quando pendebat in cruce: & factus pro nobis maledictum peccata noſtra portabat, & loquebatur patri, Deus meus, &c. He was deſpiſed and abuſed, when he hung vpon the croſſe, and being made a curſe bare our ſins, and ſpake to his father, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me, &c. in Eſaiam. c. 53. the bearing then of our ſinnes, was the ground of this curſe.

4. Auguſtine: Non dedignatus eſt aſſumere nos in ſe, transfigurare nos in ſe, & loqui verbis noſtris, vt nos loqueremur verbis ipſius, hæc enim mira commutatio facta eſt, & diuina peracta ſunt commercia, &c. He vouchſafed to aſſume our nature to himſelfe, to transfigure vs in himſelfe, to ſpeake our words, that we might ſpeake his words: for a wonderfull commutation is made, and a royall or diuine exchange effected, &c. in Pſal. 30 As we then ſpeake with Chriſts words of ſpiritull comfort, ſo hee ſpake our words in his ſpirituall diſtreſſe: and as we in our trouble of minde complaine of the abſence of Gods comfort, ſo did Chriſt.

5. Hilarie: Chriſtus cruci vniuerſa ea, quibus infirmabamur, affixit; ideo peccata noſtra portat & pro nobis dolet, &c. Chriſt did faſten to his croſſe all thoſe things vniuerſally, whereby wee are weakened and troubled: therefore he bare our ſinnes, and was grieued for vs, &c. c. 31. in Matth. If Chriſt faſtened all our infirmities in himſelfe to the croſſe, then alſo the ſenſe and feeling of deſertion and dereliction.

6. Beda: Vt homo loquitur meos circumferens metus, quod in periculis poſiti à deo nos deſeri putamus: He ſpeaketh as a man bearing our feares, becauſe when we are in danger we thinke we are forſaken of God, in 15. Marc. If Chriſt then complained of deſertion and forſaking, as his members in their extremitie vſe to do: then was it the dereliction of his ſoule, which he felt, as his members in ſome meaſure vſe to feele.

Ireneus ſaith: Proprio ſanguine redimente nos Domino, & dante animam pro noſtris animabus, & corpore ſuo pro noſtris corporibus: Our Lord redeeming vs, giuing his ſoule for our ſoules, and his bodie for our bodies, &c. lib. 5. c. 1. Hence it will follow, that ſeeing hee gaue his ſoule and bodie for vs, in bearing the curſe due vnto vs, that he bare the curſe both in his body and ſoule.

Harm. ſect. 6. pag. 104.

8. Confeſſ. of Belgia, artic. 21. Chriſt being iuſt ſuffered in ſoule and body for the vniuſt, in ſuch ſort, that feeling the horror of theſe puniſhments that were due vnto our ſinnes, hee did ſweate water and blood, and at the length cried out: My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me, &c.

9 The ordinarie gloſſe noteth vpon theſe words, My God, my God, humana natura erat derelicta, ſed non Dei filius: The humane nature was forſaken, not the Sonne of God, &c. If the humane nature, then his ſoule, as well as the bodie. See Ferus alleaged in the next queſtion following, who vnderſtandeth this dereliction of the terror of the conſcience.

Wherefore ſetting apart all other deuiſes and coniectures of men, I reſolue with Origene: firſt, that neither Chriſt complained in humilitie, that he was forſaken of the deitie: for then hee ſhould haue complained vntruly. Secondly, neither that in regard of the preſent darknes he ſo ſaid, as ſome thinke. Thirdly, nor yet did he ſpeake in the perſon of the Iewes, which were reiected, that the Gentiles might be elected. Fourthly, nor yet did he make this outcrye by reaſon of his outward calamitie vpon the croſſe: all theſe coniectures Origene refuſeth, and concludeth rather, that Chriſt becauſe of our ſinnes which he bare, for the which he felt Gods anger, and himſelfe forſaken, thus cryed out and complained vpon the croſſe, tract. 35. in Matth.

THE TENTH PART, THAT CHRIST WAS VErily made a curſe for vs, and did beare both in his body, and ſoule, that curſe, which by reaſon of the tranſgreſſion of the law was due vnto vs.

THE OBIECTIONS ANSWERED.

AGainſt this poſition the Frier vſeth no ſpeciall arguments, but ſuch as were before produced againſt Chriſts feeling of the wrath of God. Artic.15.

1. If Chriſt ſtood accurſed for vs in his ſoule before God, then there would follow a diſſolution of his perſon from the vnitie of the Godhead: but Chriſt ſemper ſine rapina ſe æqualem Deo, &c. alwayes without any robberie, or iniurie to God, tooke himſelfe to be equall to him, Fenardent. pag.471.lin.6.

2. Chriſt was alwayes beloued of God and in his fauour: Ergo, not accurſed, Fenardent.pag.470. confutat.4.

3. If hee were accurſed, then alſo he deſpaired, and was damned, Fenardent.pag.446.confutat.5. lin.5.11.

Anſw. Theſe obiections I haue anſwered before, part.8.reſponſ.ad obiect.1.2.3.& part.9.reſponſ. ad argum.5. The ſumme of our anſwere was this: 1. That there is no more feare of the diſſolution of Chriſts perſon, for the ſpirituall curſe lying vpon his ſoule, then for the externall ſhewed in the death of his body. 2. Neither is the eternall loue of God hereby diſcontinued or interrupted: for as I ſhewed, this dereliction or curſe, was not totall but partiall; temporall, not eternall: and Chriſt for his owne innocencie and holineſſe was alwayes beloued of God, but ſtood accurſed for our ſinnes: See our anſwere more at large, part 8.reſponſ.ad obiect.1.2.3.& part.9.reſponſ.ad obiect.1. 3. Neither vpon the admitting of this curſe, ſhall either damnation or deſperation follow in the ſoule of Chriſt: though it were ſpirituall, yet was it not eternall: though there were a dereliction, yet no deſperation: though deſolation for a time, yet no damnation: it was painfull, yet not ſinfull: Chriſts ſoule was perplexed, yet his faith not peruerted: he was not onely vpon the croſſe, but vnder Gods curſe for vs: damnation and deſperation are the inſeparable companions of eternall and totall malediction: but ſo was not Chriſt accurſed; but in part and for a time. 1. The execration of his ſoule doth no more enforce damnation and deſperation, then the malediction of his body, which is granted. 2. Ieremie felt himſelfe vnder Gods wrath and curſe, when he ſaid, Woe is me, Ierem.15.10. and verſ.17. Thou haſt filled me with indignation, verſ.18. My plague is deſperate, why art thou to me as a lier? Ierem.20.14. Curſed be the day wherein I was borne: yet Ieremy was neither damned, nor deſpaired. 3. We doubt not to aſcribe all our tentations to Chriſt, but without ſinne; therefore he muſt be freed from damnation and deſperation. As Bernard well ſaith, Suſcipiens pœnam, & neſciens culpam: he taſted the ſmart, but tooke not the ſinne, ad milit.templ.c.10. But for more full anſwere, I referre the reader to the ninth part, reſponſ.ad obiectionem.5.

How Chriſt was made a curſe for vs without diſſolution of his perſon, or deſperation.

Ierem.15.16. 17.

Chap.20.14.

THE QVESTION CONFIRMED.

THe Apoſtle in moſt direct words proueth the queſtion, when he ſaith, Galath.3.13. Chriſt hath redeemed vs from the curſe of the law, when he was made a curſe for vs: as it is written, Curſed is euery one, that hangeth on a tree: I ſay then with Ambroſe, Cur erubeſcam fateri, quod Apoſtolus non erubuit alta voce profiteri? Why ſhould I be aſhamed to confeſſe that, which the Apoſtle with a loud voyce hath profeſſed, that Chriſt was truely made a curſe for vs? Galath.3.13.

Anſw. 1. Chriſt may be ſaid to be a curſe, that is, maledictionis remiſſio, becauſe hee remitted or releaſed the curſe, Feuard.p.377.confutat.2.lin:18.

2. He was accurſed onely in reſpect of his ignominious death, as Pſal.22.6. Opprobrium hominum, & abiectio plebis: I am a ſhame of men, and the contempt of the people. Feuard pag.470.confut.3. lin.11. Pſal.22.6.

Contra. 1. The firſt anſwere the Apoſtle remoueth, when he ſaith, Chriſt hath redeemed vs from the curſe of the law, when he was made a curſe for vs: to be made a curſe and to redeeme vs from the curſe, are not all one: but the remitting of the curſe, is all one with the redeeming from the curſe: Ergo, the remitting of the curſe is not to be made a curſe. 2. Againe, the Apoſtle proueth Chriſt to be curſed, becauſe he hanged on a tree, as it is written, Curſed is euery one that hangeth on a tree, that is, he is indeed accurſed, not the curſe onely remitted. 3. The receiuing of the curſe is one thing, the remitting another: firſt, Chriſt tooke the curſe vpon himſelfe, and ſo tooke away the curſe: malediction then, and the remiſſion of the malediction are two diuers things.

2. That this curſe, wherewith Chriſt was accurſed for vs cannot be referred to the externall death vpon the croſſe, it appeareth by theſe reaſons.

1. S. Hierome ſaith, Non quicunque pependerit in ligno, maledictus coram Deo, ſed qui propter ſcelus ſuſpenſus: not euery one that hangeth vpon a tree, is curſed before God, but hee that hangeth there for his ſinne: in 3. ad Galat. Like as if Haman had preuailed againſt Mardoche, and hanged him vpon the gallowes which he had made for him; Mardoche in his innocencie, notwithſtanding that ignominious death, ſhould not haue ſtood accurſed: wherefore it was not the death of the croſſe, but our ſinnes hanging vpon the croſſe, that deriued this curſe vpon Chriſt: this alſo is euident out of Moſes, that not the kind of death, but the deſert of death made it ignominious, Deut.21.22. If a man haue committed a treſpaſſe worthie of death, and be put to death, and thou hang him on a tree, &c. We ſee then that our ſinnes hanging with Chriſt vpon the croſſe, made the ſame an accurſed death.

Not the death of the croſſe, but the cauſe maketh it accurſed.

Deut.21.22.

2. Chriſt was made that curſe, which he redeemed vs from, otherwiſe the Apoſtle had not reaſoned ſoundly, we are redeemed from the curſe, becauſe Chriſt was made a curſe: hee remitteth that curſe to vs, which he receiued in himſelfe. Beda alſo ſaith, Chriſtus ſupplicium noſtrum ſine reatu ſuſcepit, vt ſolueret reatum, & finiret ſupplicium: Chriſt hath taken our puniſhment without guilt, to looſe the guilt, and end the puniſhment, in 3. ad Galat. What other puniſhment ended he, but that we tooke? but to vs was due for the tranſgreſſion of the law, the curſe both of body and ſoule: Ergo, the ſame curſe Chriſt tooke.

3. The wordes in Moſes are maledictus deo, he is curſed to God, that hangeth one a tree, but no death in it ſelfe is more ignominious then another before God, the ſhame thereof is externall, and concerneth men: Ergo, the curſe was not in the ignominious death: the ordinarie gloſſe thus noteth vpon theſe words: Non eſt hoc in contumeliam Domini, quid mirum ſi maledictus dicitur Deo, qui habet in ſe, quod Deus odit, i. peccatum: This redoundeth not to the reproch of God; for what maruell, if he be ſaid to be accurſed to God, that hath in himſelfe that which God hateth, namely ſinne, in 3. Gal. it is not the maner of the death only, that made it ignominious, but our ſins, which Chriſt bare.

4. Oecumenius vpon this place thus writeth: we were ſubiect to the curſe becauſe we had tranſgreſſed the law; Chriſt was not ſubiect, becauſe he had fulfilled it: Eam ergo execrationem ſuſcepit, cui obnoxius non erat, quum ſuſpenſus fuit in ligno, vt execrationem ſolueret, quæ aduerſus nos erat: He therfore tooke that curſe, to the which hee was not ſubiect, when hee hanged vpon the tree, to looſe the curſe which was againſt vs, in 3. ad Gal. From hence I reaſon thus: Chriſt tooke that curſe for vs, which otherwiſe was not due vnto him; but a poſſibilitie to die, was incident and appertaining vnto the humane nature of Chriſt, though he had not died for vs, which notwithſtanding was impoſſible: Ergo, the curſe was not in Chriſts death onely. That Chriſt was by his owne nature ſubiect to mortalitie, 1. the Scripture teſtifieth; It became him in all things to be like vnto vs, Heb.2.17. Ergo, hee was mortall as we are by nature. 2. S. Ambroſe giueth this reaſon: Quis exceptum ſe putet à conditione moriendi, qui non exceptus ſit à conditione naſcendi: Who can thinke himſelfe exempt from the condition of dying, that is not freed from being borne? in obit. Valentinian. Chriſt therefore being borne, had an aptneſſe in his nature to die. 3. Damaſcene, εἰ ἄφθαρτον τοῦ κυρίου σῶμα οὐχ ὁμοούσιον: If the Lords body had been immortall, it had not been of the ſame ſubſtance with ours: then it would follow, ſaith hee, that Chriſt was not truly made man, and ſo conſequently we not truly ſaued: de fid. lib. 3. c. 28. 4. And Ambroſe againe ſaith: Chriſt was not exempted from death, Vt carnis quam ſuſceperat, legem non recuſaret: That he ſhould not refuſe the law of the fleſh, which he tooke: In Luc. 22. Mors Chriſti communis ſecundum naturam corporis, ſpecialis ſecundum virtutem: Chriſts death was common in the nature of his bodie, but ſpeciall in reſpect of the vertue and power thereof: Ambr. ibid.

Whether Chriſt tooke vpon him mans mortall nature.

Yet leſt I be here miſtaken, as though I did thinke, that Chriſt, if he had not died vpon the croſſe, (if it had been poſſible) ſhould otherwiſe haue died. I am farre from ſo thinking: for Chriſt had neuer taſted death but for vs, Heb.2.9. I onely ſhew that the law of mortalitie was in his fleſh by the nature thereof, which law notwithſtanding by his diuine ſpirit, ſhould haue been ſuſpended and ouerruled, So that he was not, but in the caſe of our redemption to haue died. And here I willingly embrace Damaſcenes iudgement: The fleſh of Chriſt οὐ κατὰ φύσιν θνητὸ τυγχάνον ἐξ αὐτῆς, was not by nature free from mortalitie, but yet ζωοποιὸς γέγονε, it was a quickening and liuing fleſh, and exempted from mortalitie by the hypoſtaticall vnion of the Godhead: de fid. orthod. lib. 3. c. 21.

Chriſt ſhould not haue died but for vs. Heb.2.9.

Thus then I conclude with Auguſtine: Credo filium dei mortuum eſſe non ſecundum pœnam iniuſtitiæ quam ex toto non habuit, ſed ſecundum legem naturæ, quam pro humani generis redemptione ſuſcepit: I beleeue that the Sonne of God died, not according to the puniſhment of vnrighteouſnes, which hee had not at all, but according to the law of nature, which he tooke for the redemption of mankind. contra felician. c. 18. If death then and mortalitie were in Chriſts nature, and thereunto appertaining, but the curſe which he tooke, did not belong vnto him, but to vs onely for our ſinne; it followeth, that this curſe was not wholly in the death of his bodie.

5. That curſe which Chriſt did beare, he hath redeemed vs from: but wee are not freed nor redeemed from ſhamefull and ignominious kinds of death: the members of Chriſt haue been racked, ſtoned, hewen aſunder, &c. Heb.11.35.37. Ergo, the curſe which was laid vpon Chriſt, was not in his ignominious death.

Heb.11.35.

Obiect. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith: Heb.12.2. That Ieſus endured the croſſe, and deſpiſed the ſhame, he referreth the ſhame to the manner of death vpon the croſſe.

Heb.12.2.

Anſw. 1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the ſhame of the croſſe, but not of the curſe. 2. Wee confeſſe that it was a ſhamefull and curſed death, but therein lay not the whole curſe. 3. To this ſhame belonged not onely the manner of death which Chriſt ſuffered, but in that hee was counted among tranſgreſſors, Iſay.53.12.

tranſgreſſors, Iſay.53.12. and was put to death by the Iewes as a tranſgreſſor of their law: and ſo herein conſiſted the chiefe part of the ſhame and curſe of the croſſe, that he bare our ſins, and ſo was counted a tranſgreſſor for vs.

*Obiect.*2. But the Apoſtle proueth Chriſt to be made a curſe, onely becauſe he hanged vpon a tree: the ignominie then of his death made the curſe.

*Anſw.*1. We grant it was a curſed death, but therein the Apoſtle wholly and onely placeth not the curſe. 2. I ſhewed before out of Moſes and Hierome, that not the hanging of euery one, but onely of malefactors was accurſed: ſo that not the death, but the deſert, not the condition, but the cauſe, not the ſuſpenſion, but the tranſgreſſion made the curſe: and ſo Chriſt in this ignominious death was made a curſe by reaſon of our ſinnes that were laid vpon him: and thus as he was made ſinne for vs, and reputed a ſinner in our ſteed; ſo verely hee felt Gods wrath and curſe in his ſoule, which was due to our ſinnes.

I will conclude with Auguſtine: Maledictus omnis, &c. qui benedictus in ſua iuſtitia, maledictus ob delicta noſtra: Curſed is euery one that hangeth on a tree, euen euery one, yea, the Sonne of God himſelfe,—who was bleſſed in his owne righteouſneſſe, but accurſed for our ſinnes: And before hee thus writeth: rehearſing the Apoſtles words, that Chriſt was ſent in the ſimilitude of ſinful fleſh, Rom. 8.3. Illa de peccato eſt mors, &c. Becauſe death is of ſin, that fleſh, though of the virgine, yet was mortall, had the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh, &c. And againe the Apoſtle ſaith, God made him ſinne for vs. 2.Cor.5.20. Maledictum comes peccati: But malediction is the companion of ſinne or tranſgreſſion. *cont. Fauſt. Manich. lib.*14.*c.*5.6. If Chriſt then were accurſed for our ſinnes, if he by nature of his fleſh were ſubiect to mortalitie, if malediction were adherent to our ſinnes which he bare, then did not the curſe onely conſiſt in his outward death: We confeſſe, that it alſo was part of the curſe, as *Auguſtine ibid. c.*9. Mors ipſa ex maledicto eſt: Death is accurſed, becauſe it is the puniſhment of ſinne, but it was not the whole nor the greateſt part of that curſe, which Chriſt was made for vs.

Rom.8.3.

2.Cor.5.20.

Wherein the curſe laid vpon Chriſt for vs chiefly conſiſted.

Againe, hee thus writeth vpon thoſe words of the Apoſtle, Galath.3.13. Curſed is euery one, &c. Chriſtus ex parte mortali pependit in cruce: quid niſi mors Domini in ligno pependit — quid pependit in ligno, niſi peccatum veteris hominis, quod Dominus — pro nobis ſuſcepit — in eius peccati & mortis figura Moſes in eremo — erexit ſerpentem — non igitur mirum ſi de maledicto vicit maledictum, de morte mortem, de peccato peccatum — hæc omnia in cruce triumphata ſunt, &c. Chriſt in his mortall part hung vpon the croſſe: what but the death of our Lord hung vpon the croſſe, — what but the ſinne of the old man did hang vpon the croſſe, which the Lord vndertooke for vs? as the Apoſtle ſaith, hee made him ſinne for vs: for a figure of this ſinne and death, Moſes ſet vp the Serpent in the wilderneſſe — therefore it is no maruell, if he ouercome the curſe by a curſe, death by death, ſinne by ſinne: all theſe were triumphed vpon on the croſſe: in 3.c. ad Galat. From this ſentence of Auguſtine I inferre: 1. That Chriſt did beare that curſe vpon the croſſe, ouer the which he triumphed, but he triumphed ouer the whole curſe both of body and ſoule. 2. That as he ſubdued our death by his death, ſo our ſin by his ſin, now imputed to him, and our curſe by his curſe: ſo that, ſuch curſe as hee redeemed vs from, hee bare himſelfe. 3. Neither doth he ſay, that Chriſt was accurſed only in his mortall part, but did hang vpon the croſſe in his mortall part, which we denie not, but there hanged alſo the curſe of death and ſinne.

2.Cor.5.21.

Iuſtine Martyr ſaith, that God would haue Chriſt to receiue the curſes wholly of all: if he receiued all kind of curſes, then both in his ſoule and bodie.

τὰς ὅλων τῶν πάντων κατάρας ἀναδέξασθαι dial. cum Tryphon.

Confeſſ. of Scotland: Hee ſuffered not onely the cruell death of the croſſe which was accurſed by the ſentence of God, but alſo that he ſuffered for a ſeaſon the wrath of his father, which ſinners had deſerued, &c. See the teſtimonie of ſome Romaniſts afterward produced.

Artic. of Chriſts death and paſſion.

Thus I truſt it is euident that Chriſt did ſuſtaine in his ſoule, and not in his body onely, the wrath and curſe of God, which was due vnto our ſinnes: and ſo by bearing our ſins, hath acquited vs thereof, and by enduring the curſe hath alſo freed vs therefrom: and ſo I end with that ſaying of Hierome: Iniuria domini noſtra gloria; The Lords iniurie is our glorie: in 3 ad Galath. The more we aſcribe to Chriſts ſufferings the leſſe remaineth of ours: the more painefully that he ſuffered, the more fully are we redeemed. the greater his ſorrow was, the greater our ſolace, his deſolation is our conſolation, his croſſe our comfort, his annoy our endleſſe ioy; his diſtreſſe in ſoule our releaſe; his calamity our comfort; his miſerie our mercie, his aduerſitie our felicitie, and to conclude, his hell our heauen: And ſo our bleſſed Sauiour, as Chryſoſtome ſaith; Pluribus in morte doloribus vexatus, quam omnes tragœdi ſcribere poſſunt, expirauit: Being vexed in his death, with more ſorrowes then all tragicall writers in the world can expreſſe, gaue vp his ſpirit: hom. 31. in Mat. For this ſo infinite and vnſpeakable loue of our Sauiour, we can neuer be ſufficiently thankfull, who vouchſafed not onely to die, but to enter into hell for vs; not onely to offer his bodie to paine, but his ſoule to ſorrow for vs; wounds to receiue in his ſenſe, and terrors in conſcience; a croſſe in his bodie, and a curſe in his ſoule: the greater debt he paid, the greater our dutie: the more painefull his croſſe, the more fruitfull his death, the more thankefull his loue: the deeper his wound, the more infinitely are we bound: the more excellent his patience, the more willing ought to be our obedience: and as Chryſoſtome well ſaith: Si per ſingulos dies pro eo moriremur, qui nos dilexit, non ſic meritum exolueremus: If we ſhould die euery day for him, which hath ſo loued vs, we could not be anſwerable to his merit. *hom.*19. in Matth.

The concluſion of all is this, that ſeeing the bodily ſufferings of Chriſt, in reſpect of Gods iuſtice

1. were not ſufficient, *part.*1. that Chriſts agonie in the garden was not cauſed by the feare of his bodily
2. death, but proceeded from the feare and feeling of Gods wrath, *part.*2. and ſeeing our Sauiour ſuffe-
3. red properly and immediately in ſoule, and not by compaſſion only or conſent with his bodie. *part.*3.
4. if Chriſt did ſuſtaine the very torments of hell in his ſoule, as is prooued, *part.*4. and did appeare be-
5. fore God as guiltie of our ſinnes, *part.*5. and was perplexed in his ſoule and conſcience for the ſame,
6. *part.*6. if our Sauiour by the iuſtice of God was to die for our ſinnes, and by his death did ſatiſfie his
7. iuſtice, and appeaſe his wrath, part. 7. if in his ſoule hee verely felt the wrath of God kindled
8. againſt our ſinnes, part. 8. and truly complained that hee was in that inſtant forſaken of God,
9. *part.*9. and laſtly if he were made a curſe for vs in his bodie and ſoule, *part.*10. It remaineth that Chriſt
10. did not onely ſuffer in bodie for our ſinnes, but ſuſtained alſo in his ſoule ſuch puniſhment, vexation and ſorrow, as was due vnto vs, and which we ſhould haue endured, if he had not as our ſuretie in his owne perſon vndertaken for vs: ſo I conclude with Saint Ambroſe: Paſſionem in Chriſto plus veneror quam creationem, quia creati ad laborem ſumus, redempti ad quietem: I doe more honour Chriſts paſſion, then the creation; for we were created to labour, we are redeemed to reſt. *ſerm.*14. *in Pſalm.*19. And this queſtion haue I of purpoſe trauelled in, though not as I would, my leaſure not ſeruing thereunto, and being ſo ſtraited, the Printer haſtening this worke, that I ſcarcely had a moneth to diſpatch this treatiſe: yet I haue laboured to my power to ſet forth Chriſts holy ſufferings for vs, that nothing be detracted therefrom: and ſo I end with that ſaying of Origen: Non ſic mihi videtur inutilis, qui natiuitatem Chriſti, ſtellam, &c. ſalutationem angelorum tacet, quam qui crucifixum eum abſcondit: He ſeemeth not to me to be ſo vnprofitable, which doth conceale Chriſts natiuitie, the Starre and ſalutation of the Angels, as he that doth hide Chriſt crucified. *hom.*1. in Matth.

Laſtlie for the confirmation of this truth, that Chriſt ſuffered the wrath of God in his ſoule for vs, I will produce. 1. The teſtimonie of our aduerſaries themſelues. 2. The witneſſe of the holie Martyrs that died in this faith. 3. The conſent of the famous writers and confeſſors of the Church of England.

First for our aduerſaries: 1. Nicolaus Cuſanus a man of great account among them thus writeth: Illam pœnam ſenſus conformem damnatis in inferno pati voluit in gloriam dei patris ſui: That paine of ſenſe conformable or like vnto the damned in hell he would ſuffer to the glory of God his father: *Excitation. lib.*10. ex ſerm. qui per ſpiritum ſanctum ſeipſum obtulit.

2. Perus: Illa Chriſti derelictio pauor eſt conſcientiæ noſtræ ob admiſſa peccata, quæ iudicium Dei & iram æternam experitur, & ſic afficitur, quaſi in perpetuum derelicta & reiecta à facie Dei eſſet: That dereliction of Chriſt is the trembling of our conſcience for ſin committed, which feeleth by experience Gods iudgement and eternal wrath, and is ſo affected, as if it were for euer forſaken, and reiected from the preſence of God. *lib.*4. *in Matth. c.*27. in illa verba: deus meus, &c.

3. Durand. Præcipua cauſa fuit anima, &c. The chiefeſt cauſe of the effects of Chriſts croſſe was his ſoule. in 3. *diſt.*22. *q.*3. Bellarmine ſaith, not ſo: Sed præcipua cauſa fuit totum compoſitum. i. totus ille homo qui patiebatur: præterea eſto, fuiſſet anima præcipua cauſa, tamen etiam caro & ſanguis fuit cauſa; alioqui nō vere diceretur, ſanguis eius emundat nos: The chiefe cauſe is the whole compound, that is, the whole man which ſuffered: beſide, be it, that his ſoule was the chiefe cauſe, yet his fleſh and blood was a cauſe, otherwiſe it ſhould not be truly ſaid, his blood doth clenſe vs. 1. Ioh. 1.7. Here by Bellarmines owne teſtimonie the ſoule of Chriſt (which muſt bee by the ſuffering thereof) is the chiefeſt cauſe of our redemption. *Bellarm. lib.*4. *de Chriſt. anim. ca.*15.

Secondly, the holy martyrs haue thus beleeued of Chriſts ſoule ſufferings: Maſter Latimer Biſhop and martyr: I beleeue verily for my part, that Chriſt ſuffered the paines of hell proportionablie, as it correſpondeth and anſwereth to the whole ſinne of the world: And againe, I ſee no inconuenience to ſay that Chriſt ſuffered in ſoule in hell, I ſingularly commend the exceeding great charitie of Chriſt, that for our ſakes would ſuffer in hell in his ſoule: It ſetteth out the vnſpeakable hatred, that God hath to ſinne, &c. *ſerm.*7. coram reg. Eduard. Here though M. Latimer ſeeme to thinke that Chriſt might ſuffer in the place of hell in ſoule, for the which we alleage him not: yet he giueth three effectuall reaſons, that it was neceſſarie for Chriſt to ſuffer the paines of hell in his ſoule. 1. That his paines may be proportionable to the ſinne of the world. 2. To ſet forth Chriſts charitie. 3. And the great wrath of God againſt ſinne.

Iohn Warne holy martyr hath alſo ſealed this truth: *Chriſt ſuffering for our ſinnes did beare our deſerued condemnation, the paines of death, the taſte of abiection, the very terrors of hell, yeelding his ſpirit to his father, his bodie to be buried in the earth. Fox p.*1580. *col.*2.

Thirdly for the confeſſors, and the confeſſion of our Church, this euidence we haue.

1. The annotation in the great Bible called the Biſhops Bible, allowed publikely to be red in our Church: vpon the 22. chapter of S. Luke, verſ. 44. thus teſtifieth: He felt the horror of Gods wrath and iudgement againſt ſinne.

2. And in the booke of homilies allowed publikely to be recited to the people. *ſerm.*1. of the paſſion, it thus ſtandeth: Chriſt did put himſelfe betweene Gods deſerued wrath and our ſin, and rent the obligation, wherein we were in danger to God, and paid our debt. Our debt was a great deale too great for vs to haue paid; & without paiment God the Father could neuer be at one with vs: it pleaſed him to be the payer therof, and to diſcharge vs quite. And again afterward, He beſtowed himſelf wholy for the ranſoming of vs. If Chriſt then gaue himſelf wholy for vs, & paied al our debt, whereof the chiefe part was the griefe and anguiſh of ſoule and ſenſe of Gods wrath,it was neceſſarie that Chriſt ſhould haue ſuffered all theſe things for vs.

3. In the Catechiſme authorized publikely to be taught,in the expoſition of the Creede vpon the article of Chriſts paſſion,it is thus confeſſed : Chriſt ſuffered moſt painefull and ſhamefull death,ſuſtaining with all torments of mind more cruell,then any bodily death. And againe, Chriſt became our ſurety and pledge vnto his father,to anſwere,pay and ſuffer,whatſoeuer we did owe,and had deſerued.

4. Beſide this publike teſtimonie of our Church, the common defenders of the faith of the Goſpell,both by writing and preaching haue thus taught; as D. Fulke, that worthie learned man,thus witneſſeth : It was the burthen of ſinne and the curſe of God due vnto ſinne,which Chriſt tooke vpon him, to deliuer vs from ſinne and the puniſhment thereof,and not onely the bodily paine of death, that enforced him,that was God,to complaine,that he was forſaken of God. Annot.in Matth.27.ſect.3.

Againe,What is more to the honour of Chriſt,then that he vouchſafed to deſcend into hell for vs,and to abide that paine,which we had deſerued to ſuffer eternally : and what may bee rather called hell,then the anguiſh of ſoule, which he ſuffered,when he being God complained, that he was forſaken of God? Fulk. in 2.Act.ſect.11.

5. Maſter Fox that reuerend godly writer,and faithfull preacher of the Goſpell, conſenteth with the reſt,and thus deliuereth his iudgement : The torments which Chriſt ſuffered in ſoule and ſpirit,were the greateſt of all,when as he not onely in bodie decaying for weakeneſſe and bleeding,but in ſoule fainting with anguiſh and diſcomfort,began to crie with a lowd voyce, My God,my God,why haſt thou forſaken me? ſerm.de Chriſto Crucifixo.

6. A zealous preacher of our Church,who had while he liued great experience of the caſes of conſcience,and an excellent grace from God to comfort ſuch as were afflicted,doubteth not to ſay, that Chriſt muſt ſuffer the very pangs and paines of hell for the leaſt ſinne that euery man committed, ſeeing that euen our leaſt ſinnes cauſed him to be accurſed,and in the extremitie of griefe to crie, My God,my God,why haſt thou forſaken me? in his Meditations,pag.215.ſet forth ſince his death.

Thus(I truſt)this point is thorowly cleared,that Chriſt ſuffered the very anguiſh and hell ſorrowes of ſoule for vs,and taſted of the bitter cup of Gods wrath due vnto our ſinnes, which otherwiſe wee ſhould haue moſt deepely drunke of : here I will end this queſtion. And this I ſimply and vnfainedlie proteſt,that the loue of ſeeking and ſearching out the truth hath drawne me into it, not the deſire of contention with any in our Church,much leſſe to oppoſe my ſelfe to the iudgement of any reuerend perſon,whom for their authoritie I honour,for their perſon I reuerence,for their learned trauels in the Church we are much bound vnto:from whom as I am vnwilling to diſſent,ſo deſirous to learne.And ſo I conclude; moſt humbly crauing in the bowels of Chriſt, that where I haue ſaid the truth, I may be receiued; where I doubt,I may be reſolued; where I haue well ſaid, I be not condemned; where I haue ignorantly ſlipped,I may be pardoned. For I doe moſt willingly embrace that ſentence of Auguſtine: Aliquid aliter ſapere,quam res habet,humana tentatio eſt; in nullo aliter ſapere,quam res habet, angelica perfectio eſt : Otherwiſe ſometime to thinke,then the matter is, is an humane tentation; but in nothing to be deceiued,is angelicall perfection : De baptiſ.2.5. If in this queſtion of ſoule-ſufferings,there be any difference of opinion in our Church,let not any man take offence thereat,for wee all doe conſent,that Chriſts death is alone ſufficient,neither doe we varie in any fundamentall point : they which doe free Chriſt from his ſpirituall ſufferings,do it vnto his honour, leſt by this meanes any deſperation,or doubting might be faſtened vpon Chriſts ſoule; they which affirme the ſenſe of Gods wrath in Chriſts ſoule,doe therein alſo ſeeke Chriſts honour,leſt any thing ſhould bee diminiſhed of his holy ſufferings. Seeing therefore we all hold the ſame foundation, and tend to the ſame end, let vs not either by writing or ſpeaking nouriſh domeſticall contention,but be willing one to yeeld vnto another in the truth, and euery one readie to ſay with Saint Hierome, Non ſolum te viciſſe exiſtimes, vicimus vterque, palmam refers tu mei, & ego tui erroris; vtinam mihi ſemper ſic diſputare contingat,vt ad meliora proficiens, deſeram, quod male tenebam : Thinke not, that thou onely haſt ouercome,we are conquerors both, you beare the palme and praiſe of my error,I of yours : I wiſh that I may alwaies diſpute with ſuch ſucceſſe, that proceeding to the better,I may forſake that, which before I did not well hold : aduerſ.Luciferian. But I haue tarried too long in this queſtion : the next followeth.

THE FOVRTH QVESTION, WHETHER CHRIST deſcended in ſoule into hell, to deliuer the Patriarches.

The Papiſts.

THey do beleeue that Chriſt according to his ſoule went downe to hell,to deliuer the Patriarches and all iuſt men there holden in bondage till his death,Rhemiſt. Act.2.ſect.12. 26.Error.

*Argum.*1.He that aſcended, is he that deſcended firſt into the loweſt parts of the earth,Epheſ.4.9. that is,into hell,the which is the loweſt place in the earth,*Bellarm.cap.*12. Epheſ.4.9.

*Anſw.*1. The earth it ſelfe,in reſpect of the world,is the loweſt part, ſo that here one part of the earth is not to be compared with another:but the whole earth,in reſpect of the high heauens,hath the name of the lower parts: ſo is it taken, Pſalm.139.15.Thou haſt faſhioned me beneath,or in the lower Pſalm.139.15.

parts of the earth: but Dauid (I truſt) they will not ſay, was borne in hell, becauſe he ſpeaketh of the lower parts of the earth, conſul. Bez. in hunc locum. So that by the deſcending of Chriſt into the loweſt parts of the earth, is meant nothing elſe, but the loweſt and extreameſt degree of his abaſing and humiliation, Fulk. annot. in hunc locum: as S. Paul ſaith, that he made himſelfe of no reputation, and tooke vpon him the forme of a ſeruant. 2. Againe, the Prophet Dauid ſaith, they that ſeeke his ſoule to deſtroy it, ſhall goe downe into the loweſt parts of the earth: which the Septuagint tranſlate, κατώτατα τῆς γῆς, infima terræ, the loweſt parts: and S. Paul ſaith, in the comparatiue κατώτερα, the lower parts: As in the Pſalme therefore by the loweſt parts the Pſalmiſt vnderſtandeth the graue and deſtruction, as it may appeare, verſ. 10. They ſhall be a portion for Foxes; ſo the Apoſtle by deſcending into the lower parts, doth ſet forth the loweſt degree of Chriſts humiliation, in death, and the graue.

Philip. 2.7.
Pſalm. 63.9.10.

1. Contra. Bellarmine thus obiecteth: 1. The inferiour part of the earth, ſignifieth not the whole earth, ſed vnam partem, but one part of the earth, and that lower then the reſt: it doth not then betoken the ſuperficies, or vpper part of the earth.

2. Epheſ. 4.10. 2. He deſcended (ſaith the Apoſtle) that he might fill all things, and therefore it was neceſſarie that Chriſt ſhould truly deſcend to hell to deliuer the Patriarches, as he deſcended into the earth, to viſit all parts of his kingdome: that euen the things alſo vnder the earth, that is, the infernall ſpirits ſhould bow the knee vnto him, Bellarm. c. 12. Loc. 6.

1. Anſw. 1. The inferiour part of the earth being compared with it ſelfe, cannot ſignifie the whole earth: but being vnderſtood to be the inferiour part of the world, the whole earth may very well bee comprehended. 2. Where the Apoſtle ſaith in the plurall, inferiores partes, the inferiour parts, it is great ignorance to ſay, that hee meaneth, vnam partem, but one part. 3. Origen thus expoundeth S. Paul to ſpeake of Chriſt: Quaſi de ſuperioribus ad inferiora venientis: Comming from the ſuperiour to the inferiour or lower parts, Hom. 2. in Geneſ. And againe, Deſcendere deus dicitur quando curam humanæ fragilitatis habere dignatur, &c. God is ſaid to deſcend, when he vouchſafeth to haue care of humane frailtie, which more ſpecially is to be vnderſtood of Chriſt, qui deſcendit non ſolum curare, ſed portare, quæ noſtra ſunt, who deſcended not onely to cure, but to beare, that which is ours, Hom. 4. in Geneſ. Thus alſo Auguſtine teſtifieth: Cæleſtis illa habitatio angelorum — illa pars rerum ſuperna eſt; hæc terrena — ſi illi comparatur, inferna eſt: cum enim & hic ſunt mortui, ne mireris, ſi infernum dicitur: That celeſtiall habitation of the Angels is the ſuperiour part, this terrene life in reſpect of that, the infernall: for ſeeing here are alſo vpon the earth, they which are dead, no maruell if it be infernal, in Pſal 85. Their owne Lyranus alloweth this interpretation: becauſe the parts of the earth are inferior, reſpectu aliarum partium mundi: in reſpect of other parts of the world.

1. How Chriſt filleth all things Auguſtine well ſheweth: Nec tamen localem dei fingimus preſentiam, non mundum dimittens ad cœlos aſcendit, nec cœlum deſerens ad terram venit, ſed vno eodemque tempore totus totum impleuit: Neither doe we imagine a locall preſence of God, for he went not to heauen leauing the world, neither forſaking heauen came to the earth; but in one and the ſame time, he all and whole filled the whole, Cont. Felician. c. 16. Chriſt then not by his locall preſence, but by his diuine power filled all things.

How all things are ſaid to bow the knee vnto Chriſt.
Rom. 14.11.
Epheſ. 2.2.

2. 2. Neither is that place Philip. 2.10. to be vnderſtood of Chriſts deſcenſion: 1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh directly of Chriſts exaltation: verſ. 9. Therefore God hath exalted him: but the deſcenſion belongeth not to Chriſts exaltation, as Origen ſaith: Si diligenter conſideremus, inueniemus, quia nunquam quis in ſanctum fere locum deſcendiſſe dicitur, neque ad vituperabilem conſcendiſſe: If we well conſider, we ſhall find, that one is not ſaid to deſcend to an honourable place, nor to aſcend to a diſhonorable, Hom. 15. in Geneſ. Hee thinketh then, that to deſcend belongeth not to honour, or exaltation. 2. S. Paul ſheweth, that this bowing of the knee vnto Chriſt of all creatures ſhall chiefly bee accompliſhed in the day of iudgement, Rom. 14.11.12. where hauing made mention of bowing of the knee, he inferreth, verſ. 12. ſo then euery one of vs ſhall giue accounts of himſelfe vnto God. 3. It is too great curioſitie to applie this place to the infernall ſpirits properly: for they are not yet vnder the earth as tyed to a certaine place, being by the Apoſtle called the princes of the ayre, Epheſ. 2.2. the Apoſtle rather by this diſtribution, of things in heauen, things in the earth, and things vnder the earth, comprehendeth generally all creatures in the world whatſoeuer: as in the ſecond commandement we are forbidden to make the likenes of any thing to worſhip it, either in heauen aboue, in the earth beneath, or in the waters vnder the earth. 4. To cauſe the infernall ſpirits to bow the knee to Chriſt, that is, to acknowledge his power, Auguſtine aſcribeth not to the preſence of Chriſts humanitie, but to the power of his diuinitie: Neque aliter eum video ſuſcitare potuiſſe carnem ſuam, ſi apud inferos prædicem velut abſentis dei non fuiſſe potentiam: Neither doe I ſee how otherwiſe Chriſt could haue raiſed his fleſh, if we doe thinke the power of his Godhead was abſent in hell: Act. cum Felician. c. 17.

3. 3. All this being yeelded, that Chriſt by his deſcent into hell ſhaked the infernall powers, and triumphed ouer them, which is by ſome of our reuerend fathers, and learned brethren, vpon perſwaſion of diuers reaſons and arguments affirmed, yet hath not Bellarmine obtained that he would, that Chriſt by his locall deſcent did deliuer the ſoules of the Patriarches out of hell.

Act. 2.27. Argum. 2. Act. 2.27. Thou wilt not leaue my ſoule in hell, nor ſuffer thy holy one to ſee corruption: this cannot be vnderſtood of the graue; for the graue is no place for the ſoule: and here the ſoule is oppoſed to the fleſh, that as his fleſh ſhould ſee no corruption, ſo his ſoule ſhould not remaine in hel: Chriſt therefore went downe in ſoule to hell, which was to no other end but to deliuer the fathers from thence, Bellar. ibid.

Anſw. This place is alleaged by S. Peter, out of the ſixteenth Pſalme; from thence then the ſenſe of this place muſt be deriued: firſt therefore we ſhall ſhew, that neither the word (נפש nephesh) here tranſlated ſoule, can properly ſignifie the ſoule of Chriſt; nor the other word (שאול sheol) can be tranſlated hell.

First, this word nephesh is taken in Scripture for the life: Let vs not ſmite his ſoule, that is, take away his life: and conſequentlie it ſignifieth ſometime the verie bodie of the dead, wherein there was life, Leuit. 21. verſ. 1. 11. And that in this place, nephesh ſignifieth the life, it ſhall appeare by the like place: My life (חי chai) draweth neere to the graue or hell, (sheol) this place may very well interpret the other.

Geneſ. 37. 21.
Leuit. 21. 1. 11.
Pſal. 88. 3.

Secondly, the other word (sheol) is not here vnderſtood hell. There are foure words commonlie vſed in the Pſalmes, expreſſing the ſame thing in effect which (sheol) doth: yet none of them all are applied to ſignifie hell: the firſt is (שחת shacath) fouea, the pit. What profit is there in my blood, when I goe downe to the pit? the ſecond (בור bhor) the lake: the third (קבר cheber) the graue: both theſe words are indifferently vſed for the ſame thing, Pſal. 88. 3. the word is (sheol) verſ. 4. 5. the other two words are alſo vſed, as expreſſing the former: And all theſe three doe containe a deſcription of death, and of the graue: the fourth is, (תהמות tehomoth) abyſſus terræ, thou wilt take me from the deepe of the earth, In all theſe places there is no mention made at all of hell, but onely of the graue.

The Hebrew word sheol, alwaies ſignifieth not hell.
Pſal. 30. 9.
Pſalm. 71. 20.

Now that this place can haue no ſuch meaning, as Bellar. enforceth, thus we ſhew it: firſt, this place is ſo applied to Chriſt,[a] as it muſt firſt be true in Dauid: wel then, firſt they muſt make Dauids ſoule to be in hell then muſt it be in the loweſt hell, Pſal. 86. 13. Thou haſt deliuered my ſoule from the neathermoſt hell (sheol) Now Limb. patrum is not the neathermoſt hel, but as they ſay) only in the brim of hel. Againe, S. Peter onely applieth this text to the reſurrection of Chriſt, v. 31. he knowing this before, ſpake of the reſurrection of Chriſt: But the reſurrection was onely of the bodie of Chriſt, not of his ſoule: wherefore this place cannot be vnderſtood of the deſcending of Chriſts ſoule into hell, to deliuer the Patriarches.

[a] Typically, though hiſtorically it onely agree to Chriſt: and ſo is the contradiction healed which is obiected: Loidoromaſt. cont. 15.
Pſalm. 86. 13.

Contra. Bellarmine replieth: 1. That anima, the ſoule, cannot be here taken for the life of the bodie or fleſh: for that the Apoſtle expreſſeth afterward, that his fleſh did ſee no corruption, verſ. 31. Wherfore vnleſſe we admit a needleſſe repetition of the ſame thing, it was one thing for Chriſts ſoule not to be left in hell, another for his fleſh not to ſee corruption.

2. The Greeke word ᾅδης alwaies ſignifieth hell, the graue neuer: Bellar. c. 12 loc. 4.

1. Anſ. 1. Where the Prophet ſaith, Thou ſhalt not leaue my ſoule in hell, nor ſuffer thy holie one to ſee corruption though the ſame thing be here expreſſed, it is no needleſſe repetition, which as, after the manner of the Scripture, the latter part expoundeth the former: for he ſheweth how his ſoule, that is, his[b] life or perſon, ſhall not be left in hell, cauſe his fleſh ſhould be deliuered from corruption. 2. And that by ſoule, Chriſts perſon is to be vnderſtood it may appeare, as in the like ſenſe it is ſaid, Gen. 46. 26. The ſoules that went with Iacob into Egypt, and came out of his loines: yet their ſoules came not out of Iacobs loynes: ſo then, as Lyranus well ſaith, accipitur hic anima pro homine: Here the ſoule is taken for man: ponit partem pro toto, he putteth a part for the whole, gloſſ. interlin. Chriſts ſoule, that is, perſon, may be as well ſaid to be in the graue, as their ſoules to come out of Iacobs loines. And againe, Saint Peter by the holy one, expoundeth Chriſts fleſh: what is the holy one, but Chriſts ſoule or perſon? for holineſſe properly is not an adiunct of his fleſh onely, but of his perſon: as well then may ſoule be taken for the life, as the holy one for his fleſh. 3. Saint Peter ſaith, that the Prophet ſpake of Chriſts reſurrection which is of the bodie, not of the ſoule: as Auguſtine alſo ſaith; Primogenitus Chriſtus vocatur ex mortuis, quod primum illum ex inferni tenebris, in lucem reſurrectionis partus ediderit: Chriſt is called the firſt borne of the dead, becauſe the birth of the reſurrection did firſt bring him into the light out of the darknes of hell, de temp. ſerm. 161. But Chriſt is ſaid to be the firſt fruites of the dead only in reſpect of his body, not of his ſoule: Ergo, his ſoule deſcended not to deliuer the Patriarches out of hel.

[b] Who ſeeth not, that indifferently ſoule may be taken for the life or perſon: therefore here is no contradiction, as is obiected. See further, Loidorom. contrad. 5.
Geneſ. 46. 26.

2. That ᾅδης onely ſignifieth hell, the graue neuer, is an vntrue and vnlearned poſition: Geneſ. 42. 38. You ſhall bring my gray head with ſorrow to hell, where the Septuagint vſe the word ᾅδης. Did Iacob carrie his gray haires to hell? I thinke he left them in his graue. Ambroſe taketh the word ᾅδης to ſignifie, locum inuiſibilem defunctis preparatum, an inuiſible place prepared for the dead, &c. de ver. mart. c. 7. he ſeemeth to make it a generall word, to expreſſe the ſtate of the dead, whether in the place of ioy or torment.

Geneſ. 42. 38.

3. The marginall note of your owne vulgar Latine text thus obſerueth, Geneſ. 37. 35. vpon theſe words, I ſhall goe mourning to my ſonne into hell, Non hic ſignificat locum pœnarum, ſed foſſam vel ſepulchrum: It ſignifieth not here the place of puniſhment, which is hell, but the pit or the graue, &c. Who ſeeth not now this fellowes boldneſſe, that denieth hell to be taken for the graue?

Geneſ. 37. 35.

3. If hell bee heere taken properlie, then it will follow that Chriſts ſoule was in the ſorrowes of hell: as the Vulgar Latine readeth, Actes 2. verſe 24. Hauing looſed the ſorrowes of hell, becauſe it was impoſſible hee ſhould bee holden of it: and ſo Origene ſeemeth to thinke, when hee ſaith; Data eſt ei anima Chriſti redemptio pro nobis decepto — & non videntes, quia non poterit ſuſtinere in tenendo eam tormentis, &c. The ſoule of Chriſt was giuen (to the diuell) to be a redemption for vs, he being deceiued and not perceiuing, that he could not long hold it in torment, &c. and therefore it is ſaid, Thou wilt not leaue my ſoule in hell, &c. Tract. 12. in Matth. If Chriſts ſoule were tormented in hell, it muſt bee referred to his hell ſufferings vpon the croſſe, for after death he ſuffered not.

3.

Argum. 3. The Apoſtle ſaith: Rom. 10. 7. Say not who ſhall deſcend into the deepe, that is to fetch Chriſt againe from the dead: Here the deepe muſt be taken for hell, as the moſt oppoſite place to heauen: Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. 1. The Apoſtle taketh this place from Moſes, Deut. 30. 14. Say not who ſhall goe vp to heauen for vs, or goe ouer the ſea, &c. That which the Apoſtle tranſlateth the deepe, Moſes calleth the ſea, as Exod. 15. 5. The depths of the ſea couered them: the Apoſtle is not contrary to Moſes, nor yet diuers from him in ſenſe, though they differ in words: if then you will find hell here, you muſt ſeeke for it in the bottome alſo of the ſea.

Pſalm. 103. 13. 2. We need not ſound the center of the earth to make an oppoſition to heauen: for heauen ſo high, and the earth ſo low, are places oppoſite enough, as Pſalm. 103. 13. As high as the heauens are aboue the earth.

3. The Apoſtle expoundeth himſelfe: That is to bring Chriſt againe from the dead: the deepe then, whereof he ſpeaketh, is the place of the dead: but bodies onely die, ſoules die not: and therefore this deepe is not hell, where ſoules liue in endleſſe torment.

4. Origene thus expoundeth this place: Paulus quoniam deſcenſionis Chriſti myſterium prædicat profundum nominauit, quaſi de ſuperioribus ad inferiora venientis: Paul becauſe he doth ſet forth the myſterie of Chriſts deſcenſion, he nameth the deepe, as of one deſcending from the ſuperiour parts to the lower, Hom. 2. in Geneſ. this deepe which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, hee referreth to the earth, which is the deepe and lower part of the world, in reſpect of heauen.

5. Lyranus refuſeth their interpretations, which would haue this vnderſtood of Chriſts deſcending to Limbus patrum, and giueth this ſenſe of theſe words, to fetch Chriſt from the dead, Id eſt dicere, quod non fuit mortuus: That is to ſay, he died not, and conſequently, neither roſe againe.

Argum. 4. Bellarmine vrgeth other places to prooue Chriſts deſcent to deliuer the Patriarches: as that of Ionas, Matth. 12. 40. to the which ſee our anſwere in the appendix to this queſtion, error 27. argum. Papiſt. 2.

Likewiſe he diſcourſeth at large of that place of S. Peter, 1 Pet. 3. 19. 20. By the which he went and preached to the ſpirits in priſon, which were in times paſt diſobedient: See alſo our anſwere at large to this place before, in the 9. controuerſ. 1. queſt. argum. Papiſt. 3. Vnto which our anſwere, I will here adde thus much further: that they can haue no ſhew at all from this place, for the deliuerance of the Patriarches out of Limbus: becauſe the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of ſuch as were diſobedient, and in their diſobedience died: for if they had repented of their diſobedience, they ſhould not be named after the ſinnes which they had committed, but ſhould liue in their righteouſneſſe, which they had done, Ezech. 18. 22. to ſay then that Chriſt went downe to hell to deliuer the damned ſoules, doth contradict the Scripture, Luk. 16. 26. They cannot come from thence to vs: and S. Auguſtine doth count it contrary to the faith to ſay, by Chriſts deſcending to hel, homines, qui cum viuerent, minime crediderunt, apud inferos credere, that the incredulous and vnbeleeuers in their life time, beleeued in hell.

Ezech. 18. 22.

Luk. 16. 26.

The Proteſtants.

THat Chriſt our Sauiour, by the vertue of his death, did ouercome hell and the diuell, we doe verilie beleeue, which may be called a deſcent into hell: that he alſo ſuffered the torments of hell vpon the croſſe, and ſo deſcended into hell for vs, to abide that bitter paine which wee had deſerued to ſuffer eternally, we doe alſo hold and teach: for what rather may bee called hell, then the anguiſh of ſoule which he ſuffered, when he being God, yet complained that he was forſaken of God? Furthermore, if deſcending into hell, be taken according to the Hebrue Phraſe, For entring into the ſtate of the dead: ſo we alſo grant, that Chriſt deſcended into hell, Fulk. Act. 2. ſect. 11. But for the deſcending of Chriſt deſcended into hell, after your ſenſe, to deliuer the Patriaches from thence, when you can proue it out of Scripture, we will yeeld vnto you.

Luk. 23. 43. Argum. 1. The ſoule of Chriſt which he committed into his fathers hands, was in Paradiſe, where he promiſed the theefe ſhould be with him, Luke 23. 43. How then could his ſoule be three daies in hell: as you affirme, from the time of his death to his reſurrection? Fulk. Luk. 11. ſect. 4. Bellarmine anſwereth, that it was not impoſſible, that the ſoule of Chriſt ſhould be in two places at once, cap. 15. which is an anſwere not worthie to be anſwered; for who hath taught them ſo boldly to build their phantaſies vpon Gods power, hauing no warrant nor aſſurance of his will? May not the Vbiquitaries by the ſame reaſon proue the omnipreſence of Chriſts humanitie, becauſe he is able to make his ſoule and bodie to be in many places at once, as well as in two: and ſo conſequently by his power, which is infinite, as well in all places, as in many?

Againe, it may be anſwered, that Chriſt was with the thiefe in paradiſe as he was God.

How the theefe was with Chriſt in Paradiſe.

Contra. 1. The anſwere made by our Sauiour to the thiefe, muſt be agreeable to his demand: now he made requeſt to Chriſt as man: Remember me, when thou ſhalt come into thy kingdome: the Godhead neither commeth nor goeth: and as he was God, he was neuer out of his kingdome: ſo then as Chriſt was to enter into his kingdome, ſo was he with the thiefe, and the thiefe with him: but he entred into his kingdome in his humanitie: Ergo, in his humane ſoule he was that day with the theefe in paradiſe, and the theefe with him.

2. Chriſt ſaith not, This day I will be with thee, but thou ſhalt be with me in paradiſe: Chriſt is with vs as God euery where, as he ſaith, Matth. 28.20. I am with you to the end of the world: when he ſpeaketh as God, he is ſaid to be with vs: but when we are ſaid to be with him, his whole perſon is deſcribed: as S. Paul ſaith, I deſire to be diſſolued and to be with Chriſt, Phil. 1.23. But as Chriſt was God, euen then he was with Paul: this difference is well noted by Bernard: Chriſtus nobiſcum eſt, &c. Chriſt is with vs at all times to the end of the world; but when ſhall we be with him? when we ſhall be taken vp and meete Chriſt in the ayre, Serm.16.in Pſal.91.

Phil.1.23.

3. And that Chriſts humane preſence in Paradiſe is to be vnderſtood, Bernard againe ſheweth thus writing: Factum eſt vtique, quod promiſſum eſt, ipſo die quo compaſſus & corregnauit: That, which was promiſed, was fulfilled; for the ſame day that he ſuffered together, he raigned alſo together with Chriſt: In ſolemnitate ſanctor. ſerm.5. but the theefe did not raigne together with him as God, for ſo the kingdome of God is not communicable to any. Lyranus alſo vnderſtandeth it of the preſence of Chriſts ſoule in paradiſe, where the ſoule of the fathers were: annot. in hunc locum.

Argum.2. I will preſſe them with Durands argument, one of their owne champions: the ſoules of the Saints were deliuered in the very inſtant of Chriſts death: Ergo, Chriſt needed not to deſcend in ſoule to hell to deliuer them.

Bellarmine anſwereth: firſt, though the price of redemption were paied in Chriſts death, yet the Patriarches were to expect Chriſts comming thither not of neceſſitie, but of congruitie. Secondly, Chriſt deſcended for other cauſes, and not onely to deliuer the ſoules of the Patriarches, Beller. c.15. reſp. ad obiect. 2. Durand.

Contra. 1. As touching other cauſes of Chriſts deſcenſion, we are not now to deale: the queſtion is, whether he deſcended to ſet the ſoules of the Patriarches at large, which if you cannot iuſtifie, we haue that we would.

2. It is well yet that you hold the article of Chriſts locall deſcenſion to deliuer the Patriarches to be of congruitie, not of neceſſitie: but I pray you how can you make it an article of our faith, if it bee not neceſſarie?

3. You ſay the Patriarches were yet to expect Chriſts comming: and ſo your opinion is, that Chriſts ſoule ſtaied in hell till the third day, and then riſing againe, he brought with him all the ſoules of the fathers. Contr. 1. Had the theefe then greater priuiledge then any of the Patriarches and Prophets? for he went to Paradiſe the ſame day Chriſt died; was heauen open for a theefe and murtherer, though now a conuert, and was it not open for Abraham the father of the faithfull, for Moſes, for Dauid? 2. If the Patriarches ſoules were looſed at Chriſts death, were they not to accompanie Chriſts ſoule into heauen, and to aſcend with it? for Chriſt ſaith, where I am, there ſhall be my miniſter alſo: Ioh.12.26. but Chriſts ſoule was in Paradiſe the ſame day he ſuffered, as he ſaid to the theefe, this day thou ſhalt be with me in Paradiſe: and Ambroſe witneſſeth the ſame: Paradiſus non dixit, non eſt in me, quem regnare in ſe abſoluto latrone cognouerat: Paradiſe did not ſay he is not in me, whom it did know to raigne there by the abſolution of the theefe: Exhortat. ad virgin. If then Chriſt as man and in his ſoule was in Paradiſe; ſurely all the Patriarches ſoules went vp with him; then Chriſt needed not to haue deſcended to hell to deliuer them: this I ſay, in their ſenſe, that hold the Patriarches then onely to be deliuered, whom we affirme already to haue been in ioy by faith in Chriſt to come: as now followeth in this next argument to be ſhewed.

The theefe not in heauen before the Patriarches.

Ioh.12.26.

Argum.3. Wee beleeue that the Patriarches and godly Fathers were in Heauen or Paradiſe, as well before the reſurrection of Chriſt as after: for in as much as they were iuſtified by faith in his blood, they receiued the ſame crowne and reward of righteouſnes that we do, being iuſtified by the ſame meanes. This we haue proued more at large, contron.9. queſt.1. Wherefore ſeeing there were none of the Fathers in hell, which they call Limbus Patrum, to bee deliuered, there was no ſuch cauſe why Chriſt ſhould deſcend into hell. Therefore hee deſcended not to deliuer the Patriarches that remained in darkneſſe. And here I would aſke them a queſtion, from whence they thinke Moſes and Elias came, when they appeared talking with Chriſt in the mount, Matthew 17.3. will they ſay they came from hell a place of darkneſſe, appearing in ſuch light and great glory? But for Elias I know their anſwere already, that hee came from the terreſtriall Paradiſe, where they imagine him to be kept, which I haue ſhewed before to bee a meere fable, pag.745. contr.17. qu.3. part.2. What will they ſay for Moſes: if he were not in Limbus, no more were the reſt of the Prophets: and to ſay that Moſes was fetcht from hell, and out of darknes to talke with the ſonne of God in light, I thinke they are not ſo abſurd to affirme. Chryſoſtome vpon this place thus writeth: Voluit Petrus tria tabernacula facere, &c. Peter would haue made three tabernacles for Moſes, Elias, Chriſt; and ſo haue ſeparated the law, the Prophets, and the goſpell: Ergo apparuit lucida nubes vnum tabernaculum, quod tres ſimul texit: Therefore there appeared a bright cloude as one tabernacle, which couered all three, &c. If a cloud of brightnes were Moſes tabernacle, then your Limbus a dungeon of darknes was not at this time his tabernacle: and if he were not in Limbus, neither Abraham the father of the faithfull, nor the reſt of the Prophets.

Matth.17.3.
From whence Moſes and Elias came, when they appeared to Chriſt.

Argum.4. They agree not among themſelues about this article of Chriſts deſcenſion, to deliuer the Patriarches: Andradius ſaith, it cannot be proued out of Scripture: but Bellarmine and our Rhemiſts do bring their beſt arguments for it out of Scripture: they alleage alſo diuers cauſes of his deſcenſion: the Romane Catechiſme rendreth two reaſons; one, to ſet the Patriarches at libertie; the other to manifeſt the power and vertue of his death in hell: but that, S. Paul ſaith, was ſufficiently Coloſſ.2.15. manifeſted and made knowne vpon the croſſe, Coloſſ.2.15. Thomas Aquinas beſide theſe, addeth a third, that as Chriſt died for vs to free vs from death, ſo it was conuenient that he ſhould deſcend into hell, to deliuer vs from the deſcenſion into hell: as though Chriſt by his death did not fully deliuer vs from eternall damnation. Some other holde, that Chriſt went thither to ſuffer the torments of hell, that he might fully pay our ranſome by ſuffering the whole puniſhment due vnto mankind. But this is a very groſſe and erroneous opinion: for Chriſt ſuffered fully in body and ſoule vpon the croſſe, when he cryed, Conſummatum eſt, It is finiſhed: that is, he had fully appeaſed the wrath of God by his ſufferings.

Durand a popiſh writer of great account, thinketh that Chriſts ſoule did not deſcend into hell, Secundum ſubſtantiam, ſed per effectus quoſdam; in his ſubſtance, but by certaine effects: not ſubſtantially but effectually.

1. 1. This opinion of Durand, is thus impugned by Bellarm. 1. It would follow that Chriſts body deſcended into hell, as well as his ſoule, for the effects of Chriſts death, which wrought in hell, were performed by Chriſts fleſh, as well as his ſoule.

2. 2. If Chriſts ſoule deſcended but by the effectes, ſo it was in Paradiſe, and thus Chriſts ſoule ſhould be in many places at once.

3. 3. Chriſts ſoule was three dayes in the heart of the earth, but the effects of the ſoule might be ſhewed in hell in a moment, Bellarm.c.15.

1. Contra. 1. To them which hold the effectuall deſcent of Chriſt: it is no abſurditie to grant that the effects both of his body and ſoule wrought in hell. 2. Yea, the graue being taken for hell, Chriſts fleſh properly deſcended thither: as the marginall note of the vulgar Latine expoundeth theſe words of Iacob: I will deſcend to hell mourning to my ſonne, Geneſ.37.35. of his going to the graue.

2. 1. What letteth but that the efficacie and vertue of Chriſts ſoule, and the fruites of his death may be in many places at once. 2. You moſt abſurdly hold, that the ſubſtance of Chriſts ſoule may bee preſent in diuers places in one inſtant.

3. 1. That Chriſts ſoule remained three dayes in hell, is contrary to the Scriptures: for his ſoule was in paradiſe in the day of his paſſion. 2. The effects of Chriſts death do remaine ſtill: and Ambroſe doubteth not to ſay, Abyſſum opinione ſi penetres, illic quoq; videbis Ieſum operari: If you pearce hell in thought, you ſhall ſee Ieſus working there ſtill. lib.2. in 1. Luc.

Epiſt.99. Auguſtine ſaith plainely, that he knew not what good Chriſt wrought for the iuſt ſoules that were in the boſome of Abraham, when he deſcended into hell: à quibus eum ſecundum beatificam præſentiam diuinitatis, nunquam video receſſiſſe: From whom I finde he was neuer abſent or withdrew himſelfe by the bleſſed preſence of his diuine power: Ergo, in his iudgement Chriſt deſcended not to any ſuch end. And concerning the ſoule of Chriſt, he writeth flatly: Si mortuo corpore anima (latronis) ad Paradiſum mox vocatur, quempiam adhuc tam impium credimus, qui dicere audeat, quoniam anima Saluatoris noſtri triduo illo corporea mortis apud inferos cuſtodia mancipetur? If the ſoule of the theefe ſtraightway being gone from the body, was called vp to heauen: is there any man ſo wicked, to ſay that the ſoule of our Sauiour was kept three daies in the priſon of hell? cont. Felician. cap.15. By his ſentence then, the ſoule of Chriſt remained not three dayes in hell. And out of this place of Auguſtine this reaſon may be gathered: Chriſts ſoule went the ſame way after death, which our ſoules muſt go, that are his members: but the ſoules of the faithfull goe preſently to heauen, as the ſoule of the theefe did, conuerted vpon the croſſe; and as S. Paul ſaith of his ſoule, I deſire to be diſſolued, and to be with Phil.1.23. Chriſt, Philip.1.23. for what aſſurance haue we that our ſoules ſhall paſſe immediatly to heauen, if Ioh.14.6. Chriſts ſoule, who is the way, Ioh.14.6. did not make a way for our ſoules? Ergo, Chriſts ſoule went ſtraight to heauen, and therefore was not, triduo in corde terræ, three dayes in the heart of the earth, as Bellarmine ſaith, c.15. argum.4. cont. Durand.

Concerning the teſtimonies of the fathers alleaged by Bellarmine for Chriſts deſcenſion in ſoule to deliuer the Patriarches, I denie not, but that many of them do ſo affirme, yet it was no generall receiued opinion amongſt them, but diuers of them did otherwiſe both ſpeake and write.

Cyprian in the ſymbole or Creed, which goeth vnder his name, thus writeth: Sciendum eſt, quod in eccleſia Romana ſymbolo non habetur additum, deſcendit ad inferna: ſed neque in Orientis eccleſijs habetur hic ſermo; vis tamen verbi eadem videtur eſſe in eo, quod ſepultus dicitur: It muſt be knowen, that in the Creed of the Romane Church, it is not added, he deſcended into hell, neither yet is this ſpeech vſed in the Eaſt Churches; yet the ſame ſenſe and force ſeemeth to be in that he is ſaid to be buried.

We may finde tenne ſeuerall Creeds at the leaſt rehearſed in the Councels, and in them this article of Chriſts deſcenſion omitted.

1. In epiſtola. Clement. 2. In confeſſion of Conſtantines faith: in Donation. Conſtantin. 3. In the Nicene ſymbole. 4. In the Sirmian Councell. 5. In the confeſſion of Liberius. Act. Liber. cap.1. 6. In the ſymbole of Conſtantinople. 7. In the ſymbole of Carthage. Concil.4. cap.1. 8. Likewiſe wiſe, concil. Toletan.1.can.21.9. In the ſymbole confirmed, Epheſin.1.10.Bracarenſ.3.in præfation. In all theſe places it is omitted.

Likewiſe in diuers of Auguſtines ſermons: as ſerm. de tempor.123.125.129. In the expoſition of the Creed no mention is made of Chriſts locall deſcenſion to hell, to deliuer the Patriarches: and ſerm.119. he ſaith: Cum confeſſi fuerimus eius paſſionem, confitemur & reſurrectionem: When we haue confeſſed his paſſion, we confeſſe his reſurrection: If the Church had held it ſo neceſſary to beleeue the deſcent of Chriſts ſoule, for the releaſe of the Patriarches, eſpeciall remembrance ſhould haue bin made thereof in ſo many rehearſals and expoſitions of the Creed.

Yet was not the article of Chriſts deſcenſion euer denied in the Church, but not receiued generally in any ſuch ſenſe.

Diuers wayes how Chriſt is ſaid to haue deſcended to hell.

1. Some of them apply the deſcenſion to the ſuffring of Chriſts ſoule, as Origen.tract.12.in Matth. data anima Chriſti in redemptionem pro multis, non manſit apud eum cui data eſt, propter hoc dicit Propheta, non derelinques, &c. The ſoule of Chriſt being giuen in redemption for many, carried not with him, to whom it was giuen; as the Prophet ſaith, thou wilt not leaue my ſoule in hell.

2. Sometime the ſame Origene doth interprete the deſcenſion of Chriſt: De ſuperioribus ad inferiora venientis: Comming from the higher parts of heauen to the lower parts of the earth, hom.2.in Geneſ.

3. Some other, by the deſcent into hell vnderſtand the lying of Chriſt in the graue, as Hierom: Saluator in tantum ipſum corpus habuit poſt inferos in quo & crucifixus, vt manus perforatas oſtenderet: Our Sauiour had ſo verely after hell, the body wherein he was crucified, that hee ſhewed his pierced hands lib.1.aduerſ.Iouinian. But Chriſts body went not downe to hell, but onely to the graue.

So Origene: Chriſtus deſcendit ad inferos ad mortuos, tanquam inter mortuos liber: Chriſt deſcended to hell to the dead, as free among the dead. in Matth.16. But the graue not hell is the place of the dead. Likewiſe Auguſtine: Ab inferis primogenitus eſt ex defunctis: He was the firſt borne of the dead from hell. ſerm.de temp.161.

4. Some referre Chriſts being in hell to his diuinitie: as Chryſoſtome, non diuido Chriſtum—vno atq; eodem tempore deſcendit ad inferos & cum latronis anima, &c. I deuide not Chriſt, hee in one and the ſame time deſcended into hell, and with the ſoule of the theefe entred into Paradiſe: homil.11 in Marc. And Ambroſe vpon theſe words, Pſal.139.15. Subſtantia mea in inferioribus terræ, &c. My ſubſtance was beneath in the earth: Quid obſtat quo minus illam diuinam intelligas ſubſtantiam cum deus vbique ſit. What letteth but we may vnderſtand his diuine ſubſtance, ſeeing God is euery where, as it is ſaid before, If I aſcend into heauen thou art there, if I lie downe in hell thou art there. Pſal.139.8. So alſo Auguſtine expoundeth Chriſts deſcenſion of the preſence of his maieſtie: Act.cum Felician. cap.17. as I haue ſhewed before.

5. Some applie Chriſts deſcenſion to the fruits and effects of his croſſe: Auguſtine.ſerm.107.de tempor. Quid eſt portas inferni tollere niſi mortis imperium remouere? What is it elſe to take away the gates of hell, but to remoue the power of death.

6. Some doe metaphorically referre the deſcent into hell, to a troubled conſcience: as Bernard vpon theſe words, Thou ſhalt not leaue my ſoule in hell, Pſalm.16.10. Infernus quidem, & carcer animæ rea conſcientia eſt: A guiltie conſcience is the hell and priſon of the ſoule, in aſſumpt.ſer.4. Againe he thus writeth: Sunt gradus in aſcendendo & deſcendendo: in deſcendendo primus gradus à cælo vſque ad carnem, ſecundus ad crucem, tertius ad mortem: ecce quouſque deſcendit, nunquid amplius potuit? poterat iam rectè rex noſter dicere, quid vltra debui facere, & non feci? There are degrees in aſcending, and deſcending: in deſcending the firſt degree is to the fleſh, the ſecond to the croſſe, the third to death: behold how farre he deſcended, could he deſcend any further? might not our King now truly ſay, what ought I to haue done more, which I did not? ſer.par.18.

Pſal.16.10.

Some of them I grant do affirme Chriſts deſcenſion in ſoule to hell, to bring the Fathers ſoules from thence: but this was no generall opinion, nor expreſſe ſentence of the Church: as may appeare by this teſtimonie of Origene, vpon theſe words of Iob: Naked I came forth, naked ſhall I returne, Iob.1.21. Nudus ibo illuc (inquit) quo illuc? illuc quo Adam abijt, quo ierunt priores mei: vbi tabernacula ſunt iuſtorum, &c. vbi eſt lux & vita, vbi eſt lætitia & exultatio, vbi Abraham ſinus, &c. angelorum chori, Chriſti regnum, æterni dei patris gloria & conſpectus: I ſhall returne thither? whither? euen whither Adam went and all my forefathers: where are the tabernacles of the righteous, where is light and life, where is Abrahams boſome, the queere of Angels, the kingdome of Chriſt, the glorie and ſight of the eternall father: in 1.cap.Iob. Now then, if in your Limbus there be light and life, the companie of Angels, the preſence of God, the kingdome of Chriſt; then will I grant, that the Fathers were there: but then they ſhould not haue needed to bee fetched from thence. And thus much of Chriſts locall deſcenſion into hell to ſet free the ſoules of the Patriarches.

Iob.1,21.

Tertullian ſaith, aliud inferi, aliud Abrahæ ſinus, hell is one thing, as I take it, and Abrahams boſome another. And againe, Abrahams boſome he defineth to be ſi non cæleſtem, ſublimiorem tamen inferis, if not a celeſtiall place, yet higher then hell, &c. Chriſt then in his opinion deſcended not to hel to deliuer the Patriarks. This was the iudgement of the elder Africane or South Church. Chryſoſtome alſo thinketh Abrahams boſome to haue been a place of delight and reward, and of all ioy where Lazarus was in delicijs in omni rerum affluentia, in delight in all abundance of all things videte coronatum,&c. videte præmium,&c. See him now crowned, rewarded, &c. this place of reward, delight, where the righteous are crowned, can not be hell:

Reſponſ. Ioan. Baſil.ad Rohit. cap.12.

This was the judgement of the ancient writers of the Eaſt and South Church: what thoſe moderne Churches doe now hold, is not much materiall; for in this and other points they are very erroneous, euen our aduerſaries being iudges. The Muſcouites doe hold, that all the righteous before Chriſt went downe to a place called Adam, that is hell, which they ſeeme to deriue from Adam, becauſe all went thither for Adams ſinne, &c. And ſo they make all in deed to goe downe to hell before Chriſt, and ſeeme ignorantly to deriue the Greeke word ᾅδης, of Adam, which cannot be, for then it ſhould be Hadam, not Adam.

Damianus a Goes de Æthiop.morib.

The Æthiopians, as their Biſhop Zaga Zabo deliuereth their opinion, thinke that Chriſt deſcended to hell, pro anima Adæ, atq́; pro anima ipſius Chriſti, for the ſoule of Adam, and for the ſoule of Chriſt himſelfe which hee tooke of the Virgine Marie, and ſo conſequently of Adam, &c. What thing can be more abſurd, then to imagine, that Chriſt went downe to hell to deliuer his owne ſoule.

Harm.ſect.6. pag.95.

Pag.97.

None of the reformed Churches doe hold, that Chriſt deſcended to hell to deliuer the Patriarkes: ſome of them doe thus explane that article, vnderſtanding it of the deſcending of his bodie to the graue. Confeſſ. of Baſil artic. of Chriſt: According to the fleſh, he was buried, deſcended into hell, and the third day he roſe againe from the dead. Bohemia, cap.4. Thoſe ſauing and wonderfull workes or affections of Chriſt according to the meaning of the holy Scriptures are by a ſtedfaſt faith to be beleeued and profeſſed, ſuch are his comming downe from heauen, his conception, birth, torments, death, buriall, reſurrection, aſcenſion vnto heauen, ſitting at the right hand of God, and his comming againe from thence to iudge both the quicke and the dead: In theſe principall affections, as in a cheſt, wherein treaſure is kept, all thoſe wholeſome fruites of our iuſtification are laid vp, &c. Here is no mention made of Chriſts deſcending to hell to deliuer the Patriarkes.

Gregor.de Valent.tom.4. diſp.1.q.19. punct.4. Maldonat.in Luc.16.23.

And of the teſtimonie of the Romaniſts, their learned Ieſuite ſaith, that Chriſtus omnes ſimiliter redemit ſiue ante ſiue poſt Chriſti aduentum: That Chriſt redeemed al alike before and after his comming, &c. then why ſhould they before his comming go to Limbus rather then thoſe after. Another of their Ieſuites ſaith: Valde ſuſpicor per ſinum Abrahæ ſummum cœlum deſignari: I do much ſuſpect, that by Abrahams boſome the higheſt heauen is deſigned: See alſo the iudgement of Durand before defended againſt Bellarmine.

Now in the laſt place, becauſe the current opinion of the Fathers ſeemeth generally to ſtreame this way, to carrie, as it were, the bleſſed ſoule of Chriſt to the infernall parts for the deliuerie of the Fathers vnder the law, and it may ſeeme an hard courſe to refuſe them comming together with ſuch a ioynt conſent: I will briefly ſhew the chiefe differences of opinion herein, and how farre wee may ſafely yeeld vnto the ſentences of the Fathers.

Touching the place, where the ſoules of the Fathers were, there are foure opinions. Some thinke they were in a part of hell: ſome in a region of heauen; of each of theſe there are chiefly two different conceites. 1. Some are of opinion, that they were in a place of ioy before the comming of Chriſt, which notwithſtanding, they ſuppoſed to be ſome inferne place: as Irenæus thinketh, that the ſoules of the Saints goe vnto the ſuperior infernall place. lib. cont. hæreſ. in fine. Chryſoſtome, as is before alleaged, thinketh, that Abrahams boſome was a place of vnſpeakeable ioy and delight, whether Lazarus was caried by the Angels: yea, he maketh it a kind of Paradiſe, Paradiſus Lazari ſinus Abrahæ, Abrahams boſome was Lazarus paradiſe: hom.15. in Luc. tom.2. And yet in the ſame Sermon hee ſaith, quod Abraham apud inferos erat: that Abraham was yet in the infernall place: And Lyranus inclineth to this opinion, who thinketh that the Paradiſe, which Chriſt promiſed to the beleeuing thiefe, was that beata fruitio, that bleſſed fruition, which the Fathers in Limbus had by Chriſts deſcending thither, annot. in luc. 23.43. But it ſoundeth very harſh to make Paradiſe in hell: as Auguſtine well reſolueth, that the boſome of Abraham, being a place of reſt, non credenda eſt aliqua pars inferorum, is not to be thought to be a part or member of hell: epiſt.99.

Bellarm.lib.2. de purgat. c.8. ſec.quantum. Bellarm.lib.4. de Chriſti anim.cap.14. Hom.27.in Math.

2. Another opinion is, that the ſoules of the Fathers were ſhut vp in a dungeon of darknes in a part of hell, as in a priſon, vntill Chriſt did come and take them thence: and that they were damnati ad exilium temporale: damned to exile for a time: this is the poſition of the Romaniſts. But theſe are their owne groſſe conceites, that the ſpirits of the fathers were exiled, baniſhed from Gods preſence, damned to hell; not one of thoſe 27. Fathers, whom Bellarmine produceth for Chriſts deſcention, doth affirme any ſuch thing: for how could this be, ſeeing they held the Fathers to be in a place of ioy: Chryſoſtome ſaith, that Chriſt calleth the boſome of Abraham, regnum cœlorum, the Kingdome of heauen: and Auguſtine ſaith, it was felicitatis ſinus, a boſome of happines, epiſt.99.

3. Some of the Fathers take Abrahams boſome to be no part of hell, but to belong rather to heauen, as [a] Tertullian and [b] Auguſtine before alleaged. Vatablus hath the like opinion, that Abrahams boſome, whether he thinketh Elias was taken vp, was ſome place in the aire: and Pet. Mart. much differeth not, that Abrahams boſome was a certaine receptacle of ſoules, [d] where they enioyed tranquility in the ſight of God: from whence [e] they accompanied Chriſt at his aſcenſion into the higheſt heauens: But here alſo is ſome difference.

4. An other opinion is, that the Fathers in the boſome of Abraham, were not exalted and aduanced to an higher place of glorie, but onely more illuminated, and encreaſed with a new acceſſion of ioy ioy by the death of Chriſt, whereof they had a ioyfull expectation. So M. Caluin ſeemeth to affirme, gratia Chriſti manifeſtationē ad pios ſpiritus perueniſſe, that the manifeſtation of Chriſts grace came alſo vnto the bleſſed ſpirits. Lyranus before produced, in part conſenteth, that the Paradiſe which was promiſed, was beata fruitio, the bleſſed fruition of Chriſts preſence, who deſcended to the place where the fathers were detained. And Baſil to the ſame effect: Chriſti fragrantiam myrrha ſpirat propter paſſionem: ſtacten vero, quod non inefficax manſit,—& deſcendit ad infernum—vt vniuerſa ſeipſo impleret: Chriſts paſſion giueth a fragrant ſmell like myrrhe: and the ſtacte is his deſcent to hell to fill all things with himſelfe, ſeeing he was not without efficacie, &c. the ſweete and odoriferous ſmell of Chriſts paſſion, and the efficacie thereof attained, and was extended, euen to the bleſſed ſpirits departed.

Comment. in 1. Pet. 3.19.

In Pſalm. 44.

Beſide this difference of opinion touching the ſtate, condition and place of the ſpirits of the fathers: there are ſome other diuerſities in the writings of the fathers, which I will briefly touch, and then ſhew how they may be reconciled.

1. Some thinke that the fathers were not admitted by Chriſts comming to the celeſtiall Paradiſe, and region of eternall happineſſe; but were tranſlated to a place of ioy, there to remaine vntill the reſurrection, when their happineſſe ſhould be conſummated: as Tertullian ſaith, Eam regionem ſinum dico Abrahæ—refrigerium præbituram animabus iuſtorum donec conſummatio rerum reſurrectionem omnium plenitudine mercedis expungat: That region, namely, Abrahams boſome, ſhal yeeld refreſhing vnto the ſoules of the iuſt, till all things be conſummate in the reſurrection, &c. The ſame is the iudgement of Iuſtine Martyr: They onely, except Martyrs, who, they thinke, goe ſtraite to Paradiſe: as Tertullian: Nemo peregrinatus a corpore ſtatim immoratur penes Dominum, niſi ex Martyrij prærogatiua, paradiſo non inferis diuerſurus: No man paſſing out of the bodie ſtraiteway remaineth with the Lord, but ſuch as by the prerogatiue of Martyrdome diuerteth to Paradiſe, not to hell. Some other thinke they were conducted by Chriſt to Paradiſe, as Chryſoſtome ſaith: Crux Chriſti aperuit paradiſum: Chriſts croſſe opened Paradiſe, firſt to the thiefe, then to Abraham and the Fathers.

Lib. 4. cont. Marcion.
Qu. orthodox. 76.
Lib. de reſurrect. carn.
Homil. 15. in Luc.

2. They diſſent about the difference betweene theſe three: Abrahams boſome, Paradiſe, Heauen. Some take Paradiſe and Abrahams boſome to be the ſame: as Auguſtine, Sinus Abrahæ paradiſus dici poteſt, The boſome of Abraham may be called Paradiſe: Chryſoſtome doth diſtinguiſh them; Abraham necdum erat in paradiſo, &c. Abraham was not yet in Paradiſe, becauſe Chriſt was not yet entred with the thiefe, &c. Some thinke Paradiſe and Heauen to be all one, as Auguſtine ibid. Others doe diſtinguiſh them: and ſome of theſe make Paradiſe inferiour to the higheſt heauen, as Iuſtine Martyr thinketh, that the beleeuing thiefe is reſerued in Paradiſe with the reſt of the Saints vntill the reſurrection; when they ſhall haue their conſummation in heauen. Others thinke Paradiſe to be higher then the third heauen, mentioned by S. Paul 2. Cor. 12. as Ambroſe thinketh, that Paul was twice rapt vp, Hinc vſque in tertium cœlum, deinde in paradiſum cœleſtem: From hence into the third heauen, and then into the celeſtiall Paradiſe.

Lib. 12. de Geneſ. ad liter. c. 34.
Hom. 15. in Luc.
Qu. orthodox. 76.
Comment. in 2. Cor. 12.

3. A third difference in opinion there is, about the continuance of that place called Abrahams boſome: ſome doubt, whether it doe now remaine; as Gregorie Nazianzen in his funerall oration of his brother Cæſarius, ſaith, Thou art aſcended into heauen, thou doſt reſt in Abrahams boſome, Si tamen aliquis nunc locus extat: If any ſuch place be extant. Others thinke that Abrahams boſome ſtill is a receptacle of the ſoules of the righteous, as Tertullian cited before: and Chryſoſtome ſaith, Omnes in illius ſinum ire feſtinamus: All of vs make haſt to goe vnto Abrahams boſome.

Hom. 15. in Luc.

1. Now then for the reconciling of theſe differences: touching the firſt, whereas ſome thinke the fathers to haue been in hel, ſome denying it: they muſt be vnderſtood to take hel, or the infernal place generally for the ſtate of the dead, whether goe good or bad: as Hilarie ſaith, Humana iſta lex neceſſitatis eſt, vt ſepultis corporibus anima ad inferos deſcendant: This is the law of humane neceſſitie, that the ſoules, the bodies being buried, ſhould deſcend to hell. So alſo Tertullian: Cur non putes animam & puniri & foueri in inferis interim ſub expectatione vtriuſque iudicij: Why ſhould you not thinke the ſoule to be both puniſhed and cheriſhed in hell in the meane time vnder the expectation of both iudgements? But when the name of hell is taken ſtrictly for a place of puniſhment: they denie then Abrahams boſome to haue been in hell, as Tertullian ſaith, hell is one thing, Abrahams boſome another: and Auguſtine denieth it to be a part of hell. So then their opinion is, that Chriſts ſoule went vnto that place of ioy, where the fathers were, and did either exalt them to an higher place of glorie, as our bleſſed Sauiour ſaith, In my fathers houſe are many manſions: or did adde vnto them an acceſſion of further ioy, hauing accompliſhed the glorious worke of the redemption; in neither of which opinions is there any inconuenience to be feared: but that the fathers were redeemed from the thraldome and captiuitie of darkneſſe with damnation, as the Papiſts hold, Proteſtants with the Fathers diſclaime?

In Pſalm. 138.
Lib. de anima in fine.
See before.
Iohn 14.2.

2. And in affirming, that the fathers are not yet admitted to the preſence of God, they may be vnderſtood to meane the full fruition of glory, which the Saints ſhall not haue till the reſurrection, when their ſoules and bodies ſhall be glorified together: and ſo much the Apoſtle inſinuateth, ſaying, God prouiding a better thing for vs, that they without vs ſhould not be made perfit. Which Auguſtine vnderſtandeth of that perfection, qua nobis perficiendis in fine promittitur, which is promiſed vs to be made perfit in the end.

Heb. 11.40.

3. And concerning the difference of Heauen, Paradiſe, and Abrahams boſome: either we may ſay with Auguſtine, Aliquid vnum eſt diuerſis nominibus appellatum, vbi ſunt animæ beatorum: It may be ſome one place called by diuers names, where the ſoules of the bleſſed are: or elſe they meane onely the diuers degrees of glorie in heauen, which may admit alſo without any inconuenience a diuerſitie of the habitations and manſion places of the Saints: as Chryſoſtome ſaith: Si martyrium fecerimus, ſtatim intrabimus paradiſum ſi paupertatis—ſtatim in ſinum Abrahæ: If we performe martyrdome, ſtreight we ſhall enter into Paradiſe, if we ſuſtaine pouertie well, ſtreight ſhall we goe into Abrahams boſome, &c.

Lib.12.de Geneſ.ad liter.c.34.

Homil.15.in Luc.

4. And Abrahams boſome may be ſaid both not to remaine, becauſe both the name is changed, and the qualitie and condition of that place; becauſe now there is no more an expectation of the Redemption, accompliſhed by the death, and reſurrection of Chriſt: and yet it remaineth in reſpect of the ſubſtantiall part, the vnſpeakable ioyes there abounding: as Auguſtine reſolueth well, Quanto magis poſt hanc vitam ſinus ille Abrahæ paradiſus dici poteſt, vbi iam nulla tentatio, &c. How much more may the boſome of Abraham after this life be called Paradiſe, where is no tentation, and where is ſuch reſt after the ſorrowes of this life. And thus haue I ſhewed how the fathers may bee reconciled both among themſelues, and with vs, in this intricate queſtion of Chriſts deſcenſion into the infernall parts for the deliuering of the Fathers.

Lib.12.de Geneſ.ad liter.c.34.

AN APPENDIX, CONCERNING the place of Hell.

The Papiſts.

27.Error.

THe place where damned ſpirits are tormented, they ſay, is about the center of the earth, the loweſt of all places, and nothing lower then it, Bellarm.de Chriſti anima.lib 4.cap.10.

Their Limbus Patrum, the place of darknes, where the Fathers were before Chriſt, is, ſay they, in the higheſt part, and as it were the brimme of hell, Rhemiſt.Luk.16.22. Betweene theſe two places there is a great gulfe or ſpace, and there is Purgatorie, Rhemiſt.Luk.16.ſect.8. Wherefore they conclude, Veros inferos eſſe loca ſubterranea: That the ſubterreſtriall and infernall places do properly make hell, Bellarm.cap.8. And ſo hell ſhould bee properly a place of puniſhment: becauſe of the farre diſtance from heauen: whereas not ſo much the diſtance of place, as the abſence of Gods ſpirit, and loſſe of his fauour, maketh it a place of horror and miſerie.

Argum.1. Bellarmine prooueth by the Greeke word ᾅδης, and the Hebrue (ſheol) that hell is a ſubterreſtriall place, becauſe thoſe words are taken for hell in the earth, Bellar.ibid.

Contra.1. This argument concludeth not, vnleſſe he could proue, that thoſe words are alwayes taken for hell: the contrary whereof is euident, as Geneſ.42.38. You ſhall bring my gray head with ſorrow to (ſheol, ᾅδης.) the graue: for his gray haires went not downe to hell, but reſted in the graue. Likewiſe this annotation is giuen in the margent of the vulgar Latine, Geneſ.37.35. In infernum, id eſt, foſſam, vel ſepulchrum, non hic ſignificat locum pœnarum, ſicut nec in alijs locis: Into hell, that is, the pit or the graue, it ſignifieth not here the place of puniſhment, nor yet in other places.

Geneſ.42.38.

Geneſ.37.35.

2. We grant that theſe words ſometimes are taken for hell, and then they onely ſhew that there is an hell, but they enforce not the place.

Hell whether in the earth.

3. Thirdly, neither do we denie, but that hell is an infernall place; but herein we differ from them. 1. That neither do we affirme, that the place cauſeth hell, but the abſence of Gods fauour and preſence. 2. Neither dare we circumſcribe the place certainly, as they do, making it to be about the center of the earth. 3. nor yet preſume we to make ſo many regions of hell, as they do without warrant of the word.

Math.12.40.

Argum.2. Matth.12.40. As Ionas was three dayes and three nights in the belly of the Whale; ſo the ſonne of man muſt be in the heart of the earth: but the graue is not in the heart, but the brimme of the earth: Ergo, we muſt needes vnderſtand that to be hell, which is in the middeſt of the earth, Bellarm.cap.12.

Wherein Ionas was a figure of Chriſt.

Anſw.1. This place cannot otherwiſe be applied, then to ſignifie the buriall of Chriſt, and his abode in the graue, and his riſing againe the third day: of his ſoule it cannot properly bee meant: for Chriſt ſaith, he will giue them the ſigne of Ionas in himſelfe: but a ſigne is conſpicuous, viſible and apparant: how could then the deſcending of his ſoule be a ſigne vnto them, which they knew not, neither could ſee? But the laying of his body into the graue, and the remaining there to the third day, they were all eye witneſſes of. Alſo there is great affinitie betweene the two Greeke words, σημεῖον a ſigne, which is there vſed, Matth.12.40. and σῆμα, which ſignifieth ſepulchrum, a graue, the one word being fitly deriued of the other, what better σημεῖον then could he giue them, then σῆμα, his owne graue or ſepulchre? Secondly to be in the heart of the earth, is nothing elſe but to be within the earth, according to the Hebrue phraſe, as Exod.15.8. The heart of the Sea, that is, within the Sea: ſo Chriſts body was in the earth, it lay hid as it were in the bowels of the earth. And thus Hierome applieth this figure of Ionas to the death and buriall of Chriſt: Ionam cetus excepit immerſum, non contigit deuoratum, &c. ſic Ieſu mors licet Chriſtum ſorbuerat crucifixum, tamen quem non inuenerat reum, non potuit tenere damnatum: The Whale receiued Ionas drowned, but it touched him not once deuoured: ſo cruell death, although it ſwallowed Chriſt crucified, yet, whom it found not guiltie, it could not hold as condemned: Epitaph.Nepotian.

3. This expoſition is againſt themſelues: for if Chriſt went downe to the very hart and middeſt of the earth, which is the center, then he deſcended to the place of the damned: for neither Limbus Patrum, nor Purgatorie, are in the center or loweſt part of the earth by their opinion; but they themſelues hold the contrary: for they ſay, that Chriſt by deſcending deliuered ſoules out of the two vppermoſt hels, Limbus, and Purgatorie, but not out of the nethermoſt hell, which is the place of the damned, *Rhemiſt. Luk.16.ſect.*8. Alſo it ſhould follow of this their interpretation, that the ſoule of Chriſt was as long in hell, as his bodie in the graue, which is againſt the opinion of many Papiſts, and of ſome of the Fathers. Origene ſaith, Prima dies nobis paſſio ſaluatoris, ſecunda, qua deſcendit ad infernum: The firſt day we haue the paſſion of our Sauiour, the ſecond day hee deſcended to hell, Hom.5.in Exod.

*Argum.*2. Luk.8.31. The diuels deſired Chriſt that he would not ſend them into the deepe: what is that elſe but the loweſt region of the earth, where hell is, which S. Paul calleth the loweſt parts of the earth? Bellarm. Luk.8.31.

*Anſw.*1. We denie not, but that God hath prepared, and that there is a place of vnſpeakable torments ordained for the diuell and his Angels, and all damned ſoules: but that this place ſhould be in the center of the earth, the places alleaged proue not. 2. The word abyſſus tranſlated, the deepe, is ſometime taken figuratiuely in a metaphore, as Rom.11.33, O the deepenes of the wiſedome of God, the word is, βάθος not much varying in ſignification from abyſſus: ſo the place of their puniſhment may be ſaid to be a great depth, that is, a place of vnſearchable and vnſpeakeable miſerie and horror. Rom.11.33. 3. Neither muſt this word abyſſus, of neceſſitie be referred to the earth, for there are abyſſi maris, the depths of the Sea, Exod.15.8. as well as of the earth. Exod.15.8. And the ordinarie Gloſſe vpon that place, Luke 8.31. vſeth a phraſe accordingly, that the diuels ſciebant ſe aliquando, in abyſſum mergendos, did know, that one day, they ſhould be drenched in hell. 4. And whereas S. Luke ſaith, they entreated Chriſt not to be ſent into the deepe; S. Mark reporteth it thus, They prayed him inſtantly, that he would not ſend them away out of the countrey. Marc.5.10. Then by conference of theſe two places, inſomuch that to bee ſent into the deepe, was to be ſent out into remote places, as out of the world, not to be conuerſant among men: ſo the diuell is ſaid to be caſt into the bottomleſſe pit, where he was bound for a thouſand yeeres, which was not hell, for out of that he ſhall neuer be looſed; Reuel.20.3. and afterward verſ.10. the diuell is caſt into the lake of fire and brimſtone, there to be tormented for euer: and the ordinarie Gloſſe and Lyranus doe expound them, this deepe to be tenebroſa corda impiorum, the darkſome hearts of the wicked, a conſortio fidelium, not to haue any commerce of the faithfull, ſo that this word abyſſus, the deepe doth not neceſſarily imply, the loweſt region, or center of the earth. 5. Yet we denie not, but that hell may, and is moſt like to be in the earth, though it be meere curioſitie to aſſigne the certaine region or place of the earth, where it ſhould be.

The lower places which Saint Paul ſpeaketh of, Epheſ.4.9. may be either vnderſtood generally of the whole earth, which is pars mundi infima, the loweſt part of the world, or elſe of the great abaſing of Chriſt, from heauen to earth, being God, to become a ſeruant: Epheſ.4.9. as alſo the graue of Chriſt was that lower part of the earth: for the Apoſtle ſaith in the comparatiue, κατώτερα, not κατώτατα, the lower, not the loweſt: and ſo your vulgar Latine tranſlateth, inferiora, not infima terræ: but hell is the loweſt part, the graue is ſaid to be the lower

The Proteſtants.

THat there is a locall place of torment prepared for the diuell and his angels, we doubt not, being ſo taught in the Scripture, Matth.25.41. A place of darkneſſe, 2.Pet.2.4. Farre diſtant from the heauenly manſions of the bleſſed, Luk.16.26. Matth.25.41. 2.Pet.2.4. Luk.16.26. Neither do we denie but that it may be in the earth, or whereſoeuer elſe it pleaſeth God: but whereſoeuer hell is, there is but one: that diuiſion of hell into three or foure regions, we vtterly condemne, as a meere deuice of man without Scripture: and this we ſay, that the place of hell cauſeth not the torment, but the wrath and curſe of God: for euen out of hell God may make a man to feele the torments of hell, as we doubt not but our Sauiour Chriſt did in part for vs and our redemption vpon the croſſe.

Not the place but Gods wrath cauſeth hell.

*Argum.*1. It is poſſible to feele the paine of hell in the ſoule, although not in the proper and appointed place of hell: as Iob complaineth, The arrowes of the almightie are in me, the venome thereof doth drinke vp my ſpirit, and the terrors of God fight againſt me. And therefore hee ſaith, his griefe was heauier then the ſand of the Sea, Iob.6.4.14. Iob.6.4.14. Iob felt euen the hell of conſcience in himſelfe for the time: yea our Sauiour bare the burthen of his Fathers wrath vpon the croſſe, as wee haue ſhewed before: Ergo, it is not the place that maketh hell. So Bernard ſaith: Infernus animæ rea conſcientia: The hell of the ſoule is a guiltie conſcience, *in aſſumpt.ſer.*4.

*Argum.*2. Hell, as the Scripture defineth, is this, to be caſt into vtter darknes, there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, Matth.25.30.22.13. Matth.25.30. The darknes cauſeth weeping and horrible gnaſhing of teeth, the vnſpeakable puniſhment both of body and ſoule: This darknes is not the abſence of the light of the Sunne: for neither ſhall the Saints in heauen haue that light, becauſe they neede it not, Apocal.22.5. and it ſhall be a place of darknes to the damned angels, which haue no vſe of the Sunne-light: Apocal.22.5. they alſo are reſerued in chaynes of darknes, Iude 6. Iude 6. as they are no materiall chaines, ſo neither is it an outward darknes only, but the abſence of Gods fauour and the light of his countenance: as the people are ſaid to haue ſit in darkneſſe before the light of the Goſpell, by the preaching of Ieſus Chriſt, did ſhine vnto them, Mat. 4.16. But they much more ſhall be and are kept in darkneſſe, that are condemned to hell, where they feele nothing but the horror of Gods wrath, his eternall and endleſſe curſe, with vnſpeakable torments now in ſoule, and afterward, both in bodie and ſoule, without all comfort or hope of refreſhing, vtterlie excluded from the preſence of God. Wherefore it is not the place, but the wrath of God, and abſence of his ſpirit, that cauſeth ſuch endleſſe and vnſpeakable puniſhment.

Matth. 4.16.

Argum. 3. As for your diſtinction of hell, the brimme whereof you ſay is Limbus Patrum, the middle part, Purgatorie, the loweſt and neathermoſt hell it ſelfe, the place of the damned, in Auguſtines time it was not knowne: for firſt, that the boſome of Abraham was part of hell, hee vtterly denieth: Apparet non eſſe membrum inferorum, tanta illius felicitatis ſinum: That boſome of ſo great bliſſe can be no member or part of hel, Epiſt. 99. Againe, Purgatorie he ſometime vtterly refuſeth, acknowledging but two places: Heauen for the faithfull, Hell for the damned and vnbeleeuers. Tertium locum penitus ignoramus, imo nec eſſe in ſcripturis ſanctis inuenimus: A third place we are vtterly ignorant of, yea we find in holy Scripture, that it is not, Auguſt. Hypognoſt.

1. Chryſoſtome to this queſtion, where hell ſhould be, maketh this anſwere: Alicubi quantum ego puto extra omnem hunc mundum — ne quæramus vbi ſit, ſed quomodo illum fugiamus, &c. I think ſomewhere out of this world, let vs not enquire where it is, but how we may eſcape it. So Damaſcene ſaith, that the wicked, and ſinners are ἐν τοῖς ἐσχάτοις, in the vtmoſt places, but where he defineth not.

Moral. ad ſerm. 31. in 16. c. epiſt. ad Romani. Ser. de defunct. in fin.

2. Tertullian refuſeth Plato his opinion of hell, that it was, Gremium terræ quo omnes labes mundialium ſordium confluendo, & ibi deſidendo exhalent, & quaſi cæno immunditiarum ſuarum aerem craſſiorem ſtipent, &c. The very lappe of the earth, whether all the filth of the world did runne, and there ſettle: and as with muddie vapors thicken and make groſſe the ayre, &c. It ſeemeth that Plato made hell in the very ſincke, channell, or center of the earth: But this is denied by Tertullian: Nobis inferi, non nuda cauoſitas, nec ſubdiualis aliqua mundi ſentina: To vs hell is not a bare concauitie, or low and obſcure ſinke, &c. And then he addeth further: Sed in foſſa terræ & in alto vaſtitas, & in ipſis viſceribus eius abſtruſa profunditas: But a vaſt place in the deepe trench of the earth, and a remote profunditie in the bowels thereof, &c. Hee granteth it in the earth: but in what part hee determineth not. So Auguſtine, whereas ſometime he had written of hell fire, In qua mundi vel rerum parte ſit futurus, hominem ſcire arbitror neminem, &c. But in what part of the world or nature it is, I thinke no man knoweth, vnleſſe the ſpirit reueale it: afterward in his retractations addeth onely thus much, De inferis mihi videor magis dicere debuiſſe quod ſub terra ſunt, &c. Concerning hell I ſhould rather haue taught that they are vnder the earth, &c. He thinketh they are vnder the earth, but ſetteth not downe the region of the earth.

Lib. de anim. p. 685. Baſil. 1562.

Retract. lib. 2. cap. 24.

Comment. in Luc. 8.31. 3. Bucer vpon that place, Luk. 8.31. thinketh the meaning of that requeſt of the diuels not to bee ſent into the deepe, to be in effect thus much, Se ex hoc orbe non depelli, That they ſhould not bee expelled out of the world, and ſo all occaſion to be taken from them of doing hurt. So alſo Beza ſaith, that there is a certaine abyſſus, or bottomleſſe pit appointed for the diuels, amplius de iſtis quærere non expedit: to enquire further hereof is not expedient.

4. So Lyranus expoundeth that place, Mark. 5.10. the diuels deſire Chriſt, not to ſend them out of that region, that is, extra hominem habitationem, out of the dwelling of men: which hee maketh all one with the ſending into the deepe, Luk. 8.3.

Annot. in 2. Pet. c. 2. v. 4.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS CONTROVERſie, of matters which are in queſtion concerning the diuine nature of Chriſt.

THis part of the controuerſie containeth three queſtions. Firſt, whether Chriſt be αὐτόθεος, God of himſelfe. Secondly, whether he be mediatour as God, or man, or as both. Thirdly, whether he haue by his deſerts purchaſed any thing for himſelfe.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER CHRIST be αὐτόθεος, God of himſelfe.

The Papiſts.

28. Error. THey denie that Chriſt is αὐτόθεος, God of himſelfe; and affirme, that he had not onely his perſon, but his ſubſtance of his father: whereupon they are bold to charge Caluine with blaſphemie, for ſaying, that Chriſt is God of himſelfe as well as the Father, Rhemiſt. Ioh. 1. ſect. 3.

Argum. The word was with God, to wit, the ſonne is with and of the father, and not the father of the ſonne: Ergo, the ſonne is God, with and of his father, Rhemiſt. ibid.

Anſw. This place prooueth, that the ſonne of God, as hee is the ſonne, is of God: for to bee the ſonne of God, the word, the wiſedome of God, 1. Cor. 1.30. his image, Heb. 1.3. doe belong vnto his his perſon. So then, as he is the ſonne, the wiſedome of God, or the word, ſo he is of God, namelie in reſpect of his perſon: but as the ſonne is God, he is of himſelfe, neither hath he his eſſence but perſon onely of his Father.

1. Cor. 1.30. Heb. 1.3.

The Proteſtants.

THat we may fully know the ſtate of this queſtion, we muſt firſt ſet downe certaine propoſitions: 1. We doe worſhip one eternall, omnipotent, and onely wiſe God, one and the ſame in power, eſſence, eternitie: but three in perſon, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt: there is the ſame nature, eſſence, and deitie of them all, though they be diſtinguiſhed in perſon: As there is one nature of the light, the heate thereof and the ſhining brightnes, Lucis, ſplendoris, caloris, as Auguſtine putteth the example; which three differ among themſelues in proprietie and qualitie, yet haue one and the ſelfeſame nature and ſubſtance: God the father is as the light, Iam.1.17. God the ſonne is as the brightneſſe of his glorie, Heb.1.3. God the holy Ghoſt is as the heate or fire, Heb.12.29. Thus theſe three are one in nature and eſſence, but three in perſon. Iames 1.17. Heb.1.3. Heb.12.29.

2. There is ſomewhat communicable to them all, as the Godhead and diuine power and nature: Somewhat incommunicable, as the ſeuerall proprieties of the perſons: for it is proper onely to the Father to beget, proper to the Sonne onely to be begotten, proper onely to the holy Ghoſt to proceede from them both. There is no eſſentiall difference in the Trinitie: for there is one eſſence and diuine nature common to them all. But there is both a reall and rationall difference: The perſons differ one from another really, though not eſſentially. But the perſons differ only rationally or in reſpect from the eſſence of the Godhead: as the father and the ſon amongſt men differ not eſſentially, for they are both men. But they are really, verily, and indeed diſtinguiſhed: for it is one thing to be the father, another to be the ſonne: yet from their owne eſſence their perſons onely differ in reſpect and relation, not verily, non re, ſed ratione: for as amongſt vs the father is a man, the ſonne alſo is a man: but in one reſpect he is a father, and in another he is man; ſo likewiſe of the ſonne, yet one and the ſame, is both father and man; one and the ſame is both ſonne and man: ſo is it in the Trinitie. Now to the point of the queſtion, which we haue in hand. The Sonne therefore in the bleſſed Trinitie is begotten of his fathers eſſence, and hath the whole eſſence of his father, not by propagation, partition, profluence, but onely by communication. The Sonne is not αὐτυιὸς, ſonne of himſelfe, becauſe he is ſonne of the father: but he is αὐτόθεος, that is, very God of himſelfe. The eſſence or Godhead of the Sonne is of himſelfe, not of the father; for it is one and the ſelfe-ſame eſſence, which the father hath. He is indeed, Deus de Deo, Lumen de lumine, God of God, light of light; but not as he is God, is he of God, but as he is the Son. It is one thing for the perſon of the Son to bee begotten of the eſſence of the father, which we grant: another thing, for the eſſence of the ſonne to be begotten, which we muſt not yeeld to. So we conclude, that Chriſt as he is the ſonne, is of God the father; as he is God, he is of himſelfe.

*Argum.*1. The eſſence of the father is of himſelfe, not begotten of any: but the eſſence and deity of the ſonne is the ſame and all one with his fathers: Ergo, it is not begotten of any other. Againe, he is not God whoſe eſſence is not of himſelfe; therfore if Chriſts eſſence be not of himſelfe, he ſhould not be God.

*Argum.*2. Our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe ſaith, As the father hath life in himſelfe, ſo he hath giuen to the ſonne alſo to haue life in himſelfe, Ioh.5.26. The ſonne then hath life in himſelfe: Ergo, he is God of himſelfe. Auguſtine vpon theſe words writeth: Non quaſi mutuatur vitam, nec quaſi particeps vitæ, ſed ipſe vitam in ſe habet, vt ipſa vita ſibi ſit ipſe: He did not as it were borrow life of his father, neither is made partaker of life, but he hath life in himſelfe, he is life vnto himſelfe. *In Iohan. tract.*19. But leſt any man ſhould thus miſtake the words of the text, that becauſe the father gaue to the ſonne to haue life in himſelfe, therefore he gaue him to be God: (for to haue life in himſelfe is to bee God) Auguſtine thus expoundeth them: Dedit filio vitam habere in ſe, breuiter dixerim, genuit filium: He gaue to his ſonne to haue life in himſelfe, in few words, Hee begat his ſonne, &c. As if we ſhould ſay, the father which hath life in himſelfe, that is, is God, gaue to his ſonne to haue life in himſelfe, that is, begat God the ſonne: he begat him not as he was God, or in reſpect of his diuine eſſence, but as hee was his ſonne, in regard of his perſon: yet becauſe of the neere vniting and coniunction of the perſon with the Godhead and diuine power to haue life in himſelfe, which really cannot bee diſtinguiſhed, but onely in reſpect, as we haue ſhewed: the father is ſaid alſo to giue vnto the ſonne to be God, and to haue life in himſelfe, not directly or properly, but obliquely and by a conſequent, becauſe his ſonne, whom he begat from all eternitie, muſt alſo neceſſarily be God. Iohn 5.26.

And that it cannot bee the proper meaning, that God the Father gaue to the ſonne power to haue life in himſelfe, as he is God, or in reſpect of his diuine nature, &c. it appeareth by the words themſelues: for as the father hath life in himſelfe, euen ſo hath hee giuen to the ſonne: but the father hath life in himſelfe, without beginning from any other: Ergo, ſo hath the ſonne.

There ſhould elſe be a contrarietie and repugnancie in the ſpeech: for if Chriſt receiued life from his father, he could not haue it in himſelfe. It muſt therefore of neceſſitie be vnderſtood of the perſon in the Trinitie, not of the diuine eſſence. And ſo we determine that it is true in the concrete, in concreto, if we ſay, Deus Pater genuit Deum Filium: God the Father begat God the Sonne, but not in abſtracto, Deitas Patris genuit Deitatem Filij, that the Godhead of the Father begat the Godhead of the Son. But in reſpect of his perſon only as he is the Sonne the ſecond perſon in Trinity, ſo is he begotten and hath his beginning of God: but in reſpect of his diuine nature as he is God, he is begotten of none, but of himſelfe, as God the Father is.

Concil. Conſtantinop. 6. action. 6. ex epiſtol. Sophronij Hieroſolym. Perfectus deus eſt pater, perfectus deus filius, perfectus deus ſpiritus ſanctus, vnam eandemque ſingula quaque perſona inſeparabilem, indiminutam, & perfectam habet deitatem: The Father is perfect God, the Sonne perfect God, the holy Ghoſt perfect God: euery perſon hath one and the ſame vnſeparable, vndeuided and perfect deitie. If Chriſt then be perfect God, he is God of himſelfe: for he is not perfect, that hath his being from another: and if he haue one and the ſame deitie with his father, then his deitie hath no beginning from any other, for ſuch is his fathers deitie.

S. Ambroſe ſaith vpon theſe words of the Apoſtle: Qui ſolus habet immortalitatem, 1. Tim. 6. v. 16. Which onely hath immortalitie: Non ſepares patrem non ſepares filium, quia diuinitas patris, & filij vna eademque eſt: Doe not ſeparate the father, nor the ſonne, becauſe there is one and the ſame diuinitie of them both, de fid. lib. 3. c. 2. If there be one and the ſame diuinitie of both, then the Sonne is God of himſelfe as the father is.

Origen ex apolog. Pamphil. doth count them in the number of heretikes, which doe affirme, that Chriſtus homo natus patris ſolum in ſe habuit deitatem: That Chriſt being borne man had onely his fathers deitie, &c. How farre then are the Papiſts from this hereſie, that affirme, that Chriſt is not God of himſelfe, and ſo conſequently, that he hath onely his fathers deitie?

Decr. part. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 3. c. 29. Among other heretikes are rehearſed Ætiani, the Ætians, diſſimilem patri aſſerentes filium, which affirmed, that the ſonne was vnlike the father: what doe they elſe affirme and teach, but that the ſonne is not God of himſelfe as the father is?

And yet for further euidence: 1. Iuſtine Martyr of the Greeke Church is an euident witneſſe: hee ſaith, Vnus eſt Deus omnium in patre filio, & ſpiritu ſancto: That there is one God of all, in the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoſt, &c. And he addeth further, that theſe termes, vnbegotten, begotten, proceeding, (are not names of the eſſence, but onely the manner of ſubſiſting.) The diuine eſſence then in his opinion neither begetteth, nor is begotten. ὐκ ὀσίας ὀνόματα ἀλλὰ τρόποι ὑπάρξεως. Lib. de expoſition. fidei.

2. Tertullian ſaith, ſpeaking of the Trinitie: Vnus Deus, ex quo gradus iſti forma & ſpecies: There is one God, of whom are theſe degrees, and formes, &c. he meaneth, the perſons of the Trinitie: the Deitie then of the Sonne is not from the perſon of the father: but the perſons iſſue out of one and the ſame Deitie. Aduerſus Praxean. The faith of the Africane Æthiopike Church at this day is: Quam quidem diuinitatem is (nempe filius) cum patre in Trinitate & vnitate ſemper habuit, & habet communem: Which diuinitie he (that is the Sonne) alwaies had common together with the father (he ſaith not from the father) in Trinitie and Vnitie, and hath, &c. Zaga Zabo apud Damianum à goes.

3. Latter confeſſ. of Heluetia, c. 3. As touching their nature and eſſence, they are but one God, and the diuine eſſence is common to the Father, Sonne and holy Ghoſt, &c.

4. Peter Lombard is an euident witneſſe with vs, that God the father begat not the diuine eſſence, but the perſon onely of his ſonne. This poſition he hath, Diuina eſſentia non genuit diuinam eſſentiam: That the diuine eſſence begat not the diuine eſſence: which he prooueth by theſe three reaſons: Firſt, if the father begot the diuine eſſence, it would follow, that the Godhead or diuine eſſence ſhould bee a relatiue, not a ſubſtance: for that which is begotten, is a relatiue to that which begetteth. And as Auguſtine ſaith: Quod relatiuè dicitur, non indicat ſubſtantiam: That which is relatiuely ſpoken, doth not ſhew the ſubſtance.

Secondly, then alſo the father ſhould beget himſelf, if he beget the diuine eſſence, which is himſelf.

Thirdly, ſeeing the father is God and a diuine eſſence, if he ſhould beget the Godhead and diuine eſſence, then by begetting he ſhould be God, and ſo that which is begotten ſhould be the cauſe of that which begetteth, whereas he that begetteth is the cauſe of that which is begotten.

Vpon theſe reaſons he concludeth, that diuina eſſentia nec genuit, nec genita eſt: that the diuine eſſence neither begetteth, nor is begotten, lib. 1. diſtinct. 5. a. b. c. And this ſentence is confirmed by Innocent. 3. decret. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 1. c. 2. Diuina natura nec eſt generans, nec genita: The diuine nature neither begetteth, nor is begotten.

And whereas we ſay, Deus de Deo, lumen de lumine, God of God, light of light: the meaning is this, not that the Godhead is begotten, but that the ſonne, which is God and light, is begotten of the father God and light, not begotten as he is God, but as he is the ſonne, Magiſt. ibid. liter. f. So then not the ſubſtance or Godhead of the ſonne, but his perſon onely is begotten.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER CHRIST BE OVR Mediatour, as he is man onely, or as he is both God and man.

The Papiſts.

29. Error. THey doe teach that Chriſt onely exerciſed his prieſthood and the office of the Mediatour, as hee was man, not as he was both God and man, Rhem. Heb. 5. ſect. 4. His obedience, ſacrifice, prayer, ſatisfaction, entring into the heauens, was all performed by and in his manhood onely, ſecundum formam ſerui, as he was in the forme of a ſeruant, not ſecundum formam dei, as hee was in the forme of God, Bellarm. de Chriſto, lib. 5. cap. 1.

*Argum.*1. If he were Prieſt as he is God, he ſhould be inferiour and not equall to God, and ſo be Gods prieſt, and not his ſonne: for he to whom ſacrifice is offered, is greater then he that offereth it. Rhemiſt.ibid.

Anſw. It followeth not, that becauſe Chriſt is our Prieſt and Mediatour as God and man, that therefore he ſhould performe all the duties of the Prieſthood as he was God: all the parts of his prieſthood that required obedience, ſeruice, homage, ſubiection, as were his ſufferings and ſacrifice, he exerciſed as man: but the authoritie of reconciling vs to God, he wrought both as God and man.

*Argum.*2. There is one God, and one Mediatour of God and men, the man Ieſus Chriſt, 1.Tim. 2.5. Why ſaith the Apoſtle, The man Ieſus Chriſt, but to ſignifie, that according to his manhood onely he is our Mediatour? *Bellarm.cap.*3. 1.Tim.2.5.

Anſw. Firſt, you may as well conclude out of this place, that the Mediatour is onely man and not God, as that he is Mediatour onely as man and not as God: but if out of theſe words it may be prooued, that the Mediatour is both God and man, as it neceſſarily followeth, (for how elſe can he be a Mediatour of God and men?) it doth as well follow that he is Mediatour both as God and as man. Indeed the Apoſtle ſaith, The man Ieſus Chriſt, not God and man, for the one he had ſaid before, There is one God; in that ſpeech including our Sauiour Chriſt, who is one God with his father. Secondly, what S. Pauls meaning is, it appeareth in the next verſe, who gaue himſelfe a ranſome, v.6. As Chriſt therefore gaue himſelfe a ranſome, ſo is he Prieſt and Mediatour: but hee gaue himſelfe as hee was God; as he was man, he was giuen: Ergo as God he is Mediatour. Thirdly, I will adioyne the anſwer of Eſpencaeus a learned Papiſt: 1. That the Fathers by this very place doe prooue that Chriſt is God, not man onely, which could not be concluded from hence, if Chriſt were Mediatour as man only, and not as God and man. 2. The Apoſtle addeth, The man Chriſt Ieſus: Quorum illud nomen eſt hominis, non puri puti, ſed à deo vncti: Whereof the firſt is a name not of a very pure man, but annointed of God: Poſterius nomen dei hominis eſt. The latter is a name of one that is God and man, ſuch an one as ſhould ſaue the people from their ſinnes: *Eſpenc.lib.de Chriſt.mediat.c.*5. Harm.fol.6. pag.97.

The Proteſtants.

IN the office of the Prieſthood two things muſt be conſidered, a miniſterie, and an authoritie: In reſpect of the miniſteriall part Chriſt performed the office of his Prieſthood as man: but in reſpect of the authoritie of entring into the holieſt place, and reconciling vs to God, which was the principall part of his Prieſthood, he did performe it as the ſonne of God, as the Lord and maker of the houſe, and not as a ſeruant. And ſo we hold that Chriſt neither according to his humanitie alone, nor his Godhead alone, but that whole Chriſt is a Prieſt, both as God and man.

*Argum.*1. S. Paul ſaith, God was in Chriſt, reconciling the world to himſelfe, 2.Cor.5.19. Ergo, Chriſt, as God, is our reconciler and Mediator. Againe, Chriſt as hee is without father and mother, hath no beginning of his daies, nor end of his life; ſo is hee a Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech, Heb.7.3, but Chriſt as he is God hath no mother, as man no father: as he is God hath no beginning of daies, and in his whole perſon no end of his life: therfore as God and man he is a Prieſt of Melchiſedechs order. 2.Cor.5.19. Heb.7.3.

Bellarmine anſwereth to the firſt, 1. Euery one that reconcileth is not a mediator, though euery mediator be a reconciler. 2. It is one thing to be a mediator, an other to reconcile by a mediator; God by the man Chriſt the mediator did reconcile vs to himſelfe, but it followeth not, that therefore hee is our mediator as God.

Secondly, the place alleaged out of the Hebrewes, prooueth that the perſon of our high Prieſt and mediator is diuine, but not that he is our Prieſt as he is God: he is both God and man, but he executeth his Prieſthood and Mediatorſhip onely as man. Bellarm.c.6.ad 2.& 3.Loc.

Cont. Firſt, 1. Though ſometime among men one may reconcile himſelfe without a mediator, yet there is no reconciliation with God without a mediator: wherefore it is very abſurd to denie this argument, Chriſt reconcileth vs as God and man, Ergo, he is our mediator as God and man: Againe the Apoſtle ſheweth wherein this reconciliation conſiſteth, in the not imputing of our ſinnes. 1.Cor.5.19. But the not imputation of our ſinnes, is a worke of the mediator. 2. Chriſt is both the reconciler as God and man, and the partie to whom we are reconciled, as he is God: to bee a mediator, and to reconcile by a mediator, doe both agree vnto Chriſt: it followeth not then, we are reconciled to him as God, Ergo, not by him as God: for the Apoſtle ſheweth, that he reconcileth vs to himſelfe: and God doth beſeech you through vs, And I pray you in Chriſts ſtead: Chriſt then as God is our mediator, and doth as it were entreate vs to be reconciled. 1.Cor.5.19.

Secondly, Melchiſedech was a type of the eternall Prieſthood of Chriſt: He is likened to the ſonne of God, and continueth a Prieſt for euer: Heb.7.3. Chriſt cannot be a Prieſt for euer, but as he is God: and verſ.25. He is able perfectly to ſaue them that come vnto God by him: but he cannot perfectly ſaue, but as God: Ergo, he is mediator as God, verſ.28. The word of the oth, &c. maketh the ſonne prieſt that is conſecrated for euer: Chriſt is a Prieſt after Melchiſedechs order as he is the ſon, but as the ſon he is God; Ergo, as God he is our Mediator. Heb.7.3.25.28.

*Argum.*2. Saint Paul ſaith, The law was giuen by Angels in the hand of a Mediator, Galath. 3.19. But then Chriſt was God onely: Ergo, he is Mediator alſo as God. Bellarmine ſaith, that he Gal.3.19.

is called Mediatour, becauſe that perſon was appointed afterward to bee Mediator. But the text is plaine, that he then actually performed the office of a Mediator, ſo much as pertained to his Godhead: for the Law was giuen in the hand of a Mediator, which kind of ſpeech ſheweth a preſent execution of the Mediatorſhip.

Bellarmine replieth: if Chriſt were the Mediator before he was man, being then only God, it would follow that as God he was inferiour to God; for as he is a Mediator he is inferiour. c. 8.

Anſw. 1. Chriſt in reſpect of euery part of his Mediatorſhip is not inferiour to God; but equall as he executeth his Mediatorſhip as God: He is inferiour onely as the man Mediator, not as God Mediator: as Theophylact expoundeth theſe words, Iohn 1.3. All things were made by it, ſaying: Patrem mediatore filio ad rerum creationem vſum non minore, ſed æquali: That the father vſed his ſonne as a mediator for the creation, yet not leſſe then the father but equall.

2. Auguſtine ſaith, Non mediator homo præter deitatem, — diuina humanitas, & humana diuinitas mediatrix: The man Chriſt is not mediator beſide his diuine nature; — the diuine humanitie, and the humane diuinitie, is the Mediatrix, hom. de omnib. c. 12. Ergo, Chriſt Mediator both as God & man.

Cyrillus lib. c. Apologetic. anathatiſ. 10. Quando dicis indignum eſſe deo, vt ſacrificet, aſtipulor & ego, ſcilicet ſi ſolum ſit, & abſque carne verbum: Itaq; vidi ipſum ſacrificantem ſecundum humanitatem, conſidentem vt deum: ſic beatus Paulus, Heb. 8.1. Where thou ſaiſt, that it is no meete thing for God to ſacrifice, I grant it, if the word ſhould be by it ſelfe without fleſh: therefore I conſider Chriſt ſacrificing as man, but ſitting in the heauens as God, as bleſſed Paul ſaith: Heb. 8.1. We haue ſuch an high Prieſt, that ſitteth at the right hand of the throne of the Maieſtie in heauen: Chriſt is our Prieſt, as hee ſitteth at the right hand, &c. but ſo is he God, as this father ſaith, the firſt is here affirmed by S. Paul: Ergo, as he is God, he is our Prieſt.

Harm. ſect. 6. pag. 97.

3. Thus alſo our reformed Churches hold: Confeſſ. of Bohemia, c. 4. Of theſe two natures — is made one indiuiſible perſon, one Chriſt, Emmanuel, our King and Prieſt, our Redeemer, our Mediator. Confeſſ. of Scotland, artic. of election: Becauſe the onely Godhead could not ſuffer death, neither could the onely manhood ouercome the ſame, he ioyned both together in one perſon, that the imbecilitie of the one ſhould ſuffer, and be ſubiect to death, — and the infinite and inuincible power of the other, to wit, of the Godhead ſhould triumph and purchaſe to vs life, &c. Their opinion is, that both natures concurred in the execution of the Mediatorſhip.

Bernard alſo writeth well of this point: Sicut mediator noſter duas naturas, humanitatem & diuinitatem coniunxit in vna perſona: ita ſingula eius opera, ad hanc ſiue illam neceſſe eſt pertinere naturam; ad hanc ſcilicet miſeria, ad illam pertinet potentia; As our Mediator ioyned two natures, the diuine and humane in one perſon; ſo all his workes belong to one of theſe natures: whatſoeuer he ſuffered was of man, his powerfull works were of his diuine nature: ſer. de verbis ſapientiæ. Chriſt therfore wrought ſome workes of his Mediatorſhip as man, ſome as God; but the whole office he executed as both.

Leo epiſt. 81. Qua ratione veritatem mediatoris impleret, niſi qua in forma dei æqualis eſt patri, & in forma ſerui particeps eſſet & noſtri: How ſhould he fulfill the veritie of a Mediator, vnleſſe he were in the forme of God equall to his father, and in the forme of a ſeruant partaker with vs: Both theſe natures then belong not only to the being but to the fulfilling of the Mediators office, not to the conſtitution onely, but to the execution alſo.

Eſpencæus a learned diuine of Paris of their owne ſide hath written a whole treatiſe of this matter, wherein he maintaineth this poſition, that Chriſt is not Mediator onely: Qua homo, ſed qua deus: As he is man, but as he is God. lib. de Chriſt. mediat. c. 5. And to this purpoſe he alleageth diuers fathers: as Cyrill: Non propter carnis ſolum diſpenſationem mediator vocatur, Hee is not called a Mediator onely becauſe of the diſpenſation of his fleſh: Theſaur. lib. 4. c. 2.

To the ſame end he alleageth, Theophylact. c. 2. Theophylactus adeo de ratione mediatoris ſenſit eſſe diuinam naturam, vt hinc Chriſti diuinitatem colligat ita: quod deus ſit, inde liquet, quod mediator ſit, &c. Theophylact doth thinke that the diuine nature belongeth to the manner of the mediation, in ſuch ſort that he thereby proueth Chriſt to be God: That he is God, it is euident, becauſe he is the Mediator.

To this purpoſe alleaging many fathers both Greeke and Latine, c. 2.3.4. he concludeth with Auguſtine: Mediatorem inter nos & deum & mortalitatem habere oportuit tranſeuntem, & beatitatem permanentem: &c. It was neceſſarie that the mediator ſhould haue, both tranſitorie mortalitie, and permanent felicitie, &c. lib. 9. de ciuit. dei. c. 15. And whereas in the ſame place it followeth: Non ob hoc mediator quia verbum ſed per quod homo: He is not a mediator, becauſe he is the word, but whereby he is man: he anſwereth, that Auguſtines meaning is, that Chriſt was not our mediator as the word onely and ſimply, without our fleſh. c. 5. Thus this graue writer, one of their owne ſide is a plentifull witneſſe with vs againſt them.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER CHRIST merited for himſelfe.

The Papiſts.

30. Error.

CHriſt, they ſay, by his paſſion and ſufferings, hath not onely merited eternall life for vs, but euen by his owne merite obtained his owne glorification, Rhemiſt. annot. Heb. 2.1.

Phil.2.9.

Argum. 1. Philip.2.9. He humbled himſelfe vnto the death of the croſſe, wherefore God hath alſo highly exalted him, and giuen him a name aboue all names: Ergo, Chriſt merited his exaltation, Rhemiſt, in hunc locum.

Luk.24.26.
Iſai.45.22.

Anſw. Firſt, this place ſheweth a ſequele of the exaltation of Chriſt after his humiliation, it maketh not one the cauſe of another, as our Sauiour himſelfe ſaith, Luc.24.26. Chriſt ought to haue ſuffered, and ſo enter into his glory. Secondly, the exaltation which the Apoſtle heere ſpeaketh of, is the ſame, which God chalengeth to himſelfe, Iſai.45.22. Euery knee ſhall bow vnto me, and euery tongue ſhall ſweare by me. But it were moſt groſſe to affirme, that the diuine power and glory can be merited: Chriſt hath his diuinitie by nature, and not by merite. Thirdly, Saint Ambroſe expoundeth this place not of the purchaſe, but the manifeſtation onely of Chriſts glory: Chriſtus hoc natus accepit, vt poſt crucem manifeſtaretur, quid à patre, dum generaretur, acceperit; non enim tunc accepit à patre, quando à creatura cœpit ſciri: Chriſt receiued this in his birth, that it ſhould be manifeſt after his croſſe, what he receiued of his father in his generation; for he then did not receiue it of his father when it began to be knowen of the creature. in 2. Philipp.

The Proteſtants.

Apoc.5.9.

It is not in any wiſe to be thought, that Chriſt merited his glory, which is due to him in reſpect of his diuinitie: but that by the glorious worke of our redemption, he hath declared himſelfe, to be a perſon worthy of all honour and glory, Apoc.5.9. Thou art worthie to take the booke, &c. The place is ſo to be vnderſtood.

Rom.5.10.
Ioh.17.19.

Argum. 1. If Chriſt had reſpect vnto himſelfe in his ſufferings, to gaine or merite any thing for himſelfe, his loue ſhould greatly be obſcured and darkened, which Saint Paule ſo greatly commendeth, in that he died for his enemies, Rom.5.10. For now ſhould not his loue be whole and entyre towards vs, as though for our cauſe he onely had died: But it is now a deuided and halfe loue: for he died, as they ſay, partly to merit for himſelfe, partly to merite for vs. But the ſcripture ſpeaketh cleane contrary, Ioh.17.19. For their ſakes ſanctifie I my ſelfe: he ſaith not, partly for their ſakes, partly for mine owne.

Saint Ambroſe ſheweth, how that whatſoeuer Chriſt did, hee did wholly for vs, not thereby to gaine any thing to himſelfe: 1. Concerning his faſting he ſaith: Chriſtus non emerenda gratia ſue cauſa, ſed noſtra eruditionis gratia ieiunauit: Chriſt faſted not to merite fauour or grace to himſelfe, but for our erudition or inſtruction. lib.3. de fid. c.2.

2. Nec ſibi ſua natiuitas profuit, ſed nobis: Neither did his birth profit himſelfe but vs, in 1. Coloſſ.

3. Chriſtus noſtri non ſui cauſa pauper factus: Chriſt became poore for vs, not for himſelfe. in 2. Cor.8.

4. Chriſtus eſt mortuus pro nobis. ſed ille, vt prodeſſet nobis; noſtra autem mors non illi profuit, ſed nobis: Chriſt died for vs, he died to profit vs, but our death doth not profit him, but our ſelues. in 8. ad Roman.

Thus we ſee that the 1. birth, 2. faſting, 3. pouertie, 4. death of Chriſt did not any waies aduantage himſelfe: but all was done for vs.

Ioh.17.5.
Heb.1.6.

Argum. 2. All glorie that Chriſt hath, was from euerlaſting due to his perſon, becauſe he is the eternall Sonne of God: as he himſelfe ſaith, Iohn 17.5. And now glorifie me with thine owne ſelfe, with the glory which I had with thee, before the world was: And this glory was due vnto Chriſt ſo ſoone as he was incarnate by the right of his Godhead. Heb.1.6. When he bringeth in his firſt begotten Sonne into the world, he ſaith, Let all the Angels of God worſhip him. And the Rhemiſts themſelues confeſſe, in their Annotat. vpon theſe words, that ſtraight vpon Chriſts deſcending from heauen, it was the duetie of Angels to worſhip him. Ergo, he merited not his glorification by his death, which was due vnto him euen at his firſt incarnation.

Argum. 3. If Chriſt merited his owne glorification, then he alſo merited the hypoſtaticall vnion, that his manhoode ſhould be ioyned to his Godhead in vnitie of perſon; for his glory, maieſtie, and power giuen to his manhoode, doth iſſue and ariſe from the vniting of his Godhead therewith in one perſon: but his humanitie deſerued not to be vnited to the Godhead: Nemo tam cæcus eſt, ſaith Auguſtine, No man is ſo blinde, that he dare ſay, that Chriſt by his well liuing merited to be called the ſonne of God. de corrept. & grat. ca.11. And he prooueth it out of the firſt of Luke, verſ.35. Therefore ſhall that holy thing be called the Sonne of God: not for any workes going before, but becauſe the holy Ghoſt came vpon her. Wherefore the diuine glory which Chriſt hath, was not merited, but his owne it was from the beginning, which glory the humane nature in Chriſt is made partaker of, not for any merite, but becauſe it is vnited to the Godhead in the ſame perſon, through the abundant and vnſpeakable grace and loue of God vnto mankinde, which of his free grace rather tooke vnto himſelfe the nature of men, then of Angels. Wherefore Chriſt by his perfect obedience and bleſſed ſacrifice, hath merited abundantly for vs, remiſſion of ſinnes, and eternall life: but by his merites he hath gained nothing for himſelfe: neither had he any reſpect to the bettering of his owne eſtate in his ſufferings, but onely to pay a ranſome for vs.

Saint Ambroſe further ſaith: Videtur donum patris, hoc eſt, eſſe filium, & nomen ſuper omne nomen, hoc eſt, eſſe Deum, &c. This ſeemeth to be the gift of the father, that is, to be his ſonne: and that is the name aboue all names, to be God in 2. ad Philipp. but the Godhead cannot be merited.

Againe he ſaith: Licet ſecundum carnem Chriſto ſedes ad dextram Dei à patre, generationis tamen ſuperna & æqualitatis potentia defertur: Although Chriſt according to his fleſh ſitteth at the right hand of his father, yet it is due vnto him in reſpect of his ſupernall generation, and equall power. lib.5. de fide.c.7.

Further he thus teſtifieth: Ad hoc natus eſt Chriſtus, vt faceret creaturam; nec enim ſibi natiuitas ſua proficit, ſed nobis, quia non eguit naſci; erat enim in Deo qui proceſſit de Deo: ſi ergo natiuitas prima ipſi non profuit, multo minus ſecunda: Chriſt was borne or begotten of God to this ende, to make the creature: for his natiuitie or begetting, did not profite himſelfe, but vs; becauſe he needed not to be borne, for he was in God, that proceeded from God: and if the firſt and eternall birth did not profite him, much leſſe the ſecond, in 1. ad Coloſſ.

Thus Saint Ambroſe is very conſtant and reſolute in this point, that Chriſt gained nothing properly to himſelfe by his life or death; but all was done for vs.

Yet Chriſt may be ſaid in two reſpects to haue obtained ſomewhat to himſelfe, 1. becauſe the preeminence of the members doth redound to the honour of the head: and in this ſenſe Saint Ambroſe ſaith: Nos redemit, ſed ſibi acquiſiuit, &c. in his omnibus detrimentum nullum video diuinitatis, profectum operationis agnoſco &c. Chriſt hath redeemed vs, but he hath alſo gotten to himſelfe: in all this I ſee no detriment of the diuinitie, but a profiting in the worke of our redemption. ſerm.20. in Pſal.119. His meaning is, that Chriſt gained, in that he finiſhed the redemption for vs; he purchaſed nothing properly to himſelfe, but by way of communication, becauſe his members by his merit were redeemed. So then Chriſt merited not ſimply for himſelfe, but with relation vnto his members: and in that reſpect, as the head maketh one myſticall bodie with the members; ſo Chriſt alſo may be ſaid to merite for himſelfe, not conſidered a part, but together with his bodie: ſo is Tertullian to bee vnderſtood, Aſcenſum ſuum ædificat in cœlos vtiq; ſibi & ſuis, &c. He doth build vp his aſcenſion euen to heauen for himſelfe and his, &c. Thus alſo our reformed Churches: as the confeſſion of Saxonie, artic. of the remiſſion of ſinnes: Imputation of righteouſneſſe is giuen for the merite of Chriſt alone, and that Chriſt is effectuall in vs, and doth by his holy ſpirit quicken the beleeuers, — and withall make vs heyres of eternall life, &c. They in the merite of Chriſt conſider onely the benefit, that thereby ariſeth vnto vs. And ſo M. Caluine excellently ſaith, that ſuch was the ineſtimable loue of Chriſt toward vs, Vt ſui oblitus ſe ſuamque vitam nobis impenderit: That forgetting himſelfe, he beſtowed both him and his life for vs, &c. And againe, as often as the Scripture ſpeaketh of Chriſts death, fructum pretiumq; illius in nobis ſtatuit: it ſetteth the fruite and price thereof in vs, &c.

Lib.5.aduerſ. Marcion.ex epiſt.1.ad Theſſalonicenſ.

in 2.Philip. verſ.9.

2. Chriſt by way of declaration or manifeſtation is ſaid to haue obtained his great name; not in that he merited his glory by his paſſion, which was due to his perſon: but by his obedience he declared himſelfe worthy of ſo great glory: thus Peter Lombard expoundeth that place of the Apoſtle, Philip.2.9. God hath giuen him a name aboue euery name, &c. Secundum tropum in ſcriptura creberrimum res dicitur fieri, quando innoteſcit, &c. manifeſtationem ergo illius nominis donauit illi Deus poſt reſurrectionem, ſed illam meruit per obedientiam paſſionis: According to a certaine figure of ſpeech often vſed in the Scripture, a thing is ſaid to be done, when it appeareth onely; ſo God gaue vnto Chriſt after his reſurrection, the manifeſtation of his name; but he merited it by the obedience of his paſſion: lib.3.diſt.18.lit.c. By his ſentence Chriſt merited not his glory, but the manifeſtation onely thereof, that is, was declared by the obedience of his death worthy all honour, which is that wee affirme: for otherwiſe to ſpeake properly, as Peter Lombard in the ſame place ſaith: Habuit hoc nomen Dei filius, in quantum Deus ab æterno per naturam; in quantum homo factus eſt, habuit ex tempore per gratiam: The Sonne of God had this name, as he was God eternally by nature; as he was made man, hee had it temporally by grace, &c. If then he had it of grace, he properly did not merite it.

Ex citat.Eſpenc.lib.de Chriſt. Mediator.cap.10.

I will alleage another graue teſtimonie, of one of their owne ſide, Clichthoueus: ad Damaſcen. numerum.83. Quæ in Chriſto eſt diuinitas omnium princeps & dominatrix ſua idem contulit humanitati, vt ratione vnionis ſit omnium etiam domina, &c. The diuinitie, that is in Chriſt Prince and ruler of all things, gaue the ſame vnto his humanity, by reaſon of the vnion, to be Lord of all things, &c. which rule and domination is ſaid to be giuen, when for and after his humilitie vpon the croſſe it was manifeſted vnto men, &c. We cannot haue a clearer euidence for this matter, as we haue heard, then from themſelues.

Concil.Epheſin.1.can.9. Si quis dicit quod Chriſtus pro ſe ipſe obtulerit oblationem, & non magis pro ſolis nobis, anathema ſit: If any man ſay, that Chriſt offered vp himſelfe for himſelfe, and not rather onely for vs, let him be accurſed. But if Chriſt merited heauen by his ſufferings, not onely for vs, but for himſelfe alſo, then had he part himſelfe in his owne oblation. Thus we want not here the teſtimonie of the Greeke Church: Auguſtines opinion of the Africane Church is alleaged before, with the conſent of the writers of the reformed Churches, and of ſome popiſh writers: now I will put to the ſeale of the Martyrs.

Maſter Tindal holy Martyr hath ſealed this truth: Chriſt with all his workes did not deſerue heauen for himſelfe (for that was his already) but did vs ſeruice therewith, and neither looked for, nor ſought his owne profite, but ours, and the honour of God his Father only: Fox pag.1247.col.2.articul.7. Againe, he explaineth himſelfe thus: Ieſus Chriſt poſſeſſeth the kingdome of heauen by double right: firſt becauſe he is the ſonne of God, and very inheritour of his kingdome; ſecondly, becauſe he hath gotten it by his paſſions and death: of his ſecond right he hath no neede, and therefore he giueth it all to them, that beleeue and truſt in him, pag.1256.col.2.articul.30.

THE THIRD PART OF THIS CONTROVERSIE, concerning the comming of Chriſt to iudgement; which appertaineth to his whole perſon, as he is both God and man.

THis part of this controuerſie hath two parts: Firſt, concerning the ſignes, which muſt come to paſſe before his appearing. Secondly, of the time and manner of his appearing. The firſt part containeth three queſtions: Firſt, whether the Goſpell bee already preached to the whole world. Secondly, whether Henoch and Elias ſhall come in the fleſh, before the day of iudgement. Thirdly, of the great perſecutions toward the end of the world.

THE FIRST QVESTION, WHETHER THE Goſpell be alreadie preached throughout the world.

The Papiſts.

THey denie that the Goſpell hath bin already publiſhed to all nations of the world: for there are many great countries, which neuer heard of the Goſpell, as they affirme: but before the comming of Chriſt to iudgement, they ſay, it ſhall be preached to the whole world, Bellarmin. de Roman. pontif lib.3.cap.4. 31.Error.

*Argum.*1. Matth.24.14. Chriſt ſaith, This Goſpell of the kingdome ſhall bee preached thorough the whole world, for a witnes vnto all nations, and then ſhall the end come. The end of the world ſhall immediately follow the generall preaching of the Goſpell: which if it hath been performed, it is moſt like to haue bin done in the Apoſtles time, then the world ſhould haue ended long agoe, Bellar.ibid. Matth.24.14.

Anſw. 1. This word τότε, then, doth not neceſſarily implie an immediate conſequence or following of that, to the which this note of time is annexed: as Auguſtine well obſerueth, of the like phraſe vſed in the Goſpell, in illo tempore, at that time; as he giueth inſtance in the 14. of Matthew, verſe 1. and Mark.6.14. where both of them ſpeaking of Herode, what he ſaid, when he heard of the fame of Chriſt, vſe the ſame phraſe, yet ſet not downe things in the ſame order: and ſo he inferreth: Nulla facta neceſſitate, qua hoc etiam conſequenter geſtum eſſe intelligere cogeremur: There is no neceſſity to compel vs to vnderſtand this to haue bin done next after, or conſequently in order. So alſo Chryſoſt. Non conſequentia temporũ, neq; præcedentiũ connexionis iſtud tunc eſt: This word then, is not a note of the conſequence of time, nor connexiõ of things paſt, &c. as he ſheweth by the like phraſe vſed in the Goſpel: In thoſe daies came Iohn Baptiſt: he noteth not the time immediatly following: for he ſpake of the birth of Chriſt, the comming of the wiſe men, the death of Herode, and Iohn Baptiſt came 30. yeeres after. So here, it is ſufficient to vnderſtand, that the Goſpell ſhal be preached to all the world, before the end come, not preſcribing the order of time: as Caluine well obſerueth, nullum tempus certum præfigit, he fixeth no certaine time: but ſheweth in generall, that the Goſpell ſhall be propagated, ante vltimum aduentus ſui diem, before the laſt day of his comming. In the like maner our Sauiour ſaith, Mat.26.64. ἀπ' ἄρτι, from this time, amodò, from hence forth yee ſhall ſee the Sonne of man ſitting at the right hand of the power of God: yet this, from hence forth, is not yet come. Hereof Origene thus writeth: Deo à conſtitutione mundi ad conſummationem eius velut vna dies, non mirum ergo, quod hic dicit ſaluator, à modo, ſpacium eſſe breuiſſimum: Vnto God from the conſtitution of the world to the end thereof, it is but as one day: no maruell then, if our Sauiour ſay, from henceforth, counting it a ſhort ſpace, &c. De conſenſ. Euangeliſt. c.43. Hom.77.in.24. cap.Matth. Tractat.35. in Matth.

2. But ſeeing Bellarmine doth vrge this as an argument, that Antichriſt is not yet come, becauſe, before Antichriſts comming, the Goſpell muſt be generally preached: for the great perſecution vnder Antichriſt ſhall hinder all exerciſe of religion. Our further anſwere is this: 1. that it is no argument, that the Goſpell ſhal not be preached after Antichriſt is reuealed, becauſe of the great perſecution: for notwithſtanding the moſt grieuous perſecutions in the Primitiue Church vnder the Pagane Romane Emperours, yet the Goſpell was propagated and encreaſed ſtill. 2. I will not preſſe the interpretation of Chryſoſtom, Theophylact, Euthymius, Hilarie, who interpret this place of the end and deſtruction of Ieruſalem, before the which the Goſpell was preached to moſt parts of the world: for our Sauiour immediately before hauing ſpoken of the whole earth, meaneth the end of the ſame. 3. For more full anſwere then I ſay: that there are two generall preachings of the Goſpell: the one I will call, hiſtoricall, which was performed in the Apoſtles time, the ſound of their doctrine went into all the world: the other analogicall and complementall: that as the Goſpell was preached at the firſt by the Apoſtles, and their diſciples to the whole world, before the deſtruction of Ieruſalem: ſo before the finall end and diſſolution of the world, for a more full conuincing thereof, the Goſpell ſhall be reuiued againe: as we ſee in part hath been performed alreadie, in the preaching of the Goſpell, in this laſt hundred yeeres, and ſhall be more at the generall conuerſion of the Iewes: yet betweene theſe two generall preachings, there is great difference: 1. Then Apoſtles were appointed by ſpeciall commiſſion to preach to the world: but in the other, we expect no ſuch calling of Apoſtles, but God ſhall ſtirre Of two general preachings of the Goſpell.

vp zealous Preachers and Paſtors. 2. Then they were furniſhed with gift of miracles, which ſhall not bee neceſſarie now. 3. Then the Goſpell was preached to them, that neuer heard it: now it ſhall cheefly be reuiued, where it had been heard before. 4. Then the Goſpell preuailed againſt Paganiſme and heatheniſh Idolatrie: now cheefly it ſhall fight againſt Antichriſtianiſme and falſe worſhip.

Argum. 2. We ſee the Goſpell hath been preached in great countries of late, which neuer heard the Goſpell afore, as it is thought. Rhemiſt. Matth. 24. ſect. 4.

Anſw. 1. They ſpeake doubtfully, they cannot tell: as it is thought, ſay they. 2. They meane the preaching of their Friers, in thoſe new found countries, which was not the preaching of the Goſpell, but of vile ſuperſtition, not to conuert the people to God, but to robbe and ſpoyle them, and make a pray of them, killing and ſlaying them without all mercie: ſee Benzo in hiſtoria noui orbis. 3. We denie not but that the Goſpell may be reuiued and renued in many countries, where notwithſtanding it was planted many yeeres afore: as this countrie of ours in ancient time called Britannie, was firſt inſtructed in the faith by the preaching of Ioſeph of Arimathea, as Gildas ſaith: or as Nicephorus ſaith, by Simon Zelotes: yet after that, the foundation of the faith thus begun, it was confirmed afterward in King Lucius daies, by the preaching of Fagane and Damiane, which at Lucius requeſt were ſent into the land from Eleutherius B. of Rome: and ſo may it come to paſſe in other countries: a ſecond preaching therefore taketh not away the former, but confirmeth and reuiueth it. 4. And many countries may bee inhabited now: which were not peopled in the Apoſtles time, and this notwithſtanding the Goſpell was preached then to the habitable parts of the world. Fox. pag. 106.

The Proteſtants.

THat the Goſpell was in the Apoſtles time preached to all the knowne and inhabited nations of the world, ſo that once already the world hath been generally called by the preaching of the word, it is euident by the Scriptures.

Argum. 1. Our Sauiour ſaith to his Apoſtles, Ye ſhal be my witneſſes to the vttermoſt parts of the earth, Act. 1. 8. which is ſpoken to the perſons of the Apoſtles, not in them to all paſtors and preachers, as ſome expound it: for in the ſame verſe, there is mention made of the comming of the holy Ghoſt, and how firſt they ſhould begin to witneſſe at Ieruſalem: which things were indeede ſo accompliſhed in the Apoſtles. Act. 1. 8.

Saint Paul alſo Rom. 10. 18. expoundeth that place of the Pſalme, Their ſound is gone forth into all the world, of the Apoſtles. And Coloſſ. 1. 6. The word of truth is come to you, as it is to all the world, and is fruitfull as it is among you: and verſ. 23. The Goſpell hath bin preached to euery creature which is vnder heauen. Theſe places do euidently proue, that the Goſpell was preached to all the world, euen in the Apoſtles time: neither can it be ſo vnderſtoode, as Bellarmine imagineth: that the Goſpell was preached not in act, but in vertue, becauſe the Apoſtles did ſowe the ſeed, which ſhould afterward fructifie in all the world: or becauſe the fame of the Goſpell onely was ſpread ouer all the world. Bellarm. lib. 3. de Roman. pontif. c. 4. Rom. 10. 18. Coloſſ. 1. 6.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, It is come vnto the world, as it is alſo vnto you: but it was come actually to the Coloſſians, therefore it was ſo come alſo to the world. 2. He ſaith alſo, and is fruitfull, &c. but the fame or rumor only of the Goſpell could not be fruitfull: and the Apoſtle calleth it a preaching: but the carrying or ſpreading of a report, is not a preaching, which is effectuall and begetteth faith. 3. If by the fame of the Goſpell, he vnderſtand the preaching thereof at the ſecond hand, by ſuch as were the Apoſtles ſchollers, and ſo ſent forth by them: it is the ſame thing that wee affirme, that in the Apoſtles time, though not by the Apoſtles perſons onely, all the knowne parts of the world heard the Goſpell.

Againe, ſeeing the Apoſtolicall calling and gifts is now ceaſed, neither are wee to looke that men ſhould be immediatly called from heauen, and the preaching of the Goſpel to al nations is an Apoſtolicall worke, for the which the Apoſtles alſo receiued the gifts of tongues: ſeeing now we haue neither Apoſtolike men, nor Apoſtolike gifts, we are not to doubt, but that this promiſe and propheſie of the vniuerſall preaching of the Goſpell, is performed already.

Argum. 2. It appeareth in Eccleſiaſticall hiſtories, that the Apoſtles diſperſed themſelues into all parts of the world, euery where preaching the Goſpell. Thomas preached to the Parthians, Medes, Perſians, alſo to the Germanes: Simon Zelotes, in Mauritania, Africa, and in Britannia: Iudas, called Thaddeus in Meſopotamia: Marke, in Ægypt: Bartholomæus to the Indians: Andrew preached to the Scythians, Sogdians, Æthiopians: Hieron. catalog. ſcriptor. So that there were few or no knowne countries in the world, which heard not of the fame of the Goſpell.

But here we muſt put in certaine cautions: Firſt, that the Goſpell was to be preached in the habitable or knowne world: the word is οἰκουμένη which Hierome ſaith anſwereth to the Hebrue תבל tibel, Quam nos habitatū transferre poſſumus. Which we may tranſlate the inhabited world, tom. 4. epiſtol. ad Cyprian. Many countries are inhabited now that were not habitable then, or at the leaſt not inhabited: wherefore it was ſufficient, that the people of the world heard of the Goſpell, howſoeuer afterward they were propagated into other vnknown places. Secondly, as Auguſtine ſaith, Omnes gentes promiſſæ ſunt, non omnes homines omnium gentium: All nations were promiſed to heare of the Goſpel, not all the men and inhabitants of euery nation. And ſo wee doubt not but the Apoſtles did lay the foundation of faith through the whole world, and were firſt planters of the Churches in the moſt knowne nations. Thirdly, though it might be, that there were many barbarous nations in the Apoſtles time, to whom they themſelues preached not perſonally, yet the Goſpell might bee brought vnto them by thoſe, whom the Apoſtles ſent: as there were many diſciples and Euangeliſts beſide the Apoſtles, which preached the Goſpell: at the leaſt the fame of the Goſpel might eaſily be brought to the more obſcure, barbarous, and vnknowne nations, from thoſe famous, large, and populous countries, where the Apoſtles had laboured. Thus S. Ambroſe ſaith in 10. ad Roman. Vbique audita, & peruenit in omnem locum prædicatio nominis Christi: vbi enim præſentia hominis prædicantis defuit, ſonus tamen & fama peruenit, &c. Euery where is heard, and to euery place is come the preaching of the name of Chriſt: for where the preſence of the preacher ceaſed, yet the ſound of the reporter encreaſed: ſo the report of the wonders done in Ægypt came vnto all nations, by the witneſſe of Rahab the harlot, &c. Thus then not by a generall fame onely of the Apoſtles preaching, but a particular report and relation of their doctrine, the name of Chriſt was publiſhed to all nations. Fourthly, the Goſpell in many countries was planted by the Apoſtles, which in ſhort time notwithſtanding might decay, and begin to be extinguiſhed: and afterward their plantings might be renewed, watered, and reuiued by others: and yet may the Apoſtles be the firſt planters. Wherefore according to our meaning wee nothing doubt, but that the Apoſtles ſowed the firſt ſeedes of faith throughout the world: and therefore it is not to be expected, that the Lord ſhould ſend ſuch another generall commiſſion to publiſh the Goſpell to the whole world. Fifthly, we meane not the Goſpell ſo to haue been preached in the Apoſtles time to al the world, as though al nations were then conuerted, but quoad oblationem, in reſpect of the tender and offer thereof: many nations were afterward in diuers ages conuerted, and effectually called: then quoad efficaciam, in reſpect of the effectuall preaching, in their conuerſion, ſo it is not neceſſarie to hold the Goſpell then to haue been preached to all the world: ſixthly, we grant, that ſome nations in the remote places of the world might haue been ignorant of the Goſpell of Chriſt in the Apoſtles time: yet may the Goſpell be truly ſaid to haue been preached to all the world, that is, to the greateſt, and moſt part of the world: though not particularly to euery nation, yet more generally was it then preached, then in any one age afterward: ſo that it may be truly affirmed, that the moſt generall and vniuerſall preaching of the Goſpell to the whole world was in the Apoſtles time.

That the Goſpell hath been already preached to the whole earth, a notable experiment hereof we haue in the firſt Nicen Councell, where were aſſembled 318. Biſhops out of the chiefe prouinces of the world: for Africa, there were preſent the Biſhops of Ægypt, Thebais, Lybia: for Aſia, there came ſome out of Perſia, Arabia, Armenia, Phrygia, Lydia: and ſome from all the prouinces of Aſia minor: likewiſe out of the Iſles of Rhodes, Chius, Lemnos, Corcyra: for Europa, Hoſius, of Spaine, others out of France, Gotland, Myſia, Dacia, Achaia, Pannonia, Calabria, and from the prouince of Boſphorus: And as Socrates ſaith, Sed etiam Perſa venit ad concilium Epiſcopus, verum nec Scytha defuit ex eorum choro: There came to the Councell a Perſian Biſhop, and there wanted not one out of Scythia. Thus then by the view of this ancient Councell it may appeare, that the whole world was in thoſe times lightened with the Goſpell.

Ex ſubſcriptione concil. Nicena.

Hereof alſo Gennadius thus reporteth, Catalog. ſcriptorum: Iacobus presbyter Niſibenæ nobilis Perſarum ciuitatis Epiſcopus vnus eorum fuit, qui in Nicena ſynodo Arrianam peruerſitatem damnarunt: Iacob, or Iames a presbyter, Biſhop of Niſibene a noble citie of Perſia, was one of them which in the Nicen Synode condemned the Arrian hereſie.

Further, Saint Hierome thus teſtifieth: Catalog. ſcriptor. Creſcens in Gallijs prædicauit, &c. Creſcens preached in France, Queene Candaces Eunuch in Arabia Felix, and the Iſle Taprobane: Pantenus was ſent by Demetrius Biſhop of Alexandria into India, being entreated thereunto by the Ambaſſadors of that nation, where he found, that Bartholomew had preached the Goſpell after Matthew, the which written in Hebrew letters he brought to Alexandria.

Againe he thus writeth: Iam & Ægyptius Serapis Christianus factus eſt, &c. Now the Ægyptian God Serapis is become a Chriſtian: from India, Perſia, Æthiopia we daily receiue great troupes of Monkes: the Armenians haue laid aſide their quiuers, the Hunnes doe learne the Pſalter; Scythæ frigora feruent calore fidei: The Scythian froſts doe glow with the heate of faith: the Getes bloody armies are become the tents of the Church. Hieron. ad Letam. and in his epiſtle ad Euſtochium, he maketh mention of the Britaines, of the Armenians, Indians, Æthiopians, of Cappadocia, Pontus, Syria, Meſopotamia, conuerted to the faith, cunctaque Orientis examina; and all the ſwarmes of the Eaſt.

Origene ſaith, ex apolog. Pamphil. Prædicatur ſermo iſte in omni orbe terrarum, &c. This worde is preached in all the world, Greekes, Barbarians, the wiſe and vnwiſe doe receiue the religion of Chriſt.

Saint Ambroſe: Nulla pars mundi ab Euangelio vacat Chriſti: & licet illa generalis vocatio non quieſcat, tamen iam iſta ſpecialis omnibus facta eſt communis: No part of the world wanteth the Goſpell of Chriſt: and although that generall calling (of the creatures) ceaſeth not; yet this ſpeciall is made common to all, lib. 2. de vocat. Gent. c. 10. It is euident then by theſe teſtimonies, that the world hath already generally been lightened with the preaching of the word, ſo that a generall ſecond preaching is not to be expected.

And for further euidence, 1. of the Greeke Church, Chryſoſt. ſaith, ſpeaking of the preaching of the Apostles: Ipse terrarum orbis, ipsique fines terrae audiuerunt: The world of the earth, and the very ends of the earth haue heard. Damascenus saith, that the Disciples of Christ tooke aliue the whole compasse of the world by their preaching.

2. Tertullian, who liued not aboue an 100. yeeres after S. Iohn the Apostle testifieth, that in his time, Christi nomen & regnum vbique porrigitur, vbique creditur, &c. that Christs name and kingdome was extended euery where, and beleeued vpon. And againe hee saith, Apostolos institutores generis nostri in vniuersum orbem mitti per filium suum voluit: God would haue sent by his owne Sonne the Apostles, the institutors of mankind into all the world. Gregentius Archbishop of Tephra among the Homerites, bordering vpon the Æthiopians, who were conuerted to the faith about the 16. yeere of Iustinian the Emperour, anno 550. or thereabouts, saith, that the Apostles went into all the world, and preached the Gospell: and he saith in the same place, that almost the whole world was become Christian. Zaga Zabo an Æthiopike Bishop confesseth thus, Apostoli per totam terrarum orbem praedicarunt verbum patris; The Apostles preached the word of the father through the whole world.

3. Confess. of Heluetia, c. 18. The Apostles did stay in no certaine place, but gathered diuers Churches through the world: which being constituted, there ceased to be Apostles, &c. Their meaning is, that the Gospell was preached to the world, while the function of the Apostles continued: which being now ceased, there cannot be such an vniuersall preaching, as was by the Apostles.

Annot. in Matth. 24. v. 14.

4. Lyranus euidently saith: Patet quia viuente Petro, &c. It is euident, that Peter yet liuing, the faith was preached in the vniuersall world, because the knowledge of faith came to all the world: yet hee, then, as he giueth instance of France, which was conuerted by Saint Sauinian, sent thither by Saint Peter: yet he denieth not, but that the Gospell should againe bee preached toward the end of the world, which we denie not, so that the preaching of the Gospell in the Apostles time, be held to haue been most vniuersall, as is affirmed before.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE COMMING of Henoch and Elias before the day of iudgement.

The Papists.

32. Error.

THeir common and receiued opinion is, that Henoch and Elias do yet liue in their bodies in Paradise, and shall come in person to oppose themselues against Antichrist, and by their preaching to conuert the Iewes, Rhemist. Apocal. 11. sect. 4.

Argum. Malach. 4. 5. I will send you Eliah the Prophet, before the great and fearefull day of the Lord. These are also the two witnesses spoken of, Apocal. 11. 3. which shall bee slaine and rise vp againe the third day: Ergo, Eliah and Henoch shall come before the day of the Lord, Bellarm. de Roman. pontif. 3. 6. Eccles. 44. 16. Henoch was translated into Paradise to giue repentance to the Gentiles, that is, by his preaching: Doway Bible, p. 20.

Luke 1. 16. Matth. 11. 14. & 17. 13.

Answ. First, the prophecie of Malachie was fulfilled in Iohn Baptist, who came in the spirit of Eliah, as it is thrice in the Gospell applied: once by the Angell, Luk. 1. 16. twice by our Sauiour Christ, Matth. 11. 14. and 17. 13.

1. Bellarmine saith, it is not properly vnderstood of Iohn Baptist, but onely in an allegorie. First, the Prophet speaketh of the great and fearefull day of the Lord: but the comming of Christ was the acceptable time. 2. Secondly, Matth. 17. 11. Christ saith, after Iohn had finished his course, Elias certainely shall come. 3. Thirdly, he speaketh there of the person of Helias, that appeared with Christ in the mountaine. 4. Fourthly, Iohn Baptist did not restore al things, that is, by conuerting of all Iewes and heretikes, but Elias shall: Iohn therefore was not that Elias.

1. Answ. 1. Here Bellarmine bewrayeth his ignorance: As though the comming of Christ in the flesh, as it brought comfort to the elect, and to as many as were ordained to saluation, was not also an hastening of the iudgement of God against the wicked: and therefore Iohn saith, The axe was laid to the roote of the tree, Matth. 3. 10. and that Christ came with his fanne in his hand, vers. 12. The Apostle, Heb. 12. 26. applieth that saying of the Prophet; Once againe will I shake not onely the heauens, but the earth, to the preaching of the Gospell. We see then in what sense the first comming of Christ is called a fearefull and terrible day. And here I answere further with our Princely Ecclesiastes, that this terrible day may be vnderstood of the day of Christs passion, when the Sunne was totally obscured, the vaile of the Temple rent a sunder, — the earth did quake, the stones were clouen: if that day were not a great and horrible day, I know not what to call a horrible day? &c. 2. Our Sauiour maketh answere to the Apostles question: Why say the Scribes that Elias must first come? first deliuering their sense, Elias must first come, but then he sheweth his owne iudgement, correcting the erronious sense of the Scribes, vers. 12. But I say vnto you, that Elias is come alreadie. To this purpose also his Maiestie: Christ vseth that word (venturus, to come) but in the repeating of their opinion, but interpreting it, that he was alreadie come in the person of Iohn Baptist, &c. And whereas the vulgar Latine readeth thus: Mat. 11. 14. This is Elias, qui venturus est, which is to come: The Greeke words ὁ μέλλων ἔρχεσθαι, signifie as well, which was, as, which is, to come, as Beza and Erasmus well obserue. 3. Neither is it necessarie, because Elias appeared a little before in person, that this should be spoken of his person: and yet it was true also in that sense, that Elias was come alreadie, appearing vnto Christ in the the mount. 4. And Iohn alſo reſtored all, that is, many, as the Scripture vſeth to ſpeake, Luke 1.16. Many of the children of Iſrael ſhall he turne to the Lord their God. So Saint Paul hauing ſaid, Through the iuſtifying of one the benefit abounded toward all men to iuſtification, Rom. 5.18. in the next verſe it is read of all, he ſaith, by the obedience of one many ſhall be made righteous. 4 Luk.1.16. Rom.5.18.

Anſw. Secondly, by the two witneſſes, is vnderſtood the ſmall, yet ſufficient number of the true ſeruants of God, which ſhall witneſſe the truth euen in the cruell perſecution of Antichriſt: there is no mention made of Henoch or Helias. Auguſtine vnderſtandeth theſe two witneſſes of the two Teſtaments, as hee is alleaged afterward. And if you will needes vnderſtand that literally, of their riſing againe, why not the reſt alſo, how fire ſhall proceed out of their mouthes to conſume the wicked, and they ſhall turne water into blood? The meaning is nothing elſe, but that God will alwaies haue faithfull witneſſes in his Church, which ſhall alwaies ſtand vp, in the ſtead of the Prophets and holy men gone before.

Saint Hierome writeth well of this matter: De Henoch & Elia, quos venturos Apocalypſis refert & eſſe morituros, non eſt iſtius temporis diſputatio, cum omnis ille liber, aut ſpiritualiter intelligendus ſit, vt nos exiſtimamus, aut ſi carnalem interpretationem ſequimur, Iudaicis fabulis acquieſcendum ſit, vt rurſus ædificetur Ieruſalem, & hoſtiæ offerantur in templo: Of Henoch and Helias, whom the Apocalypſe maketh mention ſhall come, and afterward dye, it belongeth not to this time to diſpute, ſeeing that whole booke muſt either ſpiritually be vnderſtood, as we thinke, or if we follow the carnall (or literall) interpretation, we muſt reſt in Iewiſh fables, that Ieruſalem muſt be built againe, and ſacrifices offered in the temple, Marcell. tom.4.

Anſw. Thirdly, 1. That booke of Eccleſiaſticus is no part of Canonicall Scripture, and therefore preſſeth vs not. 2. They inſert and adde, that, which is not in the Greeke originall, was tranſlated into paradiſe: and the reſt of the words are not well tranſlated, which are truly rendred thus: an example of repentance to the Nations, and ſo their owne Vatablus readeth. 3. And allowing their owne reading: will not the ſenſe ſtand well and cleerely enough? that Henoch was tranſlated, that by the example of his reward, the Nations might repent, and imitate his holy footſteps: as our princely Eccleſiaſtes. Apolog.p.67.

Argum. I will adioyne another new found argument of our Doway men: whereas it is ſaid, 2. Chronic. 21.12. there came a writing to him from Eliah the Prophet, &c. they inferre, that this Epiſtle was ſent from Eliah ſeuen yeare after he was aſſumed taken vp, &c. And from whence then ſhould it be more like to be ſent, then from Paradiſe? 2.Chro.21.12.

Anſw. Diuers expoſitions are giuen of this place. 1. Some thinke that Eliſha is here called Elias, becauſe he had the ſpirit of Eliah reſting vpon him: Bibl. Geneuenſ. annot. 2. Some, that the ſtorie of Elias taking vp is tranſpoſed, which might fall out vnder Iehoram: Pellican. 3. Or that Eliſha might thus write by direction from Elias, before he was taken away. 4. But the beſt ſolution is, that Elias before his aſſumption did leaue this propheticall letter to be deliuered vnto Iehoram, foreſeeing by the ſpirit of prophecie his cruell and wicked diſpoſition; as the man of Iudah ſpake of Ioſias by name, and Iſay of Cyrus, long before they were borne: And ſo it was meete that the wicked King ſhould be reproued by him, that was now abſent, that would not endure the reprehenſion of any preſent: Iunius. But that letters ſhould be ſent from Eliah out of heauen, or paradiſe, is an idle conceit, as was that of the Epheſians, of the image of Diana, which they ſuppoſed came downe from Iuppiter. There was neuer any writing ſent from heauen, but the Decalogue grauen by the finger of God in the tables of ſtone. Of the epiſtle brought from Elias after his aſſumption, whence it was. 1.King.13.2. Iſay 45.1. Act.19.35.

The Proteſtants.

Like as the Phariſies deceiued the Iewes with vaine expectation of Elias, and ſo hindred their beliefe in Chriſt: ſo the Papiſts would not haue men to acknowledge the manifeſtation of Antichriſt, vnder this falſe pretence, that Henoch and Elias muſt firſt come before Antichriſt bee reuealed, which we doe hold as a Iewiſh fable and popiſh dreame.

Argum. 1. The prophecie of Elias comming is properly fulfilled in Iohn Baptiſt, and therefore we are not to looke for any other accompliſhment thereof: neither now is there any Paradiſe remaining but heauen, 2. Cor. 12.4. And to affirme that Henoch and Elias went vp to heauen in their bodies, before the aſcenſion of Chriſt, out of Scripture it cannot be proued: it is euident that they were taken vp aliue into heauen, [a] but not that they continued aliue.

That there is no paradiſe now but heauen, Ambroſe ſpeaketh euidently: Hic non vera, non magna ſalus eſt; tum ſaluus ero, cum fuero in paradiſo, cum viuere cæpero inter electos angelos: Here is no great nor true health; then I ſhall be ſafe, when I ſhall be in paradiſe, when I ſhall liue among the elect Angels, ſerm. 15. in Pſal. 119. Againe, In paradiſum cæleſtem raptus eſt Apoſtolus, in quo latroni dixit dominus, &c. illic vbi & eſſe dicitur anita Ieruſalem mater noſtra: The Apoſtle was taken vp into the celeſtiall paradiſe, where the Lord ſaid to the theefe, &c. where Ieruſalem is ſaid to be the mother of vs all, in 2. Cor. 12.

But into this celeſtial paradiſe which is in the higheſt heauen Henoch and Elias aſcended not with their bodies: Chriſt was the firſt, that in his fleſh pierced the heauens, and aſcended in his whole humanitie. Origen herein is moſt reſolute: Offendatur, qui vult ex ſermone noſtro, ego cum omni fiducia aſſeuero, quia ſicut ex mortuis primogenitus Chriſtus, ita primus carnem euexit in cœlum: Let him be offended offended that will with my ſpeech, I ſpeake it boldly, that as Chriſt was the firſt begotten of the dead, ſo he firſt carried his fleſh vp into heauen: ex apolog. Pamphil.

Argum. 2. The varietie of opinions concerning the perſonall appearance of Henoch and Elias, declare that it is an vncertaine thing, and but deuiſed of men. Hilarie ſaith, they ſhall be Moſes and Elias: Chryſoſtome graunteth that Elias ſhall come, but not Henoch. Iuſtine thinketh that not onely Henoch and Elias are aliue, but all thoſe, whoſe bodies roſe at the reſurrection of Chriſt. Hippolytus is of opinion, that Iohn the Diuine ſhall come with them, and ſome ſay Ieremy alſo, whoſe death is not read of, Fulk. Apocal. 11. ſect. 4. And thus it is no maruaile, if men runne mad as it were in their fooliſh conceits, hauing no warrant for their opinions out of Scriptures.

Rom.11. The nation of the Iewes we grant, according to the manifeſt prophecie of S. Paul, ſhall in the end be conuerted: but not in ſuch ſort, by the perſonall preaching of Moſes and Elias: for the Apoſtle ſetting downe at large the myſterie of their calling, would not haue left out ſo neceſſarie a thing.

In Apocal. homil.8. Auguſtine by the two witneſſes, vnderſtandeth the two Teſtaments, the Old and the New. But he denieth vtterly, that any ſhall riſe before the comming of Chriſt: as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1. Cor. 15. 23. The firſt fruites is Chriſt. Then they that are Chriſts at his comming, but not before. Vnde (ſaith hee) excluditur omnis ſuſpicio quorundam, qui putant hos duos teſtes duos viros eſſe, & ante aduentum Chriſti cœlum in nubibus aſcendiſſe: Their ſuſpition therefore, or opinion is vtterly excluded, which thinke theſe two witneſſes to be two men, which ſhould aſcend into heauen before the comming of Chriſt Auguſtine we ſee is flat againſt them.

Saint Cyprian alſo ſaith: Nobis in ſpiritu & virtute Eliæ non alium quam Iohannem ſolum angelus & dominus Chriſtus inſinuat: The Angell and our Lord Chriſt inſinuate, that we ſhall haue no other in the ſpirit and power of Elias, but Iohn: de ſingular. Cleric. Therefore no other Elias was to come, but Iohn.

Ianſenius a popiſh Biſhop thus expoundeth that place: Eccleſiaſtic. 48. 10. of Helias, That he is appointed to reproue in his time, &c. That Eccleſiaſticus did write according to the opinion receiued in his time, that Elias ſhould come in his owne perſon before the Meſſiah, which was to be fulfilled, not in his proper perſon, but in him that ſhould come in the perſon and power of Elias, &c. This popiſh writer is a very good witneſſe againſt them.

Now in the laſt place, in this ſo difficult a queſtion, to what place Henoch and Elias were taken vp, and whether they yet remaine aliue in their bodies, what moſt probably may bee held, I will briefly declare: firſt ſetting downe the diuers opinions which are embraced and receiued among Chriſtians concerning this matter: which are principally foure: 1. The common opinion of the Romaniſts is (as we haue ſeene before) that Henoch and Elias are kept aliue in Paradiſe, and ſhall returne in the end of the world, to preach againſt Antichriſt, and ſhall be ſlaine by him: which opinion is very improbable: 1. becauſe the terreſtriall Paradiſe was long ſince diſſolued in Noahs flood, if not before: and how could Henoch remaine there, who was tranſlated before the flood, ſeeing the waters exceeded the higheſt mountaines fifteene cubites, Geneſ. 7. 20. 2. How is it like, that their bodies being indued with a kinde of immortalitie, ſhould returne into the world to dye againe? 3. The Helias that was to come, is expounded by our Sauiour to bee Iohn Baptiſt, as is ſhewed before. 4. Indeede ſome of the Fathers in ſome of theſe points doe concurre with them, or rather goe before them: as Tertullian thus directly ſaith of Elias: Non ex deceſſione vitæ, ſed ex tranſlatione venturus eſt, nec corpori reſtituendus, ex quo non exemptus, ſed mundo reddendus, de quo eſt tranſlatus: He is to come not from being departed, but tranſlated from this life, not to be reſtored to his bodie, from the which he was not exempted, but to bee rendred to the world, from the which hee was tranſlated, &c. yea he thinketh they ſhall die: Nec mors eorum reperta, dilata ſcilicet: cæterum morituri reſeruantur vt Antichriſtum ſanguine ſuo extinguant: Neither is their death found regiſtred, but deferred, they are reſerued to die, to extinguiſh Antichriſt by their blood, &c. But to theſe and the like teſtimonies this anſwere may be made: 1. That in the Fathers time Antichriſt was not reuealed: and therefore in that obſcure prophecie they might be miſtaken: as Hierome ſaith well: Semper obſcura eſt prophetia, quia alio tempore canitur, alio cernitur: A prophecie is alwaies obſcure, as being ſaid in one time, and ſeene in another. 2. They were deceiued in following the tranſlation of the Septuagint, who, Malach. 4. for Eliah the Prophet, reade Elia the Theſbite: and ſo Tertullian readeth in the place firſt alleaged. 3. Tertullian ſeemeth to contradict himſelfe: for in one place hee calleth Henoch and Elias candidatos æternitatis, deſigned or elected to eternitie. And againe elſewhere: Hominem tollere ad cœlum creatoris exemplum eſt in Helia: To take vp man into the Creators heauen, an example we haue in Eliah. If Eliah bee in heauen, and admitted to eternitie, how can he be againe ſubiect to death? 5. So then, this opinion, to thinke that Eliah was only hoyſed as it were vp in the ayre, vt portaretur in locum diſtantem, to bee carried and let downe againe in ſome place farre diſtant; as Lyranus ſaith Abacuck was tranſported out of Chaldea into Iudea: is like to the conceit of the children of the Prophets, that the ſpirit had taken vp Eliah, and caſt him downe in ſome mountaine or valley: But Eliſha approued not that their imagination.

2. King. 2. 16.

2. Another opinion is, that Eliah was taken vp into heauen in his bodie into the very place and ſeate of the bleſſed; of the which iudgement Hierome reporteth one Theodorus Heracleotes to haue been: that Henoch and Eliah, ita vt erant in corporib. de terrena conuerſatione ad cœleſtia regna tranſlati ſlati ſunt: as they were in their bodies, were tranſlated from a terrene conuerſation, to the celeſtiall kingdomes: and to this opinion ſome of our new writers incline: but many reaſons make againſt it. 1. Our bleſſed Sauiour ſaith, No man aſcendeth vp to heauen, but he that hath deſcended from heauen, the Sonne of man that is in heauen: Chriſt then onely is yet aſcended. 2. The Apoſtle hauing made mention of Henoch among other faithfull, thus concludeth of them all: All theſe through faith obtained good report, and receiued not the promiſe, God prouiding a better thing for vs, that they without vs ſhould not be perfect: Before Chriſt then none attained to perfect happineſſe in bodie and ſoule. 3. But the chiefeſt reaſon is taken from Chriſts prerogatiue: he was the firſt that entred into heauen in his whole humanitie, and clothed our fleſh with immortalitie: as S. Paul ſaith, he was made the firſt fruites of them that ſleepe. But becauſe it will bee anſwered, that Chriſt was the firſt fruites of thoſe which roſe from death to life, but Henoch and Elias died not: let it be further conſidered, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh generally, of life to immortalitie: as in Adam all dye, euen ſo in Chriſt ſhall all be made aliue: and then it followeth, euery man in his owne order, the firſt fruits is Chriſt, afterward, they which are of Chriſt at his comming: Chriſt then was the firſt in order of all Adams ſonnes, that liued to immortalitie. 4. This is the receiued opinion of diuers Fathers, that Chriſt was the firſt, that carried vp any fleſh to heauen, and clothed it with immortalitie: as Iuſtinus Martyr thinketh, that Chriſt only is riſen to immortall life. Tertullian ſaith: A nobis arrhabonem carnis accepit, & venit in cœlum pignus totius formæ illuc quandoq; redigendæ: ſecuro eſtote caro & ſanguis, vſurpaſtis & cœlum & regnum Dei in Chriſto: Chriſt hath receiued of vs the token of the fleſh, and carried into heauen the pledge of the whole kind, which one day ſhall be brought thither: be ſecure O fleſh and blood, you poſſeſſe heauen and the kingdome of God in Chriſt, &c. And againe, he ſaith, Aſcenſum illum exinde complanatum veſtigijs Domini, & introitum exinde reſeratum viribus Chriſti: The aſcenſion into heauen, ſince then (when Chriſt aſcended) is made plaine, and as it were paued by the footſteps of our Lord, and entrance opened and vnlocked by the power of Chriſt, &c. That way then was not plained nor opened but by the footſteps of Chriſt. So Damaſcene ſaith, that Chriſt was the firſt fruites of the reſurrection, incorruption, and impaſſibilitie: not only of the reſurrection, but of all immortalitie, and exemption and freedome from corruption: He then was the firſt in whom humane fleſh was made incorruptible.

3. Some thinke that Henoch and Elias are yet aliue in their bodies, in ſome place of reſt, but not yet endowed with perfect immortality till the reſurrection of Chriſt, when they ſhall be changed, according to that ſaying of the Apoſtle, we ſhall be changed: To this purpoſe Iuſtin Martyr: Vatablus hath a conceit not much vnlike, who thinketh, that Elias was taken vp in body, not to Paradiſe, which was not yet opened, but into ſome place of reſt; namely, Abrahams boſome, which hee would haue placed rather in the aire, then vpon the earth: Peter Martyr alſo thinketh, that Henoch and Helias were carried to Abrahams boſome, where the Fathers expected the reſurrection of Chriſt: Vt poſtea cum illo reſuſcitato ſupra cœlos attollerentur: That together with him being raiſed vp, they ſhould bee lifted vp aboue the heauens &c. and hee defineth Abrahams boſome to bee a certaine receptacle of ſoules. In quo eis tranquillitas in conſpectu Dei conceditur: wherein they enioyed tranquility in the ſight of God. In this opinion there is nothing improbable: ſauing that it is not like, if Henoch and Elias be yet in their bodies, that they ſhould remaine in the ayre. For Chryſoſtomes reaſon: becauſe ibi Satanæ habetur ſedes, There is the ſeate of Satan, who is called the prince of the ayre, not of the Saints.

4. The fourth opinion is, that Elias was taken vp in his body into the ayre, which is called heauen in Scripture, and that there his body was reſolued into the elements: thus Dauid Kimhi among the Hebrewes: and of the ſame mind ſeemeth Oecolampadius to haue been: and Borhaius, who thinketh that both Henoch and Elias died, becauſe of thoſe words of the Apoſtle, that death went ouer all men: And whereas it is ſaid, that Henoch was taken away, that he ſhould not ſee death: hee thinketh it to bee vnderſtood of his ſoule, not of his body, as where it is ſaid; hee that keepeth my word, ſhall neuer ſee death: But theſe reaſons conclude not. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith, all ſhall not die, but all ſhall bee changed: which is yet a kind of death: as Henoch and Elias were changed. 2. Though that phraſe to ſee death, ſomtime vnderſtood of the ſpirituall death, yet it is alſo applyed to the temporall: as Simeon had a reuelation, that he ſhould not ſee death, before hee had ſeene the Lords Chriſt: and the reſt of the Patriarkes were priuiledged as well as Henoch, not to ſee any ſuch death; but the Apoſtle noteth in ſo ſpeaking ſome ſpeciall priuiledge that Henoch had more then the reſt, in being tranſlated not to ſee death. Maſter Caluin alſo ſeemeth to encline to this opinion: Nec dubitamus, quin exuendi ſint mortali & corruptibili carne, &c. Neither doe we doubt but that they ſhall put of their mortall and corruptible fleſh, to be renewed together with the reſt of the members of Chriſt vnto bleſſed immortalitie.

Comment. in Heb. 11. v. 5.

Now I will briefly ſhew what I thinke of theſe ſeuerall opinions: in the which I find ſome things very improbable, ſome things probable and yet vncertaine, ſome things certainely true, and not to be doubted of: of the firſt ſort are theſe points: in the firſt opinion. 1. That Henoch and Elias are kept in the terreſtriall paradiſe, becauſe it was long ſince diſſolued. 2. That they ſhall returne in the end of the world: for of Henochs returne there is no Scripture, and that concerning Helias returne was fulfilled in Iohn Baptiſt. 3. That they ſhall be killed by Antichriſt, or if they be in their bodies, lay them downe againe: for the Scripture ſaith, that Henoch was tranſlated not to ſee death. 4. In the ſecond opinion, that they were taken vp in their bodies into the higheſt heauens; ſeeing the Scripture maketh Chriſt the firſt that was made aliue to immortality, 1. Cor. 15. 23. Grigentius reſolueth well, There is none hauing any fleſhly clothing (Chriſt onely excepted) all are ſpirits there. 5. As improbable is it, that this place whether they are tranſlated ſhould bee in the aire for the reaſon before alleaged. Of the next ſort are theſe points. 1. It is probable, that Elias may yet remaine aliue in his body, becauſe he was taken vp in his body. 2. That he went not to the higheſt heauens, but to Abrahams boſome, where the Fathers expected Chriſts comming: not that there is any happineſſe out of heauen: but in heauen are many manſions, and diuerſe degrees of glory. 3. Yet to what place their bodies were remoued, remaineth vndetermined. 4. I leaue it alſo as probable and diſputable, whether Elias body were diſſolued, there is no Scripture for it, nor yet againſt it. Of the third ſort are theſe points. 1. That Henoch and Elias were priuiledged not to ſee the common and ordinary death, but liuing in their bodies, were tranſlated. 2. And if they be ſtill in their bodies, yet it is certaine, they haue not their full and perfect glory of immortality, till the comming of Chriſt: 1. Cor. 15. 21. and then all ſhall be changed, as Iuſtine Martyr alleageth out of the Apoſtle, in the third opinion before rehearſed; and they alſo among the reſt of the Saintes ſhall appeare at Chriſts comming: And ſo I reſolue with Chryſoſtome in this matter, nos in eis contineamus, quæ ſcriptura tradunt: Let vs containe our ſelues in thoſe things which the Scriptures deliuer. Now if any man further enquire which of the former opinions ſeeme to me more probable though in ſo obſcure a matter I dare not certainely determine; yet I would encline to thinke with Peter Martyr, that Henoch and Elias as they were taken vp, ſo remained in their bodies. But that foure ſpeciall reaſons doe moue mee otherwiſe to thinke: 1. Becauſe there can be no cauſe rendred, why theſe two Henoch and Elias ſhould bee priuiledged to be glorified in their bodies, more then all the other holy Patriarkes, Prophets, Apoſtles: as Adam, Noah, Abraham, Iſaack, Iacob, Moſes, Eliſhai, Paul, Peter, the bleſſed Virgine Mary, with the reſt who were not inferiour in holineſſe vnto them. 2. There can be no end ſhewed of this glorified ſtate: the onely reaſon, why they were taken vp, was to be a type and figure of Chriſts aſcenſion, and of the immortality of our bodies, which ſhall be taken vp into the aire, and meet Chriſt at his comming, and ſo there remaine with him, as S. Paul ſheweth, 1. Theſſal. 4. But to demonſtrate this, the taking vp aliue in their bodies out of the world, and out of the ſight of men was ſufficient though they remaine not in their bodies: for theſe types ſerue for the inſtruction of mortall men in earth, not for the confirmation of the bleſſed Spirits in heauen, which neede it not. 3. But a greater reaſon yet moueth me, that the place cannot be aſſigned, whether their bodies ſhould be tranſlated. In the region of the ayre they are not, that is the ſeate rather of euill ſpirits: nor in the ſtarrie skie, which continually with a rapt motion is whirled about: and to what end ſhould the bodies of Henoch and Elias bee there alone: and to the higheſt heauens they were not taken vp, for this prerogatiue muſt bee reſerued for Chriſt to be the firſt, who in his whole humanity aſcended into heauen, as Doctor Fulke reſolueth; which is no new opinion: For Origen, as Pamphilus reporteth him, thus euidently writeth: De Elia ſcriptum eſt, &c. It is written of Elias, that hee was taken vp as it were into heauen; of Henoch, that he was tranſlated, non tamen dictum eſt, quia aſcendit in cœlum: yet it is not ſaid that hee aſcended into heauen, &c. and then followeth that ſentence recited before, Be he offended that liſt, I ſpeake confidently, that Chriſt was the firſt that caried fleſh into heauen: and then he addeth further, Denique nouitate ipſa perterrentur cœleſtes virtutes, &c. The celeſtiall powers were aſtoniſhed at this nouelty, for that which they neuer ſaw before: Nunc tandem carnem videbant aſcendiſſe in cœlum, Now they ſee (our) fleſh aſcending into heauen. 4. The fourth ſcruple that ſtayeth mee is, for that no body beſide Chriſts is yet perfectly glorified, as the Apoſtle euidently ſheweth that Chriſt is the firſt, and then euery one in his order at his comming, 1. Cor. 15. 23. So that Chriſt onely is yet glorified in his fleſh: as a reformed Church thus confeſſeth: which glory, honour and prerogatiue hee alone (ſay they) amongſt the brethren ſhall poſſeſſe, till all his enemies be made his footſtoole: though Peter Martyr thinke that Henoch and Elias, Comitati ſunt in cœlum (Chriſtum) vnà cum cæteris did accompanie Chriſt with the reſt of the Fathers into heauen at his aſcenſion: But of this I dare not without Scripture reſolue any thing: onely this I hold to bee certaine, that if they are yet in their bodies, they haue not receiued their perfect glory, till the reſurrection. On the other ſide alſo, that Elias yet retaineth his fleſh there be ſome ſtrong obiections: as 1. becauſe the Scripture plainely ſaith, that Elias went vp by a whirlewind into heauen: which if it appeared ſo to be and was not, it ſhould ſeeme to giue way to the opinion of the Manichees, who made ſuch workes phantaſticall and in ſhew onely, as Auguſtine ſaith to Fauſtus, Illud de Helia vos negatis, quia omnia ſimulatis: you deny that of Helias, becauſe you faigne all things. 2. Becauſe it is euident in the Goſpell that Helias appeared vnto our bleſſed Sauiour in mount Tabor in his owne body: as Tertullian ſaith, that Moſes and Elias was ſeene, alter in imagine carnis nondum receptæ alter in veritate carnis nondum defunctæ: one in the image of his fleſh not yet receiued, the other in the trueneſſe of his fleſh which yet had not died. But it ſeemeth to me, that theſe doubts may be thus ſatisfied. 1. The aſſumption and taking vp of Elias in his body was in truth and indeed not in ſhew onely and appearance, which was the fanſie of the Manichees: his true bodie was taken vp, not a likeneſſe onely and ſhew of it: but what became of his body after it was taken out of ſight, that is the queſtion. 2. Tertullian is of that minde, that Helias had his true fleſh and not

Moſes, becauſe he thought that Helias ſhould returne againe into the world: As thus he ſaith of theſe two great Prophets in an other place; Alter informator populi aliquando, alter reformator quandoque: alter initiator veteris teſtamenti, alter conſummator noui: the one an informer of the people ſometimes, the other the reformer one day: the one the beginner of the old Teſtament, the other the finiſher of the new, &c. But ſeeing Moſes and Helias appeared both in the ſame manner, and at the ſame time, and were alike diſcerned of Peter: why ſhould it bee thought that the one had his owne body, rather then the other? Concerning Moſes, the Scripture is euident that the Lord buried him: and this body, wherein he now appeared, was framed by the diuine power, as the bodies were wherein the Angels ſometimes were ſeene: as Gregentius excellently reſolueth: that God did faſhion vnto Moſes ſoule, a body by his owne power, and ſo preſented it in mount Tabor, and by his right hand laid it downe againe: the like body by the power of God might bee framed for Helias: But though I haue ſhewed what is moſt probable concerning Helias fleſh, yet I will not reſolue vpon either part as certaine, leauing euery one to his beſt iudgement herein, alwaies prouided, that the honour of Chriſts prerogatiue be preſerued, and the truth of Scripture without contradiction conſerued: and ſo I conclude heere with Auguſtine: Quid de Helia factum ſcit neſcimus, hoc de illo tamen credimus, quod verax ſcriptura teſtatur: what is become of Helias we know not, yet we beleeue that of him, which the true Scripture teſtifieth.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER THE MOST GRIEVOVS perſecutions that euer were, ſhall be toward the end of the world.

The Papiſts.

THe moſt grieuous perſecution (ſay they) that euer was, ſhall be vnder Antichriſt, who is not yet come, but ſhall be reuealed toward the end of the world, and ſhall raigne vpon the earth three yeeres and an halfe, making great hauocke of the Church of God, Bellarm. de Rom. pontif. lib. 3. cap. 7.

33.Error.

Argum. Matth. 24. 21. There ſhall be then ſuch great tribulation in the world, as was not ſince the beginning of the world, neither ſhall be: Ergo, the greateſt perſecution toward the end of the world.

Matth.24.21.

Anſw. Firſt, it is plaine by the text, that this great tribulation is propheſied to come vpon the Iewes: for in the next verſe before he ſaith, pray that your flight be not in the winter: And then it followeth, there ſhall be then, or as Marke ſaith, In thoſe daies there ſhall be ſuch tribulation, 13. 19. and in the 17. verſe: Wo ſhall be to them that giue ſucke in thoſe daies: which muſt needs be vnderſtood of the deſtruction of Ieruſalem: for at the comming of Chriſt, there ſhall be one and the ſame caſe of all, whether of thoſe that giue ſucke, or of thoſe that giue none.

Secondly, it cannot be meant of the laſt tribulation in the world, becauſe the words are, that as there was none ſuch ſince the beginning of the world; ſo there ſhall be none ſuch after; Ergo, there ſhall be tribulation after, though none ſuch.

The Proteſtants.

OVr hope and truſt is, that the greateſt perſecution of the Church of God is ouerpaſt; becauſe the kingdome or rather tyrannie of Antichriſt beginneth to decay, and we truſt ſhal more and more be ſhaken, till it come to vtter ruine.

Argum. 1. The Scripture telleth vs, that hard vpon the end of the world there ſhall bee great ſecurity, men ſhall ſay, Peace peace vnto themſelues, 1. Theſſ. 5. 4. they ſhall eate and drinke, marry and be married, as it was in the daies of Noah, Matth. 24. 38. And therefore Luke ſaith, 21. 34. Take heed you be not ouercome of ſurfeiting and drunkenneſſe, leſt this day come vpon you vnawares. For as a ſnare ſhall it come, &c. All this proueth, that there ſhall be rather generall ſecurity, as in the daies of Noah, then generall tribulation. And there is greater danger of ſurfeiting and wantonneſſe in time of proſperity and abundance, then in the daies of perſecution.

1.Theſſ.5.4. Matth.24.38. Luk.21.34.

And the text is plaine ſpeaking of warres, troubles and perſecutions, but the end ſhall not bee yet, Mark. 13. 7. Wherefore it appeareth, that the troubles and perſecutions of the Church, ſhall bee well ſlaked toward the end of the world.

Mark.13.7.

Argum. 2. Antichriſt, though he ſhall not vtterly be extinguiſhed before the comming of Chriſt, yet ſhall be deadly wounded: and he ſhall begin to be iudged euen in this world, Apoc. 16. 6. God ſhall giue them blood to drinke, Apoc. 17. 16. The tenne hornes, that is the kings of the earth, ſhall hate the whore and eate her fleſh. The Church of God ſhall reward her, as ſhee hath rewarded vs, and giue her double according to her works, Apoc. 18. 6. By theſe places it is gathered, that Antichriſt ſhal haue a great ouerthrow before the comming of Chriſt, who ſhall vtterly aboliſh him with the brightneſſe of his comming. 2. Theſſ. 2. 8.

Reuel. 16.6. c.17.16. c.18.6.

2. Theſſ.2.8.

Antichriſt is already come, and hath raged a long time againſt the Church: The perſecutions of the heathen did neither continue ſo long, neither were in exquiſite cruelty and bitterneſſe to bee compared to the outragious practiſes of the Antichriſt of Rome, and his adherents againſt the Church of God: which would fill a whole volume by themſelues, nay not one, but many and infinite volumes to be declared at large.

But Bellarmine heere telleth vs. 1. That the perſecution which we ſay the Biſhop of Rome hath raiſed againſt the Proteſtants, is nothing like to the perſecution of the heathen Romane Emperours againſt the Chriſtians, neither for number of martyrs, nor for diuerſity of moſt exquiſite torments.

2 2. He is not aſhamed to ſay, that the Proteſtants haue put more Papiſts to death in fewe yeeres, then they haue killed Proteſtants.

3 3 The perſecution of Antichriſt ſhall be notorious and manifeſt to all the world: as the perſecution of Nero, and Domitian were, we can tell when thoſe perſecutions began, and when they ended: but they cannot tell when the Pope beganne to perſecute, &c. Therefore his perſecution is not that, which Antichriſt ſhall raiſe.

4 4. Antichriſt ſhall aboliſh the dayly ſacrifice, and all worſhip of God, in the time of his perſecution: but ſo doth not the Pope. Bellarm. de Roman. pontif. lib. 3. cap. 7.

Anſw. 1. The number of Martyrs ſlaine by the tyranny of the Pope is no whit inferior to the number of the ancient Martyrs if the time and place be conſidered: the heathen Emperours tyrannized for the ſpace of three hundred yeeres, and ouer the moſt part of the world which was vnder the Romane Empyre: the Romiſh Popes haue not practiſed their outrageous cruelty ſo long, neither I truſt euer ſhall, neither is his popiſh iuriſdiction any thing ſo large, as the Romane Empyre was: theſe two thinges conſidered, our late bleſſed Martyres, may compare in number, with thoſe of former time, if they go not beyond them.

For proofe heereof, I will produce three examples: the firſt of the perſecution of Calabria vnder Pope Pius 4. anno 1560. where in one towne 88. men had their throats cut, like calues and ſheepe, and an 100. women were decreed to be put to death: and 1600. more were apprehended and condemned: this Maſter Fox reporteth out of a certaine letter written by a Romaniſt to a friend he had in Rome. p. 942.

The ſecond example is of the perſecution of Merindol and Cabriers in France vnder King Francis: where eight townes in the countrie of Prouence with the inhabitants thereof, were vtterly deſtroyed by mercileſſe Minerius: 500. women of Merindol were ſome rauiſhed, ſome whipped and ſcourged, ſome ſold like cattell, ſome murthered: and at the ſame time a 1000. perſons of men, women and children were put to death in Cabriers, Fox. p. 953. ex Henrico, Pantal.

My third example is of the late maſſacre in France, anno 1572. when and where in Paris in three dayes, were ten thouſand Proteſtants cruelly murthered: in Lyons, Orleance, Tholouſe, Roane in the ſpace of one moneth thirty thouſand moſt butcherly ſlaine. Fox. p. 2153. Can any man now find any difference in number of holy Martyrs betweene theſe and the firſt perſecution? I thinke verily that the horrible outrages of cruell Popes and Papiſts, haue exceeded the cruelty of the perſecuting Emperours.

Concerning the diuers and exquiſite torments, whether the Papiſts haue beene behind, I report me to the foreſaid recited ſtories: as in Calabria, where 88. had their throates cut by one executioner in one day: a Romaniſt deteſting the cruelty of the fact, thus writeth thereof: I tremble and ſhake to remember how the executioner held his bloody knife betweene his teeth, with the bloody muffler in his hand, and his armes all in goare blood vp to the elbowes, going to the fold, and taking euery one of them, one after another by the hand, and ſo diſpatching them all, none otherwiſe then doth a butcher kill his calues and ſheepe. Fox. p. 942. What greater cruelty could Nero or Domitian haue ſhewed?

In the ſacking of the towne of Calabria: they forced diuers women to go into a barne ful of ſtrawe, and ſo ſet fire vpon the houſe: the women that aſſayed to eſcape by the doore, which a ſouldier opened in compaſſion toward them, the tyrant Minerius commanded to bee hewen in peeces, opening the bellies of the women great with childe, that the infants fell out, p. 952. O crueltie and horrible butchery vnſpeakeable! Lord, thou haſt ſeene this wickedneſſe in the earth, and wilt iudge it in thy time.

At Lyons in the time of the Maſſacre all the priſons being filled full of Proteſtants, when the ſouldiers and butchers refuſed to be inſtrumentes of ſo great villanie, the cruell gouernour procured the beaſtly kennell rakers and ſweepers of the ſtreetes to goe into the priſons and hewe in peeces the ſilly innocent ſoules, that the ſtreetes from the priſons ſtreamed with bloud. ex hiſtor. maſſac.

I thinke more fearefull preſidents of beaſtly and inhumane crueltie cannot be ſhewed vnder thoſe barbarous tyrants of Rome.

Boner in three yeeres ſpace put 200. Martyrs to death. Fox. p. 2043.

2 Secondly, it is a moſt ſhameleſſe lie, that the Proteſtants haue put more to death, &c. I will giue an inſtance of this realme of England, where in the ſpace of three yeares, in the late daies of perſecution one bloudy butcher ſlaughtered twice ſo many innocent Proteſtants for the truth, as there haue beene executed Papiſtes now theſe 50. yeares and more for treaſon: the Papiſtes which haue died by the ſworde of Proteſtantes, were eyther ouercome in iuſt battell, or elſe condemned by iuſt lawes, not for their religion, but their rebellion, not for their profeſſion, but their practiſing againſt Princes.

3 Thirdly, it is no hard matter for vs to aſſigne the time when the Pope beganne his cruell rage, and Antichriſtian perſecution againſt the Church of Chriſt: for anno 1400. vnder the reigne of Henrie the fourth wee finde William Sawtre to haue beene the firſt that was burned heere in England for the faith of the Goſpell: and at that time Boniface the ſecond was Pope. Fox, pag. 518. and anno 1414. followed the condemnation of Iohn Hus in the Councell of Conſtance, pag. 624. So that it is now 200. yeare ſince the Antichriſt of Rome beganne his open perſecution: his malice againſt the ſeruantes of Chriſt did ſhew it ſelfe long before; but about that time his tyrannie was manifeſted to the world, and euer ſince hath encreaſed.

Fourthly, Antichriſt ſhall not prohibite all diuine worſhip, but al true ſeruice and worſhip of God: that like as Antiochus in his time, and afterward the Romanes cauſed the daily ſacrifice to ceaſe, and brought into the Temple, the abomination of deſolation, Matth. 24. 15. that is their prophane and idolatrous ſacrifices: ſo hath the Antichriſt of Rome expelled the true ſpirituall ſeruice of God, and erected a new kinde of idolatrie, ſetting vp the abomination of deſolation, the blaſphemous Idoll of the Maſſe.

Matth 20.15.

Thus then notwithſtanding Bellarmines ſillie ſhiftes, where with as with figge leaues he would hide the filthie nakedneſſe of his holy Father, it is euident, that the greateſt perſecutions againſt Chriſts Church haue beene raiſed by that Antichriſt of Rome, which wee truſt are well neere at an end, and that the Lord will giue a breathing time to his Church after the reuelation of Antichriſt: 1. This is the iudgement of ſome of their owne writers: as Lyra vpon theſe wordes of the Apoſtle, 2. Tim. 4. 9. They ſhall preuaile no longer, for their madneſſe ſhall bee euident to all men: Potiſſimum implendum eſt Antichriſti tempore, cum retecta eius fallacia finaliter ad Chriſtum conuertentur: This ſhall be chiefly fulfilled in the time of Antichriſt, when as his falſehood being detected, all ſhall be conuerted to Chriſt.

And Eſpencaus ſpeaking of thoſe times after the reuelation of Antichriſt ſayth: O tempora tunc ad ſalutem facilia, felices quos tum naſci contigerit: O times eaſie to obtaine ſaluation in, and O happie men, that ſhall be then borne, in 2. ad Timoth. p. 79. liter. c.

2. Auguſtine ſaith, Prima perſecutio violenta fuit cum tormentis—altera fraudulenta eſt—per hereticos, tertia ſupereſt per Antichriſtũ ventura, qua nihil eſt periculoſius, quia & violenta & fraudulenta erit: The firſt perſecution of the Church was violent with torments: the ſecond was by fraudulent heretikes: the third ſhall be vnder Antichriſt, the worſt of all, it ſhall be both violent and fraudulent, in Pſal. 9. This perſecution vnder the Popes of Rome, the Church of God endured a great while: who both dealt fraudulently, in poyſoning them with corrupt doctrine; and cruelly alſo, in puniſhing with ſword and fire the innocent members of Chriſt: wherefore ſeeing it is a plaine caſe, that Antichriſt is, and hath beene many a day reuealed to the world, and that the Church of God beginneth to haue ſome reſpit and libertie from his thraldome; we doubt not, but that the greateſt ſtormes of perſecution are ouerpaſt, if by our ſinnes we bring not backe againe the thicke and miſtie cloud vpon vs.

3. True it is, that many of the Fathers doe ſpeake of great perſecutions toward the end of the world: but this their opinion was grounded vpon that other conceit of theirs, that Antichriſt ſhould rage three yeeres and an halfe before the comming of Chriſt: as Tertullian ſaith: Qui in finibus ſeculi ſub vltima ira per Antichriſti vim exceſſerint, &c. Which in the end of the world vnder the laſt wrath went out of the world by the violence of Antichriſt, &c. So Auguſtine thinketh, that theſe things ſhall fall out in order before in the end of the world: Heliam Theſbitem, fidem Iudaeorum, Antichriſtum perſecuturum, Chriſtum iudicaturum: Helias the Theſbite, the faith of the Iewes, Antichriſt ſhall perſecute, Chriſt ſhall iudge, &c. So Iuſtine Martyr, that toward the comming of Chriſt, that man of ſinne ſhall practiſe many things againſt Chriſtians: But hee thinketh withall, that Antichriſt was then at the doores: and all the ſpace from the Apoſtles, he calleth the latter time, and thinketh that they were then in the ſixth thouſandth yeere. Theſe teſtimonies doe make rather for vs, then againſt vs: for all the Fathers concurre herein that the great perſecution of the world ſhall be vnder Antichriſt, who hath been many yeeres reuealed to the world, and therefore this perſecution hath been begun long ſince, and we truſt is toward an end.

Anſw. 1. TRue it is, that the Saints ſhall iudge the world, 1. Corinth. 6. 2. But onely Chriſt ſhall giue ſentence, Matth. 25. and is properly and onely the iudge of the world: for the father hath committed all iudgement to the Sonne, Iohn. 5. 22. If all, then there is no part left for any other. The Apoſtles therfore and Saints are ſaid to iudge, as Chriſt ſaith of his word, that he wil not iudge the vnbeleeuers, but his word ſhall iudge them in the laſt day, Ioh. 12.48. That is, ſhall be a witneſſe againſt them, accuſe them, lay in matter of iudgement againſt them. So the word preached by the Saints vpon earth, and practiſed in their liues, ſhall be the condemnation of the world. And not only ſo, but they ſhall be aduanced to greater honour: They ſhall ſit in thrones and ſeates: that is, they ſhall not ſtand amongſt the wicked to receiue ſentence, but ſhall meete Chriſt in the ayre, and be caught vp in the cloudes, 1. Theſſ. 4.17. Yea, they ſhall in the ſight and beholding of the vngodly enter into the kingdome of God, Luk. 13.28. But in any other ſenſe they cannot be iudges of the world: for ſhall we thinke, that Chriſt in that day ſhall neede vnder-officers and iudges, as Moſes did? Exod. 18. Auguſtine ſaith, Sancti ſedebunt cum domino attendere, qui fecerunt miſericordiam: The Saints ſhall ſit with the Lord, not to iudge, but to marke and attend, and to witneſſe, who haue followed the workes of mercie.

Iohn. 17.24. Epheſ. 2.6.

Saint Ambroſe thus teſtifieth: Stantibus angelis ad dextram, vel ſiniſtram domini, quomodo ſedebunt homines ad dextram, vel ſiniſtram &c. erunt ſicut angeli non plus quam angeli: Seeing the Angels ſtand at the right hand and left of the Lord, how ſhall men ſit at the right hand or left? they ſhall be as the Angels, not more then the Angels, &c. And againe, our Sauiour ſaith, Ioh. 17.24. Pater, quos dediſti mihi, volo, vt vbi ego ſum, & illi ſint mecum; vt ſint mecum, non vt ſedeant mecum; vbi ego, non quomodo ego, vt videant claritatem, non vt habeant, ſed videant; ſeruus enim videt, dominus poſſidet. Father, I will that they, whom thou haſt giuen me, be with me where I am: that they may bee with me, not ſit with me; where I am, not as I am; to ſee my glorie, not to haue it: for the ſeruant ſeeth, the Lord or maſter poſſeſſeth, lib. 5. de fid. c. 3. Here Ambroſe euidently teſtifieth, that the Saints ſhall not ſit with Chriſt to giue ſentence and to iudge the world: But he further ſheweth in what ſenſe the Apoſtles are ſaid to ſit in ſeates: firſt, vpon theſe words, Epheſ. 2.6. He hath made vs to ſit together in heauenly places with Chriſt: Agnoſco ſcriptum, ſed non vt homines ſedere ad dextram ſibi patiatur deus, ſed vt in Chriſto ſedere quia ipſe eſt eorum fundamentum, caput eccleſiæ, in quo communis ſecundum carnem natura, prerogatiuam ſedis cœleſtis emeruit, &c. I acknowledge it is ſo written, not that God doth ſuffer men to ſit by him at his right hand, but to ſit as in Chriſt, becauſe he is the foundation of all, and the head of his Church, in whom the common nature of man hath deſerued the prerogatiue of the heauenly ſeate, lib. 5. de fid. c. 7. Thus one way the Saints are ſaid to ſit in ſeates, that is, not in their owne perſon, but in Chriſt their head.

Matth. 19.28.

Secondly, vpon theſe words, Matth. 19.28. Ye ſhall ſit vpon twelue thrones: Non ſedis ſuæ dixit Apoſtolis dari poſſe conſortium, ſed alias illas eſſe ſedes duodecim, quas tamen non pro corporali conſeſſu, ſed pro ſucceſſu ſpiritualis gratiæ æſtimare debemus: He ſaid not he would giue to his Apoſtles the fellowſhip of his ſeate, but other twelue ſeates, which wee muſt eſtimate not according to the corporall ſitting, but after the ſpirituall profiting in grace lib. 5 de fid. c. 3. By the twelue ſeates he vnderſtandeth an higher degree of glorie, which ſhould be giuen to the Apoſtles.

1. Cor. 6.2.

Thirdly, Saint Ambroſe, thus writeth vpon that place, 1. Cor. 6.2. The Saints ſhall iudge the world: Iudicabunt ſancti hunc mundum, quia exemplo fidei illorum perfidia mundi damnabitur, &c. The Saints ſhall iudge the world, becauſe by example of their faith, the faithleſſe world ſhall be iudged, and ſo he ſaith afterward that the Angels ſhall be iudged. So likewiſe Origen: Omnis vita iuſtorum iudicabit tribus Iſrael, quæ non crediderunt: The whole life of the righteous ſhall iudge the tribes of Iſrael, that beleeued not, tract. 8. in Matth. In any of theſe ſenſes the Saints may be ſaid to iudge the world, but not as iudges to giue ſentence with Chriſt, as we haue ſeene.

Homil. 16. in 1. ad Corinth.

Further, 1. Chryſoſtome thus expoundeth that place of the Apoſtle, 1. Cor. 6.2. Know ye not, that the Saints ſhall iudge the world: Non ipſi ſedentes & exigentes rationem, abſit, ſed condemnantes: Not themſelues ſitting, and exacting an account, God forbid, but condemning, &c. as Chriſt ſaith of the Niniuites, that they ſhall riſe in iudgement with this generation and condemne it.

In Euang. Ioan. tract. 21.

2. Otherwiſe Chriſt properly ſhall be the only Iudge. Auguſtine: Hominibus in iudicio non apparebit niſi filius, pater occultus erit, &c. None ſhall appeare to men in iudgement but the Sonne, the Father ſhall be hid, the Sonne manifeſt, &c.

Heb. 11.7.

3. So our Eccleſiaſticall expoſitors, Caluine, Pet. Martyr with others, interpret that place before alleaged, that the Saints ſhall by their godly example, faith, pietie, iudge, that is, condemne the world, and leaue them without excuſe, as it is ſaid of Noah, that by his faith hee condemned the world: yet this phraſe to ſit on twelue ſeates, and to iudge the world, ſheweth the prerogatiue of the Saints in that day, that Chriſt ſhall honour them in the ſight of all the world, and recepturus tanquam aſſeſſores, and receiue them as his aſſiſtants: Caluin. Beza, in Matth. 19.28.

Homil. 30. in Euangel. Hom. 12. in Euang.

4. Gregorie ſaith: Vnigenitus Dei filius iudex eſt generis humani: The only begotten Son of God is the iudge of mankind: And concerning the Saints, he ſaith, It ſhall be declared, what euery one hath done: ibi Petrus cum Iudæa conuerſa apparebit, ibi Paulus conuerſum mundum ducens: There Peter ſhall appeare with Iudea conuerted, and Paul leading the world conuerted, and Andrew Achaia, &c.

Annot. in 1. Cor. 6. v. 2.

2. THey are ſo bold as to appoint the place, where Chriſt ſhall appeare, namely in the Eaſt: for his comming ſhall be as the lightening that ſhineth from Eaſt to Weſt, Matth. 24. 27. Bellarm. de cultu ſanctor. lib. 3. cap. 3.

35.Error. Matth.24.27.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, by that ſimilitude Chriſt onely ſheweth the ſuddeneſſe of his comming: therefore it muſt be preſt no further, then to that purpoſe for the which it ſerueth. Secondly, our Sauiour ſaith plainly, that the kingdome of God commeth not with obſeruation, Luke. 17. 20. either of time, or place. And therefore, when men ſay vnto vs, Behold heere, or behold there, we ought not to beleeue them, verſ. 23. As though they would point out Chriſts comming with the finger, either in the Eaſt or Weſt. Whereas Matthew therefore nameth the Eaſt and Weſt, in the ſimilitude of the lightening, Luke leaueth them out, ſaying, As the lightening ſhineth from one part of the heauen to the other, chap. 17. 24. leſt we ſhould thinke any great matter to be in the nomination of thoſe parts.

Luke 17. 20.

1 Auguſt. ſaith notably: Non ab Oriente veniet, nec Occidente: quare? quia Deus iudex eſt: ſi in aliquo loco eſſet, non eſſet Deus: quia verò Deus iudex eſt, non homo, noli illum expectare de locis: Hee will not come, either from the Eaſt, or from the Weſt: why ſo? becauſe God is iudge: if he were tyed to any place, he were not God: but becauſe God is iudge, and not a meere man, we muſt not looke for him from any place, in Pſal. 74.

Origen alſo of this matter thus writeth: Non in aliquo quidem loco apparebit filius dei, cum venerit in gloria ſua, in altero non apparebit, &c. The ſonne of God ſhall not appeare in one place when he commeth in his glory, and not in another: but as the lightening comming forth of the Eaſt, becauſe it filleth all places, appeareth in the Weſt; ſo when Chriſt commeth in his glory, hee ſhall appeare euery where, he ſhall be euery where in all mens ſight, and they euery where in his ſight: tract. 35. in Mat.

2. Chryſoſtome out of that place, Matth. 24. 27. thus inferreth: Quomodo fulgur videtur — in momento temporum omnibus apparet, ſic aduentus ille vbique ſemper ſplendere ſtatim videbitur: How is the lightning ſeene in a moment of time, it appeareth to all; ſo that comming (of Chriſt) ſhall preſently ſhine in euery place, &c. He gathereth from hence only, that the comming of Chriſt ſhall be at once euident to all the world.

Homil.77.in Matth.24.

3. So our new orthodoxall interpreters, Sicut fulgur conſpicuum, &c. As the lightning is conſpicuous to all the world, ſo &c. Pellican. Oſiander with others.

4. To the ſame purpoſe Lyranus: Though the comming of Chriſt in the fleſh, was hid, yet his comming to iudgement ſhall be manifeſt to all: He cannot finde out that curioſitie of the place, from whence Chriſt ſhall appeare. And that this is the meaning, is yet more euident out of S. Luke: for he thus reporteth the words of our bleſſed Sauiour: as the lightening that lighteneth out of the one (part) vnder heauen ſhineth vnto the other (part) vnder heauen. He maketh no mention either of the Eaſt or Weſt.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. FIrſt, the ſigne of the ſonne of man in the heauens, is nothing elſe, but his conſpicuous and glorious appearing, who ſhall come in great glory, as a ſigne in the heauens to bee ſeene of all the world. It cannot ſignifie any ſuch viſible ſigne as they imagine: for Mar. 13. 26. Luk. 21. 27. we reade thus: Then ſhall they ſee the Sonne of man. So then, the ſigne of the Sonne of man, is the Son himſelfe in his glorious appearing. And ſo Origen expoundeth: Sicut in diſpenſatione crucis ſole deficiente tenebræ factæ ſunt ſuper omnem terram, ſic & ſigno filij hominis apparente in cœlo deficiet ſolis lumen: Like as in the diſpenſation of the croſſe, the Sunne being eclipſed, darkneſſe was ouer the face of all the earth: ſo the ſigne of the Sonne of man appearing, the Sunnes light ſhall faile, Tract. 30. in Mat. It is the glory of the Sonne himſelfe, and not of any other ſigne, which ſhall obſcure the Sunne light. Secondly, it is great preſumption, ſo boldly to affirme, that it ſhall be the ſigne of the croſſe, hauing no Scripture for it. Other ſignes we finde, that Chriſt hath appeared with, as the ſigne of the Raine-bow, Apocal. 10. 1. with a two edged ſword, Apocal. 1. 16. with a booke in his hand, Apocal. 10. 2. Wee haue better reaſon, that Chriſt may appeare with thoſe ſignes, by the which he hath ſometime ſhewed himſelfe, then they haue for the ſigne of the croſſe.

Marc.13.26. Luke 21.27.

Reuel.10.1. cap.1.16.

3 It is more like, that Chriſt at his comming ſhould ſhew the markes and prints of the nayles and ſpeare in his body, than the ſigne of the croſſe: for thoſe were felt and ſeene in his body after his reſurrection, ſo was not the other. But it is a bare coniecture, without any ground of Scripture, that the wounds are either now in heauen to be ſeene in the glorious body of Chriſt, or that they ſhall bee beheld and looked vpon in the day of iudgement. The wicked in deede ſhall behold him, whom they pierced: but it followeth not thereupon that he ſhould appeare as pierced. How is it poſſible, that either the body of Chriſt being perfectly glorified, ſhould ſtill retaine any ſpotes or blemiſhes, or that they could bee eſpied in ſo glorious a bodie, which with the brightneſſe thereof ſhall obſcure the Sunne?

Whether the prints of the wounds are yet to be ſeene in Chriſts body.

Eſpencæus (a writer of their owne) ſaith, that whereas ſome aſcribe this ſong to Bernard: Mater oſtendit filio pectus & vbera; filius patri latus & vulnera: That in heauen Chriſts mother doth ſhew her ſonne her breaſts and paps; Chriſt ſheweth his father his ſide and wounds &c. that it is, contemplatio non tam ex ſcripturis, quam picturis deprompta, a contemplation taken not out of Scripture, but out of ſome picture, de Chriſt. Mediator. c. 8.

Serm. de tempore 147.

1. Auguſtine giueth this iudgement: Sic voluit reſurgere Chriſtus, ſic voluit quibuſdam dubitantibus exhibere in illa carne cicatrices vulneris vt ſanaret vulnus incredulitatis: So it pleaſed Chriſt to ariſe, and to ſhew in his fleſh vnto ſome that doubted, the ſkarres of his wounds, to heale and take away the wound of their incredulity or vnbeleefe. And againe he ſaith, Chriſtus cicatrices ſeruauit in corpore, vt vulnus dubitationis ſanaret in corde: Chriſt kept the ſkarres in his body, to heale the wound of doubtfulneſſe in the heart, &c.

Pſal. 88. concion. 2.

ὡς οἱ μώλωπες ἡ βρῶσις καὶ ἡ πόσις: lib. 4. de fid. orthod. c. 19.

2. Damaſcen ſaith, that Chriſt ſhewed ſome things after his reſurrection, not according to the nature of his body, but by a certaine diſpenſation, to make faith, that the ſame body was riſen that ſuffered, of which ſort were his ſcarres, the meate and drinke which he tooke: then it would follow hereupon, that as Chriſts glorious body now neither taketh meate or drinke; ſo neither doth it retaine thoſe ſcarres and prints of the wounds and nailes. This then being the cauſe why Chriſt ſhewed the prints of his fleſh, to confirme their faith that doubted, that cauſe now ceaſing, it is like alſo the other is diſcontinued: There are other reaſons alleaged by Beda beſide this, of the appearing of the wounds in Chriſts glorified body: as 1. that he may ſhew to his father, praying for vs, what kind of death he ſuffered for vs. 2. Vt redemptis inſinuet, &c. To inſinuate to them which are redeemed his mercy and loue toward them. 3. Vt iam iuſte damnentur impij, &c. To denounce to the wicked, how iuſtly they are condemned, &c. If theſe reaſons had their warrant out of Scripture, they might perſwade much: but being builded vpon bare coniectures, I leaue it as a thing coniecturall: as is alſo that conceite of Auguſtines, that the Martyrs in the reſurrection ſhall retaine in their bodies the markes of the wounds which they receiued for Chriſt, which will bee a great glory vnto them. But this being more likely, that the markes of Chriſts wounds are yet to bee ſeene, becauſe the Scripture teſtifieth, that hee ſhewed them after his reſurrection, and yet it is vncertaine: much leſſe probable is it, that the ſigne of the Croſſe ſhall be carried before Chriſt at his comming.

Ex citat. Clictou. annot. in Damaſcen. lib. 4. c. 1.

3. Our Eccleſiaſticall expoſitors doe vnderſtand the ſigne of the Sonne of man, to bee the ſonne of man himſelfe: Cæleſti potentia præditus, quaſi ſigno in ſublime erecto, &c. Being endowed with celeſtiall power, as with a ſigne he ſhall turne the eyes of all the world toward him. Caluin, ſo alſo Peter Martyr vnderſtandeth the Sonne, whoſe comming was prognoſticated by diuerſe ſignes.

4. As for other ſignes, which ſhall be as it were borne before Chriſt, there is great vncertainty among them that ſo hold: ſome thinke this ſigne ſhall be the ſigne of the Croſſe in mens foreheads, or a banner diſplayed before Chriſt in ſigne of victory. gloſſ. interlin. Lyranus thinketh, that it ſhall not be the ſigne onely of the Croſſe, but of the ſpeare, nailes, and other inſtruments of Chriſts death: or the ſcarres of the wounds in Chriſt body: Lactantius is of opinion, that before Chriſt deſcend to iudgement Cadet repente gladius è cælo: A ſword ſhall ſuddenly fall from heauen, that the righteous may know, that the captaine of the Lords hoſt is comming, &c. Zaga Zabo the Æthiopike Biſhop ſaith, that Chriſt ſhall beare the Croſſe before him, & in manu gladium, and a ſword in his hand: where ſuch vncertainty is, it maketh all to be ſuſpected.

Mark. 13. 33. Excitation. Eſpenſ. in 2. Timoth. c. 3. p. 80.

I finde beſide, that two writers haue aduentured very farre in this matter to ſet downe the time and yeeres of Chriſts comming; one is Cuſanus among the Papiſts: the other is Iohn Napier that learned gentleman of Scotland for the Proteſtants: the firſt thinketh, that the world ſhall end betweene the yeere 1700. and 1734. the other, that the finall conſummation is like to bee accompliſhed betweene the yeere 1688. and anno. 1700.

Caſanus coniectures are theſe: 1. As Chriſt roſe againe in 34. yeere of his age: ſo the Church of God ſhall riſe at the latter day in the 34. Iubile, which make 1700 yeeres. 1

2. As after the firſt Adam, in the 34. Iubile there came a conſumption of ſinne by water: for the flood was anno. 1656. after the creation of the world: ſo in the 34. Iubile after the ſecond Adam, ſhall there be a finall conſumption of ſinne by fire. 2

3. Dan. 12. 12. There ſhall bee 1300. dayes, that is yeeres, from the going forth of the word, which was the firſt yeere of Cyrus, who was 559. yeeres before Chriſt: now ioyne both theſe together, and wee come to the yeere after Chriſt 741. and ſo the world ſhall end at the yeere 1700. or before 1700. 3

4. Hee taketh another coniecture out of Philo, that it was reuealed to Moſes, that at his death two times of the world were paſſed, from Adam to Noah the firſt, and from Noah to Moſes the ſecond; and two more were behinde, the firſt from Moſes to Chriſt, which contained 1700. yeeres, the ſecond from Chriſt to the ende of the world of the like continuance: vid Eſp. in 2. ad Timoth. pag. 80. 4

Contra. Some of theſe coniectures are vncertaine and conclude not, ſome are improper, ſome of them falſe: of the firſt ſort are the two firſt reaſons: 1 They are grounded onely vpon humane collections, not diuine conſtitutions; as to eſtimate the age of the world and continuance thereof by Iubilees: by Sabbaths and Iubilees we may make reckoning and account of times, but preciſely thereby to calculate how long the world ſhall endure, is an humane preſumption without any diuine preſcription. 2. Heereby it would follow, that the world ſhould end before anno 1700. in the middeſt of the laſt Iubile, which is contrary to his owne opinion: for Chriſt dyed at 33. yeeres and an halfe: and the deluge came anno 1656. in the middeſt of the laſt Iubile.

Secondly, the third coniecture is improper, and hath beſide many vncertainties: 1. The Prophet ſpeaketh of 1335. dayes, not of 1300. onely. 2. The computation of theſe dayes muſt begin from the ſetting vp of the abomination of deſolation, Dan. 12. 12. which was in Antiochus Epiphanes raigne, who was ſome hundred yeeres after Cyrus. 3. I ſee not though all the yeeres bee put together, how we come to anno 1700. but onely to the yeere 741. vnleſſe he adde 1000. yeeres more, which cannot be concluded from that place of Daniel. 4. I haue ſhewed before that this propheſie of Daniel was once already fulfilled in Antiochus raigne, and therefore a ſecond propheticall effect thereof is not to be expected.

Thirdly, the laſt coniecture is altogether vncertaine and falſe: for neither are there 1700. yeeres betweene Noah and Moſes death, nor yet 1000. yeere: and from Moſes to Chriſt, are not aboue yeeres 1400.

That learned and religious Gentleman of Scotland doth ground his opinion vpon better coniectures, yet vncertaine: as firſt, he alleageth the prophecie fathered vpon Elias, that the world ſhould continue 6000. yeares: 2000. before the Law, 2000. vnder the Law, 2000. vnder the Meſſiah, which dayes for the elect ſake ſhall be ſhortened.

Secondly, he buildeth vpon that place of Daniel of 1335. daies, taking ſo many yeeres, and beginning the account from Iulian the Apoſtata, who would haue made an vtter deſolation of Chriſtian religion, anno 365. which two numbers compounded make iuſt 1700.

Thirdly, hee vrgeth that place, Apocal. 14. 20. how the blood ranne out of the winepreſſe 1600. furlongs: whereby muſt be vnderſtood ſo many yeares: and the account to begin from anno 99. when this booke was written: ſo that this number will bring vs to anno 1699. Theſe with other moe coniectures, that learned Gentleman hath, Propoſ. 14. in his booke vpon the Reuelation: which hee vrgeth not as certaine demonſtrations, but as probable ſuppoſitions for his opinion: which I thinke he propoundeth not, as neceſſary to bee followed, or certaine to be beleeued, but as probable to bee receiued, and as coniecturall further to be weighed and conſidered.

For otherwiſe the Scripture teacheth, that the very Angels knowe not the houre or day, that is, the time of Chriſts comming, Mark. 13. 32. how then are we able to ſearch it out? And if Daniel confeſſeth his ignorance concerning the ſecret of times, Dan. 12. 8. I heard it, but I vnderſtood it not: it were great preſumption for vs to ſeeke to comprehend that, which ſo great a Prophet apprehended not.

This we may know and remember, that many attempting to calculate the time of Chriſts comming, haue beene greatly deceiued, and ouertaken in their owne conceites.

Lactantius lib. 7. cap. 14. is of opinion, that the world ſhould laſt ſo many thouſand yeeres, as it was dayes in making: according to the blind tradition fathered vpon Elias. In the ſame error are Methodius, Euſebius, Beda.

Gregorie the great, Homil. 1. in Euangel. thought that in his time the day of iudgement was at hand: and that the ſignes of Chriſts comming were accompliſhed.

In Iuſtinian the Emperours time, there was a generall rumour, Mundum cum prole periturum. That the world ſhould preſently periſh with her children. And while all men were in expectation hereof, a certaine Captaine of the Emperours called Mundus, which is the Latine word for the world, De fide & operibus cap. 17.

being ſent into Italie againſt the Gothes, was ſlaine with his children, and ſo that blind prediction tooke effect: ex procop. & Leonard. Aretin. de bell. Gothor. lib. 1.

Bullinger reporteth, that certaine Anabaptiſts were ſo ſure that the end of the world was at hand, that they wilfully waſted their goods, thinking they had enough for the time the world ſhould laſt, and ſo fell into extreme pouerty: contr. Anabap. lib. 1. c. 6.

And of late ſome confidently had written of the yeere 88. as though the world ſhould then haue ended. But all theſe haue proued themſelues falſe prophets.

2. Wherefore in ſo great vncertainties, I think Auguſtines reſolution beſt, who thus writeth, epiſt 78. De Saluatoris reditu, qui expectatur in fine, tempora dinumerare non audeo, nec aliquem prophetarum hoc de re numerum annorum exiſtimo praefiniſſe, &c. Of our Sauiours returne, which is expected in the end, I dare not number the times, neither do I thinke that any of the Prophets did define the number of Acts 1.7. the yeeres, but rather that to ſtand, which the Lord ſaith: It is not for you to know the times and ſeaſons, which the father hath kept in his owne power, Act. 1.7.

Againe, Auguſtine ſaith, Vtiliter latere voluit Deus illum diem, vt ſemper ſit paratum cor ad expectandum, quod eſſe venturum ſcit, & quando venturum ſit, neſcit: The Lord to great purpoſe would haue that day kept ſecret, that our heart ſhould be in continuall expectation of that, which it is ſure, ſhall come, but knoweth not when it ſhall come, In Pſal. 36. concion. 1. Quid ad te (ſaith he) quando veniet, ſic viue, quaſi hodie venturus ſit, & non timebis cum venerit? What is it to thee when he commeth? ſo liue as though he ſhould come to day, and thou ſhalt not be afraid when he cõmeth: ſer. 17. de diuerſ. ſer. 6.

Epiſtol.72. And yet more euidently he thus writeth: De Saluatoris reditu, qui expectatur in fine, tempora dinumerare non audeo, &c. Of the returne of our Sauiour, which is expected in the end of the world, the times I dare not number, neither doe I thinke any of the Prophets to haue foreſeene the number of the yeeres, but that muſt ſtand, which the Lord ſaith: It is not for you to know the times and ſeaſons, which the Father hath put in his owne power, &c. Whereupon hee inferreth, that not only the day and Marc.13.32. houre is hid, as ſome doe cauill of thoſe words of our Sauiour, Marc. 13.32: but euen the ſpace of times, quae voluminibus tranſeunt, which paſſe by long reuolution, &c. and ſo he concludeth to count the times then, to know when the end of the world, or the comming of Chriſt ſhall be, ſeemeth vnto me nothing elſe, quam ſcire velle quod ait Chriſtus, ſcire neminem poſſe, then to deſire to know, which Chriſt ſaith, none can know.

2. Chryſoſtome rendreth two reaſons why the Lord hath kept ſecret the time of his comming, and will come as a theefe in the night: ne in malitiam ſeducamus, neue in ſegnitiem: leſt we ſhould ſeduce and deceiue our ſelues, either by maliciouſnes, or ſloathfulnes, &c. For if men did know the time of the end of their life, or of the world: if it were farre off, it would embolden them to euill; if at hand, it would diſcourage them from doing good, hauing ſo ſhort a time to liue.

3. Our Eccleſiaſticall expoſitors, as Caluine, Muſculus, Bucer, Bullinger, do ſo expound that place, Matth. 24.36. that the time of Chriſts comming is not reuealed to any, no not to the Angels.

4. Lyranus agreeth: who giueth hereof theſe two excellent reaſons: becauſe a man can neither know that day by naturall reaſon, quia dependet ex ſimplici voluntate Dei: becauſe it dependeth ſimply on the will of God: nor yet by reuelation: for then it ſhould haue been reuealed to the Apoſtles, qui fuerunt maxime illuminati, who were moſt illuminated. And ſo hee concludeth with that ſaying of Auguſtine vpon thoſe words, It is not for you to know the times and ſeaſons, which the Father hath put in his owne power: Omnium calculantium digitos reſoluit, qui hoc dicit: He ſtaieth the fingers of all calculators and caſters of numbers, that thus ſaith. It is then in vaine for any, to take vpon them to know the time, yeere, day, or houre of Chriſts comming: as the Romaniſts doe, which ſay, that Chriſt ſhall come 45 daies after the deſtruction of Antichriſt.

Thus haue I through the Lords gracious aſſiſtance, now at the length finiſhed and brought to an end this long and tedious worke, which I truſt ſhall not be ſo yrkſome to the Chriſtian reader, as it was wearisome and painfull to the fleſh, in the collecting and compiling thereof: and yet not ſo painefull, but that God hath made mee able and willing to endure this, and geater paines, and that with comfort, for the good of his Church. As Auguſtine ſaith: Nullo modo oneroſi eſſe debent labores amantium, nam in eo quod amatur, aut non laboratur aut ipſe labor amatur: The labours of louers are not grieuous, for in that which a man loueth and deſireth, either there is no labour at all, or elſe he loueth the very labour; de patient. cap. 22.

I excuſe not, whatſoeuer hath fallen out of my pen in this worke, if I haue failed any where in the manner of handling: But as for the matter handled therein, I truſt I haue throughout maintained the truth: in the proſecuting whereof, if ſometime I chaunce to miſſe, I ſay with Auguſtine: Nunquam errari tutius exiſtimo quàm cum in amore nimio veritatis, & reiectione nimia falſitatis erratur: I thinke a man can neuer more ſafely erre, than when hee erreth in the too much loue of the truth, and the reiecting of falſehood.

I haue laboured in this worke, to ſet downe not onely the chiefe and principall, but euen the moſt, and in a manner all the controuerſies of religion, betweene vs and the Papiſts, maintained this day: If

De fide & operibus cap.27. any thing be miſſing, I ſay againe with Auguſtine, Tale eſſe arbitratus ſum, cui mea reſponſio neceſſaria non fuiſſet, ſiue, quia ad rem de qua agitur, non pertinet, ſiue quod tam leue eſſet, vt à quolibet redargui facillimè poſſet: I thought it to bee ſuch, as vnto the which mine anſwere was not needfull, either becauſe it was not pertinent to the matter in hand, or elſe of ſo ſmall moment, that euery man might eaſily anſwer vnto it, *De fide & operibus cap.*27.

I haue no more to ſay but this: If thou findeſt thy ſelfe any thing profited or helped (good Chriſtian Reader) by theſe ſimple labours of mine, giue God the praiſe, and I will praiſe him with thee: but one thing let me pray thee: Quiſquis legis nihil reprehendas, niſi cum totum perlegeris, atque ita forte Prou.23.23. minus reprehendes: Whoſoeuer readeſt in this booke, reprehend nothing, before thou haſt read the whole, and ſo perhaps thou wilt be more ſparing in reprehending.

The Lord giue vs all grace to loue the truth, that they which know it, may continue and goe forward therein, as he againe ſaith, Perſeuerate in eo, quod eſtis, proficite ad id, quod eritis: Perſeuere in that you are, and proceed to that, you ſhall be: And they which as yet know it not, may ſeeke for it: and we all may embrace the Counſell of the wiſe man, to buy the truth, but in no wiſe to ſell it: that is, by Auguſtin. all poſſible meanes to labour for it: and hauing attained thereunto, for no earthly reſpect, for feare or fauour to depart from it. The Lord God, Ieſus Chriſt, Iehouah, Emmanuel, our bleſſed Sauiour and redeemer, who is the way, the truth, and the life, giue vs of his heauenly grace, that we may walke obediently in his waies, and conſtantly profeſſe his truth, that in the end he may bring vs to eternall life. Amen.

ſit omnis honor & gloria.

AN ADDITION, OR SECOND PART OF THIS FIFTH AND LAST CENTVRIE CONSISTING OF TWO SEVERALL CONTROVERSIES: THE FIRST OF the Papall Iubile ſolemnized at Rome in the yeere, 1600. vnder the late Pope Clemens 8. The ſecond of the Popes Indulgences and Iubile Pardons.

THE FIRST CONTROVERSIE OF THE Romane Iubile.

THis controuerſie is diuided into foure parts. Firſt, of the name and inſtitution of the Papall Iubile. Secondly, of the errors of time, in the Popes Iubile. Thirdly, of the end and purpoſe thereof. Fourthly, of the ceremonies and manner vſed in ſolemnizing this Iubile.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE NAME AND INSTItution of the Popes Iubile.

The Papiſts.

1.Error. FIrſt, concerning the deriuation of the name, Bellarmine telleth vs, that this word Iubile is not deriued of the Hebrew יבל Iobel, which ſignifieth a trumpet: but of the word יבול Iebul, which ſignifieth the fruite of the earth, becauſe in this yeere of Iubile, the earth brought forth fruite of it owne accord without labour: lib.1.de Indulg.c.1.

The Proteſtants.

*Contra.*1. THe Hebrew word, that ſignifieth a horne or trumpet, hath the very ſame points or prickes, and the ſame and iuſt ſo many letters, as the word Iobel, that ſignifieth the Iubile: as may appeare by comparing, Leuit.25.10.11.12. with Ioſua 6.5. But the other word from whence he deriueth his Iubile, hath both more letters, and other points; ſo that the Iubile is more like to take denomination from (Iobel) that ſignifieth a trumpet.

Secondly, becauſe the yeere of Iubile was proclaimed with the ſound of a trumpet, Leuit.25.8. and therefore by the blowing of the ſeuen trumpets by the ſeuen Angels, Reuelat.8.8. ſome learned doe expound certaine great Iubilees of yeeres: euery blowing of the trumpet containing fiue Iubilees, that is 245. yeeres: which make in all from Chriſt 1786. yeeres: not that the world ſhall laſt ſo long; for thoſe daies ſhall be ſhortned: ſo Iohn Napeire vpon the Reuelation, prop.5.10. Therfore it is moſt like that the Iubile being deſcribed, and proclaimed by the ſound of a Trumpet, hath his name from thence: and though in this place, not the word Iobel, but the Hebrew שופר ſhophar be expreſſed to ſignifie a trumpet, Leuit.25.8. yet elſewhere, we haue that word vſed for a trumpet, as I haue ſhewed before, Ioſua 6.5.

Thirdly, the common phraſe of ſpeech in Latine, which vſeth the words, iubilare, iubilatio, for reioycing, doth ſhew that the Iubile is deriued from (Iobel) which ſignifieth a trumpet, wherewith they vſed to reioyce: So Auguſtine vpon theſe words, Pſalm.97.4. Iubilate Deo, Sing vnto the Lord: Gaudium veſtrum exprimat iubilatio, ſi non poteſt locutio: Let your iubilation or reioycing, expreſſe your ioy, if your ſpeech or locution cannot.

Fourthly, S. Hierome alſo approueth this interpretation, that the word Iubile ſignifieth a trumpet, or cornet: de interpretat. nominum.

The Papiſts.

2.Error. SEcondly, the Pope borroweth the Iubile of the Iewes: as Clement.6. thus alleageth in his Bull: Quia annus quinquageſimus, in lege Moſaica, quam non venit dominus ſoluere ſed ſpiritualiter adimplere, Iubilaeus, &c. Becauſe the fiftieth yeere in the law of Moſes, which the Lord came not to looſe but to fulfill was appointed for the Iubile: and becauſe the number of fiftie in the old teſtament was honoured by the giuing of the law, in the new teſtament, by the ſending of the holy Ghoſt. *extrau. commun. lib.5. tit.9. Whereupon the Ebionite heretikes had their name, à paupertate,of their beggerlineſſe,as their owne canons witneſſe,adding further: Hi ſemi Iudai ſunt,qui ita Euangelium tenent, vt legem carnaliter ſeruent: Theſe are halfe Iewes,which ſo hold the Goſpell, as that they carnally alſo obſerue the law: *cauſ.*24.*qu.*3.*can.*39.How much vnlike are the Papiſts, who in reſpect of the multitude of beggerlie ceremonies,which they retaine may very well be called halfe Iewes,or halfe Ebionites.

2. Saint Paul ſaith,That Chriſt hath cancelled the hand-writing of ordinances,&c.and faſtened them to the croſſe,Coloſſ.2.14. And ſpeaking of holy daies,new moones,and ſabbaths,he ſaith, they were but ſhadowes of things to come,but the bodie is in Chriſt. The Iubile then, which was the Sabbath of ſeuen yeeres,ſeuen times ſeuen yeeres being counted to a Iubile, was but a ſhadow: Chriſt then came to fulfill the law,the moral by reuiuing and eſtabliſhing it, the ceremoniall by accompliſhing and aboliſhing it: your owne law ſaith,Poſtquam vmbra legis euanuit, illuxit veritas Euangelij: After the ſhadow of the law had vaniſhed, the veritie of the Goſpell hath ſhined forth;*decret.Greg.tit.*47.*lib.*3.*c.*1.*Innocent.*3. And that the Iubile was but a ſhadow, Bellarmine confeſſeth: Iubileus Hebraorum typus & figura Euangelij: The Iubile of the Hebrewes was a type and figure of the Goſpell: *de indulgent.lib.*1.*pag.*5. then it followeth that the Iubile being a ſhadow is vaniſhed,and ought not to bee reuiued. Coloſſ.2.14.

3. As for the conſecration of the number of fiftie by the giuing of the law, and the comming of the holy Ghoſt,it maketh ſomewhat for the obſeruation of Pentecoſt,which is ſolemnized fifty daies after Eaſter; but nothing at all for the Iubile which is vpon the fiftieth yeere,no more then it ſerueth for the keeping of the fiftieth weeke,or fiftieth moneth.

4. If they will haue a Iubile, which is the Sabbath of ſeuen times ſeuen yeeres, they muſt alſo obſerue the yeeres of reſt euery ſeuenth yeere,according to the preſcript of Moſes law.And in the Iubile, the Land reſted, they did reape that,which did grow of it ſelfe, Leuit.25.11.If the like bleſſing they can ſhew vpon the earth in their yeere of Iubile,they ſhould haue ſome warrant to keepe it: So then according to S.Pauls reaſon; He that is circumciſed (or keepeth any one part of the law) is bound to keepe the whole law. If they then tie themſelues to celebrate the yeere of Iubile,they are bound alſo to other points of the law: as Hierome well ſaith: Si carnalem interpretationem ſequamur,Iudaicis fabulis acquieſcendum ſit,vt rurſum adificetur Ieruſalem, & hoſtia offerantur in templo: If we muſt follow a carnal interpretation,we muſt reſt in Iewiſh fables,Ieruſalem muſt be built againe,and ſacrifices offered in the temple.*Hieron.tom.*4.Marcella. Leuit.25.4. Galath.5.3.

The Papiſts.

3. CLement the ſixth was the firſt that *ann.*1350. inſtituted the Iubile of fifty yeeres, whereas Boniface the eighth appointed it to be ſolemnized, but once in an hundred yeeres; and ſo celebrated the firſt Iubile *ann.*1300. *Extrauag.commun.lib.*5.*tit.*9.*c.*1. 3-Error.

The Proteſtants.

Contra. BY this it appeareth that the Popes Iubile is but a late inuention: for if the firſt conſtitution of the Iubile made by Boniface had taken effect, they ſhould haue had but foure Iubilees in all: and according to the Bull of Clement the ſixth, there haue yet runne but onely eight Iubilees, ſo that this pontificall deuiſe is not yet aboue 300. yeere old: 1. If then the Church of God was gouerned 1300. yeere without a Iubile,we muſt thinke it is not neceſſarie now to be obſerued: for it is not like that Chriſt would ſo long a time haue kept from his Church, ſuch a neceſſarie inuention. 2. If neither the Apoſtles,nor holy Martyrs,nor Doctors of the Church were inſpired, to find out ſo neceſſarie and profitable an obſeruation,it was great preſumption in Boniface and Clement to ſeeme to ſee more into the vtilitie and profit of the Church,then ſo many apoſtolike and propheticall men, that went before them? 3. Wherefore as Ieremie ſaith, We ought rather to aske for the old way,which is the good way,and walke therein. This is too new an inuention, hauing no ground in Scripture, and being but lately taken vp,to winne any credit with the people of God. 4. Auguſtine therefore well ſaith,as he is alleaged alſo,*Diſtinct.*12.*c.*1.Omnia talia, qua neque ſanctarum ſcripturarum authoritatibus continentur,nec in concilijs epiſcoporum ſtatuta inueniuntur,nec conſuetudine vniuerſalis eccleſia roborata ſunt,&c. ſine vlla dubitatione reſecanda exiſtimo: All ſuch things,which neither are contained in the authoritie of Scripture,nor eſtabliſhed in the Councels of Biſhops, nor confirmed by the cuſtome of the vniuerſall Church,I iudge to be cut off,&c. But ſuch is this inuention of the Iubile, neither warranted by Scripture,nor concluded in any ancient councell,nor yet practiſed of the vniuerſall Church in time and place: for the former ages of the Church,knew it not,and many Churches to this day receiue it not,and therefore by Auguſtines ſentence,it ought to be abrogated. Contra. 1. WE may now truly ſay of thoſe patrons of ſuperſtition, and their councels, as the Prophet ſaith of Pharaoh his counſellers: Errant in opere, vt ebrius in vomitu: They doe erre in euery worke, as a drunken man in his vomite. Their reſtleſſe and brainſicke inuentions are neuer ſetled: and as Origen well ſaith: Vt errantium à via multæ differentiæ ſunt, &c. As when men erre from the high way, they goe into many by-paths, tract. 27. in Matth. So falleth it out here, that theſe ſwaruing from the truth, doe euery one follow his owne way, and cannot agree together. 2. It is pretie ſport to ſee how the Popes doe curſe one another for altering their predeceſſors decrees: firſt Boniface the eight, hauing erected a Iubile euery 100. yeere, doth ſhut vp his Bull thus: Nulli hominum liceat hanc paginam noſtræ conſtitutionis, &c. infringere, ſiquis attentare præſumpſerit indignationem omnipotentis Dei, &c. nouerit ſe incurſurum: Let no man dare to infringe this Bull of our conſtitution, which if he preſume to attempt, let him know he ſhall incurre the indignation of Almightie God, and of Peter and Paul, &c. extrau. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 1. Then commeth Clemens the ſixth, and infringeth this Conſtitution, and ſo ſtandeth vnder the Pope his predeceſſors curſe: and he reduceth the Iubile to 50. yeeres, impoſing the very ſame curſe and in the ſame words vpon the violators of his decree. ibid. c. 2. After him followeth Sixtus the fourth, who bringeth the Iubile to 25. yeeres, and ſo incurreth the former curſe annexed to Clemens the ſixth his conſtitution. ibid. cap. 4.

Thus theſe fellowes, that would terrifie all the world with their curſes, yet take them to bee but ſcarebugges themſelues. Or if they thinke the Popes curſe to be any thing worth, how can they bleſſe others, that ſtand accurſed themſelues?

SIxtus the fourth in his Bull thus decreeth: after he had recited the conſtitution of his predeceſſor Paulus the ſecond for the reſtraining of the Iubile to the 25. yeere: Quod anno domini 1474. proximè futuro, à vigilia natiuitatis domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti, Iubilæus celebrari deberet, &c. That in the yeere of our Lord 1474. next comming from the vigile of the birth of our Lord the Iubile ſhould be celebrated: extrau. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 4.

Confutat. THis Pope diſſenteth from all his predeceſſors, bringing the Iubile to the 24. yeere: for in the 1450. yeere the Iubile was kept according to the conſtitution of Clemens the ſixth, who reduced it to the 50. yeere, vnto the which adde 24. and we haue the foreſaid number of 1474. Thus as S. Paul ſaith: 1. Tim. 1. 7. They vnderſtand not what they ſpeake, nor whereof they affirme: So vncertaine are theſe Popes in theſe new deuiſes diſſenting one from an other: like as Ambroſe ſaith, Non diuiſus eſt Chriſtus, ſed qui eum diuidunt, ipſi ſe ſcindunt: Chriſt is not diuided: but they which diuide him doe alſo diuide themſelues. lib. 1. de fid. c. 4.

Confut. TO reckon the yeeres of our Lord, from the natiuitie of Chriſt, and not from his conception. 1. is contrary to their owne doctrine: for the Rhemiſts confeſſe, That ſtraight vpon Chriſts deſcending from heauen, it was the dutie of Angels to worſhip him: annot. in 2. Heb. ſect. 2. Bellar. ſuper Chriſtum hominem nondum natum, ſed conceptum, ſpiritus ſanctus deſcendit: Vpon the man Chriſt, not yet borne but conceiued, the holy Ghoſt did deſcend: de Chriſt. anima. lib. 4. c. 2. If Chriſt then deſcended from heauen in his conception, was then made man, and adored of Angels, what reaſon is there, why the yeeres of the Lord ſhould not be accounted from that inſtant? 2. It is contrarie to their owne practiſe: for the Popes vſe to date their Buls: Anno incarnationis, &c. the yeere of the incarnation of our Lord, Paul. 2. extrau. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 3. Sixt. 4. ibid. But Chriſts incarnation began not onely in his natiuitie, but from his firſt conception. 3. It is contrarie to the Scriptures, When he bringeth in his firſt begotten ſonne into the world, hee ſaith, let all the Angels worſhip him: If Chriſt muſt bee worſhipped from his firſt comming into the world, which was in his conception, then from thence the account of time muſt begin, which is a part of externall honour and worſhip due vnto him. 4. Iohn Baptiſt being in his mothers wombe three moneths before hee was borne, ſprang at the ſalutation of Marie, and ſo adored Chriſt, being but then conceiued in his mothers wombe by the holy Ghoſt: in like manner ought we to adore the conception of Chriſt, and not to exclude it out of the reckoning. 5. Iob curſeth the night, wherein he was cõceiued, that it be not ioyned to the daies dates of the yeere, nor come into the count of the moneths, but the time of Chriſts conception is bleſſed, and therfore it ought to come into the account of the moneths, Wherfore the yeere of the Lord is rather to begin from his conception, then from his natiuitie.

Secondly, it is another of their errors in their account of time, that whereas the conception of Chriſt was three quarters of a yeere preceding his birth; yet they accounting from the Natiuitie, doe write the ſame yeere of the Lord, a whole quarter before vs: as this preſent yeere they write 1613. at the natiuity laſt, and we begin the ſame yeere at the Annuntiation laſt: ſo that they account ſooner by a yeere then they ſhould: for it being but 1613. from the conception of Chriſt the 25. of March laſt, according to the iuſt computation of the Church of England: it can be from his natiuitie no more then 1613. at the feaſt of the birth of Chriſt next enſuing. This is a groſſe and apparant error. 7.Error.

Thirdly, the natiuitie of Chriſt did fall neither in a Sabbaticall yeere, nor yet in the yeere of Iubile; for it was the third yeere of the Sabbath of yeeres, and almoſt 20. yeeres from the yeere of Iubile, which was in the yeere of the world 3910. and Chriſt was borne about the yeere 3930. Seeing then Chriſt was not borne in a yeere of Iubile, from thence reckoning by euen fifties, the yeere 1600. could not be a yeere of Iubile: See Maſter Broughtons Concent of Scripture of this matter, whoſe labours in this kind haue been moſt painefull, learned and profitable. 8.Error.

Fourthly, though it ſhould bee granted, that the natiuitie of Chriſt was incident into a yeere of Iubile: yet they miſſe againe, in the obſeruing the time of the yeere for Chriſts birth, and in taking the beginning of their Iubile: for Moſes Iubile, which they take vpon them to imitate, began in the tenth day of the ſeuenth moneth, Leuit. 25. 9. If they anſwere, that they began their Iubile from the time that Chriſt was borne in: ſome learned doe thinke, that hee was borne in the moneth anſwering to our September, and that for theſe reaſons: Firſt, it is euident, that betweene the conception of Iohn, and the conception of Chriſt, there were ſixe moneths, Luk. 1. 26. In the ſixth moneth the Angel Gabriel was ſent, &c. But Iohn was conceiued in the fourth moneth, which anſwereth to our Iune: for in that moneth Zacharie ſerued, being of the courſe of Abia, which was the eighth courſe, 1. Chro. 24. 10. (two of thoſe courſes ſeruing euery moneth) which courſes began at the firſt moneth, Niſan anſwering to our March, the beginning of moneths, Exod. 12. 2. Iohn then being conceiued in Iune, his birth muſt fall out 9. moneths after about March: and ſo conſequently our Sauiour being conceiued 6. moneths after Iohn, muſt be borne about September following. 9.Error. At what time of the yeere Chriſt was borne. 1. Luke 1.26. 1.Chron.24.10 Exod.12.2.

2. Againe, Chriſt preached three yeeres and an halfe: for he died according to Daniels prophecie, in the middeſt of a propheticall weeke of yeeres, which is three yeeres and an halfe: and when he began to preach, he was iuſt 30. yeere old, from the time then of Chriſts birth, to the time of his death, there muſt be halfe a yeere: So it doth probably follow, that Chriſt dying in the ſpring, muſt be borne in the Autumne. 2. Dan.9.27. Luke 3.23.

3. They ſeeing their error, haue of late ſomewhat reformed their Calendar, bringing backe the feaſt of the Natiuitie ten daies from the 25. of December to the 15. day: but yet they haue miſſed the marke: for whereas it is found that the courſe of yeeres is altered from the ancient Iulian Calendar, by reaſon that for euery 130. yeeres a day is loſt, in reſpect of certaine minutes and ſeconds encreaſing euery yeere, beſide the 6. odde houres, which are recompenſed euery leape yeere; one Aloyſius Lilius, anno 82. in Gregorie the 13. his time, was authorized to reforme the Calendar: but being limited by the Papiſticall Clergie not to goe beyond the Nicen Synode, he was forced there to begin, which was from anno 328. and from thence counting a day for 130. yeeres, he brought backe the Calendar only tenne daies, whereas it was ſlipt thirteene daies from the time of Iulius Ceſar, who liued about 45. yeeres before Chriſt. Thus yet are they in error concerning the iuſt computation of time. 3. Of the popiſh reformation of the Calender.

4. It will be here obiected, that though the Church of Rome hath not yet perfectly reformed their Calendar, yet they come neerer to the ancient Iulian computation, then the Church of England, that hath admitted yet no reformation of the Calendar. I anſwere: firſt, concerning the celebration of the natiuitie of Chriſt, to vs it is no great matter, though we hit not the very ſame ſeaſon wherein he was borne: for his birth day may be as thankfully celebrated, as it is now kept, as if the very point of time were exactly calculated: we doe not ſo much reſpect the time, as the myſterie remembred therein: But to them it is very materiall to obſerue the very preciſe time, becauſe they begin their Iubile from thence; wherein, as I haue ſhewed they do greatly miſſe. Secondly, yet we are not againſt a reformation of the Calendar, if it ſo ſeemed good to Chriſtian Princes, which may much better be performed, then they haue done it: who by altering and changing the ancient Feſtiuals, and Faire and Market dayes, making them to come tenne dayes ſooner, haue brought a great confuſion and diſturbance into many common-weales. A more peaceable and ſafe way is found out, that if for the ſpace of 56. yeres following, there ſhould be no leape yeere at all, wherein a day is added more, by this meanes (fourteene dayes being cut off, for euery leape yeere one) the computation would be reſtored to the ancient reckoning of the Iulian Calendar. Robert. Pont. propoſ. 5. 4.

5. It wil be further obiected concerning the ſeaſon of Chriſts birth, that the fathers held, that he was borne when the dayes began to encreaſe, & therefore not in the Autumne, when they are ſtil in decreaſing: as Auguſtine ſeemeth ſo to allude in theſe words of Iohn Baptiſt: Illum oportet creſcere, &c. Hee muſt encreaſe, but I muſt decreaſe, Ioh. 3. 30. Naſcitur Ioannes ex quo dies incipiunt minui, iſte cum 5.

creſcere inciperent,&c.Iohn was borne,when the daies began to be leſſoned, Chriſt,when they began to encreaſe,lib.83.qu.58.

*Anſw.*1. Any man may ſee that this collection is rather wittie then waightie, pretie rather, then pithie: as in the ſame place the author alleaged (whoſoeuer it was) alludeth further thus: Iohn decreaſed, quia capite minuitur, becauſe he was cut ſhorter by the head: Chriſt encreaſed, quia attollitur in cruce, becauſe he was lift vp in the croſſe, and ſo made higher.

2. We may well thinke, that in Auguſtines time, which was about 400. yeere after Chriſt, they might well be ignorant of the time of Chriſts birth, ſeeing almoſt 100. yeere before in the Nicene Synode, and long before that, there was ſuch ſtriſe about the celebration of the Paſch, ſome affirming that the Apoſtles kept it one way, ſome another: the Eaſt Church pretending a tradition from S.Iohn to hold the Paſch the 14. day of the firſt moneth: the Weſt following a direction from S.Peter, to ſolemnize it the firſt Lords day after the firſt Moone following the Equinoctium.

3. Neither are all the fathers of this mind, that Chriſt was borne in the daies encreaſing by ordinarie courſe of the Sunne: S.Ambroſe hath this ſuppoſition: Ex eo factum puto, vt nox decreſceret,&c. quia ſol præter conſuetudinem in hac feſtiuitate matutinus illuxit: Hence it was that the night was leſſened, becauſe the Sunne, beſide his vſuall courſe and cuſtome, did ſhine in the morning, becauſe of this feſtiuall: for if at Ioſua his prayer the Sunne ſtood ſtill in the day, cur non ad Ieſus natiuitatem feſtinus promoueret à nocte: much more becauſe of Chriſts natiuitie, did he ſooner go forward from the night, *ſer.*16. That the day then encreaſed, and the night decreaſed, when Chriſt was borne, Ambroſe thinketh it was extraordinare, beſide the vſuall courſe of the yeere at that time.

10.Error. Fifthly, ſeeing it is euident, that Chriſt died in a yeere of Iubile, it being the 28. Iubile in number, as is well obſerued in that learned Concent of Scripture. And the Prophet Daniel ſheweth, that all the Sabbaticall yeeres determined at the death of Chriſt, in whom the true Iubile was accompliſhed, well called by the Septuagint, ἐνιαυτὸς ἀφέσεως, the yeere of remiſſion. This appeareth then to be another great error in the Romane Iubile, becauſe they doe count from the yeere of Chriſts natiuitie, which was no yeere of Iubile, and not from the yeere of his death, which was the true Iubile indeed, and concurring with Moſes Iubile: So the Prophet Eſay ſaith, prophecying of Chriſt: In an acceptable time haue I heard thee, and in the day of ſaluation I haue helped thee: This ἡμέρα σωτηρίας, day of ſaluation, is the ſame which the Septuagint tranſlate ἐνιαυτὸς ἀφέσεως, the yeere of remiſſion, which was the yeere of Iubile.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE END AND purpoſe of the Papall Iubile.

CONcerning the intent, ſcope and end of this Popiſh deuiſe, we find it to be firſt blaſphemous: ſecondly, ſacrilegious: thirdly, ſuperfluous: fourthly, iniurious: fifthly, couetous.

The Papiſts.

11.Error. The Popes Iubile blaſphemous.

FIrſt, their blaſphemie appeareth in this, that the Pope taketh vpon him to giue full remiſſion of all ſinnes to them, that viſite Rome in the yeere of Iubile perſonally: for theſe are the words of *Clement.*6. his Bull: Qui baſilicas Apoſtolorum,&c.perſonaliter viſitarent, ſi verè pœnitentes & confeſſi fuerint, ſuorum omnium pleniſſimam obtinerent veniam peccatorum: They which perſonally viſite the Apoſtles Churches Peter and Paul at Rome, if they bee truly penitent, and confeſſed, ſhould obtaine moſt full remiſſion of all their ſinnes: Extrau.commun.lib.5.tit.9.c.6.

The Proteſtants.

1.Iohn 1.7. Remiſſion of ſinnes not had in viſiting Rome.

*Contra.*1. THus they blaſphemouſly aſcribe full remiſſion of ſinnes to the viſiting of Rome, which is but a ſuperſtitious deuice of their owne, whereas the ſcripture ſaith, The blood of Ieſus Chriſt purgeth vs from all ſinne: But the blood or bodie of Paul or Peter, are not the blood of Chriſt, neither to viſit Rome in perſon, is it the blood of Chriſt: therefore it is blaſphemie contrary to the Scripture to attribute remiſſion of ſinnes, to any other thing, then to the blood of Chriſt.

2. But they imagine, that this helpeth the matter, becauſe this clauſe is inſerted, if they be truly penitent,&c.

*Anſw.*1. If then it be repentance that giueth remiſſion of ſinnes, what neede they perſonally viſite Rome? a man may repent as well at home, as at Rome, nay, much better: for their licentious life there and euill example will hinder repentance rather, then prouoke vnto it. 2. True repentance they require not, but popiſh penance, which they make a ſatisfaction for ſinne, which ſhall neuer find remiſſion of ſinne. 3. But if they had, or preſcribed true repentance indeed, yet is it not a cauſe of forgiueneſſe of ſinne, but a conſequence onely thereof, and aſſurance of it to our owne ſoules, and a manifeſtation that we are cleare before God: As S.Paul ſaith, hauing deſcribed their true repentance and godly ſorrow, their care, feare, deſire, puniſhment,&c. In omnibus vos exhibuiſtis puros,&c. In al things ye haue ſhewed your ſelues pure in this matter. Their outward repentance did ſhew the inward cleering of their conſcience by faith before God.

3. Laſtly, S.Ambroſe ſaith vpon theſe words of the Apoſtle, Rom.3.24. Ye are iuſtified freely: Quia nihil operantes, neque vicem reddentes ſola fide iuſtificati ſunt dono dei: Becauſe they working nothing nor rendring the like, are iuſtified onely by faith through the gift of God, in 3.cap. ad Roman. If by neither working nor rendring any thing,&c. then not by viſiting Rome, or going to celebrate the yeere of Iubile ſhall a man finde remiſſion of ſinnes, but by faith onely.

The Papiſts.

SEcondly, the popiſh Iubile is inſtituted to the honour of Peter and Paul: as it is extant in the Bull of Boniface 8. Vt beatiſſimi Petrus & Paulus amplius honorentur: That the bleſſed Apoſtles Peter and Paul be more honoured, Extrau.tit.9.c.1. And in the Bull of Clement.6.ibid.c.2. Pro ipſorum memoria crebrius recolenda, & reuerentia à cunctis Christi fidelibus eis deuotius adhibenda: For the more often celebrating of their memorie, and the more deuotion of all the faithfull of Chriſt to bee giuen vnto them. 12.Error.

The Popes Iubile how iniurious.

The Proteſtants.

Confut. FIrſt, this is great ſacrilege, to giue that honour to the Apoſtles, who are but Chriſts ſeruants, which is due vnto the Lord and maſter himſelfe: The Lord ſaith, My glory will I not giue to another: The ſame is the deſire alſo of the Saints, not vnto vs, not vnto vs Lord, but vnto thy name giue the praiſe. Iſay 42.8. Pſal.115.1.

2. The Iubile was at the firſt inſtitution conſecrated onely as holy vnto God: for as the ſeuenth Sabbaticall yeere was holy vnto God, and is called the Lords Sabbath, Leuit.25.4. ſo ſeauen times ſeauen yeere, which was the yeere of Iubile, was holy to God, Leuit.25.12. it ſhall be holy to you: that is, in reſpect of your vſe, but holy to the honour of God. It is ſacrilege then to robbe God of his honour, and to conſecrate a Iubile vnto men. Leuit.25.4.12.

The Iubile was not inſtituted to the honour, but onely of the Lord.

3. Saint Hierome ſaith: Nos non dico martyrum reliquias ſed ne ſolem quidem aut lunam, non angelos, archangelos, non Seraphim, Cherubim, & omne nomen, quod nominatur in præſenti ſeculo & futuro, colimus, & adoramus, ne ſeruiamus creaturæ potius, quam creatori, qui eſt benedictus in ſecula: We do not onely not worſhip and adore the reliques of Martyrs, but not the Sunne or Moone, not Angels, Archangels, Seraphim, Cherubim, or any name named in this world or the world to come, leſt we ſhould ſerue the creature, rather then the creator. And againe, Quis ô inſanum caput aliquando martyres adorauit, quis hominem putauit deum? Who, ô mad braine, euer adored the Martyrs, or tooke man to be God? ad Riparium aduerſ. Vigilantium. Wherefore by Hieromes ſentence all reuerence and diuine adoration is to be giuen onely to the creator, the creature hath no part therein.

4. But what kinde of honour is due vnto Saints, is very well expreſſed, Synod, Moguntin.cap.45. Sancti qui vita huius curſum beato fine clauſerunt, &c. non eo qui vero deo debetur, ſed eo ſocietatis & dilectionis cultu quo in hac vita ſancti homines, à nobis coli poſſunt: The Saints, which haue happily ended this life, may be worſhipped of vs, not with that worſhip which is only due vnto God, but by that worſhip of fellowſhip and loue, by the which holy men may be worſhipped of vs in this life, &c. But S. Peter and S. Paul, while they liued, would haue been aſhamed to haue had Temples, dayes, Iubile yeeres to be conſecrate to their name and memorie: Ergo, this honour is not due vnto them, now they are dead.

The Papiſts.

THirdly, theſe are the words of the Bull of Sixtus 4. Verum quia poſtmodum, tam nos, quam idem Paulus prædeceſſor noſter animarum ſaluti fidelium intenti, &c. deuotarum perſonarum pulſati precibus diuerſas indulgentias & peccatorum remiſſiones plenarias nonnullis eccleſijs, monaſterijs & pijs locis duximus concedendas: Becauſe as well we, as our predeceſſor Paulus, being intent vpon the ſaluation of mens ſoules, moued thereunto by the prayers of deuoute perſons, haue thought good to grant indulgences, and plenarie remiſſions of ſinnes to certaine Churches, Monaſteries, and godly places: Extrau.commun.lib.5.tit.9.c.4. 13.Error.

The Proteſtants.

Confut. FIrſt, hence I inferre, that the Papall inſtitution of Iubile is ſuperfluous, becauſe the Pope preſumeth to giue plenarie remiſſion and full indulgence without a yeere of Iubile, and to other places then Rome. Secondly, if hee can do it, and will not, hee is an enemie to the ſaluation of mens ſoules; for as it is in the Bull alleaged before: hauing an intent to the ſaluation of mens ſoules, hee granted plenarie indulgences to diuers places: then to denie to giue ſuch indulgences is to neglect and hinder the ſaluation of mens ſoules. Thirdly, it was appointed by the law of Moſes, that land, which was ſold and could not be redeemed, ſhould come out in the yeere of Iubile, Leuit.25.28. that bond ſeruants ſhould be ſet free in the yeere of Iubile, ibid.verſ.40. If this plenarie freedome and full reſtitution could haue been obtained before, then the yeere of Iubile had been needleſſe: by the ſame reaſon the Popes Iubile is ſuperfluous, ſeeing without it, plenarie indulgence, if hee liſt, may be had. Fourthly, therefore Saint Hierome ſaith well: Non audeo dei omnipotentiam anguſto fine concludere & coarctare paruo terræ loco, quem non capit cœlum; ſinguli quique credentium non locorum diuerſitatibus, ſed merito fidei ponderantur: I dare not ſhut vp Gods omnipotencie in a ſmall roome, or include him in a little place, whom heauen cannot receiue: euery beleeuer, not by diuerſitie of place, but excellencie of faith is to be meaſured, epiſt. ad Paulinum. It is not then neceſſary to viſite Rome in the yeere of Iubile, if Chriſt be preſent euery where by faith to true beleeuers.

The Popes Iubile ſuperfluous.

The Papiſts.

FOurthly, this Papall indiction and promulgation of the Iubile is iniurious: for in the Bull of indulgence, the libertie of the Iubile is granted to thoſe onely, which doe either perſonally 14.Error.

The Proteſtants.

Confutat. FIrſt, if none be prouided for in the Bull of Iubile but they that came thither, or would come, and are hindred, or dye in their iourney; what ſhall become of thoſe that neither come thither, nor yet purpoſe it, will ye make them caſtawayes? Alacke then for vs poore ſoules of England, what ſhall we doe? Is the holie father ſo mercileſſe, that he will ſend vs all to Purgatorie, becauſe we will not come to Rome to haue purſes picked, I would ſay purged? Secondly, if plenarie indulgence be onely had in the yeere of Iubile, in what caſe are they that dye before the Iubile commeth? doe they dye in their ſinnes? how is not then this conſtitution moſt iniurious to many poore ſoules, that neuer offended the Pope holy father? Thirdly, but Saint Peter (the Popes maſter, though he be an vntoward ſcholler, that will follow his maſter neuer a whit) doth put vs in better comfort, that in euery nation, he that feareth God and worketh righteouſnes, is accepted with God, Act. 10. 35. whether he were at Rome, or not, whether he liue to the yeere of Iubile or not. Fourthly, Saint Hierome alſo ſaith: Nequicquam fidei tuæ deeſſe putes quia Hieroſolymam non vidiſti; nec nos idcirco meliores exiſtimes, quòd huius loci habitaculo fruimur: Thinke not that any thing is wanting to your faith, that you haue not ſeene Ieruſalem, or that wee are any thing better, becauſe wee are there, epiſt. ad Paulin. I thinke Rome is no more priuiledged then Ieruſalem: a mans faith may be ſufficient to ſaue him, though he haue ſeene neither, nor yet deſired to ſee or viſite them.

The Popes Iubile how iniurious.

Act. 10. 35.

The Papiſts.

15. Error. FIfthly, it is alſo euident, that the popiſh inſtitution of the Iubile was rather for lucre of ſiluer, then of ſoules; that the end thereof is rather couetous, then religious; of greedines more then godlines.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, 1. To what end elſe was their Iubile brought from 100. yeeres to 50. from 50. to 25. from 25. to 10. as I haue before ſhewed, but onely becauſe they found the Iubile profitable, and ſought their owne gaine? 2. What elſe moued Sixtus 4. to reuerſe diuers graunts of plenarie indulgence, but as it is expreſſed in the Bull, Ne populorum concurſus ad eccleſias ante dictas retardari aut ipſius anni Iubilæi celebritas minui, vel intermitti poſſet, &c. Leaſt the concourſe of people to the ſaid Churches might be hindred, or the celebritie of the Iubile yeere empayred or intermitted, &c. and by this meanes their gaine ſhould decreaſe, and their aduantage be diminiſhed: for that is the cauſe indeede, if they would ſpeake out, and not diſſemble the matter. 3. When as Clemens the 6. firſt reduced the Iubile to fiftie yeeres, anno 1350. there were numbred euery day of ſtrangers going and comming to Rome fiue thouſand, and a thouſand poore people wayting daily at the Popes pallace for their pardons; Can it be thought otherwiſe but this was very beneficiall to the Pope? Calixtus the 3. is found to haue left an hundred and fifteene thouſand ducates to his ſucceſſor, that hee had ſcraped together by Pardons and Indulgences, ex Balæo, &c. Let all men now iudge, what maketh the Pope ſo earneſt in maintaining his Iubile. 4. I conclude then with Hierome, whoſe ſaying may very fitly be applied to the Romane Clergie: Nunc ſub religionis titulo exercentur iniuſta compendia, & honor nominis Chriſtiani fraudem magis facit, quam patitur: plenis ſacculis morimur diuites, qui quaſi pauperes viximus: Now vnder pretence of religion vniuſt gaine is exacted, and the honor of Chriſts name doth offer deceit rather, then ſuffer it, and many dye with full coffers, that while they liued made profeſſion of pouertie, Hier. ad Ruſticum.

The Popes Iubile inſtituted for gaine.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE MANNER of ſolemnizing the Popiſh Iubile.

IN this laſt and fourth part I doe obſerue theſe particular errors: that the manner it ſelfe obſerued in the Romane Iubile, is firſt ſuperſtitious: ſecondly, idolatrous: thirdly, ambitious: fourthly, ſcandalous: fifthly, ridiculous.

The Papiſts.

16. Error. FIrſt, their ſuperſtition herein appeareth, in that they enioyne men in the yeere of Iubile to come onely to Rome to viſite the Churches of Peter and Paul, and of Saint Mary the greater, and the Laterane Church, which Conſtantine did erect to the honor of our Sauiour, being baptized, by Silueſter, and ſo healed of his leproſie: which Silueſter alſo did conſecrate with a new kinde of Chriſme; Clemens 6. Extrau. vbi ſupra.

The Proteſtants.

Confutat. FIrſt, Pope Clement by his leaue coucheth heere three great vntruths together: firſt, that Conſtantine was baptized by Silueſter: ſecondly, at Rome: thirdly, in the beginning of his Empire, while Silueſter was yet liuing: whereas he was baptized firſt by Euſebius: ſecondly, at Nicomedia: thirdly, in the 31. yeere of his raigne, Silueſter being dead long before: Euſeb. lib. 4. de vit. Conſtant. in. Ruffin. lib. 2. c. 11.

Conſtantine when baptized, where, and by whom.

Secondly, that Silueſter did nouo Chriſmationis genere, &c. with a new kinde of Chriſme dedicate the Laterane Church, it alſo ſauoureth. 1. It could not be a new kind of Chriſme, ſeeing your forged

*Fabian,epiſt.*2. before this maketh mention of Chriſme, and telleth vs, (if wee will credit him vpon his word) that Ieſus poſtquam cœnauit,&c. diſcipulos docuit chriſma conficere, That Chriſt after he had ſupped, taught his Apoſtles to make Chriſme. 2. Their Chriſme ſeemeth to haue bin in no great account long after Syluesters time: for Ambroſe vpon theſe words, 2.Cor.1.19. God hath annoynted vs, doth thus interprete: Vnxit nos Deus, id eſt, dedit regiam honorificentiam, ſicut dicit Petrus. God hath annoynted vs, that is, giuen vs a kingly honor, as Peter ſaith, &c. He vnderſtandeth a ſpirituall annoynting: if he had thought any other kinde of Chriſme or annoynting neceſſary, hee had occaſion here offered to ſpeake of it.

Thirdly, Rome is no more priuiledged then Ieruſalem, nor Italy then Iudea: but of theſe Chriſt ſaith, that the true worſhippers of God ſhall neither worſhip him at Ieruſalem, nor in that mountaine, &c. If it be not neceſſary to goe to Ieruſalem to worſhip, neither is it to viſite Rome. And Moſes ſaith, Neither is it beyond the ſea, that thou ſhouldeſt ſay, who ſhall goe ouer the ſea for vs to bring it to vs? We neede not then goe ouer the ſea to Rome to ſeecke Chriſt.

Deut.30.13.

Fourthly, Hierome well ſaith: Illa expetenda eſt ciuitas, non quæ occidit prophetas, & Chriſti ſanguinem fudit, ſed quam matrem ſanctorum Apoſtolus clamitat: That citie is to be deſired, not which killed the Prophets, and ſhed Chriſts blood, but which the Apoſtle calleth the mother of the faithfull: epiſt. ad Paulin. But Rome as well as Ieruſalem hath killed the Prophets and Apoſtles. And againe, Hierome in the ſame place to the ſame purpoſe alleageth theſe Scriptures: The ſpirit bloweth where it liſteth, The earth is the Lords, and the fulnes thereof, Deſijt tantum notus eſſe in Iudæa deus, in omnem terram exiuit ſonus Apoſtolorum: God hath ceaſed onely to be knowne in Iudea, the ſound of the Apoſtles is gone forth into all lands. Laſtly, concerning the citie of Rome, Hierome doubteth not in his time to call it Babylon: Gaudeo cum in Babylone inuenitur Daniel, &c. I am glad that in Babylon is found Daniel, Ananias, Azarias, Miſael.tom.4.epiſt. ad Principiam. Wherefore ſeeing the Lord biddeth vs come forth of Babylon, what reaſon haue Chriſtians to aſcend to worſhip in Babylon?

Nicen.2.action.6. tom.3.*

Whether it be ſafe to haue the image of Chriſt.

2. Epiphanius comming into a Church at Anablatha, and ſeeing the picture of Chriſt hanging in a cloth thus reporteth: Cum hoc vidiſſem in eccleſia Chriſti contra authoritatem ſcripturarum, hominis pendere imaginem, ſcidi illud: When I ſaw in the Church of Chriſt againſt the authoritie of ſcriptures a mans picture hanging, I cut it in peeces, and aduiſed rather to wrap a dead corſe in it: epiſt. ad Ioann. Hieroſolym. And he addeth further: Præcipias in eccleſia Chriſti huiuſmodi vela, quæ contra religionem noſtram veniunt, non appendi: Command that ſuch painted clothes, which are againſt our religion, be not hanged vp.

3. Saint Ambroſe ſaith: In eccleſia vnam imaginem noui, hoc eſt, imaginem Dei inuiſibilis, &c. In the Church I know one onely image, that is, the image of God inuiſible, of the which the Lord ſaid, Let vs make man according to our image. That image whereof it is written: Chriſt is the ingrauen image of his perſon: orat. in Auxent. Then no viſible image of God or Chriſt is to be retained: which is made by it ſelfe as a repreſentation of Chriſt, vnleſſe it be for the ſetting forth of ſome hiſtoricall act of Chriſts: for then Chriſt is portracted, not by way of any ſpeciall reſemblance, but with relation to the demonſtration of ſome thing acted.

Gen.1.26.
Heb.1.3.

Secondly, if it be not lawfull to haue the image of Chriſt, much more vnlawfull is it to worſhip or adore it: 1. it is contrary to the ſecond commandement to make the likenes or image of any thing to fall downe and worſhip it. 2. The Angell, who is to be preferred before a dead image, would not ſuffer Iohn to worſhip him, but bid him worſhip God. 3. We haue the decree of a generall councell againſt the adoration of images, Conſtantinop.7.ex Nicen.2.action.6.tom.6. Qui imaginem ab hoc die ſibi auſus fuerit parare, vel adorare in eccleſia, &c. He that from henceforth dare prepare to himſelfe or adore an image in the Church, if a Cleargie man, let him be depoſed; if a lay man, let him be accurſed. See more of both theſe queſtions. contra.9.qu.5.artic.2.3.

Reuel.22.9.

The Papiſts.

3. THis deuiſe of the Popes Iubile ſauoureth of ambition, in that he arrogateth this power in proclaiming the Iubile, and diſpenſing indulgences as proper to himſelfe: for this is their ſtile: Statuentes de fratrum conſilio & apoſtolica plenitudine poteſtatis, &c. Ordaining by the aduiſe of our brethren (the Cardinals) and the fulnes of our Apoſtolike power: And againe: Quem quidem theſaurum per Petrum cœli clauigerum eiuſque ſucceſſores in terris vicarios commiſit, &c. Which treaſure of the Church, Chriſt hath committed to be diſpenſed by Peter the key-bearer of heauen, and his ſucceſſors his vicars in earth: Clemens 6.extrau.vbi ſupra.

18.Error. The inſtitution of the Popes Iubile ſauoureth of ambition.

The Proteſtants.

Reuel.3.7.

*Confutat.*1. THe Scripture ſaith, that Chriſt onely hath the key of Dauid, which openeth, and no man ſhutteth, The adminiſtration and diſpenſation of the keyes is no more committed to Peter, then to the reſt: for Saint Paul ſaith, that the Church is built vpon the foundation of the Apoſtles, None are excepted: whereupon Saint Hierome ſaith, Eccleſia ex aequo fundatur ſuper omnes Apoſtolos: The Church is equally founded vpon all the Apoſtles. *aduerſ. Iouinian. lib.*1.

Epheſ.2.20.

Matth.28.22. Epheſ.4.16. Chriſt needeth no Vicar.

2. Neither Saint Peter, nor yet the Pope need to be Chriſts vicar, for he hath promiſed himſelfe to be with vs to the end of the world. And therefore by Saint Paul, our Sauiour is compared to the head, by whom all the body is coupled together. That as the head needeth no vicariall ſubſtitute in the bodie, no more doth Chriſt in his Church.

The Pope not Peters ſucceſſor.

3. Neither can the Pope chalenge to be Saint Peters ſucceſſor, vnleſſe he ſucceeded him in life and doctrine: as Saint Ambroſe: Non habent Petri haereditatem, qui fidem Petri non habent: They haue not Peters inheritance, that haue not Peters faith.

The Pope not greater then other Biſhops in their dioceſſe.

4. Howſoeuer it is, the Biſhop of Rome hath no more authority then other Biſhops haue, as Saint Hierome ſaith: Vbicunque fuerit epiſcopus, ſiue Eugubij, ſiue Conſtantinopoli, ſiue Alexandriae, einſdem meriti, eiuſdem eſt ſacerdotij, &c. potentia diuitiarum & paupertatis humilitas vel inferiorem, vel ſubliniorem epiſcopum non facit: Caeterum omnes Apoſtolorum ſucceſſores ſunt, &c, quid mihi profers vnius vrbis conſuetudinem, &c. Whereſoeuer a Biſhop is, whether at Eugubium, at Conſtanſtinople, or Alexandria, he is of the ſame worthines, of the ſame prieſthood: the power of riches, and baſenes of pouertie make not an higher or inferior Biſhop: but they are all the ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles, &c. what do you alleage the cuſtome of one Citie? ad Euagr. If then a Iubile were to be celebrated among Chriſtians, the Biſhop of Rome hath no more power to preſcribe the ſame, then other Biſhops haue in their dioceſſe: it is but a tricke of his ambitious humor, thus to perke aboue other his fellow Biſhops.

The Papiſts.

19. Error. The Popes Iubile ſcandalous in reſpect of the Iewes.

4. THe popiſh inſtitution of the Iubile is alſo ſcandalous to the Iewes, and is a cauſe to harden and confirme them in their blindnes: 1. for when will they learne to know Chriſt, and acknowledge the Meſſias to be come, when they ſee their owne ceremonious obſeruations yet to be in force, and the Iubile, which was a type of the true Iubile and yeare of remiſſion in Chriſt, to be ſo ceremoniouſly obſerued?

2. Saint Ambroſe writeth a vehement Epiſtle to Theodoſius, diſſwading him from repayring a Iewiſh ſynagogue, which was burnt, and amongſt other excellent perſwaſions he thus ſaith, Quomodo poterit nos Chriſtus iuuare, qui pro Iudaeis aduerſus Chriſtum militamus: How can we thinke, that Chriſt ſhould helpe vs, which doe warre with the Iewes againſt Chriſt? *epiſtol.*29. And what is this elſe, but to fight for the Iewes againſt Chriſt, in ſeeking to nouriſh their obſtinacie by retaining and reuiuing of their ceremonies?

3. Saint Paul ſaith, 1. Cor. 10.32. See that you giue no offence to the Iewes: Origen alſo ſaith; Qui ſcandali conſcius eſt animam dabit pro anima eius, quem ſcandalizauit: He that is guiltie of offence, ſhall giue his ſoule for his, whom he offended. *Hom.*10. in Exod. Looke to it then ye Romaniſts, that by your ſuperſtitious rites doe not onely offend the people of God, but doe obdurate the hard hearted Iewes, how ye will make anſwere for this your doing before the tribunall of Chriſt.

The Papiſts.

20. Error. The ceremonies of the Popes Iubile ridiculous.

LAſtly the manner of their Iubile pompe, and oſtentation is ridiculous: as may appeare by theſe particulars.

1. The Pope going vpon the Natiuitie eeuen, to the Chappell of the Apoſtolicall pallace, falleth downe vpon his knees before the ſacrament, powring incenſe vpon it.

2. Certaine waxe candels, are lighted, and giuen to the Pope and Cardinals weighing each three pound a peece, with the which they go in proceſſion.

3. Then the Pope from thence is carried in his chaire vpon mens ſhoulders to Saint Peters gate, where he goeth vp into a higher ſeat.

4. The Pope ſtriketh three blowes vpon the gate with a golden hammer.

5. Then he pronounceth theſe verſes: Open vnto me the gates of iuſtice, &c. Lord I will goe into thy houſe, &c.

6. The Church gate being walled vp, then the maſons with tooles breake it downe, and ſpeedily all the people as in the twinkling of an eye, moued with deuotion do carry away all the rubbiſh and morter.

7. Then the Pope ſaith this verſicle: This is the day which the Lord hath made, let vs reioyce and be glad in it, &c.

8. Then the Pope prayeth thus: Lord, who by thy ſeruant Moſes didſt appoint for thy people of Iſraell the yeere of Iubile and remiſſion of ſinnes, grant to vs thy grace, &c. happily to begin this yeere of Iubile, &c.

9. Then the Pope entring by the gate of the Church, is borne in his chaire by the officers to the high altar in Saint Peters Church.

10. Then he deſcendeth, and prayeth before the altar; then he aſcendeth into an other ſeate higher and more eleuated: ex libr. ceremoniar. ann. Iubilei, &c.

*Confutat.*1. Where hath the Pope learned to worſhip a wafer cake or a peece of bakers bread? for if he thinke it is the bodie of Chriſt, he maketh S. Peter a lyar, who ſaith, Whom the heauens muſt containe, vntill the time that all things be reſtored. 2. Chriſt, whereſoeuer, is in his humanitie to bee worſhipped of Angels, Heb.1.6. Let all the Angels of God worſhip him: If you can ſhew vs, that euer Angels worſhipped the bread in the ſacrament, we are ſatisfied. 3. As Chriſt ſaith, Me you ſhall not haue alwaies, that is, to annoint with oyle, as this woman now doth: no more haue wee now the bodie of Chriſt to powre incenſe vpon it.

1. Actes 3.21. Incenſe not to be powred vpon the ſacrament. Marke 14.9.

1. Candles are made to giue light in the darkneſſe of the night, not to bee ſet vp in the day: Her candle is not put out by night. 2. As the ciuill vſe of candles and lights in houſes, ſo was the religious vſe in the tabernacle: the lamps ſerued for the night: yet the light of God went out, that is, toward the morning.

2. Prou.13.18. 1.Sam.3.3.

3. The Prophet Dauid ſaith, I will come into thine houſe in the multitude of thy mercies, and in thy feare worſhip toward thy holy temple: How much vnlike is the Pope to this kingly Prophet: hee commeth to Gods houſe in feare and humilitie, the Pope is carried vpon mens ſhoulders: Dauid daunceth before the Arke going on foote, 2.Sam.6.16. the Pope diſdaineth to go on foote, or to ride on horſe, but maketh men his vaſſailes, to take him vpon their backes.

3. Pſalm.5.7.

4. What meaneth this knocking thrice vpon the gate? 1. if it be but the gate of S. Peters Church, the Clarke or Sextin hath the keyes, which are at the Popes commandement, he need not knock ſo often. Secondly, if it repreſent the gate of Paradiſe, hee hath the keyes himſelfe, and may enter without knocking. 3. Or if the Angels keepe Paradiſe gate, as they did the terreſtiall Paradiſe with a fiery ſword; the Pope need not knocke as a ſuter, ſeeing he taketh vpon him to be a commander of Angels: as Clement the ſixth in his Bull, ſaith thus: mandamus Angelis, &c. wee command the Angels, &c.

5. Firſt, if they be the gates of iuſtice, which you would haue opened, they are for the iuſt and righteous to enter into: I doubt then that the Pope with his Cardinals, and many of his retinue muſt ſtand by, that ſuffer ſuch iniuſtice and vncleanneſſe to be committed vnder their noſes, being acceſſary vnto it themſelues, in ſpilling the blood of many innocent ſoules, robbing of mens purſes with their Iubile illuſions, and ſuffering the Citie to abound with adulterie and ſodomitrie. 2. How can he ſay, I will come into thy houſe, when it is S. Peters Church, and conſecrated to his honour: but God will haue no partner in his houſe. 3. And doe ye thinke that the gates of Gods houſe are open onely at Rome, and is the ſcala cœli there onely pitched, to climbe vp to heauen by?

5.

6.

7. And it is falſe that the Lord made that day or yere of Iubile, it was Boniface the eighth, not God, nor yet a good man, who firſt conſtituted the Iubile euery hundred yeere after the example of the Roman heatheniſh plaies, that were celebrated euery hundreth yeere: of this Pope it is ſaid, he entred like a fox, raigned like a lion, died like a dog.

7.

8. Moſes indeed by Gods commandement erected a Iubile for the Iewes: if the Pope will alſo be a Iubile maker for Chriſtians, let him ſhew his warrant, as Moſes could: and if you imitate Moſes Iubile of fifty yeeres, why doth Pope Clement the eighth, in his late Bull commend the hundreth yeere of Iubile, which was no conſtitution of Moſes?

8.

9. And muſt the Pope be borne on mens ſhoulders in the Church, doth hee enter in pride by the gate of humilitie: and vniuſtly making mens ſhoulders as aſſes backes, who are his brethren, to come in by the gate of iuſtice?

9.

10. And can he not be contented to be higher then men, riding vpon their ſhoulders, but hee muſt alſo be higher then God ſitting aboue his altar: what intollerable pride is this? the Angels, that would ſit in Gods throne were caſt downe; and this prince of pride, that will ſit higher then his maker aboue the altar, muſt looke for a downe fall.

10.

It is well noted by Gregorie vpon theſe words of the Lord ſpoken to Ezechiel: Stand vpon thy feete: Stans propheta viſionem ſpiritualem vidit: The Prophet ſtanding doth ſee the ſpirituall viſion, hom.9. in Ezech. And the Prophet Dauid ſaith, The humble will he teach his way: therefore it is not like that God will reueale his ſecrets to the Pope ſitting in the chaire of pride.

Ezech.2.1. Pſalm.25.9.

Thus we ſee, with what ridiculous toyes and ſuperſtitious ceremonies the Pope beginneth, and endeth his yeere of Iubile; ſo that as Auguſtine well ſaith, as hee is alſo cited in their owne decrees, Dict.12.c.12. Tolerabilior eſt conditio Iudæorum, qui licet tempus libertatis non agnouerint, legalib. tamen ſacramentis, non humanis præſumptionibus ſubijciuntur: So that the condition of the Iewes is more tolerable, who although they knew not the time of libertie, yet are ſubiect to legall ſacraments, not humane preſumptions.

Let vs here ſee the iudgement and practiſe of other Churches concerning this Iewiſh inſtitution of the Iubile, and going in pilgrimage to Rome for that cauſe.

1. Gregorie Nyſſenus doth by many forceable perſwaſions dehort from going in pilgrimage to Ieruſalem: Quid plus eſt habiturus, qui locos illos adit, What is he like to haue more, that goeth to thoſe places? as though the ſpirit of God be onely at Ieruſalem, and cannot come to vs? If there were more grace at Ieruſalem, Illic viuentium peccatum non tam frequens eſſet, They which liue there would not ſo abound in ſinne,&c. and ſo he concludeth, counſel the brethren, vt è corpore peregrinentur ad Dominum, that they goe in pilgrimage out of the bodie to the Lord, not out of Cappadocia to Paleſtina: All this may be fitly applied againſt thoſe, which viſit Rome for the Iubile ſake: Rome is no more priuiledged then Ieruſalem, neither are they which liue there more holy, then were then the inhabitants of the other.

Elucidor.error.c.a.err.12. The rude Muſcouites are herein better aduiſed: they allow neither of indulgences, nor Iubiles, as Sacranus reporteth: and the reaſon is, as Faber writeth: Vt ne ſcintillam veteris & aboliti Iudaiſmi obſeruent, That they obſerue not any iot of aboliſhed Iudaiſme: whereof it is, that they will not ſuffer a Iew to remaine among them, though they would offer them millions.

Vid.Anton. 2. Antonius that ancient Egyptian Monke thus deliuereth his opinion of pilgrimages: Nulla nobis proficiſcendi neceſſitas imminet: in omni ſede terrarum conſtituta ſunt regna cœlorum: We haue no neceſſitie to trauell, in euery land the kingdome of heauen is appointed, as the Lord ſaith in the Goſpell, the kingdome of God is within you, &c. Then the celebration of the Iubile is no cauſe to draw people to Rome, if at home the kingdome of heauen be open.

Harm.p.616. Ibid.p.530. 3. Latter confeſſ. of Heluetia.c. We ſhould ſeeme to ſet vp Iudaiſme againe, if we ſhould multiplie ceremonies. Auſpurg.c.7. Many were deceitfull through a peruerſe emulation of the Leuiticall ceremonies. But the inſtitution of the Iubile is a plaine ſetting vp of Iudaiſme, and an emulating of their ceremonies.

Decret.Gregor lib.3. tit.34.c.7. Iohn 4.23. 4. Innocentius 3. one of their moſt learned Popes, thus aduiſeth a certaine Biſhop, who had made a vow to goe to Ieruſalem: Iam impletum eſt illud verbum Dei dicentis: Now is fulfilled that ſaying of God: The houre commeth and now is, when neither in this mountaine, nor at Ieruſalem they ſhall worſhip my father, but the true worſhipper ſhall worſhip the father in ſpirit: Whereupon he thus inferreth: Videri poteras, quod non minus in tua eccleſia, quam in orientali terra proficeres pijs orationibus: Thou mighteſt ſeeme to profit no leſſe by thy godly prayers in thine owne Church, then in the Eaſt countrey, &c. And by the ſame reaſon as well may a man ſerue God at home, as in going to ſee the Iubile at Rome. And concerning the inſtitution of the Iubile, their owne Maſſonius maketh couetouſneſſe the cauſe thereof, ſpeaking of the gold and riches, Quas pontifex populuſque Romanus illo Iubileo congeſſere, which the Biſhop (namely Boniface 8.) and the people of Rome gathered in that Iubile. And Binius ſaith of the ſame Pope, that hee was, vir ſupra modum ambitioſus: A man ambitious beyond meaſure? Is it not like to be a faire child, that is begotten of two ſuch monſtrous mothers, couetouſneſſe and ambition?

And thus much of the firſt controuerſie of the Romane Iubile, and the ſeuerall parts thereof.

THE SECOND CONTROVERSIE, OF INDVLGENCES AND IVBILE PARDONS.

THis controuerſie is deuided into eight ſeuerall parts. Firſt, of the name of Indulgence. Secondly, whether there be any Indulgences, and of the Spirituall treaſure of the Church. Thirdly, what Indulgence is. Fourthly, of the diuers kindes of Indulgences. Fifthly, of the fruite and vtilitie of Indulgences. Sixthly, to whom the power of granting Indulgences belongeth. Seuenthly, of the diſpoſition of them that muſt receiue Indulgences. Eightly, whether Indulgences do any way profit the dead.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE NAME OF Indulgence.

The Papiſts.

21.Error. Iſay 6.61. 1.Cor.7.6. BEllarmine taketh this word Indulgence to ſignifie remiſſionem pœnarum, quæ remanent luendæ poſt remiſſionem culparum: The remiſſion of the puniſhments, which remaine to be ſatisfied for, after the remiſſion of the faults, lib.1. de Indulg.c.1. And whereas hee produceth two ſignifications of this word: that firſt it betokeneth remiſſion. 1. Prædicare captiuis indulgentiam: To preach indulgence to the Captiues. Secondly, it ſignifieth facilitie, This I ſpeake by way of indulgence or conceſſion, &c. Of theſe two ſignifications, they make one, compounding them together: and ſo take Indulgence for a remiſſion of the puniſhment onely of fauour, Bellarm. ibid.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt the place alleaged out of Eſay is directly againſt them, for S.Luke interpreting that place, readeth for Indulgence, [illegible] remiſſion of ſins, not of the puniſhment only: ſo then Indulgence properly ſignifieth remiſſion of ſinnes.

Secondly, the place alleaged out of S.Paul is impertinent: for there Indulgence is taken for conceſſion: as Peter Lombard very well ſheweth that Indulgence is taken three waies, for remiſſion, permiſſion, conceſſion, lib.4.diſt.26.liter.d. and hee vnderſtandeth S.Paul to ſpeake here of conceſſion: but it is very improper to take Indulgence for conceſſion, licence or a grant, when wee ſpeake of ſinnes and the paine due vnto them, which both are pardoned, not by conceſſion, but by remiſſion.

Thirdly, the Fathers ſo vnderſtand Indulgence for the remiſſion of the ſinne it ſelfe, as Auguſtine: Securus ſum, quando me correxero, dat Deus Indulgentiam, &c. I am ſecure, if I doe amend my ſelfe, God will giue me Indulgence, Serm.16.in Matth. And againe, Vt ad peccatorum mereamur Indulgentiam peruenire, &c. That we may be meete to come or attaine to the Indulgence of our ſinnes: Serm. de tempor.210.

Fourthly, ſometime Indulgence is otherwiſe taken, but then it ſignifieth a conceſſion of reward, not a remiſſion of puniſhment, as Ambroſe taketh it: Hora vndecima intromiſſos in vineam totius diei operarijs diuina indulgentia exaquauit: The diuine Indulgence did make them, which were ſent into the vineyard at the eleuenth houre equall to them, which laboured all day.

Of the acception and vſe of this word indulgence.

Fifthly, the Ciuill law, which he wreſteth to the contrarie, ſo taketh this word Indulgence, for a whole remiſſion of puniſhment and fault committed againſt the law: the law maketh two kinds of Indulgences: there is Indulgentia generalis vel ſimplex, a generall or ſimple Indulgence; and indulgentia ſpecialis, a ſpeciall indulgence: the ſimple or generall indulgence did not remit all the puniſhment: as Cod.lib.9.tit,51.leg.2.Antonin. Non ideo quod indulgentia mea pœna metalli liberatus eſſet, etiam bonorum reſtitutionem impetrauit: Becauſe by my Indulgence hee is freed from the mettall mines, he hath not therefore obtained reſtitution to his goods. But the ſpeciall indulgence remitted both the penaltie and the infamie, ibid.leg.10.Dioclet. And leg.4. Alexander. Ex indulgentia reuerſus non tenetur creditoribus: He that is returned from exile by indulgence, is not bound to his creditors: And Leg.1.Antonin. This ſpeciall indulgence was in integrũ reſtitutio: a reſtitution to the whole: Vt ſcias quid ſit in integrum reſtituere: honoribus & ordini tuo & omnibus cæteris te reſtituo: That you may know, what it is to reſtore wholly: I reſtore thee to thy order, to thy honour, and all the reſt: this then is the ſentence of the law: Sententia ſeueritas cum cæteris damnis tranſigere videtur: The ſeueritie of the ſentence doth paſſe together with all other dammages and inconueniences, Cod.lib.2.tit.12.leg.4.Seuer. That is, where the penaltie of the ſentence was remitted, there all other inconueniences as the infamy, diſhonour, tranſgreſſion, offence, were releaſed, which were ſequels of the ſentence: ex quo pœna remiſſa, & ſequela pœnæ, quæ eſt infamia: The penalty being remitted, the ſequell thereof, which is ỹ infamy, is pardoned: ſo ſaith the law, Cod lib.2.tit.12.leg.3.in gloſſ.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER THERE BE any Indulgence in the Church.

THis part hath two queſtions. Firſt, of the ſpirituall treaſure of the Church. Secondly, of the power in diſtributing the ſame.

THE FIRST QVESTION, OF THE SPIRITVALL treaſure of the Church: which is diuided into foure propoſitions.

THE FIRST PROPOSITION, WHETHER GOOD workes be meritorious and ſatisfactorie.

The Papiſts.

THis propoſition is affirmed by Bellarmine, that there is a double price in good workes, namely of merit and ſatisfaction, the firſt procureth the reward, the ſecond redeemeth the puniſhment. 22.Error.

Firſt, good workes are ſatisfactorie. 1. Almes, Toby 4.10. Almes deliuer from death. Eccleſiaſticus 3.33. As water quencheth fire, ſo almes take away ſinnes. 2. Faſting is ſatisfactorie, as appeareth by the example of the Niniuites. 3. Prayer doth ſatisfie for ſinne, as Matth.6.12. We pray for forgiuenes of ſinnes: and by this petition ſatisfie for our veniall ſinnes.
1 Tob.4.10.
2 Eccleſ.3.33
3 Matth.6.12

Secondly, the ſame good workes likewiſe are meritorious. 1. Almes, Matth.25.34. Inherit the kingdome prepared for you, for when I was hungrie, ye gaue me meate. 2. Faſting doth merit, Matth.6. verſ.8. Your father, which ſeeth in ſecret will reward you openly. 3. So likewiſe God is ſaid, verſ.6. To reward prayer openly.
3 Math.6.6.

The Proteſtants.

Confutat. FIrſt, the places alleaged proue no ſatisfaction in our workes. 1. You muſt bring better Scripture then Toby or Eccleſiaſticus (which are not Canonicall) to confirme a poynt 1 of faith: and yet wee denie not but almes may be ſaid to deliuer, not as cauſes of our deliuerance, Pſal.41.1. but as liuely ſignes of our faith, whereby wee are deliuered, as, Bleſſed is he that iudgeth wiſely of the poore, the Lord ſhall deliuer him: a man is firſt made bleſſed by the not imputation of his ſinnes by Pſal.32.1. faith. This bleſſednes is teſtified by his charitie, and rewarded of God in mercie by deliuerance.

2 Ionas 3.10. 2 The Niniuites faſting ſatisfied not for their ſinne, but only teſtified their repentance, God ſaw their workes, that they turned from their euill waies: which repentance God accepted in mercie: otherwiſe how could the Niniuites being idolaters and ignorant of God, merit or ſatisfie.

3 3. The Lords prayer ouerthroweth ſatisfaction: for we conclude, for thine is the glorie: we take not the glorie to our ſelues, but aſcribe all to God: forgiuenes of the debt is of mercie; where then there is remiſſion of grace, there can be no ſatisfaction of worthineſſe.

Secondly, prayer, almes, faſting, are rewarded we grant, but not for the worthineſſe of the worke, but thorough the gracious acceptance of God. Firſt, the kingdome is prepared from the foundations of the world, Matth. 25.34. How then can it be merited? Secondly, When wee haue done all that we are commanded, we muſt ſay we are vnprofitable ſeruants, Luke 17.10. Thirdly, Saint Ambroſe ſaith, Nulla De vocat.gent lib.1.cap.5. poſſe tam præclara opera exiſtere, quibus hoc, quod gratis tribuitur, per retributionis iudicium retribuatur: There can be no ſuch excellent workes, to the which, that which is freely giuen, is rendred by the right of retribution, &c. But of this queſtion of the merit and ſatisfaction of good workes, wee haue treated before in the controuerſie of good workes, that it were needleſſe and ſuperfluous now to handle the ſame matter againe, whither I referre the Reader.

THE SECOND PROPOSITION, WHETHER GOOD workes, as they are ſatisfactorie, may be applied vnto others.

The Papiſts.

23.Error. BEllarmine alleageth Scripture to proue that good workes as they are meritorious, cannot bee communicated to others, which wee willingly grant, for a man cannot merit for himſelfe, much leſſe for others: but to confirme this propoſition, that one may ſatisfie for another, he alleageth no Scripture at all, lib. 1. de Indulgen. c. 2. propoſ. 2.

The Proteſtants.

THe contrarie is moſt euident out of Scripture, that all which a man can doe is little enough, yea and too little for himſelfe, much leſſe can he ſatisfie for another.

Matth.25.9. Matth. 25.9. The wiſe Virgins make this anſwere to the fooliſh, We feare there will not be enough for vs and you: whereupon Auguſtine thus writeth: Vnuſquiſque pro ſe rationem reddet, nec alieno teſtimonio quicquam adiuuatur apud Deum, cui ſecreta cordis apparent, & vix ſibi quiſque ſufficit, cui teſtimonium perhibeat conſcientia ſua: Euery man ſhall giue account for himſelfe: neither is a man helped by anothers teſtimonie before God, to whom the ſecrets of the heart are euident: euery man ſcarce ſufficeth for himſelfe, to whom his owne conſcience doth beare witneſſe: ſerm. 22. in Matth.

One cannot ſatisfie for an other. But if the other words, that follow, be obiected: Goe to them rather that ſell, and buy for your ſelues, Matth. 25.9. Origen ſhall make anſwere, who vnderſtandeth by thoſe that ſell, the Doctors and Teachers of the Church: Non omnium habentium oleum, eſt etiam dare ex eo aliis, &c. It is not the part of all that haue oyle to giue to others, but it belongeth only to them, which are appointed to ſell it: Congregauit aliquis doctrinam, quæ ei ſufficit ad bene viuendum, non tamen, vt doctor fieri poſſit: One hath gathered doctrine, which may be ſufficient for himſelfe to liue well, but not to be a Doctor or teacher to others: Tract. 32. in Matth.

THE THIRD PROPOSITION, OF THE SPIrituall treaſure of the Church.

The Papiſts.

1 Acts 20.28. IT is affirmed that there is an infinite treaſure of the ſatisfactions purchaſed by the paſſion of Chriſt extant in the Church, as it is written, which he hath purchaſed with his owne blood. Secondly, where-
2 1.Ioh.5.2. 24.Error. as Chriſt died for all, as Saint Iohn ſaith, He is the reconciliation for the ſinnes of the whole world: and yet the price of Chriſts blood hath not been applied to all, the moſt part of men being ſubiect to condemnation: there remaineth then a great deale of the price of Chriſts death, yet to be applied:
3 Bellarm. cap. 2. prop. 3.

The Proteſtants.

1 FIrſt, wee acknowledge that the price or vertue of Chriſts blood is infinite, and remaineth in his Church, as a rich treaſure, that can neuer be ſpent; as a fountaine, that can neuer bee dried vp; as precious balme, that healeth alwaies effectually: and therefore the Apoſtle calleth it, the riches of his Epheſ.1.18. glorious inheritance; and the exceeding greatnes of his power toward vs, which beleeue. And as one ſaith: Effuſio iuſti ſanguinis Chriſti tam diues fuit ad precium, vt ſi vniuerſitas captiuorum in redemptorem ſuum crederet, nullum diaboli vincula retinerent: The effuſion of Chriſts righteous blood is ſo rich in price, that if all the captiues did beleeue in their Redeemer, the diuels bands could hold none: ex epiſt. Gaij.

Secondly,

2 Secondly, but it is vntrue that Chriſt died vniuerſally for the whole world, in his ſenſe, that is, for all men whatſoeuer: for Chriſt vouchſafeth not to pray for the world: I pray not for the world, but for thoſe which thou haſt giuen me: much leſſe then died he for the world. The Apoſtle then by the world vnderſtandeth the whole companie of the people of God, for whom Chriſt died: As S. Ambroſe well noteth: Habet populus dei plenitudinem ſuam, &c. & in electis, &c. ſpecialis quadam cenſetur vniuerſitas, vt de toto mundo totus mundus liberatus, &c. The people of God then hath a certaine fulnes: and there is a ſpeciall kinde of vniuerſalitie in the elect, ſo that the whole world ſeemeth to be deliuered out of the whole world: lib.1. de vocat. Gent. c.3.

Whether Chriſt died for all in generall. Iohn 17.9.

3 Thirdly, it is alſo vntrue that any, for whom Chriſt died, are ſubiect to condemnation, or that the price of his blood can be applied to any, that are not ordained vnto life: Chriſt prayeth thus, Ioh. 17. 24. I will that they whom thou haſt giuen me, be with me where I am: Chriſt prayeth, that all, which are giuen him, for whom he died, ſhould come to euerlaſting glorie: but Chriſts prayer was alwaies effectuall: as he himſelfe ſaith, Ioh. 11. 42. Thou heareſt me alwaies. Saint Ambroſe alſo ſaith: Chriſtus mortem vincens omnibus, qui ſunt ex eius corpore, vitam acquiſiuit: Chriſt ouercomming death, hath purchaſed or obtained life to all, that are of his bodie, in 1. Cor. 15. All then, that are of his bodie, haue ſurely life, and cannot periſh, nor be condemned.

To whom Chriſts death is applied.

THE FOVRTH PROPOSITION, WHETHER THE paſſions and ſatisfactions of the Saints belong to this treaſure of the Church.

The Papiſts.

TO this treaſure of the Church belong the paſſions of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, and of all other Saints, who ſuffered more then their ſinnes required, Bellarm. lib.1. de indulgent. cap.2. propoſ.4. And in the Bull of Clement.6. it thus ſtandeth: Ad cuius theſauri cumulum beata dei genitricis, & omnium iuſtorum merita adminiculum praſtare noſcuntur: To the heape of which treaſure doe adde helpe, the merits of the mother of our Lord and of all Saints: Extrau. commun. lib.5. tit.9. c.2. 35. Error.

1 Argum. 1. Mary had neither actuall nor originall ſinne to ſuffer for, and therefore her ſufferings are communicable to others.

2 2. Iohn alſo was of a moſt innocent life, and was ſubiect ſcarce to the leaſt ſinnes, and therefore he had no need of his faſting, auſtere life, impriſonment, death, to ſatisfie for himſelfe.

3 3. Likewiſe the Prophets ſufferings were beyond their ſinnes: as Iob complaineth, I would that my ſinnes, whereby I haue deſerued wrath, and the calamitie which I ſuffer, were laid in a balance; as the ſand of the ſea this would appeare more heauie. Iob.6.1.

4 4. Saint Pauls ſufferings were many and great: as he doth reckon them vp, 2. Cor. 11. 26. yet hee had no need of them himſelfe: for he ſaith, I know nothing by my ſelfe. 1. Cor. 4. 4.

5 5. The martyrdome of the Saints is able to redeeme great offences: as Chriſt ſaith, Whoſoeuer confeſſeth me before men, him will I confeſſe before my father in heauen: But many of the Martyrs had ſmall offences at the time of their martyrdome, and therefore there remaineth abundance of ſatisfaction for others: Bellarm, lib.1. de indulg. c.2. prop.4. Matth. 10. 32.

1 Anſw. Firſt, 1. It is blaſphemie to ſay, that any man doth or hath ſuffered more, then his ſinnes require: for this were to accuſe God of iniuſtice, to lay vpon any man that which he hath not deſerued. But the Prophet ſaith otherwiſe, Lord if thou ſtreightly markeſt iniquities, who ſhall abide it? God laieth vpon no man ſo much as hee hath deſerued: much leſſe doth any ſuffer more. Pſal. 130. 3. 2. As for the Virgin Mary, ſhe acknowledgeth Chriſt her Sauiour: My ſpirit reioyceth in God my Sauiour, and ſo conſequently confeſſeth her ſelfe a ſinner: Luke 1. 47. for he is therefore called Ieſus, a Sauiour, becauſe hee ſhall ſaue the people from their ſinnes. Matth. 1. 21. 3. Saint Ambroſe accordingly ſaith: Non mirum ſi dominus redempturus mundum diuinam operationem ſuam inchoauit à matre, vt per quam ſalus omnibus parabatur, eadem prima fructum ſalutis hauriret ex pignore: No marueile, if the Lord being to redeeme the world, did begin his diuine worke in his mother, that ſhe, through whom ſaluation was in preparing for all, ſhould firſt receiue the benefit of ſaluation from her pledge or birth, lib.2. in 1. Luc. If ſhe receiued the benefit of ſaluation, what elſe was ſhe ſaued from, then her ſinnes?

The Virgin Mary not free from ſinne.

2 Secondly, concerning Iohn Baptiſt, 1. wee confeſſe hee was an holie man, and endued with great grace, yet not without his ſinnes and corruptions: and therefore confeſſeth, that hee had neede to be baptized of Chriſt, which was to remiſſion of ſinnes. Matth. 3. 14. 2. His afflictions were not laid vpon him as puniſhments for ſinne, but as Gods louing corrections to exerciſe his faith, and prepare him for his kingdome: As the Prophet Dauid ſaith, Before I was afflicted I went aſtray. Pſal. 119. 67. Afflictions then to the righteous are not inflictions for their ſinne, but admonitions to encreaſe their vertue. 3. Of Iohn and of all other it is truly ſaid, as Hierome reciteth the Apoſtles words: Deus concluſit omnes ſub peccato, &c. God hath ſhut all vnder vnbeleefe, to haue mercie of all, abſque hoc qui peccatum non fecit: he onely excepted, that did no ſinne.

3 Thirdly, 1. Iob doth confeſſe himſelfe a great ſinner, that he could not anſwere God one thing of a thouſand, Iob 9. 3. and hee confeſſeth with Dauid, that God had afflicted him iuſtly, Pſal. 119. 75. for thus he ſaith, Iob. 13. 26. Thou makeſt me to poſſeſſe the iniquities of my youth.

chap. 13. 26.
Pſal. 119. 75.

2. Con-

Iobs ſuffrings whether greater thẽ his ſins.

2. Concerning that place, Iob. 6.2.3. the Latine text doth tranſlate moſt corruptly. 1. There is no mention at all made of ſinnes, but the Hebrue word there vſed, ſignifieth wrath and indignation, which the 70. well expreſſe (ὀργὴ). 2. Where the Latine readeth, hæc grauior eſſet, this would bee heauier, as though it were referred onely to his calamitie waighed againſt ſinne, the Septuagint well expreſſe the ſenſe of the Hebrue (though the ſingular number bee vſed) βαρύτερα, grauiora ſunt, are heauier, in the plurall. 3. The Latine ſaith, quaſi arena, as the ſand: ſo is not the Hebrue, מחול mecol; which ſignifieth præ arena, in reſpect of the ſand, or then the ſand: as the Septuagint readeth: ſo that this is the meaning, if his griefe and vexation were put into a balance, and weighed with the ſand, they would be found heauier then it: for who can endure this ſenſe, that his afflictions in reſpect of his ſinne were as a light thing to the ſand?

1. Tim. 1.15.
Paul not able to iuſtifie himſelf, much leſſe others.
1. Cor. 4.3.
Philip. 3.9.

Fourthly, 1. Saint Paul doth frankly confeſſe of himſelfe, Chriſt came into the world to ſaue ſinners, of whom I am chiefe: If hee acknowledge himſelfe a ſinner, what reaſon hath any man to extenuate it. 2. He knew nothing by himſelfe, that is, in reſpect of the faithfull diſcharging of his calling, whereof he ſpake before: his conſcience therein did not accuſe him, yet he ſaith, hee was not thereby iuſtified. Much leſſe then is Saint Paul able to iuſtifie another. 3. He ſaith, That I may be found in him not hauing mine owne righteouſneſſe. If S. Paul diſclaimeth his owne righteouſneſſe, how can it be a ſatisfaction for vs?

1. Cor. 1.13.

Fifthly, 1. The martyrdome of the Saints was profitable to themſelues, God crowning their patience with immortalitie, through Chriſt: but they are not auaileable to vs, but only for example: ſo S. Paul ſaith, was Paul crucified for you? Saint Ambroſe ſaith well: Pendebat in cruce filius, &c. While her ſonne hanged vpon the croſſe, Mary offered her ſelfe to the perſecutors, Si forte ſua morte publico muneri aliquid adderetur, ſed Chriſti paſſio adiutore non eguit: If ſo ſhe by her death might adde any thing to the publike benefit; but Chriſts paſſion needed no helper: Inſtitut. virg. c. 5. If the ſufferings of Mary could adde nothing to Chriſts paſſion, much leſſe the afflictions of others.

The Proteſtants.

THat the ſufferings of the Saints muſt be added to Chriſts ſatisfactions to make vp the treaſure of the Church: wee iudge it a moſt horrible blaſphemie, which hath diſliked ſome of the Papiſts themſelues: as Durand. in 4. diſt. 20. qu. 3. whoſe arguments I will propound.

1
The ſaints ſatisfactions not to be ioyned with Chriſts.
2
Rom. 8.18.

Argum. 1. The ſatisfaction of Chriſt is of infinite vertue, and therefore there is no need, that the ſatisfactions of the Saints ſhould be ioyned vnto them.

2. The Saints are alreadie abundantly rewarded, and farre aboue their deſert, as the Apoſtle ſaith, I count that the afflictions of this preſent time are not worthy of the glorie, which ſhall be reuealed: wherefore the Saints ſufferings being ſo fully alreadie recompenſed, cannot helpe toward the expiation of the ſinnes of others.

Math. 25.9.

3. The Saints neither did, nor ſuffered any thing, which they were not bound in dutie to doe and ſuffer: as appeareth, We are vnprofitable ſeruants, we did that which was our dutie to doe: and Mat. 25.9. the wiſe virgins ſay, Leſt there will not be enough for you and vs: Ergo, the Saints haue nothing to communicate to others.

1. Cor. 1.30.

4. If by the Saints ſufferings our ſinnes could be expiated or redeemed, then might they be counted our redeemers; but the Scripture onely acknowledgeth Chriſt our redeemer, Chriſt is made our righteouſneſſe, ſanctification, redemption.

1

Anſw. 1. The Saints paſſions are ioyned vnto Chriſts ſufferings, not becauſe theſe are not ſufficient, but for that it is glorious vnto Chriſt, that the Saints ſufferings ſhould not be in vaine, ſeeing they receiue all their efficacie from Chriſt.

2

2. The Saints ſufferings as they are meritorious, are alreadie abundantly rewarded; but as they are ſatisfactorie, they ſhould be in vaine, vnleſſe they were imployed, in the expiation of other mens ſinnes, ſeeing the Saints needed not ſo great labours and ſufferings for themſelues.

3

3. Euen the obedience of the law, to the which the Saints are bound, is meritorious and ſatisfactorie: the virgins ſpeake not of ſatisfaction, but of the oyle of grace and charitie, which euery one keepeth to himſelfe, and cannot powre forth vpon another.

1. Cor. 9.22.

4. Properly and ſimply Chriſt is our redeemer, becauſe he redeemeth vs from our captiuitie, but as a redeemer is largely taken for one that redeemeth from a ſmall debt, ſo the Saints may be ſaid to be our redeemers; if Nabuchadnezzer be aduiſed by Daniel to redeeme his ſinnes by righteouſnes, much more the Saints may be ſaid to redeeme our ſinnes by their paſſions: and Saint Paul ſaith, I am made all things to all men, to ſaue ſome: why might he not be as well ſaid to redeeme them, as to ſaue them? ſeeing the name of Sauiour is as proper to Chriſt, as the name of Redeemer: Bellarm. lib. 1. de Indulgent. c. 4.

1
Iſay 48.11.

Contra. 1. The paſſions of the Saints are not in vaine, though they be not ioyned to Chriſts, as ſatisfactorie: as S. Paul ſheweth, Foraſmuch as ye know, that your labour is not in vaine in the Lord: that is, in reſpect of the reſurrection of the iuſt, when all their labours and trauailes ſhall be recompenſed. 2. It is inglorious for Chriſt to haue any ioyned vnto him as a helper: as the Prophet ſheweth, I looked, and there was none to helpe, therefore mine owne arme helped me. 3. Though the Saints receiue all their power and grace from Chriſt, yet they receiue no ſuch power, whereby to ſatisfie for others: for the Lord by the Prophet ſaith, I will not giue my glorie to another.

2 1. If the Saints ſufferings are rewarded, as they are meritorious; much more as they are ſatisfactorie: for it is more to deſerue a reward, then to ſatisfie for a puniſhment: but the truth is, that the ſufferings of the Saints, doe neither merit nor yet ſatisfie the wrath of God, but yet their labours through Chriſt are abundantly recompenſed: Iacob confeſſeth, he was not worthie of the leaſt of Gods (temporall) mercies; how much leſſe are the Saints worthie of eternall. Genes.32.10. 2. Their labours are not in vaine, though thereby they neither ſatisfie for themſelues nor others: for thereby their faith is exerciſed, and they learne obedience: It is good for me, that I haue been afflicted, that I may learne thy ſtatutes. Psal.119.71. 3. And whereas he ſaith the Saints neede not ſo many ſufferings for themſelues, it is blaſphemie: for Iob for all his vnſpeakable affliction confeſſeth, he did not anſwere God one thing of a thouſand: Iob.9.3. Quis amplius grunniet dicens, nimium laboramus, nimium ieiunamus, nimium vigilamus, cum nec milleſima, imo nec minimæ parti debitorum ſuorum valeat reſpondere: Who dare complaine from henceforth, and ſay, wee labour too much, faſt too much, watch too much, when he cannot anſwere the thouſandth, nay not the leaſt part of his debt: ſer. de quadrupl. debit. Bernard.

3 First, it is contrarie to reaſon and Scripture, that a man ſhould merit by doing his dutie: our Sauiour ſaith, Doth he thanke that ſeruant, becauſe he did that, which was commanded him? I trow not; Luke 17.9. if it be not thanke worthie, how is it meritorious or ſatisfactorie? Secondly, if the oyle of charitie cannot be communicated, then not the price of good workes, which proceed from charitie, being the fruits thereof: for no workes are good without charitie, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, 1.Cor.13.3. then cannot a man lend the price of his workes, but he muſt alſo lend his charitie, which maketh them precious. Thirdly, the virgins ſpeake of their iuſtice or righteouſneſſe, which they hold to be little enough for thẽſelues: and ſo Bernard expoundeth, vpon theſe words, Mat.25.8. Giue vs of your oyle: Matth.25.8. Stulta petitio; vix iuſtus ſaluabitur, vix ſanctis iuſticia ſua oleum ſufficit ad ſalutem, quanto minus & ſibi & proximis: A fooliſh petition, the righteous ſhall ſcarce be ſaued, the oyle of their owne righteouſneſſe hardly ſufficeth the Saints to ſaluation, how much leſſe themſelues and their neighbours; Noe, Daniel, Iob, ſhall not deliuer a ſonne or daughter, but like as the ſoule, that ſinneth, ſhall die. Ezech.14.18. Sic anima quæ iuſtitiam fecerit, ſola ſaluabitur: So that ſoule that doth righteouſneſſe, only ſhall be ſaued: Bernard. ſerm. de virgin. Ezech.18.20.

4 First, Chriſt hath left neither great nor ſmall debt vnanſwered or vnpaied for, The blood of Ieſus cleanſeth vs from all ſinne: 1.Ioh.1 7. and therefore the Saints cannot be ſaid to redeeme vs, no not from the leaſt debt. Secondly, you tranſlate corruptly, Daniel biddeth him, not redeeme, but breake off his ſinnes by righteouſneſſe: And ſo man when hee beginneth to doe well, leaueth to doe euill, and by well doing breaketh off, or ſtoppeth the courſe of the ſinne. Thirdly, Paul ſaueth, not as Chriſt ſaueth: he as the author, Paul as the miniſter of reconciliation: 1.Cor.5.18. but there can bee no redemption without paying of a ranſome: Ye are bought for a price: 1.Cor.6.20. This price becauſe no man could pay but Chriſt, no man can be ſaid to redeeme but Chriſt, as the Apoſtle ſaith: Chriſt is made vnto vs our righteouſneſſe, ſanctification, redemption: 1.Cor.1.30. as no man elſe can be ſaid to be our righteouſneſſe, ſanctification, ſo neither our redemption.

Peter Lombard alſo ſheweth, how Chriſt propriè dicitur redemptor: is properly called the redeemer, in reſpect of the Father and Sonne, who are called alſo Redeemers, but not ſo properly, lib.3. distinct.19. liter.e. Whereby he inſinuateth, that no creature either properly, or improperly can be called a Redeemer.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE POWER OF diſtributing the ſpirituall treaſure and Indulgence of the Church.

THE FIRST PROPOSITION, WHETHER THE ſatisfactions of the Saints may be communicated to others.

The Papiſts.

THat the ſufferings and ſatisfactions of the Saints may be applied to others, thus they labour to proue it: 26.Error.

1 First, by that article of the Creede, I beleeue the communion of Saints: therefore their ſatisfactions are communicable. 1.Cor.12.26.

2 Secondly, Saint Paul ſaith, I will moſt gladly beſtow and be beſtowed for your ſoules.

Thirdly, Now reioyce I in my ſufferings for you, and fulfill the reſt of the afflictions of Chriſt in my fleſh Coloſſ.1.24. 3 for his bodie ſake, which is the Church: Saint Paul did communicate his ſufferings and ſatisfactions to the faithfull: Bellarm. lib.1. de Indulg. c.3. propoſ.1. Rhemiſt. annot. in hunc locum.

The Proteſtants.

Confutat. FIrſt, 1. the argument followeth not, there is a communion of Saints: Ergo, ſatisfactions are communicable: the communion is in things communicable, but ſatisfactions they cannot communicate, becauſe they haue them not. 2. If they had ſatisfactions and merits, yet they could no more applie them vnto others, then they doe their faith, which is proper to euery man; The iuſt ſhall liue by faith. Rom.1.17. 3. This communion conſiſteth in the mutuall helpe and aſſiſtance of one another, as by prayer, Without ceaſing I make mention of you: By mutuall comfort, Comfort one another: By exhortation, Exhort one another: By teaching, I thinke it meete to ſtirre you vp by putting you in remembrance. 4. So Origen ſaith: Cæteri precibus peccata, hic ſolus poteſtate dimiſit: Others (namely the Apoſtles, of whom hee ſpeaketh) remit ſinnes by their prayers, Chriſt by his power, Hom.24.in Numer. Chriſt only then hath power to ſatisfie.

Rom.1.9. 1.Theſſ.4.18. 1.Theſſ.5.11. 2.Pet.1.13.

Philip.2.17.

Secondly, how Saint Paul would be beſtowed, he ſheweth Philip.2.17. he would be offered vp for the ſeruice, λειτουργίᾳ of their faith: His death then ſerued not for ſatisfaction, but for confirmation of their faith. As Saint Ambroſe ſaith: Chriſti paſſio nobis ſufficit ad ſalutem; Petri, Pauli contulit ad exemplum: Chriſts paſſion ſufficeth to ſaluation: Peter and Pauls paſſion ſerue for example and confirmation, ſerm.66.

The ſufferings of the Saints ſerue for confirmation of others, not for ſatisfaction.

Thirdly, 1. Saint Paul expoundeth himſelfe in the next verſe, how he ſuffereth for the Churches ſake, Coloſſ.1.25. Whereof I am a miniſter according to the diſpenſation of God, which is giuen me to you ward, to fulfill the word of God. He did not then ſatisfie for others by his ſufferings, but thereby miniſter to their faith: that by his patience and example of ſuffering, the word of God might be fulfilled, that is, generally receiued, and freely confeſſed of the brethren: as he himſelfe againe ſaith, Philip.1.13. My bands in Chriſt are famous throughout all the iudgement hall, and in all other places; inſomuch that many of the brethren in the Lord are boldened through my bands, and dare more frankly ſpeake the word.

2. Saint Auguſtine thus interpreth: Non dixit preſſurarum mearum, ſed Chriſti, quia membrum erat Chriſti, & in perſecutionibus ſuis, quales Chriſtum in toto ſuo corpore pati oportebat, etiam ipſe preſſuras eius pro ſua portione adimplebat: He ſaith not my afflictions, but Chriſts, becauſe he was a member of Chriſt, and in his perſecutions, which Chriſt was to ſuffer in his whole body, he alſo fulfilled his afflictions for his part: Tract. in Ioann.108. Saint Paul then did but for his part ſuffer as a member of Chriſt, as all other his members muſt for their parts,

3. So Auguſtine againe ſaith elſewhere, writing vpon this text: Si in membris Chriſti es, quicquid pateris ab eis, qui non ſunt in membris Chriſti, deerat paſſionibus Chriſti: ideo additur, quæ deerant, menſuram implens, non ſuperfundens: tantum ergo pateris, quantum inferendum erat vniuerſæ paſſioni Chriſti, qui paſſus eſt in capite, & patitur in membris, &c. If thou art a member of Chriſt, whatſoeuer thou ſuffereſt of thoſe that are not his members, was wanting to the ſufferings of Chriſt: therefore it is added (which are wanting) filling the meaſure, not ouerflowing: therefore thou ſuffereſt ſo much, as was to be laid vpon the whole paſſion of Chriſt; who then ſuffered in the head, and now in the members, in Pſal.60. Saint Paul then did ſuffer for his part, as all other members muſt for their parts: and the meaſure of affliction is but filled vp, it ouerfloweth not by their ſufferings: Ergo, no mans ſufferings doe abound or ouerflow to ſatisfie for another.

THE SECOND PROPOSITION, WHETHER THE Paſtors of the Church haue power to diſpenſe the ſatisfactions and ſuffrings of the Saints, and to grant Indulgences.

The Papiſts.

26.Error.

THat this power is committed to the Paſtors of the Church, to diſpenſe this ſpirituall treaſure, and thereby to abſolue from all ſinnes, and the puniſhment of ſinnes, to diſpenſe with oaths, vowes, lawes, if there be reaſonable cauſe: thus they would proue it.

Ioh.20.23. 1 Ioh.21.15. 2 Mat.18.18. 3

First, Chriſt ſaith to his Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, whoſe ſinnes ye remit, they are remitted; and to Peter, Feede my ſheepe, Ioh.21.15. Here the ſupreme throne of Eccleſiaſticall power is giuen to Peter. Likewiſe, Whatſoeuer ye binde in earth, ſhall be bound in heauen.

2.Cor.2.10.

Secondly, Saint Paul executeth this power, To whom ye forgiue any thing, I forgiue alſo: for verely if I forgaue any thing, to whom I forgaue it, for your ſakes forgaue I it in the ſight of Chriſt. Here Saint Paul forgiueth vnto the inceſtuous perſon, that, which remained of his penance.

This hath been the continuall practiſe of the Church to remit the puniſhment to offenders: and to this purpoſe Tertullian and Cyprian are alleaged, with diuers Councels, and conſtitutions of the Biſhops of Rome: Bellarm. lib.1. de indulg. c.3 prop.2.

The Proteſtants.

The paſtors of the Church haue no power to diſpenſe the ſufferings of the Saints to others:

Confutat. FIrſt, 1. our Sauiour ſpeaketh of remiſſion of ſinnes, what is this to their indulgences, which ſerue to releaſe the puniſhment onely, as they ſay? and the Apoſtles did remit ſinnes not by their owne power, but as miniſters and diſpenſers in Chriſts name: Saint Peter denieth, that by his owne power hee had made the lame man goe: much leſſe by his owne power could hee heale the ſoule.

Acts 3.12.

Acts 20.28. 1.Pet.5.3.

2. Firſt, feeding the flocke, is not diſpenſing with them, or exerciſing iudiciall power ouer them, but preaching the word: ſo doth Saint Paul expound it, Act.20.28. and Saint Peter, 1.Pet.5.3. Feede the flocke of God: but the Pope vſeth not to preach, therefore he feedeth not. Againe, this feeding is not proper only to Peter, but common to all other Paſtors, as he himſelfe ſheweth writing to his fellow paſtors.

3. Firſt, our Sauiour ſaying, Whatſoeuer you binde, ſpeaketh of binding and looſing of ſinnes, and not the puniſhment only: as this place is expounded by that, Ioh.20.23. Whoſe ſinnes yee retaine. Againe, he ſpeaketh to all the Apoſtles: wherefore they all and their ſucceſſors, and not Peter onely haue this power. Further, this power muſt be executed in Chriſts name, verſ.20. Indulgences then in the name of Saints haue no place here.

Secondly, 1. Saint Paul did not enioyne the inceſtuous perſon penance to ſatisfie God for his ſin, but he was deliuered to Satan, that his ſpirit might be ſaued, &c. that he might be brought to effectuall ſorrow for his offence: which was accordingly effected. 2. Another end of his ſeparation was for the example of others, and that the Church might be ſatisfied, whom he had offended: and therefore the Apoſtle writeth to the whole Church, that they would forgiue him, and hold themſelues ſatisfied with his ſufficient ſorrow. 3. The Apoſtle then remitteth not any puniſhment to the young man due vnto Gods iuſtice, but releaſeth him of the cenſure of excommunication, after he did ſee him ſufficiently to haue ſorrowed. And this power we denie not but the Church hath, to reconcile thoſe againe to the congregation, and to remit the cenſure of the Church, when the partie hath teſtified his effectuall ſorrow, and ſatisfied the congregation. Thus Auguſtine ſaith: Recte conſtituuntur ab his qui eccleſiæ præſunt tempora pœnitentiæ, vt ſatisfiat etiam eccleſiæ: Certaine times of penance are appointed by the gouernours of the Church, that the Church may be ſatisfied, diſt.1. de pœnitent.c.84. Satisfaction then is made not to God, but to the Church, and the releaſing thereof, as a remitting not of the puniſhment of ſinne before God, but of the cenſure impoſed by the Church. 1.Cor.5.5. 2.Cor.2.7.

Thirdly, after this manner we denie not but the Church vſed in Tertullian and Cyprians time to reconcile offenders to the peace of the Church, and many times at the inſtance and requeſt of Martyrs, to remit vnto them ſome part of Eccleſiaſticall cenſure: but this maketh nothing for the applying or communicating of other mens ſatisfactions. Auguſtine ſaith, as he is cited, diſt.1. de pœnitent.c.84. In actione pœnitentiæ vbi tale crimen commiſſum eſt, vt qui commiſit à Chriſti corpore ſeparetur, non tam conſideranda eſt menſura temporis, quam doloris: In the action of penance, where ſuch a ſinne is committed, that hee which committed it, muſt bee ſeparated from the body of Chriſt, the meaſure of time muſt not be ſo much conſidered, as of griefe, &c. So then the ancient manner of indulgence was this, when the Church ſeeing the vnfained ſorrow of the penitent perſons, in Chriſtian compaſſion, leſt they ſhould be ſwallowed vp of two much griefe, as the Apoſtle ſaith, did mitigate the rigor of the ſentence of the Church, and releaſe them of their penance. This diſcreete and Chriſtian lenitie ought ſtill to be retained in the Church, as Ambroſe well ſaith: Quemadmodum ſe tibi curandum præberet, qui ſe contemptui, non compaſſioni medico ſuo putet futurum: non ſunt pro Chriſti diſcipulis habendi, qui cum ipſi quærunt domini miſericordiam, alijs eam denegant: How ſhould a man commit himſelfe to be cured, when he ſeeth contempt rather then compaſſion to be in the Phyſition? they are not to be counted for the diſciples of Chriſt, that ſeeking mercie themſelues, deny it vnto others: de pœnitent.lib.1.1. 2.Cor.2.7.

THE THIRD PROPOSITION, OF THE ANTIquitie and originall of Iubile pardons and Indulgences.

The Papiſts.

IT is affirmed by them, that whereas the beginning, authors, time, and place of other hereſies may be aſſigned, yet it cannot be ſhewed when Indulgences and Pardons were brought in: and therefore it is moſt like, that they tooke beginning from the Apoſtles time, Bellarm.lib.1.de Indulg.c.3. 27.Error.

The Proteſtants.

Confut. FIrſt, the propoſition is not true, that all hereſies may be aſſigned to their ſeuerall authors: as Bernard thus witneſſeth of the Heretikes called Apoſtolici: Quære ab illis ſectæ authorem neminem dabunt: Aske of them the author of their ſect, they can ſhew none, &c. the Manichees had Manes, the Sabellians Sabellius, the Arrians Arrius, beginners of their ſect, &c. but theſe can ſhew none: Cantic.ſer.66.

Secondly, it followeth not, the author of generall and plenarie Indulgences, grounded vpon the ouerflowing ſatisfactions of the Church cannot bee produced: Ergo, they came from Chriſt and his Apoſtles. Bernard ſheweth that this is no good conſequent: ſpeaking of the foreſaid heretikes, Apoſtolici, and in the ſame place: Non eſt ab homine illorum hæreſis, abſit tamen vt per reuelationem Ieſu Chriſti, ſed magis per immiſſionem & fraudem dæmoniorum: Their hereſie is not from man, yet God forbid it ſhould be by reuelation of Ieſus Chriſt, but rather by the decit and illuſion of the diuell.

Thirdly, we can produce and demonſtrate the author of their Iubile pardons, which was Boniface the 8. anno 1300. the firſt inſtitutor of the popiſh Iubile: We denie not, but that before this time in the declining ages of the Church, Indulgences were abuſed, and that anno 1170. or thereabout, exception was taken againſt them by the Waldenſes: but at the time aforeſaid, anno 1300. when Antichriſt came to his height, the moſt blaſphemous Indulgences, and Iubile pardons came in together with the Iubile, which then was inſtituted by Boniface 8. as Polydor Virgil ſaith of him: Boniface the 8. primus omnium Iubileum retulit: firſt of all brought in againe the Iubile: and Maſſonius ſaith, plenam præſtitit debitorum omnium liberationem, &c. he gaue full deliuerance of all debts to thoſe which viſited the Apoſtles houſes, &c. The author then, by the teſtimonie of their owne writers, of their Iubilees and Iubile-pardons may be aſſigned. Lib.Inuent.8. cap.1. In vit.Bonif.8.

THE FOVRTH PROPOSITION.

The Papiſts.

28.Error. 1 BEllarmine here telleth vs, that the Prelates of the Church may diſpenſe Chriſts ſufferings both by the Sacraments, and by their Indulgences; yet the ſatisfactions and ſufferings of the Saints can- 29.Error. 2 not be applied, but by Indulgences: The reaſon is, becauſe their ſatisfactions ſerue onely for the re- 30.Error. 3 leaſe of the puniſhment, not for the remitting of the ſinne: but in the Sacraments, the puniſhment is not remitted without the ſinne, Bellarmin. lib. 1. c. 3. propoſ. 3.

The Proteſtants.

Confut. 1 FIrſt, it is vntrue that the Sacraments doe giue and applie the grace of remiſſion by Chriſts Rom.4.11. ſufferings: they are ſeales of the righteouſnes of faith. It is the propertie onely of faith to apprehend Chriſt, and to applie his merits: which faith is confirmed and encreaſed by the Sacra- 1.Cor 11.26. Sacraments profit not without faith. 1.Cor.11.28. 1.Cor.13.5. ments. We doe in the Sacraments ſhew forth the death of Chriſt, 1. Cor. 11. 26. as Ambroſe ſaith, Euchariſtiæ myſterium memoria redemptionis eſt: The myſterie of the Euchariſt is the memorie of the redemption, in 1. Cor. 11. Faith by this memorie being renewed and reuiued, applieth Chriſt: without faith the Sacraments profit not: the Apoſtle biddeth to examine themſelues, and ſo eate of the bread; which examination is to trie their faith. Ambroſe ſaith, Quid proficiunt Iudæi, quod ſanguine agni domos & poſtes illiniunt? quoniam ligna, aut ſaxa prodeſſe non poſſunt: What doth it profit the Iewes, that they annoynt their houſes and poſts with the blood of the Lambe? what can wood or ſtones profit them? ſerm. 12. Pſal. 119. No more doth water, bread or wine profit without faith.

2 Baptiſme ſerueth for ſinnes paſt and to come. Tit.3.5. Secondly, if in the Sacraments, as namely in Baptiſme, remittitur omnis pœna ſiue temporalis, ſiue æterna, all puniſhment of ſinne is remitted, both temporall and eternall, as Bellarmine confeſſeth, the application of the ſatisfactions of Saints is ſuperfluous to releaſe the temporall puniſhment, ſeeing it is done alreadie: And that the efficacie of Baptiſme extendeth to the waſhing away of all ſins both preceding and following; Saint Paul ſheweth, ſaying, that wee are ſaued by the waſhing of the new birth, and the renewing of the holy Ghoſt. If we haue then perfect ſaluation in Baptiſme, what can be added more? So Saint Hierome: Si baptiſmus nouum hominem facit, & ex toto nouum creat, nihilque in eo veteris hominis reſeruatur, non poteſt nouo imputari, quod in veteri quondam fuit: If Baptiſme make a man wholly new, that nothing of the old man remaine, that cannot be imputed to the new man, which was ſometime in the old: Hieron. Ocean. tom. 3.

3 The puniſhment remitted together with the ſinne. Mark.2.5. Thirdly, neither doth there remaine any puniſhment before God to bee ſatisfied for, the ſinne being once remitted: but we being releaſed of our ſinnes, are alſo exempted from the puniſhment: as Chriſt ſaid to the man ſicke of the palſie, Thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee; ſignifying, that together with his ſinne, his ſickneſſe, as it was a puniſhment thereof, was alſo looſed. The ſorrowes and griefes that ſtill hang vpon vs doe remaine, as Auguſtine ſaith, Vel ad demonſtrationem debitæ miſeriæ, vel ad emendationem labilis vitæ, vel ad exercitationem neceſſariæ patientiæ: Either for a demonſtration of our deſerued miſerie, the emendation of our fraile life, or the exercitation of our neceſſarie patience: Tract. 124 in Ioann. Wherefore the ſatisfactions of the Saints applicable by Indulgences, are ſuperfluous, ſeeing there remaineth after remiſſion of ſinnes obtained, no puniſhment before God to be ſatisfied for.

THE THIRD PART, WHAT Indulgence is.

THis part is diuided into foure queſtions: Firſt, whether the Indulgence of the Church be a ſpirituall ſolution, or a iudiciarie abſolution. Secondly, whether it be a releaſe, de pœnitentijs iniunctis vel iniungendis, of penance alreadie enioyned or to be enioyned. Thirdly, whether it be a remiſſion of the fault, or of the puniſhment only. Fourthly, whether by indulgence the puniſhment due vnto ſinne be remitted before God.

THE FIRST QVESTION, WHETHER THE INdulgence of the Church be a ſpirituall ſolution only, or a iudiciarie abſolution.

The Papiſts.

THis queſtion though it be chiefly controuerted among the popiſh writers themſelues, yet I will briefly ſhew which part commeth neereſt the truth. Some of them thinke, that the Indulgence of the Church is only an application of the treaſure of the Church, without any iudiciarie authoritie, and ſo a ſolution only: ſic Durand. in 4. diſtinct. 20. qu. 3. Paludan. ibid. qu. 4. cum alijs. Others thinke Indulgence to be nothing elſe, but iudiciariam abſolutionem, a iudiciarie abſolution, Franciſcus Mairon. 4. ſent. diſt. 19. qu. 2. which ſeemeth to be the truer opinion, as I will ſhew afterward. 31.Error. Bellarmine he confoundeth both theſe opinions, and maketh Indulgence not only a iudiciarie abſolution, but a ſpirituall ſolution.

Argum. His beſt argument is, becauſe Indulgence may be granted to the dead,ouer whom no iudiciarie power can be exerciſed.

Anſw. 1. It is well that theſe popiſh Diuines, ſomewhat better aduiſed then their forefathers, doe exempt the dead from their iudiciarie Conſiſtories: yet the elder Papiſts haue not been aſhamed to proceed iudicially againſt the dead: to cite them by proceſſe,call them by name in court,and for not appearing to proceede againſt them as contumacious,to produce witneſſes againſt them, and to condemne and burne them being dead. Thus was Richard Hun ſerued being dead,condemned and burnt in Smithfield: ſee his ſtorie Fox pag.808. And in like manner were Bucer and Paulus Phagius proceeded againſt in Cambridge before the Cardinals viſitors there; ſee likewiſe the ſtorie Fox pag.1961.

2. Bellarmine hath vſed a very ſillie argument: for the dead can neither be abſolued nor condemned by the ſentence of the liuing: God hath diſpoſed of them; and euery one receiueth his finall ſentence at his death: as a man dieth,ſo he lieth, and ſo he riſeth: As Auguſtine well ſaith: Vnuſquiſque cum cauſa ſua dormit,cum cauſa ſua ſurgit: Euery man ſleepeth or dieth with his cauſe, and with the ſame riſeth againe. So that in this caſe we may applie the Apoſtles ſpeech,Who art thou that condemneſt another mans ſeruant? he ſtandeth,or falleth to his owne maſter. The dead are at Gods diſpoſition, and are no more ſeruants or at the command of the liuing. This place of the Apoſtle is ſo applied by *Anaſtaſ.decret.*2.

Rom.14.4.

The Proteſtants.

WE acknowledge a ſpirituall ſolution of ſinne in the Church of God, which is diſpenſed by the miniſterie of the word, and applicable to all them,which by faith are capable of it: but the Indulgence of the Church,which they make a releaſe only of temporall puniſhment, is only a iudiciarie abſolution in the outward face of the Church.

The indulgence of the Church only a iudiciarie abſolution.

*Argum.*1. Such was that indulgence, pardon and forgiuenes granted by S. Paul to the penitent young man, To whom you forgaue any thing,I forgiue alſo. This was nothing elſe but a releaſing of the offender from the ſentence of excommunication,after he had ſufficiently ſorrowed. The ſpirituall ſolution,and forgiuenes of ſinnes, which followed his repentance, hee receiued at Chriſts hands: but the outward cenſure was releaſed by the iudiciarie power of the Church.

2.Cor.2.10.

Franciſcus Mairon,one of their owne Doctors,cited before,is of this opinion,that the Indulgence of the Church is but a Iudiciarie abſolution.

*Argum.*2. It further appeareth thus: no eccleſiaſticall Iudge,no not the Pope,can be partaker of that Indulgence,which he granteth to another. Of this opinion are ſome of the Papiſts, *Archidiacon. in cap.de indulg.in c.*6. and the reaſon is, becauſe no man can abſolue himſelfe: wherefore the Indulgence is only an abſolution: for as concerning the ſpirituall ſolution of ſinnes,he is as well partaker of it,that miniſtreth it,as he to whom it is miniſtred. And Bellarmine here greatly beſtirring himſelfe to ſhew how the Pope may receiue abſolution, reſolueth thus: that hee vſeth abſolution to another, but himſelfe is beneficed onely by the ſpirituall ſolution. But the Pope can applie no Indulgence to himſelfe: Ergo, it is an abſolution iudiciarie: *Bellarm.cap.6.reſponſ.ad obiect.*7.

The ſame is proued out of their owne law: Decret.Gregor.lib.5.tit.38.c.4. Alexand.3. A non ſuo iudice ligari nullus valeat,vel abſolui: No man can be looſed or abſolued but of his owne iudge: Ergo,Indulgence only reſpecteth the eccleſiaſticall iuriſdiction,and iudiciarie power of the Church: for otherwiſe the ſpirituall ſolution of ſinne may be miniſtred by another, then the proper paſtor in the preaching of the word,and applying of other ſpirituall comforts.

THE SECOND QVESTION, WHETHER INDVLgence be for penance enioyned,or to be enioyned.

The Papiſts.

WHen Indulgence is granted, it muſt bee vnderſtood that all kinde of penance is pardoned,both that which is alreadie enioyned or inflicted, or may bee enioyned afterward: arguments hee hath none of account,nor yet good reaſon for this aſſertion, *lib.*1.*de Indulg.cap.*7.*concluſ.*6.

32.Error.

The Proteſtants.

IT is a moſt abſurd and groſſe thing, that Indulgence ſhould not only diſpenſe,with the penance alreadie inflicted by the ſentence of the Church,but to giue licenſe for that which may afterward be incurred: for what is this elſe but to giue men libertie to ſinne,being now exempted from the cenſure of the Church?

Argum. Saint Paul doth not ſo, but onely forgiueth the young man and releaſeth that cenſure which he was then vnder for his ſinne paſt, 2.Cor.2.6. It was ſufficient for the ſame man, that he was rebuked of many: he ſpeaketh of the rebuke and cenſure alreadie paſt, hee deliuereth him not from any ſentence of the Church,which he might incurre afterward.

Gelaſius to this purpoſe ſaith notably: Auditum ſub cœlo non legitur,quod eorum voce depromitur, date nobis veniam,dum tamen nos in errore duremus: neſcio inter qua mundi prodigia hoc poſſit admitti: remitti culpa de præterito poteſt,correctione ſine dubio ſubſequente: nam ſi deinceps ſinitur manſura peruerſitas, uerſitas, non eſt benignitas remittentis, ſed conſentientis aſſenſio: It was neuer heard vnder heauen, as they ſay; giue vs pardon, while wee notwithſtanding continue in error: I cannot tell among what monſters this may be accounted: the fault may bee remitted for the time paſt, correction or amendment following: but if by this meanes their peruerſitie doe remaine, it is not a benignitie in the remitter, but a conſpiracie in the conſenter: Gelaſ. epiſt. ad Fauſtum. Thus then the remiſſion of puniſhment to come, is a further inſtigation vnto ſinne.

THE THIRD QVESTION, WHETHER AN Indulgence be a remiſſion of the fault, or puniſhment.

The Papiſts.

BEllarmine alleageth to this purpoſe certaine diſtinctions, there is a double guilt, either of the ſinne, or puniſhment: the puniſhment is either naturall, as death, ſicknes; or perſonall, as was the plague ſent vpon the people in Dauids time: and it is either in the internall court of the conſcience; or the externall court of the Church: the internall is of two ſorts, either to ſatisfie God, or the Church.

33. Error.

Then he ſetteth downe this poſition, that by the Indulgence of the Church wee are not deliuered from the guilt of any ſinne, veniall or mortall, but of the puniſhment only.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, I note certaine abſurdities and contradictions in the foreſaid diſtinctions: 1. Whereas hee maketh the plague in Dauids time to be a perſonall puniſhment, and he thinketh that Indulgences may take away perſonall puniſhments, I aske whether the Popes Iubile-Pardons and Indulgences can preuent, or turne aſide the peſtilence: If they were of ſuch force, I thinke the Pope would not ſuffer the plague ſo often to viſit Rome. 2. Hee maketh the ſatisfaction of the Church to belong to the internall court, whereas the court of the Church is externall.

The ſpirituall indulgence of Chriſt deliuereth both from the ſinne and puniſhment.

Secondly, we ſay that the ſpirituall indulgence of Chriſt in the Church, being applied and apprehended by faith, doth deliuer vs both from the ſinne and paine: but the Eccleſiaſticall indulgence doth only releaſe the externall puniſhment not before God, but before men.

Thirdly, this poſition of Bellarmine is contrarie to the Popes Iubile-pardons, which goe vnder this tenure: Boniface 8. Non ſolum plenam & largiorem, ſed pleniſſimam concedimus veniam omnium peccatorum: extrau. commun. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 1. We grant not only full, and larger, but moſt full remiſſion of all their ſinnes: ſo likewiſe Clemens 6. in his Bull: Suorum omnium obtinerent pleniſſimam veniam peccatorum: That they ſhould obtaine moſt full pardon of all their ſinnes: Sixtus the fourth alſo doth call them, Indulgentias & remiſſiones peccatorum, Indulgences and remiſſions of ſinnes.

Bellarmine anſwereth, 1. That whereas ſometime mention is made in the letters of abſolution, à pœna & culpa, from the puniſhment and the fault, it is ſo ſaid, becauſe ordinarily abſolution is ioyned with confeſſion, whereby the fault is pardoned. 2. By pardon or remiſſion of ſinnes we muſt vnderſtand the puniſhment. c. 7. propoſ. 1.

Contra. 1. But your Indulgences are properly granted, you ſay, without a Sacrament: as Bellarmine defineth it, Indulgentia eſt abſolutio, &c. extra ſacramentum data: Indulgence is abſolution giuen without a Sacrament, c. 8. in fine. Then cannot an indulgence take away the fault, which is onely releaſed in the Sacraments: that clauſe therefore, à pœna & culpa, in their Indulgences is contrarie to their owne doctrine.

2. Neither by plenarie remiſſion of ſins can the puniſhment in any ſenſe be vnderſtood. 1. It is called pleniſſima, a moſt full pardon, omnium peccatorum, of all ſinnes: if moſt full, and of all, how are the ſinnes themſelues excluded? 2. I pray you how doe you vnderſtand your beliefe: Credo remiſſionem peccatorum, I beleeue the remiſſion of ſinnes: doe ye beleeue the puniſhment onely remitted, and not the ſinne? vnleſſe your Bull beleeueth otherwiſe then the Creed, as it doth indeede, and bringeth in a new faith. 3. Boniface in his Bull maketh this preface: Quia iuxta officij noſtri debitum, ſalutem appetimus ſingulorũ: Becauſe according to our bounden dutie, we ſeeke the ſaluation of all: but to ſaluation, not the releaſing only of the paine, but the remitting of the debt belongeth.

Fourthly, that the ſatisfactions of Chriſt applied (for ſatisfactions of Saints applicable, wee acknowledge none) doe deliuer à pœna & culpa, both from the ſinne and the puniſhment, it is euident out of Scripture, Iohn 13.10. He that is waſhed by Chriſt, eſt mundus totus, is cleane euery whit: there remaineth then nothing to bee waſhed away: And they themſelues confeſſe, that Baptiſme doth waſh away both the ſinne and puniſhment: likewiſe the Apoſtle, Hebr. 7.25. He is able perfectly to ſaue them, that come vnto God. If Chriſt then doe ſaue vs perfectly, then both from ſinne and the penaltie.

Iohn 13.10.

Peter Lombard confeſſeth as much: Per ipſius pœnam, quam in cruce tulit, omnis pœna temporalis, quæ pro peccato conuerſis debetur in baptiſmo penitus relaxatur, vt nulla à baptizato exigatur, &c. By Chriſts paine, which he ſuffered vpon the croſſe, all temporall paine, which is due for ſinne to them, which are conuerted, is altogether releaſed in Baptiſme, that none at all is exacted of him that is baptized, lib. 3. diſt. 19 liter. d. If then there remaine no puniſhment after baptiſme, your Indulgences are nothing worth.

I will conclude with Saint Ambroſe: who ſpeaking of the gathering of Manna, Exod. 16.18. He that had gathered much, had nothing ouer, and he that had gathered little had no lacke. Hoc plenius de ſanguine Chriſti intelligitur, &c. Et ſi paruum ſumas, & ſi plurimum hauries, eadem perfecta eſt omnibus menſura redemptionis: This is more fully vnderſtood of the blood of Chriſt, though you take little or draw much, there is the ſame perfect meaſure of redemption to all. Epiſt. 2. Wherefore if by Indulgences, neuer ſo little of Chriſts blood be applied, the redemption is perfect, both from the ſinne and penalty, for otherwiſe it ſhould not be perfect.

THE FOVRTH QVESTION, WHETHER THE INDVLGENces of the Church, deliuer from the puniſhment of ſinne, not onely before the Church, but before God.

The Papiſts.

IT is ſo affirmed by Bellarmine, that by the cenſure of the Church impoſed vpon offenders, they doe not only ſatisfie the Church, but God alſo, and ſo conſequently the Indulgence of the Church doth ſet them free from the guilt of the puniſhment of ſinne, both before God and men. 34. Error.

Argum. 1. Matth. 18. 18. Whatſoeuer ye looſe in earth ſhall be looſed in Heauen: if it bee looſed in heauen, then before God. 1

2. Penance voluntarily aſſumed, or priuately enioyned, cannot be for example ſake to ſatisfie men, therefore thereby God is ſatiſfied: as Pſalm. 6. 6. I water my couch euery night with teares. 2 Pſal. 6. 6.

3 Tertullian ſaith: Qui per delictorum pœnitentiam inſtituerat domino ſatisfacere: Which had purpoſed to ſatisfie God by the penance of his ſinnes: lib. de pœnitent. Cyprian alſo is alleaged: Dominus noſtra ſatisfactione placandus: God is to be pleaſed with our ſatisfaction. Likewiſe Auguſtine: De ijs, quæ facta ſunt, ſatisfiat Deo per pœnitentiæ dolorem: God muſt bee ſatisfied for the things that are done by the ſorrow of repentance: Ergo, God is ſatisfied by penitentiarie workes: Bellarm. cap. 3. prop. 4. 3

The Proteſtants.

Confutat. FIrſt, we grant that the ſpirituall diſpenſation of the Church doth truly looſe the penitent perſons by faith in Chriſt, both from the ſinne and puniſhment: but that Indulgence which only releaſeth the puniſhment, is but a relaxation before the Church, therfore this place, which is vnderſtood of looſing and binding of ſinnes, is vnproperly alleaged for the releaſe of the puniſhment onely. 1

Secondly, 1. Voluntary and priuate repentance, though it be not to the eye of the world, to ſatisfie men: yet it is profitable more effectually to humble their owne ſoule: as Auguſtine ſaith ſpeaking of prayer, which may be applied alſo to outward ſorrow for ſinne: vt his ſeipſum magis homo excitat adorandum, — illiſque rurſus viſibiliter factis, inuiſibilis, animi affectus augetur: By the geſture of the body, as the bowing of the knees, the ſpreading of the hands, a man doth ſtirre vp himſelfe to prayer: and theſe things being viſibly done, the inuiſible affection of the ſoule is encreaſed: de cur. mortuor. c. 6. 2. It followeth not then in priuate repentance, man is not ſatisfied: Ergo, God is ſatisfied: for there is an other ſatisfaction beſide, when a man by ſufficient ſorrow and puniſhment, as it were taken of himſelfe, doth ſatisfie his owne ſoule: and beſide priuate repentance, though it preuaile not to ſatisfaction, yet it is auailable to effectuall contrition, and vnfained conuerſion. 2 1

Thirdly, concerning the teſtimony of the Fathers. Firſt, wee denie not but ſome of them doe vſe that phraſe of ſpeech, to ſatisfie God by repentance: but not in the popiſh ſenſe, to ſatisfie Gods iuſtice, for Tertullian ſpeaketh of ſatisfying for ſinne: yet the Papiſts themſelues hold no ſatisfaction in penance for ſinne, but for the puniſhment onely. Secondly, God then is ſaid to bee ſatisfied, that is pleaſed with the worke of repentance: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Hebr. 13. 17. With ſuch ſacrifice God is pleaſed or delighted: his iuſtice is not ſatisfied, but his will pleaſed in Chriſt, when hee ſeeth his pleaſure obeyed by our repentance: So Bernard vnderſtandeth ſatisfaction, Condigna ſatisfactio eſt malefacta corrigere, & correcta non reiterare: It is condigne ſatisfaction, to correct euill deeds, and not to iterate or do them againe, proœm. de inter. dom. But this is no ſatisfaction to Gods iuſtice for a man to turne from his euill waies, otherwiſe then as God through Chriſt is well pleaſed therewith. Thirdly, there are then foure kindes of ſatisfactions: the firſt is to God: the ſecond to the Church publikely: the third to men whom we haue offended priuately: the fourth to a mans owne ſoule: the firſt by vs can be no way performed: for as Iob ſaith, 9. 3. We cannot anſwere God one thing of a thouſand: Vix milleſima parti debitorum quis valeat reſpondere: a man can ſcarce anſwere the thouſandth part of his debt to God: Bernard. de quadrupl. debit. This ſatisfaction to Gods iuſtice we muſt wholly remit vnto Chriſt, the other three ſatisfactions are in mans power: firſt, to ſatisfie the Church, It is ſufficient for the ſame man, that he was rebuked of many: Arauſican. concil. 1. decret. ex Gratian. The ancient forme of excommunication was this: Authoritate Dei & iudicio ſancti ſpiritus è gremio ſanctæ matris Eccleſiæ eliminamus, quouſque reſipiſcant & Eccleſiæ ſatisfaciant, &c. By the authority of God and his holy ſpirit, we caſt them out of the boſome of the Church, vntill they repent, and ſatisfie the Church. Secondly, our brother whom we haue offended, muſt bee ſatisfied; as Zacheus reſtoreth foure fold, that which he had wrongfully gotten, Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Peccaſti in fratrem, fac ſatis & ſanatus es: Haſt thou offended againſt thy brother, ſatisfie him, and thou art healed: Serm. 16. in Matth. 3 2 2. Cor. 2. 6. Foure kinds of ſatisfaction. Luk. 19. 8. What ſatisfaction is in mans power.

Thirdly, by godly repentance a man doth satisfie his owne soule, and cleare his conscience by punishing of himselfe: as 2. Cor. 7. 11. this godly sorrow, what great care hath it wrought in you, &c. what punishment, &c. you haue shewed your selues in all things that you are pure in this matter. To this purpose S. Augustine, Quid aliud est ieiunium, quam debita membrorum satisfactio? membra enim satisfacere debent propter peccata, quæ commiserunt; unde si quis in gula peccauerit, satisfaciat ieiunio — si oculus peccabit, claudatur: What else is fasting, but a due satisfaction of the members? for the members must satisfie for the sinne they haue committed: if a man haue sinned in gluttony, let him make satisfaction by fasting; if the eye haue sinned, let it bee shut: Ad fratrem in erem. serm. 24. All these kinds of satisfactions we admit, but Gods iustice cannot be satisfied by vs: Christ onely hath so satisfied God for vs, both for sin and punishment, and appeased his wrath, and slaine hatred by his crosse, and reconciled vs to God, Ephes. 2. 16. Augustine well saith (to conclude this point) Fateor, quia peccaui & conscientia mea non sufficit ad satisfactionem; sed certum est, quod misericordia tua superat omnem offensionem: I confesse I haue sinned, and my conscience deserueth damnation, but my repentance sufficeth not for satisfaction; but it is certaine, that thy mercy exceedeth all transgression: Tom. 9. meditat. c. 39.

Lastly, we haue one of their owne side against them: Petrus Paludanus, who affirmeth, that venial sinnes and not the punishment onely are released by Indulgences: In 4. dist. 20. qu. 4.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE DIVERS kinds of Indulgences.

The Papists.

35.Error. Bellarmine rehearseth fiue kinds of Indulgences, and he iustifieth them all: 1. There is an Indulgence of fortie daies, which is a release of the penance which was to be done fortie daies.

36.Error. 2. There is an Indulgence of the third or fourth part of their sinnes, that is, of the punishment due for so much of their sinnes.

37.Error. 3. An Indulgence plenarie was from the whole punishment: and sometime Indulgences are granted for ten or twentie thousand yeares: for euery mortall sinne deserueth a penance of three or seuen yeeres: then so many blasphemies and other sinnes, as are by some committed euery moment, deserue many thousand yeeres penance: which notwithstanding by the sharpnesse of Purgatorie paine, may be satisfied for in three or foure hundred yeeres.

38.Error. 4. Indulgences are granted to some in their lifetime, to some in the point of death.

39.Error. 5. Some are temporarie, for a time as limited to daies or yeeres, some are perpetuall, which are tied to places, Churches, altars, or to things moueable, as to rosaries, holy graines, &c. All these kinds of Indulgences Bellarmine holdeth to be good and godly: but for this wee must take his word, for Scriptures or good reasons he hath none.

The Protestants.

1 First, 1. if your Indulgences doe release the punishment due to Gods iustice, what great presumption is it for you, to limit God to fortie daies, that the punishment of the offender should for that time bee suspended; this was the sinne of Israel, Circumscripserunt Deum Israel: They limited the God of Israel. 2. Likewise Bellarmine hath this position, that Indulgences doe not take away the paines, that are enioyned in courts ecclesiasticall: cap. 7. prop. 3. and yet heere he saith, that indulgentia quadragena, this Indulgence of fortie daies is a release of penance, which was to bee done fortie daies: which penance is inflicted by the Church. Thus he is found contrary to himselfe. 3. I haue shewed before that the release of punishment to be inflicted, is contrary to the Scriptures and the ancient practise of the Church: see before. err. 32.

Psal.88.41.

2 Secondly, if your Indulgences doe release from punishment before God, then they should not release from the third or fourth part onely, but from the whole punishment; for where God pardoneth, he forgiueth all: he worketh perfectly, Finish, O Lord, that which thou hast wrought in vs: and the wise man saith: I know, that whatsoeuer God doth, it shall be for euer, to it can no man adde, and from it can none diminish. 2. Neither when the Church forgiueth, doth it pardon onely in part, but wholly; as 2. Cor. 2. 8. Confirme or ratifie your loue toward him; vers. 10. I forgaue in the sight of Christ, that is freely from the heart: thus was the young man fully restored to the Church, and not in part onely: likewise Philem. 15. Saint Paul writeth vnto him to receiue his seruant Onesimus, Who had offended him for euer; vers. 17. receiue him as my selfe: that is, freely, franckely, wholly, fully. 3. But this releasing of the third or fourth part of penance is but a popish tricke for their further aduantage: that looke how many parts men would be released of, they should pay so many pounds more.

Psal.68.28.
Eccles.3.14.
2.Cor.2.8.10.
Philem.15.17.
True Indulgence and forgiuenesse is not from part of the punishment, but the whole.

3 Thirdly, 1. Plenary indulgence from the whole punishment of sinne, is but an encouragement to sinners, and a meanes to make them more secure: for though they sinne, yet they are free from punishment: Christ saith otherwise to the lame man, Sinne no more, lest a worse thing happen vnto thee: Christ releaseth him for that present, of the punishment of his sinne, the lamenesse of his body, but he giueth him no generall warrant. To this purpose Gelasius as I cited him before, and as hee is alleaged. caus. 24. quæst. 2. c. 2. It was neuer heard of which they say, Date veniam, dummodo nos in errore duremus: pardon vs, that wee may continue in error still: Secondly, they are blasphemous indulgences, that are made for twentie thouſands of yeeres: for thus they take vpon them to releaſe eternall puniſhment, which is contrarie to their owne doctrine: for that puniſhment which is extended beyond the time of purgatorie, which ſhall end with the world, muſt needs be the euerlaſting puniſhment of hell. 2. If then they can giue indulgence for hell puniſhment, they can deliuer damned ſoules, which is an horrible blaſphemie, and contrary to the Scripture, They cannot come from thence to vs: and how farre are they then from that hereſie, that diuels and al in the end ſhould bee ſaued, which is confuted by Saint Auguſtine, lib. 21. de ciuitat. c. 17. 23. 3. It is true, that a mans ſinnes may bee ſo great and ſo many, as that he may bee worthie not onely of twentie thouſand yeeres, but euerlaſting puniſhment: as he giueth inſtance of ſuch as blaſpheme euery moment: but doe ye thinke ſuch obſtinate and incorrigible ſinners capable of your indulgences? you are very lauiſh of the treaſure of the Church, to grant it to ſuch. 4. And ſeeing your purgatorie paine is imagined to bee ſo great, that one day of puniſhment there is anſwerable to many yeeres of penance in this life, how can three or foure hundred yeeres paines in purgatorie ſatisfie for twentie thouſand? and miſerable comforters are ye, to appoint men ſo many hundred yeeres puniſhment in purgatorie: it is nothing elſe but to feare them, that they may giue the more money not to come there. 5. But though Bellarmine be not aſhamed of theſe blaſphemous indulgences for twenty thouſand yeeres, who taketh vpon him euery where to defend the moſt groſſeſt points in poperie: yet ſome of the learned Papiſts are more modeſt, who thinke that ſuch indulgences are neuer granted by the Pope, but deuiſed of the pardoners for their gaine: Gerſon in tract. de abſolut. ſacrament. Dominic. à Soto in 4. diſtinc. 21. qu. 2. artic. 1. and ſo Bellarmine himſelfe alleageth.

Indulgences for 20 thouſand yeeres blaſphemous.

4.
No temporall puniſhment can be releaſed after death by the indulgence of the Church.
Iob 33. 23.

Fourthly, 1. I pray you from what puniſhment doe you releaſe men at the point of death? ſeeing there remaineth none but in hell, from the which (ſay you) you releaſe not: for your purgatory fire is but a popiſh ſcarbugge to feare thoſe with, that beleeue your lies: ſeeing the theefe, that had ſo many ſinnes to be purged of, and made no ſatisfaction for them, went ſtraight from the croſſe to Paradiſe, which I thinke you will not ſay was in purgatorie. 2. A man vpon his death-bed being truly contrite, may be comforted with the declaration of the forgiueneſſe of his ſinne in Chriſt, as it is in Iob 33. 23. His ſoule draweth neere to the graue, and his life to the buriers: if there bee a meſſenger with him, to declare vnto man his righteouſneſſe: but puniſhment there remaineth none to bee releaſed to him, that dieth in the faith of Chriſt. 3. Vnleſſe we count it a puniſhment for the bodie to lie in the graue: but from this, not your indulgence, but Chriſts omnipotence ſhall free vs at the latter day; as your maſter ſaith: A temporali pœna nos penitus liberabit in futuro, cum nouiſſima mors inimica deſtruetur, adhuc enim expectamus redemptionem corporis: From temporall paine hee ſhall fully free vs hereafter, when as the laſt enemie death ſhall be deſtroyed, for we yet looke for the redemption of our bodies, lib. 3. diſtinct. 19. lit. c.

5.
Indulgences not limited to Altars, Churches, and ſuch like.

Fifthly, it is moſt groſſe and abſurd, to limit the power of indulgences to altars, Churches, or any other thing without life and ſenſe. 1. The Phariſes were not ſo blind, for they held this as a principle, that none can forgiue ſinnes but God, Marke 2. 7. What then doe ye elſe, but make ſtones and walles as Gods to forgiue ſinnes? 2. The Prophet Haggie ſheweth that a mans garment touching holy fleſh is not holy, Hag. 2. 23. your altar ſtones haue no greater vertue, then the holy fleſh of the ſacrifices, nor yet ſo much, becauſe that was of Gods inſtitution, the other is of your owne inuention; how can they then make holy thoſe that touch them? 3. We may ſay then as Ambroſe of the poſtes and ſtones of the Iewes houſes, which they ſtriked with the blood of the Lambe: Quid ligna & ſaxa prodeſſe poſſunt? What can wood or ſtones profit. ſerm. 12. in Pſalm. 119.

The time of penance longer or ſhorter, according to the qualitie of the offence.

Sixthly, to conclude then: we may find that in the ancient former times, there were diuers kinds of penance enioyned for yeeres more or leſſe according to the qualitie of the offence. As players at dice had one yeeres penance appointed. Eliberin. 79. They which were preſent at the pagans feaſts, two yeeres. ibid. can. 55. They which, though conſtrained, did eate in idoll temples, foure yeeres. Ancyran. c. 5. They which obſerued diuinations, fiue yeeres. concil. Ancyran. can. 23. They which were threatned and ſo ſacrificed, did penance ſixe yeeres. ibid. c. 6. They which did twice ſacrifice to idols, ſeuen yeeres. Ancyran. can. 8. They which perſwaded others to ſacrifice, ten yeeres. ibid. can. 9. They which lay with bruit beaſts, twentie yeeres. Ancyran. can. 16.

We alſo confeſſe that this power was left to the gouernors of the Church, to ſhorten theſe times of penance according to the contrition of the offender: as it was thus decreed. Nicen. 1. can. 11. Quicunque cum omni timore & lachrimis conuerſationem ſuam non verbis ſolum, ſed opere demonſtrant, licebit epiſcopo humanius circa eos aliquid ſtatuere: Whoſoeuer with feare and teares doe not onely in word, but in deed ſhew their conuerſation, it ſhall be lawfull for the Biſhop to ſhew them fauour, &c. But theſe were relaxations of penance inflicted by the Church, no indulgences of puniſhment, not enioyned by the Church, before God.

THE FIFTH PART, TO WHOM INDVLGENCES are profitable.

The Papiſts.

40. Error.

THey hold that indulgences are profitable to all whoſoeuer, not onely to notorious and publike offenders, but euen to thoſe that are tending to perfection: his reaſon is this: becauſe it is profitable to all to be deliuered from thoſe things, which hinder them from eternall life; but ſuch is the temporall paine of purgatorie, which keepeth them backe a while, that they cannot goe to heauen. Bellarm. cap. 10.

1. Iohn 1.10.
Indulgences of temporall puniſhment not profitable to the righteous.
1. Tim. 1.10.
Iob 23.10.
Philip. 1.23.

Anſw. 1. We grant that all men though neuer ſo perfect haue need of Chriſts indulgence in the remiſſion of their ſinnes, for there is none that ſinneth not: as Saint Iohn ſaith, He that ſaith hee ſinneth not, is a lyar. 2. But as for the externall indulgences of the Church (for other indulgence from the puniſhment onely we acknowledge none) they belong not to the innocent and vertuous liuers, but to offenders that muſt be reſtrained by the cenſures of the Church: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, lex non eſt poſita iuſtis: the law is not giuen to a righteous man. 3. Doth your purgatorie paine then hinder mens going to heauen? it is a ſhame for you then to driue ſo many ſoules thither, if you can keepe them from thence by your plenarie indulgences. 4. If purgatorie were ſuch a place as you imagine it, where men are purged from their ſinnes, and ſo made fitter to goe to heauen, it is no hindrance but a furtherance to them: like as the fire doth no hurt to the gold that is purified by it: as Iob ſaith, exibo vt aurum, I ſhall come forth like gold. 5. And they which are perfect, in your owne doctrine ſhall not goe to purgatorie, but ſtraight to heauen: as Paul preſently vpon his diſſolution knew he ſhould be with Chriſt. And it is an approued ſaying among you: Iniuriam facit martyri, qui orat pro martyre: He doth iniurie to a martyr that prayeth for him, that is, ſuppoſing him to bee in purgatorie, for they onely of the dead are not to be prayed for in your ſenſe; if all then need not feare purgatorie, then indulgences are not profitable to all.

The Proteſtants.

THat indulgences of the Church are not profitable to the iuſt and righteous, it is thus prooued.

Pſalm. 119.71.
1. Pet. 1.23.

Argum. 1. It profiteth not to be deliuered from that which worketh vnto a mans ſaluation: but the afflictions and puniſhment of this life are ſuch, as the Prophet ſaith. It is good for me that I haue been afflicted, and the Apoſtle ſaith, Chriſt ſuffered for vs, leauing for vs an example that wee ſhould follow his ſteps: Ergo. from ſuch temporall afflictions, indulgences are not to be ſought.

Rom. 1.17.

2. It is better for a man to liue by himſelfe and his owne faith, then to ſeeke ſatisfaction by another: but the iuſt liueth by his faith: Ergo, he needeth not another mans ſatisfaction.

1. Anſw. 1. Firſt, ſuch afflictions as further their ſaluation, are not to bee ſhunned: but ſuch as withhold from entring into heauen, as is the temporall paine of Purgatorie.

2. Secondly, as it is better for a man to goe vpon both legges, then one: ſo to relie vpon other mens ſatisfactions as well as his owne, is a ſafer and more ſure way: Bellarm. cap. 10. reſponſ. ad 1. & 2. obiect.

Heb. 1.3.
Rom. 2.9.
No purgatory after this life.
2. Cor. 5.10.
Prou. 23.14.
2. Cor. 5.6.

1. Contra. Firſt, if you grant all temporall paines profitable, but onely the ſuppoſed torments of Purgatorie, then are no paines or puniſhments at all left, to be releaſed by your Indulgences: for your purgatorie fire hath been long agoe quenched by the water of life flowing from the Scriptures: 1. Chriſt hath by himſelfe purged our ſinnes: we do not purge them our ſelues. 2. The Scripture acknowledgeth but two places after this life, heauen or hell: Tribulation and anguiſh ſhall be vpon the ſoule of euery one that doth euill: but to euery one that doth good, glorie and honour. So ſaith S. Ambroſe: Qui non intrat regnum, neceſſario remanet in inferno: He that entreth not into the kingdome, remaineth in hell, ſerm. 22. 3. That ſtate wherein a man dyeth cannot be altered: Euery man ſhall receiue according to the things done in the bodie. Ambroſe alſo ſaith: Mors deteriorem ſtatum non efficit, ſed qualem in ſingulis inuenerit, talem iudicio futuro reſeruat: Death maketh not a mans ſtate worſe, but as it findeth euery one, ſo it reſerueth them to the iudgement to come, &c. But concerning the vanitie of this deuice of Purgatorie, I haue treated before at large, Contr. 9. qu. 1. part. 2. 2. If Purgatorie bee ſuch a place, as they imagine, which ſerueth to purge away the reliques of ſinne, it is no hindrance but a furtherance: like as the rodde of correction is profitable to the child, and doth deliuer his ſoule from hell. 3. If Purgatorie be a let becauſe it ſtayeth the ſoule a while from heauen: by the ſame reaſon alſo all the afflictions of this life are lets: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, While we are at home in the bodie, wee are abſent from the Lord.

Rom. 1.17.
Ezech. 18.20.

2. Secondly, 1. the ſimilitude which he vſeth is not fitly or properly applied, which rather may be turned thus: that as it is better for a man to goe vpon his owne legs, then to leane vpon anothers ſtaffe; and if he can goe vpright of himſelfe, to lay hold of another is but an hindrance: ſo in the matter of ſaluation it is better to truſt to a mans owne faith. 2. So the Scripture ſaith, The iuſt ſhall liue by faith, that is, euery one by his owne faith: As, The ſoule that ſinneth ſhall dye, Ezech. 18.20. No man ſhall beare anothers puniſhment: ſo no mans faith can profit another: Qui per vos peccaſtis per vos erubeſcatis: They that ſinne by themſelues, muſt repent by themſelues: Cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 1. c. 88.

THE SIXTH PART, TO WHOM THE POWER to grant Indulgences belongeth.

The Papiſts.

1. 41.Error. Math.16.19.

FIrſt, the power of granting Indulgences doth reſt onely in the Pope as the ſucceſſor of Peter, to whom Chriſt ſaid, Whatſoeuer you looſe in earth, ſhall be looſed in heauen, Matth.16.19.

2. 42.Error.

Secondly, plenarie Indulgences can onely be granted by the Pope, neither by Cardinals, whoſe indulgences exceede not an hundred dayes, neither by Biſhops or Metropolitanes, who can grant indulgences but for one yeere in the dedication of Churches, and for fortie dayes at other times: nor yet by generall Councels.

3. 43.Error.

Thirdly, Biſhops receiue this power to giue indulgences not immediatly from God, but from the Pope, from whom alſo they receiue their iuriſdiction: and this is an argument thereof, becauſe the Pope may make voyde indulgences granted by Biſhops: but ſo can he not Orders or Sacraments miniſtred by them.

4. 44.Error.

Fourthly, Pariſh paſtors haue no power to giue indulgences, but by commiſſion from the Pope, or their Biſhop; becauſe they are the princes of the people of God, to whom it belongeth to diſtribute the common goods of the Church.

5. 45.Error.

Fifthly, the power of order is not neceſſarie to giue indulgences, but the power of iuriſdiction onely, and therefore the Pope or Biſhop may graunt indulgences, though they bee not in Orders.

6. 46.Error.

Sixthly, neither is this power of indulgences loſt by any deadly ſin: *ſic Bellar.lib.de indulg.cap.*12.

The Proteſtants.

1. The keyes not committed onely to Peter. Matth.18.18. Ioh.20.23.

FIrſt, the keyes of the Church to binde or looſe, open or ſhut, were no more committed to Peter, then vnto the reſt of the Apoſtles: as Saint Hierome well noteth; Cuncti claues regni cœlorum accipiunt, & ex æquo ſuper eos eccleſia fortitudo ſolidatur: All the Apoſtles receiue the keyes of the kingdome, and the ſtrength of the Church equally is founded vpon them all, *lib.*1.aduerſ.Iouinian. For as in this place the words ſeeme to be ſpoken to Peter, though for, and in the name of the reſt: ſo elſewhere the commiſſion is granted generally to all, Whatſoeuer you binde in earth, &c. And, Whoſe ſinnes you remit, they are remitted.

2. 1.Ioh.1.7. 1.Pet.5.1. Plenarie indulgences not peculiar to the Pope.

Secondly, 1. plenarie Indulgences properly ſo called, which are of all ſinnes, neither Pope, Cardinall, nor Biſhop haue power to grant, but they are reſerued onely to Chriſt: The blood of Chriſt (onely purgeth) from all ſinne. 2. In the adminiſtration of the Church-keyes, the Pope hath no preeminence before other Biſhops, but they haue the ſame power in their dioceſſe, which he hath in his: as Saint Peter diſdaineth not to call the reſt of the paſtors Elders, and himſelfe συμπρεσβύτερον, a fellow Elder, and he exhorteth them to feede the flocke: not taking this office of feeding wholy to himſelfe. 3. Yet though Peter be prooued to haue had a ſuperioritie, it is not ſtraight deriued to the Pope, who is not his true ſucceſſor. Saint Ambroſe ſaith: Oues Chriſti non ſolum tum ſuſcepit beatus Petrus, ſed & nobiſcum eas ſuſcepit, & cum illo eas ſuſcepimus omnes: The ſheepe of Chriſt bleſſed Peter did not then onely receiue, but he tooke them together with vs, and we with him: *de dignit.ſacerdot.c.*2. 4. As for that diſtinction of plenarie Indulgences for fortie, an hundred dayes, for a yeere, it is but a Romiſh deuice, and of no antiquitie, for the Popes aduantage, and as a ſteppe to lift vp the Pope into his chaire of pride, that in euery caſe ſtill a prerogatiue may be reſerued to him. 5. The office and calling of Cardinals is one of the Popes creatures, and what priuilede they haue, we do not greatly force: it is grounded rather vpon cuſtome, then any law, as Bellarmine confeſſeth *cap.*11. we hold both the calling of them, with all their immunities to be Antichriſtian, as I haue ſhewed before, *Contr.*5.*qu.*3. *part.*3. 6. Concerning generall Councels, that they haue authoritie aboue the Pope, I haue likewiſe prooued before, *Contr.*3.*qu.*7. whither I referre the reader: And that Councels may alſo giue plenarie Indulgences as well as the Pope, it appeareth both by their practiſe: for ſo did the Councell of Baſill, wherein Panormitane alloweth the act of the Councell, a great popiſh Doctor, though Bellarmine call it a ſchiſmaticall Councell: And beſide of this iudgement are *Felinus ſer.de indulg.num.*28. Dominic.à Soto, Nauarrus, with others cited by *Bellar.cap.*11.

3. Act 20.28. Biſhops and Paſtors haue their calling from God not from the Pope.

Thirdly, Biſhops and paſtors receiue their calling from God, and not from the Pope: Act.20. verſe 28. Spiritus ſanctus conſtituit vos Epiſcopos, &c. The holie Spirit hath made you Biſhops. Cyprian: Chriſtus dicit ad Apoſtolos, ac per hoc ad omnes præpoſitos, qui Apoſtolis vicaria ordinatione ſuccedunt: Chriſt ſaith to the Apoſtles, and to all gouernours of the Church, which ſucceede the Apoſtles as their Vicars; *lib.*4.*epiſt.*9. Hierom. Omnes epiſcopi Apoſtolorum ſucceſſores: All Biſhops are the Apoſtles ſucceſſors, Euagrio. Their authoritie then is not deriued to them from the Pope: 2. neither can the Pope infringe or make voide the acts of other Biſhops by right, but therein hee is an vſurper: As Cyprian ſaith: Nec quiſquam epiſcopum ſe eſſe epiſcoporum conſtituit, aut tyrannidis terrore ad obſequendi neceſſitatem collegas ſuos adigit, &c. None of vs muſt make himſelfe a Biſhop of Biſhops, or with tyrannicall feare compell his colleagues to obey, &c. in concil.Carthag.

4. 1.Pet.5.3.

Fourthly, 1. that Biſhops are princes of the Lords people, is contrarie to the Apoſtle, Not as though yee were Lords ouer Gods heritage. Saint Hierome ſaith: Patres ſe ſciant eſſe, non dominos:

Of Paſtors and Preachers of the word, how they doe bind and looſe.

Let them know themſelues to be fathers, not Lords, Hieron. ad Theophil. 2. All paſtors, to whom the preaching of the word is committed, by the ſame word haue authoritie to bind and looſe: that which our Sauiour ſpake to his Apoſtles, Ioh. 20.23. Whoſe ſinnes you remit, &c. is vnderſtood of all paſtors: and the Rhemiſts confeſſe in their annotations vpon this place, that this ſpeciall facultie of the Prieſthood conſiſting in remitting of ſinne, is here beſtowed vpon them. Saint Paul ſheweth, that all paſtors and teachers are giuen, for the gathering together of the Saints, the worke of the miniſterie, the edification of the bodie of Christ. But theſe duties cannot be performed without the power of binding and looſing. Hierome ſaith, Quid facit excepta ordinatione epiſcopus, quod non facit presbyter? What doth a Biſhop, beſide ordination, which a presbyter doth not? Hier. Euag. Origen ſaith: Epiſcopis & presbyteris credita ſunt cathedra: The chaire of the Church is committed to Biſhops and prieſts, tract. 15. in Mat. Your owne decrees witneſſe: Qui vult confiteri quarat ſacerdotem ſcientem ligare, & ſoluere: He that wil confeſſe, let him ſeeke a prieſt, that knoweth how to bind and looſe, Cauſ. 33. diſt. 1. c. 88. Laſtly, ſome of your owne Doctors doe affirme, that euery prieſt that heareth confeſſions, hath authoritie to abſolue and grant Indulgences: Angelus in ſumma verb. indulgent. num. 5. Barthol. Fumus. in ſumma verb. indulgent. num. 2. And thus much Bellarmine acknowledgeth.

Epheſ. 4.12.

5. Fifthly, 1. that the power of Indulgence may bee diſpenſed by any which are not entred into the Orders of the Church, nor admitted to the miniſterie of the word, it is contrarie to the Scriptures: for Chriſt ſpeaketh to his Apoſtles, whom he had choſen and appointed to that office before, Math. 10.1. Whatſoeuer ye bind in earth, &c. And Iohn 20.22. he firſt doth breath vpon them the holy Ghoſt, and ſaith, Whoſe ſinnes ye remit, &c. Saint Ambroſe ſaith, Verbum dei dimittit peccata, &c. The word of God forgiueth ſinnes, qui ſolendi ius non habet ligandi non habet, &c. ius hoc ſolis permiſſum eſt ſacerdotibus: They that haue not power to looſe, haue not power to bind, &c. this power is onely permitted to prieſts, lib. 2. de Cain & Abel, cap. 4. Therefore he muſt be a prieſt, and a miniſter of the word, which hath power to bind or looſe. Yea, the Rhemiſts confeſſe, that to remit ſinnes is a ſpeciall facultie of the prieſthood, as I alleaged before: wherefore none can execute this power that is not in orders.

The power of binding and looſing belongeth not to thoſe that are not paſtors.

6. Sixthly, 1. this laſt aſſertion is contrarie to the Scripture, for he that hath a beame in his owne eye cannot ſee clearely to caſt out the moat out of his brothers eye: for how can a man iudge rightly of another mans ſinne, that doth not iudge it in himſelfe? 2. Origen ſaith: Qui funibus ſuorum peccatorum conſtringitur, fruſtra vel ligit, vel ſoluat: He that is tyed with the cordes of his owne ſinnes, bindeth or looſeth in vaine: tract. in Matth. 1. 3. Nicholaus 1. one of their Popes, Epiſt. ad Michaelem, thus ſaith, Qui ligati ſunt ligare, & qui ipſi mortui ſunt alios mortificare non poſſunt: They that are bound themſelues cannot bind others, and they which are dead themſelues, cannot mortifie or giue ouer others to death, &c. And to the ſame purpoſe he alleageth his predeceſſor Celeſtinus: Non iudicamus eum remotum, quia non poterat quenquam eius remouere ſententia, qui ſe tam prabuerat ipſe remouendum: We doe not iudge him as remooued, becauſe his ſentence could not remoue any, who did ſhew himſelfe worthie to be remooued, &c. He then that is in any damnable ſinne, and is worthie to bee caſt out himſelfe, hath no power to caſt out others.

Matth. 7.5. He that is in deadly ſinne cannot caſt out others, being caſt out himſelfe.

AN APPENDIX TO THIS PART, WHETHER Indulgences may be granted without great and waightie cauſe.

The Papiſts.

WHereas the popiſh diuines are diuided about this queſtion, ſome affirming that ſo the cauſe be lawfull and honeſt, not euill, vaine or worldly, but belonging to Gods glorie, though it be not otherwiſe a matter of great waight; indulgences may be granted: as when the Pope vpon Eaſter day giueth plenarie indulgence to the people that ſtand about the gate of Saint Peters Church; which ſeemeth to be but a ſmall matter: ſic Thom. in 4. d. 20. qu. 1. ar. 3. qu. 2. Durand. Antonin. and others by Bellarmine produced: others doe thinke, that the cauſe muſt not onely be honeſt and godly, but proportionable in greatnes to the indulgence granted: ſic Bonauentur. Richard. Ioan. Gerſon. Adrianus Papa, with others rehearſed by Bellarmine: to the latter opinion he ſeemeth to encline, giuing notwithſtanding ſuch cauteles, as that he alloweth indulgences granted for the ſmalleſt matters: as firſt the cauſe, which is light in it ſelfe may tend to a great end, as the ſtanding of the people before S. Peters Church gate, is a meane to teſtifie their faith of the head of the Church, to the honour of the Apoſtolike Sea: ſecondly, it is not for the ſubiect to iudge which are great and waightie cauſes: they may be great, which ſeeme but ſmall to them: Bellarm. de indulgent. lib. 1. c. 12.

47. Error.

The Proteſtants.

FIrſt, who ſeeth not how this captious and quaint diſtinguiſher by his quirkes and ſubtilties goeth about to maintaine all the ridiculous and raſh indulgences, which are granted by the Popes: for if ſtanding at S. Peters Church doore, and looking vpon it, be a matter of ſo great waight, to deſerue a plenarie indulgence, you ſhall neuer want waightie cauſes for your pardons: and to barre the people (whom you call the Popes ſubiects) from eſtimating or valuing the greatnes or ſmalnes of cauſes, you doe but make a way, to doe what you liſt with your pardons.

Secondly, whereas then you require theſe conditions in giuing of pardons, they muſt not be granted, firſt, for euill works; ſecondly, for worldly matters; thirdly, but ſuch as tend to the honour of God: fourthly, and are not light or vaine, but of ſome waight and importance. It is euident that the Popes pardons haue offended againſt all theſe rules: firſt, fortie daies pardon was proclaimed vnder Longland Biſhop of Lincolne to as many as brought a fagot to burne the poore ſeruants of Chriſt, which was an euill and vncharitable worke. Fox p.983.

Indulgences not to be granted for euill workes.

2. Full remiſſion of ſinnes was granted to as many as did aſſiſt Spencer Biſhop of Norwich to fight for Pope Vrbane the ſixth, againſt the Antipope Clement: p.446. which was but a meere worldly and temporall matter.

Nor for worldly matters.

3. Sixtus the fourth granted great indulgences to thoſe that did celebrate the feaſt of the conception of the virgin Marie, adding this clauſe to the Aue Marie: Haile Mary full of grace, &c. and bleſſed is Anna thy mother, of whom thy virgines fleſh hath proceeded without ſpot of originall ſinne, Fox p.800. this cauſe was not to the honour, but to the diſhonour of Chriſt; whoſe onely conception was without ſinne: as is before ſhewed, contr.9.qu.9.part.1.

Nor where Gods honour is not ſought.

4. When as the Friar Tecellius went about with the Popes pardons, offering for ten ſhillings, that who ſo would, ſhould deliuer one ſoule out of purgatorie. ex Chriſtian. & Maſ. lib.20. This was no waightie or great cauſe, being but a matter of ten ſhillings.

Nor for trifles.

Thirdly, the Popes friends then ſhould giue him counſell to be more ſparing and not ſo lauiſh of the Church treaſure: Eugenius the fourth being requeſted to ioyne with the Councell of Baſil to grant generall Indulgences for the reducing of the Greeke Church, anſwered, Ne claues eccleſiæ contemnerentur, velle ſe maturius incedere: That he would take pauſe in the matter, leſt the keyes of the Church ſhould be contemned, epiſt. ſynodal.8. If the Pope would be aduiſed in ſo great a matter, it is intolerable raſhnes to laſh out with his Indulgences, where no ſuch cauſe is.

Fourthly, Saint Paul would not grant pardon or indulgence lightly to the young man, but after he perceiued his ſorrow and heauineſſe to be ſo great, that he was like to be ſwallowed vp of it, if he were not comforted.

2.Cor.2.7.

Saint Cyprian ſaith, as hee is cited in the Decrees, diſt.50.c.27. Satis eſt temerarius, qui remiſſionem peccatorum cunctis ſe dare poſſe confidit: Hee is very raſh, that thinketh hee can giue remiſſion of ſinnes to all, &c. as the Pope doth, when hee giueth plenarie Indulgence to whole multitudes together.

THE SEVENTH PART, OF THE DISPOſition required to be in them that receiue Indulgences.

The Papiſts.

First, Indulgences may bee granted to a ſinner, and for ſuch workes as are done while hee is in the ſtate of ſinne, as if a ſinfull man doe contribute toward the recouering of Ieruſalem; Bellarm.cap.13. 1 48.Error.

Secondly, yet a man cannot perceiue the fruit of ſuch indulgences, vnleſſe he be in the ſtate of grace, Bellarm.lib.1.c.13.quæſt.1. 2 49.Error.

Thirdly, if the good worke enioyned to bee done bee accompanied or ioyned with veniall ſinne, it hindereth the fruit of indulgence, Bellarm.ibid. 3 50.Error.

Fourthly, hee that will receiue benefit by theſe indulgences, muſt confeſſe and bee trulie penitent. 4 51.Error.

Fifthlie, he cannot enioy the indulgence, that doth not performe all the workes that are enioyned, ibid.qu.4. 5 52.Error.

Sixthly, Indulgences may bee profitable to thoſe that will not, though they can, ſatisfie for themſelues, but doe reſt in the ſatisfaction of others, ibid.qu.5. 6 53.Error.

The Proteſtants.

First, 1. the Apoſtle ſaith, without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Heb.11.6. how dare yee then grant indulgence or remiſſion to them which are yet in their ſinnes, and not reconciled to God? 2. This is alſo contrary to their owne doctrine: for they ſay, an indulgence is a releaſe of the puniſhmen of ſinne, which remaineth after the fault it ſelfe is remitted: but now it is affirmed, that indulgence may be granted to them which are yet in their ſinnes. 3. It is contrarie to their owne law: Peccati venia non datur niſi correcto: The pardon of ſins muſt be granted to none, but to them that are amended, ſext.decretal.regul.iuris.5.

1. Pardon and indulgence onely to bee giuen to them that are corrected and amended.

Secondly, as wee willingly grant, that a man being not in the ſtate of grace, cannot bee partaker of the true indulgence and remiſſion of ſinnes: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, By grace are yee ſaued through faith: ſo this poſition is flatly oppoſite to the popiſh error of Indulgences: for if a man bee in the ſtate of grace before the Indulgence bee granted, which they ſay is but a releaſe of the puniſhment, then is their Indulgence altogether ſuperfluous: for to a man being in the ſtate of grace, there remaineth neither ſinne nor puniſhment of ſinne: Rom.5.1. Being iuſtified by faith, we are at peace with

2. Epheſ.2.8. A man in the ſtate of grace need no other indulgence of the puniſhment. Rom.5.1.

God: ver. 9. Being iuſtified by his blood, we ſhal be ſaued from wrath through him. If we are then preſently vpon our iuſtification at peace with God, and deliuered from his wrath, then there remaineth no puniſhment of ſinne: for God doth not puniſh for ſinne but in wrath. S. Ambroſe ſaith, Qui fidem habet, habet regnum cœlorum: He that hath faith, hath the kingdome of heauen, in Luc. 13. And he that is in the ſtate of grace hath faith, he hath then alreadie the kingdome of heauen, and ſo your Indulgences come too late.

3. Indulgences not hindred by veniall ſins. Iſay 64.6.

Thirdly, 1. If euery veniall, that is, ſmall offence, ſhould hinder the true indulgence and remiſſion of ſinnes, then it were impoſſible for any man to attaine vnto it: for our beſt workes are blemiſhed; as the Prophet ſaith, All our righteouſneſſe is as a ſtained cloath. And Origen very well noteth vpon theſe words of our Sauiour, Luk. 17.10. When you haue done all, ſay, you are vnprofitable ſeruants: Nec enim ſi verè bona eſſent, quæ facimus, ſcriptum eſſet, vt facientes ea dicamus nos inutiles ſeruos, &c. For if they were truly good things which wee doe, it ſhould not bee written, that doing ſuch things, wee ſhould ſay we are vnprofitable ſeruants: in compariſon of other mens workes they are called good, ſed quantum ad veritatem bonum noſtrum non eſt bonum: But in reſpect of the veritie it ſelfe, our good workes are not good, Tract. 8. in Matth. 2. And concerning your owne indulgences, thinke you, that when vnder Clemens 6. in the Iubile celebrated anno 1350. there were numbred 500. euery day going and comming to Rome, and an hundred thouſand wayting at the Popes gates for pardons, that none of theſe had any veniall faults? 3. And are your Iubile pardons of ſo ſmall force, that whereas they can releaſe Purgatorie paines for many thouſand yeeres, they cannot remooue one poore veniall ſinne? If this doctrine were generally knowne to your friends and welwillers, I thinke your Iubile pardons would not find many chapmen to buy them.

4. Pſalm. 4.4. Pſalm 51.27. Repentance bringeth indulgence whereſoeuer, and not at Rome onely.

Fourthly, 1. If your Indulgences profit not, vnleſſe they be truly penitent and confeſſe their ſinnes which doe receiue them, what need the poore people take ſo long iourneyes to come to Rome for pardons? for if they be truly contrite, they ſhall finde forgiueneſſe at home: yea, if they examine their heart vpon their beds, and tremble, it ſhall be a good ſacrifice to God: A broken and a contrite heart God will not deſpiſe, Pſalm. 51.17. To whom will I looke, ſaith the Lord? to him that is poore and of a contrite ſpirit, Iſai. 66.2. Whereſoeuer a man repenteth, and whenſoeuer, he ſhall find remiſſion. Ambroſe ſaith: Iob in ſtercore ſedens, omnia, quæ amiſerat, recuperauit: Iob ſitting vpon the dunghill, recouered all he loſt, de pœnit. lib. 1. c. 1. No place can bee ſo meane, or baſe, where true repentance is not accepted of God.

2. But how ſtandeth this with your doctrine of Indulgences, to require repentance and confeſſion, whereby we obtaine remiſſion of ſinnes, and not of the puniſhment onely? and you ſay indulgence releaſeth onely the puniſhment remaining after remiſſion: but now your Indulgences are proclaimed, before remiſſion of ſinnes by repentance and confeſſion: for in the Bull of Indulgences this clauſe is inſerted: Pœnitentibus & verè confeſſis, vel qui verè pœnitebunt & confitebuntur: The Indulgence is granted to them that are truly penitent and confeſſed, or which ſhall bee truly penitent, and confeſſe, Bonif. 8. extrau. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 1. And thus they are promiſed a releaſe of the puniſhment, before they haue repented of the ſinne.

Rom. 3.8.

3. It is an hard matter, for your poore ſuppliants, by this meanes to find repentance: for your yeere of Iubile maketh them ſecure, and many doe ſin willingly in hope of forgiueneſſe then. But this is no true repentance, to ſinne that grace may more abound, and to doe euill, that good may come of it. Of ſuch Saint Ambroſe ſaith: Alij propoſita ſpe agenda pœnitentiæ, licentiam ſibi peccandi propagatam putant: Some vpon hope of penance propounded or publiſhed, doe thinke their libertie of ſinning enlarged, lib. 2. de pœnitent. c. 9. And it is Bellarmines owne poſition, that if a man in hope of the yeere of Iubile doe willingly fall into ſinne, hee may notwithſtanding bee abſolued, lib. 1. de Indulg. c. 10. pag. 60.

5. Iſai. 1.16. Deut. 30.13. Performance of enioyned workes of penance not neceſſarie to obtaine true indulgence.

Fifthly, it is an hard condition, that a man cannot enioy a Popes pardon, vnleſſe hee performe all workes that are inioyned: Firſt, pardon with God is more eaſily obtained: for he requireth of vs no ſuch painefull workes, but onely to ceaſe to doe euill, and to learne to doe well. Secondly, he requireth not of vs to goe ouer the ſea in pilgrimage, to Ieruſalem, to Rome, or to any other place. Neither is it beyond the ſeas, that thou ſhouldeſt ſay, who ſhall goe ouer the ſea for vs, to bring it vs? Thirdly, Saint Ambroſe ſaith of Dauids repentance: Dauid exclamauit, peccaui, & mox audiuit, Deus abſtulit peccatum; quantum valent tres ſyllabæ: tres enim ſyllabæ ſunt, peccaui, ſed in iſtis tribus ſyllabis flamma ſacrificij cordis eius ad cœlum aſcendit: Dauid cried out, I haue ſinned, and ſtraight he heard, God hath taken away thy ſinne: ſee how much three ſyllables auaile: I haue ſinned, are but three ſyllables, yet in theſe three ſyllables the flaming ſacrifice of his heart aſcended: exhortat. ad pœnitent. Here are all the workes required of Dauid, with a ſorrowfull heart to pronounce three ſyllables. Fourthly, Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Nunquam ſpernit pœnitentiam, ſi ei ſyncerè & ſimpliciter offeratur, — etiamſi quis explere non poterit omnem ſatisfaciendi ordinem: He neuer deſpiſeth repentance, if it be ſincerely and ſimply offered him, although a man doe not fulfill all the order of ſatisfaction, de temp. ſerm. 181. c. 16. God then forgiueth, though a man cannot fulfill all that is enioyned: but the Pope will not pardon, vnleſſe the whole ſatisfaction enioyned be performed.

6. Sixthly, againſt the laſt propoſition Cardinall Caietane reaſoneth thus: That Indulgences cannot profit them, that haue not a purpoſe to ſatisfie for themſelues.

Indulgences cannot profit them, that haue no purpoſe to ſatisfie by themſelues.

1. Becauſe ſuch are vnworthy of indulgence, but the Church intendeth not to beſtow Indulgences vpon the vnworthie.

2. It is not fit for a man to aske of his friend to ſatisfie for him, if hee bee able himſelfe to doe it.

3. In a well conſtituted common-wealth, the common treaſure muſt not be employed to pay their debts, that are able themſelues, &c.

4. Indulgences are granted to ſuch as are truly penitent; but they are not, that refuſe to bring forth fruits of repentance: *ſic Caietan tract.*10.*de ſuſcipientib.indulg.c.*1.

Anſwere 1. Bellarmine anſwereth, that ſuch bee not vnworthy, but non digni, not worthie onely.

2. A man may craue his friends ſatisfaction in ſuch a caſe of fauour, becauſe his friend hath no neede himſelfe.

3. There may be cauſe, when it is fit their debts ſhould be payd of the common treaſurie, that are able to diſcharge them of their owne.

4. They are truly penitent, that haue a purpoſe to ſatisfie themſelues, if others did not ſatisfie for them, *Bellarm.c.*13.

1. Hebr.11.36. Math.22.8. Act.13.46.) Indulgences not to be granted to the vnworthy. 2.Theſſ.1.11.

Contra. 1. This is a very nice diſtinction, to make a difference betweene indignum, vnworthie, and non dignum, not worthie: the Scripture vſeth them both indifferently: as Heb.11.36. Of whom the world was not worthie: was not the world vnworthy of them alſo? So Matth.22.8. They which were bidden, were not worthie: were they not alſo vnworthie? And ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, Act.13.46. You iudge your ſelues vnworthy of euerlaſting life: ſo to bee vnworthie, and not worthie, are all one. 2. The ſpirituall treaſure of the Church is not beſtowed vpon any, but ſuch as are thought worthie. That our God may make you worthie of his calling: therefore it is not to be giuen to thoſe that are not worthie.

2. 2.Sam.12.4.5. Luk.11.6. Matth.25.9.

Secondly, 1. If it bee no fault for a man to borrow of his neighbour when hee hath enough himſelfe, why did Dauid iudge him worthy of death, that hauing many ſheepe of his owne, fetcht his poore neighbours ſheepe to entertaine his friend with? 2. One friend vſeth not to lend to another, but when hee needeth, as it is in the Parable, One commeth to his friend at midnight, and ſaith, Lend me three loaues, for a friend of mine is come out of the way vnto mee, and I haue nothing to ſet before him: verſ.8. Though he would not ariſe and giue him, becauſe he is his friend, yet becauſe of his importunitie, he would riſe and giue him as many as he needed. Here we ſee that one friend is not to trouble another, but when he hath neede. 3. in ſpirituall things a man hath neede of all himſelfe, Leſt there be not enough for vs and you.

3. 1.Tim.5.16.

Thirdly, Saint Paul commandeth the contrary, that where there is ſufficient beſide, none ſhould be at the common charge, If any faithfull man or woman haue widowes, let them miniſter vnto them, and let not the Church be charged: and this reaſon is giuen, that there may be ſufficient for widowes indeede: that is, for them which haue no maintenance of their owne. So then, if the common wealth ſhould ſpend their treaſure vpon them that are able of themſelues, the poore ſhould want it.

4. Mark.9.50. Math.3.10. None helped by the ſatisfaction of others.

Fourthly, 1. the Scripture ſaith, Haue ſalt in your ſelues, Euery man muſt be ſeaſoned in himſelfe, and not looke to be ſeaſoned by another. 2. And Iohn Baptiſt ſheweth who they are that bring forth fruits worthie of repentance by the example of a tree, Euery tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewen downe and caſt into the fire. It excuſeth not a barren tree, to haue another tree that is fruitfull to grow by it: ſo neither can one man be ſaued by anothers workes. 3. Ambroſe therefore ſaith: Ablue igitur te lachrymis tuis, ſi tu ipſe te fleueris, alius te non flebit: nam ſi Saul defleſſet peccata ſua, Samuel eum non fleuiſſet: Therefore waſh thy ſelfe with thine owne teares, if thou weepe for thy ſelfe, another ſhall not neede to weepe for thee: for if Saul had wept for his ſinne, Samuel would not haue wept for him: *lib.*5.in Luc. Like as then Samuels teares did not profit Saul, becauſe he lamented not for himſelfe, ſo neither can other mens workes helpe them that doe not worke for themſelues. Wherefore Caietane doth here come ſomewhat neere the marke, and Bellarmine hath miſt the cuſhen.

THE EIGHTH PART, WHETHER INDVLGENCES doe profit the dead: This part is diuided into fiue queſtions.

THE FIRST QVESTION, WHETHER THE dead haue any benefit by the Indulgences of the Church.

The Papiſts.

Bellarmine proueth the queſtion thus:

54.Error.

Argum. 1. The prayers of the liuing and other workes by way of impetration profit the dead: Ergo, the ſame workes, as prayer, faſting, being alſo ſatisfactorie, doe alſo benefit them by way of ſatisfaction.

2. The faithfull departed make one body, and one Church with the faithfull liuing: therefore the ſatisfactions of the liuing may be applied to the dead.

3. And if priuate men may applie their ſatisfactions to the reſt of the members being dead, much more may they applie vnto them the ſatisfactions of Chriſt, and of the Saints: Bellarmine cap.14. qu.1.

The Proteſtants.

*Confut.*1. FIrſt, the argument followeth not, we may pray for the dead: Ergo, wee may alſo ſatisfie for them: for we grant that we may one pray for another while we liue, but wee cannot ſatisfie one for another, becauſe ſupplication is of mercy: but ſatisfaction is of deſert. Secondly, neither is it true that the prayers of the liuing doe profit the dead: requeſt or interceſſion auaileth not after ſentence giuen, and iudgement paſt, which is in the finall end and departure in this life: for after the gate is ſhut, there is no entring, Matth.25.10. and your Canons ſay, Mortuorum cauſa Deo reſeruanda eſt: The cauſe of the dead muſt be reſerued to God. cauſ.24.qu.2.c.1.Leo. Matth.25.10.

2. Secondly, Firſt the Apoſtle ſaith, Of whom is named the whole family in heauen and in earth: wee acknowledge a glorious part of the family of the Church to be in heauen: but of any part thereof to be in purgatorie we reade not: 2. If this be a good reaſon, the ſoules in purgatorie are our fellow members; Ergo, we may ſatisfie for them, it will follow as well, that they may ſatisfie for vs, becauſe we are their members alſo; and much rather, becauſe the torments of purgatorie being ſo exceeding painefull, they are ſo much the more able to ſatisfie. 3. It is not a ſufficient warrant to pray for the dead, becauſe they are members; for then we ſhould pray alſo for the ſpirits of the iuſt that are in heauen: but our prayer muſt be in faith, Iam.5.15. the prayer of faith: We muſt haue a particular knowledge of their ſtate, for whom we pray, and an aſſurance that our prayers ſhall be heard; but concerning prayer for the dead, we can haue neither knowledge of their ſtate, neither haue wee any ſuch warrant out of the word that our prayers are heard.

3. Thirdly, 1. It followeth not, a man may diſpenſe his owne goods, Ergo, another may doe it for him: the Saints ſatisfactions are (as the Rhemiſts ſay. *annot.in Coloſſ.*1.verſ.24.) applicable by the ſufferens ſpeciall intention: Ergo, a man hath more right to diſpoſe of his owne, then the Pope hath, 2. No man can ſatisfie for himſelfe at all, and we denie abſolutely that there are any ſuch ſatisfactions applicable, priuately or publikly to the liuing, or to the dead: ſome of our reaſons are theſe.

Reaſons ſhewing that no ſatisfactions are applicable to the dead.

*Argum.*1. The Prophet ſaith, Pſal.49. A man can by no meanes redeeme his brother, he cannot giue his ranſome to God: but to deliuer ſoules out of purgatorie, and to ſatisfie for them, is to redeeme them: Ergo, by ſatisfactions ſoules cannot be helped out of purgatorie, if there were any.

2. No man can ſatisfie for himſelfe, much leſſe for any other; for when a man hath done all, hee is but an vnprofitable ſeruant, Luk.17.10. if he be an vnprofitable ſeruant for himſelfe, hee cannot bee profitable for another.

3. Dauid ceaſeth to pray for his childe, when it was dead: though he were out of hope of life for it in this world, yet he might haue prayed, and faſted, and ſatisfied for the ſoule of his childe being departed, if ſo be any ſuch courſe to be taken for the dead, were acceptable to God: But ſo Dauid doth not, but reaſoneth thus: 2.Sam.12.23. Now being dead, wherefore ſhould I now faſt? He ſeeth no reaſon why he ſhould faſt or vſe any other ſatisfaction for the dead.

4. Saint Ambroſe ſaith directly: Nihil proſunt flagella poſt mortem, & ideo Dauid, dum eſſet in iſtius corporis vita, in flagella ſe praeparauit, vt eum Dominus reciperet caſtigatum: Stripes profite not after death, and therefore Dauid, while he was in the life of this bodie, prepared himſelfe for ſtripes, that the Lord might receiue him now already chaſticed and corrected. de interpret.lib.4.c.4.

5. Gelaſius ſaith, as he is cited, cauſ.24.qu.3.c.4. de eo qui in diuino eſt iudicio conſtitutus, nobis fas non eſt aliud decernere praeter id, in quo eum dies ſupremus inuenit: Of him that is now appointed to the diuine iudgement, it is not lawfull for vs otherwiſe to diſcerne and iudge, then as his laſt day found him, &c. How then can any man thinke to alter the ſtate of the dead, by ſatisfactions, or indulgences whatſoeuer?

6. The wordes of the Popes Bull of indulgences are theſe: Verè pœnitentibus & confeſſis pleniſſimam concedimus veniam peccatorum: We grant plenarie forgiuenes of ſinnes to them that are truely penitent and confeſſed: but in purgatorie there is no repentance, which muſt be done in the bodie, when they may bring forth fruites of repentance; neither is there any Prieſt there to be confeſſed vnto: Ergo, the benefite of indulgences cannot extend to them.

7. We haue teſtimonie heere of ſome of our aduerſaries: theſe are of opinion, that indulgences do not profite the dead: Oſtienſis in ſumma.lib.5.tit.de remiſſionib.Num.9. Gabriel lect.57.in canon.miſſ. Ioan.Maior.in.4.diſt.20.qu.2.

THE SECOND QVESTION, OF THE MANner how Indulgences are applied to the dead.

The Papiſts.

55.Error. 1. FIrſt, ſome of them affirme, that the Pope may iudicially abſolue the ſoules in purgatorie, and that they doe belong vnto his iuriſdiction, and ſo hee may extend his indulgences vnto them, as vnto the liuing: Michael Medina diſput.7.de indulgent.c.34. Bellarmine with other Papiſts miſliketh this opinion, who denie not, but that the Pope may apply indulgences to the dead, but not iudicially, or as exerciſing any iuriſdiction ouer them. Bellarm.c.14.qu.2.

2. 56.Error. Secondly, Bellarmine affirmeth, that indulgences are profitable to the dead, per modum ſuffragij, after the manner of the ſuffrage of the Church, that as the ſuffrage or prayer of the Church doe helpe by way of merite, impetration, ſatisfaction; ſo indulgences are granted to the dead, as they are ſatisfactorie, and ſo per modum ſuffragij ſatisfactorij: after the manner of a ſuffrage as it is ſatisfactorie. Ibid.qu.3.

3. 57.Error. Thirdly, ſome of them thinke, that indulgences doe profit the dead, ex condigno, of condignitie and worthines: *Dominicus à Soto in 4. diſt.22. qu.2.art.3. Nauarr. de Iubilæo. notab.22. num.*20. Other of them rather thinke, that indulgences are not auaileable for the dead, otherwiſe then by the mercie of God, and ſo of congruitie, rather then of condignitie; ſo Caietanus, Petrus à Soto, Corduben. to whom Bellarmine ſubſcribeth: their reaſon is, becauſe one liuing cannot ſatisfie for another of condignitie, much leſſe for the dead. Bellarm.c.14.qu.4.

4. 58.Error. Fourthly, to apply indulgences to the dead, there is required a ſupreame and high authority, and therefore Biſhops and other inferior prelates cannot apply indulgences to the dead, but onely the Pope. ibid.qu.5.

5. 59.Error. Fifthly, the Pope cannot deliuer at his pleaſure ſoules out of purgatorie, but there muſt bee ſome particular iuſt cauſe belonging to the glorie of God, and the profit of the Church, &c. a generall cauſe is not ſufficient, for then Chriſt himſelfe ſhould haue deliuered all the ſoules already out of purgatorie. Bellarm.ibid.qu.5.

6. 60.Error. Sixthly, indulgences directly belong to the liuing, indirectly to the dead, no otherwiſe, then as the liuing doe performe the workes enioyned for the dead. Bellarm.ibid.

7. 61.Error. Seuenthly, indulgences doe not profite the dead in common, otherwiſe then as they reioyce one for anothers good, but onely thoſe ſoules are deliuered thereby, to whom they are particularly intended. Bellarm.c.14.qu.6.

8. 62.Error. Eighthly, the Pope may releaſe vnto a man liuing by indulgence, the paine of purgatorie, which otherwiſe he were ſubiect vnto. c.6.reſp.ad obiect.1.

9. 63.Error. Ninthly, concerning the greatnes of the paine of purgatorie, Bellarmine thinketh, that though it be greater then all the paines of this life, yet the voluntarie puniſhment of this life is more effectuall for the expiation of ſinne, then the more grieuous paine of purgatorie: becauſe this is a time of mercie, that of iuſtice: others doe thinke contrary, that one day of paine in purgatorie is more auaileable then many yeeres of moſt ſeuere penance in this life. Dominicus à Soto in 4. diſt.21.qu.2.artic.1. Bellarm.c.9.

The Proteſtants.

1. No binding or looſing but in earth in this life. First, 1. the Pope hath no power to extend his indulgences any way at all to the dead, either iudicially by way of abſolution, or indulgently by way of diſpenſation: for the Scripture is euident, whatſoeuer you binde in earth ſhall be bound in heauen, Matth.18.18. Gelaſius vrgeth theſe words, ſuper terram, vpon the earth: in hac ligatione defunctum nuſquam dixit abſolui, he no where ſaith, that a man dying being bound, can afterward be abſolued. cauſ.24.qu.3.c.2. And whereas Bellarmine telleth vs, that this is ſpoken onely of iudiciall abſolution: the words are generall of all binding and looſing, that it muſt be done vpon earth, and therefore cannot bee extended to them, which are dead.

The Pope hath no iuriſdiction ouer the dead. 2. Yet contrarie to this doctrine of Bellarmine, the Pope taketh vpon him as a iudge to abſolue and condemne the dead. 1. Becauſe he doth excommunicate the dead: which although Bellarmine ſaith is nothing elſe but a declaration of that ſentence, which ſhould haue beene pronounced, while they liued: yet it is euident by their owne law, that indulgentiæ non proſunt non ſubditis, that indulgences, abſolutions (and ſo conſequently, ligations, excommunications) doe not profite (and ſo likewiſe diſprofit or preiudice) them that are no ſubiects. decr,Greg.lib,5.tit.38.cap.4. Wherefore if the dead be not ſubiect to the Popes iuriſdiction, the ſentence of excommunication or abſolution doth not bind or looſe them. 2. It is Bellarmines owne poſition, vt indulgentiæ dentur, requiritur iuriſdictio: that indulgences may be granted, there is required a iuriſdiction. lib.1. de indulg.cap.14.qu.3. if the Pope then haue no iuriſdiction ouer the dead, he can grant no indulgences vnto them. 3. One of their owne Doctors ſaith: Animæ exiſtentes in purgatorio, ſunt de iuriſdictione papæ: Soules being in purgatorie are of the Popes iuriſdiction, Iohan. Angelus. 4. And though they will not be bound to the opinion of one Doctor, yet they cannot refuſe the iudgement of the Pope: Clemens 6. thus ſaith in his Bull, Mandamus Angelis paradiſi: Wee command the Angels of Paradiſe, to carry the ſoules deliuered out of purgatorie to the glorie of Paradiſe, &c. If the Pope then do command Angels, and ſo do exerciſe iuriſdiction ouer them, much more ouer purgatorie ſoules: the Pope then cannot giue indulgence, but where he hath iuriſdiction: but their new Doctors aſhamed of the groſſenes of the elder Papiſts, allow the Pope no iuriſdiction ouer the dead, then conſequently he cannot grant them any indulgence. The Pope commandeth Angels.

Secondly. 1. We deny that the ſuffrages and the prayers of the liuing, are ſatisfactory for one another, but only deprecatorie & impetratorie: for prayer receiueth al the force thereof from faith; Ia.5.15.

Epheſ.2.8.

Prayer not ſatisfactorie neither for the liuing nor dead.

the prayer of faith: and faith is grounded vpon grace and fauour: as the Apoſtle ſaith, By grace are ye ſaued through faith. It is one thing to pray and intreate, another to ſatisfie: as Origene ſheweth the difference. Cæteri precibus, peccata Chriſtus ſolus poteſtate dimiſit: Others by prayers, Chriſt by his power onely remitteth ſinnes: hom.24.in Numer. If then we cannot ſatisfie by our prayers for the liuing, much leſſe for the dead.

2. Some of the Papiſts do thinke, that indulgences do not profit the dead, but ſola vi ſuffragiorum, onely by the force of ſuffrages or prayers: Oſtienſ. If indulgences then are not auaileable but by prayer, indulgences are ſuperfluous and needleſſe. But I haue ſhewed before, that neither prayers profit for the dead.

Reuel.5.9.

All ſatisfaction muſt be of condignitie.

Thirdly, 1. If an indulgence be an application of Chriſts merits, it muſt needs bee auaileable ex condigno, of condignitie; for Chriſt, I truſt, hath worthily ſatisfied, and done all neceſſarie things to our redemption, thou art worthie. 2. A ſatisfaction muſt be ex condigno, of condignitie, or worthines: for how can a man facere ſatis, ſatisfie, that is fully content, if he do it not ſufficiently? An acceptation is not properly a ſatisfaction, the one is of fauour, the other of debt, Rom.4.4. To him that worketh, the wages is not counted by fauour, but by debt; but ſatisfaction is a worke, therefore what is due vnto it, is by debt, and ſo of condignitie; congruitie is of fauour. 3. But wee affirme that neither indulgences, nor any other workes of the liuing do benefit the dead at all; and ſo neither of congruitie, nor condignitie, Reuel.14.13. They that die in the Lord, their workes follow them: their owne workes, and not any bodies elſe. Leo Epiſt.89. Multum vtile & neceſſarium eſt vt peccatorum reatus ante vltimum diem ſacerdotali ſupplicatione ſoluatur: It is verie profitable and neceſſary, that the guilt of ſinnes ſhould be looſed by the ſupplication of the Prieſt before the laſt day, that is the day of death, &c. if it be neceſſarie before, then it commeth too late afterward.

To applie indulgences to the dead, the Pope hath no more power then other Biſhops, that is none at all.

Fourthly, 1. That the Pope hath no more iuriſdiction in the Church then other Biſhops in their dioceſſe, I haue ſhewed before in the confutation of the 41. error: ſo that I need not to repeat the ſame here. 2. If the Pope haue no iuriſdiction at all ouer the ſoules in purgatorie, and ſo no more then any other prelate hath; he hath no more anthority to conferre indulgences vpon them, then others. 3. All the authoritie that Saint Peter had, was to feede his ſheepe, when Chriſt ſaid, paſce oues, feed my ſheepe, Iohn.21. but the ſoules in purgatorie are not his ſheepe, becauſe they cannot be fed, as Bellarmine confeſſeth, c.14.qu.2. therefore neither Peter, nor the Pope from Peter can chalenge any prerogatiue more then other ouer the dead. 4. That prerogatiue which Peter had ouer hell, when Chriſt ſaid, Hell ſhall not preuaile againſt it, Matthew 16. 18. was giuen to his faith and confeſſion, and ſo is common to all faithfull: as Ambroſe well expoundeth: Non de carne Petri, ſed de fide dictum eſt, quia portæ mortis non præualebunt, ſed confeſſio vicit infernum: Not of the fleſh of Peter, but of his faith it was ſaid, the gates of hell ſhall not preuaile, &c. de incarnat.c.5. his confeſſion ouercame hell.

What particular cauſes the Pope hath to deliuer ſome ſoules aut of Purgatory, not all.

Fifthly, firſt if the Pope cannot deliuer all ſoules out of purgatorie, then is one of your great Doctors proued a lyar and a falſe prophet: Papa ſi vellet poſſet totum purgatorium euacuare: the Pope if he would, could euacuate and emptie all purgatorie. Iohan. Angel. 2. But what particular cauſe I pray you doth moue the Pope to deliuer ſome ſoules, more then other? hath he ſome ſpeciall reuelation, to know the particular needs of the purgatorie ſoules? or is not the generall cauſe of Chriſts glorie in ſending ſo many ſoules to be Angels fellowes, to be preferred before the Popes particular cauſe, in bringing ſo many Angels to his purſe? for if they would ſpeake plainely, this is the particular cauſe, that moueth the Pope, when hee or his are particularly waged and feed to deliuer ſome particular ſoules. 3. Wherefore this old obiection againſt the Popes purgatorie is not yet anſwered: that if the Pope can deliuer all ſoules at once, and will not, he is vncharitable; if he would and cannot, then Saint Peters keyes doe faile and are not auaileable. 4. But concerning your reſpect of particular cauſe, Clemens the ſixt derideth it: for he in his Bull giueth authoritie cruce ſignatis, to thoſe, that tooke vpon them the croſſe, vt tres vel quatuor animas, quas vellent, to deliuer out of purgatorie three or foure ſoules, which they would, &c. this power was left to the libertie of their will, not tyed to the neceſſitie of the cauſe: 5. And do you doubt, whether Chriſt hath cleered purgatorie? you ſay, that by his deſcent he harrowed hell, and deliuered all the Patriarches: hath he done leſſe for beleeuers ſince his death, then for thoſe which before by faith, expected his death? the Apoſtle ſaith, the bloud of Chriſt doth cleanſe vs from all ſinne, 1.Ioh.1.7. what remaineth then to bee cleanſed in purgatorie? Saint Ambroſe ſaith, Qui hic non acceperit remiſſionem peccatorum, illic non erit, quia vita æterna remiſſio peccatorum eſt: He that hath not receiued here the remiſſion of ſinnes, ſhall not bee there, that is in heauen, for eternall life is the remiſſion of ſinnes: de bon.mort.c.2. Hee then that hath here receiued remiſſion of ſinnes, is preſently in heauen, and ſo not in purgatorie; hee that hath not, ſhall neuer come to heauen; and ſo is in hell.

6.

1.Cor.15.29.

The liuing can not performe any ſatisfactorie works for the dead.

Sixthly, 1. It is ſtrange doctrine, that ſatisfactorie workes may be enioyned the liuing in behalfe of the dead: Bellarmine himſelfe reporteth this to haue beene an erronious practiſe of the Montaniſts and Marcionites, to baptize the liuing in the name of the dead; to the which cuſtome ſome thinke Saint Paul had relation, where he ſaith, why are they baptized for the dead? Bellarmine lib.1.p.1800. But if a man may pray, and faſt, and giue almes for the dead, why not alſo bee baptized for them?

2. The

3. The Diſciples, when Dorcas was dead, did not vndertake any workes for her of theirs, but onely ſhewed her owne works, the coates and garments which ſhe had made, whereof Saint Cyprian ſaith, Non pro defuncta ſuis vocibus, ſed ipſius operibus deprecantes: Not making requeſt for the dead with their voyces, but with her workes, ſerm. de eleemoſ. And againe: Confiteantur fratres vos ſinguli delictum ſuum, dum adhuc, qui deliquit, in ſeculo eſt, dum admitti confeſſio eius poteſt, dum ſatisfactio & remiſſio per ſacerdotem facta apud dominum grata eſt: Confeſſe (brethren) euery one his fault, while he that ſinned is yet in the world, while his confeſſion may be admitted, while ſatisfaction and remiſſion giuen by the Prieſt are accepted with God, ſerm. de lapſ. Ergo, ſatisfaction done afterward, is not accepted.

7 Seuenthly, 1. what reaſon haue you to thinke, that your Limbus was emptied all at once at Chriſts comming, and that Purgatorie ſhall bee but ſucceſſiuely cleered, and one after another deliuered? If ſome are freed, while other frie in Purgatorie, becauſe of ſome particular prayers, the ſame reaſon may be alleaged for the Fathers that were in Limbus, that they alſo might haue been holpen by particular prayers. If you ſay Chriſt was not then come, and therefore hell could not be harrowed; ſo neither is Chriſt yet come to iudgement, before which time you ſay all Purgatorie ſhall not be cleanſed. 2. To ſee others exempted from paine, and themſelues ſtill in bondage, it can be no great ioye: the Scripture ſaith, there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, when they ſee all the Prophets in the kingdome of God, and your ſelues thruſt out at the doores. The beholding then of other mens felicitie doth not miniſter ioy, but encreaſe torment to them that are ſtill in miſerie. 3. And why are not the common prayers of the whole Church for all ſoules as effectual to deliuer all, as particular prayers are of ſome to deliuer their friends? what letteth then but all ſoules ſhould be let looſe by common prayers? vnleſſe it be this, as the truth is, then the Pope ſhould want vtterance for his Iubile pardons, and ſoule-prieſts for their Maſſes for the dead. 4. That all the ſoules of the faithfull and iuſt men (for as for vnbeleeuers, they haue their part in the lake,) are altogether in heauen, the Apoſtle witneſſeth, Wee are come to celeſtiall Ieruſalem, to the congregation of the firſt borne, &c. to the ſpirits of iuſt and perfect men. I aske where theſe iuſt men are, are they not in celeſtiall Ieruſalem? they are then all out of Purgatorie. Saint Cyprian ſaith: Ad refrigerium iuſti vocantur, ad ſupplicium rapiuntur iniuſti, datur velocius tutela fidentibus, perfidis pœna: The iuſt are called to reſt and refreſhing, the vniuſt are haled to paine, pardon is quickely giuen to the beleeuing, to the perfidious paine: ſerm. de immortal. All men then are either iuſt, or vniuſt: the iuſt are ſpeedily carried to heauen, the vniuſt to puniſhment: no iuſt men then are out of heauen, nor none vniuſt ſhall come thither. 5. If the Pope know how to deliuer ſome, and not all out of Purgatorie, hee hath not Saint Peters ſpirit: of whom Saint Ambroſe thus ſaith: Hic eſt Petrus, qui reſpondit pro cæteris Apoſtolis, &c. quia nouit non ſolum proprium ſed commune ſeruare, &c, This is Peter, which anſwered for the reſt of the Apoſtles, and therefore is called a foundation, (or a rocke or ſtone) becauſe he knew how to ſaue not himſelfe only, but in common: de incarnat. c, 4.

Luke 13.18.
The common prayers of the Church more auaileable, then priuate and particular.

Apocal. 21.8.
Heb. 12.22.

8 Eighthly, 1. no thankes to the Pope to deliuer a man from that, which he ſhall neuer taſte of: for, there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus, ſuch need neither feare hell, nor Purgatorie. 2. And is it in the Popes power to deliuer a man that hee ſhall neuer goe to Purgatorie? how commeth it then to paſſe, that he cannot deliuer his owne ſoule from thence? for, you doe not thinke otherwiſe, but that ſome of your Popes are in Purgatorie; it were in vaine elſe to ſay ſo many Maſſes for the Pope when he is dead. The Scripture thus reaſoneth, Noe, Iob, Daniel, though they were in the middeſt of it, ſhall neither deliuer ſonne nor daughter, but onely their owne ſoules. A man may ſaue himſelfe, though he ſaue not another; but if he ſaue others, not inſtrumentally, as one that giueth counſell, but efficiently, as one hauing power, as they imagine of the Pope, he muſt needs alſo ſaue himſelfe: he therefore that ſeeth the Popes ſoule broyling in Purgatorie, will neuer thinke hee can pull others out of the fire. 3. It is not the Popes pardon, but a mans owne faith that preſerueth him from condemnation: He that beleeueth ſhal not come into condemnation, but is paſſed from death to life. S. Ambroſe wel ſaith: Aliæ cruces nihil mihi proſunt, ſola crux Chriſti mihi vtilis eſt, per quam mihi mundus crucifixus eſt, &c. Other croſſes profit me little, onely the croſſe of Chriſt is profitable to me, whereby I am crucified to the world, and the world to me, &c. lib. 6. in Luc. Wherefore no croſſes of penance, of any ſatisfactorie or painefull workes, but onely faith in Chriſts croſſe doth deliuer vs.

Rom. 8.1.

Ezech. 14.20.
The Pope cannot deliuer his owne ſoule from purgatorie, much leſſe other, if any ſuch were.
Iohn 5.24.

9 Ninthly, 1. Bellarmine ſaith truly, that repentance in this life is more effectuall to doe away ſinne, then penance or puniſhment afterward: for Auguſtine well ſaith, Ibi erit pœnitentia dolorem habens, ſed medicinam non habens: There ſhall be repentance hauing griefe, but no reliefe: tom. 9. de rectitud. cathol. conuerſ.

2. For it is euident that after this life there is no place at all for repentance, but for iudgement: Where there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſinnes, but a horrible looking for of iudgement. But after this life, ther is no ſacrifice for ſinnes: Ergo, an horrible expectation of iudgement. Auguſtine againe ſaith, Corrigant ſe, qui tales ſunt, dum viuunt, ne poſtea velint & non poſſint, quia ſubito venit mors, & non eſt qui corrigatur, ſed vt in ignem mittatur: Let them that are ſuch, correct themſelues while they liue, leſt afterward they would and cannot; becauſe death commeth ſodainely, that they can bee no more corrected, but committed to the fire, ſerm de tempor. 164.

Heb. 10.26.
No place for repentance after this life.

3. When they are ſo deuided themſelues about purgatorie: ſome holding, that a man cannot, though

The papiſticall variance about purgatorie.

though he be a notable ſinner,be aboue twentie yeeres in purgatorie, Dominic. a Soto in 4. diſt. 21. qu. 2. art. 1, others,that purgatorie paines my continue an hundred,yea, a thouſand yeeres, Bellar. lib. 1. de indulg. c. 9. ſome that purgatorie paine exceedeth all paine in this life, Dominic. à Soto ibid. other that the penance of this life is more effectuall: doe they not now by this their vncertaintie make all the world beleeuẽ that purgatorie fire is but a drowſie dreame of their owne?

For if there were any ſuch purgatorie paine, it ſhould farre exceed all the griefe of this life, and ſo conſequently more effectually purge ſinne: As Origen ſaith, Vt vehementius corpus cruciant verbera nudum, quam veſtitum; ſic anima carnis indumento depoſito, ſubtilius ſentiet tormenta: Like as the bodie naked feeleth ſtripes more,then clothed; ſo the ſoule being vnclothed of the fleſh, hath a more liuely ſenſe of torment. Origen. ex Pamphil.

5. Bellarmines reaſon is very good vtterly to ouerthrow Purgatory penance,becauſe that is a time of iuſtice,this of mercie: this ſheweth well, not that repentance onely is more effectuall in this life, but that it is onely here to be found: as S. Auguſtine well applieth theſe words of the Apoſtle, 2. Cor. 6. 2. Behold now the accepted time, behold the day of ſaluation: Ecce nunc tempus ſalutis, tempus eſt nunc remiſſionis pœnitentibus, ſed tempus erit poſt mortem vindicationis negligentibus confiteri peccata: Behold now the time of ſaluation, the time of remiſſion to the penitent, but after death it is a time of vengeance to all them that neglected here to confeſſe their ſinnes. ſerm. 66.

Penance in this life more effectuall then purgatorie paine by Bellarmines owne confeſſion.

6. Laſtly,becauſe Bellarmine ſeemeth to extenuate the paines of purgatorie, preferring the ſufferings of this life before the torments thereof: I will to the ſame purpoſe adioyne the notable teſtimonie,and moſt godly ſentence of the bleſſed ſeruant of God Maſter Latimer, a reuerend Biſhop and holy Martyr: who doubteth not to ſay,that he had rather bee in purgatorie, then in Lollards Tower the Biſhop of Londons priſon,for diuers reaſons,whereof ſome I will ſet downe.

1. I might in the one die for lacke of meate and drinke,but not in the other.
2. In this I might lacke charitie.
3. Looſe my patience.
4. I might be in perill of death.
5. I might be without ſuretie of ſaluation.
6. In this I might murmure againſt God.
7. I might diſpleaſe God.
8. I might be iudged to perpetuall priſon.
9. I might be brought to beare a fagot.
10. I might be ſeparated from Chriſt.
11. I might be a member of the diuell.
12. An inheritour of hell.

In that I could not.

13. In this my Lord and his Chaplens might manacle me by night,
14. They might ſtrangle me and ſay I hanged my ſelfe.
15. They might haue me to their conſiſtorie and iudge me after their faſhion.

In that they could not.

Ergo, I had leuer be there then here,for though the fire be called neuer ſo hot, yet and if the Biſhops two fingers can ſhake away a pecce, a friars coule, an other part, and ſcala cœli altogether, I will neuer found Abbey, Colledge, nor Chantrey for that matter: thus much Maſter Latimer, Fox, pag. 1742.

Thus this godlie Martyr derided long ſince,this popiſh ſcare-bug of purgatorie fire,making it inferior to the Biſhops priſon. And Bellarmine much diſſenteth not,making the penance which a man may ſuffer in this life of greater efficacie and vertue, then purgatorie paines: This being ſo, men may learne to be wiſer, and ſeeke to bee reconciled to God in this life, and not much care for Popes pardons,which are not ſo much worth,as to bee ſet free out of their Biſhops priſons,and Inquiſitors purgatorie.

Now in the laſt place generally concerning indulgences, let vs ſee the iudgement and practiſe of other Churches.

1. The ancient Greeke Church did not take vpon them by any indulgence to receiue any,that offended before full ſatisfaction made, and their vnfained repentance euidently by manifeſt and apparent ſignes teſtified. So Baſil ſaith: Poteſtas remittendi peccata, non eſt abſolute data, ſed in reſipiſcentis obedientia, &c. The power of remitting ſinnes is not abſolutely giuen, but conſiſteth in the obedience of the partie repenting,and his conſent,that hath the cure of his ſoule,&c. And as he teacheth, ſo he practiſed: for he would not receiue Valens the Emperour, vntill he had publikely profeſſed,that he embraced the doctrine of Baſil, and ſhewed effectuall fruites and ſignes of repentance: as Ambroſe likewiſe would not admit Theodoſius the Emperor,vntil he had ſpent 8. moneths in ſorrow and mourning,and ſo had ſhewed his effectuall repentance.

The Moderne Greeke Church alloweth no indulgences for gaine, nor for thoſe which are in purgatorie. The Muſcouites to this day hold indulgences and Iubilees, nullius efficaciæ to be of no force or efficacie.

Saranus elucid. error. c. 2. error. 12.

2. Againſt the facilitie and lauiſh vſe of indulgences, Cyprian thus writeth, Si quis praepropera feſtinatione ſtinatione temerarius, remiſſionem peccatorũ dare ſe cunctis putat poſſe,&c. If any man raſh in his prepoſterous haſt think he can giue remiſſion of ſinnes to all, he doth not only not profit, but hurteth them which are fallen,&c. But before him Tertullian more directly: Præcauent, quaſi nolint admitti aliquid, indulgent, quaſi velint admitti, quando ſi admitti nolint non debeant indulgere: They forewarne them (of ſins) as though they would not haue them committed, & they pardon them, as though they would haue them committed, wheras if they would not haue them committed, they ſhould not haue them pardoned,&c. And again: Si diſciplinæ ſolius officia ſortitus es, nec imperio præſidere, ſed miniſterio, quis aut quantus es indulgere, qui neque prophetam, nec apoſtolum exhibeas, cares ea virtute, cuius eſt indulgere: If thou onely haſt obtained the office of diſcipline, not being ſet ouer others by any imperiall power, but miniſteriall: who art thou to giue indulgence, who being neither Prophet nor Apoſtle, doſt want that power, which is to graunt indulgence,&c. to giue indulgence he thinketh to be a Propheticall or Apoſtolicall gift, both which are now ceaſed: In the moderne Africane and Æthiopike Church there is no libertie or power graunted to their Patriarke to giue indulgences vpon any occaſion whatſoeuer: Zaga Zabo an Æthiopike Biſhop ſo confeſſeth.

Harm. §. 8. p. 218.

4 The application of indulgences to the dead to releaſe them out of Purgatorie was not knowne of auncient time in the Romane Church: for whereas the cuſtome was to giue releaſe vnto the penitent before Eſther in the laſt weeke of Lent: Innocentius decreed, that if any were ſicke they ſhould be releaſed at any time, giuing this reaſon, Ne de ſeculo abſque communione diſcedat: Leaſt hee ſhould goe out of the world without the communion,&c. their opinion then was, that there could be no remiſſion or relaxation after death: and in deede of ſuch indulgences, their owne men confeſſe, that there is nothing expreſſely found either in the Scriptures, or ſayings of the Fathers: and that Boniface the 8. was the firſt, that extended indulgences to Purgatorie, which was about anno 1300. Oſtienſis and Gabriel Biel are of opinion, that Indulgences profit not the dead, as Bellarmine confeſſeth: yea one of their late Popes, Clemens the 5. decreed againſt certaine Queſtors and Pardoners, that made them beleeue, which gaue them almes: Quod animas tres vel plures ex purgatorio (vt mendaciter aſſerunt) extrahant: That they might draw three or more of their friends ſoules out of Purgatorie, as they falſely affirmed, &c. It is then a falſe and lying aſſertion, by the Popes owne teſtimonie, that by any ſuch meanes ſoules may be pulled out of Purgatorie. Adde hereunto the teſtimonie of Roffenſis: Si tollas purgatorium, quorſum indulgentijs eſt opus: If you take away Purgatorie, what need is there of indulgences,&c. But ſome of their owne writers and Popes, as we haue ſeene, take away this vſe of indulgences, and ſo conſequently there ſhall be none at all: and ſo, themſelues being witneſſes, theſe things follow in order, no Purgatorie no indulgences, no indulgences, no Iubile: and thus both Purgatorie, Popiſh indulgencies, and Iubiles are found to bee meere humane deuiſes, and plants not of Gods planting, and ſo ſhall be rooted out. All the purgation of our ſoules is in this life, firſt, the expiatorie purgation of our ſoules is by the blood of Chriſt as the Apoſtle ſaith: who by himſelfe hath purged our ſinnes: there is alſo a purgation, applicatorie, that is by affliction: as Iob ſaith, Exibo tanquam aurum: I ſhall come forth like gold: then there is a third purgation which ſhall bee of our bodies by fire in the day of the Lord, when all corruption ſhall be purged from our bodies: and ſo the Lord at his appearing is likened by the Prophet to a purging fire and fullers ſope: other Purgatorie wee acknowledge none after this life.

Thus haue I briefely diſcouered the errors of the Popes Iubile, and Indulgences: whereby I truſt it is euident, how they delude the world with their fooleries, and ſeeke to ſnare men with their toyiſh ceremonies, and to blinde them with their phantaſticall deuices. They that haue not viſited Rome the laſt Iubile yeare, neede not repent them, that they went not ſo farre to ſee nothing: they that went, at their returne (I truſt) did remember what they haue ſeene, and regard ſuch toyes but as a ſtage play, and thinke, that they may finde a much better Iubile at home in their Countrie by the faith of the Goſpell, than they could ſee at Rome in the Popiſh pompous vanitie.

I haue now ſpunne out (by Gods aſſiſtance) this wearie taske, and found out an end of this long twined thread: the cauſe which I haue handled, is of God; the ſtrength wherewith I haue trauailed in it, was from God; the end wherefore I haue laboured in it, is for God. And as to his honour I referre all theſe my labours, as the principall end; ſo to the iudgement of the true Church of God I ſubmit my ſelfe and my penne, as the meane, whereby I may attaine that chiefe end. I ſay no more, but with Auguſtine: Si quid in ſcriptis meis veri comprehenderis, exiſtendo non eſt meum; at intelligendo & amando & tuum ſit & meum: ſiquid falſi conuiceris, errando fuerit meum, ſed iam cauendo, nec tuum fuerit, nec meum: If you finde that is true in my writings, it is not mine in being, but in vnderſtanding, and louing the ſame, let it be both mine and thine: if thou conuince any thing that is falſe, it was mine in erring, but let it be neither mine nor thine in heede taking: lib. 3. de Trinitat. præfat. But as I am not guiltie to my ſelfe of any error eſcaped, but am perſwaded that I haue throughout the truth defended; ſo I would deſire the Chriſtian reader to be aduiſed in iudging that, which was not without aduiſement written. And here againe I remember Auguſtines words in the ſame place: Sicut lectorem meum nolo mihi eſſe deditum; ita correctorem nolo ſibi: ille me non amet amplius, quam catholicam fidem; iſte ſe non amet amplius, quam catholicam veritatem: As I would not haue the reader addicted to me, ſo neither the corrector wedded to himſelfe: let not him be more affected to me, than to the veritie; nor the other loue himſelfe more than the trueth, &c. And ſo I conclude: Videor mihi debitum huius ingentis operis reddidiſſe adiuuante Deo, quibus parum, vel nimium eſt, mihi ignoſcant; quibus autem ſatis eſt, non mihi ſed domino mecum gratias congratulantes agant: I haue now by Gods aſſiſtance rendred the debt of this great worke, to whom it is ſhort or ouer, let them forgiue me; to whom it ſeemeth ſufficient, let vs to God giue thankes together, who enableth vs to euery good worke, to whom be praiſe through Ieſus Chriſt in his Church for euer. Amen.

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE SIR THOMAS MIDDELTON LORD MAIOR, AND TO THE right Worſhipfull Companies and Comminaltie of the Citie of London.

I Doe here preſent vnto you of your owne, a catalogue of ſuch good workes, as haue been done ſince the times of the Goſpell, eſpecially in this honourable City: but what ſaid I? (of your owne) nay of our owne we can haue no good thing: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, It is God which worketh in you both the will and the deed: I here then offer vnto your view, ſuch worthie acts, as God hath ſtirred vp the worſhipfull citizens of your body to be inſtrumẽts of. A more exact rehearſall I would haue made, if I could haue received as full inſtructions from all your ſeuerall Companies, as I had from ſome of them, but ſpecially from the Vniuerſities: but notwithſtanding the Lord Maiors care, that then was, in ſending his precepts, and yours that now are in the place, yet I failed of the helpes which I expected: which if after may be had vpon a ſecond conſultation, that which is now wanting may be ſupplied. In the meane time, here I haue taken vpon me to proue, that the Goſpell in the ſpace of 60 yeeres hath brought forth more fruit, then twice ſo many of the late times of Poperie can ſhew: yea to adde more, I haue heard by ſome that haue made diligent ſearch, that more hath been performed in this kind, of founding of free Schooles, Hoſpitals, and other like true deedes of charitie, ſince the firſt of Queene Elizabeth, then can be found for fiue hundred yeeres before from the Conqueſt vntill that time. But howſoeuer that may be, it is ſufficient for my purpoſe to make good the former compariſon of the times: And verily I thinke alſo that as theſe times exceed the former, ſo the pious and charitable workes performed within this time in this worthie Citie, may equalize[a] all the kingdome beſide, and may compare, if not goe beyond any Citie in the world. So that in theſe foure points haue the charitable workes of Proteſtants exceeded them of the Papiſts: 1. in number, 2. in quantitie and greatnes, as is euident in Maſter Suttons goodly Hoſpitall: 3. in qualitie: theirs were done in the pride of their heart, in opinion of merit to purchaſe remiſſion of ſinnes, and the kingdome of heauen: ours only ſerue as teſtimonies of our faith: 4. in the end: they erected foundations to the honour of Saints, Proteſtants to the glorie of God. In ſuch workes this Citie hath abounded to the praiſe of God, the honor of this beautifull body, and good example of the whole land: into euery part whereof, but ſpecially to the two Vniuerſities the bountie of this Citie hath ſtreamed. So that we may ſay here of London, as S. Paul of Corinthus, Your zeale hath prouoked many. Who then will not pray for the proſperitie of this Citie? and ſay with the Prophet Dauid, O pray for the peace of Ieruſalem, let them proſper that loue thee, peace be within thy walles, and proſperitie within thy palaces. This Citie is a nurſing mother to the whole land, the Chamber, Treaſurie and ſtore-houſe of the kingdome: like the two golden pipes which conueyed the fatnes of the oliue into the golden Candleſticke of the Church. But as the oyle went thorough golden pipes, ſo the fatnes of almes-deedes muſt runne foorth by good and lawfull meanes: Men muſt not doe wrong, deceiue, gather riches by extortion, violence, vſurie and ſuch like, that they may giue almes: this were but like the Phariſaicall waſhing of platters, that were within full of briberie and exceſſe. S. Paul hath giuen vs a good rule for this: We muſt not doe euill, that good may come thereof: and as Auguſtine ſaith of the ſinne of adulterie: Ne putetis fratres quotidie facienda adulteria & quotidie eleemoſynis mundanda, De 10. Chord. 11. Doe not thinke brethren that we may euery day commit adulterie, and euery day clenſe it by almes, &c. So wee may ſay of all other ſinnes, of couetouſnes, pride, extortion, drunkennes, ſwearing, prophaning the Lords day and the like, wee muſt not liue in them, and thinke to clenſe the foulenes of ſinne, by a little almes. And ſeeing I am fallen into mention of theſe ouerflowing ſinnes of the Citie: as the Lord hath giuen you a minde in your places to doe good; ſo let it be your care to ſuppreſſe theſe vices. And vnto you (my Lord Maior) hath the Lord committed this truſt, to ſee theſe inordinate vices corrected and reſtrained, as adulterers to be puniſhed, the Lords day not to be prophaned: for externall matters, which belong vnto the body, as the moderating of prices of victuals, enlarging the aſſiſes of bread and beere, ſingular is the care of this Citie: ſo if you ſhew your ſelfe as carefull and faithfull in things which concerne Gods glorie and the good of mens ſoules, as God ſhall haue the honour, ſo you ſhall finde comfort. Goe on then (worthie Citizens) in your Chriſtian courſe both waies in doing of good, and vndoing and hindring what is euill: and let me be bold to diſcharge toward you, the Apoſtles charge to vs the Miniſters: Charge them which be rich in this world, that they be not high minded, and that they truſt not in vncertaine riches, but in the liuing God (which giueth vs abundantly all things to enioy) that they doe good, and be rich in good workes, and be readie to diſtribute and communicate, laying vp in ſtore for themſelues a good foundation againſt the time to come, that they may obtaine eternall life: to the which the Lord bring vs in Chriſt.

A CATALOGVE OF SVCH CHARITABLE WORKES, AS HAVE BEEN DONE IN THE TIMES OF THE GOSPELL WITHin the ſpace of 60. yeers, vnder the happie raignes of King Edward, Queene Elizabeth, King Iames our Gratious Soueraigne.

The charitable workes in 60. yeeres in London, Cambridge and Oxford, are summed to a Million or thereabout.

WHereas the profeſſors of the Goſpell are generally charged by the Romaniſts as barren and fruitleſſe of good workes: I will, to ſtop their ſlanderous mouthes, ſhew by a particular induction, that more charitable workes hath been performed in the times of the Goſpell, then they can ſhew to haue been done in the like time in poperie, ſpecially ſince the publike oppoſition of religion, which began about 250. yeeres ſince, counting from the times of Iohn Wickliffe: or in twice ſo much time now going immediately before. And becauſe it would require an endleſſe labour to make collectiō of al ſuch works, as may be found through the land, which could not be done without a ſpeciall commiſſion to that end, and generall ſuruey, which I truſt may be by ſome vndertaken hereafter: In the meane time I will giue inſtance onely of the three moſt famous places of this land, which haue moſt abounded in theſe fruites, namely, the City of London, and the two Vniuerſities of Cambridge and Oxford: Now then will I proceed to this golden catalogue, which ſhould haue been inſerted, p. 1068. but vpon the reaſons there alleaged, reſpited and tranſmitted ouer to this place; I will begin firſt with the famous workes of our Kings and Nobles, and then deſcend to the particular acts exemplified by others in the three places giuen in inſtance.

The ſite and edifices of theſe Hoſpitals giuen by the King, may be eſtimated at 20000. pound.

King Edward of bleſſed memorie. Ann. 1552. in the 6. yeere of his raigne founded the Hoſpitals of Chriſts Church in London, and of S. Thomas in Southwarke, and the next yeere of Bridewell, for the maintenance of 3. ſorts of poore: the firſt for the education of poore children, the ſecond for impotent and lame perſons, the third for idle perſons, to imploy and ſet them on worke: a Princely gift whereby prouiſion was made for all ſorts of poore people, ſuch as either were poore borne, caſually, or wilfully poore: Beſide by the ſaid vertuous Prince were founded two free ſchooles in Louth, in Lincolneſhire, the one for Grammar, the other for the Engliſh tongue, to make children fit for the Grammar ſchoole, with liberall maintenance for a ſchoolemaſter and vſher in them both: Likewiſe Chriſts Colledge in the Vniuerſitie of Cambridge enioyeth a fellowſhip, and 3. ſchollarſhips by the gift of the ſaid excellent Prince.

But of all other times, the raigne of our late renowned Soueraigne, Queene Elizabeth of happie memorie, hath abounded with excellent fruits, and the yeeres that haue run ſince vnder the godly and peaceable gouernment of our noble King Iames: where firſt honourable mention is to bee made of theſe worthy Princes themſelues: Q. Elizabeth, though no new foundations were laid by her hand, that came to my knowledge; yet herein ſhe was a princely benefactor, 1. in confirming and ratifying many Colledges, Hoſpitals, free Schooles, ſpecially in maintaining the priuiledges and immunities of both the Vniuerſities, which otherwiſe had been in danger to bee ſhaken and violated. 2. In patronizing the Goſpell, and procuring perpetuall peace at home, both which gaue opportunitie of many charitable workes, which were by this occaſion vndertaken. 3. In making ſuch excellent lawes for the encouraging and ſtirring vp of her ſubiects to doe good workes: of which kinde theſe ſpecially are worthy to bee remembred. The firſt worthy act in this kind, was the Statute of prouiſion of corne for Colledges in both Vniuerſities, made in the eighteenth of her Maieſties raigne, whereby it is prouided, that in euery leaſe to bee made, the third part of the rent ſhould bee paid in corne for the mending and encreaſing of the common diet; Wheat to bee ſerued in, at 6. ſhillings 8. pence, and Mault at 5. ſhillings the quarter, or ſo much money: by benefit of which act, the rents vpon new leaſes, which are made voide without reſeruation of ſuch prouiſion, are doubled, to the great releefe of the companie of ſtudents: The benefit whereof may in time ariſe to the encreaſe of more then 12. thouſand pounds, per annum, in both Vniuerſities: this act was deuiſed, and procured by the prudent and prouident care of Sir William Cecill, L. Treaſurer, and Chanceller of the Vniuerſitie of Cambridge: An other act was made in the Parliament held, anno 39. chap. 3. for the releefe of the poore in euery Pariſh, and ſetting of them to worke: by vertue of which act, there cannot be leſſe gathered yeerely for the aforeſaid charitable vſes thorow the land then 30. or 40. thouſand pounds yeerely; yeerely: another in the ſame Parliament, chap. 5. enacted, authoriſing euery one without further licence to be procured, to build and erect almeſ-houſes, Hoſpitals, free Schooles, houſes of correction, and ſuch like, ſo that the reuenewes laid vnto them exceed not 200. pound by the yeere, nor be vnder 10. pound: The third act was made anno 43. chap. 3. for the relieuing of maimed ſouldiers and marriners, and raiſing of penſions for their maintenance: A fourth act in the ſame Parliament, chap. 4. was deuiſed for reſtoring of lands, houſes, ſtockes of money miſimployed, which were giuen to charitable vſes. Theſe and many other ſuch wholeſome lawes were eſtabliſhed vnder the raigne of our late gracious Soueraigne; whereby many charitable workes were no leſſe effected, then if out of her owne treaſure they had been procured.

120000. encreaſe of rent in time in both Vniuerſities.

30000 collection for the poore.

Our Worthie King that now is, heerein hath followed Queene Elizabeths ſteps; as in founding the Kings Colledge at Chelſey, ordained for Diuines to bee employed in the writing of Controuerſies: to the which that induſtrious man, and learned writer, the Reuerend Deane of Excester, Doctor Sutcliffe, Prouoſt of the ſaid Colledge, hath been a large benefactor and contributor: So neceſſarie a worke and profitable for the good of the whole Church, what well minded man will not wiſh may proſper? ſuch as God hath enabled, cannot do better then ſet to their helping hands, to finiſh the building begun, & to raiſe vp the walles, which are now but riſing out of the ground, and to thruſt vnder their ſhoulders to ſupport this building, which Atlas alone would not ſuffice to beare: Euery great Citie almoſt in Popiſh countries can finde a way to build a Colledge for Ieſuites to plant ſuperſtition, and ſupplant true religion, & ſhal not ſuch a Kingdome as this is afford meanes to reare one Colledge of Diuines to confront them, and to build vp, as faſt as they pull downe? They ſpare for no coſt; one Colledge of the Ieſuites at La fleſh in France is thought to haue coſt (for the building) 100000. markes, and the lands laid vnto it as much: And ſhall we be ſparing in the defence of the truth? tanti vitream? quanti margaritam? if they make ſo much of brittle glaſſe, how much more ſhould we ſet by the right pretious ſtone? But to proceed: his Maieſty hath laid vnto the two publike Readers of Diuinitie in either Vniuerſities, beſide their ordinarie ſtipends of 40. pound per annum, to each of them certaine ſpirituall promotions, ſome of 200. pound per annum. the leaſt 200. markes, as they ſhall fall void, for the perpetuall maintenance, and encouragement of the ſaid profeſſors: His Maieſtie beſide hath ſet forward an other excellent worke, that goodly Hoſpitall deuiſed by the laſt will and teſtament of Maſter Sutton, to the which he bequeathed his great eſtate, laying vnto it 4. or 5. thouſand pound by the yeere, and appointing 5. thouſand for the enlarging of that goodly building of Charterhouſe, where his will was his hoſpital ſhould be founded; and leauing diuers thouſands more to be laid vnto it at the diſcretion of his Executors: The greateſt gift, that theſe many hundred yeers was giuen by any one man, to charitable vſes, and I doubt whether the like can bee ſhewed to haue been done in this land in any age. This admirable and magnificent foundation was but intended, and as it were portraited by that rich Eſquire, but now like to bee perfited and finiſhed by the princely care of our Gracious Soueraigne, who hath put life into this vaſt body, which without him would haue moued but ſlowly: He as Dauid prouided matter, as gold, ſiluer, braſſe, iron for the Temple: But his Maieſtie as a munificent Salomon hath put them together. Iehoſaphat made ſhips to goe to Ophir, but they were broken at Ezion Gaber: and this great veſſell as rigged and trimmed for the ſeas, might haue miſcaried, if our Princely pilot had not guided it, and giuen it wind and weather to driue it: who found concurring with him, [a] his experienced mariners and ſailers to ſet it going: We are all to giue vnto God great thankes, that hath put it into the heart of our Soueraigne, and of his honorable Miniſters, to further ſuch an excellent worke, which will bee to Gods glory, and the good of Chriſts poore members: But might I put in heere my ſimple wiſh: If ſome part of this liberall gift had been, or yet might be tranſlated from the Hoſpitall, to the Colledge of Diuines now in building at Chelſey, both tending to charitable ends, it would not be, in mine opinion, againſt the intent and meaning of the founder, or contra formam collationis: ſpecially ſeeing both theſe foundations conſiſt by the grace and fauour of his Maieſty, who as a chiefe builder, euen another Zorobabel might with his plummet of tinne in his hand haue appointed euery ſtone his place: We may thanke ſo faithfull an Ouerſeer, that the will of the dead hath taken place: But let this be a warning to like minded Gentlemen that intend to doe good, to ſee it performed by their life; to make their owne eyes their Ouerſeers, and their owne hands their Executors: ſo their worke ſhall proſper, and their ſeruice ſhall be ſo much the more acceptable vnto God: who ſhall be herein like to faithfull Abraham, of whom Ambroſe thus writeth: Abraham ſua manu quondam vitulum occidit, vt hoſpitibus epulantibus miniſtraret, nec in miniſterio religioſo aliorum adiumenta quaſiuit: Abraham once with his owne hand did ſlay a calfe to prouide for his ghueſts, neither in that religious ſeruice, required the helpe of others: I remember that in the laſt edition of this worke, I made mention of the intendment and purpoſe, which Maſter Sutton had to erect an Hoſpitall of a great proportion and capacity, commending ſo good an intention, and aduiſing withall, that he would imitate the worthie preſident of Sir Gualter Mildmay, to ſee ſomewhat done in his life time: Which courſe if hee had taken, it had been better: but howſoeuer, it falleth out well enough: But (thankes be to our gracious King) the Hoſpitall ſhall goe forward: his Maieſty hath done as much in putting life into a dead mans gift, as if he had raiſed it by his owne charge; that I may ſay vnto him, as Ambroſe to the Emperor Valentinian: De tuo magis conferre videbere, quam de ſuo reddere: You herein ſeeme rather to conferre of your owne, then to welfare of his, &c. So we are to praiſe God, for his Maieſties Princely care herein, the faithfulneſſe of the honourable feoffes of truſt, the Chriſtian reſolution of our worthie Iudges, the diligence of the Executors, but firſt for that charitable diſpoſition of that Gentleman deceaſed, who altogether haue performed an excellent worke: ſo that they may ſay with the Apoſtle: that for the gift beſtowed vpon vs for many thankes may be giuen by many perſons for vs.

72. pound per annum, beſide the building, which may be ſet at 400. Marke.

Next vnto the Princely liberality of our renowned Princes, followeth to be recorded, the honourable diſpoſition of our Nobles and Peeres. Sir William Cecil not long ſince, Lord Treaſurer, in his lifetime gaue thirtie pounds by the yeere to Saint Iohns Colledge in Cambridge: Hee founded alſo an Hoſpitall at Stamford for twelue poore people, allowing to each of them ſix pound per annum, hee alſo left great ſummes of money in truſt in the hands of Maſter Iohn Billet one of his Executors, who as carefully performed that truſt, and partly by this meanes, partly out of his owne eſtate, as I haue been informed, hath done theſe excellent workes: Hee repaired, and in a manner reedified at the charge of diuerſe hundred pounds the great Church in the Citie of Bath: hee enlarged the whot and croſſe Bath there, walling them about. Hee built an Hoſpitall there, to giue entertainment for twelue poore people, for a moneth at the ſpring, and three moneths at the fall of the leafe, with allowance of foure pence a day; aſſuring vnto this end twentie fiue pounds yeerely: hee gaue 200. pounds toward the repairing of Saint Martins Church: an 100. markes to Saint Clements to build a window, and to the foure pariſhes in Weſtminſter was giuen for twelue yeeres fiue pounds to each: vpon the building of the market houſe there he beſtowed 300. pound: whereof is made ten pound a yeere for the benefit of the poore: he gaue alſo 20. pound per annum to Chriſts Hoſpital, till 200. pound came out.

All theſe workes could not coſt ſo little as 2000. pound.

4000.pound.

The Lord Buckhurſt the next Lord Treaſurer, beſtowed a thouſand pound in building a chapell at Withyham in Suſſex anno 1607. and a thouſand pound vpon a Granarie at Lewes, laying vnto it two thouſand pound ſtocke to prouide wheate there to be laid vp, and ſerued to the poore at twenty ſhillings the quarter.

The charge of all this, with the building of the houſe, may reach to 4000. pound.

The right Honourable the Lord priuie Seale, Earle of Northampton, Chancellor of the Vniuerſitie of Cambridge, hath out of a noble diſpoſition and charitable minde, anno 1605. erected an Hoſpitall in the Honor of Clun in Shropſhire, for the maintenance of twelue poore men, and a Warden, to whom there is allowed ten pound by the yeere, and to the other, ſix pound 13. ſhillings 8. pence a peece. At Riſing alſo in Northfolke, anno 1609. was built by the ſame Honourable perſon an Hoſpitall, for a matrone and twelue poore women: the allowance of each is two ſhillings by the weeke, two load of wood, and a gowne yeerely; which may bee worth vnto euery one, ſix pound thirteene ſhillings eight pence, per annum.

This charge with the building cannot be ſet at leſſe then 4000. pound.

The right Honourable the Lord Thomas Howard, Earle of Suffolke, Lord Chamberlaine, hath built at Audle-End neare vnto Walden in Eſſex, a goodly Hoſpitall for 24. poore people, with ſufficient allowance of meate drinke and cloth.

This is ſummed among the gifts in Cambridge: 48. pound per annum.

The right Honourable Thomas Earle of Exceter hath giuen an hundred pounds to Clare Hall in Cambridge, to maintaine ſix ſchollers, and three Fellowes: beſide eight pound giuen by the Ladie Dorothie Neuill his late Counteſſe, to the ſame Colledge, for the maintenance of two ſchollers more, which ſaid worthy Ladie founded an Hoſpitall in the towne of Well in Yorkſhire, with the yeerely maintenance of 36. pound: ſhee alſo gaue twelue pound per annum, to the poore of Stamford.

2000.pound. 330.pound, per annum.

The right Honourable Robert Earle of Dorceſter, anno 1609. by his laſt Teſtament ordained an Hoſpitall to bee built in Eaſt Greneſtead in Suſſex, allowing vnto the building thereof a thouſand pound, to the which the Executors haue added a thouſand pound more, and 330. pound of yeerely reuenew, to maintaine twentie poore men, and ten poore women, to each of them ten pound by the yeere, and beſide to a Warden twentie pounds, and to two Aſſiſtants out of the towne to be choſen, 3. pound 6. ſhillings 8. pence a piece, per annum.

Sir Gualter Mildmay founded Emmanuel Colledge in Cambridge.

The right Honourable the Ladie Elizabeth, late Counteſſe of Shrewsburie gaue an hundred pounds toward the bearing of the Preachers charges, that are called to Pauls Croſſe: ſhe alſo erected a goodly Hoſpitall in the towne of Darby, as I am informed.

The right Honourable the Counteſſe of Suſſex founded Sidney Colledge in Cambridge, the particulars whereof ſhall afterward be remembred.

The Honourable the Ladie Dakers founded an Hoſpitall in Weſtminſter, for 20. poore folke, with the allowance of fiue pound to euery one yeerely.

Other Noble men and women haue not been behind with their part in theſe charitable workes: as I am informed of an Hoſpitall in Kent, built by the late Lord Cobham, the particulars whereof I could not learne: many like workes I doubt not but haue been performed by our Nobility in diuers parts of this land, which I for want of inſtruction am forced to omit: but they, whoſe names are not heere regiſtred, are before the Lord remembred.

Neither haue our ſpirituall Lords been barren in this kinde. Doctor Parker Archbiſhop of Canturbury was a great benefactor to Bennet Colledge in Cambridge, and to ſome other Colledges.

Doctor Grindall that worthie Archbiſhop of Canturburie, founded a free Schoole at S. Bees in Cumberland, laying vnto it thirtie pound a yeare; he gaue alſo twentie pound a yeare to Penibrooke Hall to maintaine a fellow and two ſchollers, and his executors ſince haue added one ſcholler more: he gaue one hundred pound to maintaine a ſcholler in Magdalene Colledge in Cambridge; he alſo gaue twenty pound per annum to Queenes Colledge in Oxford to maintaine a fellow and two ſchollers: all theſe eight places to be furniſhed out of the ſaid ſchoole of S. Bees. 70. pound per annum.

The right reuerend Iohn Whitgift Archbiſhop of Canturburie at his owne proper charge cauſed an Hoſpitall to be built at Croyden for the maintenance of thirtie poore people, with a free ſchoole, hauing a Maſter and an Vſher, and laid vnto it two hundred pound per annum, beſide the charge of the building, which is ſuppoſed to haue coſt two thouſand pound. 200. pound per annum. 2000. pound.

The reuerend Biſhop of London Iohn Elmer gaue three hundred pound for the maintenance of the Preachers at Pauls Croſſe. 300. pound.

The reuerend Biſhop of Bath Doctor Mountague that now is allowed lead for the couering of the great Church at Bath, amounting, as I heare, to the charge of two thouſand markes. 2000 markes.

Theſe noble Earles, Lords and Ladies I haue ſet in the forefront of this catalogue, as the Captaines and leaders of this heauenly armie of Chriſts ſouldiers, confeſſing and ſetting forth their godly faith by their Chriſtian workes: I may ſay of theſe noble Lords and Ladies, as Ambroſe of a worthie Earle, that built a Church: Si Centurio à Domino commendatur, qui ædificauit ſynagogam, vbi Chriſtus negatur, quanto commendatior, qui fabricauit eccleſiam, vbi Chriſtus prædicatur: If the Centurion be commended of the Lord, for building a Synagogue, where Chriſt is denied, how much more to be commended is he that hath erected a Church, wherein Chriſt is preached, &c. Now in the next place vnto our honourable Nobilitie I will ſet downe ſuch of worſhipfull place and condition, whoſe hearts the Lord hath ſtirred vp, ſince the times of the Goſpell in this land, to be inſtruments of good workes: I will begin, as I firſt propoſed, with the worthie Citie of London. Serm. 89.

CHARITABLE WORKES DONE IN AND BY the honourable Citie of London, and the worſhipfull Citizens thereof.

I Will begin with the publike workes procured by the common charge of that honourable Citie, which are theſe tenne of more ſpeciall account.

1. Chriſt Church Hoſpitall, which was founded firſt by King Edward of bleſſed memorie, and encreaſed ſince by the liberall contribution of diuers noble and worſhipfull benefactors, the chiefe whereof are in this catalogue diſperſedly named, receiueth yeerely by the gift of the Citie 600 pound per annum out of Blackwell Hall, beſide the yeerely allowance that commeth out of diuers pariſhes, ſo that by theſe meanes, that famous Hoſpitall maintaineth yeerely to the number of ſeuen hundred perſons, poore children with the officers and miniſters, which charge is thought yeerely to extend to 4000 pound. Chriſts Hoſpitall.

2. Saint Bartholmewes Hoſpitall maintaineth by the gifts of diuers, well nie three hundred poore diſeaſed people, or thereabout, which are vnder cure, at the yeerely charge of 2000 pound, toward which charge, the Citie alloweth 200 pound per annum out of Blackwell Hall: which charitable foundation ſo well deuiſed by that famous and renowned King Henry the 8, hath, ſince the times of the Goſpel bin much augmented: and is by the wiſe gouernours of the houſe as faithfully employed to the comfort of many poore members of Chriſt, which by the charitie of that houſe, haue been healed of diuers diſeaſes otherwiſe incurable. We reade, that an Angel ſtirred the poole of Betheſda, and made it apt to cure all manner of diſeaſes: but here not onely the Angell of God goeth in and out among them, but Chriſt himſelfe is preſent, aſſiſting them in ſuch charitable workes, and giuing a bleſſing thereunto. S. Bartholmewes Hoſpitall. Seuen hundred diſeaſed people cured the laſt yeere ending at S. Michaell in S. Bartholmewes Hoſpitall, as is credibly by ſome Chirurgions of the houſe affirmed.

3. Saint Thomas Hoſpitall alſo in Southwarke founded firſt by vertuous King Edward, hath been ſince by the gift of many worthy citizens of London augmented: ſo that it now maintaineth about three hundred poore people continually, being vnder cure, with the charge of no leſſe then 2000 pound by the yeere. S. Thomas Hoſpitall.

4. [a] The plantation in Ireland, as I haue learned, hath ſtood the Citie in fiftie thouſand pound, in building of two cities: God giue proſperous ſucceſſe thereunto.

5. [b] The plantation in Virginia, and in the Iſle of Bermuda, hath hitherto been vndertaken and followed at the charge of fiftie thouſand pounds: The Lord Chriſt grant, that by theſe good beginnings, the bounds of his Church may be enlarged in thoſe parts.

[a] Ex relatione D. Ioan. Swinarton 50000 pound.

[b] Ex relatione D. Thomæ Smithi. 50000 pound.

6. The Preachers at Pauls croſſe are maintained for their ordinarie and neceſſarie charge by the gift of diuers well diſpoſed perſons: Biſhop Elmer gaue 300 pound: the Lady Elizabeth, late Counteſſe of Shrewſbury, 100 pound: Maſter George Paylin 200 pound: Maſter Thomas Ruſſell 10. pound per annum: Maſter George Biſhop 10 pound per annum: Maſter Robert Iohnſon 13 pound ſixe ſhillings eight pence per annum: as I haue in ſeuerall places ſet downe their gifts: but this is not done without the ſingular care and charge of the honourable Citie of London. The maintaining of the Preachers at the Croſſe.

7. Bridewell, firſt founded by King Edward to be a workhouſe to imploy idle perſons, and bring vp poore children in honeſt trades, where at this preſent an hundred poore children are trained vp, Bridewell.

beſide many other perſons, that are kept in worke, hath been ſince much augmented and encreaſed by the liberalitie of the citie, and the gift of diuers worſhipfull citizens: when Sir Iohn Hart was Maior, as I haue learned, there was a collection made in the citie of ſeuen hundred pound: and in Sir William Riders yeere, fiue hundred pound toward the reliefe of the houſe, being ouercharged and caſt behind hand: the ſpeciall particular gifts of the citizens ſhall be expreſſed afterward: this and the other three Hoſpitals may be thought to ſpend by charitable gifts vpon the poore about 10000. pound yeerely.

10000.pound per annum.

Granaries.

3000.pound.

8. In the ſame Bridewel at the Citids charge haue been built of late twelue new faire Granaries, which are ſufficient to conteine ſixe thouſand quarters of corne, and two ſtore houſes, which may hold foure thouſand chaldron of coales, for the prouiſion of the citie, at the charge of three thouſand pound, or thereabout.

Morefields 5000.pound.

9. Morefields at the charge of foure or fiue thouſand pounds, by the coſt of the Citie, in Sir Leonard Hollydaies Maioraltie, being before an vnwholſome place, was conuerted into pleaſant walkes beſet with trees, compaſſed with a brick wall, with vaults vnder the earth for conueiance of the water; which is a ſpeciall meanes to preſerue the health of the Citie: and may bee numbred among other prudent and in ſome reſpect pious workes.

Bethlem.

10. Bedlem, otherwiſe called Bethlem, a place appointed for the recouerie of ſuch as are beſtraught in their wits: is maintained in part by the beneuolence of the Citie. And let not here be forgotten the great good that is done to all the land by the Citie of London, in receiuing ſo many hundred children yeerely to be apprentices, to be brought vp in trades: which were the greateſt charitie of all, if citizens did not require ſuch great ſummes of money with apprentices; that hardly now a poore boy comming in his white coate will proue to be Lord Maior of London: as ſome haue done in times paſt: but howſoeuer, the Citie in training vp youth, that otherwiſe would liue idly, deſerueth great commendation.

The Citie of London doth great good in receiuing of apprentices.

Conduits built by the Citie at 2000.pound charge.

I might here make mention of the new Conduits built in the Citie, a great helpe both to rich and poore, as one built at Walbroke, anno 1568. another in Fleetſtreet, anno 1581. at the charges of the Citie, beſide thoſe which were made by the gift of priuate men: which ſhall afterward be remembred. And becauſe I am fallen into mention of Conduits and conueiance of water: I may remember alſo the goodly Water workes, one at the Bridge, another at Broken-wharfe: and the third exceeding the reſt, the cutting of a new Riuer, to bring water to the Citie from about Ware, which is thought to runne, if all the creekes and turnings be meaſured, no leſſe then three ſcore miles: vndertaken at the great charge of an induſtrious Merchant Maſter Middleton, and of others: and is now after many rubs and lets brought to good effect, the water being now arriued at, or deriued rather to the Citie: which ſaid Water-workes, although they haue been taken in hand vpon hope of priuate gaine, yet becauſe the benefit thereof is publike, and will redound both to rich and poore, they may be ranged, if not among the direct charitable, yet the magnificent and commendable workes of the Citie. In that ranke alſo may paſſe the publike ſumptuous buildings, as of Ludgate at the Cities charge of more then three thouſand pound: of Aldgate, which coſt aboue foure thouſand pound: of Blackwell Hall, which was built at the charge of three thouſand pound. I omit other goodly buildings round about the Citie in euery corner, which haue been raiſed vp in greater number within theſe twentie yeeres, then in an hundred yeeres before. Adde hereunto alſo the beautifull enlarging of the Innes of Court, thoſe famous Nurſeries of our honourable and reuerend Iudges, and learned Counſellers: as Grayes Inne, the Middle and Inner Temple haue been with goodly buildings adorned and beautified: But Lincolnes Inne (to which worſhipfull societie I am more [a] ſpecially bound) in faire building exceedeth the reſt, as in number of honourable Iudges at this time it hath the prioritie: wherein hath been beſtowed, as I haue learned, about eight or nine thouſand pound. I doe not mention theſe workes as teſtimonies of charitie (though it be not the leaſt part of charitie to employ poore men in worke) as euidence of the ſtate and magnificence of this renowned Citie, which the profeſſion of the Goſpell hath inriched and endowed it withall.

Fiue Iudges with the Lord Chancelor of Lincolnes Inne: 9000 pound beſtowed in building.

Hitherto I haue ſet forth the publike workes atchieued by the common charge of the City: I will now adde vnto theſe the charitable employments of the Worſhipfull Companies, and pariſhes, in their ſeuerall bodies, and then deſcend to the particular gifts of diuers charitable men: The Worſhipfull Companies in the Citie of London doe exceed in three principall workes of charitie; in the loane of ſummes of money to poore occupiers of their Companie, and in yeerely releefe of the poore, and exhibition to the poore ſchollers: the twelue Worſhipfull Companies, as I am informed, doe not lend leſſe then two thouſand pound euery of them, counting one with another, to poore occupiers: and they, and ſome other chiefe Companies of the ſecond ranke, as the Worſhipfull Companies of Leatherſellers, and Stationers, with ſome others, are thought to giue, one with another, an hundred pound yeerely to the poore; ſome of them giue 200. pound, ſome more yeerely among their poore: I could not learne the particulars, becauſe I found ſome Companies herein too nice and ſcrupulous; yet I thinke I haue ſpoken within my bounds, as farre as I could enforme my ſelfe by conference with ſome, which were acquainted with the ſtate and affaires of the Companies: And touching their charitable reliefe extended vnto poore ſchollers: there are not ſo few as 80. ſchollers maintained in both Vniuerſities by the twelue chiefe Companies, and ſome others; ſome maintaining

This ſumme among all the Companies may be geſſed at 30000 pound.

This ſumme of yeerely beneuolence may be ſet at 1200 pound at the leaſt.

This yeerely exhibition may be well rated at 300 pound per annum.

I could not learne the particular number of theſe exhibitions, for the reaſons before alleaged: I would ſome Companies had not been ſo ſtrict: no endeauour was wanting in me, in procuring the Lord Maiors warrant vnto the ſeuerall Companies, to ſend in their certificates of charitable workes, who was very forward with the Aſſiſtants of the Worſhipfull Aldermen, to further this buſineſſe; and in ſolliciting this matter my ſelfe; but moſt of the Companies vpon reaſons beſt knowne to themſelues, being as I take it, ſomewhat too ſuſpicious, reſolued to conceale many gifts, not with a minde, as I verily thinke, to croſſe this intent, or to obſcure the iuſt commendation of the giuers, but for that, many vulturs eyes are in theſe catching dayes, too much prying in euery corner for their prey.

I come to the Pariſhes in London, which alſo haue in thoſe three kindes been very fruitfull, in building and beautifying their Churches: in maintaining of Lectures, and in their almes and charitable gifts to the poore: for the firſt, ſome Churches haue been new builded; as Trinity Church in in Trinitie lane, Saint Mary, mount Thau, Saint Olaues in Siluerſtreet, Blackfriers: ſome much augmented, as Saint Martins in the field, at the charge of 1200 pound, S. Clements, and diuers others; and generally all of them haue beene more beautified and adorned in the ſpace of twentie or thirtie yeeres, then in an hundred yeeres before; at the charge of an hundred or two hundred pound, ſome more ſome leſſe at the coſts of the pariſh: the charge of the building and repairing of Churches cannot be leſſe then ten thouſand pounds.

Sir Iohn Swinarton.

The charity of the pariſhes in London.

Building of Churches.

10000. pound beſtowed vpon Churches.

Secondly, there are many pariſhes which haue raiſed lectures: as in S. Antlins, euery day in the week, in S. Magnes, S. Olaues in Southwarke twice in the weeke: in Grace Church vpon the Lords day, and in diuers other Churches, whereof I had not particular notice: to theſe lectures, there hath bin giuen many charitable helpes ſpecially to that in S. Antlins, which is vpheld by 3. Preachers, which preach euery weeke twice: for the maintenance whereof Sir William Crauen, and Mr. William Parker gaue 100. pound, by the pariſh gathered 118. pound. Giuen by Mr. Garret Merchant-tailor 100. pound, and to the lecture at Aldermarie, ſo long as the Goſpell ſhould continue (which I truſt ſhall be to the worlds end) an hundred pound. Maſter Henrie Iay gaue thirtie pound. Leonard Smith fiftie pound, Iſabel Foxwell widow fiftie pound: Daniel Dickinſon ten pound: William White twentie pound: George Palyn fiftie pound: William Bennet 50. pound. the ſum is 580. pound, or thereabout.

Raiſing of Lectures.

Toward ſix hundred pouñd giuen for the weekely Lectures at S. Antlins.

Thirdly, for their charitie; in ſome pariſhes an hundred, two hundred, three hundred pounds, in ſome more, ſome leſſe are giuen yeerely to the poore, in money, bread, fewell: ſo that one pariſh with another may be thought to giue fiftie pound yeerely in almes, which in an 120. pariſhes, (for ſo many are counted in the City and Suburbs) may ariſe to fiue or ſix thouſand pound.

The yeerely almes.

6000 pound giuen in charitie in the ſeuerall pariſhes.

Adde hereunto the free Schooles and Almeſhouſes built by the Pariſhes: in the pariſh of Saint Sauiours in Southwark a free Schoole was erected, and 30. pound per annum laid vnto it.

A free Schoole in S. Sauiours, 30. pound, per annum.

In S. Olaues pariſh in Southwarke of late twentie faire Almes houſes builded, at the motion and procurement of Maſter Linſey Rector there, and by the willing contribution of Maſter Pinfold, Maſter Goſan, Maſter Pindon, Maſter William Smith, Maſter Lancelet Smith, Maſter Woodward with others, the charge amounting to three hundred pound.

Hoſpitall in S. Olaues in Southwarke. 300.

THE PARTICVLAR GIFTS AND WORKES OF CHAritie by diuers Worſhipfull and well diſpoſed Citizens of London.

SIr Iohn Greſham Mercer, and Maior of London, anno 1548. in the ſecond yeere of King Edwards raigne: gaue ten pound to the poore, to euery Ward in London (which are 24. within the Citie) and to 120. poore men and women, to euery of them three yards of cloth for a gowne, of eight or nine ſhillings the yard, to maides marriages and the Hoſpitals in London aboue two hundred pound: he founded alſo a free Schoole at Holt, a market towne in Northfolke.

About 500. pound, beſide the charge of the Schoole.

Sir Rowland Hill Mercer, and Maior anno 1550. in the fourth yeere of King Edward, cauſed to bee made diuers Cawſies for horſe and man, and diuers Bridges, whereof two were of ſtone, conſiſting of eighteene arches betweene them: he builded a free Schoole at Drayton in Shropſhire, and gaue ſix hundred pound to Chriſts Hoſpitall.

1100. pound Bridges and all.

The ſumme of all theſe gifts, beſide the charges of his Hoſpitall, amounteth to 12750. pound, or there about.

Maſter Suttons Hoſpitall, conſiſting of a Maſter or Gouernor, a Preacher, a free ſchoole, with a Maſter and Vſher, 80. poore people, and 30. Scholars, maintained with ſufficient meate and drinke and wages, with other officers and miniſters, the number whereof ſhall encreaſe, as the reuenues vpon the expiration of the leaſes is encreaſed. This Hoſpitall, I ſay, with the value of the lands laid vnto it, which are eſtimated at 4000. pound per annum, and the purchaſe of the houſe, where it is appointed to be, which coſt 13000. pound, with the ſtocke of a 1000. pound laid to the Hoſpitall, and 5000. pound allowed to the building, and the remainder of his goods vnbequeathed, which hee hath giuen to his hoſpitall, and the reſidue of the 20000. pound, left to the diſcretion of his Executors, may very well ariſe to 100000. pound and aboue: the greateſt gift that euer was giuen in England, no Abbey at the firſt foundation thereof excepted.

Among theſe long and bountifull Benefactors, now at reſt in the Lord, I will remember ſome yet liuing, that haue done excellently in this kind: whoſe charitie and bountie is ſo much the more gratefull vnto God; becauſe they doe it in their life time: for both their wiſdome herein appeareth, in ſeeing with their owne eies their beneuolence beſtowed, which buſineſſe many times committed to executors, is not ſo faithfully performed: and their charitie is ſo much the more commendable, becauſe they are content to part with a portion of their wealth, before it leaue them: whereas men dying, cannot carry their ſubſtance with them, they muſt leaue it to the world.

I know, that this office which I performe vnto them, will not be very acceptable, nay, I was wiſhed not to make mention of the charitable acts of ſome liuing: wherein their modeſtie appeareth, in following that precept of our bleſſed Sauiour, Let not thy right hand know, what thy left hand doth: whereupon Ambroſe thus well writeth: Perfecta eſt liberalitas, vbi ſilentio quis tegit opus ſuum, & neceſſitatibus ſingulorum occulte ſubuenit: That is perfect liberalitie, when one hideth his worke in ſilence and ſecrecie, and cloſely ſuccoureth euery ones neceſſitie, &c. yet I thought it fit, though againſt their mind, to make their ſecret godly actes publike, to the praiſe of God, and good example of others.

Here then I will be bold to mention the R. Worſhipfull, S. Stephen Soames, Alderman of London, who hath built of late an Almes-houſe at Thinlye in Eſſex, for ſixe poore people, together with a free Schoole now in building.

The R. Worſhipfull, S. William Crauen, likewiſe Alderman of London, hath done worthily in this kind, he hath giuen a 1000. pound to Chriſts Hoſpitall in London, to purchaſe land for the maintenance of that houſe: he hath alſo been a worthie Benefactor to S. Iohns Colledge in Oxford, as is afterward expreſſed. Beſide, the ſaid charitable Knight hath built at Burnſal in Yorkeſhiere a Church, compaſſing it with a wall at his charge of 600. pound. He hath alſo erected a Schoole, with allowance of 20.pound per annum. He hath built one bridge, that coſt 500. pound: another 250.pound: a third, 100.markes, a fourth, 20.pound and cauſed a caulſey to be made at 200.pound charge.

1000. pound.

Sir Baptiſt Hickes of London hath at his owne charge of 900.pound, or thereabouts, built a Shire-houſe for the Iuſtices of Middleſex in Saint Iohns ſtreete, and an Hoſpitall for 12.perſons at Cambden, in the Countie of Glouceſter, the building beſide the yeerely maintenance coſt 900.pound.

One Maſter Ioanes a Merchant abiding at Stode, of the Companie of the Habberdaſhers, a moſt bountifull man in charitie, hath ſent of late to the Companie 6000. pound to bee beſtowed in Munmoth in Wales, where he was borne, in charitable workes: and that worſhipfull Companie according to that truſt, hath already bought 200.l. per annum, and more, allowing 150.l. per annum to an hoſpitall for twenty poore people, and 100.markes to a painfull Preacher, to preach twice on the Lords day.

Maſter Campe a ſilke man hath built ſixe Almeſ-houſes in London vpon the wall neere to Biſhopſgate, and another goodly foundation for an hoſpitall in the Pariſh of Fryan; the charge of both was aboue 800.pound.

800.pound.

Many there are beſide yet liuing of the Citie of London, whoſe hearts God hath moued in this kinde, whom I had no notice of, but many more at reſt in the Lord, whoſe charitable gifts came not to my knowledge, for want of inſtruction from the Companies and Pariſhes. Theſe which I haue ſet downe, if they be brought to a ſumme, wee ſhall finde more then 20. Hoſpitals and Almes-houſes, aboue as many free Schooles, tenne Churches and Chapels to haue bin erected: the ſummes of money giuen to charitable vſes in and by the Citie of London, together with the gift of diuers noble perſonages there, and the yeerely penſions and annuities, caſt vp to a valuable proportion, (which ſhall be more particularly ſummed afterward) at fifteene yeeres purchaſe, being added together, will make about 600000.pounds. The reſt, which either I omitted, as of ſmaller ſummes of money, as fiue pound, tenne pound, twentie pound, thirtie pound: and leſſer annuities, as of twentie ſhillings, thirtie ſhillings, fortie ſhillings, three pound per annum: (which I would not ſet downe in ſome, hauing not notice of others, onely taking the greateſt gifts) together with ſuch gifts both great and ſmall, which I had no intelligence of, will make vp a great ſumme beſide, not leſſe, I ſuppoſe, then an hundred thouſand pound more, which hath been giuen by the citizens of London only.

The ſumme of ſuch charitable workes as haue been done in and by the Citie of London within 60 yeeres, will amount to more then 600000. poūd.

In other places of the land, and by others alſo much hath been performed: as that reuerend man Maſter Robert Iohnſon Archdeacon of Leiceſter, Preacher and Paſtor of North-Luffenham in the Countie of Rutland, hath been a worthie inſtrument in this kinde: who at his owne charge hath cauſed two free Schooles to be built in two market townes in that Countie, one at Okam, the other at Vppingham, with allowance to each, of 24.pound to the Maſter, and 12.pound to the Vſher.

Three Hoſpitals and two free ſchooles founded by Maſter Robert Iohnſon.

He hath alſo built two Hoſpitals, called by the name of Chriſts Hoſpitall in the foreſaid townes, with prouiſion in each of them for 24. poore people: hee purchaſed lands of Queene Elizabeth, which he hath laid to thoſe Hoſpitals, and procured a mortmaine of foure hundred markes per annum.

Likewiſe he redeemed a third Hoſpitall, which had been erected by one William Dabby, and was diſſolued, being found to bee concealed land: their vncharitable attempts, that went about to ſubuert ſuch a foundation, deſerueth as much blame, as God is to be praiſed, for the others endeuour in reuiuing and recouering it.

Beſide, he hath giuen the perpetuall patronage of the Church of North-Luffenham to Emmanuel Colledge in Cambridge, that the towne may alwaies be prouided of a ſufficient Preacher.

He hath alſo made good prouiſion in both Vniuerſities for ſchollers which ſhall be brought vp in the ſaid Schooles.

He hath giuen alſo twentie markes per annum toward the maintenance of Preachers, that are called to Pauls Croſſe.

He hath alſo been very beneficiall to the townes of Luffenham, Stamford, and other places in Rutland, in prouiding for the education of their poore children, and placing them apprentices: praiſed be God for ſuch an excellent inſtrument.

Doctor White, one of the Reſidenciaries of Pauls in London, a reuerend learned man, hath built an Hoſpitall in the Citie of Briſtoll for tenne poore people, with yeerely maintenance of 50.pound: And God I truſt will enlarge his heart, to adde other like workes to this ſo good beginning.

One Maſter George Iilſon a man of great wealth, borne in the towne of Buckland in the Countie of Hartford, hath built of late an Hoſpitall for ſixe poore people, with the yeerely maintenance of 40. pound, in the towne of Morcot [a] in the Countie of Rutland: who alſo yet liuing hath giuen to his [b] poore kinred 160. pound yeerely for certaine yeeres: God ſtrengthen him to goe forward in ſuch pious workes, that to his able hand a willing heart be neuer wanting.

One Maſter W. Latham a Miniſter of Barnewell in Northhamptonſhire hath built, as I am informed, two Hoſpitals, one for women, the other for men, and a free Schoole in the ſaid towne, with conuenient yeerely maintenance laid to them all.

Maſter Wilſon Vicar of Cammerwell beſide London, hath, as I heare, built a free Schoole there. If ſuch men out of ſo ſmall meanes haue been ſtirred vp to compaſſe ſuch profitable workes; more certainly is required of thoſe, which are of greater abilitie.

[a] Or Northhampton.

[b] The greateſt charitie, of the liuing toward the liuing, and to begin with their owne familie.

I will not here forget alſo to make mention of the Almes-houſes now in hand in the towne of Barley where I dwell,to the which theſe benefactors haue largely contributed; Maſter Willam Roe of London Eſquier,Maſter Raph Dobinſon of S.Martins in the field, borne in the ſaid pariſh, together with the helpe of the ſaid towne: and God (I truſt) will raiſe vp other welwillers and helpers to this good worke.

Many other there are, now at reſt in the Lord, and ſome liuing, that in diuers parts of this land haue not been vnfruitfull, whoſe charitable workes, for want of intelligence,I could not rehearſe; but their names that are not in this booke expreſſed,are no doubt in Gods booke of remembrance regiſtred: for whom God alwaies be praiſed.

CHARITABLE WORKES PERFORMED IN THE VNIuerſities of Cambridge and Oxford in the times of the Goſpell vnder the raigne of King Edward,but ſpecially of Queene Elizabeth,and the Kings Maieſtie that now is.

IN this renowned Vniuerſitie of Cambridge, the charitable beneuolence, bountifull liberalitie, large expenſes beſtowed partly in founding and erecting of Colledges, partly in augmenting the former foundations with encreaſe of reuenewes, partly in adorning and beautifying the fabricke and building of the Colledges,within the compaſſe of 60.yeeres, may compare with the like continuance in the daies of Poperie,and doe farre exceed them.

Peter Houſe (to begin with the moſt ancient Colledge) enioyeth by the gift of the honourable the Lord Edward North,ſeuen ſchollerſhips,for the maintenance whereof hee gaue per annum 20. pound: Archbiſhop Whitgift gaue one Scholarſhip: Maſter Wilſhaw gaue a fellowſhip and a ſchollerſhip: the Lady Ramſey gaue 40.pound per annum to maintaine two fellowſhips,and foure ſchollerſhips: fiue pound per annum is paid by the Companie of Clothworkers in London for a ſcholler: All theſe were procured [a] by Doctor Perne, ſometime Maſter there,a prudent and carefull gouernour in his time,who gaue himſelfe,as followeth:

Doctor Stephen Peirce Doctor of Phyſick, one of the fellowes of the ſaid Colledge, hath likewiſe by his laſt will taken order, that eight fellowſhips, and eight ſchollerſhips more ſhall be added vnto the ſaid houſe, and that certaine poore ſchollerſhips be encreaſed, with lodgings to be builded for the ſaid fellowes and ſchollers: likewiſe he intendeth to build a free Schoole in Cambridge, with allowance of 40.pound per annum to the Maſter, and 20.pound to the Vſher: And further he purpoſeth to giue eight pound per annum, to the keeping cleane of the new brooke that commeth in at Spittle-houſe end, and hee intendeth to continue the Calſey by him alreadie begun in Ieſus lane, about a mile and halfe further to meete with Doctor Harnies Calſey: God hath alſo enlarged his heart to extend his charitable hand further, to giue vnto Norwich, Cambridge, Linne, Berrie; to the firſt, two thouſand pound ſtocke, to each of the reſt one thouſand pound a peece to be lent vnto poore occupiers. Neither can I forget here his liberall beneuolence toward the building of certaine Almes-houſes in the towne of Barley, where I liue: All this, which he hath ſet downe with himſelfe, to be beſtowed in theſe charitable workes may amount to 7, or 8.thouſand pound. If exception ſhall be made to this relation, becauſe the parties be yet liuing, and the workes not yet done: to the firſt I anſwere, that although the parties themſelues deſired to be concealed, and not to haue theſe things mentioned, yet I take it not to be vnſeaſonable, becauſe the examples of men liuing, may moue more, then of the dead: and to the other I ſay, that although theſe things are not actually done, yet I am informed, that there is in theſe well minded men ſuch a firme reſolution, that they inſerted theſe things into their laſt will, with a purpoſe not to reuerſe them. I remember that in the laſt edition of this booke before this, I made mention of Maſter Suttons intention to build an Hoſpitall, then giuing my aduice, that he would begin in his life time: that worke hath now taken effect, thankes be to God, though with ſome difficultie, and ſo I truſt ſhall theſe, but without any ſuch oppoſition: yet it were a ſurer way to preuent ſuch croſſe occurrents, if they would make an entrance and beginning in their life time. But I will proceed to the reſt of the Colledges.

The ſumme of Schollerſhips, Fellowſhips, money and yeerely ſtipends giuen in Cambridge. Theſe ſummes are not exactly caſt, but onely roued at.

The ſumme of all theſe gifts will ariſe to a great proportion there are numbred 68. fellowſhips, which at twenty pound a peece will amount to 1360. pound yeerely or thereabout, one with an other: the ſcholarſhips giuen will be found to bee about 291. which valued but at three pound tenne ſhillings a peece one with another will make about 1020. pound; the penſions and annuities giuen as for Lectures and other ſuch vſes, will make about 558. pound per annum: which ſums put together come to 1940. pound per annum, or thereabout, which at 15. years purchaſe will amount to 29100. pounds or thereabout: the ſums of money beſtowed in the building & fabricke of diuers Colledges, & giuen to ſeuerall houſes will ariſe to about 45000. pound: ſo that there hath bene giuen (bleſſed bee God) by the charitable beneuolence of well diſpoſed Chriſtians, noble and other to the Vniuerſitie of Cambridge within compaſſe of leſſe then ſixty yeares about 88000. and ſome odde hundreds, which may compare with any age in Popery, and double in proportion, the times next preceding, ſince the publike oppoſition of religion begun. In which ſumme of 87000. pound, we neither include the yearly prouiſion of rent corne: which in time may encreaſe to 5. or 6000. per annum, aboue the auncient reuenewes, nor yet the exhibitions from the companies in London, which may be forty in Cambridge onely at three pounds tenne ſhillings a peece will come to an 140. p. per annum more: which yearely annuities of 140. pound being reduced to the valuable rate of 15. yeares purchaſe, will make 9000. pound more. Bleſſed be God for this great charity.

CHARITABLE WORKES DONE IN THE VNIuerſitie of Oxford, in the ſpace of ſixty yeares ſince the firſt yeare of Elizabeth.

I Will now come vnto the other famous Vniuerſitie of Oxford, which is not behind her other ſiſter of Cambridge in theſe liberall endowments: the beauty and louely grace of our ſiſter, as the amiable ſpouſe of Chriſt, hath drawne vnto her the affection of many of the bridegroomes friends: I will firſt ſet downe the publike works concerning the body of the Vniuerſitie in generall: and then come to the ſeuerall Colledges.

I will begin with that worthie Knight Sir Thomas Bodley his bountifull gift, who in his zeale of Gods glory and loue of Religion and learning, beſtowed partly in his life time, partly to bee employed after his death, in and toward the building, repairing and finiſhing the Vniuerſity Library, in lands goods and money aboue 18. thouſand pounds.

Beſide within theſe twelue yeares laſt paſt, there hath beene beſtowed in bookes for the ſaide Library, partly by the ſaid Sir Thomas gift, partly by others by his procurement about tenne thouſand pound. The company of Stacioners haue conſented to giue one booke of euery impreſſion of any new booke for euer.

The building of the Schooles now in hand, will amount to the ſumme of ſixe or ſeuen thouſand pound, which worke is vndertaken by the right worſhipfull Sir Iohn Bennet Iudge of the prerogatiue Court, that what the contributions collected from the willing gifts of ſuch as are and haue beene of that Vniuerſitie ſhall want of the ſaid charge, he will out of his owne purſe ſupply.

Vnto the which library among other benefactors that learned Knight Sir Henry Sauill Prouoſt of Eaton, and Warden of Merton Colledge hath giuen Chryſoſtomes workes in Greeke with other bookes, of whom ſeeing I haue made mention, let that worthy worke of his alſo bee remembred in cauſing all Chryſoſtomes works to be ſet forth in Greeke at his proper and onely charge, eſtimated at fiue thouſand pounds, beſides his owne induſtry and trauell, in the correcting and ouerſeeing of the worke: wherein three excellent things are performed: diuers volumes are ſet forth not extant before: that which was before printed, commeth out much amended and perfected: and all is ſet out in moſt excellent manner both for paper, letter, and workmanſhip.

And here I cannot but make mention alſo, of that worthie man Doctor Reynalds, who while he liued was a liuing Library, a ſtorehouſe of all true learning, and dying diſperſed his dead Library of moſt choyce bookes diſperſing the ſame vnto diuers Libraries, to the Vniuerſity library, Queens, & Corpus Chriſti Colledge, ſuch as were of greateſt account, the reſt beeing diuided among poore Schollars and ſtudents in the Vniuerſitie: Theſe carefull collectors of the beſt authors, and treaſurers vp of bookes and founders of Libraries, I may compare to thoſe ancient louers and ſerchers out of bookes,

[a]Pantenus,[b] Melito,[c]Pamphilus, Acarius, Euzoius: And this famous Librarie may be iudged not inferiour to thoſe renouned Libraries: erected by Ptolomie Philopater[d] in Alexandria, by Alexander [e] at Ieruſalem, [e] Pamphilus at Cæſaria, [f] Theodoſius Iunior at [g] Conſtantinople, [h] Hilarius at Rome; or Cicero his Librarie, which is to this day to bee ſeene as a ſacred thing: at [i] Putali in Italie. Wee reade alſo of other famous Libraries; as one founded by [k] Acru at Hagulſtade: [l] by Benedictus at Douer, [m] by Egbertus at Yorke: But this may be thought far to exceed them: ſo that I may ſay of this worthie Knight the founder of this Treaſure houſe of the Muſes, as Hierome of Pamphilus: [o] Beatus Pamphilus, cū Demetrium Phalereū & Piſiſtratum in ſacra bibliothecæ ſtudio voluit æquare imagines ingeniorum, quæ vera ſunt & æterna monumenta, toto orbe perquiſiuit: Bleſſed Pamphilus, equalizing Demetrius, Phalerius, and Piſiſtratus in the ſtudious care of ſacred Libraries, did ſearch out through the world, the images of mens induſtrie, which are the true and eternall monuments.

Now will I proceed to the particular Colledges, not ſetting them downe in their order of antiquitie, which I know not, but as the certificates came vnto my hands.

In Chriſts Church, there hath been of late builded a goodly Librarie, with the charge of ſeuen hundred pound, by Maſter Otho Nicholſon, one of the examiners of the Chancerie: who alſo hath giuen an hundred pound to be beſtowed in bookes of Diuinitie.

Trinitie Colledge hath receiued encreaſe of ten pound rent per annum: by the gift of the Ladie Elizabeth Pawlet: of fiue pound per ann. by the gift of Maſter Richard Blunt of London: of ten pound per annum, giuen by the Ladie Catharine Conſtable: Chryſoſtomes workes in Greeke giuen to the Librarie by Sir Edward Hobbie: Arias Montanus Bible in eight volumes, by Mr Edmund Hutchins: and 24. volumes by Maſter Iohn a Ardene: and nine hundred pound in building within theſe fourteene yeeres.

Queenes Colledge enioyeth twentie pound yeerely by the gift of the right Reuerend Edmund Grindall, not long ſince Archbiſhop of Canturburie, for the maintenance of a Fellow and two ſchollers: who alſo gaue two hundred volumes to their Librarie; which hath been augmented with diuers other bookes of good value, by the gift of Sir Cutbert Buckle, late Alderman of London, Maſter Reynolds, Maſter Richard Williams, Maſter Robert Dauies, Sir Walter Vaughan, Maſter Thomas Denton, Doctor Chaloner with others.

All-ſoules Colledge had confirmed vnto it the Parſonage of Harcourt in Oxfordſhire, by letters Patents, granted by Queene Elizabeth.

Vniuerſitie Colledge enioyeth two ſchollerſhips by the gift of Robert, late Earle of Leceſter: one Fellowſhip, and two ſchollerſhips are maintained by lands in Yorkſhire giuen by Maſter Iohn Freeſtone of Altoft Eſquire. One Schollerſhip giuen by Maſter Hunt of Medley: Maſter Hearne of London, gaue an exhibition of fiue pound per annum: the right Honourable, Gilbert Earle of Shrewsburie, gaue toward the enlarging of the building 500. pound.

Braſen-noſe Colledge hath encreaſe of thirteene ſchollerſhips, with allowance to each, of 3. pound 6. ſhillings 8. pence, by the gift of that Reuerend Father, Alexander Nowell, late Deane of Paules in London: who alſo founded a ſchoole at Middleton, with conuenient roomes for the teachers, allowing twentie pound per annum; ſufficient lands being giuen vnto the Colledge for the performance hereof: who in the letters Patents, made the late Queene foundreſſe, concealing his owne name.

Ioyce Franklin, daughter of Robert Trappes of London, Goldſmith, aſſured in her life time the yeerly rent of 67. pound, for the doubling of the Fellowſhips; and left after her death ſo much money, as that the Colledge therewith hath purchaſed fortie pound per annum, to maintaine one fellowſhip, and three ſchollerſhips.

Richard Harper gaue to maintaine three Lectures, Greeke, Philoſophie, Rhetorike, to each foure pound yeerely. Iohn Barnes, late Fellow of the houſe, gaue in lands ſeuen pound yeerely for an Hebrew Lecture: Richard Marren of London, gaue in money fortie pound: Maſter Hindley Draper of London fiftie pound: Maſter Palyn of London, gaue three hundred pound, to purchaſe foure ſchollerſhips: William Breck Eſquire, gaue toward the building of a Chapell an hundred pound. Iames Lingdam, ſometime ſeruant of the houſe yet liuing, gaue to the ſame vſe two hundred pound. There hath been beſtowed in building ſince the firſt yeere of the Kings Maieſtie 1420. pound; of the which ſumme, Sir Henrie Anderſon, late Alderman of London, and Maſter Richard Anderſon, his ſonne gaue 113. pound.

Merton Colledge hath receiued theſe gifts: two hundred pound, with many bookes giuen by Thomas Leech, two hundred markes by Sir Thomas Bodley: 70. pound by William Wilſon, Doctor of Diuinitie: a thouſand pound by Iohn Chambers: 143. pound by Henrie Ieruice, Doctor of Diuinitie: ſeuenteene pound 5. ſhillings, of yeerely rent by Thomas Ieſope, Doctor of Phyſike: the enlarging of the Colledge at the charges of the houſe, coſt 4000. pound.

Lincolne Colledge hath had giuen vnto it, anno 10. Elizabeth, foure ſchollerſhips of 4. markes a yeere a peece: the building of the Colledge hath coſt within twentie yeeres ſix hundred pound.

To Balliol Colledge, William Hamond gaue a thouſand fiue hundred pound, though of the greateſt part thereof the Colledge was defrauded, by one Antonie Garnet a popiſh Prieſt, ſometime ſteward to the old Lord Mountague: which Garnet notwithſtanding had been ſometime Maſter of the Col-

In Hart hall there hath been beſtowed by Maſter Theodore Price, Principall there, within 12. yeeres 280. pound.

Hart Hall. 280. pound.

The number of all the fellowſhips giuen to theſe ſeuerall houſes is about twenty ſeuen, which at twenty pound a man commeth to 5. hundred and forty pound per annum, the ſcholarſhips added being about 62. at three pound ten ſhillings a peece, wil make about 220. pound per annum; the yeerely rents and penſions which haue beene giuen to the Colledges, will riſe to 1070. pounds per annum, or thereabout; which ſummes put together will make about 1900. pounds per annum, which at fifteene yeeres purchaſe wil amount to 28500. pounds or thereabouts: the ſummes laid foorth vpon the Vniuerſitie library, and books, and in the particular buildings of the Colledges, and giuen beſide to the houſes will make 61900. ponnds or thereabouts: both ſummes added together will ariſe to 90000. pounds and ſome odde hundreds or thereabout: I take not vpon mee to bee an exact auditor, diuers ſummes might eſcape me in the caſting vp, but I thinke I haue ſomewhat neere roaued at it: And thus the difference in theſe charitable gifts betweene the two Vniuerſities will appeare not to be very great. Bnt heerein I cannot but commend the diligence and care of Doctor Singleton Vicechancelor of Oxford, and of Maſter Iames Keeper of the Library there, who in three daies ſpace ſent me a more exact certificate from euery Colledge then I could get in Cambridge, by viſiting euery Colledge my ſelfe: diuers beeing from home, that might haue giuen mee more perfect inſtruction.

The number of ſchollarſhips & fellowſhips in Oxford which is ſmaller; but the ſumme of their yearely encreaſe of rents and ſums of money is greater then in Cambridge. Beſide the like ſum of 90000. pounds for the yearely encreaſe of rent and exhibitions was caſt vp before in Cambridge.

Heere as I was about to cloſe vp this catalogue, hauing proceeded thus farre, I requeſted ſome further inſtructions concerning certaine charitable workes done in the citie of London, which I thought better, to inſert heere though ſomewhat out of place, then to omit altogether.

Whereas mention is made of ſir Rowland Hills gifts before page 1223. wherein I followed maſter Stoe his relation, by the inſpection of his will, I find theſe charitable legacies beſide, giuen to Schollars thirty pound: to an hundred poore people, one hundred nobles: to the town of Stoke, fifty pound: to Drayton 20. markes: to his ſeruants, two hundred pound: to the twenty foure wards in London foure pound a peece: to the company of Mercers fifty pound: beſide he forgaue all his tenants in the townes of Alderley and Sponeley a yeeres rent, and bindeth his Heyres, to make them leaſes for 21. yeares for two yeares rent.

272. pound.

I find more theſe particular legacies giuen by Sir Thomas Offley; who is mentioned before, page. 1226. to 50. poore men in gownes, 50. pound: to the priſons twelue pound: to Chriſts Hoſpitall one hundred pound: to poore houſholders tenne pound: to poore maids marriages tenne pound: in coales three pound per annum for twenty yeares: to poore ſchollars, twenty pounds: to the towne of Stafford to be lent to poore occupyers 100. pound: for mending of high waies 400. markes: to his ſeruants thirty pound, and halfe the reſt of his goods vnbequeathed he gaue to poore ſcholars, toward the mending of high waies, and ſuch other charitable vſes: all theſe gifts are ſummed before, as they might be geſſed at.

Mention alſo is made before, page, 1226. of Mr. Iohn Heydons charitable gifts in generall: the particulars whereof in his will I ſaw to be theſe. To one hundred poore ſo many gownes one hundred pound, and twelue pence a peece in money: to the worſhipfull company of the Mercers, 600. pound to be lent to yong men, at three pound ſixe ſhillings eight pence the hundred: which maketh twenty pound to be giuen yeerely to the poore: likewiſe 400. pound more hee gaue to the ſame company to be lent out at the ſame rate, and the yearly annuity of thirteene pound ſixe ſhilling eight pence ariſing thereof, to go to the maintaining of the lecture in S. Michael pater noſter: to Chriſts Hoſpitall 500. pound: to the eleuen worſhipfull companies beſide eleuen hundred pounds to bee lent out to young men, at three pound ſixe ſhillings eight pence the hundred: and out of the annuity ariſing thereof twenty pound per annum to goe to the Hoſpitalls, and ſixteene pound to the poore: to Exceter 200. pound, to Briſtol 100. pound, Glocecter 100. pound, to bee lent to young occupiers, at three pound ſixe ſhillings eight pence the hundred, to the vſe of poore priſoners, and other poore people: to the towne of Wardberrie, ſixe pound thirteene ſhillings foure pence. To the company of Mercers for a cup. 40. pound: to his ſeruants, 240. pound, out of the reſt of his moyitie hee gaue to the foreſaid companies 50. pound to each to the vſes aforeſaid.

Maſter Heydens ſingular charity.

This worthy Citizen Maſter Iohn Heydon Alderman, and Sheriffe in his time, a Mercer, hath giuen a good example to all Citizens and others: And as I am credibly informed, that right worſhipfull company of the Mercers, hath of late ſhewed the like charitable and bountifull mind, in allowing to

tenne

106.pound, per annum, the worthy liberality of the right worſhipfull Companie of the Mercers of London, toward the Scholars of their Schoole of S.Paul.

tenne ſchollers, that ſhould goe out of that ſchoole to the Vniuerſities, to each tenne pound per annum for tenne yeares, which commeth to one hundred pound a peece, and ſo ſucceſſiuely to tenne other ſcholars of the ſame ſchoole for euer, beſide their liberality to the teachers, and their bountifull purpoſe to encreaſe their maintenance.

One maſter Edmund Engliſh of Weſtminſter who died in March. ann. 1603. gaue by his laſt will and teſtament to Emmanuel Colledge in Cambridge, for two fellowſhips and ſixe ſcholarſhips, [a] one thouſand pound: to Chriſts hoſpitall one hundred pound: to the poore of Weſtminſter 12. pound per annum to the poore of Peterborough 100. pound.

[a] All this will make 1400.l.

Mention alſo is made before, p.1228. of an Hoſpitall and free Schoole founded by Miſtreſſe Owen at Iſlington: but many more good workes were performed by her in her life time. She gaue to the Vniuerſitie Librarie at Oxford 200. pound: to S.Iohns Colledge Librarie in Cambridge, 20.pound: a certaine ſum of money for the founding of one fellowſhip and ſcholarſhip in Emmanuel Colledge. To Chriſts Hoſpitall threeſcore pound, to giue twelue pence weekely to the poore of Iſlington: ſhee beſtowed threeſcore and ſixe pound thirteene ſhillings foure pence in beautifying the Cloyſters of Chriſts Church Hoſpitall: toward a Schoolehouſe at Edmunton twentie pound: to the Pariſh of Condouer in Shropſhire, ſhe gaue fiftie pound for a great Bell: the building of the Almeſ-houſes for ten poore women at Iſlington, and the purchaſe of the lands laid vnto it, coſt her 1415.pound, and the building of the Schoole-houſe there 361. ſhe gaue alſo yeerely diuers ſummes of money to Preachers not beneficed, and to the priſons in her life time.

2322.pound, Miſtreſſe Owens charitie in her life time.

By her laſt wil ſhe hath prouided, that 22.pound per annum ſhal be purchaſed for the maintenance of the Schoole at Iſlington: to Preachers ſhe hath bequeathed 35. pound: to the Pariſh of Baſhingſhaw to encreaſe the ſtocke of the poore, twentie pound: to the priſons eight pound: to the companie of the Brewers, to whom ſhe hath committed the gouernment and ouerſight of the ſaid Almeſhouſes and Schoole at Iſlington, for there care to be taken in that buſines, in linnen, plate and money 100.pound. The ſum of theſe moneyes will amount, beſide the annuitie of 22.pound, to 2322.pound or thereabout. This Chriſtian Matrones charitie is ſo much the more commendable, becauſe ſhee did giue the moſt of theſe ſummes in her life time, and ſaw them beſtowed with her owne eies: whereas the vſuall cuſtome of men is to part with nothing while they liue: and beſide, whereas ſhee at the time of her death had 22.children, and childrens children, yet ſhee could find a good portion among her childrens parts for Chriſts poore members. Likewiſe ſhe ſhewed, her thankfulneſſe to God, that whereas being a child borne at Iſlington, ſhee eſcaped a great danger, (an arrow being ſhot in the fields, where ſhe then was by occaſion, through her hat, and ſhe not touched) that in the ſame towne, and not farre from that place, ſhe would offer vp vnto God this charitable worke, in building there an Almeſ-houſe, and a free Schoole.

Whereas mention alſo is before made, p.1223. of the 4.Hoſpitals of London, thus much I thought good to adde more, that in Chriſts Hoſpitall this yeere 1613. there are kept of children in the houſe and citie, 534. and at nurſe in the countrie 164. beſide others with are placed apprentices, and ſome dead: in all 763.

In S.Bartholmewes Hoſpitall there hath been cured this yeere 785. there are vnder cure at this preſent 258.

In S.Thomas Hoſpitall there hath been cured this yeere 780. there are vnder cure 205.

M.Bodye.

In Bridewell this yeere there haue been ſent out by paſportes of vagrant perſons brought thither 1372 many of them hauing been chargeable to the houſe for their diet, bands, hoſe and ſhoes, and ſuch like: there are there kept in labour 120.perſons, whereof 80. are poore children taken out of diuers Pariſhes in London, and there brought vp in trades being apprentizes, and afterward to bee made free men of the Citie. Many other there are beſide, whom I haue no notice of: yet by the good helpe which I had by certaine collections of charitable gifts, gathered together by the diligent care of an induſtrious Clerke of the Prerogatiue Court, who of a good mind was willing to further this worke, I came to the knowledge of theſe charitable men and their gifts, whom otherwiſe I ignorantlie ſhould haue omitted: I haue ſet them downe here ſummarily in their order.

from anno 1558 to 1567.

Theſe charitable gifts were beſtowed vpon poore people and Hoſpitals. From anno 1558. to anno 1567. Sir Richard Sackuill gaue 100.pound. Sir Iohn Lyon Alderman 100.pound. Iohn Hare Mercer, 70,pound. George Basford Letherſeller, 76.pound. Thomas Warren twenty eight pound. William Nelſon Grocer 33.pound. Sir Iohn Hart Alderman 30. 2300.pound. pound. George Harriſon Merchant-tailor, 26.pound. Elizabeth Fletton 66.pound. Iohn Leeſe Clerke, 50. pound: theſe laſt recited ſummes make about 1300. pound, beſide a 1000. pound in particular ſummes vnder 20.pound, as neere as I could geſſe at them, by thoſe which I found coniecturing at the reſt, which were defaced: but I am ſure I ſpeake within my bounds.

There haue beene further giuen from *An.*1606. to *An.*1613. vnto the Hoſpitals about London, namely Chriſts Hoſpitall, S.Bartholmew, S.Thomas, Bridewell, diuerſe charitable legacies, as Bartholmew Barnes gaue ten pound per annum, and thirty pound in money. Robert Chamberlane gaue 140. pound. Matthew Hammond Draper, 50. pound. Sir Iames Deane. 130. pound. Richard Staper clothworker 50.pound. Richard Handbury Eſquire 86.pound. Iohn Skeet Draper 300.pound. William Walthal Alderman 200.pound. William Maskall Mercer 160.pound. Sir Steuen Slanie 120.pound. Lady Spencer 70. pound. Rich. Farrington Alderman. 66.pound 13. ſhillings foure pence. Sir Humfrey Wilde Alderman 100. pound. Andrew Banning 100. pound. Sir William Rumney 65. pound. Randall Manning Skinner 50.pound. Iohn York Brewer 55. pound. Sir Henry Roe Alderman 100. pound. Iohn Norton Stationer 50.pound. Iohn Allen Fiſhmonger 180.pound. Ladie Glouer 80.pound. The ſumme of theſe particulars maketh 2238.pound or thereabout counting the annuity of 10. pound per annum, at 150.l.after 15.years purchaſe, beſide other leſſe ſums, as of 5.pound. 10. pound. 15. pound. 20. pound. 30.pound. 40.pound, which were giuen by diuers, whoſe particular names and gifts, it 4458.pound. were too long to rehearſe, will make about 2220.in toto.4458.

There hath beene giuen within this time to the priſons about London, as followeth: by ſir William Stone 50.pound. Iohn Baker of London 100.pound: Matthew Hammond Draper. 120. pound. Sir Mihil Stanhope 103. pound: Sir Iames Deane 70. l.: Richard Handbury 130.l. by William Walthal Alderman. 135.pound. Sir Stephen Slanie. 100.pound: Humfrey Corbet 100. pound. Iohn Frencham Cutler. 60.pound. Baron Sotherton 60. pound. Edmund Harneſt Bruer. 120.pound.

Randall Manning Skinner. 40. pound. Iohn Trion Merchant-ſtanger 118. pound. Thomas Fiſher 120.pound: The Lady Barbara Stone 100.pound. The ſumme alſo hereof may ariſe to 1611. or thereabout, beſide other ſmaller ſummes vnder fifty pound, which came to a 1440. or thereabout which 3051.pound. both together make 3051.pound or thereabout.

Likewiſe to poore ſchollars there hath beene giuen within this time by Iames Stoddard to Braſen noſe in Oxford fiue pound per annum, and to Queenes in Cambridge fiue pound per annum. William Walthall Alderman to poore ſchollars in Cambridge nine pound per annum. Roger Owfield gaue to both Vniuerſities an hundred pound. Andrew Banning 5.l. per annum to Cambridge, Randall Manning 8. pound per annum to Chriſts and Emanuell in Cambridge: which ſummes reducing the annuities of 32. pound per annum to a proportionable rate after the vſuall purchaſe make 550. pound beſide 160. 710.pound. pound giuen in ſmaller ſummes, within this time ſince anno. 1606. which make in all 710.pound.

More giuen to poore maids marriages by Iane Baker, one hundred pound, and other ſmaller gifts 205 pound. by diuers, making the ſumme of one hundred and fiue pound as appeareth in the booke of particulars which I followed in the whole 205.pound. Beſide, there hath beene giuen more to the Hoſpitalls: by Ralph Newberrie a Stationer, a certaine ſtocke of bookes and certaine priuiledges of Printing to bee Not valued. ſold to the vſe of Chriſts Hoſpitall and Bridewell. Sir Robert Hampſon Alderman gaue one hundred and thirty pound in money, and the reuerſion of two tenements: William Walthall beſide his former gifts,gaue to Chriſts Hoſpitall tenne pound per annum, and fiue hundred pound to the company of Mercers to be lent vnto yong men.

Roger How gaue fifteene pound to certaine priſons, and if his ſecond daughter died, 800. pounds to purchaſe lands, one moytie to go to the Hoſpitalls, the other to the reliefe of the priſons. Iohn Pountis gaue to the priſons eighteene pound,and two ſhillings euery weeke in bread to priſoners in the hole in the Counter in the poultrie: Iohn Porter gaue the reſidue of all his goods not valued,his debts paid,and funeral diſcharged,to be diſtributed to the poore at his executors diſcretion.

In this ſummary catalogue,which I gathered out of thoſe collections which came to my hand, I neither ſet downe the ſmaller ſummes,nor yet the yeare,nor the particular places,as of hoſpitals or priſons,for breuity ſake: the particular ſummes of thoſe charitable legacies from anno 58. to 67. will make 3100,pound or thereabout:from anno 1575. to 1596.about 11608.l,from anno.1596. to 1606. the ſumme will be about 8658.l.or thereabouts.From anno 1606.to 1613.the ſumme will be 9300.l. all which ſummes will make 32550.l.or thereabout,for the ſpace of forty yeares ſince anno.60.for the account of eight yeares is wanting,which I could not get from anno.1567.to anno.1575.which according to the proportion for the reſt being ſupplied, would make vp the ſumme of 40000. pound or thereabout.

So then within the ſpace of three ſcore yeeres,we finde to haue been giuen in the Citie of London, and by the Citizens and inhabitants thereof in money, about 335000.pound: in annuities and perpetuities about 16000.pound: which being valued at fifteene yeeres purchaſe, will ariſe to 240000. pound,or thereabout: which ſummes put together, will make about 575000.pound: whereunto if the former ſumme of particulars of 40000.pound be added,there will ariſe the ſumme of 615000. pound; which together with the bountifull gifts in both Vniuerſities in Cambridge and Oxford,put together will make 180000.pound, or thereabout,and the encreaſe of their yeerely rent corne, at 12000 pound per annum,valued at 180000.pound more,will not want much of a million: But if all other gifts which came not to my knowledge were added,the ſumme will farre exceed a million. In which ſumme I comprehend not the yeerely collection of 30000.pound through the pariſhes in this land,mentioned before pag.1220. Now whereas it will be ſaid,that to make vp this great ſumme,I make mention of ſome mens gifts twice,as ſome gifts of the Citizens are reckoned among the charitable workes of London,and of the Vniuerſities: I anſwere,that this is not found in many,nor the ſame the greateſt gifts,and in liew thereof,ſome great gifts are not ſummed vp, which are rehearſed before the particular catalogue, as that of Miſtreſſe Owen which commeth to 2302.pound: and beſide ſome Hoſpitals and free Schooles, are ſpoken of and not valued at any certaine ſumme. Further,whereas I haue in this catalogue ſet downe the ſummes throughout, adding together ſtill the leſſe,that the value of them may appeare: I doe not take vpon me exactly to ſet them downe, for I conſidered I had no Auditors account in hand: it is ſufficient for my purpoſe though the ſummes ſometime be ſhort,ſometime ouer,as they are caſt: yet it is ſufficient to our purpoſe,if ſometimes I doe but roue at the ſumme, though I hit it not to a pound, or a ſhilling: Howſoeuer I truſt I haue made it good, that more charitable workes haue been done in theſe 60.yeeres of the Goſpell, then in the like time of Poperie: I thinke they cannot ſhew in any age, within 60.yeeres ſpace, almoſt a million to haue been beſtowed in workes of charitie in theſe three places of London, Cambridge and Oxford giuen in inſtance,ſo many Hoſpitals built,more then fourtie, free Schooles aboue twentie,and more then tenne Colledges and Churches. And thus is the ſlandrous obiection of the Papiſts anſwered, that crie out vntruly that Proteſtants doe no good workes but are enemies vnto them.

The charitable workes of London exceede 600000.pound within three ſcore yeeres ſpace: and together with the like in Cãbridge & Oxford,they will make well nie a million.

The reader muſt not looke for an exact account in the caſting vp of the ſummes, for the author profeſſeth not to be an Auditor.

Aboue three ſcore Hoſpitals and free Schooles built in three ſcore yeeres by the citizens of London.

Many charitable workes haue been done in other Cities and places of this land in the times of the Goſpell,as in Yorke, Norwich, and elſewhere, whereof I had not particular notice: but it may be when ſufficient intelligence ſhall be had of thoſe things now omitted, that remembrance may be made afterward.

So then to conclude at this time: theſe and many other ſuch charitable workes performed chiefly in London and in both Vniuerſities, doe gliſter as pearles, and the workers thereof,doe ſhine as ſtarres amongſt vs: their religious acts are as the pomegranates in Aarons prieſtly garment, and themſelues as the tinkling bels hanging thereon, doe ſound abroad the praiſes of the Goſpell. Thoſe godly benefactors, whom I for want of knowledge haue not remembred, are before God regiſtred: and they which are not here mentioned in the lines of this leafe,their names are written in the booke of life. And this I truſt may ſerue for a full and ſufficient anſwere to the Rhemiſts vniuſt accuſation,that we condemne good workes: though we abound not in fruite,as we ſhould, yet (God be thanked) we are not fruitleſſe: and ſo I conclude with that ſaying of Hierome: Veneratio Dei non proficit ad ſalutem,niſi præcepta creatoris impleueris: The veneration of God doth not profit,where the obſeruation of his precepts doth not preuaile: Fabiola tom.4. And here an end of this Catalogue.

[illegible] the whole 205. pound. Besides there hath beene giuen more to the Hospitalls by [illegible] Stationer, a certaine stocke of bookes and certaine priuiledges of Printing to bee [illegible] Christs Hospitall and Bridewell. Sir Robert Hampson Alderman gaue one hundred [illegible] pound in money, and the [illegible] of two tenements: William Walthall, beside his former gifts,

AT LONDON,
Imprinted by FELIX KYNGSTON for THOMAS MAN, dwelling in Pater noſter row, at the ſigne of the Talbot. 1613.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE SIR THOMAS EGERTON KNIGHT, LORD ELLESMERE, LORD CHANCELLOR of England, and of his Maieſties moſt honourable priuie

Counſell, Grace and peace.

RIght Honourable, and my very good Lord, if I ſhould forget your Honours bountifull liberalitie, and extraordinarie fauour, which I receiued at your Lordſhips hand in my firſt preferment, I might iuſtly both of your Honour bee thought vnworthy of that which was beſtowed, and of all men worthily condemned of great ingratitude: for thus it pleaſed the Lord to mooue your Honours heart towards mee, that I being both vnknowne vnto your honourable Lordſhip, and wanting the mediation of friends, and hauing no other meane, but my ſimple labours preſented to your Honour to ſpeake for me, was notwithſtanding remembred, and in my abſence a conuenient preferment for me reſerued: and not long after, a place of better worth falling void, I was of your Honour moſt tenderly reſpected, and before many other petitioners in that ſute preferred: Wherein as I acknowledge Gods mercifull prouidence, as he well ſaith, Quicquid hic fauoris captas, ſi ad Deum non retuleris, ipſi furaris: So I hold my ſelfe infinitely bound vnto your Honour as an eſpeciall meane effecting Gods gracious purpoſe towards me: as another well warneth me, Quid tam contra officium, quàm non reddere, quod acceperis: Nothing is ſo much againſt duty, as what thou haſt receiued, not to render thankfully, &c. And indeed your Honours fauour hath abounded toward me: I haue ſerued other men without reward, your Honour hath rewarded me without ſeruice: I haue ſought ſome mens fauour and not found it, yours I haue found, and (in a manner) not ſought it: to ſome I haue been long knowne, and ſeldome remembred; your Honor hath remembred me before I was knowne: and in one word, other haue often promiſed, but your Honor hath performed: ſo that I may here truly ſay, as one in the like caſe: Alij ſerò præſtant, quod pollicentur, tu præſtas prius, quàm polliceris: Other men doe ſlowly performe what they haſtily promiſe, but your Honour hath firſt performed before you promiſed.

Bernard. in Cantic. ſer. 13.

Ambr. lib. offic. 1. cap. 13.

Wherefore, while I conſidered with my ſelfe how infinitely I was bound to your Honour, I haue indeuoured in ſome meaſure to teſtifie my thankefulneſſe for the ſame, for ingratitude is counted an inhumane thing, of all men iuſtly condemned, and by humane lawes ſharpely cenſured. [a] Seuerus the Emperour made a law, That a father was not bound to nouriſh or keepe an vngratefull child: [b] the ſonne, that was manumitted or ſet at liberty, might for his ingratitude be brought into ſubiection againe to his father: [c] the mother might reuoke the gift, which ſhe had made to her vnthankfull ſonne: [d] ſo might alſo the maſter doe to his vngratefull ſeruant: And by as good right might your Honour reſume into your hands, that which you haue conferred, and call backe that which you haue granted, if I ſhould behaue my ſelfe either as an vnthankfull ſeruant to his maſter, or an vndutifull ſcholler to his honourable Patrone.

I haue then (may it pleaſe your Honor) ſome while abſented and withdrawne my ſelfe from your honourable preſence, not as forgetfull of the benefit receiued, which I ſhall remember while I liue, but not preſuming to appeare emptie handed before you; I meane not city gifts or courtly rewards, which your Honor is as free from, as euer any was in that honorable place: they that doe buy their places doe commonly ſell; for as Piſo in Tacitus truly ſaith, Quod flagitio quæſitum, nemo vnquam bonis artibus exercuit: That place which is vnhoneſtly obtained, is neuer honeſtly executed: but as your Lordſhip hath been honorably to this place aduanced, ſo haue you by Gods grace moſt vertuouſly hitherto the ſame vſed.

Sophronio.

I do therefore here preſent to your Honor, as a token of my thankfulneſſe, and a pledge of further dutie, this preſent treatiſe; not worthie your Honors acceptation, but ſuch as I preſently had, now this fourth time publiſhed, and in many places enlarged, and now againe to your Honor exhibited: and ſo I ſay with Ierome: Tibi, & quæ poſſum, debeo, & quæ non poſſum, malui te vires potius meas, quam voluntatem quærere: I do owe vnto your Honor both what I preſently can, and what I cannot, but hereafter may, &c. I had rather power ſhould be wanting in me then will. It is now ſixteene yeeres ſince I receiued my firſt preferment at your Honors hand: which although I now retaine not, being ſomewhile ſince called to another paſtorall charge: yet your fauour is more to be eſteemed, then the value: and the firſt collation, then the preſent poſſeſſion: true thankfulnes is not worne out with time: neither yet ſhould the memorie of the benefit die with the vſe: I ſay then here againe with Hierome: Tibi non breui hac lucubratiuncula ſed tota nocte, immo tota vita vigilabit ſtylus: My pen ſhall awake and be deuoted to your Honor, not in this ſhort treatiſe onlie, but nights and daies, yea, I ſay more, while I liue,

But leauing further to trouble your Honor with vnneceſſarie matter, I will briefely declare theſe three points: firſt, the contents of this preſent Treatiſe. Secondly, the cauſes that moued me thereunto. Thirdly, why I would haue it paſſe vnder your Honors name:

First of all therefore, as in my former booke I haue gathered together into one ſumme (the Lord by the gracious aſſiſtance of his ſpirit directing mee) the whole doctrine of the Church of Rome, and opinions of Papiſts: in that worke, but plainely and nakedly, offering to the Readers view, the ſubſtance of the controuerſies, and ſtate of the queſtions betweene vs: So further I thought it not amiſſe, to bring to light, and to ſhew as in the face of the Sun, the manifold abſurdities, inconueniences, ſhifts, ſubtilties, blaſphemies, which our aduerſaries in defence of their errors are conſtrained to vſe in oppugning the truth. This haue I accordingly performed, I truſt, in this worke, that the weaknes of their cauſe, the beggery of their Religion, the vanitie of their Councels, and deceit of their heartes might appeare and be made knowne to all the world.

This booke I haue intituled, the PILLARS OF PAPISTRIE: which is built vpon lies and vntruths, faced out with railing, and bitter ſpeech, propped vp with blaſphemies, and patched together with diſſonant and contrary opinions among themſelues. The prooſe of theſe particulars followeth at large diſcourſed in this treatiſe. First, as touching their lying and vntruths, I could haue wiſhed that they had embraced his wiſe counſel, that ſaith: Aut cauenda ſunt mendacia rectè agendo, aut confitenda pœnitendo, non autem cum abundent infeliciter viuendo, augenda ſunt & docendo, Auguſt. lib.2. de mendac. cap.21. But they are ſo farre from correcting by repentance, that which they haue offended in practiſe, that they are not only become lie-makers, but lie-maſters not practiſers of this craft, but teachers and defenders, that we may ſay of them, as Tertullian of Pythagoras: vt hanc ſententiam extrueret, non turpi modo, ſed temerario mendacio incubuit, To confirme this ſentence, he relied vpon not onely an vnſeemely, but a raſh lie. Concerning their rayling ſpeech, it is all the Rhetorike they vſe: Such are but young ſchollers and nouices among them, that haue not filed and whetted their tongues to ſmite and wound vs withall. But here I ſay vnto them, as Auguſtine did to the heretike Paſcentius: Literæ tuæ nec ad reddenda conuitia me prouocant, nec à reddendis literis me reuocare potuerunt: So neither ſhall their railing writings prouoke vs likewiſe to paſſe the bonds of modeſtie, and to pay them home in the ſame kind, neither yet cauſe vs to ceaſe from anſwering their follies.

Lib.de anima.

Epiſt.177.

Now as for their blaſphemies, it would offend a chaſt and Christian eare, to heare what horrible and vngodly ſayings do paſſe from them: in the ſecond Pillar of this booke I haue gathered a great heape of them. But as Auguſtine ſaith to ſome, who the more readily to deſcrie heretikes, themſelues alſo fell into blaſphemie: Tolerabilius in ſuis foueis deliteſcerent

vulpes,

De mendacio. lib.2.cap.9.

vulpes, quam propter illas capiendas in blaſphemiæ foueam caderent venatores: The foxes might more ſafely lurke in their holes, then the huntſmen, to take them, ſhould fall into the pit of blaſphemie, &c. So though we were the foxes, and they the huntſmen, it is no good way for the huntſmen to ſnare themſelues, to intangle the foxes. But wee indeed are the huntſmen, and they the foxes, as it is ſaid, Take vs theſe foxes, theſe little foxes that deſtroy the vines, Cantic.2.15. And here againe I ſay with Tertullian: Verecundia magis peridiitur quam probatione, In ſetting downe their blaſphemous ſpeeches and vngodly ſayings: I am more ſparing for ſhame then want of proofe.

August.in Mat.ſer.11.

Concerning the diſſenſions & diuiſiõs among Papiſts, it is no ſtrange thing as he ſaith: Omnia vitia erroréſq; mortalium diuiſi ſunt inter ſe & contrarij: apud Idolorum cultores diuiſi ſunt ſpiritus Iunonis & ſpiritus Herculis: Paganus & Iudæus hoſtes ſunt Chriſti, ſed diuiſi inter ſe; Arrianus & Photinianus hæretici, & diuiſi inter ſe; ſic Donatiſtæ ſic Maximinianiſtæ: Al vices and errors among men are diuided and contrary to themſelues: among the idolatrous Heathen, the ſpirit of Iuno and Hercules are deuided; the Pagans and Iewes enemies to Chriſt, and yet deuided: the Arrians likewiſe and Photinians, the Donatiſts and Maximinianiſts: and alſo the Scotiſts and Thomiſts among the Papiſts deuided betweene themſelues, yet Ambo pertinent ad regnum diaboli, Both doe belong to the raigne or kingdome of the diuell.

Now the reaſons that haue mooued me principally to enterpriſe this buſineſſe were theſe, Firſt, in reſpect of thoſe country men of ours, which haue ſuffered themſelues a long time to be ſeduced and deceiued with falſe opinions, and a vaine ſhew of holines, being as it were made drunke with the whore of Babylons intoxicate cup: that they now at the length ſeeing the nakedneſſe and beggery of popiſh religion, would take heed to themſelues in time, and thinke it enough, yea and too much, to haue ſipped of that poyſoned cup, leſt drinking more deepely thereof, they afterward bee conſtrained to draw out the dregges, and to be partakers of their plagues: of them we ſay with Auguſtine, Licet non timentur vt perdant, non negligendi ſunt tamen, vt pereant: Though we feare them not to hurt vs, yet they muſt not be neglected and ſuffered to be loſt.

Epiſt.105.

As for their ring-leaders, and ſect-maſters, our counſell alſo to them is, that they would learne at the length to giue place to the truth: Auguſtine ſaid of ſome heretikes: Puto, quod ipſe diabolus, ſi authoritate iudicis, quem ipſe eligerat, toties vinceretur, non eſſet tam impudens, vt in ea cauſa perſiſteret: I think if the diuel had bin ſo often ouercome before a Iudge of his own chooſing, he would not be ſo impudent as to perſiſt ſtil in an euil cauſe, &c. But our aduerſaries haue ben often vanquiſhed, euen by their owne Iudges, the teſtimonies of ancient writers, and conſent of antiquitie, and yet for all this will not yeeld: well, as one ſaith: Non oramus vt moriantur inimici, ſed vt corrigantur, ſic mortui erunt inimici, iam enim correcti non amplius erunt inimici: Wee deſire not, that our enemies were dead, but amended and ſo our enemies ſhould be dead, for being once amended and corrected, they would no longer be our enemies.

Epiſt.167.

There are other alſo of our countrimen, who (though not ſo farre gone as the other, yet) are not ſufficiently grounded in knowledge, or ſettled in iudgement to bee able to diſcerne betweene the truth and error: Qui breuia non valent intelligere, prolixa non amant legere: Who can neither vnderſtand briefe matters, nor will abide to reade long: for their ſakes alſo haue I compoſed this treatiſe, neither very long to make vnwilling, nor yet too ſhort to hinder vnderſtanding. But euen as they which haue tender eyes, doe not firſt behold the ſunne, but the fire or the ſtarres, or ſome ſuch like, and then turne them to looke vpon the ſunne: ſo muſt we deale with theſe men, Gradibus perducendi ad ſumma ſunt: By degrees they muſt be brought to vnderſtand the higher points. For their cauſe chiefly haue I vndertaken this labour, that they which are not able to conceiue the chiefe matters in queſtion, yet may ſafely take knowledge of the nakednes and poorenes of our aduerſaries cauſe.

Aug.Epiſt.101.

Aug.ſoliloq.cap.14.

Concerning my ſelfe alſo, ſomewhat there was, which in this reſpect induced me to ſet hand to this plough: for as he ſaith, Vt diſcamus, inuitare nos debet ſuauitas veritatis, vt doceamus, cogere debet neceſſitas charitatis: As the pleaſantnes of the truth doth entice vs to learne, ſo the bond of charity ſhould vrge vs to teach, &c. And the rather conſidering that now

Cap.18. is the time or not farre off, wherein the fall of Babylon is to bee expected and looked for, according to the propheſie in the Reuelation: Euery man that beareth hatred to the ſcarlet and blood-thirſtie whore, ought to ſhew his readineſſe in defacing and pulling downe the kingdome of Antichriſt. As Chriſtian Kings and Princes then by their ſacred authoritie haue begun for their part to lay Babylon waſte, ſo is it our part to diſcouer her nakedneſſe: they are the Lords Captaines to ſlay the enemie, wee his watchmen to deſcrie the enemies comming: they with battell canons, and engines, doe batter the walles, we come
2.Sam.17.23. with ropes of argument and perſwaſion to pull downe the towers: they fight with Sauls ſword, and put on his kingly armour, we muſt aſſault Goliah with Dauids ſling and ſtones
Apoc.17.16. out of the brooke. The text ſaith, They ſhall make the whore deſolate and naked, eate her fleſh, and conſume her with fire. It is our part to ſtrip her, and make her naked, and ſhew her filthineſſe: by the word of God to deſcrie their corruptions: Then commeth the Chriſtian Magiſtrate, and eateth her fleſh, and burneth it with fire, that is, draweth out the ſword of iuſtice after them. Now in the laſt place vnto your Honor I briefly direct my ſpeech, vnto whom I doe conſecrate, and deuote theſe labours of mine, as a ſigne of my thankfulneſſe, and a profeſſion of further dutie to your Honour: as alſo vnto one, who himſelfe is able to iudge of theſe matters: neither is it the leaſt part of your Honors ſtudie and care to be throughly acquainted with the controuerſies of religion: as it is moſt meete honourable perſonages ſhould be. Themiſtocles (as Auguſtine reporteth it) did not care, that hee was counted ſomewhat rude, becauſe he could not ſing to the pipe at feaſts: Interrogatus, quid ſciret, reſpondit, rem publicam ex parua magnam facere: It was enough for him to know how to enlarge the Commonwealth, of a little one to make a greater. So may I ſay, it belongeth chiefly to Chriſtian Magiſtrates, Scire Religionem ex parua magnam facere, To know how to enlarge and propagate Religion, and to cauſe the Goſpell to flouriſh.

The Lord hath aduanced you to this ſeate of honour: for promotion (as the Pſalmiſt Pſalm.75.6.7. ſaith) neither commeth from the Eaſt, nor from the Weſt: but it is the Lord that ſetteth vp one, and pulleth downe another. The chiefe husbandman hath planted you as an hedge to keepe his vineyard: your Honor now is in place to profit the Church of God greatly, as (praiſed be God) you doe in aduancing of learning, in helping to furniſh the Lords harueſt with plenty of laborers, in encouraging the workemen of Gods houſe, whoſe hands do hang downe, and their knees waxe feeble. There are many in this land, who would gladly bee ſet on worke, and cannot, whoſe outward wants doe ſlake their inward deſire: for that old ſaying is moſt true, οὐδὲν πενίας βαρύτερον ἐστὶ φορτίον: there is no ſuch heauie clogge, as pouertie is: And the Poet ſpake by good experience:

Haud facilè emergunt quorum virtutibus obſtat
Res anguſta domi.

You (Right Honourable) with the reſt, as one well ſaith: Pugnatis contra viſibiles inimicos, nos pro vobis contra inuiſibiles: Your Honours by ſage counſell and aduice, fight againſt our viſible enemies, but we fight for you by our ſtudy and prayers againſt the ſpiritual and inuiſible. The Lord hath now made your Honour a captaine to leade his ſouldiers into battel, and to ſet them in aray: and thanks be vnto God, vnto whoſe praiſe be it ſpoken, the ſouldiers of this ſpiritual warfare, neuer receiued better encouragemēt, to fight the Lords battels, then ſince your Honor had the leading of the field, and the diſtributing of the eccleſiaſticall preferments (the ſincere and indifferent beſtowing whereof, not in giuing to him that hath, which is the rule of the world; nor in giuing for that which a man hath, which is the rule of darkeneſſe, but in giuing freely to him that hath not, which is according to the rule of God) ſhall neuer bee forgotten in this land to the glorie of God, and August.de temp.ſer.217. your endleſſe comfort. Auguſtine writeth well vpon thoſe words, Prou. 31.19. She putteth * or diſtaffe. *her hands to the * wherne, and her hands handle the ſpindle*: Opus tuum in fuſo ſit, non in colo, in colo enim eſt, quod facturus es, in fuſo, quod feciſti: Let thy worke bee in the ſpindle, not in the diſtaffe: that is, in the diſtaffe, which thou maiſt doe hereafter, that is in the ſpindle which thou haſt already done. So when God beſtoweth vpon a man, honour, riches, authoritie: Omnia iſta in colo ſunt, tranſeant ad fuſum, Theſe things are yet vpon the diſtaffe, let them be ſpunne out, and turned vpon the ſpindle. But your worke, Right Honourable, as we haue all good experience is already in Fuſo, not in Colo: and we doubt not but that vnto your good beginnings, you will adde alſo good proceedings: and the Lord both vnto your good proceeding, and vertuous beginning, ſhall giue an happie end. In te nunc ſunt vniuerſorum ora & oculos conuerſos, & ad ſpectandum vita tua totam conſediſſe Angliam: All mens eies are vpon your Honor, and haue as it were ſetled themſelues to behold your doings: God grant (and we truſt, as wee haue alreadie ſeene) that all things ſhall be anſwerable to their expectation. Laſtlie, the Lord proſper your godly enterpriſes, and giue a bleſſing to your holy Counſels, euen the bleſſing of Caleb: That as Caleb droue the Anakims great giants by ſtrong hand out of Hebron, ſo at the length, by your prudent and godly counſell, with the aſſiſtance of the reſt of the honourable Lords of the Counſell and Nobilitie, vnder the leading of our happie Ieſus, and gracious Soueraigne, the Romiſh Anakims, traiterous Ieſuites and Seminaries, with other rebellious and hollow harted Canaanites, may be weeded out of the Lords field in England: that you with faithfull Caleb and Ieſus, may alſo haue an euerlaſting inheritance, in the heauenlie Canaan, through the onely merits of Ieſus Chriſt: to whom bee praiſe for euer.

And thus I humbly take my leaue of your Honor:
this preſent Octob. 1613.

Tui honoris ſtudioſiſſimus.

ANDREAS WILLET.

THE PREFACE TO THE CHRISTIAN READER.

Iob 1.

IT is the common and vſuall practiſe of wrangling and cauilling ſpirits, that to preuent other mens accuſations, they will themſelues firſt begin to accuſe and challenge others of the ſame crimes, which they are guilty of: Thus Satan the accuſer of the brethren, ſometime dealt with Iob, ſaying vnto God, that if he would but ſtretch forth his hand a little, and touch all hee had, hee would not ſpare to blaſpheme God to his face, whereas nothing is more common with that old Serpent, then to curſe and blaſpheme God. Thus our aduerſaries of the Popiſh religion (which indeed is no religion, but meere ſuperſtition) haue ſubtilly ſought to vndermine vs, crying out againſt vs, that wee are lyars, Idolaters, blaſphemers, and ſuch like, which are titles and epithites fitter and more proper to themſelues. They charge vs with railing: Harding Confut. apol. cap. 16.diuiſ.2. with lying: Defenſ.apol.pa.597. with corrupting and altering of Scripture: Rhemiſt.2.Cor.2.ſect.8. with fables: Rhem.1.Tim.1.ſect.4. with execrations and blaſphemies: Iud.3. with hereſies, Bellar. de notis eccleſ.lib.4.cap.9. They obiect againſt vs the weakeneſſe of our proofes, and arguments: Harding def.apol.p.625. often innouating and changing of religion: Rhemiſt.2.Cor.2.8. Diuiſions and diſſenſions among our ſelues: Harding def.apol.p.239. Yea that we may ſee how true their other accuſations are, they are not aſhamed to charge vs with Idolatrie, & worſhipping of Idols, Rhemiſt.1.Cor.10.ſect.9. Wherefore that it may appeare to the world, how vniuſtly they haue accuſed vs, and how ſubtilly they would vnburthen and exonerate themſelues of thoſe crimes which are theirs and not ours, to this end I haue vndertaken this labour in this treatiſe, to detect and bewray their guiltineſſe in this behalfe, that we may be purged from their ſlanders, and our cauſe iuſtified, and that the ſhame and blame may fall vpon them that haue deſerued it.

As for vs, we raile not, neither vſe reuiling ſpeech, yet ſometime we tell them roundly their owne, and this may be done without railing: vnleſſe they will ſay Chriſt railed, when he told the Iewes, that they had made his fathers houſe a den of theeues. But their railing, and venemous darts, which they ſhoot at vs, are notoriouſly knowne and cannot bee hid. It is the grace of Popiſh writers both old and new, to ſtuffe their bookes full with curſing and railing: Stapleton that blacke mouthed Sophiſter of Louaine, did not long ſince ſet forth a booke againſt D. Whitakers, wherein beſide the badneſſe of his cauſe, he hath diſgraced his profeſſion, with bitter & filthy tearmes, calling that learned and godly man, Ruſticum, fatuum, aſinum, aſininum profeſſorem, morionem, ſtolidum: Foole, clowne, aſſe, dolt: yea, he is ſo impudent, that he ſpareth not to reuile the dead, moſt ſhamefully calling Caluin, that worthy miniſter of the Goſpell, Egregium nebulonem, a notable knaue: I thinke Stapletones owne friends and patrons here in England, will bluſh and bee aſhamed of him, when they find ſuch ſtuffe in his booke: And here I may ſay to M. Stapleton, as Hierome vnto Heluidius, Arbitror te veritate ſuperatum, ad maledicta conuerti: I thinke you being ouercome of the truth, doe fall to rayling. And he ſaith further, Solent hoc mulierculæ facere, quæ victoribus Dominis malè optant in angulis: Much after the guiſe of ſeely women, that raile of their maſters in corners, when they haue beaten them. So plaieth M. Stapleton, that being beaten downe with euidence of truth, he falleth to rayling in the melancholy corners of his ſtudie.

Neither doth he thus take on in his mood, as caried away with ſome intemperate heat, but being in his wits (if in his right wits) and well aduiſed, and of purpoſe he falleth into this raging veine: giuing M. Whitakers warning thereof aforehand, Age Whitakere, & ad patientiā te compone: willing him to take patiently, what he ſaith. Indeed M. Stapleton your counſell is good, for ſhoote out your venemous darts as long as ye will, we care not, we haue a fenſe for them, and a buckler to latch them, as Auguſtine ſaith very well: Quæſo mi frater, quaſi has diaboli ſagittas, ad petram, quæ eſt Chriſtus, allidens, ſume ſcutum fidei: I giue thee counſell (my brother) to rebound theſe arrowes of Satan vpon the rocke, which is Chriſt, taking the ſhield of faith: And ſuch patience is in this caſe neceſſarie as then for M. Whitakers, ſo now for the reſt of vs Proteſtants that are liuing, as the ſame father ſpeaketh of elſewhere: Quemadmodum parentes à filijs vel pueris, vel phreneticis multa patiuntur donec infantia, vel ægritudo tranſeat, ita Chriſtianus ab impijs tanquam phre-neticis multa pati debet : Like as parents doe ſuffer many things at their ſonnes hands, while they are children or phrenticke till their childiſhneſſe or phrenſie be paſt, &c. thus Chriſtians muſt patiently beare many things of the wicked, as of men taken with phrenſie. Such intemperate and railing ſpeeches of Papiſts, we attribute either to their childiſh ignorance or phrenticke malitiouſneſſe.

Concerning the other accuſations of hereſie, blaſphemie, lying, corruption of Scriptures, and ſuch other, it ſhall appeare I truſt, in this diſcourſe, that they are the men, and none other, that are faultie herein. As for fables, they doe vs great wrong to caſt them vpon vs: their owne legend of lies and infinite fabulous ſtories, doe plainely tell vs, that poperie is fuller of fables, then the hereſies of the Valentinians or the Maniches. Their other charge concerning innouation and diſſention is returned vpon themſelues: for who knoweth not, that the Ieſuites of theſe daies, haue innouated and changed in the moſt points, the old popiſh profeſſion, and haue caſt it into a new mould, and brought in a new forme of Pope-catholike doctrine: But we in ſubſtance retaine the ſame religion, which at the firſt reuiuing of the Goſpell was maintained 50. yeeres agoe by the Proteſtants. As for diſſentions in fundamentall points and articles concerning faith, wee haue none. In other matters, there haue bin ſome contentions among vs, more we grant then needed, and more hotly purſued of ſome then was requiſite: yet they are neither in weight ſo great, nor in number ſo many, nor ſo egerly proſecuted, as diſſentions among Papiſts haue been: for an. 1509. we reade that the Franciſcane Friers purſued the poore Dominicks to death: and the contention began about the conception of the Virgin Marie: Fox p. 802. Such rigour and fiercenes hath not yet been ſeene among Proteſtants, neither (I truſt) euer ſhall.

But in ſaying that Proteſtants are Idolaters, they make too leaud a lie: for it is well knowne vnto them, that we haue no images or Idols of braſſe, wood, ſtone, ſiluer at all in our Churches, as they haue, nor any pictures, carued, painted or grauen, ſet vp to be worſhipped. If two men ſhould bee ſet before vs: the one lifteth vp his eies to heauen, and calleth vpon the name of God, hauing no ſimilitude or reſemblance before him, the other praieth before a ſtocke or ſtone Image: is any man ſo ſenſeleſſe, as to ſay the other is an Idolater rather then this? But thus blind and ſottiſh are the Papiſts in their iudgements. Take heed ye Engliſh pope-catholikes, doe you not ſee, how your ghoſtly fathers goe about to make fooles of you? Now then, to the intent our aduerſaries ſlanderous mouthes ſhould bee ſtopped, and their falſehood deſcried, I haue giuen a ſeuerall taſte in this worke, in euery kind of their fraudulent dealing with vs, and of their vnſeemely behauiour, and vngodly ſhifts, which they vſe in oppugning of the truth, and defence of their bad cauſe. The whole booke I haue deuided into 4. parts, ſhewing the foure principall pillars of Papiſtrie, and euery pillar containeth diuers parts beſide, as it is ſet forth in the title of this booke: the third edition of this booke was herein enlarged more then the two former; euery where I added more particulars, for the proofe of the argument handled, but eſpecially in the 3. part of the firſt pillar, where I at large examined the decrees fathered vpon the Biſhop martyrs of Rome, and ſhewed them to be forged: likewiſe in the third part of the 2. pillar, where our aduerſaries charge vs with twentie ſeuerall hereſies: I out of their owne Canons confirmed thoſe doctrines, which they call hereſies: and beſtowed vpon them twentie hereſies more, that is fortie in all: alſo in the third part of the 3. pillar, I did out of their owne Canons ouerthrow their ſubtill ſophiſticall diſtinctions, and in the 4. pillar throughout, I added 200. contradictions more at the leaſt, but eſpecially I laid open the diſſonance and diſagreement of their owne Canons and conſtitutions. This I performed in the third edition: and in the fourth this Reader ſhal find diuerſe additions thoughout, with an anſwer to certaine obiections of a popiſh Cauiller here and there inſerted in the margen. I truſt, throughout this treatiſe, that our aduerſaries ſhall not iuſtly challenge me for dealing vntruly or deceitfully with them, ſeeing I haue ſet downe their ſayings and opinions, as I find them, quoting the places, and citing the authors whence I haue them (ſo that I doubt not to ſay with Auguſtine: Ego omnia, quòd bona fide coram Deo dixerim, ſine vllo ſtudio contentionis, ſine aliqua dubitatione veritatis, ſine aliquo præiudicio diligentioris tractatus expoſui : I truſt I may ſay, with a good conſcience before God, that I haue ſet downe all things without deſire of contention, or doubting of the truth, and without preiudicing other mens more exact labours herein. If ſometime I ſhall ſeeme to ſpeake ſomewhat roundly or ſharply, I hope the diſcreet reader will iudge it to be done, not without cauſe, and to ſay, as that good father in like caſe: Noui fratrem meum, ſi quid in diſputatione pro fide ſua dixit feruentiùs, non illa contumacia, ſed fiducia dicenda eſt: I know if our brother be ſometime feruent and hot, in the defence of faith, that it proceedeth not of contumacie, but his full reſolution in the truth.

Lib. 2. de Gen. cap. 29.

Auguſt. ep. 147.

Concerning our aduerſaries, I would haue them thinke, that I haue vndertaken theſe labours for their good, if they could ſo conſtrue it, that ſeeing now the nakedneſſe of their cauſe, they may at the length be better aduiſed: We haue not caſt off all loue and care of our enemies. We ſay of them, as Epiſt. 106. Auguſtine did ſometime of Pelagius the heretike: Nos non ſolum diligimus, ſed dileximus eos, ſed aliter nunc diligimus, aliter aliquando dileximus, tunc, quia nobis rectæ fidei videbantur, nunc vt ab errore liberentur: We both loue them now, and loued them before, but otherwiſe now then before; then we loued them, becauſe we thought they were of a right faith: but now we loue them, to the end they might be deliuered from error. Now vnto my brethren of the ſame faith and religion, thus much I ſay, that whatſoeuer blaſphemies, hereſies, abſurdities, they reade here to be affirmed and maintained by Papiſts, they would take no offence thereby, nor ſeeme to ſtumble thereat: Aug. tract. in Iohn 6. Sed facite inde quod fecit Dominus, cum illi obtulerunt amarum potum, guſtauit, & reſpuit, ſic vos audite & abijcite: But doe ye as Chriſt did, when they offered him vineger to drink, he taſted and refuſed it; ſo giue you the hearing and reading of theſe things, but in iudgement caſt them away, and reiect them.

Thus I haue by the Lords aſſiſtance, finiſhed my taske, and ended my trauell for this time: I will now ſit me downe a while and reſt my weary pen, and giue place to others. This I haue done, partly to diſcharge my dutie to God, and debt to his Church; partly to prouoke others by this example to put forth their talents, who for skill are more able, for their leiſure more fit, for outward helps haue better incouragement, and in reſpect of their reward are more bound. I would we might now at the length ſpare our ſelues at home, and forbeare to prouoke one another by writing, and ioyne our ſtrength againſt the common aduerſarie. If our wits want whetting, our pens exerciſe, our bodies labour, our aduerſaries abroad can and may afford vs worke enough: we need not hew one another. Let vs do as Moſes did, ſlay the Ægyptian, it is not ſeemely for one Hebrew to ſtriue with another. The timber that muſt make the houſe, ſhal be prepared and hewen in the field, Prou. 24. 27. when it commeth to be ſet together, not ſo much as the noiſe of an hammer ſhould be heard, as we reade of Salomons Temple: ſo we ſhould labour to hew and cut off popiſh ſuperſtition and corruption of manners as in the field abroad, but we ought to build peaceably, and without noiſe among our ſelues. One ſaith well, Auguſtine. Omnia alia bona, aurum, argentum, diuitiæ diuidi poſſunt; non poteſt diuidi (pacem meam do vobis:) All other goods, gold, ſiluer, riches may be diuided: this inheritance onely cannot be diuided, my peace I leaue with you: And therefore, ſaith he, Chriſtus noluit fieri iudex ad diuiſionem: Chriſt refuſed to be a iudge or diuider of the inheritance. God grant that we may at the length learne, as carefull children, or faithfull ſtewards, to keepe whole Chriſts inheritance ſent vnto vs, that rich patrimonie of brotherly loue and peace: that we may one yeeld to another in the truth, euery one to ſtudie to amend what is amiſſe, and all ioyne together to ſeeke Gods glory.

Thus ſhal we be ſure to embrace and enioy peace: for what elſe is the cauſe of contention among vs: Bernard. epiſt. 127. Niſi (as one ſaith) quia diſplicet mortalibus angelica illa partitio, qua gloria Deo, pax hominibus nunciatur: quonam modo ſtabit pax hominum coram Deo, ſi Deo apud homines non poteſt tuta eſſe ſua gloria? Becauſe mortall men like not that Angelicall partition, when they pronounced glorie vnto God, and peace in earth: for how can the peace of men ſtand in force before God, when Gods glorie is not kept ſafe and ſound amongſt men? This then is the way to procure peace, and to nouriſh it, to remoue and auoide diſſenſion, euery one in his ſeuerall place and calling to labour to amend what is amiſſe, to reſtore what is decaied, to ſupply what is wanting, and to redreſſe what is out of order, and ſo to ſeeke chiefly to aduance Gods glory. Thus ſhall we haue peace at home and peace abroad, our diſſentions ſhall ſlacke within, and by our peace, our ſtrength and courage ſhall increaſe againſt our enemies without. We ſhall runne vpon them, as one man; tenne ſhall chaſe an hundred, and an hundred a thouſand. Thus the Goſpell by Gods grace ſhall ſtill flouriſh in this land, ſuperſtition ſhall decreaſe and weare away, and popery ſhall be weeded and rooted out: which God grant for his welbeloued and only begotten Sonnes ſake Ieſus Chriſt our Lord: to whom be praiſe for euer. Amen.

WHat our purpoſe is in this treatiſe following, we haue already partly declared in the Preface: that our intent is not in this enterpriſe ſo much to charge our aduerſaries with ſuch matter, as may be iuſtly obiected againſt them, as to diſcharge our ſelues of ſuch vniuſt crimes, as they doe burthen vs withall: not to accuſe, but to excuſe: not to fight, but to fenſe: not to dare them with our darts, but to arme our ſelues againſt their venemous arrowes, which they ſhoote at vs: and here I ſay with Saint Hierome: Vulneratus nequaquam contra perſecutorum tela direxi, ſed meo tantum vulneri admoui manum: Being wounded, I will not ſmite the ſtriker againe, but lay mine hand vpon mine owne ſoare. Hier. ad Ruffin. Whereas therefore they euery where almoſt in their bookes and pamphlets, doe lay ſore vnto our charge, that wee are raylers, reuilers, lyers, blaſphemers, heretikes, cauillers, ſophiſters, deuided into many ſects and ſchiſmes, diſagreeing amongſt our ſelues: our beſt and ſafeſt way to free and deliuer both vs and our cauſe from theſe ſo vniuſt, vntrue, and vncharitable accuſations, is to returne them vpon themſelues, to whom they do more properly belong: and to cloath them with their owne liuerie, which will ſit more comely, without pleate or wrinkle vpon their backe.

Firſt of all therefore, according to that order which we haue ſet downe, we will trie and examine the modeſtie, ſobrietie and temperance of their ſpirite, wherewith they are inflamed againſt vs. Firſt of their reuiling and bitter ſpeech: then of their malicious ſlaunders againſt vs, and our cauſe: thirdly, of their forgeries: fourthly, of the manifolde vntruths, which in plaine engliſh are no better then lies, which they are not aſhamed in heapes to vtter. Firſt then concerning their contumelious and reproachfull ſpeeches, and their adders tongues which they ſmite and ſting vs withall: I would wee might ſay vnto them, as Auguſtine ſometime did vnto Vincentius, a young malapert ſpringall, that vnſeemely taunted that reuerend father in his writings: Si quid inter diſputandum (ſaith Auguſtine) quod ad meam contumeliam redundat expreſſit, non eum conuitiantis voluntate crediderim, ſed diuerſa ſentientis neceſſitate feciſſe: vbi enim hominis erga me animus ignotus eſt & incertus, melius arbitror meliora ſentire, quam inexplorata culpare: If any thing fall out in diſputation, which may redound vnto my reproch, I thinke that he did it not ſo much with a minde to reuile me, as being enforced by diuerſitie of opinion: for where a mans minde is vnto mee vncertaine and vnknowne, I holde it better to thinke the beſt, then to blame what I know not, &c. So if our aduerſaries were carried away only in the heate of their cauſe, and with a blind zeale of ſuperſtition, when they ſpit ſuch venemous words at vs, and had not a ſpeciall purpoſe (as we haue, but too much experience) in ſo doing to malign the truth, and diſgrace the profeſſors thereof, we ſhould be able better to brooke their ſpeeches, and to beare their outrages, then now, knowing the contrary, we either can or will. This then is that, that ſometimes thruſteth vs forward, when we ſee not ſo much our perſons to be ſtriken and gaulled with their tongues, as the truth to be wounded through our ſides, to ſpeake home vnto them, and to tell them their owne; not reuiling, but reprouing; not taunting, but telling them their fault and follie. Creſconius an Archdonatiſt, doth roundly take vp Auguſtine, because hee vſed theſe words againſt them: Sicut non poteſt Satanas Satanam excludere, &c. As Satan (ſaith he) cannot driue out Satan, ſo the error of the Manichees cannot ouerthrow the error of the Donatiſts. Auguſtine anſwereth very well: Quaſi (inquit) Petilianum Satanæ comparauerim, ac non errorem potius: Apoſtolica enim manſuetudo, cum quibus modeſtè agi præcepit, eos ipſos docet à diabolo captiuatos: nec tamen quam commendauit, amiſit lenitatem, quia eam (quam docebat) tacere noluit veritatem: As though (ſaith he) I compared Petilian himſelfe to Satan, and not his error rather: for ſo the Apoſtle doth ſay, that euen they, whom notwithſtanding hee wiſheth to be gently dealt withall, were captiued and ſnared of the diuell: neither did he in ſo ſaying, offend againſt that lenitie, which he commendeth, while he vttered the truth, which was not to be concealed, &c. Thus Auguſtine defended himſelfe, by Saint Pauls example, and ſheweth though it bee not lawfull to ſpeake euill or to reuile, yet freely to open our mouthes, and to crie out againſt the enemies of the truth, it is not forbidden. Bernard a later writer, and one of their Catholike Doctors, as they take it, (though in truth in moſt points in controuerſie betweene vs, he is more ours, then theirs) he vſed the like libertie of ſpeech in his daies, and though he offended not: as inueying againſt the Clergie of his time, he ſaith: Miniſtri ſunt Chriſti, & ſeruiunt Antichriſto: They are the miniſters of Chriſt, and yet ſerue Antichriſt. Yea of the Biſhops themſelues and the chiefe of the Clergie, he doubteth not to ſay, hauing firſt rehearſed thoſe words of Chriſt to his Apoſtles: Haue I not choſen you twelue, and one of you is a diuell? Sic facit Ieſus hodie, eligens ſibi multos diabolos Epiſcopos: Euen ſo doth Ieſus (ſaith he) now a dayes, chuſing many diuels to bee Biſhops. He ſtaieth not here, but climeth vp euen vnto the Popes chaire: Triſtes vidimus, triſtes eloquimur honorem eccleſiæ, Honorij tempore non minimè læſum: We haue ſeene it with griefe, and we ſpeake it with griefe, that in Pope Honorius time, the honour of the Church was not a little endamaged. And in another place finding fault with the Cardinals of Rome, that they had fetcht Eugenius out of his cloyſter, and of an Abbot, made him a Pope: he taunted them in theſe words: Aſcendit Iericho, incidit in latrones: He is gone vp from Ieruſalem to Iericho, hee is fallen among theeues: thus comparing Rome to Iericho, and the Cardinals to theeues. If Bernard then a Doctor of their owne, could aſſume vnto himſelfe ſuch libertie of ſpeech, as to terme euill miniſters, the ſeruants of Antichriſt, Biſhops diuels, Cardinals theeues, in hatred and deteſtation of the corruptions of thoſe times: I thinke we may be excuſed, if for loue and zeale of the truth, we deale plainely many times with our aduerſaries, and do not flatter them a whit: though I thinke few or none of vs haue vſed like freenes of ſpeech, as either Auguſtine againſt the heretikes of that age, or Bernard againſt the corruptions of his time. Therefore to conclude this point, we ſay, as not long ſince a darling of their owne ſaid, yet with better right and more truly, I am ſure then he: Now the law of vpright dealing ſpecially in Gods cauſe ſo requiring, ye muſt pardon vs, if as among husbandmen, we call a rake a rake, a ſpade a ſpade, a mattocke a mattocke: ſo among Diuines, wee call hereſie hereſie, and likewiſe falſehood, lying, ſlaundering, craft, hypocriſie, blaſphemie, euery ſuch crime by his proper name without all gloſing.

De animæ Origen. lib. 1. cap. 2.

2. Tim. 2. contra Creſcon. lib. 3. cap. 78.

But leauing off here in this place further to make apologie, or to ſeeke defence in this point for our ſelues, which were a needles and ſuperfluous labour, the writings of our learned and godly brethren are abroad to be ſeene and read: I truſt they ſhall be found neither to ſauour of ſo enuious a ſpirit, nor to be mixed with ſuch intemperate and vndigeſted humours, as our aduerſaries writings are ſawced and powdred withall. We will now proceede (not further keeping the reader in ſuſpenſe, to collect ſome flowers of popiſh eloquence and Rhetorike, which their bookes are beautified, and adorned withall.

First we will be ſo bold as walke into our countrie man M. Hardings garden, and there a little refreſh our ſelues with the pleaſant ſent of his ſweete ſmelling hearbes. And heere in the very entrance, I finde a noſegay alreadie gathered to my hand by that ſkilfull and cunning gardener, not in name but in deede, B. Iewell: let vs take vp this poſey, and ſmell a little thereon: Maſter Harding therefore writing againſt Biſhop Iewell, cloyeth and ouerchargeth him with theſe and ſuch like ſweete ſpeeches:

Preface in defenſ. apol.

1. Who euer heard ſuch an impudent man? a moſt impudent lyer, a wicked ſlanderer: and all becauſe he ſaid with Laurentius Valla a Canon of Rome, that Pope Celeſtinus was a Neſtorian heretike.

2. Againe: Who euer ſaw ſo impudent a man, what ſhall I ſay to this fellow? fie for ſhame man, a miniſter of fables, a miniſter of lyes? fooliſh ignorance, ſhameles malice, ſo ignorant, ſo witleſſe, lewd wretches, Iewiſh, Heathenish, ſhameles, blaſphemous villaines, falſe miniſters, falſe harlots, ye lie falſely, yea ye lie for aduantage, ye are impudent liers, lewd liers, heapes of lies, nothing but lies, and all is lies. But what is the cauſe thinke you, that this meeke ſpirited man ſhould be ſo diſquieted and make ſuch outcryes againſt lyers? forſooth becauſe Biſhop Iewell, in one place leaueth out (enim) in another place (hoc) in another place, the Printer ſet downe ſchemate, for ſchiſmate, and ſuch like: Is not here great cauſe thinke you, to make a man thus to take on and to run out of his wits? But I ſay here with Hierome, Qui mendacij alterum criminaris, deſinas ipſe mentiri: He that chargeth others with lying, muſt leaue off to lye himſelfe: ſo ſhould Maſter Harding haue done.

Hier. apol. 2. cont. Ruffin.

Is not this a ſweete noſegay (thinke you) and is it not compounded of choice flowers? the ſent is ſo ſtrong to my ſmell, that I cannot chuſe but ſtop my noſe: Niſi, as Bernard ſaith, omnium paſſim naribus infecto fœtore, ſolus diſſimulem peſtem, nec audeo naſum contra peſſimum putorem propria manu munire: Vnleſſe, as he ſaith, the ſtinke ſmelling ſtrong in euery mans noſe, I onely ſhould diſſemble the matter, and not dare to fenſe my noſe with mine owne hand againſt the contagious ſmell, &c. But let vs haue patience a little, and paſſe along, to ſee what ſtore of ſuch ſweete ſmelling flowers M. Hardings garden will afoord vs.

3. Pag. 40. Thus your vaine boaſt in wickednes wrought by the power of Sathan is put to ſilence, becauſe Biſhop Iewel ſaith, that many Kings and Princes are fallen away from the Sea of Rome, and haue ioyned themſelues to the Church of God.

Defenſ. Eccl. Angl. 3.

4. Pag. 42. This is his heatheniſh heart, what could Porphirie, or Iulius, or Celſus ſay more? becauſe Biſhop Iewel had ſaid, that men euen by light of nature, though thereby alone they cannot be led to the perfection of faith, yet may ſomewhat diſcerne what is likely or vnlikely in religion, according to Saint Paul, Rom. 1. 20. The inuiſible things of God, his euerlaſting power and Godhead are ſeene by the creation of the world.

5 Pag.85. We take you to be mad: would God you were not worſe then mad: were you mad, you ſhould be tied vp: Elſe were you ſuffered to goe abroad, for feare folke would flie from you, and then ſhould you doe little hurt. So Hierome reporteth of Paula that vertuous matron, Quod præ nimio feruore quibuſdam videretur inſana, & cerebrum eius confouendum: That for her great zeale ſome deemed her to be mad, and that her braine had need be ſetled, &c. but ſhe anſwered for her ſelfe, as wee doe in the like caſe, that as we are charged with madneſſe for the loue of the truth, ſo our Sauiour Chriſt of his owne kinſfolks was thought to be beſide himſelfe, and therefore they went about to ſhut him vp.

Epitaph. Paulæ.

6 Pag.145. How ſay you ſir Miniſter Biſhop, ought the miniſter to be lawfully called?

7 Pag.146. Touching the exerciſe of your miniſterie, you doe all things without order: vnleſſe ye meane ſuch order, as Theeues obſerue among themſelues in diſtribution of their robberies.

8 Pag.153. If he were ſo fooliſh to thinke ſo, yet you M. Iewel in that behalfe ſhould not beare the bable with him: ſpeaking of Nilus a Greeke writer, a learned man and a reuerend Biſhop. But here I anſwer M. Harding, as Hierome doth Vigilantius, Si omnes tecum fatui ſunt, ſapiens quis eſſe poterit: If all were fooles, whom you call fooles, we ſhould haue but a few wiſe men.

9 Pag.162. You ſhew your ſelfe to be a man of euill diſpoſition, no man euer ſaid it, but Illyricus or bawdie Bale: Namely, that Pope Zoſimus corrupted the Councell of Nice, the truth whereof notwithſtanding is prooued by B. Iewel out of the Aphricane Councel cap.101.102.103. Concil. Carthag.6.c.4. Concil. Florentin. ſeſſ.20.

10 Pag.164. You are errant ſlaunderous liers: how ſeemeth not this wicked generation to ſpring of the diuell: becauſe M. Iewel ſaith, by the teſtimonie of Alphonſ. de caſtro. Sabellic. Platina, and others, that Pope Liberius was an Arrian heretike.

11 Pag.189. This ſir defender learned in the ſchoole of Satan, and now lieth bound in Satans fetters.

12 Pag.201. Their Biſhops for cuſtodie of their chaſtitie after their former old yokefellowes deceaſe, ſolace themſelues with new ſtrumpets.

13 Pag.209. Of what ſmall ſubſtance this reaſon is, the verieſt Coblers of all their Miniſters, if they can reade any engliſh beſide their communion booke, may eaſily perceiue. B. Iewel telleth Harding, he might haue remembred, that not long ſince Iulius the ſecond, of a wherriſlaue was made Pope: but we haue no coblers in the miniſterie.

14 Pag.290. Mauger the malice of the diuell and of all the ſacramentaries, the old truth ſhall preuaile: he meaneth the conuerſion and tranſubſtantiating (as he calleth it) of the bread and wine in the ſacrament, into the very bodie and blood of Chriſt. But this is no truth at all, neither old, nor ancient: confeſſed by D. Tunſtall to haue come in twelue hundred yeeres after the Goſpell: as in that place it is manifeſtly prooued.

15 Pag.297. Now ſir, I report me to euery man that hath ſenſe, whether I may not lawfully giue you the Menti, as for manners ſake I may vſe the Italian terme, and challenge you in plaine termes of a lie for vt- „
tering this vntruth: and yet there is no vntruth vttered: ſee the place. „

16 Pag.313. It liked your filthie ſpirit, with vile words, to bring that holy myſterie into contempt: wherein you do the Diuell, author of all hereſies, the greateſt ſeruice that may be deuiſed: becauſe with Origen he had affirmed that the bread in the ſacrament, as touching the materiall ſubſtance thereof, goeth into the bellie, and is caſt into the priuie. Here M. Harding much forgetteth himſelfe, with ſuch vile termes to ſlaunder vs: for they ſhew a filthie ſpirit that vſe filthie words, and not the blaſphemed, but the blaſphemer, the reuiler, not the reuiled, doe the diuell the greateſt ſeruice: for as Hierome well ſaith: apud Chriſtianos, non qui patitur, ſed qui facit contumeliam, miſer eſt: among Chriſtians, not he that ſuffereth, but he that offereth reproch, is the vile and miſerable man.

Hieron. Tranquillino.

17 Pag.342. The things, which it liketh your Satanicall ſpirit, with blaſphemous words to diſhonour: he meaneth the ſacrament, which indeed is by them moſt of all abuſed and diſhonored.

18 Pag.359. He calleth vs curſed Cananites.

19 Pag.187. Ye falſely and wickedly leade the people, ye are Apoſtataes, ye are heretikes, ye are impudent and rebellious children.

20 Pag 404. Theſe defenders in conditions be like ſuch honeſt women, as commonly we call Scoldes.

21 Pag.409. Loe a grieuous and an heauie caſe, that the world calleth you wicked and vngodly men: Iwis, they be too blame for it, and ſo be they that call them theeues, which come to be promoted to Tiborne.

22 Pag.446. Your impudencie of lying hath no meaſure nor end.

23 Pag 459. The fiends of hell were not yet let looſe, that begat Lutherans, Zuinglians, Caluiniſts: your Church is no other but the malignant Church, and Synagogue of Satan, 24 Pag.465. Though the defender feare not to be accounted a lyer, yet ſhould he bee loth to be accounted an vnhoneſt man, yea and ſpecially a foole.

25 Pag.502. We recken not, what Luther ſaith, what Zuinglius, what Caluine, what Antichriſt, what Satan ſaith.

26 Pag.506. If this defender were compared to a mad dog, ſome perhaps would thinke it an vnmannerlie compariſon, let the man be as he is, verily the manner and faſhion of both is alike.

27 Pag 510. He calleth vs light preachers, wicked vowbreakers leaud lecherous lurdens, deteſtable blaſphemers: ſuch is your diuelliſh rabble, ſaith he: This is M. Hardings eloquence.

28 Pag.524. O thou captaine lier: O moſt worthy not the reward of a whetſtone, but the iudgement of a backbiter, of a ſlaunderer, of a curſed ſpeaker, of the accuſer of the brethren, of a blaſphemer. Canſt thou perſwade thy ſelfe to get credit by lying, to ſeeme ſober by railing, honeſt by villanie, charitable by ſlandering? And all this ſtirre is, becauſe we charge them with burning of ſcriptures: which their vngodlie practiſes here in England, doe notoriouſly ſhew to be true. And ſee here, how this vnſhamefaſt man chargeth ſo reuerent, ſo modeſt, ſo worthie a prelate with railing, villanie, ſlandring, whereas all theſe are to be found more truly in himſelfe, ſo that we may iuſtly complaine with that learned father: quid poſſumus facere ſi vnuſquiſque ſe putat iuſte facere, quod facit, & videtur ſibi remorderi potius, quàm mordere: What a world is this, that euery man thinketh hee doth well that hee doth: and that hee is backbited, when himſelfe is the backbiter.

Hieron. ad Ruffin.

29 Pag.549. He ſheweth himſelfe a foole, a ſlaunderer, an vnlearned man.

30 Pag.576. Here pricketh forth this haſtie defender, as peart as a pearemonger, and faine would talke with the Pope himſelfe.

31 Pag.602. Ye cannot abide ſalt, water, oyle, the croſſe: And no maruell: No more cannot the deuill, who poſſeſſeth you, and rideth you.

32 Pag.607. It ſhould haue become Scoggin, Patch, Iolle, Harry Pattenſon, or Will Somner, to haue told this tale much better then your ſuperintendentſhips: And if yee would needs haue plaied the part your ſelues, it had been more conuenient to haue done it vpon the ſtage, vnder a vices coate, then in a booke, &c.

And all this, becauſe their practiſes in ſeducing the people of God, are compared to Ieroboams, who entiſed the people from the true worſhip of God at Ieruſalem, by ſetting vp two golden calues.

33 Pag.616. When were euer ſuch theeues in the Church of God as ye are?

34 Ibid. If all iffes were true, then if heauen fell, wee ſhould catch larkes. And if a bridge were made betweene Douer and Calleis, we might goe to Boleine a foote, as Willam Sommer once told King Henrie the eighth. Becauſe M. Iewel had ſaid, if the Church of Rome cannot erre, the good lucke thereof is farre greater then theſe mens policie: for ſuch is their doctrine and life, that for all them the Church may not onely erre, but be vtterly ſpoiled.

35 Pag,617. By your Apoſtacie ye haue done more wickedly, then if ye committed Idolatrie.

36 Pag.648. Sirs, would ye haue the common people to come to the generall Councels? Whom meane ye, I pray you? Tinkers and Tapſters, Fidlers and Pipers, ſuch as your Miniſters be? Alas poore ſoules, what ſhould they doe there? for there is no tinking nor tipling, nor fidling, nor piping: there they may ſhut vp both budgets and mouthes.* But here M. Harding need not thus to haue vpbraided our miniſters with ſuch ſcoffing and ieſterlike termes: if he had remembred (as M. Iewel telleth him) what Alphonſ. de Caſtro reporteth of the Popes, Conſtat plures Papas adeo eſſe illiteratos, vt grammaticam penitùs ignorent, That many of them were ſo vnlearned, that they were ignorant of their grammar.

*Yet in your late Trident chapter there was ſuch tinking of other mens kettles, and tipling off their cups, that two adulterous popiſh Biſhops came to a ſhamefull end: whereof one was ſlaine with a bore-ſpeare, being found with another mans wife: the other was hanged in a grin laid for him in his muſe, where hee was wont to creepe in at a window. Fox.pag. 2107.

37 Pag.680. As I cannot well take an haire from your lying beard, ſo wiſh I that I could plucke malice from your blaſphemous hart.

Neither doth M. Harding here content himſelfe, thus ſpitefully to haue entreated the liuing: calling our Miniſters, Coblers, Tapſters, Tinkers: Miniſters wiues, ſober and graue matrons, with him no better then ſtrumpets: But he doth moſt vnhoneſtly ſnatch and carpe at the dead, and reuile Gods Saints, 38 terming the booke of Actes and Monuments, a huge dunghill of ſtinking Martyrs: Yea, hee preſup.33 meth to ſit in Gods chaire, wreſting the iudgement out of his hand, and giueth ſentence of condem-39 nation againſt vs. The authors and profeſſors of them bee dead and rotten in hell fire, with weeping and grinning of teeth: the like iudgement looke ye and your fellowes to haue if ye repent not. And in another p.26 pag. 632. place: After yee haue fried and boyled (ſaith he) in rancour and malice againſt the Church, yee are like to leape into the furnace of hell. But the writer hereof ſhould haue remembred Chriſts rule, iudge not, that you be not iudged: as for his corrupt and malicious iudgement, we paſſe not: he well ſaith, pri-* ma virtus Chriſtiani eſt contemnere hominum iudicia: it is the firſt point of Chriſtianitie not to regard the iudgement of men. Thus we heare M. Hardings ſugred eloquence: Iudge now (good Chriſtian Reader) whether this man haue not been well trained vp in Satans ſchoole, as hee ſlaunderouſly ſaith of vs.

*Hieron. ad Pammach.

Theſe and ſuch like are M. Hardings flowers, who liſt to take a further view of them, ſhal find them to be collected as into one bundle by B. Iewel: where theſe pleaſant ſortes ſhall be offered to his ſmell: Your diueliſh ſpite, your diueliſh wickednes, your diueliſh villanie, Satan is your ſchoolemaſter, your father the diuell: your new Church ſet vp by Satan, you are the ſchoole of Satan, children of the diuell. A page, a ſlaue, a clawbacke of the diuell, your reprobate congregation, your confuſed tents of Satan, the nouice of the diuell. Satans brood, Satan holdeth you captiue, yee are faſt bound in Satans fetters, looſe apoſtataes, prophane hel-hounds, your blaſphemies and Sathaniſmes, Caluiniſts, Sathaniſts: your wicked Chams brood, your damnable ſide, your diueliſh rabble, your congregation of reprobates, your Turkiſh doctrine. As craftie knaues in a comedie, they are Apes, they are Aſſes, with ſuch like, Iewel prefat, defenſ. Apolog.

But leſt we ſhould thinke that M. Harding only hath profited in this blacke and Popiſh Rhetorike, let vs ſee alſo the modeſtie of other mens ſpirits, out of that ſchoole. We ſhall eaſily find that they are all one womans children, and haue had all one ſchoolemaſter, their ſtile and ſpeech is ſo alike.

the doctrine of the Trinitie? Is not this to blaſpheme the ſpirit of God,ſpeaking and writing in Caluine in the defenſe of the truth?

But what ſay ye to our Rhemiſts,thoſe iolly champions? if any man be deſirous to know their pregnant

I maruell at my heart,that they without horror of conſcience could thus ſpeake or write of the ſeruants of God,or that the earth did not open vnder them to ſwallow vp ſuch blaſphemers:but whatſouer they of blind malice vncharitably ſay or iudge of vs, here is our comfort,that God iudgeth not as man doth: and concerning the faithfull ſeruant of God Iohn Huſſe,whoſe blood they vniuſtly ſpilt in earth,and his ſoule falſely condemne to hell, I ſay as Auguſtine in the like caſe of Cyprian: alia eſt ſella in earth,another tribunall in heauen,he hath receiued ſentence below, and a crowne from aboue,&c.

We need not now thinke it ſtrange that the Rhemiſts charge vs with blaſphemie,Reuel.13.ſect.2.And durſt not doe it to the diuell,but the Lord rebuke them and amend them. And that it may appeare 52

how they are all led with the ſame ſpirit of enuie,one Iurgenicius the Popes champion writing againſt

But to let other paſſe,whoſe curſing and reuiling ſpeeches are infinit and too many, as alſo needles eloquence,collected out of his booke ſet forth againſt our worthy and learned countrie man D.Whitakers, that it may appeare what ſpirit they are of,that with ſuch bitter ſpeech and vile termes do taunt and reuile the profeſſors of the Goſpell.

To omit how odiouſly and proudly hee chargeth him with ignorance and want of learning: 54 calling him euery where, Doctorem indoctum, vnlearned Doctor, and profeſſorem indignum, vnworthy profeſſor, not worthie to be admitted to the leaſt degree in ſchooles. lib. 1. c. 2. ſect. 4. Whitakerus quouis tyrone ineptior: more fooliſh then any boy ſcholler or new beginner, lib. 2. cap. 1. ſect. 3. yea hee bluſheth not to call him ſcriptorem barbarum, a barbarous writer. To let paſſe theſe and ſuch like arrogant challenges, which are common with all papiſts who boaſt of themſelues, as of the onely learned and eloquent men, but alas, poore ſoules, it ſeemeth they dwel by euill neighbours, when they are faine to praiſe themſelues. But as for M. Stapleton, he is fowlie ouerſeene, in charging ſo worthy a man with want of learning, whoſe bookes hee is ſcarce worthy in reſpect of true learning to carrie after him. And if the queſtion be of eloquẽce, this Louanian Doctors writing is but a kind of barking in reſpect of the others, either for ſmoothnes of ſtile, or good phraſe of ſpeech. And concerning both theſe, namely the choice of the words for the phraſe, and the placing of them for the ſtile, I cannot giue Maſter Stapleton a fitter commendation, then Hierome beſtoweth vpon Ruffinus and Iouinian. Firſt concerning the phraſe he thus writeth: Tam putidè & confuſe loquitur, vt plus ego in reprehẽdendo laborem, quàm ille in ſcribendo, &c. Hee ſpeaketh ſo groſſely and confuſedly, that a man may eaſily take more paine in mending, then he did in making: and for the ſtile, hee that readeth that Louanian profeſſors diſcourſe, may remember what Hierome ſaith of Iouinian his manner of writing: quotieſcunque enim legero, vbicunque me defecerit ſpiritus, ibi eſt diſtinctio, totum incipit, totum pendet ex altero: when I reade him, I find no diſtinction with a breath: euery ſentence is a beginning, and euery thing hangeth and is continued together.

55 But to returne to our countryman Stapletons Rhetorike: and to let paſſe theſe before rehearſed, as the moſt mild and courteous termes he hath, this eloquent Louanian profeſſor thus ſetteth vpon that reuerent and learned man, thus ſaying vnto him, Miniſter Sathanæ effectus, profeſſor perfidus, magiſter mendax & impudentiſſimus: Thou art become a miniſter of Satan, a faithleſſe or forſworne profeſſor, a lying and moſt impudent teacher. Admonit. ad Whitaker. Craſſa ſtupiditas, Groſſe blockiſhneſſe. ibid. Stultitia & hebetudo prorſus aſinia, Aſinine fooliſhneſſe and dulneſſe, cap. 19. ſect. 11. Theſe and an hundred ſuch like proper Rhetoricall ſpeeches our good Countriman hath ſent vs from Louaine, to ſhew how he hath profited in popiſh eloquence: and to make vp our mouthes, after he hath long dallied in words, in good ſober ſadneſſe, he ſpeaketh thus friendly vnto vs: Omnium quidem hæreticorum & cæcitas magna eſt, & pertinacia ſingularis, ſed veſtra hodie Whitakere tua inquam, tuorumque conuenarum hæreticorum tum cæcitas tum pertinacia longè maxima eſt. In al heretikes, there is both great blindneſſe and ſingular obſtinacy, but thy blindneſſe Whitakers, and wilfulneſſe, with the reſt of thy fellow-heretikes, paſſeth all. lib. 3. cap. 7. ſect. 5. Wee are much beholding to you, good countriman, Father, Thomas Stapleton, that worthie Louanian profeſſor, (for wee will giue you your titles) though that worthy man be but plaine Whitakers with you, that you can find in your heart to giue vs the vpper hand in blindneſſe and wilfulneſſe of all heretikes that euer were: But Gods curſe will light vpon all ſuch heretikes, as are more wilfully blind and obſtinate againſt the truth then Papiſts be.

But here I would aduiſe our countriman to bethinke himſelfe what hee hath done, and whom hee hath railed vpon: namely a man as vnworthie of thoſe taunts and ſlanders, as any man he could haue written againſt: whom, while he liued, was knowne to be a man both learned, and of a moſt meeke and humble ſpirit withall: no lyer, but a louer of the truth, of a vertuous and godly life: in his readings exact, graue in his ſermons, in his diſputations earneſt, ſtrong in argument, readie in his vtterance, pithie in writing, ſound in counſell, familiar in conference, wiſe for direction of ſtudie, an encourager of the good, a preferrer of the learned, and rewarder of the paineſull: and what more can I ſay of him, as he was in his life, ſo he ſhewed himſelfe in his end: while he liued, in good actions feruent, in his ſicknes patient, in death confident, and now in heauen triumphant: Therefore I ſay vnto M. Stapleton, as Hierome in the like caſe, non facilis eſt venia praua dixiſſe de rectis: it is no ſmall fault to ſpeake euill of the good, and peruerſely of the righteous: and againe with S. Ambroſe, ſi pro ocioſo verbo ratio poſcitur, quanto magis pro ſermone impietatis pœna exoluitur? if for euery idle word account ſhall bee required how much greater puniſhment for wicked reuiling ſpeech is like to be endured?

The true and iuſt commendation of Doctor Whitaker.

Hieron. Ad Cella.
Lib. offic. 1. c. 1.

And yet a little further to anſwere in a word to this Louanian doctor, who chargeth, as wee haue ſeene, this godly learned man, with foure eſpeciall crimes, ignorance, follie, impudencie, lying.

M. Stapleton herein ſheweth himſelfe neither ſo deepe a clarke, nor ſo wiſe a man, or of ſo ſober a ſpirit as hee would bee taken for. As for the firſt, his, which the other calleth ignorance, hath been found able,(thankes be to God)to match and ouermatch his Louanian learning, or ſophiſtrie rather. The fooliſhneſſe of the Goſpell,and ſimplicitie of the truth in him hath not giuen place to the others humane and ſerpentine wiſedome. Indeed he was too modeſt,too milde and humble a man to deale with ſo proud,and vaineglorious boaſters. A wrangling Sophiſter had been fitter to anſwere ſuch intemperate and immodeſt rayling,then ſo graue and reuerend a diuine. But as for lying, take it to your ſelues,both it and the father thereof. There is more truth found in few of his lines,then in many of the others leaues : and more good diuinitie in one page,then is in that whole booke. And haue you been theſe foure yeeres in hatching ſo goodly a bird,and bringing forth a Cockatice egge? Surely you haue ſpent your time well. And be theſe the fruits of your ſtudies? Well, ex vnguibus Leonem: by ſuch fruits we know what the tree is ; what need other arguments? your vſuall and cuſtomarie railing bewrayeth your malicious ſpirit. I will omit here to make mention of another rayling Romiſh Rabſakeh, who hath thus powred out his venemous gall of bitter words againſt my ſelfe, calling me, a notable lyer and falſour, filthie Doctor, ſhameleſſe mate, malicious Miniſter, charging me often, with abominable, palpable, ſhameleſſe, notorious, malicious lies : whereas he is not able to conuince me of one lie, or vntruth. But I will be ſparing in rehearſing theſe things, being aſhamed to repeat that which they bluſh not to write: I haue ſet downe a catalogue of ſuch ſtuffe, and ſummed them together els*where. Neither will I offend the Readers eares with ſuch like virulent termes vſed by another, not forbearing theſe ſweet words of impoſtor, Machiuell, falſour, inſolent, diſhoneſt, foole, gooſe, and ſuch like: I will be ſilent herein, both becauſe I haue made my apologie alreadie, but moſt of al for that a ſecond replie of like bitterneſſe, being offered by the ſame author to the preſſe, was ſuppreſſed by prudent [a] and graue authoritie, and (though ſurreptitiouſly allowed before) by the diſcreet and friendly endeuour of [b] ſome, to whom I acknowledge my ſelfe much bound, both for their pietie in ſtaying of domeſticall contentions, which might breed ſcandall, and for their loue in not ſuffering his name to bee traduced who deſireth to be peaceable.

But to returne where I left: tel me ye popiſh pettifoggers, which haue nothing more cōmon in your mouthes, then to call vs aſſes, doults, fooles; how can you eſcape that heauie ſentence of our Sauiour, which ſaith, that who ſo calleth his brother foole, is in danger of hel fire? Mat. 5. But it is no new thing for heretikes to raile and reuile: it hath euer bin their cuſtome and guiſe: The Pelagians called Auguſtine, Cultorem dæmonum, a worſhipper of diuels. Auguſt. cont. Iulian. l. 3. c. 18. The Donatiſts accuſed Cecilian a Catholike Biſhop, of ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt : Aug. cont. Creſcon. l. 4. c. 17. So it is true as one well ſaith: Hæretici, cum peruerſitatis ſua non poſſunt reddere rationem, ad maledicta conuertuntur: Heretikes, when they find themſelues not able to yeeld a reaſon of their wilfulnes; then they fal to plaine rayling. Such plentie of ſcoffes and taunts, of curſings and reuilings, is an euident ſigne of an euill cauſe, and bewraieth a cankred ſtomack. We wil not anſwer them in the ſame kind ; for our cauſe is better, and our malice and hatred much leſſe. It grieueth not vs to be euill ſpoken of without cauſe. We are ſorie for them: they hurt not vs, but blemiſh their owne credit before men, and make their account more heauie before God. And as Gregorie well ſaith : quid aliud detrahentes faciunt, niſi quod in puluerem ſufflant, atque in oculos ſuos terram excitant: what elſe doe theſe ſlaunderers, but as blow the duſt vpon their owne faces, ſo our aduerſaries by reuiling of vs, do get a blot to themſelues. I wil ſhut vp this place with that good ſaying of Bernard, Bonum mihi, ſi me dignetur Deus vti pro Clypeo, libens excipia in me detrahentium linguas maledicas, vt non ad ipſum perueniant : It is good for me, if God vouchſafe to vſe me in ſtead of a buckler, I willingly doe latch in my ſelfe the darts of ſlaunderous tongues, that they light not vpon him.

POPISH SLAVNDERS AND FALSE accuſations. Part. 2.

NOw in the next place, hauing taſted ſufficiently of the firſt diſh of their bitter and ſower taunts and reproches, which we haue had but a cold welcome vnto; let vs take an aſſay of the next: And that I feare me, we ſhall find not much pleaſanter. Yet becauſe we wil not be vnmanerly gheſts, we wil taſte of euery diſh. Our aduerſaries therefore are not contented to loade vs with bitter and vnſauoury words; but they doe alſo charge vs with fained and deuiſed things, accuſing vs falſely, and impoſing vpon vs ſtrange and vnknowne articles : who in their ſo doing do not hurt vs, in laying things to our charge, which are altogether vntrue, but the ſhame redoundeth vpon themſelues : as Origen well noteth vpon that ſtory of Moſes and Miriam his ſiſter, Num. 12. who, after ſhe had attempted to diſgrace Moſes, was ſtriken with the leproſie, but Moſes is cōmended of God: videte, quid ſibi pœna contulerint obtrectatores, quid verò illi, cui obtrectauerant, quæſiuerint laudis: ſibi turpitudinem, illi ſplendorem, ſibi lepram, illi gloriam: ſee what puniſhment Moſes backbiters brought vpon themſelues, and what praiſe they procured vnto him: ſhame to themſelues, renowne vnto him, ſhe the leproſie, and he thereby had more glory, &c. Their accuſatiōs then & falſe challēges, are either general againſt our whole Church; or particular, directed and leauelled againſt ſome ſpecial men, and both kinds concerning either doctrine or maners of our Church: of theſe in order, and firſt of their accuſations in generall, & vaine ſur-

Orig hom. 7. in Numer. 12.

miſes of our doctrine: and here I will eſpecially follow our Rhemiſts, as before wee made bold with Maſter Harding, who in this caſe are very plentifull.

1 They charge vs to ſay; That the Church conſiſteth only of the elect: and that there are no euill men in the Church, Annot Mat.3.ſect.7.& Matth.22.ſect.2. Whereas wee affirme, that the viſible Church vpon earth hath both good and bad in it: but the inuiſible Church wee hold to conſiſt of the elect onely.

2 Annot. Mat.19.ſect.11. That we ſhould ſay; God can do no more then he hath done or will doe: which they call blaſphemous infidelitie. We ſay no ſuch thing, but only this; that God can do nothing contrary to his owne will, word, and glory, and yet is almightie.

3 Annot.Mat.23.ſect.6. That we teach; It is enough to haue onely faith. We teach no ſuch thing: we ſay, that faith onely iuſtifieth, but faith working by loue, as Saint Paul ſaith; not voide of good workes, Galat.5 6.

4 That we ſay, the Church hath failed many hundred yeeres, till Luther and Caluin, Annot. Math. 28.ſect.2. Whereas we beleeue, that the Church hath alwayes continued, and ſhall continue till the end of the world.

5 That we hold, that it is ſufficient to be baptized with the holy Ghoſt, and that water is not neceſſary, Annot.Mark 1.ſect.5. But we grant that baptiſme with water is neceſſary, if it may be had according to Chriſts inſtitution: Otherwiſe in thoſe that are preuented by death, we affirme that the lacke of water cannot depriue them of their inheritance.

6 That we ſay, all things are eaſie in Scripture, Annot.Luk.6.ſect.1. We ſay no ſuch thing: but confeſſe that many things are therein hard to be vnderſtoode: yet the doctrine of faith to be in the word plainely declared, ſo that the people may ſafely be admitted to the reading thereof.

7 That wee affirme, the Church may faile in faith. Annot.Luke 18.ſect.8. Wee ſay onely, that the Church may erre in ſome points of doctrine, but not finally fall away from the faith, Fulke.ibid.

8 That we pretend, that God draweth vs againſt our will, and without any reſpect to our conſent, Ioh 6.2. God of vnwilling maketh vs willing, by changing our will to imbrace Chriſt gladly, and otherwiſe we teach not.

9 That we affirme the holy Ghoſt to be none other, but the gift of wiſedome in the Apoſtles, and a few other for gouernment: Annot.Act.8.Sect.7. But none of vs ſaith ſo: it is a meere ſlander.

10 That we allow no faſting, but morall temperance, and ſpirituall faſting from ſinne. Act.13.ſect.5. Whereas we do acknowledge a Chriſtian vſe of faſting and abſtinence from all meates and drinkes, for the taming of the fleſh, and making vs more fit to pray: not an abſtinence from fleſh onely, as they do ſuperſtitiouſly imagine.

11 That we ſhould ſay, that the preaching of the lawe, and iudgement to come, maketh men hypocrites. Act.24.ſect.2. Whereas we holde the preaching of the lawe to be neceſſary to bring men to repentance: But iuſtification by keeping the lawe, which they teach, we vtterly condemne.

12 That we would haue all men to be preſent, and giue voice in Councels. Act.19.ſect.5. We ſay not ſo, for that were impoſſible: But we holde againſt our aduerſaries, that as well the learned and diſcreet amongſt the lay men, as the Clergie, ought to be admitted to conſult of religion: And that not onely Biſhops, but other Paſtors alſo and Miniſters ought to haue deciding voyces in Councels.

13 That we condemne good workes as ſinfull, phariſaicall, hypocriticall. Rom.2.ſect.3. Whereas we acknowledge them to be the good gifts of God, the fruites of iuſtification, the way wherein all Chriſtians muſt walke to ſaluation, we onely exclude them from being any cauſe of our iuſtification before God.

14 Annot.Rom.ſect.4. That we affirme that God iuſtifieth man, that is to ſay, imputeth to him the „ iuſtice of Chriſt, though he be not indeed iuſt: or of fauour reputeth him as iuſt, when indeed hee is „ wicked, impious and vniuſt: And that wee thinke it is more to Gods glorie, and more to the com„ mendation of Chriſts iuſtice, merites and mercie, to call and count an euill man ſo continuing for iuſt,
„ then of his grace and mercie, to make him of an ill one, iuſt in deed, and ſo truely to iuſtifie him, &c.
This is a great ſlaunder: For we thinke and ſay; that God of a wicked man, by his grace and mercie, doth make him iuſt in deede, by the iuſtice of Chriſt, neither calling, nor accounting him iuſt that continueth wicked, as he was before, but giuing him alſo the ſpirit of ſanctification, whereby after he is made iuſt by grace, he doth the workes of iuſtice, and keepeth Gods commandements, though not perfectly in this life. Fulke.ibid.

15 That we gather of thoſe termes, vſed by the Apoſtle, Rom.4.co[illegible]d.v 7.not imputed.v.8. That the ſinnes of men be neuer truely forgiuen, but hidden onely. Annot.Rom.4.ſect.7. We ſay, that our ſinnes are truely forgiuen vs for Chriſts ſake, and our conſcience freely diſcharged of them, Chriſt hauing ſatisfied the iuſtice of God perfitly for them.

16 That we teach, that the Sacraments of the Church giue not grace and iuſtice of faith: but that they be notes, markes and badges onely of our remiſſion of ſinnes. Rom.4.ſect 8. We ſay not, that they are onely markes and badges, but as the Apoſtle ſaith, ſeales of God to aſſure our faith of iuſtification by remiſſion of ſinnes: And yet it followeth not, that the ſacraments ſhould giue or conferre grace.

17 That to eſtabliſh our fiction of confidence (as they ſcornefully call it) wee make no account of the Articles of the faith; the beleeuing whereof onely iuſtifieth, they ſay, Annot.Rom.4.ſect.9. Whereas we affirme, that we are iuſtified by none other faith, but that which is declared in thoſe Articles, not by a bare knowledge or beleefe of them, that they are true, which the diuell hath and many reprobates; but by ſtedfaſt beleeuing of them, with a ſure truſt and confidence in Chriſt, whereby wee are made partakers of his precious merits, and aſſured of the remiſſion of our ſinnes.

18 That we ſhould ſay, Man hath no more free will, then a piece of clay, Rom.9.ſect.7. Whereas we onely ſay, that our free will hath no power or ſtrength at all, to will, or doe the thing that is good, without the grace of God.

19 That we ſay, the faithfull be ſure they ſhall neuer ſinne: Rom.8.ſect.9. We ſay only, that they are ſure to be preſerued from that ſinne which is irremiſſible, which is the ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, and from all ſuch ſinnes, as ſhould hinder their ſaluation.

20 That where the Apoſtle ſaith, It is better to marrie then to burne; that the Proteſtants thinke, to burne, is nothing elſe but to be tempted, becauſe they would eaſily picke quarrels to marrie: 1.*Cor.*7. *ſect.*8. We doe not ſo thinke, that to burne, is onely to be tempted, but to be ſo continually inflamed with luſt, that the will alſo and deſire doth conſent.

21 That wee will not haue men worke well in reſpect of reward at Gods hand: 1 Corinth.9.ſect.7. We ſay not ſo; but that men ought not to worke well as hirelings, for hope of reward as merited by their worke: but chiefely and principally, of louing obedience and dutie, as of children to their father.

22 That we ſeeme by abandoning other names of the Communion (ſauing this, calling it a ſupper) to haue it at night, and after meate: 1.Corinth.11.ſect.8. We retaine other names of this Sacrament beſide, as the Communion, the Sacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt, the Euchariſt, and ſuch like: and it is but a vaine conceite, that we encline it to haue it at night, when they ſee our vſuall and daily practiſe to the contrary.

23 They ſay, we profeſſe, that we make no conſecration, benediction, or ſanctification of the bread and wine at all in the ſacrament, but let the bread and wine ſtand aloofe: and that wee occupie Chriſts words, by way of report onely and narration, applying them not at all to the elements propoſed to bee occupied: 1.Corinth.11.ſect.9. All this is vtterly falſe, for we profeſſe, that by praiſe and thankeſ-giuing for the death of Chriſt, and by prayer vnto God, that we may be partakers of the bodie and blood of Chriſt, we conſecrate, bleſſe and ſanctifie the bread and wine, to be the holy and bleſſed Sacraments of the body and blood of Chriſt. And we do alſo apply the words of inſtitution to the Elements (though not after their Magicall fantaſie) praying thus: That we receiuing theſe creatures of bread and wine, according to Chriſts holy inſtitution, (which is rehearſed out of the Goſpell) in remembrance of his paſſion, may be partakers of his moſt bleſſed body and bloud. This is (who ſeeth not) a manifeſt applying of the words to the matter propoſed to be occupied.

24 That we would make the ſimple beleeue, that no puniſhment of a mans owne perſon, for ſinnes committed, nor penance inioyned by the Church, is neceſſary, but all ſuch things to be ſuperfluous, becauſe Chriſt hath ſatisfied enough for all: 2.Corinth.2.ſect.2. This is a malicious ſlander. We affirme indeede, that no puniſhment laid vpon any mans perſon, either by himſelfe, or by the Church, is any ſatisfaction to the iuſtice of God for our ſinnes, becauſe Chriſt onely was able and hath made ſuch ſatisfaction: yet temporall puniſhment for chaſtiſement, eccleſiaſticall diſcipline for ſatisfaction of the Church, and amendment of open offenders, are neceſſarie by the ordinance of Gods word, and in our Church are practiſed: Fulk.ibid.

25 They ſay, that Luther, Caluin, and ſuch wicked Libertines, as it pleaſeth them to terme vs, doe teach, that Contrition is altogether a meane to make ſinners either hypocrites, or to put them in deſpaire. Annot.2.Corinth.7.ſect.3. We ſpeake onely againſt the popiſh opinion of penance, or ſorrow to be ſatisfactorie for ſinne, and not againſt ſuch ſorrow which worketh true repentance, and true contrition for all their ſinnes paſt.

26 That we refuſe all mans atteſtation and approbation, and will be tried by Scriptures onely: and that we count it a great abſurditie to haue the Scriptures approued by the Churches teſtimonie: Galath.2. ſect.4. But we affirme no ſuch thing, neither do we refuſe to bee tried by men iudging according to the Scriptures. The approbation of the Scriptures by the Church we allow: but wee count it a great abſurditie, that the authoritie of the Scripture ſhould depend vpon the Churches approbation and triall, which is the thing in queſtion betweene vs.

27 That we teach, that the charge of the Apoſtles was ſo diſtinct, that none could preach, or exerciſe iuriſdiction, but in thoſe ſeuerall places, which by Gods appointment, or their lot for more particular regard of peace, and orders ſake, were limited to euery one, Galat.2.ſect.6. But wee teach contrariwiſe, that euery one of the Apoſtles had as large and as generall authoritie, as the other: and that any of the Apoſtles by their commiſſion, might lawfully haue preached at Rome, as well as Peter or Paul. But after this diſtinction was made by God, it was not lawfull for the Apoſtles to leaue or forſake their ſpeciall charges, and to intrude themſelues into anothers limits, as Saint Paul ſaith: wee do not ſtretch our ſelues beyond our meaſure: 2.Corinth.10.14.

28 That we haue no other arguments againſt the reall preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament, but ſuch as we borrow of Ariſtotle and his like, concerning quantity, accidents, place, poſition, dimenſions, ſight, taſte, and other ſtraites of reaſon, to the which they bring Chriſts myſteries, Coloſſ.2.1. Wee haue other arguments out of holy Scripture, and the ancient writers: Neither haue we any arguments out of Philoſophie, but ſuch as are grounded vpon the Scriptures, which teach the perfect humanitie of Chriſt, and all eſſentiall properties of a true and naturall bodie.

29 They ſay, we apply that text of Saint Paul: He that will not labour, let him not eate: 2.Theſſ.3.2. againſt the vacant life of the Clergie. Annot. in hunc locum. But we require no ſuch thing, as to labour with the hands, of ſuch of the Clergie, as labour in ſtudie and teaching. Againſt the idle life of Monkes, Nunnes, Friers, and the reſt of that crue, as alſo againſt idle maſſe-prieſts this text is ſtrong.

30 That we hold nothing to be neceſſarie to ſaluation but the Scriptures, 2.*Timoth.*3.*ſect.*3. Wee hold no ſuch thing: for ſo we ſhould exclude Chriſt himſelfe as vnneceſſarie to ſaluation. But we affirme, that the Scripture containeth all things neceſſary to be learned to ſaluation, and this is the true ſtate of the queſtion.

31 That we plainely deny Melchiſedech to haue beene a Prieſt. *Hebr.*7.*ſect.*8. Here without ſhame they ſlander vs. This we neuer denied, neither by Gods grace will euer: though we affirme, that his Prieſthood conſiſted not in offering of bread and wine: neither doth the Apoſtle, or any text of Scripture ſo teach.

32 They charge vs with this hereſie: That Chriſt was not the firſt man that entred into heauen. *Heb.*10. *ſect.*1. They belie vs, to ſay we hold, that Chriſt was not the firſt man that entred into heauen, with his body or whole humanitie, as the text is, *Heb.*10.20. And that dedicated and prepared a way for all his members to enter into heauen, both with their bodies, and their ſoules: by vertue of whoſe death, all the faithfull from the beginning were receiued into heauenly reſt in their ſoules.

33 That we will haue no difference betweene the laitie and the Clergie, 1.*Pet.*5.*ſect.*2. It is falſe, which here they obiect againſt vs. We onely miſlike their popiſh difference, who doe in ſuch ſort ſet apart their Clergie from the reſt of the people, as though they onely were the Lords lot and inheritance, the reſt excluded.

34 That we ſay, the Scriptures be ſo eaſie, that they may be not onely ſafely read, but alſo expounded boldly of all the people, as well vnlearned as learned: and conſequently, euery one by himſelfe, and his priuate ſpirit, without reſpect of the expoſitions of the learned fathers, or expectation of their paſtors iudgement, may determine and make choice of ſuch ſenſe as himſelfe liketh, 2.*Pet.*3.*ſect.*1. All theſe are great vntruths. Indeede we do hold, that the people may ſafely be admitted to the reading of the Scriptures, though we deny not, but that there are certaine places therein hard to bee vnderſtood: yet we giue them not libertie to expound Scripture, as themſelues liſteth, not ſtaying for the iudgement of their paſtors: For we plainely proteſt, that whoſoeuer deſpiſeth the ordinarie miniſtery of the word, which God hath eſtabliſhed in his Church, for the direction of vs in the truth, ſhall neuer attaine vnto true knowledge. As for the expoſitions of the fathers, we are ſo farre from reiecting them, where they interpret according to the ſenſe of the Scriptures, that they doe in a manner auow all our interpretations, which you miſlike.

35 That we affirme, that we neither keepe, neither poſſibly can keepe Gods commandements, 1.*Ioh.*2. *ſect.*7. We ſay not ſo, but that we cannot keepe them in ſuch perfection, as the iuſtice of God requireth, though by his grace we doubt not, but we are enabled in ſuch meaſure to keepe them, as his mercie in Chriſt accepteth, Fulke ibid.

36 Thus we ſee with how many ſlanders our countrimen of Rhemes do vnkindly charge and load vs withall: neither are theſe all: more, who pleaſeth may collect out of that black booke of theirs. The want of the reſt, which I haue not heere ſet downe, I will ſupply out of another countrimans booke of ours, to whom we are much beholding for affoarding of vs ſuch plentie of ſo good ſtuffe. Firſt, *P.*146.

Harding. He thus friendly ſaith vnto vs. If you doe not allow euerie man, yea and euery woman to be a Prieſt, why driue ye not ſome of your fellowes to recant, that ſo haue preached? Why allow yee the bookes of your new Euangeliſtes that ſo haue written? An odious vntruth: for touching the miniſterie of the Church, wee haue none that either haue preached ſo, or written ſo, *Iewel. defenſ. Apolog. pag.*146.

37 That we ſay, all things neceſſary to ſaluation are expreſſed in the Scriptures, pag.240. But ſo we ſay not: we hold that all things neceſſarie are either in the Scriptures expreſſed, or therein contained, by neceſſarie collection and diduction to be drawen from the ſame.

38 That we, which ſay we can by no meanes fulfill the law of God, doe make God vniuſt, euill, impotent, and not able to giue ſo much grace, as may helpe to fulfill his law, pag.368. We make not God vniuſt or impotent, but we confeſſe our ſelues to be ſinners. Neither is the queſtion here, what God is able to do, but what he hath promiſed: for howſoeuer God be able, by his abounding grace, to make vs perfect in this life, and altogether voide of ſinne, as we ſhall bee in the life to come: yet his power is not contrary to his will reuealed in his word, which ſaith, that all men haue ſinned. And as many as are of the works of the lawe, are vnder the curſe.

Galath.3.9.

39 That we tell Chriſtian men, they may worke as much as they will, but al in vaine, pag.371. Vntruth, for we ſay with Saint Paul, your works ſhall not be in vaine in the Lord. Although wee do exclude them from being any cauſe, or meane of our ſaluation, and that by the warrant of the Scriptures, Rom.3.28. Epheſi.2.10. and in other places.

40 That we profeſſe, that the faith of the Catholike Church may faile and fall, pag.493. Wee ſpeake not of the vniuerſall Catholike Church, but of the Church of Rome, or of any other particular Church, which may faile in faith, as we ſee the Churches of Corinth and Galatia are now thoroughly departed from the faith, and are wholly ſubiect to the Turke.

41 That we animate temporall Magiſtrates, by the pretenſed example of Dauid and Salomon, to intermeddle with Biſhops offices, pag.689. Vntruth, it is not our doctrine: But they rather embolden the Pope to meddle with Princes offices. And Bellarmine a great Champion of theirs doth free vs from this ſlander, who confeſſeth of vs, that we hold Regimen Eccleſiaſticum ſpirituale eſſe, & diſtinctum à politico: That the Eccleſiaſticall regiment is ſpirituall, and a thing diſtinct from the politicall, or temporall.

42 That we teach, that the Lords ſupper is very bakers bread, and wine, with the onely figure of Chriſts bodie and bloud, pag.320. But we neuer ſo vnreuerently called that holy Sacrament. It is your ſelfe (Maſter Harding) that doth ſo vilely diſgrace this holy Myſterie, calling it A piece of bread not worth a point: a leane and carrien banquet; a toye. We call it the Sacrament of thankſ-giuing, the Sacrament of the bodie and blood of Chriſt, with other names fit for ſo great myſteries. Neither doe wee make them bare figures and ſignes, but as the Apoſtle ſaith, ſeales of the righteouſnes of faith. Rom.4.11.

Now, hauing ſeene thus farre, with what falſe opinions they charge our Church generally, in reſpect of our doctrine, let vs take ſome triall alſo of their iuſt and true dealing with vs, in matters belonging to manners. And here I do not thinke but we ſhall finde them halting, as before.

43 Firſt, Harding chargeth vs with continuall aduoutrie and inceſt, calling without all honeſtie or ſhame, Miniſters lawfull wedded wiues, their filthie yoke fellowes, pag.439. Yea, he ſaith, that our Goſpell hath no ſubſtance, beſide carnall libertie and licentious liuing, pag.289. And that thorough our euill teaching, the world groweth more to be diſſolute and wicked, pag.382. But if Maſter Harding had remembred the diſſolutenes, and licentiouſnes of life that is at Rome, he could not without bluſhing haue charged vs with inceſt, aduoutries, and all carnall libertie. Hee had forgotten belike that old engliſh prouerbe, He that goeth once to Rome, ſeeth a wicked man: he that goeth twiſe, learneth to know him: he that goeth thriſe, bringeth him home with him: Fox.pag.843.

44 The Rhemiſts doe accuſe the Proteſtants (whom they call heretikes) for their lightnes in admitting euery one without diſcretion to the Clergie, 1.Timoth.3.6. But, as for that vncharitable name of heretikes, we ſhall ſhew anon, that it is more proper vnto them, then vnto vs. And neuer any hereſie admitted more vnworthie perſons to the Clergie, then Papiſtrie hath done: not onely into the inferiour places, but euen into their chiefe Biſhops ſee: for as Alphonſ. teſtifieth, whom we cited before, Many of their Popes did not know ſo much as their Grammar. And from hence iſſued that decree of Pope Zacharie to helpe the ignorance of their ſottiſh prieſts, that the baptiſme, which was ſolemnized by a Prieſt ſpeaking falſe Latine, ſaying, In nomine patria, filia & ſpirita ſancta, ſhould be taken for good baptiſme. Decr.p.3. diſ.4 c.86.

45 Harding chargeth the Proteſtants in diuers Countries to haue attempted to wreſt the ſword out of the Princes hands. Were the hundred thouſand Boures in Germanie (ſaith he) conſumed by the ſword of the Nobilitie there for their obedience? P.441. So he ſlandereth Luther alſo, that he ſtirred vp Thomas Munzer in Thuringia, who was the Rebels preacher, pag.447. Thus the Rhemiſts deale with Caluin, calling him one of the principall Rebels of this time, and moſt falſely giue out of the Proteſtants, that their Conſiſtories are ſhops of rebellion.

Thus alſo they report of Wickliffe, that he ſhould teach, that Princes are not to be obeyed being in deadly ſinne, *Annotat.*1.*Pet.*2.*ſect.*8.

All theſe are malicious ſlanders deuiſed againſt vs. Firſt, the Boures of Germanie were moſt of them aduerſaries to Luther, and vnderſtoode no part of the Goſpell, but conſpired together, as they ſaid, onely againſt the crueltie of their Lords, as they had two and twentie yeares before in the conſpiracie called (Liga Sotularia,) Anno 1503. fifteene yeares before Doctor Luther began to preach, which was Anno 1518. *Iewel pag.*441. Secondly, Luther was ſo farre from ſtirring vp Thomas Munzer, that he called him the preacher of Sathan, *Sleidan.li.*5. Thirdly, neither did Wickliffe teach any ſuch thing, for he himſelfe was obedient both to Edward the third, and to Richard the ſecond; both which Princes, as we know were guiltie of ſome notorious ſinnes. Fourthly, you rather ſhew your ſelues the rebels of this age, who make no conſcience in mouing the ſubiects to riſe vp and conſpire againſt their naturall Soueraignes. And England knoweth by experience, that your Seminaries of Rome and Rhemes, are the ſhops of rebellion, which haue forged ſo many conſpiracies againſt our Soueraigne, but all hitherto in vaine, the Lord be thanked, and we truſt in God ſhall bee ſo ſtill; ye might therefore haue been aſhamed, to haue caſt vs in the teeth with that, which your owne conſciences may accuſe your ſelues of.

Thus much of the ſlanders in generall, which they belch out againſt our whole Church: now wee will a little touch thoſe popiſh forgeries, which they haue in their idle and phantaſticall braine, deuiſed againſt ſome particular men amongſt vs, ſorted out from among the reſt.

46 And firſt of all, they lay loade vpon poore Wickliffe, charging him with many things which he neuer held; As that he ſhould teach, that a Prince is not to be obeyed being in deadly ſinne, *Rhemiſt. Rom.*13.*ſect.*4. 1.*Pet.*2.*ſect.*8. which we haue ſhewed before to be a great vntruth.

That

47 That Wickliffe did condemne degrees of ſchooles, and titles of Doctors and Maſters, *Rhemiſt. Matth.*23.*ſect.*4. This is a meere ſlander of Wickliffe: Fulk. ibid.

48 That he ſhould ſay, that God ought to obey the diuell, Bellarmine, Præfat. in controuerſ. and addeth for the proofe hereof, that this his hereſie was condemned in the Councell of Conſtance, Seſſ.8. We take this to be a meere ſlander as the reſt: for there is no ſuch thing found obiected againſt Wickliffe, neither in thoſe 18. articles exhibited againſt him in the conuocation of certaine Biſhops at Lambeth, Fox pag.432. nor yet amongſt thoſe 9. articles, which were condemned as hereticall; nor thoſe 23. which were condemned as erronious, Fox pag.435. Yet concerning this matter, three ſchollers of the ſaid Wickliffe, that followed not long after, ſhewed their opinion, namely, Nicholas Herford, Phillip Repingdon, Iohn Ayſhton. And thus they ſay, that God ought not to obey the diuell in his owne perſon, or eſſence, nor with the obedience of neceſſitie: for ſo to affirme, ſay they, it is hereſie, Fox pag.438. And againe they granted, that they meant an obedience of loue, becauſe God loued the deuill, and puniſhed him as he ought, pag.439. The phraſe and manner of ſpeech is ſomewhat ſtrange: but who ſeeth not, that their meaning is ſound and good. Firſt, that God not in his owne perſon, but in his creatures yeeldeth obedience to the diuell: that is, ſometime giueth him power ouer his creatures. Secondly, yet not of neceſſitie, for God can when it pleaſeth him, tie Sathan ſhort, and exempt his creatures from his power. Thirdly, that God loueth him as his creature, and ſo hee doth alſo the wicked, ſuffering the Sunne to ſhine vpon them, Matth.5. Fourthly, that the Lord in his iuſtice is to puniſh the diuell, and ſo doth: they are reſerued in euerlaſting chaines of darknes, Iud.6.

49 In this ſort alſo they dealt with Iohn Huſſe, deuiſing ſtrange Articles againſt him which he neuer thought: As that he ſhould ſay, that Saint Gregorie, when they alleaged his authoritie againſt him, was but a rimer: wherein Iohn Huſſe himſelfe anſwered, that they did him great iniurie, for ſo much, as he alwaies eſteemed and reputed Saint Gregorie for a moſt holy Doctor of the Church: Fox pag.606.

50 Thus it was falſely obiected againſt the ſame Iohn Huſſe in the Councell of Conſtance, where hee was moſt vniuſtly condemned: that he ſaid, there ſhould be a fourth perſon in diuinitie, and that a Doctor heard him to ſpeake the ſame. Iohn Huſſe deſired the Doctor might bee named, which not obtaining, he thus crieth out: O miſerable and wretched man that I am, which am forced and compelled to beare ſuch blaſphemie and ſlander: Fox pag.622.

This was, as we ſee, the guiſe of the old Papiſts, thus without all feare, to ſlander the children of God, whoſe of-ſpring, I meane the Papiſts of later time, doe tread in the ſame their fathers ſteps.

51 So was Maſter Tindall that faithfull ſeruant of God abuſed by them, vpon whom they fathered many falſe articles: As that he ſhould ſay, that it is impoſſible for vs to conſent to the will of God, Fox pag.1247. Artic.3. Whereas he meant, and ſo ſpake, that by nature it is impoſſible, no otherwiſe then the Apoſtle ſaith; That the wiſedome of the fleſh is not ſubiect to the law of God, neither indeede can be.

52 That he ſhould ſay, euery man is Lord of another mans goods: as though hee ſhould fauour the Anabaptiſticall communitie: pag.1248. Article 18. Tindals words be theſe: If thy brother or neighbour need, and thou haue to help him, and yet ſheweſt no mercie, but withdraweſt thine hands from him, thou robbeſt him of his owne.

53 That he ſhould ſay, the worſt Turke hath as much right to my goodes at his neede, as mine houſehold or mine owne ſelfe: pag.1248. Articl.20. Tindal ſaith and writeth thus: If thy neighbours which thou knoweſt be ſerued, and thou haue yet ſuperfluitie, to the very Infidels we are debters, if they neede, as farre forth as we maintaine them not againſt Chriſt. Loe, heere is no mention made of any Turke: and expreſſely he ſaith, that our neighbours, and ſo our owne familie is to be preferred: the reſt to haue of the remainder and ſuperfluitie. Is not this great hereſie thinke you?

54 That Chriſt tooke away all lawes, and maketh vs free and at libertie, P.1251. Articl.5. Tyndall ſaith thus: He hath not deliuered vs from the Law, but from the power and violence of the Lawe: but for all that, he hath not taken away from the powers and officers their right, ſword, and authority to puniſh the euill.

55 That he ſhould affirme, that by workes we decay from the faith: P.1252. Articl.16. But Tyndall ſaith, By truſting in workes, we decay from the faith.

56 That keeping of virginitie and chaſtitie of Religion is a diueliſh thing, pag.1253. Articl.20. Tyndall hath not the chaſtitie of Religion, but of the Religious, meaning Monkes and Friers: vpon whom the yoke of ſingle life was impoſed, and violently enforced, which Saint Paule himſelfe calleth a doctrine of diuels.

57 That he ſhould ſay, if we beleeue that God hath promiſed euerlaſting life, it is impoſſible wee ſhould periſh, P.1255. Articl.6. But Tyndall thus writeth: when with a perfect courage we put all our truſt in God, and in his promiſes, it is impoſſible we ſhould periſh, for he hath promiſed vs euerlaſting life. He ſpeaketh not of a generall beleefe onely, but of an aſſured truſt and confidence in God.

58 That he ſhould hold, that the Goſpell maketh all true Chriſtian men ſeruants to all the world, P.1257. But Tyndall thus, By the rule of charity, and not of office and duty, euery Chriſtian man is bound one to helpe another. Thus deceitfully they clip and mangle the good mans words, to make him to ſpeake what they liſt themſelues.

59 And as we ſee their falſhood in collecting theſe articles, the like craft they vſed in a great number more, againſt this good man Maſter Tyndall, they falſifie 29. articles out of his booke called the wicked Mammon: 25. out of the booke entituled the Obedience of a Chriſtian man: 37. out of his booke called the Reuelation of Antichriſt: 41. out of his booke named the Summe of the Scripture, conſul. Fox. à P. 1247. ad P. 1257. The number in all is 132. articles, ſome forged, ſome wreſted, ſome mangled, none ſincerely alledged, which they obiect againſt him.

60 Now let vs ſee how they deale with Martin Luther: ſurely after the ſame faſhion, as they do with the reſt. Firſt Harding chargeth him to haue written againſt the power of lawfull Magiſtrates. Luthers words (ſaith he) be theſe, Inter Chriſtianos nullus neque poteſt neque debet eſſe magiſtratus: Among Chriſtian men, none can, nor ought to be a Magiſtrate, Defenſ. Apol. P. 446. Luther ſpeaketh not theſe words of the outward ciuill gouernment, but only of our inward band, and obedience toward God: And in this reſpect, there is no King, nor Prince indeed, nor may bee any. In this ſenſe, Saint Paul ſaith, There is no Iewe, there is no Gentile, there is no Lord, there is no ſeruant, there is no man, there is no woman, for all you are one in Chriſt Ieſus, Galath. 3. They might therefore as well haue charged Saint Paul to haue written againſt ciuill gouernours, as Luther. But what his opinion was of the authority of the ciuill Magiſtrate, may appeare, where he writeth thus vnto the rebels in Germanie, being in the field againſt their Lords: Ye take the ſword and withſtand the Magiſtrate, whom God hath appointed, is not this raſhly to abuſe the name of God? Iohn Sleidan, lib. 5.

61 Our Rhemiſts charge Luther, that vpon theſe words of our Sauiour, Reſiſt not euill, Matth. 5. 39. He ſhould hold that Chriſtians might not reſiſt the Turke, Annot. Matth. 5. ſect. 9. This is a ſlander of Luther, he did write onely, that Chriſtians ſhould not hope to haue victory againſt the Turks, before the Church were reformed.

61 That Luther teacheth, that onely infidelitie is ſinne: Annot. Mat. 7. ſect. 5. Luther doth not teach that infidelitie onely is ſinne, but that it is the roote of all ſinne.

62 That Luther and Caluine do teach, that God was the author of the traiterous ſinne of Iudas: Act. 2. ſect. 9. They neuer ſo taught, but ſpeake only, as the Scripture doth, That Chriſt was deliuered vp, according to the determinate Counſell and fore-knowledge of God.

Act. 2. 23.

63 That Luther and Caluine attempted to caſt out diuels, and ſped much like, as the 7. ſons of Scena did, Act. 19. ſect. 9. This is a great ſlander inuented of them by a lying ſpirit: yet it is moſt credibly reported of Luther, that God by his hand wrought a miraculous worke vpon a yong man, that had giuen himſelfe bodie and ſoule to the diuell, ſee the ſtorie, Fox. pag. 864.

64 Againſt Melancthon they obiect, that he auouched three Sacraments: Baptiſme, the Euchariſt, and Orders. Harding defenſ. apolog. 162. Melancthon onely ſaith thus, That he can well call Orders a Sacrament, ſo that it be knowne from Baptiſme, and the ſupper: which in proper ſpeech, and verily bee called Sacraments, in apolog. confeſ. Auguſt.

65 So another Sorboniſt diſputing with Frederike Dannile Martyr, belied Melancthon, that in his booke of common places, he ſhould call auricular confeſſion, Euangelicum ſecretum, A ſecret of the Goſpell, Fox pag. 921. Whereas Melancthon ſaith cleane contrary in that booke, calling it a ſnare of the conſcience, and againſt the Goſpell.

66 But aboue all other, they haue a great ſpite at Caluin: Harding accuſeth him, that he ſhould teach, that where the death of Chriſt may be remembred otherwiſe, there all Sacraments bee ſuperfluous: Defenſ. apolog. pag. 185. But Caluine teacheth cleane contrary: Sic eſt exigua noſtra fides, (ſaith he) &c. So ſmall is our faith, that vnleſſe it be borne vp on euery ſide, and by all meanes bee held vp, it wauereth, and is like to fall. By which words he ſheweth, that we haue great neede of ſuch remedies, becauſe of the weakenes of our faith: much leſſe, are they ſuperfluous: thus Maſter Harding by his leaue is proued a lyer.

67 The Rhemiſtes charge Caluine with this hereſie, that God is the author of ſinne, Mat. 13. ſect. 2. Neither Caluine, nor any of vs ſay ſo, but we ſay and hold as Auguſtine doth, that God hardeneth the wicked, not as an euill author, but as a righteous iudge, not by a bare permiſſion or ſuffering, as the Papiſts teach, but by with drawing, and with holding his grace, and deliuering them to the deceit of Sathan, as a iuſt puniſhment of their ſinnes, thus Auguſtine at large Cont. Iulian. lib. 5. cap. 3. Thus alſo Saint Paul affirmeth of the Idolatrous Gentiles, That God gaue them ouer to their harts luſt. Rom. 1. 24. Fulk. ibid.

68 That Caluine holdeth the ſecond perſon to be God, not as of God the father, but as of himſelfe, Ioh. 1. ſect. 3. Caluine teacheth, that Chriſt is God, of God the father in reſpect of his perſon, as the ſonne; yet very God of himſelfe, in reſpect of his diuine nature and eſſence, and of one and the ſame godhead with his father, which is not multiplied by communication of generation, but is one and moſt ſingular in all the three perſons. And this is ſound and Catholike doctrine.

69 That Caluine teacheth, that Chriſtian mens children bee ſo holy, that they neede no Baptiſme, 1. Corinth. 7. ſect. 11. Rhemiſt. A falſe ſlander, for Caluine contrariwiſe doth reaſon againſt the Anabaptiſts out of Saint Pauls words, that becauſe they are holy, they are to be baptized.

70 That Caluine and Luther, and their followers, refuſe to put their preaching to the triall of holy Councels, Rhemiſt. 2. Galath. ſect. 3. It is falſe, they neuer refuſed, neither do we, to put our doctrine to the conference of lawfull Councels, but haue often deſired, that ſuch a generall Councell by conſent of Chriſtian Princes might be gathered: we only refuſe to be tried by popiſh Counsels, ſuch as the late Chapter of Trent was, where the Pope is both the partie accuſed, and the Judge.

71 That Caluine exhorteth all men to haue reſpect to Saint Paules Apoſtleſhip, rather then vnto Saint Peters: as though the preaching, authoritie and Apoſtleſhip of both, were not alike true, and all of one holy ſpirit, whether they preached to Iewes or Gentiles, Galath. 2. ſect. 6. See what ſophiſticall cauilling here is: Caluine maketh no difference of the truth of doctrine, or Apoſtolike authoritie, which was the ſame whether in Paul or in Peter: but biddeth vs to keepe the difference of primacie and diſtinction of prouinces made betweene them by the holy Ghoſt, that Paul ſhould bee the chiefe Apoſtle of the Gentiles, and Peter of the Circumciſion, Caluin. lib. 4. inſtit. 6. 14.

72 Bellarmine ſeemeth to charge Caluine yet further, that he ſhould affirme, Chriſtum in cruce deſperaſſe, & eſſe damnatum: That Chriſt did deſpaire vpon the Croſſe, and was damned, lib. 4. de Chriſti anima. cap. 8. This is a grieuous ſlander: Caluine only ſaith, that it was neceſſary, that Chriſt ſhould not onely ſuffer in body, but euen abide the wrath of of God in his ſoule for the ſinnes of the world, which inforced him, and not his bodily paine, to crie out vpon the croſſe, that he was forſaken of his father. This is neither hereſie nor blaſphemie: but ſound doctrine, and agreeable to Scripture.

Our Rhemiſtes alſo in diuers places haue a fling at that reuerend and learned Paſtor Maſter Beza, and finding no iuſt matter to vpbraid him withall, they thus foudly picke quarrels againſt him.

73 Heare (ſay they) what a principall ſectmaſter, with his blaſphemous mouth or penne vttereth, ſaying: In the very beſt times, ſuch was partly the ambition of Biſhops, partly their ignorance and fooliſhnes, that the very blind may eaſily perceiue, Sathan verily to haue been preſident of their aſſemblies. And in the margent they note Bezas blaſphemie againſt the firſt generall Councels, Rhemiſt. Act. 15. ſect. 10. In this place Beza ſpeaketh not one word againſt the firſt generall Councels, but againſt the aſſemblies of proud and vnlearned light headed Biſhops of Greece, which liued in thoſe beſt times, whereof it is manifeſt by the Church ſtories, that many of them were hereticall and blaſphemous. It is a looſe argument: Beza ſaith, there were wicked Biſhops in the beſt times: Ergo, hee blaſphemeth againſt the firſt generall Councels.

74 That Beza ſaith Melchiſedechs prieſt-hood was wholly ſpirituall, Annot. Heb. 8. ſect. 3. He ſaith not, that Melchiſedechs prieſt-hood was only ſpirituall, as the ſpirituall prieſt-hood of the faithfull is: but that Melchiſedechs prieſt-hood was figuratiue, hauing a ſpirituall relation to Chriſts eternall prieſt-hood, Fulke ibid.

75 But no maruell if they make not daintie to ſlander the Miniſters of the Goſpell, when they dare open their lying mouthes againſt Chriſtian Princes, and offer violence to the Lords annointed: As Bellarmine moſt ſlanderouſly giueth out of our late gracious Soueraigne: Iam reipſa Caluiniſtis in Anglia mulier quædam ſummus pontifex eſt: And now in truth, a certaine woman in England taketh vpon her to be chiefe Biſhop of the Caluiniſts, Bellarm. de notis eccleſia. lib. 4. cap. 9. A foule and diſdainefull ſlander: Whereas neither our Queene then, nor King now, do vſurp vpon the office of Biſhops and Miniſters: but as all godly Princes haue done, as Dauid, Hezekiah, and others: His Maieſtie thinketh that it belongeth to his princely charge, to haue a care of Religion, and to looke to the houſe of God. Beſide theſe ſlanders, which they haue raiſed concerning the opinions and doctrine of our Church, they haue deuiſed and forged lies alſo concerning other matters.

76 Staphylus and furious Surius ſay, that Luther learned his diuinity of the diuell. Another maintaineth, that he was borne of the diuell. Another that he dyed of drunkennes, vide Fox. pag. 1257.

77 Bellarmine reporteth out of railing Cochleus, that Luther died ſuddenly: for ſaith he, hauing ſupped verie daintily, and being made merrie with good cheere, and with his ieaſts made all at the table to burſt forth into laughter, he immediatly ſickened, and died the ſame night. Bellar. lib. 4. de notis eccle. cap. 17. And he maketh himſelfe pretie ſport in telling a lying tale out of the ſame Cochleus: how Luthers body being clapt in leade, in the midſt of winter, in the froſt and cold, ſudainely began ſo to ſtincke, that the very ſmell pearced the leade, and whereas they were purpoſed to conuey his corps to Wittemberge to be buried, they * were conſtrained to leaue it by the way. Lib. 4. de notis eccleſ. cap. 14. They may be aſhamed to forge ſuch ſhamefull lies, for neither was Luthers death ſuddaine: who had an olde infirmitie hanging vpon him, being accuſtomed to bee much troubled with oppreſſion of humors in the orifice or opening of his ſtomacke. Neither died he the ſame night, but the next morning betweene eight and nine of the clocke: Reported by Melancthon, who better was acquainted both with Luthers life and death, then any Papiſt of them all. Luther made a moſt comfortable end, and made a moſt ſweete prayer before his death, which is rare I thinke with the popiſh ſort, conſul. Fox pag. 864.

A great vntruth, for Luthers body lyeth buried at Wittemberge in the Chappell of the Caſtle there.

78 The reſt, which they report of his body is as true, as that which was fained of Maſter Bucer, that he ſhould deny at his death, that Chriſt our Meſſiah was come, Fox. pag. 1257 colum. 2. whoſe manner of death Doctor Redman that preached at his funerall, and many other Engliſhmen knew to bee contrary to their vngodly reports.

79 Of like credit is that foule forgerie of Maſter Caluins departure, as Bellarmine, though not the deuiſer thereof, yet bluſheth not to be the reporter. That Caluine calling vpon the diuell, blaſpheming and ſwearing gaue vp the ghoſt, and that he accurſed the day and houre, when euer he began to apply himſelfe to ſtudy and writing, Bellar. lib. 4. De notis eccleſ. cap. 8. Whoſe eares now would not tingle, to heare theſe malicious and diueliſh reports of ſo godly a man? as though M. Beza, who was an eye-witneſſe both of his life and death, and hath penned the ſtorie thereof, could not better teſtifie for this matter, then they, which haue all by heare-ſay. Well, M. Caluine liued well, and died the Lords ſeruant: whatſoeuer theſe black-mouthed, and hard-hearted Papiſts ſay to the contrary: It were better for them rather to make Balaams wiſh, that they alſo may die the death of the righteous, then thus to blaſpheme Gods ſaints. And that all the world may know what a ſingular facultie they haue to in- 80 uent, and an impudent face to auouch a lie, their late practiſes againſt that reuerend father and learned paſtor of Geneua M. Beza, doe ſufficiently declare: For in the yeere 1597. Puteanus the generall father of the Ieſuits in Burgundia, and the reſt of that peruerſe ſect, were not aſhamed with their lying lips to report, with their ſlanderous letters to publiſh, and out of their popiſh pulpits to preach, that Beza perceiuing death to be at hand, did renounce his former profeſſion of the Goſpell, and was reconciled to the Church of Rome, and deſired the Senate of Geneua, if they did hope to be ſaued, to doe the like: and that after his death for further direction, they would ſend for the Ieſuits: and that hereupon the whole citie of Geneua was returned to the obedience of the Pope: and the Lantgraue of Haſſia hearing the report thereof, ſent meſſengers of purpoſe to Geneua, who certified him of the truth thereof: this loud lie of the Ieſuits is extant in a pamphlet printed at Geneua, with a confutation thereof annexed by M. Beza, and the whole Church there. What more impudent or ſhameleſſe lie could haue been deuiſed, when as M. Beza was then not dead, but liuing, not conuerted to them, but confirmed in the Goſpell: and the Church of Geneua yet continueth, and I hope ſtill ſhall in the obedience of the faith of the Goſpell. But no maruell if they thus deale with M. Beza, ſo they ſerued maſter Caluine ſome 48. yeeres ſince, reporting of him, that hee was become one of their Catholikes:

What will thoſe men now be aſhamed to report?

Beza belied by the Ieſuites to be turned a Papiſt.

As though we were ignorant of their popiſh cuſtome and practiſe in belying the ſeruants of God: 81
When Horſey that wicked Chancelor, had with his owne hands murthered Rich. Hun in the priſon, was it not giuen out, that he had hanged himſelfe? Fox pag. 867.

How cruelly was the congregation at Paris perſecuted, and moſt vildly ſlandered of them? Anno 82
1558. the Prieſts and Friers in their railing ſermons perſwaded the people, that the Lutheranes aſſem-bled together to make a banquet in the night, and there putting out the candles, they went together, Iacke with Iill, as they ſaid, after a filthie and beaſtly manner. Other Sorboniſts accuſed them, that they maintained, there was no God: and denied the diuinitie and humanitie of Chriſt, the immortalitie of the ſoule, the reſurrection of the dead, and briefly all the articles of true religion, Fox pag. 927. with ſuch like malicious miſreports and ſlanders, the ancient Church in the primitiue time was ſlandered, who were accuſed of inceſt, conſpiracie, ſacrificing of infants, putting out of candles, & filthie whoredome, with ſuch like, Fox pag. 36. Therefore it neede not ſeeme ſtrange vnto vs, that the enemies of the Church doe in theſe daies alſo whet and ſharpen their tongues againſt the profeſſors of the truth:
eſpecially, ſeeing that they, which doe euen now ſcourge and afflict vs with their ſcorpion tongues, are not aſhamed to ſpeake broadly, yea and vntruly of the primitiue Church; for theſe are the Rhe- 83 miſts owne words: In the primitiue Church, when Infidels dwelt among the Chriſtians, and oftentimes came to their publike preachings, it was both vnprofitable and ridiculous to heare a number talking, teaching, ſinging Pſalmes, one in this language, another in that, all at once like a black Sauntes: Annot. 1. Cor.
14. ſect. 5. Although there were ſome diſorder among the Corinthians, yet is it lewdly done, generally to charge the whole primitiue Church: And (thinke ye) theſe men haue not a very reuerend opinion of the labours of the Apoſtles, that compare the publike exerciſes of the Corinthians, who were a Church planted and founded by S. Paul, to a black Sauntes?

Barke on now ye Papiſts, and ſeeing you ſpare neither Apoſtle, Paſtor, nor Miniſter, neither primi-tiue and ancient, nor preſent and now being Church, ſay on ſtill as ye doe, that the Proteſtants tend euery day more and more to Atheiſme, and Antichriſtianiſme, Rhemiſt. 2. Theſſal. 2. ſect. 14. That the Proteſtants haue forſaken Chriſt, the Proteſtants are become Iewes, the Proteſtants will be circumciſed according to Moſes law, the Proteſtants require to haue the paſchall Lambe, the Proteſtants tell the people there is no hell at all: the Proteſtants at their next proceeding will vtterly deny God: Harding prafat. ad defenſ. apolog. [illegible]. Well ye ſlanderous mouthed hypocrites, if Ieremies ſaying were not verified vpon you, Thou haſt a whores forehead, thou wouldeſt not be aſhamed, 3. 3. ye might well bluſh, and ſhew all your blood in your face, when you inuent ſuch vnchriſtian ſlanders againſt vs, which the world crieth ſhame vpon, and your owne conſciences accuſe ye of. It were now to be wi-ſhed that the ancient lawes were reuiued againſt ſlanderers, and forgers of vntrue reports, and infamous libels: as either that law of Valentinian the Emperour, who decreed capitali ſententiæ ſubiu-gandum, that he ſhould dye for it, that was found to be the author of any ſlanderous libell: *Cod. lib. 9.
tit. 36. leg. 1.* Or that of the Emperour Honorius: pœna calumniæ ſimilitudo ſupplicij, that the ſlanderer ſhould endure like puniſhment to him that was ſlandered, if the crime could haue bin proued againſt him: Cod. lib. 9. tit. 46. leg. [illegible]

Or if they take themſelues to be exempted from the imperiall conſtitutions, I would their owne pontificall law were in force againſt them, as that of Pope Hadriane: Vt qui ſcripturam in alterius famam inuenerit flagelletur: That he ſhould haue whipping cheare, that publiſhed any thing to hurt anothers good name. Or that conſtitution of Gregorie, that ſuch an one ſhould bee excommunicate, Decr. part. 2. cauſ. 5. queſt. 1. cap. 1.

Ibid. cap. 2.

and depriued of the Communion: if any of thoſe lawes were executed, to puniſh all ſlanderers with death, or like puniſhment, whipping or excommunication, it would, I thinke, be ſome bridle, to ſtay the raging humour of our aduerſaries: But ſince we are not to looke for any ſuch thing, wee haue no other ſhield to hold vp againſt theſe iniuries of theirs, but the Prophet Dauids; ſaying with his words in the perſon of our Church: As he loued curſing, ſo let it come vnto him: and as he loued not bleſſing, ſo ſhall it be farre from him: as he clothed himſelfe with curſing, like a rayment, ſo ſhall it come into his bowels like water, and like oyle into his bones. Let it be vnto him as a garment to couer him, and for a girdle, wherewith he ſhall alway be girded. Let this be the reward of mine aduerſaries from God: and of them that ſpeake euill againſt my ſoule: Pſal. 109. verſ. 17, 18, 19, 20.

Here ye alſo what Bernard ſaith: Gladius anceps lingua detractoris: Nec verò huiuſmodi linguam ipſo mucrone, quo dominicum latus confoſſum eſt, crudeliorem dicere verearis: hec enim non iam exanime Chriſti corpus fodit, ſed ſed facit exanime fodiendo: A ſlanderous tongue is a two edged ſword: And ſuch a tongue, wee neede not doubt to call more cruell, then the ſpeares point that pierced our Lords ſide: for this doth not pierce or wound the dead body of Chriſt, but ſlayeth and woundeth it to death: ſerm. de triplici cuſtodia. Thus yee Papiſts, ſhew your ſelues greater enemies to Chriſt, in ſlandring his Church, then if ye had thruſt his body thorow that hanged vpon the Croſſe: for then his bodie was firſt dead before it was pierced: But you doe rent and wound the liuely bodie of Chriſt now which is his Church: I pray God giue you grace, as yee belong vnto him, to repent you of this wickedneſſe. And thus much alſo concerning the ſlanders and malicious reports giuen out by Papiſts againſt our Church.

THE THIRD PART OF THE MANIFOLD vntruths, forgeries, and bold denials of Papiſts of manifeſt truths. Part. 3.

IT followeth now in the third place, hauing alreadie ſufficiently diſcourſed of their perſonall ſlanders, which they vomit and ſpue vp, either againſt our Church in generall, or againſt ſome particular members thereof: that now we lay open to the world, their vntruths and lyes, which in heapes are coyned and forged out of their ſhops, that whereas they accuſe vs of lying, ſaying moſt ſcornefully, That lyes are as common with heretikes as lice with beggers; it may euidently appeare to the world, whether of twaine bee the great liers: and firſt of their forgeries. Neuer any heretikes were more cunning, or had better dexteritie in forging of writings, and foiſting bookes of their owne deuiſing and making, vnder the name of other authors.

Harding Defenſ. Apolog. 597.

Firſt, the Canons of the Apoſtles, as they call them, which are fathered vpon the Apoſtles, are but baſtard writings, falſely going vnder their name: for in the laſt Canon, the Goſpell written by Saint Iohn, is numbred among the bookes of the Teſtament, which is confeſſed by all to haue been penned by the Euangeliſt, after the death of all, or moſt of the Apoſtles: How could then theſe Canons (as they affirme,) bee deuiſed and publiſhed by the Apoſtles themſelues aſſembled together?

Againe, thoſe Canons of the Apoſtles, doe recken three bookes of the Macchabees amongſt the Canonicall Scripture: but the Papiſts themſelues receiue but two: if then they were perſwaded themſelues, that they were the very Canons of the Apoſtles, how durſt they diſagree from them in opinion?

Thirdly, in the 84. Canon, the two epiſtles and conſtitutions of Clemens are reckoned amongſt the canonicall Scriptures, which is a great error, and moſt vnworthie the name of the Apoſtles.

Fourthly, in the Canon 45. the baptiſme of heretikes is condemned, and the ſame is affirmed by the gloſſarie vpon the decrees, part. 1. diſtinct. 32. cap. 6. That the Canons of the Apoſtles doe call the baptiſme of heretikes, Lauacrum diaboli, the diuels lauer: which was Cyprians error, afterward condemned of the Church.

Fifthly, the Canons of the Apoſtles make mention of many things, which then were not knowne, but long ſince brought into the Church: as Can. 29 that no man ſhould be preferred to a Church, by the ſecular powers, when as in the Apoſtles time the ſecular powers were not patrons, but pullers downe of Churches: likewiſe the names of Primate or Metropolitane, mentioned Canon 33. were not knowne in the Apoſtles time, nor the degrees of Lector, Cantor, and the reſt rehearſed, Can. 68. were not then once heard of, as Vrbanus confeſſeth, that in the primatiue Church there were but two orders, of Prieſts and Deacons, Canon 68. mention is made of Lent, which was afterward brought in by Teleſphorus, Canon 72. ſpeaketh of ſiluer and golden veſſels, which were long after ordained by Vrbanus: and many ſuch other new inuentions are to be found in the foreſaid Canons, which make them worthily to be ſuſpected.

Decr. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 14. cap. 9.

Sixthly, diuers conſtitutions were afterward made in the Church, contrarie to theſe Canons: as Can. 65. it is decreed that no mā ſhould faſt vpon the ſaturday, which was the Iewes ſabbath: the contrarie is decreed by Innocentius, that this day ſhould be kept faſt, Can. 49. He that doth not dip thrice in Baptiſme, is depoſed, the contrary is concluded, Concil. Toletan. 4. c. 5. that they ſhould not dip thrice, becauſe the heretikes did ſo; and in the Trullane Councel, Can. 12. they doe in direct tearmes correct the Canons of the Apoſtles; which is an euident argument, that they did not hold them to be made by the Apoſtles, for then it had bin too great preſumption, to haue concluded againſt them.

Seuenthly, Gelaſius Biſhop of Rome, doth count the Canons of the Apoſtles, among the Apocryphall and obſcure writings: decret. part. 1, diſt. 15. cap. 3. and Iſidore likewiſe, diſtinct. 16. cap. 1.

Laſtly, they varie about the number of the Canons: Zepherinus ſaith, there are 60. Canons; decr. par. 1. diſt. 16. cap. 2. Leo ſaith, there are 50. the ſixth Synode receiueth 85. Canons: decr. par. 1. diſt. 16. cap. 4. Wherefore we haue great reaſon vpon theſe grounds, to ſuſpect the authoritie of the Canons of the Apoſtles; and to refuſe them as forged writings.

The conſtitutions alſo of the Apoſtles, the collection whereof is aſcribed to Clemens, ſeeme to be but a forged booke: containing many things falſe and friuolous: as lib. 6. cap. 14. He bringeth in Iames the brother of Iohn, writing and ſpeaking with the reſt of the Apoſtles, many yeeres after his death; lib. 6. cap. 7. he calleth Philip, ſpoken of Acts 8. an Apoſtle: but lib. 8. cap. 52. he maketh him but a Deacon. 2

Of the like credit are the counterfeit writings which paſſe vnder the name of Abdias, Ignatius, Hippolytus, Policarpus, as it may appeare by the homely ſtuffe contained in them. Abdias preſcribeth a moſt ſuperſtitious obſeruation of Lent faſt, not only in abſtaining from all fleſh-meates, but alſo from all carnall copulation betweene man and wife. 3

The ſame Abdias is alſo contrarie to himſelſe, for he affirmeth that Paul ſuffered two yeeres after Peter: And ſaith further that Paul, after Peter was crucified, remained in his cuſtodie at Rome, mentioned in the Acts of the Apoſtles, which was, as Hierome ſaith, the third or fourth yeere of Nero: ſo that by this account, there muſt be ten yeeres ſpace betweene the ſuffering of Paul and Peter; for it is confeſſed by all writers, that Paul ſuffered the fourteenth, that is, the laſt yeere of Nero.

Ignatius ſaith in his epiſtle to the Philippians, that if any man ſhall faſt on Sunday, or Saturday, he is a murtherer of Chriſt: ſo hot this counterfeit father is, about his counterfeit traditions. 4

Of the like authoritie is Policarpus epiſtle ad Philippen. which is gathered out of the Apocryphall conſtitutions of counterfeit Clemens. 5

Hippolytus booke is too full of fables, then to be thought to be that ancient Martyrs worke: for writing of Antichriſt, he ſaith, he ſhall be no man, but a diuell in the ſhape of man: that Iohn the Euangeliſt ſhall come with Henoch and Helias, before the comming of Antichriſt: that Antichriſt ſhall bring diuels with him in the ſhape of Angels, and command them to carrie him vp to heauen, with other ſuch ſtuffe. 6

Now commeth in that vncleane dunghill of decretals, which are falſely attributed to thoſe good Biſhops of Rome, that ſuffered in the great perſecutions in the primitiue age of the Church, for the teſtimonie of Ieſus: as we may ſtrongly coniecture by the matter and ſubſtance and other circumſtances of thoſe decretals.

The firſt epiſtle of Clement ſeemeth to be forged: firſt, he declareth the difference of Primates, Archbiſhops, Metropolitanes, and decreeth that no Biſhops ſhould be ordained in ſmall villages or townes, leſt they might grow into contempt: which conſtitution ſauoureth rather of ambition, then is agreeable to the ſimplicitie of thoſe times, neither is it like, that they would then ſtriue for titles in the Church, when they were not ſure of life: ſecondly, there are diuers places cited in this epiſtle, out of the 5. and 14. chapters of Eſay, wherein the author followeth Hieromes tranſlation, who was long after Clement. Againſt the ſecond epiſtle we take exception, for that Clement writing to Iames the Apoſtle, ſaith thus: Qualiter tenere debemus de Sacramentis te ex ordine nos decet inſtruere: What we muſt hold concerning the Sacraments, it is fit I ſhould inſtruct you in order: and is it not a fit thing, may any man think, that Iames the Apoſtle ſhould now be put to ſchoole, and be catechized of Clement in the Sacraments? Againe, among other precepts, he thus giueth in charge, Vt murium ſtercora inter fragmenta dominicæ portionis non appareant: That mice turds ſhould in no wiſe appeare in the fragments of the Sacrament: and that the altar clothes ſhould be waſhed within in the Church, not without, becauſe of the duſt of the Lords body, that might fall downe; are not theſe now meete precepts for ſo worthie an Apoſtle to be inſtructed in? 7 8

To Anacletus, that next ſucceeded to Clement, are aſcribed three epiſtles, containing the like ſtuffe: in the firſt epiſtle, he decreeth, that if any hard queſtions did ariſe, they ſhould be referred to the ſeate Apoſtolicall at Rome: but if Anacletus died vnder Domitian, at what time Iohn the Apoſtle was aliue, to whom rather ſhould the deciding of hard queſtions belong, then to ſo worthie an Apoſtle? Secondly, alleaging out of the 4. chap. of the 1. epiſt. of S. Peter, he vſeth the vulgar tranſlation, which was not then extant. Thirdly, in this epiſtle is cited the whole 3. chap. of the 1. of S. Iohn, verbatim, to very ſmall purpoſe: ſo that the author of this epiſtle ſhould ſeeme to be a man of no great iudgement. 9

The ſecond epiſtle of Anacletus, commeth out of the ſame forge: for firſt he affirmeth, that Iames ſurnamed Iuſtus, was by Peter, Iames, and Iohn, ordained Archbiſhop of Ieruſalem, when as the ſame Iames, which is held to haue been Biſhop of Ieruſalem, is the very ſame, that is named with Peter and Iohn, Galath. 2. Secondly, this author ſaith, that the Apoſtles appointed 72. Diſciples, whereas they were ordained by Chriſt himſelſe. Thirdly, in the end of the epiſtle he calleth the author of the booke called Eccleſiaſticus, a Prophet, and yet in the 84. Canon of the Apoſtles, it is reiected out of the number of the Canonicall Scriptures. 10

The third epiſtle followeth, which giueth alſo iuſt cauſe of ſuſpition: firſt, he affirmeth, that Abilius ſucceeded Marke in Alexandria, whereas Anianus firſt ſucceeded, then Abilius: he ſaith alſo, that Peter made Ignatius Biſhop of Antioch, whereas Zaccheus and Euodius came betweene Peter and Ignatius. Secondly, this author deriueth the name of Peter (Cephas) of the greeke word, which ſignifieth an head, whereas he is ſo called of a ſtone. Thirdly, he conſtantly auoucheth, that neither Chriſt, nor his Apoſtles appointed any more then two orders of prieſts and deaconds: whereas in the 25. Canon of the Apoſtles, mention is made of lecturers, and ſingers: Wherefore, either thoſe Canons are none of the Apoſtles, or this is none of Anacletus epiſtle: for they are contrarie one to the other.

12 Euariſtus followeth; firſt, he is ſaid to haue decreed, that no prieſt ſhould be ordained without a title: but it is not like that the Church of Rome was then in the daies of perſecutiō diuided into Cures and pariſhes, whereof they ſhould haue their titles. Secondly, he decreeth concerning the manner of conſecrating Churches, when as yet in thoſe firſt perſecutions, there were no Churches nor Oratories permitted vnto the Chriſtians. Thirdly, alſo hee willeth that none but altars of ſtone ſhould be conſecrated, whereas it is certaine, that vntill Auguſtines time, and long after, the altars were made of wood, and not of ſtone: vpon theſe and the like reaſons this decretall is doubted of, and not without cauſe of vs refuſed.

13 The decretals of Alexander ſeeme to be counterfeit: firſt, in citing places out of the old teſtament, the author followeth Hieroms tranſlation: ſecondly, they containe no matter of conſolation, or doctrine fit for thoſe times: and therefore Caranza, who hath ſummed the decretals, out of the ſecond and third epiſtles hath collected nothing, as not finding any thing therein worthy to be noted. Thirdly, the epiſtles beare date, when Traianus, and Ælianus were Conſuls, which was neuer; for Traianus and Africanus, and Ælianus, and Vetus, were Conſuls together.

14 The decretals aſcribed to Sixtus, are of the ſame ſort: firſt, he thus beginneth: Sixtus vniuerſalis Apoſtolicæ eccleſiæ Epiſcopus: Sixtus the vniuerſall Biſhop of the Apoſtolike Church: but this title of vniuerſall Biſhop, begun after Gregorie his time: ſecondly, they beare date when Adrianus and Verus were Conſuls: who, if any credit be to be giuen to Marianus Scotus, and Haloander, who haue exactly collected the yeeres of the Conſuls, were neuer in that office together: but with Verus was ioyned in office Seruianus. Thirdly, in the firſt epiſtle he calleth Salomon the author of Eccleſiaſticus, whereas the 84. Canon of the Apoſtles rehearſeth but three bookes of Salomons, as the truth is, the Prouerbs, Eccleſiaſtes, and the Canticles.

15 Teleſphorus decrees are alſo doubted of: firſt, he is ſaid to haue decreed, that men ſhould faſt ſeuen full weekes before Eaſter, but in the 68. Canon of the Apoſtles, the Lenton faſt is limited to 40. daies: ſecondly, hee ordained that Maſſe or ſeruice ſhould not bee ſaid before the third houre of the day, whereas it is certaine, that the Chriſtians in thoſe daies had their Antelucanos hymnos, their ſongs before day: thirdly, they beare date, when Antoninus and Marcus were Conſuls, who were neuer together in that office, but Antoninus Pius and Brutius Præſens were colleagues.

16 Hyginus decretals are alſo worthily ſuſpected: Firſt, he is ſaid firſt to haue inſtituted the degrees of orders, whereas in the 25. Canon of the Apoſtles, mention is made of ſingers, readers, deacons, &c. Secondly, in his firſt epiſtle hee affirmeth the firſt epiſtle of Saint Iohn, to haue been written to the Parthians, whereas in the authenticall greeke it is inſcribed, the Catholike or vniuerſall epiſtle. Thirdly, in his ſecond epiſtle, he thus writeth: Papa Hyginus, &c. The Pope Hyginus to the Athenians, when as yet the name Papa, was not appropriate to that ſea: and it is not like, that he being a Grecian himſelfe, and writing to the Greekes, would write in Latine: fourthly, he thus writeth; Apoſtolicæ ſedis iuſſionibus inobedientem ſuſcipere non poſſumus: We may not receiue any, that is diſobedient to the Apoſtolike Sea: whereas it is certaine, that neither then, nor at any time after, the Greeke Church was obedient to the Sea of Rome. Fifthly, the epiſtles are dated, when Camerinus and Magnus were Conſuls, which was neuer.

17 The epiſtles of Pius the firſt, are not without cauſe called in queſtion: firſt, in the ſecond epiſtle he decreeth, that he which alienated the Church lands, ſhould be held guiltie of ſacrilege: when as yet in thoſe grieuous times of perſecution, the Church was endued with no lands or poſſeſſion: ſecondly, in the firſt epiſtle, he ordaineth, that the people ſhould not accuſe the Biſhop: but Biſhops ſhould be left to the iudgement of God: whereas in thoſe daies, euery common and vile perſon, might draw the Chriſtian Biſhops before the heathen Iudges. Thirdly, in the ſecond epiſtle, the ſixth chapter of the firſt to the Corinthians, is alleaged thorowghout with ſmall iudgement, and to as ſmall purpoſe: and a great part of this epiſtle word for word, is taken out of the ſecond epiſtle of Anacletus, ſo that it is euident, that the decretals were patched together by ſome one man. Fourthly, the date of the epiſtles is in the Conſulſhip of Clarus and Seuerus, who were neuer fellow Conſuls together.

Decr. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 14. cap. 4.

18 Anicetus epiſtle is ſuſpected of forgerie. Firſt, he affirmeth out of the ſecond of Anacletus, that Peter, Iames, and Iohn, made Iames, ſirnamed Iuſtus, Biſhop of Ieruſalem, which before I ſhewed to be a great error, vnleſſe they will make two of that name Biſhops there. Secondly, he hath diuers decrees not fit for that time: as how that a Biſhop ſhould bee conſecrate with no fewer then three, that an Archbiſhop ſhould be ordained by all his ſuffraganes: but it is not like, that in thoſe daies, when they could not be ſure of their life, that they had leiſure to take order for the dignities of the Church: as alſo he decreeth, that Clergie men ſhould be ſhauen round vpon ẏ crowne: but when there was ſuch ſhauing and cutting off of heads on euery ſide, and killing of Chriſtians, who would thinke that they had any liſt to conſider of the ſhauing and cutting their haire. Thirdly, the epiſtle is dated, when Gallicanus and Ruffinus were Conſuls, which was neuer, for Damaſus in his pontificall ioyneth Gallicanus, and Vetus, Præſens and Ruffinus together.

The decretals of Victor are of the ſame ſtampe. First, hee calleth the Church of Rome, vniuerſall, which title was not knowne vntill Gregorie his time. Secondly, he maketh mention of Primates, Metropolitanes, and of their dioceſſe: but Dionyſius, that followed long after, firſt brought in the diſtinction of pariſhes, and dioceſſe. Thirdly, in this epiſtle, the 50. and 51. chapter of Eſay are cited almoſt thoroughout, with no iudgement at all: ſo that it ſhould ſeeme by theſe vnneceſſarie and vnfit allegations vſed in moſt of the decretals, that it was one mans worke to cobble them together. 19

Zepherinus in his epiſtle decreeth, that there ſhould be no leſſe then 72. witneſſes againſt a Biſhop, but in the 74. Canon of the Apoſtles, two or three witneſſes are allowed to be ſufficient: ſecondly, he would haue the greater cauſes to be reſerued for the Sea of Rome: but it is vnlike, that they had then leiſure to ſtriue for preeminence, and primacie of their Seas, when as they were hardly ſuffered to liue. 20

Calixtus in his ſecond epiſtle confuteth them, that denied to receiue them that were fallen, which was the error of Nouatus, which ſprung vp long after in the time of Cornelius: ſo that this epiſtle came before his time. 21

Vrbanus followeth, whoſe epiſtle ſeemeth to be of the ſame credit with the reſt: firſt, hee taketh vpon him to correct the decree of the Apoſtles, Acts 4. concerning the ſelling of their lands, and bringing the price thereof to the Apoſtles: now ſaith hee, it is found a more profitable way, to giue the lands and poſſeſſions themſelues vnto the Church, then the price thereof. Secondly, he decreed, that all the Church veſſels ſhould be of ſiluer, and gaue himſelfe 25. peeces of plate to the Church: but it may be doubted, whether thoſe holy Biſhops and Martyrs, that were pinched with hunger, thirſt, impriſonment, baniſhment, were ſo well ſtored with ſiluer, eſpecially, ſeeing till Zepherinus time, the next but one before Vrbane, all the veſſels were of wood, which Zepherinus altered to glaſſe veſſels. Thirdly, he approueth that cuſtome, that the Biſhops ſeate ſhould be ſet vp aloft, and erected as a throne in the Church: whereas in the Councell of Antioch, where Paulus Samoſatenus was condemned, it was miſliked, Quod tribunal ſibi in excelſioribus collocari in Eccleſia iuſſit, Becauſe he commanded his tribunall to be ſet vp aloft in the Church: and is it like in thoſe times, when Chriſtian Biſhops were brought forth to the ſtage and ſcaffold to be executed, that they ſo much cared to make themſelues ſtages in the Church? Fourthly, the date alſo of this epiſtle bewraieth it: for it is dated in the Nones of September, when Antoninus and Alexander were Conſuls, which cannot be, for Calixtus his predeceſſor, dateth his ſecond epiſtle in the Ides of October, the ſame men being Conſuls, and his firſt, the eleuenth day before the Calends of December in the ſame yeere; and if Vrbanus epiſtle were written the September before, then it was written before the epiſtles of Calixtus, which is not like, ſeeing Calixtus was Biſhop almoſt ſixe yeeres before Vrbane: neither doe we finde, that Antoninus and Alexander, were more then once Conſuls together. 22

Pontianus in his epiſtle writeth thus: Chriſt our Lord, and Peter, in whoſe cauſes you beſtow your ſelues, reward you with euerlaſting life, &c. Is it like, that worthie Martyr would haue vttered ſuch blaſphemie, as to make Peter together with Chriſt, patrons of eternall life, and to die in Peters cauſe, as well as Chriſts? this alſo is contrarie to the ſtile of his predeceſſors, as Clement in the end of his ſecond epiſtle, ſaith not, God and Saint Peter, Sed Deus te incolumem cuſtodiat, God keepe you in health: and Anacletus in the end of his firſt epiſtle: Soli Deo ſaluatori per Dominum Ieſum gloria: To God only our Sauiour through Ieſus Chriſt, be all glorie. Wherefore it is manifeſt, that the name of Pontianus is here much abuſed. 23

Antherus in his epiſtle ſpeaketh much of the inthronizing of Biſhops, which euery man may ſee, to haue been vnfit matter to handle in that time. 24

Concerning Fabianus decretals, we haue theſe exceptions. Firſt, his firſt epiſtle was made by ſome barbarous writer: for there ſhall you finde, Diaconibus, for, Diaconis, and, ſe nocentes, for, ſibi nocentes, neither good Latine, nor good conſtruction, againſt their owne decrees, for, Falſa latinitas vitiat reſcriptum Papæ, Falſe latine makes the Popes bull voide: as Lucius decreed, writing thus: I doe heare that one hath preſented vnto you, letters of his abſolution, as from the Apoſtolike ſea, Quibus quoniam manifeſtum continent in conſtructione peccatum, fidem te nolumus adhibere: To the which, becauſe there is a manifeſt fault in conſtruction, we would haue you giue no credit: wherfore according to this rule, becauſe this decretall of Fabian faileth in grammaticall conſtruction, wee are doubtfull to receiue it. Secondly, in his ſecond epiſtle, he ſaith, that Chriſt inſtituted Chriſme after his laſt ſupper: which is a meere forgerie, no ſuch thing being found in the Goſpell. Thirdly, in the third epiſtle he giueth this rule, that if a Biſhop erre in faith, he muſt be corrected, but if he otherwiſe offend, he muſt be borne with: this is contrarie to the 42. Canon of the Apoſtles, where it is thus decreed, that if a Prieſt be giuen vnto drunkennes, or diceplay, he ſhould be depoſed: and not for hereſie only, as this counterfeit Fabian would haue it. Fourthly, this decree is fathered vpon Fabian, that men ſhould communicate thrice in the yeere, but otherwiſe in the ninth Canon of the Apoſtles they muſt communicate as often as they enter into the Church, and heare the Scriptures: wherfore theſe being 25

Decr.Greg. lib.1.tit.3. cap.11.

ſo contrarie each to other, either they muſt needs be counterfeit Canons, or this a counterfeit Fabian.

26 We come now to the epiſtles of Cornelius, which vntruly beare his name. Firſt, for that the ſtile of this epiſtle is rude and barbarous, vnlike to haue fallen out of Cornelius pen, whom Hierome reporteth to haue been an eloquent man. Secondly, this decretall alſo prouideth for appeales to be made to Rome, which is the thing that moſt of theſe forged decrees doe aime at: whereby it may be gathered, that they were long after coyned by ſome ambitious Biſhops of Rome, that ſought the aduancement of that Sea, and not by thoſe worthie Martyrs, that had no leiſure, nor deſire in thoſe troubleſome times, to thinke of any ſuch matter. Thirdly, he writeth in his firſt epiſtle, that at the requeſt of Lucina a noble Matron, he tranſlated the body of Peter, and buried it in the temple of Apollo in the Vaticane, which is vntrue; for Damaſus in his pontificall reporteth, that Peter was firſt buried in the temple of Apollo: and in the life of Anacletus, ſucceſſor to Clemens, it is remembred in theſe words, Hic memoriam beati Petri conſtruxit & compoſuit: He did build a tombe or monument, or remembrance of bleſſed Peter. Againe, in the liues of Euariſtus Sixtus, Teleſphorus, Victor, and others it is recorded, Sepultus eſt iuxta corpus beati Petri in Vaticano: He and he was buried beſide the body of S. Peter, in the Vaticane: if the body of Peter then were buried before in the Vaticane, it is not true, that Cornelius remoued it thither. Fourthly, in the end of the ſecond epiſtle, he giueth this caueat, Sacramenta fieri prohibeatis: You ſhall forbid any oath to be taken: in which prohibition he ſeemeth to take away the vſe of an oath, which Cornelius would neuer haue done. Fifthly, this alſo is no ſmall coniecture, that whereas Cyprian writing to Cornelius, vſeth another tranſlation beſide the vulgar: Cornelius followeth Hieroms tranſlation, which as yet was not heard of: iudge now indifferently reader, whether there be not cunning in foyſting theſe writings vnder theſe ancient Biſhops names.

27 Lucius epiſtle alſo masketh vnder a falſe name. Firſt, hee writeth that the Romane Church is mother of all other Churches, which is vntrue: for Rome receiued the light of the Goſpell from the Eaſt Churches; and Ieruſalem, as the Apoſtle ſaith, is mother of vs all, Galath. 4. 26. according to the prophecie of Eſay, The law ſhall come from Sion, and the word of God from Ieruſalem. Secondly, Gratiane aſcribeth this decree to Lucius, that no Miniſter after his orders, ſhould enter into the chamber of his owne wife; contrary to the doctrine of the Apoſtle, who giueth vnto euery man without exception, power ouer the body of his wife, 1. Cor. 7. 2. It is not like that thoſe good Biſhops would euer haue enacted ſuch things. Thirdly, a great part of this epiſtle, from that place: Sed quicquid de comprouincialium coepiſcoporum cauſis, &c. vnto that ſentence, Glorificetur Trinitas in ſecula, is taken out word for word, out of the firſt decretall of Calixtus: but it is not like, that this learned Biſhop, to whom Cyprian writeth, was driuen to vſe ſo beggerly a ſhift, as to borrow from other mens writings. Fourthly, he citeth the 11. chapter of Eccleſiaſticus throughout, without any iudgement: which is a thing commonly vſed in all theſe decretals, which argueth that they all came from one barren braine, who wanting matter, was conſtrained thus to patch vp his paltrie pelfe.

Decr. p. 1. d. 81. cap. 19.

28 Stephanus decretals are thus alſo diſproued. Firſt, in his firſt epiſtle hee decreeth, that none which are not, corpore integri, of a perfect body, ſhould be admitted to orders, contrary to the 76. Canon of the Apoſtles: if any man want an eye, or haue a broken legge, if he be worthie, hee may notwithſtanding be made a Biſhop. Secondly, in the end of the ſecond epiſtle, he hath theſe words: which thing is forbidden both by lawes eccleſiaſticall and ſecular; namely, that no accuſation ſhould be laid againſt Biſhops, till they were reſtored: but at this time there were no ſecular lawes made in the fauour of Chriſtian Biſhops, but all againſt them. Thirdly, hee maketh mention of Primates, Archbiſhops, Metropolitanes, which names and titles ſauouring of ambition, rather then of perſecution, may giue vs to ſuppoſe theſe epiſtles not to haue been written by that Stephanus: and the Primates hee would haue appointed in thoſe places, Ad quorum Primates, & gentiles pro maioribus negotijs appellabant: Whether the Gentiles were wont to appeale in their greater cauſes: where this cunning author bewraieth himſelfe, for he ſpeaketh of the policie of the Gentiles, as now abrogated, according to the paterne whereof, he would haue the Eccleſiaſticall gouernement deuiſed: but as yet the Ethnike policie remained in force. Fourthly, there is alſo fathered vpon this Stephanus, this decree, that none ſhould be choſen Pope, but of the Cardinals: whereas it is certaine, that the name and office of Cardinals was not yet knowne in Rome, nor for ſome hundred yeeres after: and contrarie to this decree, Dionyſius, that was the ſecond Biſhop after this Stephanus of a Monke was made Pope: it is like they would not ſo ſoone haue tranſgreſſed this decree, if there had been any ſuch.

29 The decretall epiſtles alſo of Sixtus the ſecond, are forged. Firſt, concerning appellations to be made to Rome, he thus writeth: Cuius diſpoſitioni maiores cauſas Eccleſiaſticas antiqua Apoſtolorum, eorumq; ſucceſſorum, atq; canonum reſeruauit authoritas: To whoſe diſpoſition the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, and the Canons haue reſerued the greater cauſes of the Church: but this is falſe, that the Apoſtles made any ſuch reſeruation, for then Cyprian before this time would not haue thus written to Cornelius, epiſt. 3. Oportet eos, quibus præſumus non circumcurſare; ſed agere illic cauſam ſuam, & niſi paucis deſperatis & perditis minor eſſe videtur authoritas Epiſcoporum in Africa conſtitutorũ, &c. It is not fit, that thoſe which are vnder our gouernment, ſhould runne vp and downe, but haue their cauſe handled there, where they may haue both accuſers & witneſſes; vnleſſe perhaps vnto ſome deſperate fellowes, the Biſhops of Africa ſeeme to be of leſſe authority: Cyprian would not haue thus written, if there had been any conſtitution of the Church to the contrary. Secondly, in his 2. epiſtle he chargeth the rulers of the Gentiles, by the authority of S. Peter, to reſtore vnto the brethren, what they had violently taken from them. Si non vultis vos & Principes veſtri à collegio noſtro ſeparari: Vnleſſe you and your Princes thinke good to be ſeparate or excommunicate from our colledge or company: but is it like that Sixtus would haue thus ſpent his breath in vaine, to terrifie the heathen with excommunication, and the authority of Peter? what cared they for either, or how could Sixtus by this meanes deliuer his brethren, who himſelfe notwithſtanding theſe menacies and threatnings, loſt his head vnder the tyrants Decius and Valerian? Thirdly, both the epiſtles beare date, when Decius and Valerianus were Conſuls: hee might as well haue dated them Græcis calendis, the Calends of the Greekes: for Decius and Valerianus were neuer Conſuls together, but Valerianus and Galienus, as the epiſtle of Stephen beareth date.

Dionyſius followeth, who is ſaid firſt to haue diſtinguiſhed pariſhes and dioceſes; if this be ſo, how commeth it to paſſe, that Sixtus his predeceſſor thus decreed, that if any man were iniured of the Metropolitane, he ſhould complaine to the Primate of the Dioceſſe? Epiſt.2. and in the 13. Canon of the Apoſtles, there is a decree againſt Prieſts, relinquentes propriam parœchiam, that left their owne pariſh: there were then both pariſhes and Dioceſſe before Dionyſius time; if Dionyſius decretall bee true, then are the other falſe; if they bee true, then is the other falſe, let them chuſe which part they will. 30

Felix the firſt is the next, whoſe epiſtles decretall are worthy no better credit. Firſt, in his ſecond epiſtle he confuteth their errour, which did affirme, that the Son was leſſe then the Father, which was the hereſie of Arrius, who ſprang vp almoſt fortie yeeres after in Sylueſters time; ſo that it ſhould ſeme this epiſtle was borne before the time: Secondly, in the firſt epiſtle, the 66. chapter of Eſay, is cited almoſt thoroughout without any iudgement: and in the third epiſtle, a great part is taken out of the decretall of Lucius: who ſeeth not that theſe decretals were all one mans worke, hee vſeth euery where the like patching and peecing: Thirdly, the date alſo ſheweth forgerie; the firſt epiſtle is dated when Claudius & Aurelianus were Conſuls, which was neuer: the ſecond epiſtle beareth date the fifth day before the Ides of Auguſt, when Claudius and Paternus were Conſuls: and yet Dionyſius his predeceſſor dated his ſecond epiſtle the fifth day before the Ides of September, vnder the ſame Conſuls: ſo that by this account, Dionyſius writeth his epiſtle after his ſucceſſor, that is, when he was dead: for I thinke Auguſt muſt goe before September: this geare doth but ſlenderly hang together. 31

Eutychianus followeth, againſt whoſe decretals we doe thus obiect. Firſt, in his firſt epiſtle he thus decreeth: Fabas tantum & vuas, & cætera, quæ Apoſtoli conſtituerunt, ſuper altare offerantur: That beanes onely and grapes, and other things appointed by the Apoſtles, ſhould be offered vpon the altar; whereas in the 3. Canon of the Apoſtles, quite contrary it is decreed, that he which ſhould offer, legumina, pulſe, as peaſe or beanes vpon the Altar ſhould be depoſed. Secondly, in the ſecond epiſtle are alleaged the whole firſt chapter of the epiſtles to the Epheſ. the 17. chapter of Saint Iohns Goſpell thorowout, and the fourth chapter of the firſt epiſtle of S. Iohn: I thinke It cannot be found, that any of the ancient learned Fathers of the Church, or any other good writer vſed thus without iudgement to heape Scripture together: which is rather to write out Scripture, then to write vpon Scripture; but the author cannot diſſemble, euery where he ſheweth himſelfe the ſame. Thirdly, in the ſecond epiſtle, there is this prohibition: Prohibemus, vt nulla cauſa à iudicibus Eccleſiaſticis audiantur, quæ legibus prohibita eſſe noſcuntur: We forbid that Eccleſiaſticall iudges heare no cauſes which are forbidden by the lawes. But as yet this diſtinction of ſecular and Eccleſiaſticall cauſes was not brought in: when as the Chriſtians for their conſcience and religion, which was an Eccleſiaſticall cauſe, were brought before the temporall iudges, and condemned by their ſecular lawes. 32

Caius in his epiſtle decretall, willeth and commandeth all difficult queſtions in all prouinces whatſoeuer, emerging to be referred to the Sea Apoſtolike. How is it like, that this was decreed by Caius, when as about an 100. yeeres after, anno.420. in the ſixth Councell of Carthage, where Auguſtine was preſent, this priuiledge was denied to the See of Rome, and the contrary concluded, that no appeales ſhould be made thither from forraigne countries. Againe, the ſame Caius decreed in theſe words: Nemo Epiſcopum apud ſeculares iudices accuſare præſumat: That no man ſhould preſume to accuſe a Biſhop before ſecular iudges. But in thoſe cruell daies, nothing was more common, then to ſee Chriſtian Biſhops drawne before ſecular Iudges, and put to moſt cruell death; wherefore this decree ſauoureth not of thoſe times. 33

Marcellus epiſtle to get more authority with the Reader, is admixed with a great part of S. Pauls epiſtle to the Epheſians, word for word. Secondly, how is it like that Marcellinus, who died vnder Diocleſian, could write of conſubſtantiality of the diuine perſons, when that controuerſie and tearme was not heard of in the Church, before the Nicen Councell, which was 23. yeare after him. Thirdly, the ſame Marcellinus is made thus to write: Non licet imperatori, vel cuipiam pietatem cuſtodienti, &c. It is not lawfull for the Emperour, or any man elſe profeſſing piety, to preſume any thing againſt the diuine lawes: but at that time there was no Emperour which profeſſed piety or religion. 34

Marcellus in his ſecond epiſtle written vnto Maxentius the tyrant, writeth thus: Synodum abſque huius ſanctæ ſedis authoritate, &c. You cannot call a Synod of Biſhops without the authority of this Sea, though you may aſſemble ſome Biſhops together: this was very impertinent matter to write vnto the tyrant, who neither loued the company of Chriſtian Biſhops ſo well, as to aſſemble 35 them together: and if he had been diſpoſed ſo to doe, he would haue done it beſide Marcellus leaue; and notwithſtanding this decree, we finde that many yeeres after the Emperours tooke vpon them by their owne rightfull authority to call Biſhops together, and to ſummon the Popes themſelues to their Councels: this decree alſo is fathered vpon Marcellus, that no Biſhop ſhould bee brought before a ſecular Iudge: Et magiſtratus, qui hoc iubere auſus eſt, amiſſione rerum plectetur: And that magiſtrate which ſhould be ſo bold as command any ſuch thing, ſhould be puniſhed with the loſſe of all he had: is not this very ridiculous, that the perſecuted Biſhops, and namely this Marcellus, who by Maxentius was ſtripped of all he had, and conſtrained to be a dungfarmer vnto cattell, ſhould preſcribe ſuch lawes to their perſecutors, and lay ciuill and ſecular mulcts vpon them: and if according to their owne law, Iuriſdictio nullius videretur momenti, ſi coercitionem aliquam non haberet: That iuriſdiction is of no force, which hath no ſtrength to puniſh: then were thoſe decrees in vaine, which they had no power to execute.

Decr. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 29. cap. 28. Innocen. 3.

36 Euſebius his epiſtles alſo ſeeme to be counterfaite. Firſt, in his decretall he writeth thus: In ſede Apoſtolica extra maculam ſemper Catholica ſeruata eſt religio: In the Apoſtolike Sea, alwaies the Catholike religion hath been preſerued without any ſpot or blemiſh; and yet his late predeceſſor Marcellinus, within his time and remembrance, did fall grieuouſly in ſacrificing to Idols, though afterward he repented thereof, and was condemned for the ſame, and expulſed the City by the Councell of 300. Biſhops; how then could Euſebius (this fault and error of his predeceſſor being ſo freſh in memory) ſo report of the Apoſtolike Sea, that it was neuer ſtained with any blemiſh in the faith: hence then it is apparant, that this decretall was none of his doing. Secondly, in the end of the firſt epiſtle, the whole fifth chapter of the firſt of S. Iohn is alleaged: in the ſecond epiſtle the 19. and 20. chapters of Eccleſiaſticus thorowout, and in the third epiſtle, the 14. and 15. chapters of the ſame booke are rehearſed to very ſmall purpoſe: whereby we ſee that this author keepeth his old wont in heaping together of Scripture, and aboue the reſt, he ſeemeth to make account of the Apocryphall booke Eccleſiaſticus, which is cited in moſt of the decretals. Thirdly, in the third epiſtle this Euſebius ſaith, that the Croſſe of Chriſt was found in his time: which ſeemeth not to be ſo; for the croſſe, if the ſtory may be credited, was found by Helena in Conſtantines raigne, when as he had vanquiſhed the idolatrous tyrants, and began to reforme religion, and purge out the relikes of idolatry: but Euſebius beginning in the yeere 309. as it is in the pontificall, & ſitting in that Sea ſix yeeres, exceedeth not the raigne of Maxentius the tyrant, vnder whome it is not like that the Croſſe was found. Fourthly, the ſecond epiſtle of Euſebius beareth date the ninth before the Calends of October, when Conſtantine was Conſul, and the ſecond is dated the eighth before the Calends of September, vnder his Conſulſhip: ſo that by this reckoning, the laſt epiſtle was written firſt: neither was Conſtantinus at any time Conſul alone.

37 Milchiades decretals alſo are not without great ſuſpition of deceitfull dealing. Firſt, he preferreth the Sacrament of Confirmation before Baptiſme, an humane conſtitution before a Sacrament of Chriſts making; this Milchiades would neuer haue done. Secondly, here alſo the counterfeite author forgetteth not his old veine, in bringing forth Scripture in heapes, as the 2. and 3. chapters of the epiſtle to the Coloſſians: by this vnskilfull alleaging of Scripture, it is eaſie to diſcerne one and the ſame author in moſt of the decretals. Thirdly, the date alſo bewrayeth the forgery: Voluſiano, Ruſino clariſſimis viris conſulibus: When Voluſianus, and Ruſinus, thoſe excellent men were Conſuls, but theſe two made but one Conſull: for Voluſianus Ruſinus was one man, and Annianus was his colleague in his Conſulſhip, if we may credit Gregorius Haloander, who hath exactly ſet downe the yeeres of the Conſuls.

And thus far haue I laid open the nakedneſſe of theſe baſtard writings, and deuiſed decretals, which are falſely fathered vpon thoſe ancient Biſhops and worthy Martyrs, as it may appeare to any man not wilfully blinded, that ſhall diligently peruſe and examine them; for either the falſe date, wherein moſt of them are found halting, or the barbarous ſtile, the errour or repugnance of doctrine, the vnskilfull alleaging of Scripture, the borrowing, or rather robbing of one another, the vnfit matter for the time, the generall conſpiracie in aduancing the Sea of Rome, the mentioning of matters not incident to thoſe times, but falling out afterward: theſe and other ſuch like euident markes, may eaſily diſcouer the craft and deceit of the author of theſe decretals; which are moſt like to haue beene later fanſies of ſome deuoted clawbackes to the Sea of Rome, and for more credit ſake, are thruſt vnder the names of theſe holy Biſhops and Martyrs: I will now proceed to diſcouer ſome other of their forged writings.

38 Dionyſius booke de eccleſ. Hierarchia, which commonly is thruſt vpon Dionyſius Areopagita, who was conuerted by S. Paul, is worthily ſuſpected not to bee of that authors doing, for his writings could not haue beene vnknowne to Euſebius, Hierome, Gennadius, who continued the catalogue of the principall writers of the Church for 500. yeeres after Chriſt. And Dionyſius Biſhop of Corinth, who liued in the raigne of Commodus, about Anno 185. writing of Dionyſius Areopagita, declareth how he was firſt conuerted to the faith by Saint Paul, as it is in the Acts of the Apoſtles, and afterward was made Biſhop of Athens: but of his booke de Hierarch. he hath not one word, Euſeb. lib. 4. cap. 23. Gulielmus Grocinus did reade in his open lecture in the Church of S. Paul, this booke de eccleſ. Hierarch. who at the firſt entrance vehemently inueighed againſt thoſe that held opinion, that Dionyſius Areopagita was not author of that booke: but after a few weekes, being better aduiſed, hee altered his minde, and proteſted openly, that in his iudgement, Dionyſius Areopag. mentioned in the Acts, was not author of that booke, Ex Eraſm. ad Pariſienſ.

Hiſtoria paſſionis of S. Andrew, and S. Martialis epiſt. ad Burdegalenſ. are but counterfeit fables. 39. 40.
Fulk. Heb. 10. ſect. 9.

No better is that pamphlet, which goeth vnder Linus name, intituled de Petri paſſione. Which if it were true that is heere reported: Peter was moſt iuſtly condemned, for entiſing and leading away 41 women from their husbands: Beza annot. Ioh. 21. verſ. 19. againſt the doctrine of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles.

The Leiturgie of Saint Iames, is but a late deuiſed toy, for Balſamon Patriarke of Antioch, ſaith, that the Leiturgie of S. Iames was not extant in his time, but vtterly worne away. Fulk. annot. 1. Corinth. 11. ſect. 10. 42

No maruell then, if theſe good fellowes make it not dainty to belie the ancient Biſhops and Martyrs, with phantaſticall and forged pamphlets, ſeeing that they preſume without bluſhing, to vtter their forgeries, both of the Apoſtles themſelues and vnder their names: not much vnlike to the olde heretickes the Manichees, and others, that ſcattered abroad hereticall deuices vnder the Apoſtles names, as the Apocalypſe of S. Paul, whereof S. Auguſtine maketh mention, Tract. in Iohan. 98. Another booke of S. Thomas the Apoſtle, Auguſt. epiſt. 38. Certaine epiſtles fathered vpon the Apoſtles, Auguſt. in Pſalm. 47. Yea they conteined not themſelues heere, but in their fooliſh conceit deuiſed fables more ancient then the flood, as the booke of Henoch: whereof Auguſtine ſpeaketh. De ciuit. Dei lib. 18. c. 38. And yet were more impudent: for they alleaged an epiſtle, which they ſay was of Chriſts owne writing: Auguſt. cont. Fauſt. lib. 28. cap. 4. I would now our aduerſaries did not giue vs occaſion, by theſe imaginary and deceitfull writings of theirs, which they would notwithſtanding to be reputed as ſound and ſubſtantiall, to compare them in this reſpect to thoſe heretickes of elder time.

Concerning thoſe decretall epiſtles before rehearſed, Cardinall Cuſanus thinketh, that they which are aſcribed to Clemens and Anacletus are apocryphall and forged. lib. 3. Concord. Catholic. 12. and Contius proueth by many reaſons, that all the decretall epiſtles of all the Popes vntill Silueſter the 1. for the ſpace of 300. yeeres are falſe. diſtinct. 16. c. ſeptuagint.

Let vs now ſee what other phantaſies they haue, which doe maske vnder the name of ancient writers.

In the Leiturgie (that beareth the name of Chryſoſtome) which the Papiſts call Chryſoſtomes Maſſe, as it is ſet forth by Claudius de Sanctis, there is a prayer for Pope Nicholas, and the Emperor Alexius, 43 whereof the one was neere 500. yeeres, the other 700. yeeres after Chryſoſtome: Iudge therefore (Chriſtian Reader) whether it be likely to be Chryſoſtomes.

The Leiturgie bearing the name of Baſil, ſheweth it ſelfe to bee none of his, becauſe it obſerueth not that forme of doxologie, that is, praiſe to the holy Ghoſt, with the prepoſition σὺν, which Baſil doth 44 ſo earneſtly maintaine to be deriued from the Apoſtles tradition, de ſpirit. ſanct. cap. 27. 28.

There are foure bookes interſerted among Cyrils commentaries vpon Iohn, which were compoſed by Iodocus Clictoueus, to ſupply ſo many bookes of Cyrils wanting: yet are they commonly alleaged 45 by our aduerſaries in Cyrils name.

Paulinus Biſhop of Nola in his epiſtles forged: For epiſtle 11. he writeth thus of the wood of the Croſſe: That it hath ſuch an incorruptible vertue, that it ſuſtaineth no diminiſhing, but continueth; as 46 though it had neuer beene touched, men daily taking part of it. Which is ſo groſſe a fable, that the Cenſors appointed according to the Councel of Trent, in their Ind. expurgat. commanded it to bee put out.

Likewiſe vnder Cyprians names, there are diuers bookes extant, which without queſtion were none of his: as the treatiſe of the inuention of Iohn Baptiſts head, wherein mention is made of Athanaſius 47 and Theophilus, biſhops of Alexandria, and of King Pipinus, which were all long after Cyprians time.

The expoſition of the Symbole, wherein Donatus is named an arch-hereticke, is not S. Cyprians, 48 who liued before Donatus.

The booke de duplici Martyrio, giueth occaſion of ſuſpition, wherein wee finde theſe words: Si 49 quis miles in Caeſaris verba iuratus ad Turcam profugeret: If any ſouldier being ſworne vnto Caeſar, ſhould flee vnto the Turkes: but the name of Turkes was not heard of in Cyprians time. The ſermon vnder Cyprians name, De coena Domini, is confeſſed by Bellarmine to ſeeme not to be his. lib. 2. de Euchariſt. c. 9.

How many bookes are foiſted into Auguſtines workes, it were too long to rehearſe: for as hee in number of his workes exceeded any one of the ancient doctors of the Church beſide, which are reckoned to 222. bookes, beſide his Homilies and Epiſtles, which were more then as many againe: So fooliſh men haue preſumed to be moſt bold with his writings, defiling his learned workes with ridiculous additions of their owne. All I cannot, neither is it needfull in this place to recite: only for ſome triall of the matter, I will ſet downe theſe few.

The queſtions Veteris & noui teſtamenti, are none of Auguſtines, for queſt. 21. it is affirmed that 50 Melchiſedech was the holy Ghoſt, which opinion is hereſie with Auguſtine: and in his booke de he- reſib, he numbreth the Melchiſedechians amongſt other heretikes. Therefore Auguſtine is not the author: and this Bellarmine confeſſeth, De ſacrament. lib. 2. cap. 10. yet is the authority of this book vrged by our Rhemiſts as ſound: Annot. 1. Corinth. ſect. 5.

51 Saint Auguſtine not the author of the ſer. de ſanctis, for the author of theſe Homilies alleageth the teſtimonie of Iſidorus, who liued about 200. yeeres after Auguſtine.

52 Auguſt. ſer. 91. and 251. none of Auguſtines: the author ſaith that the mighty men: when they come to Church, compell the prieſt to make ſhort his Maſſe: this manner agreed not with Auguſtines age.

53 The booke de viſitatione infirmorum, none of his: Eraſmus ſaith it is the ſpeech of a brabler, neither learned nor eloquent, and moſt impudently intituled to S. Auguſtine.

54 The 215. ſerm. de tempore, the treatiſe de rectitud. Cathol. conuerſat. none of Auguſtines. Fulk. annot. Galath. 4. ſect. 2.

55 The booke de dogmatib. eccleſiaſtic. none of Auguſtines, for the authour of that booke excludeth thoſe from orders that had either more wiues then one, or one concubine. By this rule Auguſtine could neuer haue beene a Biſhop, for he had two concubines. And many other beſide theſe are found to be counterfeit bookes, as he that will take the paines to peruſe Eraſmus cenſures vpon Auguſtines workes, ſhall eaſily finde.

Euſebius.

56 There are certaine Homilies vpon the Goſpels of the whole yeere, which goe vnder the name of Euſebius Emiſſenus, which Sixtus Senenſis thinketh to be counterfeit. Bibliothec. lib. 4. tit. Euſebius.

57 Many bookes doe paſſe vnder Ambroſe name, that are ſuppoſed not to be his; as Poſſeuinus the Ieſuite reckoneth vp tenne ſeuerall bookes; as of the conflict of vertues and vices: a booke to Simplicianus, the expoſition of the faith, with other: Salmeron the Ieſuite reiecteth all his Commentaries vpon S. Pauls epiſtles.

58 Athanaſius epiſtles are held to be forged by Sixtus Senenſis: yet are they vrged by Bellarmine, lib. 1. de purgat. c. 6. The ſame Senenſis, and Poſſeuinus haue diſcouered diuers hundred forged bookes of this kinde.

59 The laſt forgery, which I will charge our aduerſaries withall in this place, ſhall bee concerning the donation of Conſtantine, vpon the which the Biſhop of Rome doth ground his ſupreame dominion and right ouer all the politicall gouernement of the Weſt parts. The which ſaid donation is but a forged and deuiſed deed, or inſtrument of their owne.

Conſtantines donation forged.

For the donation ſaith, that Conſtantine was baptized at Rome of Syluester, and the fourth day after his baptiſme, this patrimony was giuen before his battell againſt Maximinus and Licinius. Here are many vntruthes couched together. Firſt, becauſe the truth of the ſtory of Conſtantines baptiſme is otherwiſe reported by Euſebius, Hierome, Ruffin, Socrates, Theodoret, Sozomen, that Conſtantine was baptized at Nicomedia, not at Rome, and by Euſebius Biſhop of Nicomedia, not by Syluester, and not before that battell, but in the 31. yeere of his raigne, a little before his death. For thus Theodoret writeth: Conſtantinus Nicomedia baptizatus eſt paulo ante mortem, diſtulerat enim vſque ad illud tempus, in Iordane flumio hoc promereri deſiderans: Conſtantine was baptized at Nicomedia, a little before his death, for he had deferred his baptiſme till that time, deſiring to haue receiued it in the flood Iordane. Theodor. lib. 1. cap. 32. 2. Whereas the ſaid donation giueth iuriſdiction to the Biſhop of Rome, ouer the foure Patriarchall Seas, whereof Conſtantinople is named to bee one: it is apparant, that before the battell with Maximinus, when as this donation ſhould be made, Conſtantinople was not yet ſo called; for Sozomen writeth, Cum omnia proſperè ſuccederent, propriam voluit habere ciuitatem: When all things fared proſperouſly with him, he bethought himſelfe to haue a city of his owne: and Alexander, who in the Nicene Councell diſputed againſt Arrius, is called Bizantij pontifex, the Biſhop of Bizantium, which afterward was called Conſtantinople: it is certaine therefore, that at what time Conſtantinus encountred with Maximinus, the city was not yet called after his name. 3. In this donation, the princedome and preeminence is giuen vnto Rome, ouer the foure patriarchall Seas, contrary to the ſixth Canon of the Nicene Councell, wherein, parilis mos, the like cuſtome is giuen to Rome as to the reſt, and no more. 4. Conſtantine giueth Syluester authority ouer all Iudea, Thracia, Grecia, &c. and yet for all this grant, Grecia was neuer ſubiect or obedient vnto Rome. 5. Syluester in this grant, is called vniuerſalis Papa, which huge title was not hatched in Rome, and was long after by Gregory refuſed. 6. This donation ſaith, that Conſtantine tooke the crowne of gold and precious ſtone from his owne head, and offered it to Syluester, who refuſed it, and in ſtead thereof the Emperour with his owne hands, ſet vpon his head a white Phrygian bonnet, &c. What reaſon then haue the Popes ſucceſſors to Syluester, to weare a triple, & more then an Emperial crowne, ſince their predeceſſor would not receiue it? 7. It is ſaid, that Conſtantinus led Sylueſters horſe by the bridle, and held his ſtirrup: but the Biſhops of Rome were not yet growne to that inſolency: indeed Conſtantine did reuerence the Chriſtian Biſhops, embracing them, and kiſſing their martyred parts: but this Ieſuite homage it is not like, that either Conſtantine would haue offered, or Syluester ſuffered. 8. Further in the donation it followeth thus, Ecce tam palatium noſtrum, quam Romanam vrbem, & omnes occidentalium regionum prouincias Syluestro concedimus, & relinquimus: I giue and leaue vnto Syluester, my palace, the City of Rome, and all the Occidentall prouinces: how can this be true, when afterward in the diſtribution of his Empire amongſt his ſonnes, he gaue vnto Con-

ſtantine his ſonne, the gouernment of the Weſt parts. 9. Milchiades alſo maketh mention of this donation, and of the Nicen Synod, and yet he being Sylueſters predeceſſor, was dead before: we may ſee then of what credit this donation is. 10. Laſt of all, the donation beareth date: Domino noſtro Flauio Conſtantino Auguſto quater, & Gallicano, &c. Our Lord Flauius Conſtantinus, being the fourth time Conſull, and Gallicanus: where firſt they acknowledge Conſtantinus their Lord; then as yet for all this donation, Sylueſter was not Lord of Rome, neither were Conſtantinus and Gallicanus at any time Conſuls together, but with Gallicanus was ioyned in office Septimius Baſſus, and when Conſtantine was the fourth time Conſull, Licinius was his Colleague, being then alſo Conſull the fourth time. Cardinall Cuſanus ſaith: Sunt meo iudicio illa ſcripta de Conſtantini donatione falſa: In my iudgement thoſe writings of Conſtantines donation are Apocryphall. lib. 3. Concord. Cath. c. 2. Thus the donation of Conſtantine is found very weake: and if the Pope had no ſurer hold of his triple crowne, then by Conſtantines gift, and if preſcription did not helpe him more then right, and vſurpation more then Conſtantines donation, his crowne might ſoone bee ſet beſide his head, and himſelfe beſide his cuſhion. But when he commeth, whoſe Scepter is the Scepter of righteouſneſſe, and who ſitteth in the throne that iudgeth right, then will it be knowne, who hath all this while vſurped the Imperiall crowne and office.

Decr. part. 2. cauſ. 12. qu. 1. cap. 15.

Now all this notwithſtanding, which we haue not barely and nakedly affirmed, but I truſt, ſufficiently proued, and to the indifferent Reader by more then probable arguments demonſtrated, that our aduerſaries haue vſed much deceit, in conueying falſe and forged writings, vnder ancient authours names, yet they will needs beare the world in hand, that there is no ſuch matter, but that they are thoſe authors proper and peculiar workes. Whereupon they are bolde in euery controuerſie, as they haue occaſion to preſſe vs with their light and vaine authorities:

As the conſtitution of Clemens, alleaged by the Rhemiſts, annot. Luk. 4. ſect. 1. Ignatius, Matth. 4. ſect. 2. and 1. Pet. 2. ſect. 6. Hippolytus Matth. 24. ſect. 5. Policarpus; Act. 6. ſect. 1. Decret. Alexandri. 1. Timoth. 4. ſect. 13. Milchiad. Fabian. Act. 8. ſect. 6. Dionyſi. Areop. ibid. S. Andrew, S. Martial. Heb. 10. ſect. 11. Leiturg. Iacob. Baſil. Chryſoſt. 1. Corinth. 11. ſect. 10. Iodoc. Clictou. for Cyril. Ioh. 11. ſect. 1. Paulinus. Iohn 19. ſect. 2.

Thus we ſee both the great boldnes of our aduerſaries, in vrging ſuch authorities which they know to be counterfeit, as alſo the apparant weaknes of their cauſe, that are conſtrained to vſe ſuch beggerly ſhifts. But let them vſe and vrge theſe ſtragling runnagate and fatherleſſe bookes neuer ſo much, we will ſtill hold vs to this point, wherein they ſhall neuer be able to diſproue vs, that they doe deceiue themſelues, and abuſe the world, in making men to beleeue that they are the fathers owne writings. We ſay therefore of theſe, and of all ſuch other bookes, as Auguſtine did of that, which went in Henochs name: Libri iſti ob nimiam antiquitatem reijciuntur: Theſe bookes are too olde to be true. de ciuit. Dei lib. 18. cap. 38. And concerning ſome of them, as thoſe which are fathered vpon the Apoſtles, and them that followed in the next age, as Auguſtine ſaith of the epiſtle, which the Manichees aſcribed to Chriſt: Si aliqua huiuſmodi epiſtola fuit, ab eis proferri potuit, qui illi adhærebant: So if they wrote any ſuch bookes, it is like they would haue brought them to light, that were the Apoſtles ſchollers, contr. Fauſt. lib. 22. cap. 79. And of them all, and the reſt of that ſort, we pronounce this ſentence with the ſame Father: Quæ proferuntur ab errantibus ſub nomine ipſorum, quia non ſunt ipſorum, improbantur, nec acceptantur ab eccleſia: Thoſe bookes which are brought forth vnder the name (of the Apoſtles, and other ancient writers) becauſe they are not theirs, are reiected, and not receiued, or acknowledged of the Church, in Pſalm. 130.

And as the Papiſts haue dealt with mens ſayings and writings, offering forged and counterfeit ſtuffe, as if it were right and true: ſo haue they vſed the like poeticall practiſe in faigning and deuiſing of forged workes and miracles: for the proofe whereof I referre the Reader to the former Treatiſe, p. 188. 89. there I haue giuen inſtance of diuers fabulous fictions, ſo that I may ſay of theſe deuiſers as Tertullian of the Heathen Poets: Poetis nec vigilantibus credam: I will not beleeue the Poets (not onely not in their dreames) but not when they are awake; lib. de anima.

Thus hauing in part declared (ſo much as I thought neceſſary for the matter in hand) how deceitfully our aduerſaries haue dealt with the world, giuing them Quid pro quo, as wee ſay one thing for an other in falſly entituling their friuolous pamphlets, with graue and good authors names: I will ſpend a little time, before I leaue this place, to ſhew how they haue not onely thruſt vpon thoſe ancient doctors and fathers falſe writings, but haue alſo falſified their good workes, by putting in, and putting out, by clipping changing and altering lines, words, ſentences: And no marueil then, if by ſuch cunning (rather couſoning ſleights) they make thoſe good authors to ſpeake what they liſt themſelues.

Anno 420. There was a Councell held in Africa, by 217. Biſhops, called the ſixth Councell of Carthage, whereat Auguſtine was preſent: vnto this Councell ſent Zoſimus then Biſhop of Rome certaine meſſengers with foure requeſts or demandes, whereof this was one: that it might be lawfull for Biſhops or prieſts to appeale from the ſentence of their Metropolitanes, and alſo of the Councell, to the Sea of Rome, alleaging for himſelfe certaine words, as hee pretended, taken out of the Nicene Councell. Hereupon the Councell ſent their Legats to Cyrillus Patriarke of Alexandria, for the ancient copies in Greeke of the Nicene Councell: wherein they found no ſuch Canon as was pretended:

ded: but the contrary, how the decrees of the Nicene Councell had committed all and ſingular perſons Eccleſiaſticall, vnto the charge of their Metropolitanes. Thus then, to begin this game withall, the Biſhops of Rome themſelues are proued to be forgers and falſifiers of ancient writings. Plat. apud Fox. pag. 10.

61 Caniſius reporting Auguſtines words, for the continuall ſucceſſion of the Biſhops of Rome from Peter, alleageth onely the former part of the ſentence: Cathedra quid tibi fecit Eccleſiæ Romanæ, in qua Petrus ſedit, & in qua hodie Anaſtaſius ſedet? What hath the Sea of the Church of Rome offended thee, wherein Peter ſometime ſate, and Anaſtaſius now ſitteth? but hee craftily leaueth out that which followeth: Vel Eccleſia Hieroſolymitana, in qua Iacobus ſedit, & in qua hodie Ioannes ſedet? Or what hath the Sea of Ieruſalem offended thee, wherein Iames ſometimes ſate, and Iohn now ſitteth? theſe words he cunningly ſuppreſſeth, becauſe they made little for him. Caniſ. oper. catechiſtic. cap. de precept. eccleſ. artic. 9.

62 Chriſtoferſon tranſlating Euſebius ſtory into Latine, where Nouatus is brought in, thus adiuring the people that came to the oblations, holding both their hands in his: Sweare to me by the body and blood of the Lord Ieſus, that thou wilt not leaue mee and goe to Cornelius, and hee refuſed to diſtribute vnto them, till that, they ſwearing vnto him, in ſtead of Amen, to be ſaid at the receiuing of bread, ſhould anſwere, I will not returne to Cornelius. Chriſtoferſon, I ſay comming to theſe words, craftily leaueth out the name of bread: becauſe the authour ſo calleth it in plaine tearmes after conſecration. Chriſtofer. lib. 6. cap. 43.

63 The Rhemiſt. 1. Cor. 10. ſect. 8. ſpeaking of their popiſh ſacrifice of the Maſſe, alleage the authority of Cyril. Alexand. in concil. Epheſin. Anathem. 11. where he ſhould call it: The quickening holy ſacrifice, the vnbloody hoaſt and victime. But this is a falſe forgerie, for there is no ſuch word found there. Likewiſe in the ſame place they quote Tertullian de coron. militis. Chryſoſt. homil. 41. in 1. Corinth. Cyprian. epiſt. 66. Auguſt. Enchirid. 109. That the Maſſe is a propitiatorie ſacrifice for the liuing and dead, which is found to be a great vntruth: for thoſe authors in ſome of theſe places ſpeake of prayer for the dead, but of any ſuch propitiatorie ſacrifice not one word. Fulk. ibid.

64 Gregor. Nyſſen oration. cap. 37. is made to ſpeake much of the tranſmutation of the bread in the Sacrament, and it is often repeated: but there is no ſuch thing found in many ancient copies. And Nicephorus writeth, that many things were foyſted into him by heretickes. Niceph. lib. 11. cap. 19.

65 The words of Cyprian, de vnitat. eccleſ. are falſified by Pamelius, for whereas Cyprian writeth thus: Verily the reſt of the Apoſtles were the ſame thing that Peter was, endewed with equall fellowſhip, both of honour and power; but the beginning proceedeth from one, that the Church may be declared to be one: The Rhemiſts according to that corrupt edition, reade thus: But the beginning proceedeth from one, the primacy is giuen to Peter, that the Church of Chriſt may be ſhewed to be one, and one chaire. Fulk. Iohn 21. ſect. 4.

66 In like ſort haue the Papiſts corrected, as they ſay, but indeed corrupted other writings of the ancient Fathers, and eſpecially Bertram amongſt the reſt, who is a great enemie to their popiſh opinion of tranſubſtantiation. They meane to deale with him, as with other ancient writers, In whom, ſay they, we beare very many errors, and extenuate them, excuſe them, and very oftentimes by deuiſing ſome pretty ſhift, we doe deny them, and doe faine ſome commodious ſenſe vnto them, when they are oppoſed againſt vs. This is the iudgement of the Vniuerſity of Doway, in their owne words approued by the Cenſors according to the Councell of Trent.

Index expurgat. p. 11.

And thus they meant to haue filed, nay rather defiled all the ancient writings, where they ſeemed to contradict them; as it appeareth in their Index expurgatorius, lately printed to their perpetuall ſhame, which they purpoſed to keepe in ſecret. He that will reſort to that booke, ſhal not want proofe of their popiſh falſifying of writers.

67 To theſe I will adde the like practiſes of ſome later popiſh writers: Vega fighting for tranſubſtantiation, citeth a place out of Auguſtine, lib. 3. de trinit. cap. 1. theſ. 176. fol. 49. which is not there to be found: for thus he imagineth Auguſtine to write: Non niuis natura (erat enim Manna ſimilis rori, niuibuſq; ſolebatur) ſed per verbum & virtutem Dei facto pane & carnibus ſub accidentibus niuis alebantur: They were not nouriſhed with the nature of ſnow (for Manna was like the dew or ſnow) but by the word and power of God bread and fleſh was made vnder the accidents of ſnow, wherewith they were fed.

68 The ſame Vega theſ. 190. dealeth in like manner with Tertullian, aſcribing to him this ſentence: Panis figura ſeu ſpecies a corpore phantaſtico ſuſtineri non poſſunt: eſt igitur verum Chriſti corpus, quo in euchariſtia ſuſtentantur panis ſpecies, non fantaſticum: The figure or ſhape of bread cannot be vpheld of a phantaſticall body: therefore it is the very body of Chriſt, by the which in the Euchariſt the ſhewes of bread are ſuſtained, and not a phantaſticall body: but no ſuch words are to be found in Tertullian.

69 So the ſame Vega Theſ. 133. ſaith, that Tertullian in his booke de oratione, calleth the bread in the Sacrament Chriſt: which is vntrue, he hath there no ſuch ſaying.

70 Likewiſe the ſame Vega, in his 122. theſis of the Maſſe, alleageth out of the 34. queſtion of Athanaſius ad Antiochum, which cannot there be found; as if Athanaſius ſhould write thus: Intelligimus peccatorum animas participare beneficia ab incruenta immolatione pro ipſis facta: We vnderſtand that the ſoules of ſinners doe participate the benefits wrought for them by the vnbloodie ſacrifice:but Athanaſius in that place writeth farre otherwiſe, and nothing like to this in words or ſenſe: This then appeareth to bee continually their popiſh guiſe, to correct or corrupt rather the ſayings of the fathers at their pleaſure. The ſame hath bin the guiſe of former heretikes, the Pelagians corrupted the comentaries of Ambroſe: the Arrians the workes of Origen: the Nouatians the booke of Tertullian de Trinit. as witneſſe the Popiſh writers: Salmeron. Senenſ. Bellarmin. And thus they themſelues haue dealt with the fathers.

And it were to be wiſhed, that they would haue ſtaied heere, (though this bee ſhamefull enough,) onely to haue defaced the writings of men: but when they take vpon them to correct and amend the ſacred Scriptures, which are the Lords owne writings, who will not crie out againſt ſo great impietie?

71 As Dan.11.37. Where the text according to the Hebrew is: He ſhall not regard the Gods of his fathers, nor the deſires of women: Bellarmine readeth cleane contrarie, taking vpon him to correct the text, Erit in concupiſcentys mulierum, He ſhall be giuen to the pleaſures of women.

Scriptures changed and altered by Papiſts.

Whereas Saint Paul ſaith, Titus 3.10. Reiect him that is an heretike after once or twice admonition: Bellarmine denieth the text, and ſaith it ſhould rather be thus read, after once admonition, De laicis cap.22. 72

73 Likewiſe where the true reading is agreeable to the originall, Gal.2.9. Iames, Cephas, and Iohn: Bellarmine, not well content that Iames ſhould be named before Peter, ſaith the more ancient reading is thus, Peter, Iames and Iohn. De Roman. pontif. lib.1.cap.18.

74 Iudith cap.5.v.18. The text ſaith, That the Temple of the Iewes had been caſt downe to the ground: Bellarmine, to make his opinion ſtand, that the ſtory of Iudith fell out before the captiuitie, ſaith flatly that theſe words are ſuppoſitia, are foiſted into the text. And this booke of Iudith, though it bee not with vs, yet is ſcripture with them. Bellar. lib.1. de verb. Dei.12.

75 Leuit.18.16. Whereas the text is plaine, Thou ſhalt not diſcouer the ſhame of thy brothers wife: there ſteppeth me forth a bold and ſhamefull papiſt, and ſaith plainely: Illud praceptum vitio ſcriptorum ſuper additum: That this precept was put into the text through the default or ouerſight of the writer. Iohan. Maior. in 4. ſentent. diſtinct.40. qu.3.

And as they are not aſhamed thus boldly and wickedly to defaulke and clip from the Scriptures, ſo another while, they will be ſo ſaucie as to adde thereunto, and put to of their owne.

76 Thus Pope Sixtus the 4. added this clauſe to the ſalutation of Marie, which is commonly called the Aue Marie: Haile Marie full of grace, the Lord is with thee, bleſſed art thou amongſt women, then followeth that blaſphemous addition, Et benedicta ſit Anna mater tua, de qua ſine macula tua proceſſit caro virginea: And bleſſed is Anna thy mother, of whom thy virgines fleſh hath proceeded without blot of originall ſinne, Fox 800. col.2.

77 So in the idolatrous Canon of the Maſſe, they haue thruſt in (Enim) into the words of inſtitution, Hoc enim eſt corpus meum, For this is my body: that they might haue fiue conſecratory words, as they call them, whereas the Goſpell affordeth them but foure.

78 Likewiſe in the ſame Canon: the Goſpell ſaith, who the ſame night that he was betrayed: but they contrary to the truth of the ſcripture, ſay thus: Who the next day afore he ſuffered.

79 The like libertie alſo and boldneſſe Hoſius another Arch-papiſt vſeth in corrupting of Scripture, who to prooue popiſh ſatisfaction, in ſtead of ſanctificationem, readeth, ſatisfactionem: where Saint Paul ſaith, Exhibeamus membra noſtra ſeruire iuſtitia in ſanctificationem, Let vs giue our members to ſerue righteouſnes vnto ſanctification, Rom.6.19. He ſaith, altering the text, vnto ſatisfaction.

Hoſius in confeſſ. cathol. fid. de ſacram. pœnitent.

80 & So alſo Stapleton, an Engliſh papiſt, and reader of late of popiſh diuinitie at Louaine, to proue that we are bound to receiue, whatſoeuer the Church deliuereth vnto vs, abuſeth to that end a certaine place of Saint Paul, Galat.1.8.9. Alleaging it thus, Si angelus de cœlo euangelizaret praterquam quod ab eccleſia accepimus, &c. If an angell ſhould euangelize or preach otherwiſe then we haue receiued of the Church, or then the maſters of the Church haue preached to vs, let him bee accurſed, Lib. 2. defenſ. authorit. eccleſ. cap.7. ſect.8. Whereas S. Paul maketh no mention at all of the Church, or Church-maſters.

Thus we ſee, what great libertie the Papiſts take vnto themſelues, in changing, and chopping, minſing and mangling, not the writings only of men, but euen of the holy Ghoſt. Who, if they ſhall perſiſt in theſe fraudulent practiſes, and not reuoke, what hath either of ignorance or hereticall fraud fallen out of their penne, I will not doubt to compare them to the old Manichees, who likewiſe affirmed that many things were foiſted into the writings of the Euangeliſts and Apoſtles. As that of Iohn 5.46. Had ye beleeued Moſes, ye would haue beleeued me. Chriſt, ſay they, would not ſo ſpeake of Moſes: for he ſaith, that all that went before him, were theeues, Ioh.10. But Chriſt in that place ſpeaketh of hirelings onely, he condemneth not faithfull ſhepheards that went before him, Auguſt. lib.16. cont. Fauſt. That alſo ſeemeth (ſay they) to be thruſt in, Matth.5. That Chriſt ſaith, Hee came to fulfill the law, when as he neither obſerued their ceremonies, nor offered ſacrifice according to the law. To this Auguſtine anſwereth: That theſe were but figures, Quarum figurarum veritas Chriſtus: Of which figures Chriſt was the truth: he therefore fulfilled the law, in that he was the very body and ſubſtance of the types and figures of the law, contr. Fauſt. lib.18. cap.17. That place alſo they would haue to bee forged,Matth.8. Many ſhall come from the Eaſt, and ſit downe with Abraham,&c. Becauſe (ſay they) Luke hath it not. Auguſtine anſwereth,that the Euangeliſts are not contrary one to the other,if one ſet downe that which the other hath omitted, *cont.Fauſt.lib.*33.

The like libertie,or rather hereticall licence the Arrians did arrogate to themſelues,with other heretikes in changing and chopping of Scripture,as Matth.10.28.they reade, nemo bonus, niſi vnus deus pater: none is good,but God the father,that they might exclude the ſonne: and in the firſt of S.Iohns Goſpell, they reade the third and fourth verſe thus,without any diſtinction,quod factum eſt in ipſo vita erat, that, which was made in him was life,to prooue that the word was made. So the ſame father reporteth of other heretikes,that whereas the Apoſtle ſaith, *qui cœpit in vobis, Philip.*1. he that hath begun in you,they would haue it, ex vobis,of you,to proue the beginning of euery good worke to come from our ſelues.

Cont.Heluidium.

I pray you now,how farre off are our aduerſaries from the practiſe of thoſe heretickes, which doe take vpon them to amend and correct the text of Scripture by putting in,and pulling out,adding and detracting at their pleaſure? vnto whom I ſay as Ambroſe in the like caſe,Literas quidem potuiſtis abolere, ſed fidem non potuiſtis auferre, You may race the letters, but you cannot deface the faith. But let them take heed how they dally with the ſcriptures, for as the ſame father ſaith, qui hanc deſtruit.i. ſcripturarum fidem,deſtruetur ipſe: he that deſtroyeth the faith of the Scriptures,ſhall be himſelfe deſtroyed. And where they doe not alter the letter of Scripture, if they peruert the ſenſe,it is all one, as he againe ſaith: pſeudapoſtoli verba Dei per malam interpretationem adulterabant,tollentes diuinum ſenſum,ponebant humanum: the falſe apoſtles did adulterate the words of God by a falſe interpretation, bringing in an humane ſenſe for a diuine; and this euery where our aduerſaries are guiltie of.But now I will proceed to that which followeth.

THE BOLD AND SHAMELESSE DENIALS OF Papiſts of manifeſt truths. Part.4.

AS we haue alreadie receiued ſome taſte of our aduerſaries raylings, ſlaunders, forgeries: ſo wee wil now bee ſo bold as to reach our hands to this fourth diſh of their firſt courſe, which is their too free deniall of apparant truths, and too forward affirming of open and manifeſt vntruths: for the firſt,we find plentifull ſtore in our countriman M.Hardings garden,that we need ſeeke no further.

1 Firſt,it was neuer ſaid,nor thought by the Catholikes (ſaith hee) that all religion dependeth vpon the Popes authoritie,*Defenſ.apolog.pag.*57. And yet Cardinall Cuſanus writeth thus: Veritas adhæret cathedræ: The truth cleaueth faſt to the Popes chaire. *Ad Bohem.epiſt.*2.The Canoniſts ſay:Conſtat eccleſiam ideo eſſe vnam,quia in vniuerſali eccleſia vnum eſt caput ſupremum,ſcilicet Papa: It is plaine that therefore the Church is one,becauſe in the whole vniuerſall Church, there is but one ſupreme head,and that is the Pope, *ex Iuello.pag.*61. What do theſe elſe affirme,but that all the popiſh religion dependeth of the vnitie of their head,which is the Pope?

2 That the Pope ſhould ſucceed Chriſt in his whole ſubſtance, that is, his whole power: there hath not been any ſuch fond ſaying vttered by their Diuines.*Hard.pag.*106.*defenſ.apolog.*Yet theſe words were ſpoken,and allowed in the Councell of Laterane held vnder Pope Iulius: Tibi data eſt omnis poteſtas in cœlo & in terra: Vnto you is giuen all power in heauen and earth. And Panormitane is ſuffered to ſay,Papa poteſt omnia,quæ Deus poteſt: The Pope is able to doe whatſoeuer God is able to doe,Panor.de elect.ca.licet.

3 He denieth that there is any ſuch Canon to be found in the Councell of Carthage, that no Biſhop ſhould be called the higheſt Biſhop.And yet they are the very words of the Councell,as they are cited by Gratian: Vniuerſalis autem,ne Romanus pontifex appelletur: Let not the Biſhop of Rome himſelfe be called the vniuerſall Biſhop.

Diſtinct.99. primæ.c.3.

4 He denieth that Pope Zoſimus to maintaine the ſupremacie of his ſea, corrupted the Nicen Councell.Neither did any honeſt man ſay it from the beginning of the world:No man euer ſaid it but Illyricus and Bale,pag.162.Whereas the ſtorie is plaine,for the Councell of Carthage ſent to the Biſhops of Conſtantinople,Alexandria,Antiochia,and receiued authenticall copies from them in Greeke of the Nicen Councell: the Popes only copie was found to diſagree from the reſt.It is therefore eaſie to ſee,by whom the Canons of the Councell were corrupted,and to what purpoſe. In the Councell of Florence,Marcus the Archbiſhop of Epheſus ſaid,in the name of the reſt of the Biſhops of the Greek Church,who were aboue 17.in number: Nonne vides,reuerende pater,ſummum pontificem Zoſimum falſum decretum ad tantum Concilium pro re tam magna miſiſſe? Do you not ſee,reuerend father,that Pope Zoſimus the high Biſhop ſent vnto ſo worthie a Councell,for a matter of ſo great waight,a falſe decree? *Concil.Florent.ſeſſ.*20. How dare then Maſter Harding affirme, that neuer any honeſt man ſaid it?

5 We denie vtterly,that any man after that hee hath receiued holy orders may marrie: Neither can it be ſhewed that the marriage of ſuch was euer accounted lawfull in the Catholike Church. Hard. pag 203. yet S. Hierome ſaith of his time: Quaſi non hodie quoq; plurimi ſacerdotes habeant matrimonia: As though now a daies very many prieſts are not married: Aduerſ. Iouinian. lib.1. And Damaſus teſtifieth, Complures inueniuntur, qui de ſacerdotibus nati Apoſtolicæ ſedi præfuerunt: Many are found that being prieſts ſonnes ruled the Apoſtolike ſea of Rome: as Pope Syluerius, Pope Deuſdedit, Pope Adrian 2. Pope Iohn 15. and diuers other, ex Gratian. And Innocentius the third, confeſſeth of the Greeke Church, Orientalis eccleſia votum continentiæ non admiſit: The Eaſt Church neuer admitted the vow of continent or ſingle life: Decr. Greg. lib.3. tit.3. cap.6. M. Harding therefore hath faced vs out here in denying ſo euident a truth.

Diſtinct.37. legunt.

6 We ſay plainely, that S. Auguſtine affirmeth purgatorie, and that it cannot bee ſhewed, where hee doubteth of it, Hard. pag.354. And yet Auguſtine writeth thus, ſpeaking of purgatorie: Tale aliquid etiam poſt hanc vitam fieri incredibile non eſt, & vtrum ita ſit, quæri poteſt. Some ſuch thing to be after this life it is not incredible, and whether it be ſo or no, it may be a queſtion, ad Dulcitium quæſt.1. Let any indifferent man now iudge whether Auguſtine doubteth of purgatorie or not.

7 That fornication was neuer allowed in the Catholike Church, (he meaneth the Church of Rome.) Hard. p.7. defenſ. apolog. Neither haue the Canoniſts euer taught the people, that ſimple fornication is no ſin, pag.411. For triall of this matter, let vs heare what their Canoniſts ſay: Etſi notoria ſit fornicatio presbyterorum, tamen non propter eam abſtinendum eſt ab officijs illorum: Although the fornication of Prieſts be notorious, yet may no man therfore refraine from their ſeruice, diſtinct.32. Nullus. Iohan. Andrea. Maſter Harding himſelfe calleth the open Stewes in Rome, a neceſſarie euill, for auoiding of other diſorders that would be greater. Againe, Qui non habet vxorem, loco illius concubinam habere licet: It is lawfull for him that hath no wife, in ſtead of her to haue a concubine, diſtinct.34.15. qui. Another ſaith: Si clericus amplectitur mulierem, laicus interpretabitur, quòd cauſa benedicendi eam hoc faciat: If a prieſt embrace a woman, a lay man muſt iudge, that hee doth it with intent to bleſſe her, 11. quæſt.3 abſit in gloſſa. By this it may appeare, what account the Church of Rome in time paſt hath made of fornication, and whether it were tolerated amongſt them or not.

8 Harding ſaith, that the whores in Rome haue not free libertie of dwelling in the haunted ſtreetes, and places, but only in out-houſes, and by-lanes: neither is it lawfull for them to ride in Coaches or Chariots, but onely to goe a foot in the ſtreetes: and that by their ſhort vailes, a note of diſhoneſtie, they are diſcerned from honeſt women, pag.423. All theſe are deſcribed to be manifeſt lyes and vntruths: for the Cardinals gaue cleane contrary information to Pope Paul the third: Meretrices in hac vrbe, vt matronæ incedunt, mulæ vehuntur, habitant inſignes ædes: The curtizans of this citie goe like honeſt matrones, being carried vpon Mules, and dwell in the faireſt houſes, ex Iuello defenſ. Apolog. 426. Thus we ſee what credit is to be giuen to M. Harding, and what ſmall conſcience hee maketh of a lye.

9 Maſter Harding impudently denyeth, and ſo doe other Papiſts, that a woman named Ioan was euer Pope of Rome, and that there is no ſuch image repreſenting a woman in trauell, nor no ſuch chaire for proofe of the Popes humanitie at his creation, neither that the Popes in their proceſſion refraine to goe that way, where the ſaid Pope Ioane in the middeſt of a ſolemne proceſſion fell in trauell, p.428. Yet the ſtorie is reported by Marianus Scotus that liued anno 1028. Sigibert. Gemblacenſ. that liued anno 1100. Martinus Polonus, the Popes Penitentiarie, who wrote anno 1320. witneſſes of great antiquitie. B. Iuell reckoneth vp 16. authors beſide, that report the ſame thing, and none of them all Lutherans. That there is is ſuch an image repreſenting ſuch a fact, and that the Pope of purpoſe refraineth that way, it is teſtified by Theodoricus Niemus the Popes Secretarie. And concerning the hollow chaire of Porphyrie ſtone, which is kept for ſuch an vſe, Sabellicus doth report, Enead.9. lib.1. plura apud Iuell. pag. 433. Now who is more like to be the lyer, M. Harding, a new vpſtart writer, or theſe ſo many ancient witneſſes, I thinke, it is not hard to iudge.

10 He denieth the ſtory of Iohn Diazius death, how hauing been a Doctor of Sorbona in Paris, and afterward conuerted to the Goſpell, was moſt traiterouſly ſlaine by his owne brothers Alphonſus Diazius man at Nuburg in Germanie: how he was ſent vp by his maſter with a carpenters axe to kill him; and ſo he did, his Maſter Alphonſus waiting below, and the quarrel was, becauſe good Iohn Diazius would not returne to poperie againe: this is the truth of the ſtorie, as it is faithfully reported by Iohn Sleidan, lib.17. Yet M. Harding ſaith, we tell many lyes at once. pag 435. what now will not theſe good fellowes denie?

11 That the Pope euer commanded any ſuch ſeruice to be done vnto him, as that the Emperour ſhould hold his ſtirrop, and leade his horſe by the bridle, ye can neuer ſhew it by any credible witneſſe, Hard. pag.463. yet in the Popes owne booke of Ceremonies, cap.8. it is found thus written: The Emperour commeth to the Popes horſe, and in honour of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, whoſe perſon in earth the Pope beareth, he holdeth the ſtirrop till the Pope be mounted, and afterward he taketh the bridle and leadeth foorth his horſe. This is the Popes owne preſcription in his booke of Ceremonies. And therefore Pope Adrian 2. was angrie with the Emperour Frederike, for holding his ſtirrop on the wrong ſide, Gregor. Haimburgenſ. in appellat. Sigiſmund, It ſeemeth therefore, that the Pope looked for this ſeruice of dutie.

12 It is denied that the Pope put in armes Henrie the 5. againſt Henrie the 4. his father, Hard.469. yet is it reported by an author of good credit, Paſchalis papa principes contra Henricum 4. concitauit, imo eius proprium filium: Pope Paſchalis raiſed vp the Nobilitie againſt Henry the fourth, yea his owne ſonne, Gregor. Haimburgenſ.

13 He denieth, that euer any of them taught, that Gods ſayings and precepts be void, except the Biſhop of Rome ratifie them, pag. 487. Yet are they the very words of Siluester Prierias, Maſter of the Popes palace: A doctrina Romanæ eccleſiæ, & Romani Pontificis ſacra ſcriptura robur trahit & authoritatem: The holy Scripture taketh ſtrength and authoritie of the doctrine of the Romane Church, and of the Biſhop of Rome. Siluester Prier. contr. Lutherum.

14 He ſaith, it is a ſlaunder, that any of them ſhould call the Scriptures dumbe and vnprofitable, p. 535. Whereas it is certaine, they be their owne words: One calleth the Scripture, mortuum atramentum, dead inke. Lodouic. in Concil. Trident. Another ſaith: Scriptura eſt res inanimis & muta: The Scripture is a dead and dumbe thing, Epiſcop. Pictauienſ. Another calleth them, Euangelium nigrum, the black Goſpell, Eckius. conſul. Iuell. defenſ. Apolog. pag. 535.

15.16 It is denied, that there is any ſuch Canon in the old Romane Councell, that no man ſhould come to ſeruice ſaid by a prieſt well knowne to keepe a Concubine. It is alſo falſe and ſlaunderous, that Concubines are let out to farme to prieſts: Hard. pag. 559. Yet for the one, the words of the decree ſtand thus: Nullus audit Miſſam presbyteri quem ſcit concubinam indubitanter habere: Let no man heare the Maſſe of that Prieſt, whom he vndoubtedly knoweth to keepe a concubine, Diſtinct. 32. Nullus. And for the other, it is certaine, that the Biſhop of Argentine hath a Florence by the yeere of euery prieſt, that keepeth a concubine, and if ſhee beare a childe, hee hath foure, Ex Iuell. pag. 559. Apolog. defenſ.

Theſe apparant vntruths, and impudent denials, I thought good for example to note out of our Countrimans works. Who liſt to know more of his honeſt dealing, if hee will reſort to Biſhop Iuels learned treatiſes, ſhall find his deſire ſatisfied both in this, and in all other matters, which hee can require. And concerning M. Hardings great licentiouſneſſe in auouching falſhoods, the ſaid reuerend

69. Vntruths in one booke. father thus writeth of him: Note that M. Harding in his 3. articles of anſwer to M. Iuell, hath publiſhed threſcore and nine great vntruths, Defenſ. Apolog. pag. 597. in margin.

17 Of the like bold ſpirit to denie manifeſt truths we find other alſo of that ſect to be, that M. Harding ſhould not be alone. Scarga. art. 9 fol. 265. denieth any of their catholikes euer to haue ſaid: Sacerdos eſt creator creatoris ſui: The Prieſt is the creator of his Creator, and he calleth it blaſphemum dictum, a blaſphemous ſaying: and yet Turriane tract. 1. cap. 17. fol. 97. writeth thus, Euchariſtia non eſt creatura, ſed creator Christus: The Euchariſt is no creature, but the creator Chriſt: and their prieſts haue power, as they ſay, conficiendi corporis Chriſti, to make the bodie of Chriſt: or to make the Euchariſt, which they doubt not to call Chriſt, therfore they muſt needs alſo make Chriſt. Boner alſo in a cer-

Fox p. 1426. edition 4. taine oration to the Conuocation houſe, ſaith, that the prieſt is a maker of his Creator, whom I thinke they will not denie to be a catholike.

18 Bellarmine affirmeth, that in the law there were no ſacrifices appointed for the greater ſinnes, as for

Lib. 2. de ſacram. c. 27. adultery, murther, idolatry, and ſuch like, but only for the ſmaller offences, as of ignorance, &c. whereas notwithſtanding Dauid after he had committed two great ſinnes of murther and adulterie, deſireth that God would purge him with yſop Pſalm. 50. according to the ceremonie of the law, hauing notwithſtanding relation to that which was ſignified thereby.

19 Arturus in his booke de ſanctorum inuocat. c. 9. theſ. 96. denieth that euer any of the Catholikes called Sanctos ſeruatores, the Saints our Sauiours. Whereas Bonauenture doubteth not thus to ſay in his Lady Pſalter of the Virgine Mary, as it followeth afterward, blaſph. 82. O benedicta, in manib. tuis repoſita eſt noſtra ſalus: O thou moſt bleſſed, in thy hands reſteth our ſaluation: is not this to call her Sauiour.

20 The ſame Arturus alſo c. 3. apolog. cont. Toſſanum, denieth inſtantly, that whereas the ſaid Toſſanus affirmed out of Irenæus, Ne inuocationibus angelorum aliquid fiat, that nothing ſhould be done by the inuocation of Angels, that Irenæus hath any ſuch ſaying, whereas the ſaid Irenæus, lib. 2. cap. 58. hath theſe very words.

Iudge now (good Chriſtian Reader) conſidering how eaſie and vſuall a thing it is with our aduerſaries to denie whatſoeuer truth, neuer ſo manifeſt, which they are preſſed withal, if it may not be more truly ſaid of them, that their religion ſtandeth only vpon deſtructions and negatiues, then of vs, whom

1. Pet. 5. verſ. 31. Rhem. the Rhemiſts falſely accuſe hereof. Indeed, we affirme and auouch boldly, that which is true, and deny and deſtroy hereſie and falſehood. But, I truſt, they cannot, neither ſhal euer prooue againſt vs, that we haue denied or gainſaid manifeſt truths, as they haue done.

Vnto theſe ſtrange denials of open and euident truths ioyne alſo, if you pleaſe, their bold and ſtrange affirmations of vntruths.

21 That their doctrine of tranſubſtantiation is no leſſe ancient then the Goſpel it ſelfe, Hard. pag. 290. Whereas it is confeſſed by Gabriel Biel, a doctor of their owne; that how the bodie of Chriſt ſhould be in the Sacrament, whether by changing of ſomewhat into it, or Chriſts bodie begin to be there together with the bread, Manentibus ſubſtantia & accidentibus panis: The ſubſtance and accidents of the bread remaining ſtill, non inuenitur (ſaith he) expreſſum in canone Bibliæ, It is not found in the Canon of the Bible: Gabriel. in canon. lect. 40. And Doctor Tonſtall ſaith, Licerum fuit ante Concilium liam Lateranum: Before the Councell of Laterane it was left at libertie, namely, concerning the maner of the preſence of Chriſts bodie, for euery man to thinke as he would: de Euchariſt. lib.1.pag.46. And yet M. Harding will needs beare vs in hand, that it is as ancient as the Goſpell.

It hath been an order from the beginning receiued, and hetherto continued, to haue the Church ſeruice in the Latine tongue, Hard.p.382. Whereas they themſelues know the contrary. In Auguſtines time, ſuch a tongue was vſed as the people vnderſtood: Loquendi (ſaith he) omnino nulla eſt cauſa, ſi quod loquimur, non intelligunt, propter quos vt intelligant, loquimur: There is no cauſe why wee ſhould ſpeake at all, if they vnderſtand not what wee ſay, for whoſe ſake wee ſpeake, that they might vnderſtand vs, Auguſt. de doctrin. Chriſtian. lib.4.cap.10. 22

He ſaith, Conſtantine gaue place to Silueſter Biſhop of Rome, when hee was baptized, pag.453. Whereas it is certaine, that Silueſter was dead long before Conſtantine was chriſtened, confeſ. Ieſuit. ibidem. 23

That England receiued the true faith from S. Gregorie Biſhop of Rome, and was conuerted to the faith by Auguſtine his Legate, Hard.pag.339. But it is manifeſt out of hiſtories, that the faith of Chriſt had been planted in this land 400 yeeres before the comming of Auguſtine, as Origen teſtifieth: Terra Britanniæ conſenſit in religionem Chriſti: The land of Britannie hath conſented to Chriſts religion, in Ezech. homil.4. who liued not much leſſe then 400 yeeres before Gregories time. 24

No maruel, if they affirme and maintaine many things contrary to the courſe of al true hiſtories, for they dare be as bold with Scripture.

Harding ſaith, that Chriſt neuer ſaid to any of the Apoſtles, as vnto Peter, Feede ye, pag.118. When Chriſt ſaid as much in effect notwithſtanding to the reſt: Receiue ye the holy Ghoſt. And Chriſt ſaid vnto all, Goe and teach all nations, Math.28. If Peter then had no more the holy Ghoſt then the reſt: if he had no more authoritie to preach to the whole world then the reſt, it belonged no more to Peter to feede the Lords flocke then to the reſt: for what is it to feede, but to preach? what is it to feed, but to receiue the gifts of the holy Ghoſt, to teach and inſtruct? 25

Concil. Colonen.p.2.can.6.

It is in vaine for you to ſay, that the Church of Rome hath erred, when the holy Ghoſt hath ſignified, that it cannot erre, Hard.pag.485. But where euer, I pray you, did the holy Ghoſt make any ſuch promiſe? is in that place, as you beare vs in hand, where Chriſt ſaith: I prayed for thee Peter that thy faith ſhould not faile? S. Auguſtine may anſwere you, Numquid pro Petro rogabat, pro Iohanne & Iacobo non rogabat? Did Chriſt pray for Peter, and did hee not pray for Iohn and Iames alſo? in quæſt. nou. Teſtament. quæſt.75. And it is beſide a ſillie and childiſh argument, Chriſt praied for Peter, that his faith ſhould not faile: Ergo, the Church of Rome cannot erre. Here then is another bold and vntrue affirmation, without Scripture grounded vpon Scripture. 26

But what ſay ye to father Robert Bellarmine, hee laſheth out luſtily, and in plaine tearmes, belyeth the Scripture: Habemus (ſaith he) in teſtamento veteri, Heliam & Heliſæum, ac filios Prophetarum ſine vxoribus in hoc mundo vixiſſe: We haue in the old Teſtament, that Helias and Heliſæus, and the ſonnes of the Prophets, liued in this world without wiues, de Monachis, lib.2.cap.5. The text is flat contrarie, which affirmeth, that the ſonnes of the Prophets were married, 2.King.4.1. And one of the wiues of the ſonnes of the Prophets, cried vnto Eliſha, ſaying, thy ſeruant my husband, &c. Whether now is it more reaſonable, that we ſhould beleeue the Scripture, or Bellarmine? 27

But concerning the errors and vntruths, which they hold and affirme directly oppoſite to ſcripture, we haue ordained another place, (which followeth in the next Pillar of Papiſtrie) more fully to handle them.

I will of purpoſe paſſe ouer many other vntruths and lyes, which our aduerſaries without ſhame haue forged: as how Cardinal Campeius ſaid openly to the Magiſtrates of Strausburgh, that the Greeks doe not giue libertie to their prieſts to marrie: which is a notorious lye: for their prieſts to this day make no vow of chaſtitie, Fox pag.187.artic.17. And in this caſe I will rather credite the Popes themſelues then a Cardinall, the Maſter before the man: for both Innocentius confeſſeth, as we haue ſeene before, that the Eaſt Church neuer admitted the vow of ſingle life, Decr.Greg.lib.3.tit.3.c.6. as alſo Clemens 3. granteth in theſe words, Græcis ſacerdotibus legitimo matrimonio vti licet: It is lawfull for the Greeke prieſts to vſe lawfull matrimonie: Decr.Gregor.lib.5.tit.38.c.7. Likewiſe to let paſſe how the Pope himſelfe maketh a loud lye in his Bull againſt Luther, ſaying, that he offered money to Luther to come vp to Rome, whereas it is certaine, that there were 300. crownes giuen to ruffians and catchpoles to murther Luther, pag.1287. But I will not rub this ſore too long: that which I haue alreadie ſaid, may ſerue as a taſte and triall of their lying ſpirit. 28 29

Fox p.865.

Vnto theſe vntruths and lyes, may be added alſo the fables and deuiſed tales, which goe for currant among Papiſts, which are not the leaſt props and ſtaies of popiſh ſuperſtition.

Of this kind is that fabulous ſtorie, that the wiſe men which came from the Eaſt to worſhip Chriſt, were three Kings of Perſia, whoſe names were (as the tale goeth) Gaſpar, Melchior, Baltaſar, whoſe bodies were tranſlated to Cullen, and there remaine. Here are many vntruths, and vnlikelihoodes in this ſhort tale. Firſt, there was neuer but one King of Perſia at once. Secondly, though the Magi or wiſe men were of great account with the Kings of Perſia, yet were not the Kings called Magi. Thirdly, they returned Eaſtward, from whence they came: how then could their bodies be tranſported ſo many hundred, nay thouſand miles? Fourthly, if their bodies lie buried at Cullen, how can they bee 30 at Millaine too: for they alſo lay as good claime to them. Yet for all this, the Rhemiſts tell vs in good ſooth, that it is a true ſtorie, Annot. Mat. 2. ſect. 4.

at

31 The like fiction they haue of Gregorie Thaumaturgus, who remoued a mountaine to make roome for the foundation of a Church: yet very ſoberly auouched by the Rhemiſts, Matth. 17. ſect. 6.

32 Such another proper tale: how Chriſt came in a Pilgrims weede to Gregories ordinarie table of poore men, Rhemiſt. Heb. 13. ſect. 2. which fiction, that Chriſt in his humanitie ſhould be ſeene vpon earth, is contrary to the Scriptures, which teſtifie, that The heauens muſt containe him till his comming againe, Act. 3. 21. Many ſuch fables went for good payment amongſt the papiſts in times paſt in the daies of ignorance: but ſince that by the ſpringing of the Goſpell greater light is come into the world: they themſelues begin to reiect diuers of their legend ſtories, which were not called in queſtion before.

33 Bellarmine confeſſeth, that the ſtories which are reported out of Abdias, and others, vt plurimùm non ſunt prorſus indubitata, for the moſt part may be doubted of. The ſtories alſo of S. George, S. Chriſtopher, and S. Katherin he iudgeth to be Apocryphall, and worthie of ſmall credit: though he would haue their perſons ſtill kept in memorie, Bellarm. lib. 1. de ſanctor. beatitud. 20.

34 The tale, how through the prayers of S. Gregorie, the ſoule of Traian the Emperour, was deliuered out of hell, is reiected by Bellarmine de Purgator. lib. 2. c. 8.

Yet our countriman Maſter Harding is ſomewhat ſtrait laced, in iuſtifying all the Legend ſtories, which were wont to be read in their Churches, and ſaying that we belye them, pag. 571. Yet Polidore Virgil ſaith, Multorum diuorum vitas recitant, licet parum ad fidem ſcriptas: They reade many Saints liues, though not written according to the truth. And Ludouicus Viues, Legenda aurea pleniſſima eſt impudentiſſimis mendacijs: Their golden Legend, as they call it, is full of moſt impudent lies. And in the late Councell of Colone it is granted, Hiſtoriæ ſanctorum tam incultè & tam negligenti iudicio conſcriptæ ſunt, vt nec authoritatem videantur habere, nec grauitatem: The hiſtories of the Saints are ſo barbarouſly and ſo negligently written, as they ſeeme neither to haue authoritie, nor grauitie, Conſul. Iuell. defenſ. Apolog. pag. [illegible] Concil. Colonenſ. p. 2. can. 6.

This much of our aduerſaries ſhameleſſe reiecting of truths, and of their bold bolſtring out of vntruths, as alſo of their fables and lies: which things if they ſhall perſiſt ſtill to auouch, I will ſay with Bernard: Iuſtiùs talia loquens fuſtibus cæderetur, quàm rationibus refelleretur: Hee that ſpeaketh ſuch vaine things, deſerueth rather to be beaten with clubs, then to be confuted by arguments, Epiſt. 191. And as Auguſtine ſaith, in writing againſt Petilian the Donatiſt: Quemadmodum, ſi mihi diceres, quòd ego Petilianus ſum, non inuenirem quomodo te refellerem, niſi aut iocantem riderem, aut inſanientem dolerem, hoc mihi nunc faciendum eſſe video: Euen as if thou ſhouldeſt ſay vnto me, that I am Petilian, I could not tell how to refell thee, but either in laughing at thy folly, or mourning for thy madneſſe: So muſt I be faine to doe now, contra Petilian. lib. 2. cap. 38. And ſo muſt we be faine to do, when we ſee our aduerſaries to paſſe the bounds of modeſtie, and to violate the law of reaſon, in making true falſe, and falſe true, in calling white blacke, and blacke white, we muſt needs do one of theſe two, either to ſcorne their folly, or to bewaile their blindneſſe and ignorance, and hardnes of heart. And thus haue we the firſt Pillar of Poperie, conſiſting of rayling, ſlanders, forgeries, vntruths, and fables.

THE SECOND PILLAR OF PAPISTRIE, CONSISTING OF BLASPHEMIES, OPINIONS CONTRARIE TO Scripture, Hereſies, ridiculous and abſurd poſitions.

THE FIRST PART OF POPISH blaſphemies.

THe Rhemiſts do lay great blaſphemies to our charge, writing in theſe words: No heretikes euer liker Antichriſt then theſe in our daies, ſpecially in blaſphemies againſt Gods Church, Sacraments, Saints, and all ſacred things: Apoc. 13. Sect. 2. But I truſt in God, for al their great words, that they ſhal neuer proue one blaſphemie againſt vs. No, be it knowne vnto them, that we maintaine no blaſphemies: they miſtake the matter, they are themſelues blaſphemers, which do belch out blaſphemies againſt God, and his Church, the Scriptures, and againſt all holie things. This then muſt be the iſſue, whether of vs bee theſe notorious blaſphemers, they or we: thus therefore beginneth our plea.

Firſt, wee will ſet downe their beadroll of blaſphemies, which they haue vttered concerning the Scriptures.

Lodouicus a Canon of Laterane in Rome, pronounced in the late chapter of Trent: Scriptura eſt quaſi mortuum atramentum: The Scripture is as it were dead inke. 1

The Biſhop of Poiters in the ſame chapter: Scriptura eſt res inanimis & muta: The Scripture is a dead and dumbe thing. Iuel pag. 521. defenſ. Apolog. 2

Albertus Pigghius: Sunt ſcripturæ muti Indices: The Scriptures are dumbe Judges, Controu. 3. de Ecleſ. 3

Eckius calleth the Scriptures, Euangelium nigrum, & theologiam atramentariam: The blacke Goſpell, and inken diuinitie. 4

Pigghius againe ſaith: they are as a noſe of waxe, Naſus cereus, to be drawne euery way, Hierarch. lib. 3. cap. 3. 5

Hoſius ſpeaking of Dauids Pſalmes, when it was obiected that Dauid the author thereof, was no Biſhop, but a temporall Prince: he maketh this heatheniſh and ſcornefull anſwere: Quid ni ſcriberet, ſcribimus indocti doctique poemata paſſim: No great matter if he writ them: for as Horace ſaith, wee write ballades euery body, both learned and vnlearned, ragge and ragge, Hoſius lib. 2. contr. Brentium. Thus he maketh the holy Prophet Dauid but a writer of ballades. 6

Silueſter Prierias contr. Luther. thus writeth: Indulgentiæ authoritate ſcripturæ non innotuêre nobis, ſed authoritate Romanæ Eccleſiæ, Romanorumque pontificum, quæ maior eſt: Pardons are not knowne to vs by the authoritie of the Scriptures, but by the authoritie of the Church and Biſhops of Rome. 7

Apoſtoli quædam ſcripſerunt, non vt ſcripta illa præeſſent fidei, & religioni noſtræ, ſed potius vt ſubeſſent: The Apoſtles wrote certaine things, not that their writings ſhould be aboue our faith and religion, but rather that they ſhould be vnder. Albert. Pigghius, Hierarch. lib. 1. cap. 2. 8

Gratian is not aſhamed to ſay, that the Canons of the Councels are of the ſame authoritie with the Scriptures, Diſtinct. 20. can. decretales. And Gregorie 1. epiſt. 24 ſaith, he doth reuerence the foure generall Councels, as the foure Euangeliſts. 9

Yea, our Rhemiſts are not aſhamed to proteſt, that whatſoeuer the paſtors and prieſts doe teach in the vnitie of the Church, is the word of God, 1. Theſ. 2. verſ. 12. So ſaith another: Determinatio eccleſiæ appellatur Euangelium: The determination of the Church is called the Goſpell, Iohannes Maria. And Hoſius, Quod eccleſia docet, expreſſum Dei verbum eſt: Whatſoeuer the Church teacheth (meaning the Church of Rome) it is the expreſſe word of God, lib. de expreſſ. verb. Dei. p. 97. Thus they make the decrees and ordinances of men, equall to Gods word, nay aboue it, ut ſupra, loc. 8. 10

It was obiected againſt certaine good Chriſtians, by D. Benet Chancellor to Fitziames Biſhop of London, that vpon a certaine night, they did reade certaine chapters of the Euangeliſts in Engliſh, con- 11 taining in them diuers erronious, and damnable opinions and concluſions of hereſie, Fox.pag.804. Heere behold, with Papiſts the Scripture containeth hereſie.

12 Eckius that ſaid before the Emperour at the citie of Wormes, turning himſelfe to Luther: If hee may once get this aduantage, to be conuinced by the Scriptures, we ſhall haue nothing certaine and eſtabliſhed in Chriſtendome, Fox.pag.851. Loe, the Scriptures with Papiſts breedeth vncertaintie of matters.

13 Anno 1555. the Kings Lieutenant at Lyons vttered theſe horrible blaſphemies vnto Lodouicus Marſacus, Martyr: of the foure Euangeliſts, but two were pure, Matthew and Iohn; the other two Marke and Luke were but gathered out of the other. The Epiſtles of Saint Paul, further ſaith he, but that the Doctors of the Church had authoriſed them, he would otherwiſe eſteeme them no better then the fables of *Æſop: ex Criſp. pantal. Fox.pag.*908.

So alſo ſaid Hermannus a blaſphemous papiſt, that the Scripture ſhould be of no more credit then Æſops fables, without the approbation of the Church: Which his ſaying is defended by *Hoſius, lib.*3. de author. ſcrip. to be godly ſpoken.

14 The ſaid Lieutenant, to a maiden ſpeaking ſomewhat of the law, vttered theſe blaſphemous words: *Curſed be the God of that law, ibid. Fox.pag.*908. What more vile blaſphemie could any of the diueliſh ſect of the Manichees haue ſpued out?

15 The Biſhop of Cauaillon in France, examining certaine Chriſtians of Merindoll, was angrie with them, when they made mention of ſome demonſtration to be made out of the word of God: and in a furie curſed, and gaue him to the deuill that firſt inuented that meane, Fox.pag.949. And yet Chriſt for the triall of truth, biddeth vs ſearch the Scriptures, Ioh.5. No maruell then, if theſe fellowes curſe men, ſeeing they ſpare not Chriſt himſelfe.

16 A certaine blind popiſh Doctor reaſoning with Maſter Tindall, boldly ſaid, We were better to be without Gods law, then the Popes, Fox.pag.1076.

Blaſph.

24 Lodouicus the Protonotarie, ſtepped vp in the Councell of Baſill, and ſaid, There was no argument to be gathered of the Acts of the Apoſtles, whoſe examples were more to be marueiled at, then followed, Fox.pag.678. Loe heere a great blaſphemie, Scripture is not to be followed.

Blaſph.

17 Andradius thus vnreuerently writeth of the Scriptures, to ſay no more: Neque in ipſis libris, quibus ſacra myſteria conſcripta ſunt, quippiam ineſt diuinitatis, quæ nos ad credendum, quæ illis continentur aliqua religione conſtringat: In thoſe bookes wherein the holy myſteries are written, there is not one iot of diuinitie, which by any force of religion can tie or binde vs to beleeue what is there contained: lib. defenſ. concil. Tridentin: A moſt impious and vngodly ſpeech: for where is there elſe any true diuinitie to be found, but in thoſe holy writings?

18 Cardinall Cuſanus, Scripturæ (ſaith he) adaptatæ ſunt ad tempus, & variè intelliguntur, ita vt vno tempore ſecundum currentem vniuerſalem ritum, exponantur: mutato ritu, iterum ſententia mutetur: The Scriptures are applied to the time, and may haue ſundrie vnderſtandings: ſo that one time they may bee expounded one way, according to the vniuerſall currant order of the (Church) and the ſame rite or order being broken, they may haue another meaning, *Cuſan. ad Bohem. epiſt.*2. What heretike could haue ſaid more then this, that the Scriptures are mutable and changeable?

19 Our Rhemiſts alſo ſhew great boldnes, in giuing their raſh cenſures of the holy writers: for theſe are their words: If the Euangeliſts and other writers of holy Scripture, had not vſed all humane diligence to ſearch out the truth of matters, the holy Ghoſt would not haue aſſiſted them, Act.15. ſect.10. And yet it is certaine, that Saint Paul had the Goſpell by reuelation, without the helpe at all of humane diligence: for he communicated not with fleſh and blood, Galat.1.16.

20 Againe, they ſay, that Saint Paule for feare of miſſing the line of truth, notwithſtanding hee had the Holie Ghoſt, went to conferre with Peter and the reſt, Rom.12. ſect.1. What is blaſphemie, if this be not, to ſay, that the Apoſtle, who was perſwaded he had the Spirit of God, 1.Corinth.7.40. was afeard to miſſe the line of truth? how can this be, vnleſſe it be imagined that the holy Ghoſt was not ſufficient to keepe him in the right line of truth? Indeede he went vp to conferre with the Apoſtles, not to receiue any further direction from them, for they did communicate nothing with him, Galat.2. verſ.6. but that they might giue teſtimonie of their conſent in doctrine with him, to ſtop the ſlanderous mouthes of falſe brethren, who reported the contrary.

And now, to fill vp the meaſure of their blaſphemies, let vs heare what is credibly reported to haue been vttered by no ſmall perſon, but euen one of their late Popes, in the hearing of his Cardinals; O quantum nobis profuit fabula iſta de Chriſto? O what aduantage (ſaith he) hath this fable of Chriſt brought vs? *ex Iuello. defenſ. Apolog. pag.*273. Thus by theſe fewe examples, wee may ſee what blaſphemous opinions many of the Papiſts (for we do not in this caſe charge them all) do hold concerning the Scriptures: Some making humane ordinances equall vnto them in authoritie: ſome preferring them before Scripture: others calling them hereticall bookes, vncertaine, mutable, mute and dumbe Iudges, and not to be followed in all things, with ſuch like blaſphemies: and theſe matters, not to be affirmed onely by ſome of the lay-ſort, but by their Diuines, yea Doctors, yea Biſhops, yea and Cardinals too, and not by one or two ſingular men, but by a whole Colledge, as the Rhemiſts, yea by the Pope himſelfe, as we haue ſeene, whom they preferre euen before Councels, and in whoſe breaſt, they ſay, all knowledge is locked vp. Now in the next place we will collect ſuch blaſphemies as are common among them, concerning the ſaid ghoſtly father of theirs, the Pope of Rome.

Blaſphemie concerning the Pope.

23 The Pope vnder Chriſt and in ſteed of Chriſt is the head of the Church, and a man may tearme him the *Vicegerent Bridegroome, Hard.*pag.99. If the Pope then be the head, then is the Church his body: and ſo indeede Pope Athanaſius calleth populos mundi, partes corporis ſui. The people of the world, the parts or members of his bodie, Iuel.pag.657. But Paul maketh the Church the bodie only of Chriſt, Epheſ.4.12. And as the Church Catholike cannot be the bodie of any other but Chriſt, ſo no man can be the head thereof but Chriſt.

24 Another ſaith, Chriſtus & Papa faciunt vnũ conſiſtorium, & excepto peccato, poteſt Papa quaſi omnia facere, quæ poteſt Deus: Chriſt and the Pope make but one Court or Conſiſtorie, and ſin only excepted, the Pope in a manner can doe all things that God can doe, Panormitan, de electtion. cap. licet. Abb.

25 The Pope hath the heauenly diſpoſition of things, and therefore may altar and change the natures of things by applying the ſubſtance of one thing to another, cap. Quando de tranſl. Epiſc. tit. 7.

26 Againe, Papa, nec Deus eſt, nec homo: The Pope is neither God nor man. And in another gloſſe, he is called, Dominus Deus noſter Papa, Our Lord God the Pope. Chriſtoph. Marcell ſaid in the Councell of Laterane, Tu es alter Deus in terris: Thou art another God vpon earth. And in the late Tridentine chapter, they call the Pope terrenum Deum, an earthly God: ex citation. Iuell pag. 593.

27 In the late Councell of Laterane, one Simon Begnius B. of Modruſia, thus ſaid to Pope Leo, Ecce venit Leo de tribu Iuda, radix David: te Leo beatiſſime ſaluatorem expectauimus: Behold the Lion is come of the tribe of Iuda, the roote of David, O moſt bleſſed Leo, we haue looked for thee to be our Sauiour, *Concil. Lateran. ſeſſ.6. pag.*601.

28 In the late Chapter of Trent, Cornelius the Biſhop of Bitonto ſaid thus: Papa lux venit in mundum, & dilexerunt homines tenebras magis, quàm lucem: The Pope being the light, is come into the world, and men loued darkneſſe more then light.

29 The Pope ſuffered the Ambaſſadors of Sicilia to lie proſtrate on the ground, and thus to crie out vnto him, Qui tollis peccata mundi, miserêre noſtrî: Thou that takeſt away the ſinnes of the world, haue mercie vpon vs: Paul. Æmilius, lib.7. ex Iuello. What horrible and vnſufferable blaſphemies are theſe, to attribute to the Pope, that which is proper only to Chriſt? And how intollerable is the pride of this man of ſin, to ſuffer ſuch things by his flatterers and clawbacks, euer to be giuen vnto him?

30 That the Pope is the hart of the Church, in quickning the ſame ſpiritually, that he is the wel-ſpring, from the which floweth all vertue and goodneſſe, *Ex epiſt. Iohan. Huſſ. Fox. pag.*628.

31 That he is able to make new articles, and aboliſh the old: *Friers of Antwerp. ex Fox pag.*929.*col.*1.

32 The Canoniſts ſay, Papa poteſt diſpenſare contra ius diuinum; The Pope may diſpenſe againſt the law of God, 16.q.1. Quicunque in gloſſa.

33 Papa poteſt diſpenſare contra ius naturæ: The Pope may diſpenſe againſt the law of nature, 15.q.6. authoritate in gloſſ.

34 Papa poteſt diſpenſare contra Apoſtolum, diſtinct. 32. lector. The Pope may diſpenſe againſt the Apoſtle.

35 Papa poteſt diſpenſare contra nouum Teſtamentum: The Pope may diſpenſe againſt the new Teſtament. Papa poteſt diſpenſare de omnibus præceptis veteris & noui Teſtamenti: The Pope may diſpenſe with all the precepts both of the old and new Teſtament: *vt citatur à Iuell. pag.*59 defenſ. apolog.

36 That power which Chriſt had only in habitu, when he was here vpon earth, the Pope hath now actu, that is, the vniuerſall iuriſdiction both of ſpirituall and temporall things: *Ex citation. Fox. pag.*791.

37 Maior honos debetur Papæ, quàm angelis: Greater honour is due to the Pope then to Angels: Antonius.

38 If Prelates be called and counted of Conſtantinus for gods, I then being aboue all prelates, ſeeme by this reaſon to be aboue all gods: wherefore no maruel, if it be in my power to change time and times, to altar and abrogate lawes, to diſpenſe with all things, yea with the precepts of Chriſt: Decretal. de tranſl. Epiſcop. cap. Quanto.

Laſtly, if the Pope doe leade innumerable ſoules by flocks into hel, yet no man muſt preſume to rebuke his faults in this world: *Diſtinct.*40.cap. ſi Papa.

Thus haue wee the opinion of the Popiſh Canoniſts of their high Biſhop. Hee is the light of the world, the Lion of the tribe of Iuda, a God vpon earth, higher then the Angels, able to diſpenſe with the law of nature, and the law of God: yea, in earth aboue all gods. What horrible and filthie blaſphemies are theſe? Neuer did Antiochus, Nero, or Caligula, or who elſe commanded themſelues to bee worſhipped for gods vpon earth, euer arrogate ſo much vnto themſelues. What need we now looke further for Antichriſt? He doth euidently reueale himſelfe: for here we haue the aduerſarie that exalteth himſelfe againſt all that is called God, and that ſitteth in the temple of God, ſhewing himſelfe that he is God, as S. Paul propheſieth of him, 2. Theſ. 24. Let vs ſee further, what other blaſphemies we can find amongſt them?

39 That the Virgin Mary was conceiued without originall ſinne, contrarie to S. Paul, who ſaith, that God hath concluded all vnder ſinne, Rom.11.32. Rom.3.23. all haue ſinned: that ſhe hath no need of remiſſion of ſinnes: that ſhe was not iuſtified by Chriſt, being iuſt from her beginning: neither that ſhe gaue God thanks for expiation of her ſinne, or prayed at any time for remiſſion of her ſinnes: Franciſcan Friers, Fox p.801. Theſe grieuous blaſphemies are confuted by the Virgin Maries owne mouth:

My ſoule reioyceth in God my Sauiour: Chriſt therefore was her Sauiour: who was ſo called in no other ſenſe, but becauſe he ſhould ſaue his people from their ſinnes, Matth.1.21.

40 Cardinall Caietanus diſputing againſt Luther, affirmed that faith was not neceſſary to him that receiueth the Sacrament. Fox pag.845. A blaſphemous vntruth, contrary to Scripture: For without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Heb.11.6. Without the which no ſeruice of ours can be accepted before him.

41 That we neede not now goe to Ieſus Chriſt, to haue him an interceſſor, but to God alone, ſetting Ieſus Chriſt apart, and ſo ought we verily to beleeue, affirmed by D.Benet, Maſter of the Sorboniſts, diſputing with Francis Rebezies Martyr, *ex Criſpin lib.6.Fox pag.*921.

42 In the towne of Perth in Scotland, Frier Spenſe in his ſermon affirmed, that prayer made to Saints was ſo neceſſarie, that without it, there could bee no hope of ſaluation to man, *ex Regiſt.Scotiæ.Fox pag.*1267. Thus Chriſt, we ſee, is diſplaced, and thruſt out of dores, as whoſe mediation is not neceſſarie, and the idolatrous inuocation of Saints brought in in ſtead thereof.

43 That there are ſome men in this life ſo iuſt, that they need no repentance, affirmed by the Rhemiſts, Luk.15.ſect.1. for ſo they expound that place, verſe 7. of men that continue iuſt and godly, and are not penitent for their ſinnes.

44 Another calleth marriage a prophanation of holy orders. *Greg.Martin.diſcouer.cap.*15.*ſect.*11. Contrary to the Apoſtle, who ſaith, that marriage is honorable amongſt all men, Heb.13.4.

45 Our hearts and inward repentance are open to the Angels and other celeſtiall ſpirits in heauen, Rhemiſt.Luk.15.ſect.2. And thus they blaſphemouſly rob God of his honour, in attributing that to creatures, which is peculiar to his Maieſtie: namely, to be a ſearcher and knower of our harts, 1.King.8.39. The ſame is alſo affirmed by Arturus de ſanctorum inuocation. cap.7.theſ.65.Cognoſcunt Angeli intimos animorum ſenſus, adeoq́, reconditas & penitus abſtruſas cogitationes: The Angels know our inward meaning, and the hidden and ſecret thoughts of our hearts: which is contrarie to the Scripture, which maketh God onely to be the ſearcher of the hearts.

46 That we may beleeue in Saints, and that it is true of them, as S.Paul ſaith, How can they call on him, on whom they haue not beleeued? Rom.10.14. So we cannot pray to any Saint in heauen, vnleſſe wee beleeue, and truſt that they can helpe vs, Rhemiſt. Rom.10. ſect.4. A blaſphemie contrary to Scripture, which ſaith: ye beleeue in God, beleeue alſo in me, Iohn 14.1. God onely and his Chriſt is to be beleeued vpon.

47 That we need not maruell, if the image of our Ladie and the like doe ſtranger and greater miracles then thoſe which Chriſt himſelfe did, Rhemiſt. Iohn 14.ſect.3. A monſtrous blaſphemie, that images worke ſtranger myracles then Chriſt himſelfe.

Catharinus a great papiſt ſaith, that the commandement in the law againſt Images, was but temporall, and to continue but till the eſtabliſhing of the new Teſtament, ex Bellarm. de imaginibus ſanctor. lib.2.cap.7.

49 That there is a religious worſhip properly due vnto Images, yea as they are conſidered in themſelues, Et non ſolum vt vicem.gerunt exemplaris, And not onely, as they repreſent another thing. Bellar.de imaginib.ſanctor.lib.2.cap,21. Loe then by theſe popiſh doctrines, Images are to be worſhipped with diuine and religious worſhip, which the Angels themſelues refuſe, and is onely due vnto God, Reuelat.22.9.

50 That euery popiſh Prieſt is after the order of Melchiſedech, and that the proper act of Chriſts prieſthood, conſiſteth in the perpetuall offering of his bodie and blood in the Church: Rhemiſt.Heb.7.ſect.8. That the ſacrifice of Chriſt vpon the croſſe was not after the order of Melchiſedech, but after the order of *Aaron: Heskius lib.*1.*cap.*13. What intollerable blaſphemie is this, to affirme that euery vile maſſing Prieſt is after the order of Melchiſedech, and to denie that Chriſt vpon the croſſe, was in that act a Prieſt of Melchiſedechs order? And thus ſhall euery one of their ſhauelings bee more properly a Prieſt, then Chriſt.

51 In the idolatrous ſeruice of their Maſſe, they vtter blaſphemies in heapes: We beſeech thee (ſaith the prieſt) receiue this oblation, and yet they affirme, that it is the very bodie and blood of Chriſt: here then the prieſt is made a mediator for Chriſt. And againe, Command thou theſe to be brought by the hands of the holy Angell into heauen. But if it be the body of Chriſt, what need it be carried by an Angell? Let the Prieſt bow himſelfe to the hoaſt, ſaying, I worſhip thee, I glorifie thee. Lo here they worſhip a peece of bread: In canon.Miſſæ. And to conclude, they doubt not to ſay, that Sacerdos eſt creator creatoris ſui: That the prieſt doth make his maker, *Iuel reſponſ.ad articul.pag.*615.

52 It is not a ſufficient ſatisfaction to beleeue that Chriſt hath abundantly ſatisfied for vs, but God alſo muſt be ſatisfied for our ſinnes, by the puniſhment of our ſelues. *Concil.Tridentin.ſeſſ.*14.*can.*13. A blaſphemous aſſertion, that Chriſts ſatisfaction is not ſufficient for vs.

53 Men cannot be ſaued, though they be predeſtinate, vnleſſe they keepe Gods commandements, Rhemiſt.Act.27.ſect.3 By this ſpeech, they ſeeme to inſinuate, that a man predeſtinate of God, may miſſe of ſaluation: which is a blaſphemous thought, for Gods eternall decree changeth not.

54 The Rhemiſts alleage this ſaying of Hierome: They follow the lambe, whither ſoeuer he goeth, if the lambe bee in euery place, then they that bee with the lambe, muſt bee euery where, you ſee, ſay they, how that bleſſed father refuted the Caluiniſts before they were borne: Rhemiſt.Apocal.6.ſect.1. Are not now the Papiſts I pray you become Vbiquitaries themſelues? Nay worſe then Vbiquitaries, inclining to the opinion of the omnipreſence, not onely of the humanitie of Chriſt, but euen of the Saints: which is a great blaſphemie.

56 That confidence and aſſurance, that faithfull men haue of their ſaluation, they call a faithleſſe perſwaſion, a moſt damnable, falſe illuſion and preſumption, Rhemiſt. Rom. 8. ſect. 9. A fond ſpeciall faith and fiction, Rom. 4. ſect. 9. yea they moſt wickedly ſay, that it is not fides Apoſtolorum, but fides dæmoniorum, not the faith of the Apoſtles, but the faith of diuels, 1. Corinth. 9. 9. yet this aſſurance and perſwaſion of ſaluation is grounded vpon the Scriptures: as where S. Paul ſaith, I am perſwaded, or I am ſure, that neither death nor life, &c. ſhall be able to remoue vs from the loue of God. And S. Peter, That we ſhould make our election and calling ſure. Rom. 8. 38. 39. 2. Pet. 1. 10.

57 A dead faith is a true faith, and the ſame which is called the Catholike faith, and in ſubſtance all one with that faith that iuſtifieth, Rhemiſt. Iames 2. ſect. 11. So by this reaſon, the faith of diuels and iuſtifying faith ſhall be all one in ſubſtance, for that dead faith, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, the diuels themſelues may haue, for they beleeue and tremble. Iames 2. 19.

58 The certaintie of remiſſion of ſinnes, with a ſure confidence and truſt in Chriſt, may be found euen amongſt ſchiſmatikes, heretikes and wicked men. Con. Trident. ſeſſ. 6. cap. 9. It appeareth by this, that they vnderſtand not, what this ſure truſt and confidence meaneth, when ſo vnaduiſedly and groſſelie they affirme it to be found amongſt wicked men. None can be aſſured of remiſſion of ſinnes, but there followeth peace of conſcience with God: and this peace none can haue, but they which are iuſtified by faith: and none are ſo iuſtified but the righteous and faithfull. Rom. 5. 1.

59 That the decree and ſentence which was pronounced by the high Prieſts and Scribes againſt Chriſt, was iuſt and right: Hoſius cont. Brentium. lib. 2. And that it might and was truly pronounced by Caiphas, that Chriſt was worthie of death: And thus wickedly they take part with Annas and Caiphas againſt Chriſt. Some other Papiſts ſay, that they erred not in the ſentence giuen againſt Chriſt: for he was indeed guiltie of death, hauing taken our ſins vpon him, but the error was in the manner of their proceeding, which was done tumultuouſly and by ſuborning of falſe witneſſes: And this (ſaith Bellarmine their great doctor) is Probabilis ſententia: a very probable opinion, de concilior. authoritat. lib. 2. pag. 8. Yea they ſpeake yet more plainely: Iudæi mortaliter peccaſſent, niſi Chriſtum crucifixiſſent: The Iewes had ſinned mortally, if they had not crucified Chriſt. Diſtinct. 13. Item, in margine.

60 Another ſaith: Petrus non fidem Chriſti, ſed Chriſtum ſalua fide negauit: Peter denied not the faith of Chriſt, but his faith ſaued, he denied but onely Chriſt. Copus. dialog. 1. pag. 51. Is not here good popiſh diuinitie, that Chriſt may be denied, without deniall of the faith?

61 The Rhemiſts affirme: that Chriſt did penance by faſting, ſolitarineſſe, and conuerſing with beaſts, Mark. 1. ſect. 6. This is great blaſphemy, for Chriſt was free from ſin, & therfore needed no repentance.

62 That Lazarus and Abraham were both in hell, and not in the kingdome of heauen before Chriſt, Rhemiſt. Luk. 16. ſect. 1. A blaſphemie contrary to Scripture, which ſaith, that the rich man only was in hell, verſ. 23. and not that Lazarus was in hell.

63 They deny that Chriſt is αὐτόθεος, that is, God of himſelfe, Rhemiſt. Iohn 10. ſect. 3. Whereas the Scripture ſpeaketh plainely, that, as the father hath life in himſelfe, ſo likewiſe hath he giuen to the ſon, to haue life in himſelfe, Ioh. 5. 26. what is it to haue life in himſelfe, but to be God in himſelfe?

64 The ſufferings and paſſions of the Saints, dedicated and ſanctified in the blood of Chriſt, haue a forcible ſatisfaction for the Church, and the particular members thereof: and are the accompliſhment of the wants of Chriſts paſſion, Rhemiſt. Col. 1. ſect. 4. An horrible blaſphemie againſt the merit and ſatisfaction of Chriſts death, as though it were not ſufficient in it ſelfe to ſatisfie for al his members, but his wants muſt be ſupplied by the ſatisfaction of others, contrary to the Scripture, which ſaith: that Chriſt by himſelfe hath purged our ſinnes: therefore not by any other, but ſufficiently in his owne perſon. Heb. 1. 3.

65 Bellarmine ſaith, Non dubitantur multi eſſe fideles, qui nondum iuſtificati nec redempti ſunt: It is not to be doubted, but that there are many faithfull men, which are not yet iuſtified or redeemed: de Miſſ. lib. 2. cap. 22. reſp ad 4. obiect. yea he ſaith moſt blaſphemouſlie: Hominem cum vera fide damnari: That a man hauing a true faith, may for all that be condemned: De baptiſm. lib. 1. cap. 14. Great blaſphemies contrary to Scripture, being iuſtified by faith (ſaith S. Paul) we are at peace with God. And wee are ſaued by faith, Epheſ. 2. 10. If then faith bringeth peace of conſcience and ſaluation, how then is it poſſible that with this faith, men notwithſtanding ſhould be condemned? Rom. 5. 1. Epheſ. 2. 10.

66 That we are not formaliter, that is, formally iuſtified by the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, Bellarm. lib. 1. de baptiſ. cap. 21. reſp. ad argum. 4. yet S. Paul ſaith, that Chriſt is our wiſdome and righteouſneſſe: his righteouſneſſe, is our righteouſneſſe, what is this elſe but the very forme, ſubſtance and matter of our righteouſneſſe? 1. Cor. 1. 30.

67 And againe ſaith he, Sacrificium crucis non efficienter iuſtificat: Chriſts ſacrifice vpon the croſſe, doth not iuſtifie as an efficient cauſe, de Miſſ. lib. 2. cap. 4. Thus Chriſts death is neither formall nor efficient cauſe of our iuſtification with Papiſts. I pray you then what is it? But the Apoſtle, I am ſure ſaith otherwiſe: That Chriſt hath reconciled vs in the body of his fleſh: he then that reconcileth, ranſometh or redeemeth vs, what is he elſe but an agent, efficient, and working cauſe of our redemption and reconciliation? Coloſſ. 1. 21. 22.

68 Bellarmine alſo ſaith: Accedente Dei gratia verè poſſumus aliquo modo ex proprijs, & ad æqualitatem, ac per hoc iuſtè & ex condigno ſatisfacere: By the grace of God, wee may make ſatisfaction truly in ſome ſort, of our owne, and to a full equalitie, yea iuſtly and condignly, de pœnitent.lib.4.cap.7. A moſt horrible blaſphemie, that man may ſatisfie God by his owne proper workes, fully, according to the exact rule of iuſtice, Iob ſaith contrary; That man cannot anſwere God one thing of a thouſand. Neither is this blaſphemie much qualified, by ſaying, that wee may ſatisfie by grace: For theſe two, Gods grace, and our ſatisfactorie workes cannot ſtand together, as S.Paul ſheweth: If it be of grace, it is no more of works, for then grace were no more grace: but if it be of works, it is no more of grace, for then works were no more workes. Rom.11.6. Our ſaluation then cannot be of grace and works together, for the one excludeth the other. And I pray you to what purpoſe died Chriſt, if men receiue grace ſo fully to ſatisfie for themſelues? If righteouſneſſe bee by the law (ſaith the Apoſtle) Chriſt died without cauſe. And euen this righteouſneſſe of the Law was alſo of the grace and gift of God, for the Law is holy, iuſt and good. And euerie good gift is of God. Wherefore to ſay, that a man by working well, euen of the grace and the gift of God, is iuſtified, is to make the death of Chriſt needleſſe and in vaine. What greater blaſphemie then, can be vttered by any heretikes in the world then this?

Iob 9.3.
Galath.2.21.
Rom.7.12.
Iam.1.17.

69 Now in the laſt place commeth in wicked blaſphemous Frier Tecell, the Popes pardoner: who made his proclamations openly in the Churches to the people in this ſort, Although a man had laine with our Ladie the mother of Chriſt, and had begotten her with child, yet were he able by the Popes pow- to pardon the fault. Sleidan.lib.13.

Vnto theſe blaſphemies afore rehearſed, we may adioyne ſuch like popiſh ſtuffe, out of their Ladie Pſalter, which was compiled by no ſmall perſon among them, but euen by that Seraphicall Doctor of theirs Bonauenture, a Cardinall of Rome, who liued *Anno.*1170. and was Canonized for a Saint, by Pope Sixtus the fourth, *Anno.*1482. In this blaſphemous Pſalter, ſuch Pſalmes as the Prophet Dauid endited to the honour of God, are applied by the foreſaid Doctor to the praiſe of his Ladie. And therefore he in diuers Pſalmes in ſtead of the name of the Lord, hath put in the name of our Ladie. Some few examples it ſhall not be amiſſe to ſee.

70 Pſalm.4. Benedicta ſis domina in æternum, & maieſtas tua in ſeculum, glorificate eam omnes gentes: Bleſſed bee thou O Ladie for euer, and thy maieſtie for euer and euer, glorifie her all nations of the earth.

71 7 Domina mea in te ſperaui, de inimicis meis libera me domina: O my Ladie, in thee doe I put my truſt, deliuer me from mine enemies O Ladie.

72 11 Miſericordia illius noſtrorum auferat multitudinem peccatorum: Her mercie take from vs the multitude of our ſinnes.

73 13 Vſque quo domina obliuiſceris me, & non liberas me in die tribulationis? How long doſt thou forget me O Lady, and doſt not deliuer me in the day of trouble?

74 25 Ad te domina leuaui animam, non præualeant aduerſum me laquei mortis, ductrix mea eſto ad patriam: To thee O Lady, doe I lift vp my ſoule, let not the ſnares of death preuaile againſt me, be thou my guide vnto my heauenly countrey.

75 26 Iudica me domina: Iudge me O Ladie.

76 31 In te domina ſperaui, non confunda in æternum: in manus tuas domina commendo ſpiritum meum: In thee O Ladie doe I put my truſt, let me not be confounded for euer: into thy hands (O Ladie) I commend my ſpirit.

77 91 Qui habitat in adiutorio matris Dei, in protectione ipſius commorabitur: Who ſo dwelleth in the helpe of the mother of God, ſhall dwell in the ſhadow of her protection.

78 110 Dominus dixit domina noſtra, Sede mater mea à dextris meis: The Lord ſaid to our Ladie, Sit here my mother on my right hand.

79 119 Miſerationibus tuis plena eſt terra: The whole earth is full of thy mercies.

80 127 Niſi domina ædificauerit domum cordis noſtri, non permanebit ædificium eius: Except our Lady ſhall build the houſe of our hearts, the building thereof ſhall not continue.

81 Exulta totum genus humanum, quia talem dedit mediatricem Dominus Deus tuus: Reioyce, O all mankind, becauſe the Lord thy God hath giuen vnto thee ſuch a mediatrix.

82 O benedicta in manib. tuis repoſita eſt noſtra ſalus: O thou bleſſed, in thy hands is laid vp our ſaluatiõ.

83 In nomine tuo omne genu flectatur cœleſtium, &c. In thy name let euery knee bend, in heauen, in earth, and hell.

84 Quemadmodum infans ſine nutrice non poteſt viuere, ita nec ſine domina noſtra poſſes habere ſalutem: Like as the infant cannot liue without a nurſe, ſo neither canſt thou haue ſaluation without our Ladie.

Many ſuch like blaſphemies are contained in that idolatrous and blaſphemous pſalter: for what greater blaſphemie can there be, then to aſcribe vnto a creature the titles and honour due and proper vnto God only? As that ſhe is our mediatrix, taketh away our ſinnes, edifieth our hearts, filleth all the earth with her mercies, ſitteth at the right hand of God, that we are to truſt in her, that ſhe is to be glorified, & al things to bow the knee vnto her: How far are they now from making a God of their Lady? And thus they do moſt preſumptuouſly rob God of his honor, who wil not giue his glory to another.

85 To theſe ſo grieuous blaſphemies afore rehearſed, I wil adde alſo theſe that follow, the gloſſe vpon the decrees: decr.pag.1 diſt.19.cap.10. ſaith thus, citing the teſtimonie of Pope Adrian, concerning Leo the firſt, Cuius ſententiam, quicquid vbique catholicum eſt, velut cæleſte miraculum celebrat &

veneratur oraculum: Whoſe ſentence euery catholike man doth celebrate as an heauenly miracle, and worſhip as an oracle: what could bee ſaid more of the ſayings of S. Paul, yea of Chriſt himſelfe?

86 Diſtinct. 20. cap. 1. Leo the fourth thus decreeth: Patrum ſtatuta qui non retinere conuincitur, nec quatuor Euangelia retinere creditur: He that holdeth not the Fathers decrees, cannot holde the foure Euangeliſts, what is this elſe, but to giue equall authority to the one, as well as to the other.

87 Diſtinct. 40. cap. 6. The gloſſe reciting the words of Bonifacius commendeth thoſe, Qui religionis inſtitutionem ab ore præceſſoris eius, magis quàm à ſacris paginis expetant: Which did deſire to be inſtructed in the Chriſtian faith, rather from the mouth of his predeceſſor, that is the Pope, then from the ſacred Scripture: what greater blaſphemie could be vttered?

88 In the ſame place that ſaying of Iob, as touching God, Si deſtruxerit, nemo eſt, qui ædificet, If hee deſtroy, who can build vp, is moſt blaſphemouſly applied to the Pope.

89 Decret. part. 2. cauſ. 2. qu. 7. cap. 39. The gloſſe ſaith thus: Chriſtus in populo ſuo paſtorale officium non gerebat: Chriſt did not beare a paſtorall office among his people: which ſaying, though it bee thus qualified, that in certaine reſpects, Chriſt did not execute an office of the paſtor: yet it is not farre from blaſphemy to denie any part of the paſtorall office vnto Chriſt.

90 In their Idolatrous Maſſe, after the words of conſecration, they ſing this ſong vnto the bread: Non eſt panis, ſed Deus homo liberator meus: It is no bread, but God, and man my deliuerer: thus they ſay to a peece of bread.

91 Vega. de miſſa. theſ. 41. Oblatio in cruce facta temporaria, non eſſet Chriſti æternum ſacerdotium, ſed fuiſſet in cruce extinctum, &c. The temporarie oblation done vpon the Croſſe, had not been that euerlaſting Prieſthood, but ſhould haue been extinct in the Croſſe, if there were not another permanent ſacrifice in the Church: a great blaſphemie, that Chriſt ſhould not haue an euerlaſting prieſthood, if their Maſſe were not.

92 The ſame Vega ſaith it was no great gift, that Chriſt promiſed at his departure to his Apoſtles, that he would be with them, according to his diuinity to the end of the world.

93 Innocentius thus interpreteth the word Maſſe: Miſſa quaſi hoſtia tranſmiſſa à nobis patri, vt intercedat pro nobis ad ipſum: hæc enim ſola ſufficiens & idonea miſſio. &c. The Maſſe or miſſe is ſo called, becauſe it is a ſacrifice ſent by vs vnto the father, to make interceſſion for vs: for this is the onely fit and ſufficient ſending vnto God to appeaſe his wrath, &c. Behold, a peece of bakers bread is become the Mediator of the Papiſts: ſuch prayers, ſuch a Mediator: but if they ſay it is Chriſt himſelfe: cannot the Mediator execute his office, vnleſſe he be ſent vp by them in the forme of bread?

94 Now commeth in better ſtuffe, then any we had yet, in their bookes of ceremonies, lib. 1. ſect. 2. They aſcribe vnto their Chriſme as much as vnto the blood of Chriſt: Peccatum frangit, vt Chriſti ſanguis & angit: It breaketh and chaceth away ſinne, euen as the blood of Chriſt.

95 In their booke of conformities, they call Fráncis, Iheſum typicum, typicall Iheſus, for as Ieſus, ſay they, was the image of his father, ſo Francis is the image of Chriſt.

96 Nay they goe yet a ſtep further, not making Dominicus onely equall to Chriſt, as they did Francis, but preferring him before: For thus we may finde in the Chronicles of Antoninus Biſhop of Florence, part. 3. tit. 23. Chriſt was borne naked, but to keepe him from the cold, was laid in a cratch: but Dominicus did vſe being a child to lie naked vpon the ground: when our Lord was borne, a ſtarre appeared in the ayre: when Dominicus was baptized, a ſtarre was ſeene in his forehead: Nouum iubar præmonſtrans ſeculi, Shewing the new light of the world: Chriſt now being immortall, twice appeared to his Diſciples the dores being ſhut: Dominicus yet mortall, came into the Church being ſhut, for feare to awake his brethren: But I would hee had beene awake that thus wrote, and not in his heauie ſleepe, and Ægyptian darkeneſſe, thus to haue blaſphemed.

Great ſtore of ſuch like blaſphemies are euery where to bee found in popiſh treatiſes: my purpoſe is not to bring them all into the readers view, it were too long a peece of worke, and I thinke, needleſſe: neither doe I in this booke promiſe or profeſſe ſo much: but my intendment is onely in euery place to giue the Chriſtian Reader a taſte of the bitter and ſowre fruites of popery. By this blacke beadroll of blaſphemies heere rehearſed, it is no hard matter to gueſſe, of what ſpirit they are, from whom they proceed, and what manner of religion that is, which is fraught with ſuch ſtuffe. No man (ſaith Saint Paul) ſpeaking by the ſpirit of God, calleth Ieſus execrable. If they therefore had the ſpirit of God, as they boaſt, they would not in ſuch ſort as they doe, with ſuch vile tearmes depraue the holy Scriptures: nor ſo extenuate the precious death of Chriſt, adding other helpes and ſupplies thereunto, nor ſo defile that onely propitiatorie ſacrifice, which was once offered vpon the Croſſe, by ſoyſting another in the place thereof, namely that abominable Idoll of the Maſſe, which they moſt blaſphemouſly affirme to be the proper act of Chriſts prieſthood, yea more proper then the offering vp of himſelfe vpon the Croſſe. Doe not theſe grieuous blaſphemies now, which they vtter, rebound vpon Chriſt, and tend to his diſhonour? What then is this elſe, but to call Ieſus execrable? Goe to then ye Papiſts: I will ſay vnto you, as Auguſtine ſometime requited Iulian the Pelagian heretike: Nunc ergo, ne tui ſtomachi follis indigeſta maledictorum cruditate rumpatur, in hunc euome, ſi audes, calumnioſas tuas vanitates, contra Iulian. lib. 2. Now therefore, leſt this filthie windebagge 1.Cor.12.3.

bagge of thy ſtomack ſhould burſt with the raw and vndigeſted humour of ſuch wicked ſpeech, empty now thy ſtomacke, and vomit thy deceitfull and peruerſe vanities vpon him if thou dare, &c. If ye wil not ceaſe thus to caſt vp and bewray your blaſphemous thoughts, know ye, that ye blaſpheme not man, but yee haue opened your mouth againſt Ieſus himſelfe. And let this ſuffice for this part.

POPISH ASSERTIONS FLAT CONTRARIE to Scripture.

1 1. Cor. 7. 14. THe Rhemiſts reproue Caluine, for affirming Chriſtian mens children to bee holy from their mothers wombe. Annot. Roman. 5. ſection 8. Whereas notwithſtanding the Apoſtle himſelfe calleth them holie. Not, that they are not guilty of originall ſinne, but becauſe they are compriſed in Gods couenant, and haue right to be baptized.

2 Rom. 7. 9. 17. Nothing done by concupiſcence without the conſent of will, can make a man guiltie before God, neither can the motions of the fleſh, in a iuſt man any whit defile the operations of the ſpirit, but make them often more meritorious, Rhemiſt. Rom. 7. ſect. 9. flat oppoſite to Saint Paul. I doe not the good thing which I would, but the euill, which I would not, that doe I. Now then, it is no more I that doe it, but ſinne that dwelleth in mee. Heere Saint Paul calleth the motions or deſire of the fleſh, yea without conſent of his will, euill, and giueth it the name of ſinne. How then doth not that, which is euill and ſinfull, make vs guiltie before God, and defile the operations of the ſpirit?

3 Math. 7. 13. Chriſtians in their liues muſt ſeeke the ſtraight way, but in religion the ancient common way, Rhemiſt. Luke, 13. 3. A corrupt gloſſe contrary to Scripture, for it is the ſtraite way that leadeth to life, whether in life or religion: the broad common way leadeth to deſtruction.

4 Math. 3. 4. That Iohns baptiſme had not any ſpirituall grace, Rhemiſt. Iohn 3. ſect. 2. But the Scripture teſtifieth that it had remiſſion of ſinnes ioyned vnto it, which is a ſpirituall grace.

5 Gal. 1. 1. 16. That Saint Paul was to bee conſecrated, ordered, and admitted by men, Rhemiſt. Act. 13. ſect. 4. Saint Paul witneſſeth of himſelfe the contrary, Paul an Apoſtle, not of men, neither by men, but (immediately) by Ieſus Chriſt. And verſe 16. he ſaith, he did not immediately (being now called and appointed of Chriſt) communicate with fleſh and blood.

6 2. Cor. 5. 7. Epheſ. 2. 10. Faith, which iuſtifieth, is not the efficient, or inſtrumentall cauſe of ſaluation, Rhemiſt. Galath. 6. ſect. 4. But the contrary is proued out of Scripture, Wee walke by faith, and not by ſight. As the eye then is the inſtrument, whereby wee behold things preſent, ſo is faith the organon or inſtrument of the ſoule, whereby wee apprehend things abſent and inuiſible. That alſo is an euident place to this purpoſe, Eph. 2. 10. By grace are ye ſaued through faith, and that not of your ſelues, for it is the gift of God; and not of workes. What elſe can be the meaning of this place, but that wee are ſaued by grace, apprehended by faith? So that grace is the efficient cauſe, faith the inſtrumentall: And leſt that any man ſhould ſay, that faith ſaueth vs, as other vertues wrought in vs by grace, not by any apprehenſion of grace, but as a meritorious cauſe, as the Rhemiſts affirme: the Apoſtle addeth, that faith is the gift of God, and therefore meriteth not: and hee excludeth workes, euen workes of grace, ordained for vs to walke in, from being any cauſe of Iuſtification before God. And ſo faith alſo is excluded as it is an act or worke of the vnderſtanding onely, and hath place onely in the matter of ſaluation, in reſpect of the apprehenſiue faculty and power thereof.

7 Rom. 6. 23. Whereas the Apoſtle ſaith, the gift of God is eternall life. The Rhemiſts take vpon them to correct the Apoſtles words, ſaying thus: The ſequell of ſpeech required, that as he ſaid, Death or damnation is the ſtipend of ſinne, ſo life euerlaſting is the ſtipend of iuſtice, and ſo it is. Rhemiſt. Rom. 6. ſect. 8. What can be more contrary to the Apoſtle then this? Life euerlaſting, ſaith he, is the gift of God: Nay, ſay they, it is as properly the ſtipend of righteouſneſſe, as damnation is the ſtipend of ſinne: but the Apoſtles declination from that ſequel ſheweth the contrary.

8 Iohn. 17. 5. Chriſts paines were of no account of their owne nature compared with his glory, Rhemiſt. Rom. 8. ſect. 5. A monſtrous blaſphemie, and contrary to Scripture, for if there were no compariſon betweene Chriſts ſufferings, and the glory which he hath purchaſed for vs by them, then his ſufferings were no ſatisfaction to Gods Iuſtice: Wherefore his paſſion being the paſſion of the Sonne of God, was both a full ſatisfaction and a worthie deſart of that glory, which he hath obtained for vs: Thou art worthie to take the booke, and to open the ſeales thereof, becauſe thou was killed, Reuelat. 5. ſect. 9. Chriſt therefore in reſpect of his paſſion did fully deſerue all that glory, which hee hath obtained for vs: but there is no deſert, where there is not a proportion betweene the labour and the reward: yet we affirme not, that Chriſt merited for himſelfe, for his owne glorification was due vnto him, before the world was.

9 That our afflictions are meritorious of heauen, Rom. 8. 18. S. Paul ſaith cleane contrary, that the afflictions of this time, are not worthie of the glory which ſhall be reuealed.

10 They denie that the Iewes did receiue the truth or ſubſtance of Chriſt in their Sacraments, as wee doe in ours, or that they and we doe eate and drinke of the ſelfe ſame meat and drinke, Rhemiſt. 1. Cor. 10. ſect. 4. And yet the Apoſtle ſaith plainely, That they did eate all the ſame ſpiritual meat, & al drink the ſame ſpirituall drinke, for they dranke of the ſpirituall rocke which followed them, and the rocke was Chriſt. ibid. Doth not the Apoſtle now ſay heere, that they did drinke the ſame ſpirituall drinke with vs? for Chriſt was their ſpirituall drinke, and ſo is he ours. 1. Cor.10.3.

11 That where the Apoſtle ſaith: This is not to eate the Lords ſupper. Hee meaneth not the Sacrament which Chriſt inſtituted at ſupper, but the feaſts of loue which were vſed in the primitiue Church: Rhemiſt. ibid. 1. Cor.11.20.

And yet it is moſt manifeſt by the circumſtance of the place, that Saint Paul reproueth them for the abuſes in the Lords ſupper, and therefore putteth them in mind of the inſtitution of Chriſt, verſe 23. which hath beene a matter impertinent, if he in ſo ſaying (the Lords ſupper) had not meant the Sacrament.

12 That the force and efficacie of common prayer dependeth not vpon the peoples vnderſtanding, hearing or knowledge: and that the infant, idiote, and vnlearned man taketh no leſſe fruit of diuine office, then any other, Rhemiſt.14. ſect.10. And therefore it is not repugnant to Saint Paul to pray in Latine (that is an vnknowne) *tongue, ibidem ſect.*15. Yet in truth S. Paul flatly condemneth the vſing of an vnknowne tongue, in publike prayers, and thankeſgiuing: He, that occupieth the roome of the vnlearned, cannot ſay Amen, at thy giuing of thankes, ſeeing he knoweth not what thou ſaieſt, for thou verily giueſt thankes well, but the other is not edified: And it followeth, verſe 19. I had rather in the Church ſpeake fiue words with mine vnderſtanding, that I might inſtruct others, then ten thouſand words in a ſtrange tongue. What could haue been ſpoken more plainely againſt the vſe of an vnknowne and vnedifying tongue in the Church? 1. Cor.14.19.

13 That man hath proper freedome and motion in his thoughts and doings, and all is not to be referred vnto God, 1. Corinth.3. ſect.2. Rhemiſt. That man was neuer without free will, but it is made onely more free by grace, Rhemiſt. Iohn.8. ſect.2. That the Gentiles doe beleeue by their free will, Acts 13. 2. All this is flat oppoſite to Scripture, Which ſaith, wee are not able to thinke a good thought of our ſelues. And that God worketh in vs both the will and the deed: Philip.2.13. 2. Cor.3.5.

14 That we are not formally made iuſt by the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt imputed vnto vs, but by a iuſtice inherent and reſiant in vs, Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. 6. *can.*10. Rhemiſt. Rom. 2. *ſect.*4. yea they condemne it as hereticall to ſay, that a man hath no iuſtice of his owne (to be iuſtified by) but the iuſtice onely of Chriſt, Rhemiſt. Philip.3. ſect. 3. And yet S. Paul ſaith thus in plaine tearmes, That I might be found in him, not hauing mine owne righteouſneſſe, which is of the law, but that, which is through the faith of Chriſt, euen the righteouſneſſe, which is of God through faith, Heere the Apoſtle refuſeth his owne inherent righteouſneſſe, and cleaueth onely to the imputatiue iuſtice of Chriſt, to bee iuſtified by: yet we denie not an inherent righteouſneſſe in the faithfull, but imperfect, not a meanes of their iuſtification before God: it is the fruites therof; and no other then that which we call Sanctification. Philip.2.9.

15 They doe ſet vp idols or images to be adored, and attribute vnto them religious worſhip, contrarie to the Scripture: Children keepe your ſelues from Idols, 1. Iohn 5.4. They doe vſually anſwere, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of heatheniſh Idols, not of theirs, which are Images, not Idols. Anſwere. the Scripture indifferently vſeth both the Greeke word εἴδωλον. which is tranſlated ſimulachrum, an Idoll, and the other word εἰκὼν. Imago, an Image. So that both Idols and Images, are by the Scripture condemned. Rom.1.23.

16 The Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt hath appeared but once to put away ſinne by the ſacrifice of himſelfe, and that hee hath but offered one ſacrifice for ſinnes, 10.12. Yet they doubt not to ſay, that Chriſt is daily offered in ſacrifice, in their Maſſe: contrary to the Scripture, which ſaith, Hee need not to offer himſelfe often. Heb.9.26. c.10.12. c.9.25.

17 That all ſinnes whatſoeuer may be remitted by penance, euen apoſtaſie, and wilfull forſaking of the truth, Rhemiſt. Hebrew.10. ſect.11. And yet our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, that blaſphemie againſt the holy Ghoſt ſhall neuer be forgiuen. Matth.12.32.

18 S. Iohn ſaith, Hereby ſhall ye know the ſpirit of God: euery ſpirit, that confeſſeth that Ieſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is of God. Heere the Apoſtle giueth a generall note for all times, to diſcerne falſe doctrine by: But the Rhemiſts contrariwiſe affirme: That this marke will not ſerue for all times, nor in caſe of other falſe doctrines, but that it was then a neceſſary note, Rhemiſt. in hunc. locum. 1. Ioh.4.2.

19 That it is poſſible to keepe the law and commandements of God in this life, Rhemiſt. Rom.8. ſect. 4. But our Sauiour teacheth vs to ſay, we are vnprofitable ſeruants, when we haue done all that is commanded vs. Luk.17.10.

20 They miniſter the Sacrament onely in one kind to the people, wherein their practiſe impugneth the inſtitution of Chriſt, who gaue both bread and wine at his laſt ſupper: And Saint Paul alſo rehearſing the inſtitution, ſaith, After the ſame manner alſo he tooke the cup: Where it is to be noted, that S. Paul writeth to the whole Church of the Corinthians, both the paſtors and the people, preſcribing an vniforme order for them all in receiuing the Lords ſupper. 1. Cor.11.25.

21 That there remaineth in the Children of God, an awe & feare of God, and his iudgements with miſtruſt and feare of hell and damnation, Rhemiſt. 1. Ioh.4. ſect.6. But the Apoſtle ſaith, There is no feare in loue, but perfect loue thruſteth out feare, and maketh vs to haue confidence in the day of iudgement. Where loue is then, there remaineth no helliſh feare: where confidence is, there can bee no miſtruſt, but ſuch a feare as is ioyned with loue and hope. 1. Ioh.4.17.18.

22 Leuit.18.12.13 That it is not vnlawfull by Moſes law, for the Vncle or Auntes husband to marrie his niece, Bellar. de matrim. cap. 27. Yet it is by name prohibited, that the Nephew ſhould marrie his Aunt, the ſiſter of his father or of his mother. The like reaſon is of both.

23 1.Cor.10.4. The Scripture ſaith, that Chriſt is the rocke, and that there can bee no other foundation of the Church but Ieſus Chriſt, 1. Cor. 3. 11. yet they ſay, that Peter is the rocke, and that Chriſt founded and built his Church vpon Peter, Rhemiſt. Matth. 16. ſect. 8.

24 Mark.132. The Scripture ſaith, that of the day and houre of Chriſts comming to iudgement, no man knoweth, neither the Angels of heauen, nor the Sonne of man, as he is man. But the Papiſts are bold to aſſigne the very day of his comming, iuſt 45. daies after the death of their Antichriſt, who ſhall raigne, as they imagine, three yeeres and an halfe before the comming of Chriſt, Bellarm. de Rom. pontifice lib. 3. cap. 9. And thus preſumptuouſly they take vpon them to know more then either the Angels know, or Chriſt himſelfe as he is man.

25 Luk.17.10. The Scripture ſaith, when we haue done all that is commanded vs, wee haue done but that which was our dutie to doe. Yet Bellarmine cleane contrary, and that moſt blaſphemouſly affirmeth: Poſſumus facere plus quàm debemus, ſi conſideremus legem nobis à Deo impoſitam, & proinde poſſumus facere plus, quàm reuera facere teneamur, lib. 2. de Monachis cap. 13. Wee may, or are able to doe more then we ought, if we conſider the law impoſed vpon vs from God, and therefore wee may doe more then indeed we are bound to doe: a great blaſphemie ioyned with a notorious vntruth.

26 Rom.4.11. They denie that the Sacraments are ſeales of the promiſes of God, Bellarm. de ſacram. lib. 1. cap. 17. And yet S. Paul doubteth not to call circumciſion, which was a Sacrament of the law, the ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith.

27 Matth.26.26.27. Whereas Chriſt in the inſtitution of the Sacrament, ſaid, after the giuing of the bread, onely, Take ye, eate ye, but after he had giuen the cup, he ſaid, Drinke ye all of this. They nothing doubt to affirme, but that Chriſt ſaid as well, after the deliuering of the bread, Eate ye all of this: which they haue (ſay they) by Apoſtolike tradition: as he ſaid, after the cup deliuered, Drinke ye all of this. And contrariwiſe they alſo affirme, that Chriſt ſaid onely once, Hoc facite, doe this, and that was after he had giuen the bread: whereas S. Paul notwithſtanding rehearſing the inſtitution of Chriſt, doth twice repeate theſe words, Hoc facite, both after the bread, and after the cup, as hauing been twice vſed of Chriſt in the inſtitution, Bellarm. de ſacram. Euchariſt. lib. 4. cap. 25. And thus they will make Chriſt to ſpeake that, which the Scripture ſaith not he ſpake, onely following blind tradition: and they will deny Chriſt to haue vttered that which the Apoſtle notwithſtanding witneſſeth, was ſpoken by him. 1.Cor.11.24.25.

28 Apoc.1.6. That all Chriſtians are not prieſts alike before God, but ſome more properly prieſts then other: Rhemiſt. Apocal. 1. ſect. 5. Whereas the Scripture ſpeaketh indifferently of all the faithfull: Hee hath made vs Kings and prieſts to God his Father. For although there bee a difference of orders amongſt men, ſome are teachers, ſome to be taught; ſome paſtors, ſome ſheepe: yet this word ἱερεῖς, ſacrificers or prieſts, is indifferently giuen to all Chriſtians, and in this ſenſe, none before God are more properly prieſts, then others, but all alike, and Chriſt Ieſus an high prieſt for vs all.

29 In the idolatrous ſacrifice of the Maſſe, they affirme and practiſe many things contrary to Scripture, 1. The Scripture maketh this notable difference betweene the prieſts of the Law, and of the Goſpell, that among them there were many, becauſe they were forbidden by death to endure: but Chriſt, becauſe he dieth not, but liueth euer, hath an vnchangeable prieſthood. Heb.7.23.24. Yet the Papiſts affirme that all their maſſing prieſts are of Melchiſedeckes order: and ſo contrary to the Scriptures, they bring in a multitude of prieſts into the Goſpell, as there was in the Law.

30 Heb.10.18. 2. The Scripture ſaith, Where the remiſſion of theſe things is, there is no more offering for ſinne. But they teach, that their Maſſe is a ſacrifice propitiatorie both for the quicke and the dead: as though remiſſion of ſinnes were not already obtained by the oblation of Chriſt.

31 Heb.9.22. 3. Alſo the Scripture ſaith, Without ſhedding of blood is no remiſſion. How then can their ſacrifice giue remiſſion of ſins, as they affirme, where there is no effuſion or ſhedding of blood? for they call it the vnbloody ſacrifice, Bellarm. de miſſ. lib. 1. cap. 25.

32 1.Cor.11.17. Their doctrine and ſuperſtitious vſe of priuate Maſſes, where the Prieſt receiueth alone, the people onely gazing and looking vpon him, neither eating, nor drinking; is altogether repugnant to the vſage and doctrine of the Apoſtles, as S. Paul witneſſeth: We that are many are one bread, and one body, in as much as we are all partakers of one bread. There ought to bee therefore many at the Communion, which are made partakers of one bread.

33 1.Cor.11.34. They affirme that it is a neceſſary thing to receiue the Communion faſting; Bellarm. de miſſ. lib. 2. cap. 14. But the Apoſtle ſeeth no ſuch neceſſity in it, giuing liberty vnto thoſe that cannot endure to faſt, to eate at home before. Yet abſtinence for them that are able, is conuenient.

34 Matth.5.32. That it is lawfull for the parties married to be diſmiſſed each from other, for diuers cauſes beſide fornication, as for hereſie, for auoiding of offence, for the vow of continencie, Bellarm. de matrim. lib. 1. cap. 14. Yet our Sauiour Chriſts words are plaine to the contrary, Whoſoeuer doth put away his wife, except it be for fornication, cauſeth her to commit adultery.

35 That the coupling in marriage of a faithfull party with an infidell, is not onely illicitum, but irritum, is not onely vnlawfull to be made, but being made, is void; Bellarm. de matrim. lib. 1. cap. 23. S. Paul teacheth the contrary; The woman that hath to her husband an infidell, if he conſent to dwell with her;

her, let her not put him away. The marriage therefore of ſuch is not in reſpect of the vnbeleeuers infidelity, if there be no other cauſe, actually void. Though we grant and acknowledge alſo with S. Paul, that it is not lawfull for the faithfull to match in marriage with an infidell. 1.Cor.7.13. 2.Cor.6.14.

36 That it is not againſt the law of nature, for a man to marry his brothers wife, neither that it is ſimply prohibited in the law of Moſes, but that in ſome caſes it may be diſpenſed withall. *Caietan. & Bellar. Bellarmi. de matrim. lib.*1.*cap.*27. But Iohn Baptiſt, the beſt expounder of the law, openly reproued Herod ſaying, It is not lawfull for thee to haue thy brothers wife, Matth.14. Mark.6. It is a generall reproofe, without any exception or limitation at all.

37 That we are not iuſtified onely by faith: yea they ſay that workes are more principall then faith in the matter of iuſtification, Rhemiſt. Iam.2.ſect.7. Flat contrary to the doctrine of the Apoſtle: Therefore we hold that a man is iuſtified by faith, without the workes of the law. Workes are ſo farre from being more principall then faith, that they haue not to doe at all, in the matter of iuſtification before God. Rom.3.28.

38 That ſome ſinnes are veniall and pardonable of their owne nature, and not worthy of damnation, Rhemiſt. Rom.1.ſect.11. Whereas the Apoſtle ſaith, That the ſtipend of ſinne is death, ſpeaking generally of all ſinne, yet both great and ſmall ſinnes are not onely pardonable, but indeed cleerely remitted and pardoned by grace in Chriſt, vnto the faithfull and beleeuers which repent, and ſtudie to amend. Rom.6.23.

39 The law by Chriſt, ſay they, is Miniſtratio vitæ effecta, is made the miniſtration of life, *Andrad. lib.*5. And they call it, verbum fidei, the word of faith. *Trident. Concil. ſeſſ.*6.*cap.*7. But S. Paul calleth it a killing letter and miniſtery of condemnation. And that it ſerueth but as a ſchoolemaſter to bring vs to Chriſt. And he ſaith flatly, that the law is not of faith, Galath. 3.12. How then dare they call it the word of faith? vnleſſe they liſt to play with an æquiuocation of the word contrarie to the Apoſtles meaning. 2.Cor.3.6.9. Galath.3.24.

40 But it were too long to rehearſe all their opinions, which they maintaine contrary to Scripture: ſuch in a manner are all which they hold, wherein they diſſent from vs. Let theſe therefore ſuffice for example ſake, which we haue ſeene, and for the reſt we will take their owne confeſſion: who doe not denie, but that they hold diuers opinions, which are not grounded nor gathered out of Scripture, as Gabriel Biel confeſſeth of tranſubſtantiation: Non inuenitur in canone bibliæ expreſſum: It is not found expreſſed in the canon of the Bible, *In canon. lect.*40. Likewiſe, Silueſter Prierias, Indulgentiæ authoritate ſcripturæ non innotuêre nobis: Pardons or indulgences are not knowne vnto vs by authority of Scripture, lib. cont. Luth.

Bellarmine alſo granteth, that ſingle life is not impoſed vpon Miniſters by the word of God, there being no precept, neither in the old or new Teſtament that forbiddeth Miniſters to marrie: *De clericis lib. cap.*18. Againe in another caſe he confeſſeth, that Matrimonium inter fidelem & infidelem, non eſt iure diuino irritum: That marriage betweene a beleeuer and an infidell is not voide or fruſtrate by the law of God: and yet the Papiſts generally hold the contrary, *De matrimon. lib.*1.*cap.*23. And many other ſuch like opinions they haue, which in their iudgement are not found in Scripture, but as we thinke, and are able to proue, are contrary to Scripture: in ſo much, that it is a common ſaying of their ſchoole-diuines: Thus would I ſay, and thus would I hold being in ſchooles: but yet, (be it ſpoken heere amongſt our ſelues) It cannot be ſo proued by the holy Scriptures: Ex Paralipom. Abbat. Vrſpergenſ. Bellarmine alſo concerning the adoration of Images, ſaith, that in a Sermon before the people it is not ſafe to affirme, that Images are to be adored, Cultu latreiæ, with religious worſhip: *de ſanctor. imaginib. lib.*2.cap. 22. and yet he granteth that concerning the matter it ſelfe, it may be admitted, that images after a ſort, and improperly may haue that kinde of worſhip, *cap.*23. Is not this now an holy religion, that in corners and ſecretly whiſpereth one thing as in the eare, and publikely maintaineth and teacheth another? Papiſts teach one thing in ſchooles, an other in their pulpits.

I conclude then this place with that ſaying of Bernard, as hee ſaid of certaine ſuperſtitious orders of Monkes: An regula non concordat euangelio, vel apoſtolo? alioqui regula iam non eſt regula, quia non recta: Doth not your rule agree with the Goſpell, or the Apoſtle? then is it no rule becauſe it is not right. Apolog. Bernard. ſo may I ſay of this popiſh religion, if it agree not to the Goſpell: Non eſt religio, quia non recta, It is no religion, becauſe it is not right. But if they ſhall ſay vnto vs, that their profeſſion is agreeable to the word of God, not that which wee haue written, but to the vnwritten word, which are their traditions: I will ſhape them an anſwere againe out of Bernards words: Qui vos audit (inquit Chriſtus) me audit, ac ſi diceret, Iudicium meum inter obedientes, & contemnentes, non de mea ſecreta traditione, ſed de veſtra publica prædicatione pendebit: He that heareth you (ſaith Chriſt) heareth me; as if he ſhould haue ſaid: I will iudge betweene obedient hearers, and contemners, not by my ſecret tradition, but by your publike preaching, Epiſt.77. How is it then, that our aduerſaries doe flie from the writings and preachings of the Apoſtles, to ſecret and vncertaine traditions, which (they imagine) were giuen by Chriſt? and heere ſhall be an end alſo of this part.

HERESIES MAINTAINED AND DEFENDED by Papiſts.

OVr purpoſe is heere, as in the reſt, to cleere and diſcharge both our ſelues and our cauſe, of and from thoſe foule and falſe accuſations of hereſie, which our aduerſaries doe blaſpheme vs withall. The Rhemiſts moſt wickedly match Caluiniſts and Anabaptiſts together, 1. Tim. 1. ſect. 4. they maliciouſly call the ſects of Proteſtants the idolatry of this time, Rom. 1. ſect. 10. Whereas it is well knowne to all the world, that we worſhip no images or Idols, as they doe, yea moſt wretchedly they ſay, we paſſe all heretickes that euer were, Hebr. 13. ſect. 3. Bellarmine obiecteth 20. ſeuerall hereſies againſt vs, Lib. 4. de notis eccleſ. cap. 9.

We will then this doe: firſt examine thoſe points particularly, which they obiect for hereſie: and this being done, we will afterward requite them with as many more hereticall opinions, as they haue inuented again[illegible]s, but more iuſtly, and with a great deale more truth.

The firſt hereſie, which the Ieſuite obiecteth againſt vs, is of the Simonians, and heretikes called Eunomiani. The Simonians held opinion, that they were ſaued only by the grace of Simon their ſect-maſter, whom they made their Chriſt and Sauiour. The Eunomiani taught that no ſinnes could hurt them if they had faith: Such alſo, ſaith he, are the heretickes of this time, that would be iuſtified onely by faith. We anſwere, who ſeeth not with what impudency theſe things are obiected againſt vs? The Simonians ſaid, they were ſaued by the grace of Simon: wee by the grace of Chriſt: is it all one with Papiſts to be ſaued by Simons grace, and by the grace of Chriſt? their hereſie therefore was condemned, not becauſe they aſcribed all to grace, but in that blaſphemouſly they ſet vp Simon to be their ſauiour. The Eunomians were ſuch enemies to good worked, as Auguſtine teſtifieth, that they affirmed: Quod nihil homini obeſſet quorum libet perpetratio peccatorum: That the committing of the moſt haynous ſinnes could not hurt a man, Hereſ. 54. But God be thanked, we are not enemies to good works; for we hold them to be neceſſarie, and without them it is impoſſible to bee ſaued: for a liuely faith cannot be void of good workes: yet by them we are not iuſtified before God, neither in part, nor in whole. And if therefore they condemne vs as heretickes, becauſe we affirme iuſtification by faith only, let Auguſtine alſo goe in the number of heretickes: Noſtra fides (inquit) iuſtos ab iniuſtis non operum, ſed ipſa fidei lege diſcernit. cont. 2. epiſt. Pelagian. lib. 3. cap. 6. The righteous are diſcerned from the vnrighteous by the law of faith, not of workes. Abraham non merito ſui, tanquam ex operibus, ſed Dei gratia fide iuſtificatus eſt: Abraham was not iuſtified by any merit of his owne, as by his workes, but by the grace of God through faith, lib. 2. expoſition. in Rom. c. 20. 21. Looke alſo your owne decrees: part. 3. diſt. 4. c. 99. Gratia dei non requirit opus aliquod, ſed ſolam fidem, & omnia gratis condonat: The grace of God requireth no worke at al, but faith only, and ſo freely pardoneth al; they cannot then condemne vs as heretickes in this point, vnleſſe they refuſe this decree, as hereticall.

Proteſtants no enemies to good workes.

Florinus the heretike affirmed, that God was the authour of ſinne: this hereſie Bellarmine chargeth Caluine withall, becauſe he writeth thus, that they which contemne the word of God, Their owne wickedneſſe is the cauſe thereof: Sed in hanc prauitatem à Deo addicti ſunt: But they are adiudged, or addicted vnto this wickedneſſe by the appointment of God. Anſwere, Firſt, Auguſtine reporteth not this to haue been the hereſie of Florinus, but another, that he ſhould hold: Deum malas naturas creaſſe: That God had created things euill by nature: Hereſ. 66. 2. We affirme alſo with Caluin, that men fall into ſin not by Gods bare ſufferance or permiſſion only, but by the iuſt ſentence and iudgement of God: and ſo the Scripture ſaith, that God hardened Pharaoh his heart: Deus indurauit cor Pharaonis per iuſtum iudicium, & ipſe Pharao per liberum arbitrium: God hardened Pharaohs heart by his iuſt iudgement, and Pharaoh hardened it himſelfe by his owne free will vnto euill, de grat. & liber. arbit. cap. 23. And in another place treating of thoſe words of Dauid concerning Shemei, the Lord hath bid him curſe Dauid, He writeth thus: Non iubendo dixit, vbi obedientia laudaretur, ſed quod eius voluntatem proprio ſuo vitio malam, in hoc peccatum iudicio ſuo iuſto & occulto inclinauit: Not that God commandeth him to curſe, for then his obedience were to be commended, but becauſe God by his ſecret and iuſt iudgement, did leade his enclined will (being euill of it ſelfe) vnto this ſinne. Vnto this doctrine alſo agree your owne Canons, decr. p. 2. cauſ. 23. qu. 4. c. 22. Occulto Dei iudicio mali obdurantur flagellis: By the ſecret iudgement of God the wicked are hardened by their afflictions: whereof in the hardening of the heart God is not conſidered onely as a patient permitter, but as an agent iudge. If Caluine now be counted an hereticke for ſo ſaying, let the Scripture bee blamed, that teacheth him ſo to ſpeake: and let Auguſtine alſo take part with him; and blame alſo your owne decrees.

2. Sam. 16. 10.

God not onely a ſufferer of euill, but is to be conſidered as a iuſt iudge: and a diſpoſer of all things to his own glory.

Thirdly, he obiecteth the hereſie which is aſcribed to Origen, that Adam vtterly loſt the image of God by his fall, according to the which he was created. So Caluine affirmeth (ſaith he:) Per peccatum hominis obliteratam eſſe cœleſtem imaginem: That by the ſinne of man, the heauenly image was blotted out. Anſw. 1 Caluine ſaith not that the image of God was altogether loſt and periſhed in man, but that it was corrupted onely and depraued: as Saint Paul ſaith, Bee renewed in the ſpirit of your mindes, ſhewing that the very pureſt part of our nature was corrupted. Secondly, Auguſtine goeth further then Caluine: Natura tota fuit per liberum arbitrium vitiata: Nature was wholly corrupted by mans free will, tract. in Iohan. 87. Homo non peccauit in parte aliqua, ſed tota, qua conditus eſt, natura deliquit: Man offended not in any one part, but in his whole nature, wherein he was created, he ſinned: Vitiato ergo libero arbitrio totus homo vitiatus eſt: Free will being therfore corrupted, man wholly, or in euery part became corrupt, Hypog. lib. ſen. articul. 3. Examine alſo your owne decrees, decr. p. 2. cauſ. 33. de paeniten. diſt. 1. c. 35. the gloſſe thus teſtifieth: Sicut viuere non poteſt corpus abſente anima, ita nec viuere anima poteſt, niſi praeſente Deo: As the body cannot liue, but is dead, if the ſoule be abſent, ſo the ſoule cannot liue vnleſſe God by his grace be preſent; but the body is not halfe but altogether dead without the ſoule, ſo then is the ſoule without grace.

Man wholly fallen and corrupt in Adam.

Fourthly, Bellarmine obiecteth the hereſie of the Pepuzians, who doe permit women to be prieſts: So Luther teacheth (ſaith he) that a woman or a boy may as well abſolue in the Sacrament of penance as a Biſhop or a Prieſt. And now in England ſaith hee, a certaine woman is the Caluiniſts chiefe Biſhop: ſpeaking thus in contempt of our late gracious Soueraigne.

Anſw. 1. Luther is belied by the Ieſuite, he ſaith onely, that where a prieſt cannot be had, there a Chriſtian man or woman may ſtand in as good ſteed: but he maketh no mention of boyes, Fox pag. 1281. articul. 13. condemned by Leo the tenth. By this we may ſee what ſmall credit is to bee giuen vnto the Ieſuite, in citing and quoting the opinions or ſayings of Proteſtants. 2 Wee acknowledge no Sacrament of penance, and therefore whatſoeuer Luther thought of that Sacrament, it is no matter to vs. But the other is a foule lie, and a monſtrous ſlander vttered of our late Prince: for her Maieſty did not take vpon her any part of the paſtorall office of Biſhops or other Miniſters: Shee neither handled the Word nor Sacraments, nor exerciſed eccleſiaſticall diſcipline, nor ordained miniſters, neither did any thing elſe properly incident to the office of eccleſiaſticall perſons, neither yet doth his Maieſty now. The Church of England did giue vnto her that lawfull power that Chriſtian Princes alwaies had: as to ordaine and conſtitute eccleſiaſticall lawes, to ſee that eccleſiaſticall perſons doe faithfully execute their office and charge, and to prouide for the encreaſe and eſtabliſhment of true religion. And this all lawes both ciuill and eccleſiaſticall, imperiall and pontificall allow, as Cod. lib. 1. tit. 4. leg. 1. Gratian, Valentinian, and Theodoſius Emperours, made this conſtitution for religion: Cunctos populos, quos clementiae noſtrae regit imperium, in tali volumus religione verſari, &c. We will that all people vnder our Empire be of ſuch religion, &c. Likewiſe Leo the Emperour, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 26. decernimus, maketh a decree againſt ſuch as brought fained reliques into any publike place. Leo alſo Biſhop of Rome hath this conſtitution: Res humanae aliter tutae eſſe non poſſunt, niſi quae ad diuinam confeſſionem pertinent, & regia, & ſacerdotalis defendat authoritas: Humane matters cannot well ſtand, except both the princely and prieſtly authority maintaine whatſoeuer belongeth to faith, decr. p. 2. cauſ. 23. qu. 5. 21. And againe in another decree, Iniuria ſacramentorum Chriſti à regibus vindicanda: The iniurie offered to the Sacraments of Chriſt muſt be reuenged by kings: our late gracious Soueraigne then attempted nothing in religion as we ſee, to maintaine the truth, and to prouide againſt all wrong offered to the faith, but what is by their owne law approued.

The Princes power in matters concerning religion.

3. They might heere haue remembred themſelues, how that ſometime indeed, a woman was their chiefe Biſhop, Dame Ioan by name, that ſate 2. yeeres in the Popes chaire at Rome, though for ſhame, and yet without ſhame they denie ſo manifeſt and plaine a ſtory. 4. yea they themſelues are the heretikes, that allow women to execute the office of Miniſters: for in a caſe of neceſſity, as they call it, they hold it lawfull for lay men, and women, yea heretikes and infidels to baptize, and conſequently in Baptiſme to giue remiſſion of ſinnes: wherein they goe further then euer Luther did, who alloweth Chriſtians onely and faithfull men and women to ſupply the want and abſenſe of the Prieſt or Miniſter, not heretikes or infidels: and if Baptiſme be the ſacrament of penance, as it is in their owne law confeſſed, decr. p. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 1. c. 40. wherein the ſumme that is called penance, which in the Canon is named Baptiſme: and they allow women to baptize, then conſequently they make them Miniſters of penance, and ſo they themſelues are found to be the heretikes. The Ieſuite therefore might heere haue plucked himſelfe by the noſe, who ſo affirmeth, and not haue twitted, or caſt another in the teeth with that hereſie, which he himſelfe maintaineth: Bellarm. de baptiſ. lib. 1. cap. 7.

Eugen. 4. in Concilio Florentino.

In the fifth place he obiecteth the hereſie of Proclus, who affirmed, that concupiſcence verily was ſinne, and that ſinne did raigne in thoſe that were borne a new.

Anſw. Firſt, that ſin raigneth in the faithfull that are regenerate, we vtterly deny, being ſo taught by Saint Paul, Rom. 6. 12. [a] Secondly, that ſinne notwithſtanding remaineth in the regenerate, and that the concupiſcence or luſt of the fleſh euen in them is ſinne, we learne out of the ſame Apoſtle, who doubteth not to call luſt ſinne: I knew not ſinne, but by the law: and preſently hee ſheweth, what ſinne he ſpeaketh of, I had not knowne luſt, except the law had ſaid thou ſhalt not luſt, Rom. 7. 7. Likewiſe v. 14. 17. 20. of the ſame chapter, he giueth it the name of ſinne. So Auguſtine calleth concupiſcence, Per peccatum accidens malum, an euill brought in by ſinne: Hypognoſt. articul. 4. And againe, Aduerſus libidinem ſi certas, malum eſt: this is a ſigne that concupiſcence is euill, becauſe wee ſtriue againſt it, cont. Iulian. lib. 3. cap. 21. To affirme then, that concupiſcence is ſinne, and properly euill of it ſelfe, is by S. Pauls rule no hereſie. Heare alſo what one of your Popes confeſſeth of this matter, Innocent. 3. In omni homine libido mala eſt: Luſt or concupiſcence is euill in all, and ſo conſequently ſinne, for there can be no euill without ſinne.

Rom. 6. 12.

[a] Heere exception is taken by a certaine popiſh cauiller, becauſe Bellarmine reporteth Proclus opinion, that ſinne did liue in the regenerate, and I tranſlate it, raigne: but if by liuing we vnderſtand not reigning, but the being of ſinne, then is Bellarmine and his fauorites found to be the heretikes if they denie it: this obiection is anſwered at large. Retect. p. 160.

In the next place, hee compareth vs to the Nouatians, who denied that the Church had any power to reconcile men vnto God but only by baptiſme: Such are we, he ſaith, becauſe wee take away the Sacrament of penance.

Anſw. Firſt the Nouatians denied recouerie or forgiuenes of ſinnes to thoſe that fell after baptiſme: But we affirme no ſuch thing, holding no ſinne to be irremiſſible, but blaſphemie againſt the ſpirit, according to the Scripture: and that it is neuer too late for men, while they liue here vpō earth, to repent them of their ſinne, and returne vnto God: all this wee grant, and yet acknowledge no ſacrament of penance. Secondly, if we are therefore heretikes becauſe we refuſe the popiſh ſacraments of confirmation and penance, receiuing only two, the ſacraments of Baptiſme and the Lords Supper: let Auguſtine beare vs companie, who acknowledgeth no more, De latere Chriſti in cruce pendentis ſacramenta eccleſiæ profluxerunt: Out of Chriſts ſide hanging on the croſſe the ſacraments of the Church flowed foorth, Tract. 15 in Euang. Ioan. that is, water and blood, which ſignifie the two ſacraments, Baptiſme, and the Euchariſt. And your ſelues and not we are the Nouatians of this time: for the Nouatians refuſed to receiue thoſe which had fallen away into idolatrie or hereſie: and doth not your owne law ſay: Relapſi in hæreſim ſunt curiæ ſeculari tradendi, licet pœniteat eos, & ad fidem redeant: They which are relapſed into hereſie, muſt be deliuered ouer to the ſecular power, that is, to death, though they repent, and returne to the faith: Sext. decret. lib. 5. tit. 2. c. 4. Alexand. 4. Where haue they learned to forgiue their brother but once, that offendeth? I am ſure Chriſts rule is contrarie: If thy brother ſinne againſt thee ſeuen times in a day, and ſeuen times a day turne againe to thee, ſaying, it repenteth me, thou ſhalt forgiue him. Let indifferent men now judge, which of vs come neereſt to the Nouatian heretikes. Luke 17.4.

7 In the ſeuenth place, Bellarmine obiecteth the hereſie of the Sabellians, which affirme one perſon only to be in God, and not three: of this opinion was Michael Seruetus, ſaith he. Anſw. True it is, that this impious wretch Seruetus for this and ſuch like hereſies, was worthily put to death at Geneua. Is it not then great impudencie, for the Ieſuite to vpbraid vs with thoſe hereſies, which he himſelfe knoweth, are condemned by vs, and iudged worthie of death? So diuers amongſt them haue been detected of hereſie, yea diuers of their pope-holy fathers: Marcellinus ſacrificed to Idols: Liberius ſubſcribed to the Arrians: Honorius the ſecond was a Monothelite: Silueſter the ſecond, a Magician and Necromancer: Iohannes the 22. affirmed, that the ſoules of the dead ſee not God before the reſurrection. Theſe and diuers hereſies haue been found euen in the Popes chaire: Would they now thinke themſelues well dealt withall, if we ſhould charge their whole Church with theſe hereſies, that haue been maintained by ſome amongſt them? and yet we might doe it with better right, ſeeing their owne law ſaith, Error, cui non reſiſtitur, approbari videtur: That error, which is not reſiſted, ſeemeth to be approued: Extrauag. Ioan. 22. tit. 5. c. 3. but ſuch errors as their Popes did hold, who are without checke and controulement, were not reſiſted, or gainſaid amongſt them, therefore approued.

Proteſtants put heretikes to death, therfore are free themſelues from thoſe hereſies.

8 Eightly, the Ieſuite chargeth vs, with the damnable hereſies of the Manichees. Firſt, they did not aſcribe the beginning or cauſe of ſinne vnto free will, but vnto the prince or god of darkneſſe: But we, ſaith this vncharitable man, are worſe then the Manichees, for we make God the author of ſinne. Anſw. Here this malicious man doth ſhamefully bely vs: for which of vs euer ſaid that God is the author of ſinne? or who euer denied, that mans free will was the cauſe of ſinne? A free will we confeſſe in man to doe euill, without conſtraint or enforcing, but not free at all, to make choice of good, as Auguſtine confeſſeth: Liberum arbitrium non eſt idoneum, quæ ad Deum pertinent ſine Deo aut inchoare aut peragere, cont. Pelag. Hypognoſt. articul. 3. Mans free will is not fit in diuine matters to begin or finiſh any thing without God, &c. Secondly, ſaith the Ieſuite, the Manichees did accuſe the Fathers and Patriarkes of the old Teſtament: ſo ſaith he, doth Caluine and the reſt. Anſ. The Manichees did not only condemne the the Patriarkes, but reiected alſo the old Teſtament: But wee both receiue the law and the Prophets, as the oracles of God: neither doe we condemne thoſe holy perſons, as wicked men, though we excuſe not all their infirmities: but ſay with Auguſtine: Sicut ergo regis Dauid legimus peccata, ſed legimus etiam recte facta: cont. Fauſt. lib. 22. c. 66. As we reade of Dauids ſins, ſo we alſo reade of his well doing. And againe, Nos ſcripturas ſanctas, non hominum peccata defendimus: We maintaine and defend the holy Scriptures, and not the ſins of men, cont. Fauſt. lib. 22. c. 45. And we ſay no more as touching the polygamie of the fathers, in which point chiefly they take exception againſt vs, then is in their own canons allowed, decr. p. 2. cauſ. 31 qu. 1. c. 10. where we find theſe words: Primus Lamech ſanguinarius & homicida vnam carnem in duas diuiſit vxores, fratricidiũ & digamiam eadem cataclyſmi deleuit pœna: That bloody homicide Lamech, was the firſt that of one fleſh made two wiues, but the flood came as a iuſt puniſhment for their fratricide and digamie: by which ſentence the hauing of two or more wiues yea before the law is flatly condemned. We anſwer them further, as Auguſtine doth the Manichees: Be it, ſaith he, that the Patriarks and Prophets were ſuch euill men as the Manichees ſlander them to be: Etiam ſic non dico electis eorum, ſed ipſo etiam Deo illorũ demonſtrarentur meliores: Yet in that caſe being, we can eaſily ſhew, that they are much better, not only then their chiefe Doctors and ringleaders, whom they call elect, but then their God, whom they imagine to be polluted and defiled, with mixing himſelfe with the kingdome of darkneſſe, &c. Ibid. cap. 9.8. So we ſay to our aduerſaries: that if we ſhould yeeld, that the Patriarkes had greater infirmities, then indeede they had, yet confeſſing that their ſoules after death were preſently receiued vp to heauen, wee ſhould more honour them, then the Papiſts, who, howſoeuer they magnifie their holy and vertuous liues, yet allow them no place in heauen till the comming of Chriſt, but thruſt them downe into a place of darknes, which they affirme to be a part and member of hell. Wherein they doe offer the vileſt diſgrace to thoſe holy men that can be.

Polygamie an infirmitie in the fathers.

Ninthly, Bellarmine accuſeth vs of Donatiſme: The Donatiſts denied, that the Church conſiſteth of good and bad, and ſo (ſaith hee) doe we. Anſw. Wee confeſſe that the viſible Church vpon earth hath not only good, but bad therein: and therefore is compared to a houſe, wherein are veſſels of all ſorts: to a barne floore, which hath both chaffe and corne: to a net that containeth both good and bad fiſh. But the holy inuiſible Catholike Church conſiſteth only of the elect, and ſuch as ſhall be ſaued, for which Church Chriſt gaue himſelfe, to ſanctifie it, and make it vnto himſelfe, a glorious Church, That it ſhould be holy and without blame, as S. Paul ſaith. And Auguſtine being taught by the Apoſtle, ſaith: Illa Columba, vnica, pudica, caſta, ſine macula & ruga non intelligitur niſi in bonis, iuſtis, ſanctis: That Doue, which is but one, chaſte, vndefiled, vnſpotted, without wrinkle, is not vnderſtood but of the good, righteous, holy, De baptiſm. lib.6. cap.3. Bernard alſo ſaith: Sponſa eſt eccleſia electorum, congregatio iuſtorum: The ſpouſe is the Church of the elect, and the congregation of the iuſt. Yet neither Auguſtine, nor Bernard were for ſo ſaying counted Donatiſts. And if this be Donatiſme, why doe they not charge their owne law with it? decret. p.3. diſtinct.2. c.63. which ſaith thus: Hunc cibum, & potum ſocietatem intelligi vult corporis & membrorum ſuorum, quod eſt eccleſia in prædeſtinatis: This meate and drinke is vnderſtood to bee the ſocietie of his body and members, which is the Church conſiſting of thoſe that are predeſtinate. Let them goe now, and ſay, it is Donatiſme to affirme that the Church conſiſteth only of the elect. 9

The inuiſible Church conſiſteth only of the elect the viſible of good and bad.
Ephe.5.25,27.
Cantic.6.8.

10 Bellarmine laieth Arrianiſme to our charge, becauſe they in no wiſe receiued vnwritten traditions. Anſ. If this be a point of Arrianiſme, then Auguſtine was an Arrian, who writeth thus of a certaine booke that treated of S. Thomas: Cui ſcripturæ licet non credere, non eſt enim in catholico canone: Which booke, it is lawfull for vs not to beleeue, becauſe it is not in the catholike Canon of the ſcripture, &c. Therefore wee are not bound to beleeue more, then is contained in ſcripture, and ſo conſequently no vnwritten, and vncertaine traditions. Let them heare alſo what Leo ſaith: In hanc inſipientiam cadunt, qui non ad propheticas voces, non ad apoſtolicas literas, ſed ſeipſos recurrunt: No maruell if they fall into follie which haue not recourſe to the voyce of the Prophets, and the writings of the Apoſtles, but to themſelues, &c. 10

De ſermon. Dom. in monte lib.1.c.38.
Decr. part.2. cauſ.24. qu.3. cap.39.

Our kinde countrimen of Rhemes, doe charge vs with a deeper point of Arrianiſme, becauſe we affirme that Chriſt was our prieſt and mediatour both as God and man: for this were, ſay they, to make Chriſt his fathers prieſt, and not his ſonne, and ſo inferiour vnto him, Heb.5. ſect.4.

Anſ. In the office of the prieſthood of Chriſt, two things muſt be conſidered, a miniſterie and authoritie: the miniſteriall part of his prieſthood, as his obedience, his ſufferings and ſacrifice, Chriſt executed as he was man: but the authoritie of reconciling vs to God, hee wrought both as God and man: So Saint Paul ſaith, that Chriſt through his eternall ſpirit offered himſelfe. Therefore not as man only. And Auguſtine: Diuina humanitas, & humana diuinitas mediatrix: The diuine humanitie, and humane diuinitie is our mediatrix: Homil. de omib. cap.12. Bernard alſo, though a writer in a corrupt time, might eaſily haue reſolued them in this point: Sicut mediator noſter duas naturas humanitatem ſcilicet & diuinitatem coniunxit in vna perſona, ita ſingula eius opera, ad hanc ſiue illam neceſſe eſt pertinere naturam: quicquid ergo miſeriæ paſſus eſt, ex homine contraxit, quicquid potenter operatus eſt, à patre habuit: As our mediatour hath ioyned two natures, the humanitie and diuinitie in one perſon, ſo all his workes muſt neceſſarily be referred to either one of them: whatſoeuer he ſuffered in weaknes he tooke of his manhood, whatſoeuer he wrought in power, he receiued of his father, Serm. de verb. ſapient. And we ſay no otherwiſe herein, then Innocentius their Pope, whoſe ſentence I thinke they will not refuſe: Ipſe rogat ſe, ipſe ſeipſum exaudit, ipſe ſeruus rogat ſe dominum, ipſe deus exaudit ſe hominem: Chriſt himſelfe prayeth to himſelfe, he heareth himſelfe: he as a ſeruant doth pray to himſelfe as Lord: himſelfe as God heareth himſelfe as man, &c. Wee ſee then euen by their owne teſtimonie, that both the natures of Chriſt doe concurre in the office and execution of his mediatorſhip.

Heb.9.14.
Chriſt a Mediatour both as God & man.

11 Bellarmine thruſteth vpon vs as an hereſie, that opinion of Aerius, that no prayer or oblation is to be made for the dead, which was, ſaith he, in time paſt in the ancient Church condemned for an hereſie.

Anſ. We denie not, but that diuers of the ancient writers did incline too much this way, to maintaine and commend prayer for the dead: yea, and Auguſtine ſeemeth ſomewhat to bee infected with this error, though ſometime his ſpeech ſoundeth to the contrarie, as where he ſaith, Pompa funeris, agmina exequiarum, viuorum ſunt qualiacunque ſolatia, non adiutoria mortuorum —: impleant ergò homines iſta erga ſuos poſtremi muneris officia: The pompe of funerals, the rites and ſolemnities of buriall, are comforts of the liuing, no helpe to the dead: — let men therefore performe this laſt dutie to their friends, De verb. Apoſt. ſer.34. [a] But prayer and ſupplication pertaineth to the rite of buriall: Ergo, it auaileth not the dead. And if the honeſt buriall of our friends be the laſt dutie wee owe vnto them, the dutie of praying for thẽ afterward is cut off. But whatſoeuer ſome ancient writers thought of this point, we doe rather credit the Apoſtles words, who ſaith, That euery man ſhall receiue according to the things done in his body, 2.Cor.5.10. Therefore it is in vaine to pray for the dead, ſeeing they they cannot vndoe that which was done in their fleſh, or doe what was left vndone. If Aerius then held no worſe opinion then this, wee ſee no cauſe why they ſhould condemne him for an heretike. They may as well charge their owne Canons with hereſie: for thus Innocentius 3. writeth: Iniuriam facit martyri, qui orat pro martyre: He offereth wrong to a martyr that prayeth for a martyr: and ſo for other ſaints that are in ioy and bliſſe, they hold it as vaine to pray; then whereas they are vncertaine of the ſtate of the dead, who are Saints, who are not, their prayers muſt needs be in vaine for all. And hereof grew a great error amongſt themſelues, that they vſed in their Maſſe ſacrifice to pray for the ſoule of Leo, ſaying thus: Annue nobis Domine, vt anima famuli tui Leonis hac proſit oblatio: Grant Lord that this oblation may profit the ſoule of thy ſeruant Leo: But now they haue corrected it thus, Vt interceſſione B. Leonis hac nobis proſit oblatio: That by the interceſſion of Leo this oblation may profit vs.

Decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 41. c. 6. Innocent. 3.

12 12 Now follow the hereſies of Iouinian, which the Ieſuite with open mouth caſteth vpon vs.

The firſt of Iouinians hereſies was this: Hee affirmed, that a man once endued with faith, can no more ſinne: And ſo Caluine (ſaith he) affirmeth, that faith once had cannot be loſt.

Anſw. Firſt, who ſeeth not the Ieſuits bad dealing: as though it were all one to ſay, The faithfull cannot ſinne, (which Iouinian affirmed, but we inſtantly denie) and to hold, that the faithfull cannot loſe their faith.

Secondly, that true faith, whereby wee are iuſtified, once graft in a faithfull mans heart, cannot be loſt, and vtterly extinguiſhed, though it may ſometime be hid, and lie as it were aſleepe: We learne out of the Scripture, [a] The gifts and calling of God are without repentance, Rom. 11. 29. Whom Chriſt loueth, he loueth to the end, Ioh. 13. 1. Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Horum fides, qua per dilectionem operatur, profectò, aut omninò non deficit, aut ſiqui ſunt, quorum deficit, reparatur, antequam vita iſta finiatur: Their faith, which worketh by loue, either faileth not at all, or if it doe, it is repaired before their life be ended: de correption. & grat. cap. 7. Bernard alſo ſaith, Iuſtus quis eſt? niſi qui amanti ſe Deo, vicem rependit amoris; quod non fit, niſi reuelante ſpiritu per fidem homini aternum Dei propoſitum ſuper ſua ſalute futura: Who is a iuſt man? but he, who ſeeing God to loue him, loueth againe; which cannot be, but by the ſpirit reuealing by faith vnto a man the eternall purpoſe of God concerning his ſaluation to come, epiſt. 108. By faith then a man commeth to know his election: but his election cannot change, therefore neither can that faith in him bee loſt, by meane whereof hee knoweth his election.

[a] Againſt this place exception alſo is taken that it proueth, that not only faith, but no other gift can be loſt. Anſ. Whereas it is euident that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh only of ſuch gifts as accompanie election, whereof hee made immediate mention in the former verſe, which gifts indeede cannot be loſt. See our further anſwere Retect. p. 134.

2 This accuſation of hereſie which they charge vs with, lighteth alſo vpon Gregory, who thus writeth: decr. part. 2. cauſ. 33. diſt. 2. de pœniten. cap. 44. Qui ſeduci, quandoque non reuerſuri, poſſunt, quaſi habitam ſanctitatem ante oculos hominum videntur amittere, ſed eam ante oculos Dei nunquam habuerunt: They which fall away, and neuer returne, ſeeme to loſe a certaine holineſſe which they had before men, but they neuer had any before God: doth he not inſinuate that true holineſſe before God cannot be loſt?

The ſecond hereſie of Iouinian was, that he affirmed faſting not to be meritorious. Anſ. A monſtrous hereſie ſure: let Auguſtine then the heretike ſpeake: Dona ſua coronat Deus, non merita tua: God crowneth his owne gifts, and not thy merits: de grat. & liber. arbitr. c. 6. And againe, Itaq; vita bona Dei gratia eſt, & vita aterna, qua vita bona redditur, dei gratia eſt. A good life is the gift of God, and life eternall the reward of a good life, is the gift alſo of God, Ibid. cap. 8. If life eternal then be a gift of fauour, it is not of debt, Rom. 4. 4. Where then is there any place for merit? 3. Let them conſider alſo what Gregorie writeth vpon theſe words, Geneſ. 4. 4. and God had reſpect to Abel and to his offrings: Dicturus, quia dominus reſpexit ad munera, pramiſit ſollicitè, quia reſpexit ad Abel: ex qua re patenter oſtenditur, quia non offerens à munerib. ſed munera ab offerente placuerunt: Moſes purpoſing to ſay, that God had reſpect to his offerings, he firſt ſetteth downe, that God had reſpect to Abel: by the which it is euident, that the offerer is not accepted for his gifts, but the gifts for the offerers ſake, &c. Marke then that by your owne decrees a man is not accepted before God for his workes.

Decret. p. 2. cauſ. 3. qu. 7. c. 5

The third hereſie of Iouinian, that he ſhould make the married ſtate equall with virginitie, which he chargeth vs withall. Anſ. True and vndefiled virginitie wee preferre alwaies as the more noble and excellent gift in them to whom it is giuen. But wee doubt not to ſay, that marriage is better in thoſe that cannot containe. And generally, wee dare preferre the honeſt marriage of Chriſtians, before the proud and fained virginitie of many Monaſticall votaries: As Auguſtine ſaith, Melius eſt humile coniugium, quàm ſuperba virginitas: Lowly and humble mariage is better then proud and hautie virginitie, in Pſal. 99. 4. Heare alſo what your owne decrees ſay of this matter: decr. part. 2. cauſ. 32. qu. 4. c. 6. Quis ignorat ſub altera diſpenſatione Dei, omnes retrò ſanctos eiuſdem fuiſſe meriti, cuius nunc ſunt Chriſtiani: quomodo Abraham anteplacuit in coniugio, ſic nunc virgines placent in perpetua caſtitate: Who knoweth not, that vnder the law all the Saints before vs were of as good merit, as Chriſtians are now: for Abraham pleaſed God as well in mariage, as virgins now in their ſingle life, &c. Here in your owne law virginitie and mariage are matched in equalitie together.

Virginitie not ſimply preferred before mariage.

The fourth hereſie of Iouinian was, that Mary in the birth of Chriſt loſt her virginitie: of this hereſie the Ieſuit accuſeth Bucer, becauſe hee ſaith, that Chriſt did open in the birth the wombe of his mother. Anſ. Firſt, the Ieſuite here playeth falſe play: for it is not all one, to ſay, Mary loſt her virginitie, and that holy babe opened her wombe: the one Bucer affirmeth, the other he neuer thought.

Secondly, is this (I pray you) ſuch an hereticall point in popiſh diuinitie, that Chriſt opened his mothers wombe? whereas they are the flat words of the Euangeliſt, where hee ſheweth, how Ieſus was brought to Ieruſalem to be preſented vnto the Lord, as it is written in the law of the Lord, Euery man child that firſt openeth the wombe, ſhall be called holy vnto the Lord. But how could this accordingly be verified of Chriſt, if he had not opened the wombe? Hierome alſo writeth, Solus Chriſtus clauſus portas vuluæ virginalis aperuit, Chriſt only opened the cloſed paſſages of the virgins wombe: And Auguſtine ſeemeth ſo to ſay, ſpeaking in the perſon of Chriſt, Ego viam meo itineri præparaui: and againe, Tranſitu meo illius non eſt corrupta virginitas: I prepared or made a way for my paſſage, and by my paſſing thorough, her virginitie was not corrupted, de 5. hereſibus, cap.5. There was therefore a way made and prepared, and as it were laid open for Chriſt to paſſe thorough, which was no more an hindrance or loſſe to Maries virginitie, then that ſhe went with childe, and bare Chriſt in her wombe, till her moneths were expired. Doe not alſo your Canons amongſt other heretikes condemne the Valentinians for ſaying, Chriſtum per Virginem tanquam per fiſtulam tranſiſſe, That Chriſt paſſed thorough the Virgin, as thorough a conduit, decret. part.2. cauſ.24. qu.3. c.39. How farre now are our aduerſaries from this hereſie, who affirme that Chriſt opened not his mothers wombe, neither paſſed the ordinarie way of birth, but imagine a new kinde of piercing or paſſing thorough with the Valentinians: and thus much for Iouinians hereſies.

13 Bellarmine chargeth vs with foure hereſies of Vigilantius, as he termeth them: but neither Vigilantius was an heretike, nor his opinions hereſies, nor yet condemned of the fathers. Hierome in deede was much offended with him, betweene whom there was great contention: but Auguſtine doth not count him among the number of heretikes.

1 The firſt paradox, or ſingular opinion of Vigilantius was, that the reliques of Saints were not to be reuerenced or worſhipped. Anſ. If this be hereſie, Auguſtine alſo was an heretike: Nec tamen nos martyrib. (ſaith he) templa, ſacerdotia, ſacra aut ſacrificia conſtituimus: quoniam non ipſi, ſed Deus eorum, Deus nobis eſt, honoramus ſanè memorias eorum, tanquam ſanctorum hominum: Neither doe wee ſet vp temples, prieſts, or erect ſacrifices to Martyrs, becauſe, not they, but their God, is alſo our God: we doe honour the remembrance of them, as of holy men, De ciuit. dei, lib.8.27. Charge alſo in this behalfe your own Canons with hereſie: decr. part.2. cauſ.1. qu.1. c.65. Si ita martyrũ fecerimus, vt noſtras velimus reliquias ab hominibus honorari, huic operi non tam præmium, quàm pœna debetur: If we deſire martyrdome that our reliques may be honoured of men, this worke deſerueth no reward, but puniſhment, &c. but if the adoration of reliques, as they pretend, tend to Gods honour, it ſhould be no fault at all to deſire that, whereby God ſhould be more honoured.

2 The ſecond opinion of Vigilantius obiected againſt vs, is, that Saints are not to be inuocated, or called vpon in prayer. Anſw. This hereſie is confirmed by the Scripture: Call vpon me in the day of trouble (ſaith the Lord) Pſal.50.15. God only and no other is to be called vpon. Let Auguſtine alſo go for an heretike if this be hereſie: Vni Deo, & martyrũ & noſtro ſacrificium immolamus, ad quod ſacrificium ſicut homines Dei, qui mundum in eius confeſſione vicerunt ſuo loco & ordine nominantur, non tamen à ſacerdote inuocantur: Wee doe immolate or offer ſacrifice vnto one only God, both of the Martyrs and ours, in the which ſacrifice, they as holy men of God, that by their faithfull confeſſion ouercame the world, are named in their place and order; but they are not by the Prieſt or Miniſter *prayed vnto, De ciuit. dei, lib.22. cap.20. And what ſacrifice Auguſtine meaneth, he ſheweth elſewhere, writing thus: Si pro ſuis peccatis humilitatis, & miſerationis & orationis ſacrificium verè immolare non negligunt Deo ſuo, tales imperatores Chriſtianos dicimus felices: If they doe not neglect truly to immolate or offer vnto their God the ſacrifice of humilitie, ſorrow, and prayer, ſuch Chriſtian Emperours wee count happie, de ciuit. dei, lib.5.24. Prayer then is the proper ſacrifice of Chriſtians, wherein it is not lawfull (as he ſaith) to call vpon Martyrs.

*Here our popiſh obiecter ſaith, that Auguſtine meaneth ſuch inuocation, as is due onely to God. Anſ. But the ſcripture acknowledgeth only one kinde of inuocation: how can they call on him, vpon whom they haue not beleeued? Rom.10.14. but God only is to be beleeued vpõ, therefore only to be inuocated, &c. See our further anſwere Retect.p.174.

This hereſie alſo Gregorie the 10. one of their Popes, ſeemeth to haue been of, that it was not lawfull to call vpon the name of Saints in the Church, but vpon the name of Chriſt only: Sit ad eccleſias humilis & deuotus ingreſſus—& conuenientes ibidem nomen illud, quod eſt ſuper omne nomen, à quo aliud ſub cœlo non eſt datum hominibus—nomen Iheſu Chriſti,—exhibitione ſpecialis reuerentiæ attollant: Let them cõme humbly and deuoutly to the Church, and being there aſſembled, let them with ſpeciall reuerence extoll the name of Iheſus,—then the which there is no other name giuen to be ſaued by, &c. This their holy father onely remembreth the name of Iheſus to be inuocated in the congregation.

Sext.decret. lib.3.tit.23. cap.2.

3 Vigilantius third hereſie was, ſaith the Ieſuit, that it was lawfull for eccleſiaſtical perſons to marrie, and to haue wiues. Anſw. A ſore hereſie, whereas the Ieſuite confeſſeth elſewhere, that there is no precept to be found, either in the old or new Teſtament, that forbiddeth the mariage of Miniſters: De clericis, lib. cap.18. How then call they that hereſie, which is not contrarie to the word of God, nor condemned by the ſame? Auguſtine alſo holdeth this perilous hereſie, quaeſt.127. ex vtroq́; mixtim, or who ſo was the author of thoſe queſtions; Sanctus Petrus vxorem habuiſſe cognoſcitur, vt primatum acciperet inter Apoſtolos, non ei obſtitit generatio filiorum: Hinc Apoſtolus eum, qui vxorem habeat, ſi in cæteris ſeruet mandata, ſacerdotem fieri debere & poſſe oſtendit: Saint Peter is knowne to haue had a wife, and the begetting of children was no hindrance to his primacie among the Apoſtles, they cannot vndoe that which was done in their fleſh, or doe what was left vndone. If Aerius then held no worſe opinion then this, wee ſee no cauſe why they ſhould condemne him for an heretike. They may as well charge their owne Canons with hereſie: for thus Innocentius 3. writeth: Iniuriam facit martyri, qui orat pro martyre: He offereth wrong to a martyr that prayeth for a martyr: and ſo for other ſaints that are in ioy and bliſſe, they hold it as vaine to pray; then whereas they are vncertaine of the ſtate of the dead, who are Saints, who are not, their prayers muſt needs be in vaine for all. And hereof grew a great error amongſt themſelues, that they vſed in their Maſſe ſacrifice to pray for the ſoule of Leo, ſaying thus: Annue nobis Domine, vt animæ famuli tui Leonis hæc proſit oblatio: Grant Lord that this oblation may profit the ſoule of thy ſeruant Leo: But now they haue corrected it thus, Vt interceſſione B. Leonis hæc nobis proſit oblatio: That by the interceſſion of Leo this oblation may profit vs.

Decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 41. c. 6. Innocent. 3.

12 Now follow the hereſies of Iouinian, which the Ieſuite with open mouth caſteth vpon vs. The firſt of Iouinians hereſies was this: Hee affirmed, that a man once endued with faith, can no more ſinne: And ſo Caluine (ſaith he) affirmeth, that faith once had cannot be loſt.

Anſw. Firſt, who ſeeth not the Ieſuits bad dealing: as though it were all one to ſay, The faithfull cannot ſinne, (which Iouinian affirmed, but we inſtantly denie) and to hold, that the faithfull cannot loſe their faith.

Secondly, that true faith, whereby wee are iuſtified, once graft in a faithfull mans heart, cannot be loſt, and vtterly extinguiſhed, though it may ſometime be hid, and lie as it were aſleepe: We learne out of the Scripture, [a] The gifts and calling of God are without repentance, Rom. 11. 29. Whom Chriſt loueth, he loueth to the end, Ioh. 13. 1. Auguſtine alſo ſaith: Horum fides, quæ per dilectionem operatur, profectò, aut omninò non deficit, aut ſiqui ſunt, quorum deficit, reparatur, antequam vita iſta finiatur: Their faith, which worketh by loue, either faileth not at all, or if it doe, it is repaired before their life be ended: de correption. & grat. cap. 7. Bernard alſo ſaith, Iuſtus quis eſt? niſi qui amanti ſe Deo, vicem repondit amoris; quod non ſit, niſi reuelante ſpiritu per fidem homini æternum Dei propoſitum ſuper ſua ſalute futura: Who is a iuſt man? but he, who ſeeing God to loue him, loueth againe; which cannot be, but by the ſpirit reuealing by faith vnto a man the eternall purpoſe of God concerning his ſaluation to come, epiſt. 108. By faith then a man commeth to know his election: but his election cannot change, therefore neither can that faith in him bee loſt, by meane whereof hee knoweth his election.

[a] Againſt this place exception alſo is taken that it proueth, that not only faith, but no other gift can be loſt. Anſ. Whereas it is euident that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh only of ſuch gifts as accompanie election, whereof hee made immediate mention in the former verſe, which gifts indeede cannot be loſt. See our further anſwere Retect. p. 134.

2 This accuſation of hereſie which they charge vs with, lighteth alſo vpon Gregory, who thus writeth: decr. part. 2. cauſ. 33. diſt. 2. de pœniten. cap. 44. Qui ſeduci, quandoque non reuerſuri, poſſunt, quaſi habitam ſanctitatem ante oculos hominum videntur amittere, ſed eam ante oculos Dei nunquam habuerunt: They which fall away, and neuer returne, ſeeme to loſe a certaine holineſſe which they had before men, but they neuer had any before God: doth he not inſinuate that true holineſſe before God cannot be loſt?

The ſecond hereſie of Iouinian was, that he affirmed faſting not to be meritorious. Anſ. A monſtrous hereſie ſure: let Auguſtine then the heretike ſpeake: Dona ſua coronat Deus, non merita tua: God crowneth his owne gifts, and not thy merits: de grat. & liber. arbitr. c. 6. And againe, Itaq; vita bona Dei gratia eſt, & vita æterna, quæ vitæ bonæ redditur, dei gratia eſt. A good life is the gift of God, and life eternall the reward of a good life, is the gift alſo of God, Ibid. cap. 8. If life eternal then be a gift of fauour, it is not of debt, Rom. 4. 4. Where then is there any place for merit? 3. Let them conſider alſo what Gregorie writeth vpon theſe words, Geneſ. 4. 4. and God had reſpect to Abel and to his offrings: Dicturus, quia dominus reſpexit ad munera, præmiſit ſollicitè, quia reſpexit ad Abel: ex qua re patenter oſtenditur, quia non offerens à munerib. ſed munera ab offerente placuerunt: Moſes purpoſing to ſay, that God had reſpect to his offerings, he firſt ſetteth downe, that God had reſpect to Abel: by the which it is euident, that the offerer is not accepted for his gifts, but the gifts for the offerers ſake, &c. Marke then that by your owne decrees a man is not accepted before God for his workes.

Decret. p. 2. cauſ. 3. qu. 7. c. 5.

The third hereſie of Iouinian, that he ſhould make the married ſtate equall with virginitie, which he chargeth vs withall. Anſ. True and vndefiled virginitie wee preferre alwaies as the more noble and excellent gift in them to whom it is giuen. But wee doubt not to ſay, that marriage is better in thoſe that cannot containe. And generally, wee dare preferre the honeſt marriage of Chriſtians, before the proud and fained virginitie of many Monaſticall votaries: As Auguſtine ſaith, Melius eſt humile coniugium, quàm ſuperba virginitas: Lowly and humble mariage is better then proud and hautie virginitie, in Pſal. 99. 4. Heare alſo what your owne decrees ſay of this matter: decr. part. 2. cauſ. 32. qu. 4. c. 6. Quis ignorat ſub altera diſpenſatione Dei, omnes retrò ſanctos eiuſdem fuiſſe meriti, cuius nunc ſunt Chriſtiani: quomodo Abraham anteplacuit in coniugio, ſic nunc virgines placent in perpetua caſtitate: Who knoweth not, that vnder the law all the Saints before vs were of as good merit, as Chriſtians are now: for Abraham pleaſed God as well in mariage, as virgins now in their ſingle life, &c. Here in your owne law virginitie and mariage are matched in equalitie together.

Virginitie not ſimply preferred before mariage.

The fourth hereſie of Iouinian was, that Mary in the birth of Chriſt loſt her virginitie: of this hereſie the Ieſuit accuſeth Bucer, becauſe hee ſaith, that Chriſt did open in the birth the wombe of his mother. Anſ. Firſt, the Ieſuite here playeth falſe play: for it is not all one, to ſay, Mary loſt her virginitie, and that holy babe opened her wombe: the one Bucer affirmeth, the other he neuer thought.

Secondly, is this (I pray you) ſuch an hereticall point in popiſh diuinitie, that Chriſt opened his mothers wombe? whereas they are the flat words of the Euangeliſt, where hee ſheweth, how Ieſus was brought to Ieruſalem to be preſented vnto the Lord, as it is written in the law of the Lord, Euery man child that firſt openeth the wombe, ſhall be called holy vnto the Lord: But how could this accordingly be verified of Chriſt, if he had not opened the wombe? Hierome alſo writeth, Solus Chriſtus clauſus portas vuluæ virginalis aperuit, Chriſt only opened the cloſed paſſages of the virgins wombe: And Auguſtine ſeemeth ſo to ſay, ſpeaking in the perſon of Chriſt, Ego viam meo itineri preparaui: and againe, Tranſitu meo illius non eſt corrupta virginitas: I prepared or made a way for my paſſage, and by my paſſing thorough, her virginitie was not corrupted, de 5. hereſibus, cap.5. There was therefore a way made and prepared, and as it were laid open for Chriſt to paſſe thorough, which was no more an hindrance or loſſe to Maries virginitie, then that ſhe went with childe, and bare Chriſt in her wombe, till her moneths were expired. Doe not alſo your Canons amongſt other heretikes condemne the Valentinians for ſaying, Chriſtum per Virginem tanquam per fiſtulam tranſiſſe, That Chriſt paſſed thorough the Virgin, as thorough a conduit, decret. part.2. cauſ.24. qu.3. c.39. How farre now are our aduerſaries from this hereſie, who affirme that Chriſt opened not his mothers wombe, neither paſſed the ordinarie way of birth, but imagine a new kinde of piercing or paſſing thorough with the Valentinians: and thus much for Iouinians hereſies.

13 Bellarmine chargeth vs with foure hereſies of Vigilantius, as he termeth them: but neither Vigilantius was an heretike, nor his opinions hereſies, nor yet condemned of the fathers. Hierome in deede was much offended with him, betweene whom there was great contention: but Auguſtine doth not count him among the number of heretikes.

1 The firſt paradox, or ſingular opinion of Vigilantius was, that the reliques of Saints were not to be reuerenced or worſhipped. Anſ. If this be hereſie, Auguſtine alſo was an heretike: Nec tamen nos martyrib. (ſaith he) templa, ſacerdotia, ſacra aut ſacrificia conſtituimus: quoniam non ipſi, ſed Deus eorum, Deus nobis eſt, honoramus ſane memorias eorum, tanquam ſanctorum hominum: Neither doe wee ſet vp temples, prieſts, or erect ſacrifices to Martyrs, becauſe, not they, but their God, is alſo our God: we doe honour the remembrance of them, as of holy men, *De ciuit. dei, lib.*8.27. Charge alſo in this behalfe your own Canons with hereſie: decr. part.2. cauſ.1. qu.1. c.65. Si ita martyriũ fecerimus, vt noſtras velimus reliquias ab hominibus honorari, huic operi non tam præmium, quàm pœna debetur: If we deſire martyrdome that our reliques may be honoured of men, this worke deſerueth no reward, but puniſhment, &c. but if the adoration of reliques, as they pretend, tend to Gods honour, it ſhould be no fault at all to deſire that, whereby God ſhould be more honoured.

2 The ſecond opinion of Vigilantius obiected againſt vs, is, that Saints are not to be inuocated, or called vpon in prayer. Anſw. This hereſie is confirmed by the Scripture: Call vpon me in the day of trouble (ſaith the Lord) Pſal.50.15. God only and no other is to be called vpon. Let Auguſtine alſo go for an heretike if this be hereſie: Vni Deo, & martyrũ & noſtro ſacrificium immolamus, ad quod ſacrificium ſicut homines Dei, qui mundum in eius confeſſione vicerunt ſuo loco & ordine nominantur, non tamen à ſacerdote inuocantur: Wee doe immolate or offer ſacrifice vnto one only God, both of the Martyrs and ours, in the which ſacrifice, they as holy men of God, that by their faithfull confeſſion ouercame the world, are named in their place and order; but they are not by the Prieſt or Miniſter *prayed vnto, *De ciuit. dei, lib.*22. *cap.*20. And what ſacrifice Auguſtine meaneth, he ſheweth elſewhere, writing thus: Si pro ſuis peccatis humilitatis, & miſerationis & orationis ſacrificium verè immolare non negligunt Deo ſuo, tales imperatores Chriſtianos dicimus felices: If they doe not neglect truly to immolate or offer vnto their God the ſacrifice of humilitie, ſorrow, and prayer, ſuch Chriſtian Emperours wee count happie, *de ciuit. dei, lib.*5.24. Prayer then is the proper ſacrifice of Chriſtians, wherein it is not lawfull (as he ſaith) to call vpon Martyrs.

*Here our popiſh obiecter ſaith, that Auguſtine meaneth ſuch inuocation, as is due onely to God. Anſ. But the ſcripture acknowledgeth only one kinde of inuocation: how can they call on him, vpon whom they haue not beleeued? Rom.10.14. but God only is to be beleeued vpõ, therefore only to be inuocated, &c. See our further anſwere Retect.p.174.

This hereſie alſo Gregorie the 10. one of their Popes, ſeemeth to haue been of, that it was not lawfull to call vpon the name of Saints in the Church, but vpon the name of Chriſt only: Sit ad eccleſias humilis & deuotus ingreſſus — & conuenientes ibidem nomen illud, quod eſt ſuper omne nomen, à quo aliud ſub cœlo non eſt datum hominibus — nomen Iheſu Chriſti, — exhibitione ſpecialis reuerentiæ attollant: Let them come humbly and deuoutly to the Church, and being there aſſembled, let them with ſpeciall reuerence extoll the name of Iheſus, — then the which there is no other name giuen to be ſaued by, &c. This their holy father onely remembreth the name of Iheſus to be inuocated in the congregation.

Sext. decret. lib.3. tit.23. cap.2.

3 Vigilantius third hereſie was, ſaith the Ieſuit, that it was lawfull for eccleſiaſtical perſons to marrie, and to haue wiues. Anſw. A ſore hereſie, whereas the Ieſuite confeſſeth elſewhere, that there is no precept to be found, either in the old or new Teſtament, that forbiddeth the mariage of Miniſters: *De clericis, lib. cap.*18. How then call they that hereſie, which is not contrarie to the word of God, nor condemned by the ſame? Auguſtine alſo holdeth this perilous hereſie, *queſt.*127. ex vtroq; mixtim, or who ſo was the author of thoſe queſtions; Sanctus Petrus vxorem habuiſſe cognoſcitur, vt primatum acciperet inter Apoſtolos, non ei obſtitit generatio filiorum: Hinc Apoſtolus eum, qui vxorem habeat, ſi in cæteris ſeruet mandata, ſacerdotem fieri debere & poſſe oſtendit: Saint Peter is knowne to haue had a wife, and the begetting of children was no hindrance to his primacie among the Apoſtles,

(a primacie of order he meaneth) whereby the Apoſtle ſheweth, that he which hath a wife, if in other things hee keepe Gods commandements, may and ought neuertheleſſe to be made a Prieſt or Miniſter.

Voluntary pouertie not required, nor meritorious.

4 Vigilantius fourth hereſie, as it pleaſeth Bellarmine to call it, was, that it profited not a man to leaue all his riches, and to betake himſelfe to a religious, that is, a Monaſticall life: and the ſame, ſaith he, is defended by vs. Anſw. Is not this a great hereſie? As though it were an euill thing to be rich, or riches might not be well vſed. S. Paul biddeth not rich men caſt away their riches; but that they doe good, and be rich in good workes, 1. Tim. 6. 18. So ſaith Auguſtine: Diuitiæ ſeculares, ſi deſunt, non per opera mala quærantur in mundo: ſi autem adſunt, per opera bona ſeruentur in cœlo: Worldly riches, if they be wanting, doe not ſeeke them by euill doing, in the world: and if thou haue them, by good workes, lay them vp in ſtore in heauen, epiſtol. 1. epiſtolar. 21. And againe, ſpeaking of Lazarus, he ſaith, Non eſt in hoc Lazaro meritum paupertatis, ſed pietatis: There was not in Lazarus any merit or worth of pouertie, but of godlineſſe, in Pſalm. 51. Your owne decrees alſo make for vs: Decret. p. 2. cauſ. 12. qu. 1. c. 25. Homines ſine peccato poſſident ſua: Men poſſeſſe their owne without ſin: And Cauſ. 16. q. 1. c. 68. Non tam in pauperibus paupertatem, quàm religionem debemus attendere: We muſt not ſo much reſpect in the poore their pouertie, as religion: It is not then voluntarie pouertie, but religion, that is ſo acceptable vnto God.

14 14 In the next place, the Ieſuite laboureth by his cunning to intangle vs with the hereſies of the Pelagians, but he ſpeedeth no better here, then he did in the reſt.

The firſt Pelagian hereſie is, they denied that there remained any originall ſinne in the faithfull. Of this hereſie, the Ieſuite falſely accuſeth Bucer, Zuinglius, and Caluine. Anſw. Firſt, the Papiſts themſelues rather are guiltie of this hereſie, who affirme, that concupiſcence in the regenerate is no ſinne, nor againſt the commandement, Rhemiſt. annot. Rom. 6. 8. What is this elſe, but to take away originall ſinne cleane? which if it be at all, muſt of neceſſitie be ſinne. Secondly, Bellarmine did not here remember that old ſaying, Mendacem oportet eſſe memorem: A lyer had need to haue a good memorie: for a little before, Hæreſ. 5. he accuſeth the Proteſtants, as if they ſhould affirme, that ſinne, euen in the regenerate raigneth, and is aliue: but here he caſteth vpon vs the cleane contrarie opinion, that we ſhould hold no originall ſinne at all to remaine in the faithfull. So well the Ieſuite agreeth with himſelfe. Thirdly, our opinion then concerning originall ſinne, is this: that it neither ruleth in the regenerate, nor yet is cleane extinguiſhed; but as Auguſtine confeſſeth: Mutatos eos dicet in melius, non vt ea carerent, quod in hac vita fieri non poteſt, ſed vt ei non obedirent, quod in bona vita fieri poteſt: The Apoſtle ſaith they were changed, not to be without concupiſcence, which cannot be in this life, but not to obey it, which may be in a good life, &c. And againe, Quis ambigat in hac vita poſſe minui, non poſſe conſumi: Who doubteth but that it may in this life be diminiſhed, but not extinguiſhed: cont. Iulian. 6. 5. And herein wee confeſſe and hold no otherwiſe, then your owne Canons teach: Decret. part. 3. diſtin. 4. c. 2. Euacuatur caro peccati, non vt in ipſa viuente carne concupiſcentia innata repente abſumatur, & non ſit, ſed ne obſit mortuo, quæ oberat nato: Indeed the fleſh of ſinne is euacuate, not ſo, that concupiſcence borne in the fleſh ſhould ſuddenly bee conſumed, and not be at all, but that it hurt not after death, which was hurtfull in the birth.

The ſecond hereſie of the Pelagians was, that euery ſinne was mortall and worthie of death, which the Ieſuite alſo ſaith is affirmed by vs.

Anſw. Firſt, Auguſtine in none of his large and learned treatiſes, which he wrote againſt the Pelagians (with whoſe hereſies hee was as well acquainted as either Hierome or any elſe) doth charge them with this opinion. Secondly, no marueile; for if this were a point of Pelagianiſme, he was a Pelagian himſelfe, who thus writeth: Inexcuſabilis eſt omnis peccator, vel reatu originis, vel additamento propriæ voluntatis, ſiue qui nouit, ſiue qui ignorat: Quia & ipſa ignorantia, in ijs, qui intelligere noluerũt, ſine dubitatione peccatum eſt, in ijs, qui non potuerunt, pœna peccati: Euery ſinner is left without excuſe, either by the guilt of originall ſin, or by default of his owne will: whether he that ſinneth of knowledge or of ignorance: for ignorance it ſelfe, in thoſe, which refuſe to vnderſtand, is ſinne without doubt, in thoſe that cannot, the puniſhment of ſinne: Ergo in vtriſque, (ſaith he) non eſt iuſta excuſatio, ſed iuſta damnatio: Therefore in both, there is no iuſt excuſe, but iuſt damnation, Epiſtol. 105.

All ſinne of it owne nature is mortall.

Here Auguſtine is of opinion, that euen the leaſt ſinnes, thoſe which proceede of ignorance, are in themſelues mortall, if God ſhould deale with vs in the rigour of his iuſtice: As the Scripture teſtifieth, The wages of ſinne is death, Rom 6. 23. which words are generally pronounced of all ſinne. We acknowledge alſo that there are veniall ſinnes, yet not in their owne nature, but as your owne Canons teach vs: Decret. p. 2. cauſ. 33. diſtinct. 1. de pœnitent. c. 47. Venialis eſt culpa, quam ſequitur profeſſio delictorum: That fault is veniall and pardonable, after which there followeth confeſſion of ſinnes, &c. that is, by repentance and confeſſion ſinnes are become veniall, and not otherwiſe: can it then be hereſie in vs, to affirme by the word of God, and according to your owne Canons, that all ſinne of it owne nature is mortall.

15 15 Bellarmine chargeth Beza with Neſtorianiſme in affirming that there are two hypoſtaticall vnions in Chriſt; one of the ſoule with the fleſh, the other of the diuinitie and the humanitie: lib. de hypoſtat. vnion.

Anſw. 1. This very obiection Iacobus Andreas made againſt Beza: who anſwereth thus: 1, that there is difference betweene two hypoſtaticall and perſonall Vnions, and two hypoſtaſes or perſons: for a thing may be hypoſtatically vnited, and yet not make an hypoſtaſis or perſon, vnleſſe it be conſidered by it ſelfe: as the hypoſtaticall vniting of the ſoule and bodie in another man, maketh a perſon, but in Chriſt it is neuer conſidered by it ſelfe, but vnited to the Godhead, and ſo maketh but one perſon. 2. Yet Beza ingeniouſly confeſſeth, non recuſo tamen, quod ambigue ſcriptum ſit, emendare, I refuſe not to amend, whatſoeuer is doubtfully written: and in deed to ſpeake properly, the vnion of the ſoule and bodie which in other men is hypoſtaticall and perſonall, in Chriſt is eſſentiall and naturall, the Vnion onely of the diuine and humane nature is in him perſonall and hypoſtaticall. 3. That Beza was farre from making two perſons in Chriſt, appeareth in the beginning of the ſame booke, where he chargeth Brentius with Neſtorianiſme in making two vnions in Chriſt of the diuine and humane nature, one, which he calleth eſſentiall, common with Chriſt and other men, another perſonall, peculiar onely vnto Chriſt, and ſo in effect maketh two perſons in Chriſt.

But one hypoſtaticall Vnion in Chriſt.

2. Otherwiſe Beza neuer thought, but that the humane nature conſiſting of ſoule and bodie, vnited to the diuine in Chriſt made but one perſon: and the ſame is the confeſſion of Auguſtine: Fatemur Chriſtum carnem, animam quoque humanam verbo vnigenito coaptaſſe, quod eſſet vna perſona, vt Chriſtus eſt verbum & homo, ſed & ipſe homo anima & caro: We doe confeſſe, that Chriſt hath ſo ioyned his humane fleſh and ſoule to the onely begotten word, to make one perſon, that the ſame Chriſt ſhould be both the word and man, but man conſiſting both of ſoule and body: *de Trinitat.Vnit.cap.*7. This then is our beleefe, that there are two natures in Chriſt, the diuine, and humane: but both theſe doe concurre to make one perſon. But in truth the Papiſts are theſe Neſtorian heretikes, and not the Proteſtants: for they make two Chriſts, one that ſitteth in heauen borne of the Virgin Mary, another in the Euchariſt made of bread and wine: for one of them doubteth not to ſay, that there is mutatio vini in ſanguinem Chriſti, a mutation of the wine into the blood of Chriſt, Turrian. tract. 1. c. 7. *fol.*35. then Chriſts blood being made of wine, is another blood then that which he tooke of the Virgine: and thus they diſtinguiſh betweene Chriſt and Chriſt, and fall apparantly into Neſtorions hereſie.

16 The ſixteenth hereſie which he obiecteth, is all one with the twentieth: to that place therefore we referre it. 16

17 The Eutychians were condemned for heretiks, becauſe they taught, that there was but one nature in Chriſt, his humane nature being abſorpt of his godhead, of which opinion (ſaith Bellarmine) is Swinkfeldius, and Brentius, who affirmeth, that the humanitie of Chriſt is euery where. 17

Anſw. Firſt, what haue we to doe with the Swinkfeldians, or the Vbiquitaries? it is nothing to the Proteſtants what they hold. The Papiſts come neerer the Vbiquitaries then Proteſtants: for it is their common opinion, that the body of Chriſt in one moment may bee in a thouſand places at once, and more, if it happen at one time the Maſſe to be celebrated in ſo many places: This is the difference betweene them, the Vbiquitaries ſay, Chriſts body is actually euery where; the Papiſts, that it may bee euery where, in as many places, as it chanceth Maſſe to be ſaid.

Secondly, concerning this matter, our opinion is this, that it is a blaſphemous aſſertion, to ſay in the abſtract, Humanitas Chriſti eſt vbique, The humanitie of Chriſt is euery where: but yet it is true in the concrete, In concreto, Chriſtus homo eſt vbique: The man Chriſt is euery where; ſo that we neither deſtroy the natures by confounding them, nor diſſolue Chriſt by ſeparating and disioyning thē. But if you look well about you, your ſelues are theſe Eutychian heretiks, or worſe: for their hereſie was this, that Chriſt after his aſcenſion doth no more conſiſt of two natures, but that his fleſh and humanitie is turned into the nature of his diuinitie: ſo you, while you affirme that the bodie of Chriſt may bee in a thouſand places at once, that it is in the Euchariſt without ſhape, forme, quantitie, qualitie of a bodie, without diſtinction of parts, &c. and ſo deſtroy the nature of the humanitie: what do you elſe, but either make Chriſt no bodie at all, or elſe attribute vnto it a ſpirituall and diuine nature? And yet your hereſie herein is worſe, then that of Eutyches: he affirmed the fleſh of Chriſt to be turned into the diuine nature, but you ſay that the bread and wine are turned into the blood and fleſh of Chriſt, which is a more inglorious and vnlikely change then the other, and yet both hereticall.

Chriſt as man not euery where.

18 Xenaias the Perſian firſt openly taught, that the images of Chriſt and the Saints are not to bee worſhipped, ſo ſay the Proteſtants, Bellarmine. Anſw. Firſt, it is not true, that Xenaias firſt publiſhed this doctrine: the Apoſtles were long before him, who warne vs to take heed of idolatrie, which is worſhipping of Images, Paul, Rom.1.23. 1.Iohn 5.21. Auguſtine alſo maintaineth this doctrine, Illud (inquit) quod ſedere pater dicitur, non flexis poplitibus fieri putandū eſt: tale enim ſimulachrum Deo nefas eſt Chriſtiano in templo collocare: Whereas God the Father is ſaid to ſit, we muſt not thinke it is by bowing of his knees: for it is a heinous ſinne to erect ſuch an Image vnto God in the temple of Chriſtians, *De fid. & Symbol.cap.*7. Yet ſuch images of God the Father are euery where to be ſeene in popiſh Churches. And againe he ſaith, Nobis vnus colendus & diligendus Deus præcipitur, qui fecit hæc omnia, quorum illi ſimulachra venerantur, vel tanquam Deos, vel tanquam ſigna & imagines Deorum: We are commanded to worſhip one onely God, which made all theſe things: the pictures or portraitures whereof they worſhip either as Gods, or as the images or reſemblances of God, *de Doct. Chriſtian.lib.*3.*cap.*7. Images then are not to bee worſhipped, no not in the remembrance of God. What is become now, I pray you, of Xenaias hereſie? who in this aſſertion is no more an heretike, then 18

Rom.1.23.
1.Iohn 5.21.

Images of Chriſt and Saints not to be worſhipped.

Gregorie the firſt, and the beſt of that name: decret.p.3. diſtinct.3.c.27. who writeth thus to Seuerus Biſhop of Marcellis, who had broken downe certaine images: Et quidem, quia eas adorari vetuiſſes omnino laudauimus, fregiſſe verò reprehendimus: And indeed we commend you in forbidding them to be worſhipped, but reprehend you for breaking of them: Would Gregorie, thinke you, commend an hereticall fact?

19 19 The Ieſuite here hath found out a new hereſie of the Lampetiani, who ſhould ſay, that Monaſteries ought to be free from perpetuall vowes, that the parties might at their choice goe backe from their vowes. So ſaith he, doth Luther hold and the reſt. Anſw. Is not this now a damnable hereſie? As though it were not lawfull for thoſe which haue raſhly vowed, and aboue their ſtrength, euen by the rules of the Goſpell, to be ſorie for their raſhneſſe: and feeling their owne weakeneſſe, to deſire to be looſed from their vow, and to take heed, that they do no more preſume beyond their ſtrength: As if a man hath fooliſhly vowed to liue a ſingle life, and afterward is inflamed with luſt, and ſeeth hee cannot containe, the Apoſtle giueth him leaue to marrie, To auoid fornication, let euery man haue his wife, 1.Cor.7.2. He ſpeaketh of all, that cannot otherwiſe auoid fornication, haue they vowed, or not vowed, Auguſtine giueth his ſentence of the vowes of faſting, ſaying thus: Ieiunia legitima in neceſſitate ſoluta, non faciunt reos, ſi ſtomachi fuerit cauſa, aut infirmitatis febrium: Lawfull faſtes being broken for neceſſitie, as if the ſtomacke be weake, or the partie ſicke, doe not make men guiltie of offence, ex nouo Teſtament. quaeſt.61. If the vow of faſting may be broken, becauſe of the weakeneſſe of the ſtomacke: why not the vow of continencie alſo for the frailtie of the fleſh? Yea, Auguſtine diſſwaded Bonifacius a ſecular Lord, who had vowed and purpoſed with himſelf to become a Monke, Cupiebas te in ocium ſanctum conferre, & in ea vita viuere, in qua ſerui Dei Monachi viuunt, vt autem non faceres, quid te reuocauit, niſi quia conſideraſti oſtendentibus nobis, quantum prodeſſet Chriſti eccleſijs, quod agebas? You were deſirous to haue giuen your ſelfe to that holy vacant life of Monkes: from ſo doing what elſe withdrew you, but that you conſidered, as I ſhewed you, how much your ſeruice did profit the Churches of Chriſt? Epiſt.70.

Raſh and vnlawfull vowes bind not.

1.Cor.7.2.

This Boniface did fight in defence of the faith againſt the barbarous infidels: See then, S. Auguſtine taketh it to be no fault to diſſwade a man from performing that, which he had vowed with himſelfe. Heare alſo what a later writer ſaith, whom the Papiſts challenge wholly to bee theirs, but in truth is more ours then theirs: Non arbitror Deum, ſaith he, exigere quodcunque ſibi promiſſum bonum, ſi pro eo aliquid melius fuerit perſolutum: I doe not thinke that God will exact euery thing vowed or promiſed vnto him, if in ſtead thereof we performe ſomewhat that is better. So alſo S. Gregorie as hee is alleaged in the decrees. Decret. Greg. lib.2.tit.24.c.3. He writeth thus to the King of France: Non propoſitum, vel promiſſum infringit qui in melius illud commutat: He breaketh not his promiſe, purpoſe, or vow, that changeth it into a better, &c. But the married eſtate is better then the ſingle life to him that cannot containe: wherefore ſuch an one doth not euill, if after his vow he marrie. Againe, Id promittere nos in noſtra profeſſione non credimus, quod certum eſt non poſſe teneri lib. de diſpenſ. We doe not take vpon our ſelues to promiſe that, when we enter into our profeſſion, which it is certaine cannot be kept. Wherefore, men ought not to make abſolute vowes of ſingle life, but ſo farre as they ſhall be able to containe. Neceſſitas (alſo ſaith he) non habet legem, & ob hoc excuſat diſpenſationem: Neceſſitie hath no law, and therefore excuſeth a diſpenſation or looſing of the vow, ibid. Let theſe men goe for heretikes together with vs, if it be hereſie to ſay, that raſh vowes vpon neceſſitie may bee broken or diſpenſed withall. It were no great matter euen out of your owne Canons to fetch this hereſie: for I aske you if an oath doth not as ſolemnelie bind before God as a vow; yet Innocentius the third, whereas a man and his wife had ſworne not to come together againe, and afterward he deſired the companie of his wife, he willeth the woman by the cenſures of the Church, to returne to her huſband: if an oath may be broken for the infirmitie of the parties, why not a vow alſo in the like caſe.

Bernard. epiſt.57.

Decret. Gregor. lib.2.tit. 24.c.24.

20 20 Two other hereſies remaine: the firſt, which is the ſixteenth in number with Bellarmine of certaine that are nameleſſe, he thinketh they were the Neſtorians, hee cannot tell, who affirmed, that the bodie of Chriſt remained not in the Euchariſt, if it were kept till the next day. The other, which hee maketh the twentieth in number, is of thoſe, who ſhould ſay, that the Euchariſt was a figure onely of the body of Chriſt: and both theſe hereſies, as he calleth them, are, ſaith he, maintained by vs.

Anſw. Firſt, he bringeth but weake proofe to make theſe two opinions hereſies: for neither can he produce the authors of them: neither are they condemned as hereſies by the writers by him cited. Againe, we doe not ſay, that the Euchariſt is a bare ſigne of the body of Chriſt, but that Chriſt is verily preſent with all the benefits of his death to the faithfull, and worthy receiuer. Thirdly, wee vtterly deny, that the ſame fleſh which Chriſt tooke of his mother, which hanged vpon the Croſſe, and wherewith all he aſcended vp into heauen, is now really, ſubſtantially, and carnally preſent in the Sacrament at all, much leſſe that it remaineth there afterward. Neither for ſo holding ought we to bee counted heretikes: for Chriſt ſaith, my words are ſpirit and life, the fleſh profiteth nothing, Iohn 6. Vpon the which words Auguſtine thus writeth, Spiritualiter (inquit) intelligite, quod loquutus ſum: Non hoc corpus, quod videtis, manducaturi eſtis, & bibituri illum ſanguinem, quem fuſuri ſunt, qui me crucifigent: ſacramentum vobis aliquod commendaui ſpiritualiter intellectum viuificabit vos: You muſt ſpiritually vnderſtand, that which I ſay: You ſhall not eate this bodie which you ſee, nor drinke my blood, which they ſhal ſhed, that ſhall crucifie me: I haue commended vnto you a certaine ſacrament, it being ſpiritually vnderſtood,ſhall quicken you,in Pſalm.98. So Bernard ſaith, writing of the Euchariſt, Cibus iſte non eſt ventris, ſed mentis,non vadit in ſeceſſum, ſed tendit in excelſum: This is not the food of the bellie,but of the mind: it goeth not into the draught, but tendeth to heauen: Serm.de cœna Domini. But if the fleſh of Chriſt were verily eaten,as other materiall meates are,it muſt needs goe into the bellie,and ſo into the draught,which as the Scripture ſaith,is the purging of al meates,Mark.7.19. Againe he ſaith,Chriſtum habemus,non quomodo Angeli in præſentia maieſtatis, non quomodo Apoſtoli in viſione humanitatis, ſed quomodo eum etiam nunc habet eccleſia in fide & ſacramentis: Wee haue Chriſt,not as the Angels haue him in the preſence of his maieſtie, not as the Apoſtles in the ſight of his humanitie, but as the Church now hath him in faith and the ſacraments, Serm. in feſt. Mart. Your owne decrees alſo allow this ſaying of Auguſtine as Catholike. Decre.part 3.diſt.2.cap.47. Quid paras dentes & ventrem,crede & manducaſti: qui credit in eum,manducat eum,inuiſibiliter ſaginatur,quia inuiſibiliter naſcitur: Why doſt thou prepare thy bellie and teeth,beleeue and thou haſt eaten; for he that beleeueth in Chriſt,eateth him; he is inuiſibly fed, becauſe he is inuiſiblie borne againe,&c. but we are ſpiritually borne againe,and therfore ſpiritually fed:The preſence of Chriſt then in the ſacrament is no otherwiſe,then by faith: therefore he is not carnally preſent; for faith is not of things preſent,but hoped for,Heb.11.1. Thus are wee with other ancient fathers without cauſe,by the newfangled Papiſts,condemned as heretikes,Their mouthes we cannot ſtop,yet proofes they neuer ſhall haue any againſt vs.

Thus,as we ſee,the Ieſuite hath almoſt run himſelfe out of breath,in following vs with open crie of hereſie: might and maine hath he laboured to charge vs with twentie hereſies:but he hath told as many vntruths,and lies.Let any indifferent man now conſider,how the Ieſuite hath paltred with vs.

Firſt,he obiecteth thoſe hereſies,which we our ſelues condemne,and that they know,as the hereſies of *Seruetus, hæreſ.*7.and of *Swinkfield,hæreſ.*15.

Secondly,he forceth thoſe hereſies vpon vs,which do with better right recoyle vpon themſelues,as *hæreſ.*14.& 17.

Thirdly,he ſlaundereth vs with thoſe opinions which we hold not,as *Luther,hæreſ.*4. Caluine and *Bucer,hæreſ.*14.*Beza,hæreſ.*5.

Fourthly,he calleth thoſe hereſies,which we doubt not to defend,as Catholike opinions,howſoeuer they diſpleaſed ſome of the old writers,ſuch is that of Aerius, that prayer is not to bee made for the dead,*hæreſ.*11.And that of Vigilantius, that the reliques of Saints are not to be adored,nor themſelues to be prayed vnto,*hæreſ.*13. All the reſt for the moſt part,which the Ieſuite calleth hereſies,are by Auguſtine defended and maintained in his works,and haue authoritie alſo, as I haue ſhewed from their owne Canons: as therefore Hierome ſaid to *Auguſtine,Epiſt.*11.inter epiſt.Aug.Si me reprehendis errantem,patere me quæſo,quaſi errare cum talibus If you reprehend me for my error,giue me leaue to erre with ſuch notable men:after he had alleaged diuers ancient writers of his opinion,&c.So if we were in ſome error,as we are not,neither ſhall the Ieſuite euer proue it againſt vs,he might ſomewhat beare with vs,becauſe we erre and are deceiued with Auguſtine. Although in deed, as Auguſtine anſwereth Hierome: Puto,quia cum his errare nec te ipſe patieris: I thinke you would not willingly your ſelfe erre,no not with theſe worthie men,Epiſt.19. So neither will we with Auguſtine,Hierome, or any other willingly(by Gods grace) maintaine any error,much leſſe hereſie.

Thus,I truſt,we haue for this time,and for our purpoſed breuitie,ſufficiently anſwered the Ieſuite: he hath hitherto but ſpent his breath,and laid his nets in vaine. The pit of hereſie,which they digged for vs,themſelues (as it ſhall now appeare) are fallen into: We will therefore, ſeeing the Ieſuite hath firſt prouoked vs to this combate,a little requite his kindneſſe, and repay him and his fellowes a full ſcore of hereſies,and twentie more for aduantage, not deuiſed or imagined by vs, but ſuch as were condemned by the Fathers of the Church for hereſies,and are now either in part, or in whole maintained by the Church of Rome.And herein I will rather follow Auguſtine, then either Epiphanius, or Philaſter, to whom the Ieſuite ſeemeth to be more addicted:for Auguſtine hath written more exactly of this argument then either of them. And of Philaſter, Auguſtine giueth this cenſure, Multas hæreſes commemorat,quæ mihi appellandæ hæreſes non videntur: He reckoneth vp many hereſies, which ſeeme to me not worthie the name of hereſie,*hæreſ.*80.But now to the purpoſe.

Firſt,Marcellina the companion of Carpocrates that monſtrous heretike, was noted alſo of hereſie, 1 because ſhe worſhipped the images of Ieſus and Paul, and offered incenſe vnto them, *Auguſt.hæreſ.*7.
So it was concluded in the ſecond Nicene Councell,that the image of God is to be adored with the ſame worſhip that is due vnto God,which idolatrous decree is defended by Thomas Aquinas,Bonauenture,Caietanus. Bellarmine alſo alloweth cenſing and burning of odors before Images,*lib.*1.*de ſanctor.beatitud.cap.*13. Which is a part of diuine worſhip; for therefore Heſekiah brake downe the braſen ſerpent,becauſe the people burned incenſe vnto it,2.King.18.4.

Hereſie to worſhip images.

Secondly,the heretikes called Heracleonitæ,did after a new ſort purge and redeeme their dead,by 2 annointing them with oyle and balme,*hæreſ.*16. So the Papiſts haue excogitate a ſacrament of extreme vnction,wherein they annoint their ſicke with oyle for remiſſion of their ſinnes,their eyes,their noſtrels,eares,mouth,hands,reynes and feete: of this popiſh cuſtome of aneeling, ſee the Rhemiſt. annot.Galath.4.ſect.2.Iam.5.ſect.14.

The Heracleonites aneeled the dead as papiſts vſe to doe.

Thirdly,the heretikes called Caiani, did highly extol Iudas, as a diuine & holy man,& they counted 3

The heretikes Caiani commended Iudas, as some Papists defend the Iewes.

his wicked act in betraying of Christ, for a singular benefit, August. hæreſ. 18. So some of the papiſts haue written, Iudæi mortaliter peccaſſent, niſi Chriſtum crucifixiſſent: The Iewes had ſinned mortally, if they had not crucified Chriſt, diſt. lect. 13. looke before Blaſ. 59.

The Papiſts with the heretikes Taciani condemne mariage.

4 The heretikes called Taciani, did condemne mariages, and made no better account of them, then of fornication, neither doe they receiue any maried perſon into their order, hæreſ. 24. That the papiſts are not farre off from this hereſie, it appeareth both by their doctrine and practiſe: Firſt, for their doctrine this they write, That the order of the prieſthood is prophaned by mariage, Greg. Martin. diſcou. cap. 15. ſect. 11. Whereas the Apoſtle ſaith, Mariage is honorable amongſt all men, Heb. 13. The Rhemiſts alſo are not a whit aſhamed to ſay, that the mariage of prieſts is the worſt ſort of incontinencie, Annot. 1. Corinth. 7. ſect. 8. Pope Siricius, Epiſt. ad Himerium. Tarraconenſ. applyeth that ſaying in the Scripture againſt mariage: Qui in carne ſunt, Deo placere non poſſunt: They that are in the fleſh, cannot pleaſe God. Now, as their doctrine is, ſo is their practiſe: whereby they doe not onely make fornication equall to mariage, but euen preferre it. It was one of the grieuances of the Germanes, exhibited to Cardinall Campeius: that the Biſhops and their officials, did not onely ſuffer prieſts for their money to haue Concubines, but compelled continent and chaſte prieſts to pay tribute to the Biſhop, and ſo it might be lawfull for them to liue chaſte, or keepe Concubines, Fox pag. 862. But honeſt mariage in Miniſters, they puniſhed with death: as Anno 1525. Petr. Spenglerus was condemned to die for no other cauſe, but that he had maried a wife, ex Oecolampad. Thus it is manifeſt, both by the doctrine and practiſe of the Church of Rome, they doe not onely with theſe heretikes, match fornication, and honeſt mariage together, but giue it the preferment before mariage.

The Cataphriges wherein like the Papiſts.

5 The Cataphriges did make or mingle their Euchariſt with the blood of children, hæreſ. 26. The papiſts much like vnto them, haue ſhewed the people in the Sacrament the blood of Ducks and Pigeons, making the people beleeue, that it was the blood of Chriſt: as here in England, the bloud of Hales, which men from all parts of the land came in pilgrimage vnto many yeeres, taking it to be the blood of Chriſt, was in the end found to be but the blood of a Drake, and openly ſhewed at Pauls Croſſe by the Biſhop of Rocheſter, the King himſelfe being preſent, Fox. pag. 1188.

The Pepuzians allow women to be prieſts. 6

6 The Pepuzians allow women to be prieſts, hæreſ. 27. So the Papiſts ſuffer women to execute the prieſts office in baptizing of children, vide ſupra, hæreſ. obiect. 4.

Papiſts proued Cathariſts.

7 The Cathariſts did ſo name themſelues, as being pure and cleane, hæreſ. 38. Such are the Papiſts, which affirme, that ſome are ſo iuſt in this life, that they neede no repentance, Rhemiſt. Annot. Luke 15. 1. That iuſt men in this life may keepe the law of God, and by their iuſtice be free from the curſe thereof, Galath. 3. ſect. 4. That habituall concupiſcence without conſent of will, is not properly forbidden in the law, neither doth make vs guiltie before God, Rom. 7. ſect. 15. 10. Doe not theſe men now in effect ſay, that they are pure and cleane in this life?

8

The Papiſts with the heretikes Angelici worſhip Angels.

8 The heretikes (Angelici) were ſo called becauſe they worſhipped the Angels, hæreſ. 39. which ſect Epiphanius (ſaith Auguſtine) thought to be worne out and extinguiſhed. But if Epiphanius were now aliue, he ſhould ſee this hereſie reuiued by the papiſts: for they doe maintaine the worſhip and adoration of Angels, Rhemiſt. Apocal. 3. ſect. 6. & annot. in cap. 19. 22.

9

The heretikes Apoſtolici.

9 The heretikes called Apoſtolici, did not receiue into their communion thoſe that had wiues, or proper poſſeſſions, hæreſ. 46.

10

Hierarchites wherein they reſembled Papiſts.

10 The Hierarchites did receiue only Monkes and Nunnes to their ſocietie, hæreſ. 47. Papiſtrie ſauoureth ſtrongly of theſe hereſies: for profeſſed Monkes are with them the deuouteſt men, how impure ſoeuer their life be: in ſo much, that the profeſſion of Monkerie hath obtained amongſt them the name of religion: the reſt that liue in the world, they call ſeculares & mundanos, ſecular men, and of the world. The Rhemiſts affirme, that Monkes come neereſt to the imitation of Chriſt, 1. Theſſal. cap. 1. verſ. 6. The married prieſts cannot conueniently be occupied about prayer, or the Sacraments, but ought to abſtaine from all matrimoniall actes, 1. Cor. 7. verſ. 5. & 1. Tim. 5. verſ. 5. contrarie to the Councell of Gangra, cap. 4. where it was decreed, that if any man make difference of a maried prieſt, and by occaſion thereof refraine from his oblation, ſhould be accurſed. The Hierarchites alſo, Regnum cœlorum paruulis negant, Doe denie the Kingdome of heauen to infants: decr. p. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 3. c. 39. So doe the papiſts to infants, dying without baptiſme, for whom they haue prouided a certaine dungeon, which they call Limbus. Laſtly, the Apoſtolici, would in no wiſe ſuffer thoſe, which had vowed ſingle life, afterward to marrie, though they found themſelues vnable to keepe their vow, Epiphan. hæreſ. 61. So the Rhemiſts allow virgins after their vow, vpon no occaſion to marrie. Annot. 1. Cor. 7. verſ. 28.

Papiſts with the Euchites mumble vp their mattens.

11 The Euchites did nothing elſe but pray, and held, that it was not lawfull for Monkes to labour with their hands for the ſuſtenance of their life, hæreſ. 17. The papiſts encline to both thoſe hereſies: for firſt, what elſe doe their Monkes and Nuns, but mumble vpon their beades a certaine ſtint of prayers in the Latine tongue, which moſt of them vnderſtand not, at all times and hours almoſt, both of day and night: as they haue their Nocturnes, and primes, their morning, euening, midnight ſeruice: their third, ſixth, and ninth houres, Rhemiſt. Annot. Act. 10. ſect. 6. Secondly, we ſee, that moſt of their Cell birds, both cockes and hennes, Monkes and Nunnes, I would ſay, doe liue idlie: and they beare them out in it: for religious men (ſay our Rhemiſts) ſuch as they count their Maſſe-monging Monks to be, are not bound to worke, Annot. 2. Theſſal. 3. ſect. 2.

12 There is another hereſie,ſaith Auguſtine, or ſect,that walketh with bare feete,becauſe God ſaid to Moſes,put off thy ſhooes, hereſ.68. So among the Papiſts, there are ſects of Friers,that goe barefoote,as their Friers Flagellants,and Franciſcans.

12 Barefoote heretikes.

13 The Priſcillianiſts did make the Apocrypha,that is,bookes not canonicall of equall authoritie with Scripture,*Hereſ.70.*So doe the Papiſts: the bookes of Tobie,Iudith,the Machabees,and others, which are not found in the Canon of the Hebrew,they make them bookes of Canonicall Scripture, and part of the word of God: yea their blind and vncertaine traditions, they are not aſhamed to call the word of God vnwritte. And yet further,Whatſoeuer,ſay they,the Paſtors of the Church do teach beſide Scripture,in the vnity of the Church,is to be taken for the word of God,Rhem.annot.2.Theſ.2.ſect.2.

13 Papiſts with the Priſcillaniſts make apocryphall books canonicall.

14 There were certaine Heretikes that held,that by Chriſts deſcending into hell,the incredulous, and vnbeleeuers beleeued,and that all were deliuered thence at his comming.Hereſ.79. This hereſie, I ſee not how the Papiſts can ſhift off from themſelues,who do all generally vnderſtand that place of S.Peter,1.Epiſt.3.verſ.19.of Chriſts deſcending into hell. Where the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the incredulous & diſobedient perſons of the old world,who periſhed in the waters,and afterward remained in priſon,only eight perſons being ſaued in the ark.If Chriſt then ſhould deliuer al theſe incredulous perſons,how can they auoid this hereſie,that hel was in a maner emptied by the deſcenſion of Chriſt?

14 How Papiſts concurre with certaine heretikes concerning Chriſts deſcenſion into hell.

15 The Coluthians affirmed, Deum non facere mala,that no euill was wrought by God,contrary to that ſaying of the Scripture: Ego Deus creans mala, I am the God that createth euill: Shall there be euill in a citie,and the Lord hath not done it? Amos 3.6. Aug.hereſ.65. This hereſie the Papiſts are not free from,who affirme that Chriſts death was not Gods act otherwiſe then by permiſſion in reſpect of the malice of the Iewes, Act.4.ſect.2.Whereas the Scripture ſaith,it was done by Gods hand and counſell,which is more then permiſſion: and ſo indeed God did not only permit,but vſe the malice of the Iewes moſt holily and moſt iuſtly to bring his purpoſe to effect. The Rhemiſts alſo affirme, that ſin ſtandeth not with Gods will,intention,nor honour,Annot.Rom.3.verſ.4. True it is,that ſin is againſt the reuealed wil of God in his word,but nothing can come to paſſe againſt the ſecret will and determination of God in ſuffering and permitting ſin to bee,but not in decreeing it: Neither is God the author of ſin,which proceedeth from mans owne corruption,but as it is a demonſtration of his iuſtice in the puniſhment thereof, as Auguſtine ſaith: Creat Deus mala pœnas iuſtiſſimas irrogando: God createth euill,by inflicting of moſt iuſt puniſhment, Hereſ.66. The Papiſts then,which denie that euill any way commeth from God,encline to this hereſie of the Coluthians.

Actes 4.v.28.

How farre God is an agent in euill things.

16 An Arch-heretike called Marcus,did hold,that Chriſt did not verily ſuffer,and indeed,but in ſhew only and appearance,Hereſ.14. The Apollinariſts alſo affirmed,that Chriſt tooke humane fleſh without a ſoule, *Auguſt.Hereſ.55.*I pray you how farre are the papiſts from this hereſie?who affirme, that Chriſt ſuffered not in ſoule:Nay the Rhemiſts hold it to be a blaſphemous aſſertion ſo to ſay,Annot.Heb.5.verſ.7. What is it elſe,but either with Marcus to ſay,that Chriſt ſuffered but in ſhew, and that he felt nothing in ſoule,when he cried out vpon the Croſſe,My God,my God,why haſt thou forſaken me?(for if there were no ſuch matter indeed, Chriſt muſt haue vttered theſe words only in outward ſhew and pretence.)Or elſe they muſt fall into the Apollinariſtes hereſie:for why did Chriſt take vpon him our fleſh and ſoule,but to redeeme man that was loſt,both in body and ſoule? And therfore he muſt needs haue ſuffered both in body and ſoule:for if there were no vſe of the humane ſoule in the worke of redemption,you might as well ſay with the Apollinariſts,that Chriſt had no ſoule at all. Thus Auguſtine reaſoneth:*Si totus homo periyt,totus beneficio ſaluatoris indiguit:ſi totus beneficio ſaluatoris indigebat,totum Chriſtus veniendo ſaluauit.Cont.Felician.c.13.*If the whole man both body and ſoule were loſt,he wholly had need of a ſauior:and if he wholly needed a ſauior, Chriſt by his comming did wholly ſaue him:Ergo,it followeth,that Chriſt muſt wholly haue died and ſuffered in body and ſoule to redeeme man(for our redemption was wrought by his death)that was loſt in body and ſoule.

16 How Papiſts agree with heretikes that affirme Chriſt to haue ſuffered only in ſhew.

17 The Anthropomorphites did imagine,that God was in ſhape and proportion like a man, Hereſ.50. Doe not our Rhemiſts ſauour ſtrongly of this hereſie, which allow the Image of God to bee pictured in their Churches like an old man with gray haires? Anno..Act.17.verſe 29.

17

18 The heretikes Seleuciani,or Hermiani,denied that Chriſt did ſit at the right hand of God in his fleſh,but that he had left or put off his fleſh,and placed it in the Sunne,*hereſ.59.*The papiſts now, though in words they affirme not this,yet by a neceſſarie ſequele of opinion, they muſt leaue Chriſt without his fleſh in heauen,as often as they would haue it preſent in the maſſe: for it ſeemed an abſurd thing euen to thoſe groſſe heretikes,that the body of Chriſt ſhould be in many places at once,for if they had knowne the ſhifts which papiſts now haue found out,to eſtabliſh their real preſence,who doubt not to ſay,that the body of Chriſt may be in many places:to place Chriſts fleſh in the ſun,they needed not to haue remoued it out of heauen:They might haue ſaid he was in both places at once. Yet herein the Seleuciani ſeeme to be more reaſonable then papiſts,that they haue prouided ſo glorious a place for the body of Chriſt, euen the beautiful tabernacle of the Sun:but the other thruſt the fleſh of Chriſt into a narrow roome,and bring him within the compaſſe of a thin cake,or put him into a box, and houſle him in their bellies,yea ſend his body to a viler place then ſo, euen to the draught,where their bellies are purged,as ſome of them haue bin driuen to grant: But that the fleſh of Chriſt cannot be in many places at once, Auguſtine ſheweth,writing thus vpon thoſe words in the Goſpell,What if you ſee the Son of man aſcending where he was before? Illi putabant eum erogaturũ corpus ſuũ ille autem ſe

18

Papiſts with the Seleuciani heretikes pull Chriſts fleſh out of heauen.

dixit aſcenſurū in cælū, vtiq; integrum. They imagined that Chriſt would haue beſtowed his body amongſt thē, but he ſaith, he wil aſcend into heauē, that is to ſay, whole & ſound, tract. in Ioh. 27. if ſo be then Chriſt doth now beſtow his body in earth, in Auguſtines iudgemēt he cannot be whole in heauē.

19 19 The heretikes called Abeliani, thought it not lawfull for their ſect to liue without wiues, and yet they neuer vſed nor kept company with their wiues. Hereſ. 87. Doe not the Papiſts come neere them, which hold that their Prieſts, which were maried before orders, ought not afterward to haue acceſſe to their wiues, yet are they their wiues ſtill? Rhemiſt. Act. 21 ſect. 1.

The Abelian heretikes kept not companie with their wiues.

20 20 The Pelagian heretikes did hold three pernicious opinions. Firſt, that a man may be perfect in this life and keepe all the commandements. Hereſ. 88. So the Rhemiſts ſay, it is poſſible to keepe Gods commandements. Annot. Ioh. 4. ſect. 1. Secondly, the Pelagians ſay, that grace is giuen only vnto men to this end, that they may doe more eaſily thoſe things, which they are commanded to doe, by their owne free wil. Hereſ. 88. So the Rhemiſts ſay, that man was neuer without free will, but hauing the grace of Chriſt, it is truly made free. Annot. Ioh 8. ſect. 2. What is this els, [a] but that his free wil is made more free, and that grace helpeth him not wholly to worke, but more eaſily only? Thirdly, the Pelagians hold: Gratiam Dei non ad ſingulos actus dari: That the grace of God is not needfull to be giuen at euery aſſay, but that their free will in moſt things is ſufficient: Aug. epiſt. 106. So the Rhemiſts ſay, that though the Gentiles beleeued ſpecially by Gods grace, yet they beleeued alſo of their owne free will. Act. 13. ſect. 2. What ſay they now els, but that a man may beleeue by his own free wil without grace.

[a] Here a Popiſh caviller obiecteth, that this was not the Pelagians hereſie, but whether a iuſt man might keep Gods commandements by his free wil without grace. Anſ. Aug. epiſt. 89. doth confute both theſe opinions of the Pelagians, one, that a man may be perfect in this life without ſin: the other, that hee may keep Gods commandements by the power of free will: See our further anſwere, Retect. p. 190.

21 21 The Manichees condemned the eating of fleſh as being vncleane and impure: Hereſ. 46. So the Papiſts at certaine times forbid the eating of fleſh. And herein perhaps they differ from the Manichees. They held that fleſh was vncleane by creation, the Papiſts by reaſon of the curſe: for God curſed the earth, and not the waters, ſay they: and therfore vpon faſting daies fiſh is preferred before fleſh. Durand. lib. 6. cap. de alijs ieiunijs. So they both agree in this, that fleſh is a thing vncleane and impure: for if they had not ſo thought, why did not the popiſh Biſhop of London Stokeſley, rather ſuffer the pig to be eaten, which was found in one Frebarnes houſe in Lent time, his wife great with child longing for a peece thereof, then command it as an vncleane thing to be buried in Finsbury fields, and ſo the good creature of God to be ſpilled and loſt? Fox pag. 1585.

22 22 There was alſo another moſt blaſphemous opinion of the Manichees: for they held, that the parts and members of Chriſt were diſperſed euery where, and that in their meats and drinks, they did deliuer the members of Chriſt, which were tied and bound in the creatures: Tales, ſaith Auguſtine ſunt electi eorum, vt non ſint ſaluandi à Deo, ſed ſaluatores Dei, &c. The elect amongſt them (for ſo they call their principals and ringleaders) are ſuch, that they looke not themſelues to be ſaued of God, but profeſſe rather to be the ſauiours and redeemers of God, &c. for they imagined, that they did ſet at libertie, as they imagine, the members of Chriſt in their daily eating, &c. Compare now the opinion of the Papiſts with theſe heretikes: ſee if they be not couſen germanes: for as they made themſelues, Saluatores Chriſti: The ſauiours of Chriſt: ſo is it a ſaying among Papiſts, that, Sacerdos eſt creator creatoris ſui: That the prieſt doth make his maker, by fiue words ſpeaking in the Maſſe. But herein the Papiſts goe beyond the Manichees: for they deliuered the body and members of Chriſt from the priſon of the creatures, and ſent them vp to heauen: but the Papiſts bring them downe from heauen, and cloſe them in the creature vnder the ſhape of bread and wine.

Papiſts how like the Manichees.

In Pſalm. 140. ſuper ille non combinabo cum electis eorum.

Thus hitherto I haue only paied Bellarmine his debt, giuing a ſcore of hereſies with ſome aduantage, for his ſcore, now alſo I will pay him intereſt: and I thinke I may find out for him as many more.

23 23 In the next place we charge them with Arrianiſme: the Arrians affirmed, Deum creari ex non entibus: That God might be created of things that were not: they granted that Chriſt was God, yet created: and doe not the Papiſts likewiſe worſhip a created God? for they ſay, that the body of Chriſt in the Euchariſt is made of bread and wine: wherfore we ſay of them, as Gregorius Nyſſenus of the Arrians, that they are worſhippers of Idols: Nam qui creaturam adorat, licet nomine Chriſti id faciat, ſimulachrorum cultor eſt, Chriſti nomen ſimulachro imponens: For he that doth worſhip a creature (as the Papiſts doe bread and wine in the Maſſe, though he doe it in the name of Chriſt, is a worſhipper of idols, giuing the name of Chriſt to an image.

24 24 The heretikes Baſilidiani, denied Chriſt to haue ſuffered: Decre. p. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 3. c. 39. Our aduerſaries, though they deny not Chriſts whole paſſion, yet they take away a principall parte thereof, namely his ſufferings in ſoule.

25 25 The heretikes Ophitæ, did praiſe the ſerpent that ſeduced Eua, and ſay, he brought in the knowledge of vertue: decr. part. 2. ibid. in like maner our aduerſaries praiſe concupiſcence, whereby our parents were ſeduced, and by the which the ſerpent tempted them: for this is the confeſſion of our Rhemiſts: The motions of the fleſh in a iuſt man, to the which the mind conſenteth not, cannot any whit defile the operations of the ſpirit, but make them often more meritorious for the continuall combate, &c. Annot. Rom. 7. ſect. 10. And in another place they ſay, That originall concupiſcence is not properly ſinne, nor forbidden by commandement: Annot. Rom. 6. 6. What could be ſaid more in commendation of it?

Other heretikes faſtened vpon the Papiſts as of the Arrianes.

26 26 The heretikes Aquarij were ſo called, Quia aquam ſolam offerant in calice, Becauſe they offer only water in the cup: decr. p. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 3. c. 39. If they are counted heretikes for offering al water, the Papiſts are halfe heretikes for offering halfe water mingled with wine in the cup.

27 27 The heretikes Aetiani, did hold that the Sonne was vnlike the Father: decr. p. 2. cauſ. 24. ibid.

Baſilidians.
Ophites.
Aquarij.
Aetians.

So doe the Papiſts, ſaying, that Chriſt is not God of himſelfe, as the Father is.

28 Bonoſiani, Chriſtum adoptiuum Dei filium dixerunt, did hold, that Chriſt was the adopted Sonne of God: decret. ibid. Not much vnlike is the opinion of the Papiſts, who affirme, That Chriſt merited for himſelfe, for ſo the Rhemiſts write, that he merited his owne glorification. Annot. 1. in 2. Heb. what is this elſe but to ſay, that Chriſt was adopted by his merites.

28 Bonoſiani.

29 There were certaine heretikes called Beguardini, that held diuers hereticall, and monſtrous opinions. Firſt, they affirmed, Animam non indigere lumine ipſum eleuante ad Deum: That the ſoule needed not the light of grace, to lift it vp vnto God: Clementin. lib. 5. tit. 3. c. 3. So the Rhemiſts ſpeake, that the [a] Gentiles beleeued in Chriſt of their owne free will. Annot. Act. 13. ſect. 21.

29 Beguardinies.

[a] Here it is obiected, that the Rhemiſts words are clipped: for the whole ſentence ſtandeth thus, though the Gentiles beleeued ſpecially by Gods grace, yet they beleeue alſo by their owne free will. Anſ. They doe directly affirme, that the Gentiles beleeue of their owne free will, though more ſpeciallie by grace: leſſe ſpecially then or not ſo eaſily, yet beleeue they may by their free will: therefore here no wrong is done vnto them: See further our anſwere: Retect. 204.

30 Secondly, a ſecond error of theirs was, Hominem hic perfectum eſſe poſſe, That man may bee perfect in this life: Clementin. ibid. and the Rhemiſts in other words do write, That it is poſſible for a man to keepe Gods commaundements: Annot. in 4. Ioh. ſect. 1.

31 A third hereſie of theirs is, Spiritualem humanæ obedientiæ non eſſe ſubiectum: That a ſpirituall man is ſubiect to no humane obedience: Clementin. ibid. So the Papiſts ſay of their terrene God the Pope, that he is not ſubiect to the iudgement of any: nay, ſaith one of them, The Pope ſhould doe God great iniurie, if he ſhould ſubmit himſelfe to the iudgement of any: Iacobat. ex citat. Tileman. er. 34. de pontif. Roman. All theſe hereſies were condemned by Clemens the fifth, in the Councell of Lions, as it appeareth in the Clementines before rehearſed, in the Beguardines, and are yet maintained by the Papiſts.

32 The Ebionites obſerued the ceremonies of the Law with the Goſpel, and therefore were counted heretikes: Decr p. 2. cauſ. 24 qu. 3. c. 39. and from whence elſe doe our aduerſaries borrow their ſuperſtitious rites, and ceremonies, their cenſings, waſhings, oyle, ſalt, incenſe, copes, veſtments, inſtruments, and ſuch like, but from the imitation of the Iewes?

33 Certaine heretikes there were, Qui aquam Deo coæternam faciant, which did make the water eternall with God: Decr. par. 2. ibid. As they attributed one property of the diuine nature to the water, namely eternitie: ſo the Papiſts aſcribe another to water in Baptiſme, giuing it power and efficacie to ſaue thoſe, that are dipped in it.

34 The heretikes Alogij were ſo called, as being without the word: which name moſt fitly agreeth to our aduerſaries, who maketh no great account of the written word, as one of them ſaith: The Scripture was not alway extant, and it is not neceſſarie to ſaluation: Petrus à Soto.

35 The Luciferians denied forgiuenes to thoſe, that were fallen. Decr. par. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 3. cap. 39: ſo the Papiſts ſhut vp all compaſſion againſt thoſe, that fall into relapſe.

36 The Nicolaitanes, did preferre vncleane concubines before honeſt married wiues: what elſe doe our aduerſaries? for they call mariage a prophanation of holy orders: Greg. Martin. diſcouer. cap. 13. ſect. 11. but they ſuffer a prieſt hauing a concubine to miniſter: neither forbid they a man hauing a concubine from the Communion. For thus ſtandeth the decree: Si quis non habet vxorem, ſed pro vxore concubinam, à communione non repellatur: If a man haue not a wife, but a concubine, let him not be put from the Communion. Decr. part. 2. diſt. 34. cap. 4.

37 How our aduerſaries come neere to the Neſtorian hereſie, I haue ſhewed before: Hæreſ. 16. that is obiected againſt vs.

38 Likewiſe, Hæreſ. 17. I haue returned vpon them the hereſie of the Eutychians.

39 Iohn 22. condemneth all them as heretikes, that affirme, Chriſtum & Apoſtolos nihil in ſpeciali habuiſſe: That Chriſt and his Apoſtles had nothing in proper or ſpeciall: that is, were beggers: Extrau. tit. 14. c. 4. 5. But Bellarmine nothing doubteth to ſay, that Chriſt was verè mendicus, truly and properly a begger. De monach. lib. 2. cap. 45. Bellarmine then muſt be content to weare the Popes liuerie, and go for an heretike, till he can cleare himſelfe.

39 Papiſts Nicolaitanes. Neſtorians. Eutychiã.

40 I will take no other definition of an heretike, then out of your owne Canons: Quicunque aliter ſcripturam intelligit, quàm ſenſus ſpiritus ſancti flagitat, quo ſcriptus eſt, hæreticus appellari poterit: Whoſoeuer otherwiſe vnderſtandeth Scripture, then the meaning of the ſpirit is, may very well bee called an heretike: decre. p. 2. cauſ. 24. qu. 3. cap. 27. But ſo doe our aduerſaries toſſe and turne Scripture, and wreſt it to their owne ſuperſtitious fancies: Ergo, they are heretikes.

40 Bellarmine an heretike by Pope Iohn 22. his definition.

Papiſts prooued heretikes by their owne canons.

41 Laſtly, there was a notable heretike, one Rhetorius, who affirmed, that all other heretikes did, Rectè ambulare: Walke the right way, and hold the truth. Hæreſ. 72. But this ſeemeth ſo abſurd a thing to Auguſtine, that he doth not giue credit vnto it: Who if he were now aliue, would not thinke it ſo incredible a thing: for excepting thoſe hereſies, which haue been raiſed concerning the natures of Chriſt, and his perſon (where notwithſtanding the Papiſts are not free from error) what hereſie hath there been held about the offices of Chriſt, his kingdome, prieſthood, and propheticall office, which is not this day, either in whole or in part, maintained by the Church of Rome? as it may partly appeare by that which we haue ſaid alreadie: ſo that I may fitly returne that tearme vpon Bellarmine, which Arturus, one of his fellowes vpbraydeth Volanus, with calling him Omnium hæreticorum Simiam: The ape of all heretikes: de inuocat. ſanctor. theſ. 132. cap. 12. So in truth are the Papiſts, the very apiſh imitators and followers of all heretikes.

41 One Rhetorius allowed all heretikes.

And thus, I thinke, we haue in ſome meaſure recompenſed our aduerſaries courteous dealing, who ſo kindly vpbraid vs with hereſie, for Bellarmines twentie, I haue paid him forty. Let all the world now iudge who are neereſt coſens to heretikes, they or we. We may ſay vnto them as ᵃ*Auguſtine* ſometime to the Donatiſts: Videſne, quemadmodum iſta non ſententia ſua ſed veſica, non ſolum inani ſono, verumetiam in capite veſtro crepuerit? Do ye not ſee, how this their vaine ſentence and puffe of a bladder, hath giuen a cracke, and is broken vpon their owne head? Cont. Petilian lib. 2. c. 101. So this ſtormie blaſt of hereſie, which they haue puffed at vs, is blowne vpon their owne faces: and they only are found to be the heretikes. If they ſpeed no better in other matters, the worſt end of the ſtaffe is like to be theirs. And this ſhall ſuffice for this part.

OF THE GROSSE ABSVRDITIES AND INconueniences of Popiſh Religion.

WE will now (the Lord aſſiſting vs, lay together ſome of thoſe abſurd and vnreaſonable poſitions, which are boldly without ſhame affirmed by our aduerſaries, hauing already ſufficiently detected and diſcouered their blaſphemies, opinions contrarie to Scripture, together with their hereſies. And herein the Papiſts doe bewray ſuch ignorance and blindneſſe, that wee need not doubt to ſay, as it is alleaged by the holy Apoſtle, That God hath giuen them the ſpirit of ſlumber; eyes, that they ſhould not ſee; and eares, that they ſhould not heare to this day, Rom. 11. 8. And as in another place the ſame Apoſtle propheſieth: God ſhal ſend them ſtrong deluſions, that they ſhould beleeue lies. 2. Theſ. 2. 11. But now to the matter in hand. Rom. 11. 8. 2. Theſ. 2. 11.

1. Abſurd. They affirme that no generall Councell is of ſufficient authoritie, without the allowance of the Pope: and that he is in ſuch ſort aboue all Councels, that he cannot though he would, ſubmit himſelfe to their ſentence. Bellarm. de concilijs lib. 2. c. 11. & 14. But the Scripture ſaith, he that refuſeth to heare the Church, let him be vnto thee as an heathen man, or publicane, Matth. 18. 17. Therefore if the Pope ſhall refuſe the ſentence of the Church aſſembled in generall Councels, hee is no better by the voyce of Chriſt, then an heathen. The papiſts being further vrged, that if the Pope were aboue Councels, there ſhould be no way to reſiſt a wicked Pope. Bellarmine anſwereth like a Clerke, that there is no other remedy left in ſuch a caſe, but to pray to God, who will either conuert or confound ſuch a Pope. Lib. 2. de Concil. cap. 19. An anſwer as abſurd as the opinion is: for by this meanes the Church ſhal run into ruine and decay, when it is in mens power to helpe it, which is nothing elſe but to tempt God, then to depend of his extraordinarie worke, when he hath appointed an ordinary meane of redreſſe. Math 18. 17.

2 That to haue been twice married, is a greater let and impediment to the election of a Biſhop, then either adulterie or fornication, Bellarm. de clericis lib. 1. cap. 24. Whereas theſe are euery where prohibited in Scripture, but not one place can be ſhewed, where ſecond mariage is forbidden.

3 That a man may attaine vnto a greater meaſure and higher degree of the loue of God, then is commanded in the law: Thou ſhalt loue the Lord thy God with all thy ſoule, with all thy ſtrength, Bellarm. de Monach. lib. 2. cap. 6. reſponſ. ad Melancthon. Whereas it is certaine that it is not poſſible for vs to loue God in ſuch perfection as we ought, and are commanded: much leſſe can we doe more then is our dutie to doe. Luk. 17. 10. Luk. 17. 10.

4 That it is not lawfull for a votarie to marrie, though he were ſure by mariage to cure ſome mortall or deadly diſeaſe, that otherwiſe is incurable, Bellarm. de Monachis lib. 2. c. 32. reſp. ad 4. rationem. Yet S. Paul counſelleth Timothie to drinke wine, whereas his maner was to drinke water, not for any mortall diſeaſe he had, but becauſe of his infirmitie and weakeneſſe only, 1. Tim. 5. 23. And all ſuch vowes, as are made raſhly to the hurt and hinderance of our ſelues or others, may better be broken, then kept, becauſe they offend againſt the law of charitie, Leuit. 5. 4. 1. Sam. 25. 22. Dauid breaketh the oath or vow, which he had raſhly made in his anger. 1. Tim. 5. 23. Leuit. 5. 4. 1. Sam. 25. 22.

5 That Chriſt was, Verè mendicus: a meere begger, and wanted both the vſe, and dominion of temporall things, Bellarm. de Monach. lib. 2. cap. 45. But Auguſtine according to the Scriptures ſaith: Niſi putetis, quia dominus petebat & indigebat, cui ſeruiebant angeli, qui de quinque panibus tot millia pauit: Vnleſſe yee thinke (ſaith he) that Chriſt begged, and was in want, vnto whom the Angels miniſtred, and who was able of fiue loaues to feede ſo many thouſand: in Pſalm. 146.

This opinion, which the Ieſuite holdeth, that Chriſt was a begger, was condemned by Pope Paulus 2. for hereſie. Anno 1465. ex hiſtor. ſca. mundi. and before that, by Iohn 22. extrau. tit. 14. cap. 4. How dare he then controule his pope holy fathers determinate ſentence?

6 Diabolus odit imagines: The diuell himſelfe hateth and cannot abide an image. Bellarm. de imaginib. ſanctor lib. 2. cap. 12. yet S. Paul ſaith, what is offered or ſacrificed to Idols, is ſacrificed to diuels. 1. Cor. 10. 20. He doth ſo abhor an Image, that who ſo worſhippeth them, doth the diuel great ſeruice. 1. Cor. 10. 20.

7 Whenſoeuer we ſee either a manger to be painted or grauen, to repreſent the natiuitie of Chriſt, or a poſt or piller to repreſent his ſcourging. Non carent veneratione ſua: There is ſome religious reuerence to be done vnto them: Bellarm. de ſanctor imaginib. lib. 2. cap. 30. So in the Ieſuites iudgement, euery Alehouſe painted cloath, ſhewing any ſuch picture, muſt be adored and worſhipped.

8 That the Sacrament doth conferre grace: Ex opere operato, by the very worke that is wrought, that is, the externall action, not for the worthines of the miniſter or the receiuer. Neither doth faith giue efficacie to the Sacrament, no more then the drineſſe of the wood is the cauſe that it burneth, but the fire, Bellarm. lib. 2. de effect. ſacrament. cap. 1. not 4. Theſe are foule abſurdities: as to thinke, that any action of it ſelfe pleaſeth or is acceptable vnto God without faith, contrary to the Scripture, Heb. 11.6. And to make the Sacraments to be more principall then faith, whereof they are but ſeales, Rom. 4.11. And faith being the very life of a righteous man, Rom. 1.17.

Heb. 11.6.
Rom. 4.11.

9 That a Pagane or Infidell may baptize in a caſe of neceſſitie or extremitie, Bellar. de Baptiſm. lib. 1. cap. 7. A very abſurd thing that one by Baptiſme may be receiued into the Church and made a member of Chriſt, by him that is not in the Church, nor of the body of Chriſt, nor euer was: Whereas Chriſt ſaid onely to his Apoſtles: Goe and teach all nations, baptizing them, &c. Math. 28.19.

Math. 28.19.

10 That it is very probable that Iohn Baptiſt vſed no forme of words at all in his baptiſme, Bellarm. de ſacram. Baptiſ. lib. 1. cap. 20. Which is an abſurd ſaying, and contrarie to Saint Paul, who teſtifieth of Iohn, that he baptized the people, ſaying vnto them, That they ſhould beleeue in him, which ſhould come after him, that is, in Ieſus Chriſt, Acts 19.4.

11 That the Apoſtles were firſt made prieſts in the inſtitution of the Lords ſupper, and Biſhops afterward, when Chriſt was riſen from the dead. Bellarm. de ſacram. confirmat. cap. 12. reſp. ad 2. argum. But what need they be ordained prieſts or Biſhops, who alreadie were called to be Apoſtles, which is the firſt and chiefeſt office in the Church? Epheſ. 4. 11. And includeth other inferiour functions: for the Apoſtles together with their Apoſtleſhip were made Paſtors, and Doctors, and Biſhops too, if you will, of the Church, ſo that they needed not any new inueſting to theſe functions.

Epheſ. 4.11.

12 That a Biſhop is the onely paſtor of his dioceſſe, and that inferiour miniſters and teachers are not paſtors properly. Bellar. de Concil. lib. 1. cap. 15. Yet S. Peter maketh Elders, Presbyteri (as they tranſlate) prieſts, to be the proper paſtors of their ſeuerall charges: Feede the flocke of God, which dependeth on you: 1. Pet. 5.3. But if a particular flocke or congregation depend on their teacher and inſtructer, then is he properly their paſtor.

1. Pet. 5.3.

13 The regiment of the Church is eaſier then the gouernment of the commonwealth: Facilior eſt gubernatio eccleſiaſtica, quam politica: Bellarm. de Roman. pontif. lib. 1. cap. 9. reſponſ. ad obiect. 4. Here the Ieſuite bewrayeth his great ignorance, ſeeing there is no greater charge, then that which concerneth the ſoules of men: the care whereof Bellarmine confeſſeth not at all to belong to the politicall or ciuill magiſtrate. And therefore S. Paul cryeth out in admiration of this waightie and wonderfull calling: Who is ſufficient for theſe things? 2. Cor. 2. 16. And therefore calleth the care, which he had of the Churches, a trouble and a cumbrance, 2. Cor. 11. 28. It is not therefore ſo light and eaſie an office, as the Ieſuite thinketh, to haue charge of mens ſoules.

2. Cor. 2.16.
2. Cor. 11.28.

14 Tantum abeſt (ſaith Bellarmine) vt negatio Petri obſit primatui, vt potius eum confirmet: Peters denying of Chriſt, was ſo farre from hindering his primacie, that it did rather further it. De Roman. pontific. lib. 1. cap. 28. A great abſurditie! for it was ſo farre from being any helpe or furtherance to Peter, that it had been ſufficient without the great mercie of God, to haue hindered his ſaluation. And if Peter receiued ſuch a benefit by his denyall of Chriſt, hee might haue ſpared ſome teares, and not haue wept ſo bitterly for his fault.

15 Whereas we alleage againſt our aduerſaries, that it is like that Peter was not at Rome when S. Paul wrote his epiſtle to the Romans, becauſe he is not remembred amongſt ſo many, in the Apoſtles ſalutation, cap. 16. They ſhape vs theſe and the like anſwers: It might be that Peter at that time was out of the towne, or that there were ſpeciall letters ſent to Peter beſide, or this epiſtle might be ſent encloſed to S. Peter by his meanes to be deliuered to the Church, Rhemiſt. annot. Rom. 16. ſect. 4. Who ſeeth not the abſurditie and inſufficiencie of theſe anſwers?

16 That Peter failed in charitie, when he denied Chriſt, and not in faith, and if he failed in faith, hee loſt the confeſſion of faith, not faith it ſelfe, Bellar. de Roman. pontif. lib. 4. cap. 3. But how I pray you can a man faile in charitie and not in faith, ſeeing a liuely faith alwaies worketh by loue? Gal. 5.6. and cannot be ſeparated or deuided from it. And it is as abſurd a thing to ſay, [a] a man may loſe the confeſſion of his faith, and yet keepe his faith ſound: for theſe two are the principal fruits of faith, to beleeue with the heart, and confeſſe with the mouth, Rom. 10.10. And where either of theſe is wanting, there cannot be a right and perfect faith.

17 That the Pope as he is Pope cannot erre: and yet whether he may erre or not: Eſt ab omnibus fidelibus obedienter audiendus: He is obediently to be heard and followed of all the faithfull, Bellarm. de Rom. pontific. lib. 4. cap. 2. What an abſurd thing is this, to bind the Church abſolutely to obey a man, as well when he erreth, as when he erreth not? S. Paul durſt require no more of the Corinthians, but to follow him as he followed Chriſt. 1. Cor. 11. 1.

18 In the late deuiſed doctrine of their imagined Antichriſt, our aduerſaries are driuen to grant many abſurdities. 1. That Antichriſt ſhall come of the tribe of Dan. Rhemiſt. 2. Theſ. 2. ſect. 8. Whereas it is certaine that the Tribes of the Iewes are now ſhufled together, and the diſtinction of their kinreds and families is not kept: for if in Ezra his time after the captiuitie their genealogies were not perfectly knowne, and therefore ſome were put from the prieſthood, Ezra 2. 62. how much more now, the Iewes hauing bin diſperſed in the world almoſt 16. hundred yeeres, is it like that their petigree and deſcent from their fathers is not obſerued?

19 2. Antichriſt, ſay they, ſhall haue his imperiall ſeate at Ieruſalem, and reedifie againe the Temple, and command circumciſion to be vſed. Bellarm. lib. 3. de pontif. cap. 13. This is a great abſurditie contradicting the truth of Scripture: for Haggai the Prophet calleth the Temple builded by Zorababel

[a] Here alſo is it obiected, that elſe where I affirme, that Peter loſt the confeſſion of his faith, and yet his faith was not loſt, Synopſ. p. 187. and ſo I contradict my ſelfe. Anſ. Peter neither loſt his faith, nor yet the confeſſion of his faith vtterly: but both were weakened at that time: to ſay then, that he loſt his confeſſion in part, or at that time, but he loſt it not finally, are not contradictions. See our further anſwer. Retect. pag. 130.

Hag.2.10. [illegible] the laſt houſe, 2.10. But if it ſhall bee the third time erected, how was that the laſt?

20 3. That Antichriſt ſhall raigne but three yeeres and an halfe: and yet in this ſpace ſhall fight with the three Kings of Lybia, Ægypt, Æthiopia, and perſecute the Christians through the whole world, *Bellar. cap.*16. But let any man ſay: how is it poſſible, that in ſo ſhort a time Antichriſt ſhould conquer and ſubdue the whole world? In which ſpace a man can hardly compaſſe, or goe through the world.

21 The Popiſh religion preferreth the rich before the poore, euen in ſpirituall matters. Ideo in hoc ſolo caſu melior eſt conditio diuitis, quàm pauperis, quia habet vnde ſuffragia fiant pro ipſo. In this caſe onlie the eſtate of the rich is better then the poore, becauſe he hath, wherewithall ſuffrages ſhould be made for him: that is, he is able to giue largely for Maſſes. Albert. Mag. de offic. miſſal. tract. 3. But the Scripture biddeth otherwiſe, that we ſhould not haue reſpect vnto the rich, that hath a gold ring, or weareth gay apparell. Iam. 2.2.

22 The ſigne of the croſſe euen by the very act and making of the ſigne, though it bee done by a Iew, Infidell, or pagane, is of force to driue away the diuell, Bellarm. de imaginib. ſanct. cap. 30. Yea, but carnall weapons, ſuch as the ſigne of the Croſſe is, profit not good Chriſtians againſt their ſpirituall enemies. 2. Corin. 10.4. how much leſſe Paganes or Infidels.

23 The Ieſuite maketh two repreſentations of the death of Chriſt: there is ſimplex repræſentatio, a ſimple and plaine repreſentation, and that is in the ſacrament of the Euchariſt: and there is repræſentatio ad viuum, a full and liuely repreſentation of Chriſt, and that is vpon good Friday, when Chriſts death is ſet foorth by diuers geſtures, actions, inſtruments, copes and veſtments. Bellarm. lib. 1 de Miſſ. cap. 1. But how abſurd a thing this is, euery man may ſee: that the repreſentation of Chriſts death in the Sacrament, inſtituted of the Lord himſelfe, to be a ſhewing forth of his death, ſhould be but a plaine and ſimple repreſentation: and the other deuiſed by man, being done without a Sacrament, ſhould bee called a liuely repreſentation: What is this els, but to ſet the ſpirit of God to ſchoole, as though a more liuely ſhewing forth of Chriſts death could be deuiſed by man, then was ordained by Chriſt?

24 It is not neceſſarie (they ſay) in euery ſacrament to haue a viſible ſigne, and therefore the words of abſolution (which are audible, though not viſible) may be the externall ſigne in penance. Bellar. lib. 1. de pœnitent. cap. 11. See what an abſurd ſaying this is: for by this reaſon the preaching of the word may be a ſacrament, becauſe there is an audible ſound.

25 Likewiſe in the popiſh ſacrament of Matrimonie, the Ieſuite maketh the parties contracted, both the matter of Matrimonie, and the Miniſters, and the forme to be theſe words: I take thee, &c. Bellar. de Matrim. cap. 6. Here are two great abſurdities: for firſt the Preachers and Miniſters of the word only are the diſpenſers of the myſteries and ſacraments of the Church, 1. Cor. 4.1. therfore the parties themſelues cannot be the miniſters of Matrimonie, which they ſay is a ſacrament. Secondly, it is not euery word that ſanctifieth, but the word of God, 1. Tim 4.5. but theſe words, I take thee, &c. are no part of the word, therefore they haue no power to ſanctifie.

1.Cor.4.1.

1.Tim.4.5.

26 The Rhemiſts hold opinion, that Henoch and Elias do yet liue in their bodies in paradiſe: Apoc. 11. ſect. 4. But paradiſe is now no other place but heauen, 1. Cor. 12.2.4. But there (they ſay) Henoch and Elias are not, for they ſhall come againe in their owne perſons (as they hold) and reſiſt Antichriſt, and in the end be ſlaine of him; but bodies once glorified in heauen, can no more die, neither are ſubiect to violence: If then they be not in heauen, they are not in paradiſe, which is no other place but heauen. Let now any indifferent man iudge, how handſomely theſe things agree together.

1.Cor.12.24.

27 That the Angels ſhall beare the ſigne of the croſſe before Chriſt comming to iudgement. Bellarm. de ſanctis, lib. 2. cap. 28. This alſo is a phantaſticall conceit of theirs, without any ground of Scripture, or any good reaſon.

Many abſurdities about the carnal preſence of Chriſts bodie in the Euchariſt which Papiſts are driuen vnto, they make Chriſts bodie in heauen and earth at one time, and ſo a monſtrous bodie that reacheth from heauen to earth.

They encloſe Chriſts body in a thinne wafer cake.

But of al other popiſh abſurdities, theſe are moſt groſſe and palpable, which they are driuen to confeſſe about their deuice of tranſubſtantiation in the Euchariſt.

28 Firſt, they doe grant, that the bodie of Chriſt may be, and is in many places at once locally and viſiblie, that his fleſh is at the ſame time in heauen, and in earth in the Euchariſt, Bellarm. de ſacram. Euchariſt. lib. 3. cap. 4. Yet the Angell ſaith contrary, He is riſen, for he is not here, Matth. 28.6. Which had been no good argument, if Chriſts body be in many places at once.

29 Secondly, they further affirme, that Chriſts body in heauen, and at the ſame time in earth, are not ſundry bodies, or diuers parts of one bodie, but one whole body, not deuided or diſcontinued from it ſelfe, Bellar. ibid. Thus they make Chriſt a monſtrous bodie, that can fill heauen, and earth, and indeed they in ſo ſaying, deſtroy his humanitie.

30 Thirdly, they grant that the body of Chriſt is in the ſacrament with all his parts and dimenſions, hands, face, feete. Bellarm. lib. 3 de Euchariſt. cap. 7. But what an abſurd and impoſſible thing is this, that the body of a man, as of three cubites in height, and hauing other dimenſions anſwerable to the proportion and ſtature of an humane body, ſhould be incloſed in a thinne wafer cake, ſuch as they vſe in their Euchariſt, not a ſpanne in breadth, without deſtruction of the parts and dimenſions of the bodie?

31 Fourthly, that one and the ſame bodie of Chriſt, in the ſame inſtant, may be ſaid to be, Surſum, deorſum, Aboue, and below, Remotum, propinquum, Neere vnto the earth, and farre diſtant from it, that it may be in motion in one place, and yet reſt and be at quiet in another, as the ſoule in the body, as it is in the feete, is neere to the earth, as in the head, it is further off. Bellarmine de ſacram. Euchariſt. lib. 3. cap. 4.

cap.4. Theſe are abſurdities contrary to the rule of reaſon, that contradictorie ſpeeches ſhould in one inſtant be true of the ſame body or ſubiect. And what is hereſie if this bee not, to reſemble and compare the fleſh of Chriſt to a ſoule or ſpirit, that as the ſoule is in the body in no certaine place, but euery where, ſo the fleſh of Chriſt ſhould be in the world? for this followeth of the Ieſuites compariſon betweene the ſoule of man, and the fleſh of Chriſt.

They make Chriſts bodie like the ſoule, and ſo ſpirituall.

5 Corpus Chriſti incipit eſſe in altari, (ſaith Bellarmine) per conuerſionem panis in ipſum, The bodie of Chriſt beginneth to be in the Altar by the conuerſion or turning of the bread into his bodie, Lib. 3. de ſacram. cap.4. What great blaſphemie is this, to affirme that Chriſts fleſh is made of bread? for theſe are their owne words, that the bread is not annihilate, that is, turned into nothing, but into the body of Chriſt. And Bellarmine alſo confeſſeth, that Chriſts body in the Euchariſt is made of bread, as the wine was of water by our Sauiour Chriſt, Iohn 2. But in that myracle it is certaine the water was the matter whereof the wine was made, for otherwiſe Chriſt would not haue bid the ſeruants fill the water-pots with water, if he had purpoſed to create wine of nothing rather then to change water into wine. Bellarm. de ſacram. Euchariſt. lib.4. cap.24. Thus Chriſt by popiſh diuinitie ſhall haue a breaden body. 32

They make Chriſts bodie of bread.

6 That after the words of conſecration, there remaineth onely the accidents of bread and wine, as their colour, taſte, roundneſſe, and ſuch like, the ſubſtances of them being changed: And ſo they confeſſe againſt the rule of nature and reaſon grounded vpon Scripture, that accidents haue a being and ſubſtance of their owne without a ſubiect, Harding defenſ. apolog. 305. pag. And it is the generall opinion of all Papiſts: So in their opinion there may be the whitenes, roundnes, and taſte of bread, and yet no bread: the redneſſe, tartneſſe, and other properties of wine, and yet no wine. If a man then ſhould aske, what round or white or red thing is this? they cannot ſay bread or wine, for there is none left: Neither will they ſay, that the body of Chriſt is either white or red, and thus are they driuen to their ſhifts. Whereupon ſome of their ſchoole men haue ſaid, Accidentia illa ſunt in aëre, tanquam in ſubiecto: The accidents are in the ayre as in their ſubiect. De conſecrat. diſtinct.2. Species, in gloſſa. 33

They make accidents without a ſubiect.

7 They are the accidents of bread and wine, which are eaten, and chawen, or rent by the teeth, Bellarm. lib.1. de ſacram. Euchariſt, cap.11. reſponſ. ad argum.5. And which goe downe into the bellie, and nouriſh and feed the body, Harding. defenſ. apolog. pag.305. Thus by popiſh philoſophie, the accidents of wine make a man drunke, the accidents of bread may feed a man and make him fat, without either bread or wine. 34

Accidents of wine may make one drinke with Papiſts.

8 That Chriſt would not haue the externall figures and ſhapes of the elements changed, but remaine ſtill, becauſe man would abhorre to eate humane fleſh in the proper ſhape, Bellarmine, lib.3. de ſacram. Euchariſt. cap.22. But what an abſurd thing is this? as though Chriſt would command any vnſeemelie thing, or contrarie to humanitie. And how could the Apoſtles command the Gentiles to abſtaine from ſtrangled, and from bloud: Act.15. when as by their doctrine they did eate daily in their aſſemblies the raw fleſh and bloud of Chriſt? 35

They make Chriſtians eaters of raw fleſh.

9 If the conſecrate hoaſt, as they call it, chance to putrifie and corrupt, or to be burnt with fire, or deuoured of a mouſe, or any other vermine by the negligence of the prieſt, they ſay, it ceaſeth to bee the body of Chriſt, and that God in that very inſtant ſupplieth ſome other matter. Bellar. lib.3. de Euchariſt. cap.24. ad arg.6. Or elſe it returneth into the nature and ſubſtance of bread againe, as other Papiſts affirme, Fox pag.496. So there is no leſſe myracle wrought by occaſion of the prieſts negligence, then was before by the words of conſecration. And it is not enough for God to worke myracles for men, but euen for Mice alſo: yet Bellarmine telleth vs very ſoberly, that all this is done, Sine miraculo, without a miracle: But how I pray you, can bread be turned into fleſh, and fleſh againe into bread without a miracle? 36

Miracles wrought for mice in the Papiſts opinion.

10 Yea ſome of them are not aſhamed to write thus, Si canis vel porcus deglutiret hoſtiam conſecratam integram, non video quare corpus Domini, non ſimul trayceretur in ventrem canis vel porci: If a Dogge or a Hogge ſhould deuoure a whole conſecrated hoaſt, I ſee nothing to the contrary, but the bodie of Chriſt may paſſe withall into the bellie of the dogge or hogge. Alexander Halenſ. part.4. quaſt.25. memb.1. And the allowed Gloſſe ſaith: Corpus Chriſti poteſt euomi, The body of Chriſt may be ſpued or vomited vp againe: De conſecr. diſt.2. cap.28. 37

The bodie of Chriſt may be vomited.

11 They ſuffer not the lay people to be partakers of the cup, but to receiue in one kind onely, alleaging theſe and ſuch like weightie cauſes, as the danger of ſpilling, ſheading, and ſhaking the blood out of the cup, or the ſouring, or elſe ſticking vpon mens beards, and ſuch like, Bellarm. lib.4 de Euchariſt. ca.24. Fox pag.1150. Are not theſe (thinke you) matters of great moment and importance, to fruſtrate, and make void the inſtitution of Chriſt? 38

They feare ſpilling of the wine vpon mens beardes.

Vnto theſe and ſuch like abſurdities of pope-catholike religion, we may adioyne alſo the profound and waightie queſtions, and deepe diſcourſes of popiſh Diuines: as to begin with their captaines and ringleaders, and firſt fathers of ſuperſtition: Auſtine the Monke, that was ſent into England by Gregory the firſt, ſent vnto his maſter to know his iudgement and reſolution in theſe and ſuch like weightie matters.

1 Whether a woman great with child ought to bee baptized. 2. After how many daies the children that are borne ought to be baptized.

40 3. If ſhe be in her monthly courſe,after the cuſtome of women, whether then ſhe may enter into the Church,and receiue the communion.

41 4 Whether it bee lawfull for the man, after companie had with his wife, before hee bee waſhed with water,to enter into the Church: Theſe and ſuch like graue queſtions this Seraphicall doctor ſent vnto Rome to be diſcuſſed,ſauouring rather of Iewiſh ſuperſtition, then of Chriſtian faith and iudgement. *Plura apud Fox pag.*117.

42 The like ſtuffe a Mounkiſh letter ſent to King Naiton King of Pictes,by Abbot Colfride,containeth: In the which entreating of the ſhauing of prieſts,he exhorteth the King to reforme his countrey, and to imitate the ſhauing of Saint Peter,rather then the ſhauing of Simon Magus: Which at the firſt appearance (ſaith hee) hath a ſhew of a ſhauen crowne, but if you marke his necke, you ſhall find it curtailed in ſuch wiſe,as you will ſay, it is rather meete to be vſed of the Simoniſts,then of Chriſtians. The blind ſuperſtitious King hauing read this letter,kneeled on the ground,and gaue God thankes that he had deſerued to receiue ſuch a preſent out of England: *Ex Beda lib.5.cap.*22. Is not this deepe diuinitie, and fit matter for the king and ſtates of a land to buſie their heads about? And had the countrey no need to be reformed touching the doctrine of faith or manners,but all muſt be laid aſide,and care only taken for ſhauing of crownes? He ſpeaketh much of S.Peters ſhauing, how Peter was ſhauen one way,Simon Magus another: but where findeth he in Scripture,or any approued writer, either this or that? But ſuch was the diuinitie,that Monks ſpent their time in in thoſe daies.

43 Such another great and difficult queſtion much troubled and buſied the Popes ſchoolemen of later times: as who ſhould be our Ladies confeſſor,or ghoſtly father: after much diſcuſſing and debating of this matter, it was agreed to be S.Iohn. But hereupon ſprang a more doubtfull matter, that ſeeing our Ladie was void of all ſinne both originall and actuall,as they affirme,what need ſhee ſhould haue of confeſſion,or if ſhe did confeſſe,what ſhe did ſay in her confeſſion. And heere Albertus Magnus doth helpe at a pinch,and telleth vs plainely her confeſſion was this: That ſhe had receiued that great grace to be the mother of Chriſt,not ex condigno, of any dignitie of her owne: but yet notwithſtanding of congruitie, Albert.cap.74.ſuper Euan.Miſſus eſt.

44 Anno 1509. There was a fierce contention renewed betweene the Franciſcane and Dominike friers,about the conception of the Virgin Marie.The Franciſcans held this moſt blaſphemous opinion,that ſhe was not only void of actual ſin,but euen free from original ſin,vnto the which ſhe was not ſubiect,no not one moment of her Conception.The Dominikes affirmed more agreeable to the Scriptures,that Chriſt onely had this priuiledge to be conceiued and borne without originall ſinne, notwithſtanding they granted that the bleſſed Virgine was alſo ſanctified and purged in her mothers wombe from originall ſinne.

Yet the Franciſcans preuailed,and the poore Dominikes with the truth, were cruſht to the walles, the Pope himſelfe (who was then Sixtus the fourth) determining againſt them. *Plura Fox pag.*800. Were not theſe deepe diuines and profound doctors, that would trouble themſelues with this queſtion,which was long before decyded by the Apoſtle, who doubteth not to ſay, That all haue ſinned, Rom.3.23. Rom.5.12. Rom.3.23.& 5.12. Yea and Marie her ſelfe acknowledgeth that ſhe had need of a Sauior,Luk.1.47. and therefore was a ſinner as well as others. Such were the matters which in thoſe times of ignorance and darkenes the popiſh Clergie did occupie themſelues in: Magis puerilibus ineptijs, quàm ſacerdotum & cordatorum virorum prudentiæ conuenientia: Matters fitter for children to toy withall, then beſeeming the grauitie of prieſts and ſtayed men,as Conſtantine ſaith, writing to Alexander and *Arrius, Euſeb.de vit.Conſtantin.lib.*2.

45 *Turrianus 2.tract.c.*17,hath this abſurd poſition, Tertij ordinis angeli præſunt ſacerdotibus & eorum præſidio ſacrificium conficitur: The angels of the third order are preſent with Prieſts at the altar, and helpe them to make the ſacrifice: firſt,when was he in Paradiſe to know which Angels are of the firſt,which of the ſecond,and third order? Againe, where find they that this office is committed to Angels to miniſter the Sacraments?Whereas our Sauior in ſaying hoc facite, do this in remembrance, &c.gaue charge not to Angels,but to his Apoſtles; for the Angels need no remembrance of Chriſt being alway in his preſence.

46 *Bellarm.*of the bread in the Euchariſt writeth thus,Panis per ſe irrationabilis eſt: The bread is without reaſon of it ſelfe,but the prieſt prayeth,vt rationabilis fiat tranſeundo in corpus Chriſti: that it may be made reaſonable,or indued with reaſon,by paſſing into the bodie of Chriſt,*lib.3.de euchariſt.c.*20. Did euer any man heare before of reaſonable bread? was he reaſonable,thinke you,that thus writeth? for he ſpeaketh not of Chriſts bodie,but of bread paſſing into his bodie,that it may bee reaſonable: and beſide here is another abſurditie granted,that bread goeth into Chriſts bodie, and Chriſts bodie commeth out of bread.

47 *Bellarmine lib.2.de effectu ſacramen.c.*22. ſaith,that the wicked man ſumit quidem ore verum corpus Chriſti, ſed nihil recipit in anima niſi peccatum,doth take the true bodie of Chriſt with his mouth, and ſinne into his ſoule: Here are many abſurdities ioyned together, firſt, Chriſt is made the miniſter of ſinne, ſecondly,Chriſt and the diuell are placed in one temple together,but what ſocietie, ſaith the Scripture can there be betweene light and darknes,thirdly, Satan is made ſtronger then Chriſt, for he taketh poſſeſſion of the ſoule,Chriſt entreth onely into the bodie.

48 *Patritius lib.3.c.4.*hath theſe words,Sancta eſt eccleſia,atqui ſanctius multo eſt in ea ſacrificium: The Church is holy, but the ſacrifice in the Church is more holy: a great abſurditie, that the idolatrous ſacrifice of the Maſſe ſhould be more worthie then the Church: firſt, nothing in the whole world can be more excellent then the Church but the bleſſed Trinitie, the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghoſt: and therefore in the ſymbole, after our beleefe in the Trinitie followeth the Church, tanquam domus habitatori ſuo, as the houſe after the dweller, as Auguſtine ſaith; but of their Maſſe in the Creed there is not one word: ſecondly, the Maſſe receiueth ſtrength from the Church, for thus the prieſt prayeth: Reſpect not my ſinnes Lord, ſed fidem Eccleſiæ, but the faith of thy Church; therefore as our Sauiour ſaid to the Phariſies, whether is greater the gold of the temple, or the temple that ſanctifieth the gold? Matth. 23.17. ſo I aske them whether is greater your Maſſe, or the Church, which ſanctifieth and maketh your Maſſe acceptable? &c. Matth. 23.17.

Thus farre alſo concerning the abſurd and friuolous poſitions maintained by our aduerſaries: I profeſſe not (as I haue often ſaid) in this treatiſe to make a collection of all, but euery where, taking what came next to hand, to giue the Reader a taſte, referring the reſt to his owne obſeruation; and I truſt, by theſe few examples which I haue ſet downe, we may eaſily iudge and diſcerne of popiſh religion: for it fareth with them, as Auguſtine ſaid of ſome other heretikes in his daies: Quemadmodum ſolet accidere, vt quando tranſeuntes nubes per obſcura noctis intuemur, earum caligine ſic acies noſtra turbetur, vt in contrarium nobis ſydera currere videantur: ſic iſti, quia in erroris ſui nubilo pacem non inueniunt, &c. As it happeneth, when we ſee the clowdes mooue in a darke night, our ſight is ſo dimmed, that we imagine the ſtarres to goe another way: So theſe fellowes not finding any end or ſtablenes in the clowdes of their error, are not able rightly to iudge of the truth, but thinke that the ſcripture and all goeth awrie: De diuerſ. ſerm. 15. Euen thus our aduerſaries being beſotted with their owne imaginations, and their eye of iudgement obſcured with the thicke cloudes of wilfull ignorance, doe runne as it were in a maze, taking errour for truth, and abſurd and ſtrange poſitions for catholike and ſound doctrine.

THE THIRD PILLAR OF POPISH DOCTRINE, CONSISTING OF THREE PARTS, LOOSE ARGVMENTS, WEAKE ſolutions, and ſubtill and ſophiſticall diſtinctions.

THE FIRST PART SETTING FORTH THE LOOSE and light Arguments whereby Papiſtry is vpholden.

FIrſt let vs ſee how pithily our aduerſaries diſpute, and how luſtily they lay about them for the Supremacie, and peerleſſe authority of the Pope.

1 Act.12.4. 1.Cor.9.5. Peter did excommunicate Ananias and Sapphira: He healed the ſicke by his ſhadow: Ergo, he was head of the Church, Rhemiſt. annot. Act.5.ſect.5.8. Peters perſon was garded with foure quaternions of ſouldiers, Act.12.4. the Church prayeth for him, *ibid.ſect.*4. Paul nameth him Cephas, 1.Corin.9.5. Ergo, he was cheefe of the Apoſtles, and conſequently the Pope his ſucceſſor is head of the Church.

2 Math.16.19. Chriſt ſaid vnto Peter, I wil giue vnto thee the keyes of the kingdome of heauen. Math. 16. 19. And Chriſt againe bid Peter feede his ſheepe, Iohn 21. Ergo, Peter and his ſucceſſors the Popes are the Iudges of the true ſenſe of the Scripture. *Bellarm. de verb. interpret. lib.*3.*c.*5.

3 Iohn 10.16. Chriſt ſaith, Iohn 10.16. There ſhall be one ſhepheard, and one ſheepfold: Ergo, there ought to be one cheefe Paſtor of the vniuerſall Church, and that is Peter and his ſucceſſours, Bellarm. lib. 1. de pontific. Roman. cap. 9. Whereas Chriſt in that place ſpeaketh of the calling of the Gentiles: Other ſheep I haue alſo, which are not of this fold: That they together with the Iewes ſhall make but one ſheepefold vnder Chriſt.

4 Iohn 17.20. Chriſt ſaid to Peter, I haue prayed for thee, that thy faith ſhould not faile: Ergo the Pope cannot faile, nor erre in faith, *Bellarm. de Roman. pontif. lib.*4.*cap.*3. So Chriſt prayeth for all the faithfull. Ioh. 17.20. Therefore by this reaſon all beleeuers ſhould be priuiledged from errour.

5 Math.18.20. Whereſoeuer two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midſt of them, Math. 18. 20. Ergo, it belongeth to the Pope to call and congregate councels: for to bee aſſembled in the name of Chriſt, is nothing elſe but to be gathered together by the Popes authority, which hee hath receiued from Chriſt, *Bellarm. de concil. lib.*1.*cap.*12.

So by this reaſon if two or three of the faithfull meet together in the feare of God, Chriſt will not be preſent, vnleſſe they haue the Popes leaue to come together.

6 Chriſt ſaid to Peter, Put vp thy ſword into thy ſcabberd: Ergo, the Pope hath both ſwords, *Harding. ex Iuel. pag.*579. A ſimple argument, Peter was rather rebuked for ſtriking with the ſword, then commanded to vſe it.

7 1.Pet.5.13. The Church that is at Babylon ſaluteth you, 1. Peter 5.13. Ergo, Peter was at Rome: for by Babylon heere he meaneth Rome, *Bellarmine. lib.*2.*de pontif. cap.*2. A ſilly argument to proue Peters beeing at Rome: he was at Babylon, Ergo, at Rome: yet by their owne confeſſion Rome is Babylon, which is the ſeat of Antichriſt.

8 Rom.1.5. Your faith is publiſhed through the whole world, Rom. 1.5. Ergo, the Church of Rome cannot erre, Rhemiſt. ibid. So S. Paul ſaith of the Church of the Theſſalonians, your faith is ſpread abroad into all quarters, 1. Epiſt. 1.8. Ergo, neither could their Church erre in faith.

9 Numb.11.16. God tooke of the ſpirit that was in Moſes, and gaue it among the ſeuenty Elders, Numb. 11. 16. Ergo, Biſhops haue their authority from the Pope, Bellarmine. Anſw. The Pope might rather chalenge to be Aarons ſucceſſor, who was the High Prieſt, then Moſes. And hath the Pope then ſuch abundance of the ſpirit of God, that hee can afford a portion thereof to all the Biſhops in the world, and yet keepe enough for himſelfe?

10 Melchiſedech was both King and Prieſt: Ergo, the Pope is alſo a temporall prince, *Bellarm. lib.*5. *de Rom. pontif. cap.*9. This argument beſide that it hath no ſequele at all, containeth blaſphemy: for Melchiſedech was onely a type and figure of the ſpirituall kingdome and prieſthood of Chriſt, as the Apoſtle maketh the application, Heb.7.

11 Then began men to call vpon the name of the Lord, Gen. 4. 26. Ergo, there were Monks before the flood. Bellar. de Monach. lib. 1. cap. 5.

Gen. 4. 26.

12 Suffer little children to come vnto me, Math. 19. Ergo, yong men and children may be made Monks, Bellar. de Monach. lib. 2. cap. 35.

13 God ſaid to Abraham, Goe out from thy kinred and from thy Fathers houſe, Gen. 12. 1. forget thine owne people, and thy Fathers houſe. Pſalm. 45, 10. Ergo, it is lawfull for children without their parents conſent to enter into profeſſion of Monkerie, Bellarm. ibid. cap. 36.

Geneſ. 12. 1. Pſalm. 45. 10.

14 Now for purgatory, which they imagine to be a place of temporall torment after this life, they reaſon thus out of Scripture. The Prophet Dauid ſaith: Lord rebuke me not in thine anger, nor chaſtiſe me in thy wrath. Pſalm. 38. 1. Wee went through fire and water. Pſalm. 66. 12. Who ſhall abide the day of his comming? for he is like a purging fire, and as fullers ſope. Malach. 3: 2: Ergo, there is a purgatory fire after this life. Theſe arguments are too vaine for children: As though where the Scripture ſpeaketh of fire, it muſt needs be vnderſtood of purgatory fire, whereas the Prophet Dauid by water and fire vnderſtandeth the afflictions of the Church; and the Prophet Malachy, the day of the Lords viſitation:

Pſalm. 38. 1. Pſalm 66. 12. Malach. 3. 2.

15 The like pithie arguments they ground out of the new teſtament, as Matth. 5: 22: Hee that is angry with his brother is culpable of iudgement, he that ſaith Racha, ſhall be iudged by a Councell, Luke 23. the theefe vpon the Croſſe ſaid to Chriſt, Remember me when thou commeſt into thy Kingdome. Acts 2. 24. whom God hath raiſed vp, and looſed the ſorrowes of hell (as they read) for it was impoſſible for him to bee be holden of it. Ergo, there is a purgatory after this life, Bellarm. de purgator. lib. 1. cap. 4. loc. 5. 7. 8. Theſe be their goodly arguments, which if they proue any thing, do inſinuate thus much, that Chriſts kingdome is purgatory, as in the ſecond place, and that Chriſt himſelfe was in purgatory, as it followeth by their collection out of the third place alleaged: And that a man for a raſh worde ſpeaking ſhall be tormented in purgatory, which (they ſay) exceedeth all the paines and puniſhments of this life, as out of the firſt place.

Math. 5. 22. Luke. 23. 42. Acts 2. 24.

16 The like arguments they haue for purgatory drawne from prophane authority, as from the Turkes Alcaron, out of Plato in Gorgia, out of Cicero in ſomnio Scipionis, and Virgils Æneads, and laſt of all, flames of fire do breake forth from the great hill Ætna, and out of other places: Ergo, there muſt needs be a purgatorie, Bellar. cap. 7. & 11. Are not theſe ſubſtantiall arguments to ground a mans faith vpon? for Bellarmine ſaith, it is an article of Faith to beleeue purgatory, and that hee which beleeueth it not, is ſure to goe to hell, Lib. 1. de purgat. cap. 11. Thus the vnbeleeuing Turkes, the heathen Philoſophers and Poets, are become maſters of Chriſtian mens faith.

17 Chriſt raiſed Lazarus from the dead, Iohn 11. the rulers daughter, Math. 9. the widdowes ſonne, Luke 7. Ergo, we ought alſo to pray for the dead. Bellar. lib. 2. de purgat. cap. 15.

18 Rom. 2. 7. To them which continue in well doing, glory, honour, and immortality. Ergo, Saints are to be worſhipped, Bellar. de ſanct. beatit. lib. 1. ca. 13. arg. 7. Moſes prayeth thus, Remember O Lord, Abraham, Iſaac, and Iſrael thy ſeruants, Exod. 32. Iob ſaith, haue pitie vpon me, O my friends, Iob. 19. 21. Ergo, we may and ought to make our prayers vnto Saints, Bellar. ibid. cap. 19. Theſe arguments do rather moue laughter, then miniſter any matter worthy of confutation.

Rom. 2. 7. Iob. 19. 21.

19 The Iſraelites were commanded to ſtrike the bloud of the Paſchall Lambe vpon the two ſide poſts of the dore and the vpper dore poſt. Exod. 12. 7. Iacob laying his hands acroſſe did bleſſe Ioſephs ſons, Gen. 48. Apoc. 14. 1. hauing his Fathers name written in their foreheads: this is the ſigne of the croſſe: Ergo, it is an holy and venerable ſigne, Bellarm. de imaginib. Sanctor. lib. 2. ca. 29. Is not this well reaſoned for the croſſe?

Exod. 12. 7. Geneſ. 48. 14. Apoc. 14. 1.

20 The Iſraelites were commanded thrice a yere to goe vp to Ieruſalem Deut. 16. Chriſt went vp with his mother and Ioſeph to Ieruſalem, Luke. 2. Paul made haſt to goe vp to Ieruſalem to keepe the feaſt of pentecoſt, Acts 20. Ergo, now alſo Chriſtians may goe in pilgrimage to Ieruſalem and to the holy Land, Bellarm. de cult. ſanctor. lib. 3. cap. 8. Thus we learne a new point of popiſh Diuinitie, that our Sauiour Chriſt and the Apoſtles went in pilgrimage: Whereas Chriſt himſelfe ſaith the contrary: The time commeth when ye ſhall neither in this mountaine, nor in Ieruſalem worſhip the Father, Iohn 4. 23. This agreeth with an other popiſh tale, that Chriſt came in pilgrims weede to Saint Gregories table of hoſpitalitie, Rhemiſt. annot. Heb. 13. ſect. 2.

Iohn 4. 23.

21 Sweare not by heauen, it is the Lords ſeate, nor by the earth, it is the Lords footſtoole. Math. 5. The place where thou ſtandeſt is holy ground. Exod. 3. Thou haſt known the holy Scriptures of a child. 2. Timoth. 3. 15. The very letters of Scripture are called holy, becauſe of the holy contents. Ergo, alſo images of Saints becauſe they are ſignes of holy things are to bee reuerenced and worſhipped, Bellarm. de imaginibus ſanctor. lib. 2. cap. 12. and theſe with the like are their ſtout arguments for the adoration of Images.

Math. 5. 34. Exod. 3. 5. 2. Timoth. 3. 15.

22 The Prophet commanded Naaman to waſh himſelfe 7. times, 2. King. 4. The Altar muſt be cleanſed 7. daies, Exod. 29. 37. Iob offered 7. Bullocks and ſeuen Rammes for his friends, Iob. 42. So in the Apocalyps, 7. Churches, 7. Angels, 7. Starres, 7. Candleſtickes, 7. Thunders, and the like. Ergo, there are ſeuen Sacraments, Bellarm. de Sacrament. lib. 2. cap. 26. Rhemiſt. annot. Apocal. ſect. 3.

23 Act. 8. 17. They did lay their hands vpon them, and they receiued the holy Ghoſt. Erge, confirmation,

Act. 8. 17.

Act.19.6. which is done by laying on of hands, is a Sacrament, Acts 19.6. Paul laid his hands vpon them, and the holy Ghoſt came vpon them, and they ſpake with tongues, Ergo, a ſacrament of confirmation, Bellar. de ſacram. confirmat. lib. 2. cap. 2.

24 God is able to bring a Camell through the eye of a needle, Matt. 20. 26. Chriſt came in vnto his Apoſtles the doores being ſhut, roſe out of his graue, the ſtone lying vpon it. Ergo, he may as well, and is preſent bodily in the Euchariſt, Rhemiſt. Math. 26. ſect. 11. Bellarm. lib. 3. de ſacram. cap. 6. Chriſt transfigured his bodie in the Mount. Math. 17. he turned water into wine, Iohn 2. Appeared to Saule out of heauen: Acts 9. Ergo, hee may as well be preſent in the Sacrament, and conſequently is, Rhemiſt, Iohn 2. ſect. 2. Act. 9. ſect. 1.

25 For the ſacrifice of the Maſſe they reaſon thus: Prou. 9. 1. Wiſedome hath built her an houſe, ſlaine her victuals and drawne her wine: Melchiſedech brought forth bread and wine to Abraham, Gen. 14. 18. The Prieſts and Leuites ſhall not want a man, to offer burnt offerings continually, Ierem. 33. 18. Ergo, there is a ſacrificing prieſthood vnder the Goſpell, and the Maſſe is properly a ſacrifice; Bellarm. lib. 1. de Miſſa. ca. 6. 9. But heere they haue proued nothing, vnleſſe they ſay, that the Maſſe is a burnt offering, or that therein there is an oblation of bread and wine, which they will not grant.

Ierem.33.18.

26 Likewiſe they reaſon out of the new teſtament: as Iohn 4. Chriſt ſaith, The houre commeth, when the true worſhippers ſhall worſhip my Father in ſpirit and truth. Acts 13. 2. As they miniſtred and faſted, the holy Ghoſt ſaid, Separate me Paul and Barnabas. Chriſt alſo ſaid, Hoc facite, Do this in remembrance of me. In all theſe places, by worſhipping, miniſtring, doing, we muſt vnderſtand ſacrificing: Ergo, the Maſſe is truly and properly a ſacrifice, Bellarm. cap. 11. 12. 13.

Iohn 4.23.
Acts 13.2.

27 Iob offered ſacrifice vnto God for his friends, Iob 42. Ergo, the Maſſe a ſacrifice propitiatorie. Bellarm. lib. 2. cap. 2.

28 1. Timoth. 2. 1. I exhort (ſaith the Apoſtle) that firſt of all ſupplications, prayers, and giuing of thanks be made for all men, for Kings, and for all that are in authority, that we may lead a quiet, and a godly life, Ergo, the Maſſe is a ſacrifice auaileable for the obtaining of temporal bleſſings, for theſe are the ſupplications which are made in the Maſſe, Bellarm. lib. 2. de Miſſ. cap. 3.

1 Tim.2.1.

29 Chriſt hanging vpon the Croſſe vttered but ſeauen ſhort ſentences in the hearing of thoſe that ſtood by, for the ſpace of three houres, all the while beſide holding his peace: Ergo, the Prieſt at maſſe is not bound to vtter all the Canon with a loud and audible voice, lib. 2. cap. 12.

30 The Prophet Dauid ſaith, Let my prayer be directed before thee as incenſe, Pſalm. 141. 1. Ergo, cenſing and burning of incenſe is to be vſed in the Maſſe, Bellarm. lib. 1. de Miſſa, cap. 15.

Pſalm.141.1.

31 For auricular confeſſion, they bring theſe and ſuch like arguments: Adam, and Eua confeſſed their ſinnes vnto God, Geneſis 3. and Cain alſo, Geneſis 4. At the voice of Chriſt Lazarus came forth of the Graue, and was looſed by his Apoſtles from his graue-cloathes, Iohn 11. So men confeſſing their ſins to the Prieſts, by them receiue abſolution. Ergo, auricular confeſſion neceſſary with particular enumeration of ſinnes.

It were too long to heape together, either all, or moſt of thoſe childiſh and wanton arguments, whereby our aduerſaries doe rather dally then diſpute with vs, miniſtring rather matter of ſport and laughter, then enforcing any ſound perſwaſion of their cauſe. But by theſe, which we haue ſeene wee may geſſe of the reſt. Let indifferent men now iudge, whether we may not iuſtly ſay vnto them (their proofes and arguments beeing ſo weake, and hanging ſo euill together, as Irenæus obiected to the heretikes) that they make a rope of ſand. All the world beginneth to ſee their nakedneſſe and beggery, what ſleight arguments, what looſe coniectures, what poore ſhifts they vſe: and how in moſt of their cheefe queſtions, they are faine to begge ſome helpe of the Iewes, and runne to their beggerly ceremonies, as S. Paul calleth them, for ſuccour: It ſhall not be amiſſe to ſee a few examples of this matter.

1 To proue their traditions beſide Scripture, they alleage the vnwritten traditions of the Iewes, Bellarmine de verb. lib. 4. cap. 8. And yet we read of no ſuch authenticall traditions which they had, but thoſe which were vnlawfull and ſuperſtitious, condemned by our Sauiour Chriſt, Mark. 7. 9. Yee reiect the commandements of God, to obſerue your owne traditions.

Papiſts borrow of the Iewes.
Mark.7.9.

2 They ground the vſurped monarchie of the Pope ouer the whole Church vpon the example of the high Prieſthood in the lawe, which was a type and figure of Chriſt, and in him accompliſhed, Heb. 4. 15. and 9. 24. Bellarm. de Roman. pontif. lib. 1. cap. 9.

Hebr.4.15.
c.9.24.

3 The name of Clerkes or Cleargy men Bellarmine deriueth from the Iewes: amongſt whom the Leuites were ſaid to be the Lords lot and inheritance, Numb. 18. Bellarm. lib. 1. de Clericis, cap. 2. And thus hee would bring in a legall and Iudaicall difference betweene the miniſters of the Goſpell and the people, as there was betweene the Leuites and the other tribes: Whereas before the Lord there is no difference between them in that reſpect: for they are all, both people and Paſtors, the Lords inheritance and lot, 1. Pet. 5. 3.

1.Pet.5.3.

4 The ſingle life of the Cleargy he would proue by the example of the Prieſts in the Law, who when their courſe came to ſacrifice, ſeparated themſelues from their wiues, Bellarm. de Cleric. lib. 1. cap. 19. But who ſeeth not, that this was a legall ſanctity onely, repreſenting the integrity and purity of the true & perfect Prieſt Chriſt Ieſus: for otherwiſe by the ſame reaſon, they may exact the like abſtinence of all Chriſtian people, becauſe all Iſraell was commanded to keepe from their wiues three daies, before the Lord appeared in Sinai, Exod.19.

5. 35 Vowes and Monkery proued by the example of the Nazarites and Rechabites, amongſt the Iſraelites, *Bellarm. de monach. lib.*1.*cap.*5.

6 Their lenten faſt warranted by Moſes and Elias, fortie daies faſt, Rhemiſt. Math.4.ſect.2.

7 They ſay, the Temples of Chriſtians ought to be built, ad ſimilitudinem templi Salomonis, after the ſimilitude and paterne of Salomons Temple, *Bellar. lib.*3.*de cultu Sanctor. cap.*3.

8 Their conſecrated oyle, ſalt, water, aſhes, and ſuch trumpery, they would warrant by the like ceremonies vſed in the Law, as the ſalt water, Numb.5. the water mingled with aſhes, Numb.19. *Bellarm. de cultu Sanctor. lib.*3.*cap.*7.

9 The Chriſme, which is vſed in the popiſh Church, in confirmation, brought in by ſuperſtitious imitation of the holy ointment, whereby the Prieſts and the tabernacle were annointed in the Law, *Bellar. de ſacram. Confirm. lib.*2.*cap.*8.

10.40 The Maſſe, a ſacrifice propitiatorie, becauſe the Iewes had ſacrifices for ſinne, Leuit.4.5. *Bellarmine de Miſſa. lib.*2.*cap.*2. As though all thoſe ſacrifices were not types and figures of one only propitiatorie ſacrifice of Chriſt vpon the croſſe. Leuit.4.5.

11 Their priuate Maſſes, wherein the prieſt receiueth alone, the people ſtanding by, authoriſed by the practiſe of the prieſts in the Law, who ſacrificed within, and the people waited without, *Bellar. ibid. cap.*9. As though the vaile of the Temple was not rent aſunder in the paſſion of Chriſt, which before kept the people from the ſight of the holy things: and now the papiſts would draw the curtaine before their eyes ſtill.

12 Popiſh Maſſing garments inuented to reſemble the coſtly attire of the High Prieſt in the Law, *Bellarmine de Miſſa. lib.*2.*cap.*15. Whoſe rich ornaments, and beautifull attire, were euident types and figures of the ſpirituall beauty and excellency of the kingdome and Prieſthood of Chriſt, Pſalm.45.9.13.14.

13 The ſuperſtitious dedication of their Churches they borrow from the practiſe of people vnder the law: as the Church was ſolemnly dedicated in Salomons time, in Ezra his daies, 2.Chron.7. Eſra 6. And by the Machabees, 1. Machab. cap.4. And therefore Chriſtian Churches ought to be dedicated in like ſort, *Bellarm. de cultu ſanctor. lib.*3.*cap.*5. whereas it is certaine that the ſolemne dedication of the Iewiſh temple, was a liuely reſemblance of the dedication of the true tabernacle, which was the body of Chriſt, Heb.8.2. And of the new and liuing way, dedicated vnto vs by the vaile, that is, his fleſh, Hebr.10.20. And yet neuer did the Iewes vſe halfe thoſe ceremonies (but ſuch toyes none at all) in dedicating the temple, as Papiſts doe in hallowing of theirs: Such are the burning of Tapers, picturing of Croſſes vpon the walles, ſprinkling of water, and of aſhes vpon the pauement, making of Characters: The Iewes themſelues would bluſh to beholde ſuch things Bellarm. ibid. Heb.8.2. Heb.10.20.

14 The adorning of their Churches, with images, croſſes, veſtiments of ſiluer, gold, ſilke, precious ſtone, their gorgeous and ſumptuous buildings, warranted by the example of Salomons temple, which was beautifull both within and without, *Bellarm. ibid. cap.*6. yet they might haue knowne this, that the beauty and glory of the firſt houſe did ſhadow forth vnto the Iewes the ſpirituall comlineſſe and excellency of the laſt houſe, that is, the Church of God vnder Chriſt, Haggeus 2.10. And ſo ſaith the Prophet Eſay, ſpeaking of the ſpirituall temple: I will lay thy ſtones with the Carbuncle, and thy foundations with Saphirs, chapter 54.11. Hagg.2.10.

Yet we deny not, but that the externall Churches alſo of Chriſtians ought to be built, & adorned with moderate coſt after a decent and comely ſort.

15 The Prieſts in the Law, were to iudge of leprous perſons, and to diſcerne their leproſie, Leuiticus 13.14. Therefore Chriſtians are now alſo bound to make particular confeſſion and enumeration of their ſinnes in the eares of the prieſts, *Bellarm. de pœnitent. lib.*3.*cap.*3. Yet the Prieſts were not to take knowledge of euery infirmity or diſeaſe, but of this contagious and infectious kinde: how then can they hence conclude, that the knowledge of all ſinnes both great and ſmall belongeth to the Prieſt? And who knoweth not, that herein the Prieſthood of the law, did decypher the prieſthood of Chriſt, by whom our ſpirituall leproſies are diſcerned and cured? Leuit.13.14.

16 Nay they doe not content themſelues with an apiſh imitation of Iewiſh ceremonies, but they alſo borrow from the corrupt practiſe of the Iewes and the erroneous gloſſes of their blind Rabbins, certaine points of their Pope Catholike Doctrine: as they allow prayer for the dead, by that preſident of Iudas Machabeus, 2.Machab.12.44. other points alſo of their popiſh faith, as concerning merits, free will, inuocation of Saints, traditions, beſide ſcripture and ſuch like, they would warrant by the practiſe of the Iewiſh ſynagogue, and the allowance of ſome of their Rabbins, as the compilers of the Apologie for the Romane faith, out of Proteſtants, labour to proue.

*Contra.*1. That place obiected is cited out of a booke not held of the Iewes themſelues to bee Canonicall, and is reiected by Proteſtants out of the canon, according to the iudgement of the ancient Fathers, and the purer ages of the Church: 2. The place is corrupted in the Latin tranſlation, which readeth he ſent twelue thouſand drachmes of ſiluer — to bee offered for a ſacrifice for the ſinne of the dead: whereas in the Greeke originall two thouſand onely are mentioned, and the word, dead is omitted. 3. It ſeemeth, that the abridger of this hiſtorie, added this of his owne, for neither Ioſeph, Ben Gorion, that writ fiue bookes in Hebrew of this matter, remembreth any ſuch thing to haue beene by Iudas Macchabeus, lib.3.c.19. Nor yet Flauius Ioſephus, in his book of Antiquities writing the ſame hiſtorie, lib.12.c.12. 4. And further, if this place were of any authority, it would iuſtifie the praying for thoſe which die in mortall and damnable ſinnes without any ſigne of repentance, as theſe did, who being dead, were found to haue Iewels conſecrate to the Idols of the Iamnites, which was a manifeſt Math.15.14. tranſgreſſion of the Law. 5. And concerning their other opinions borrowed of the Rabbins, we allow them to be fit maſters of their faith: if the blind lead the blind both fall into the ditch, as our bleſſed Sauiour ſaith, and ſo it commeth to paſſe heere: for theſe traditions and doctrines of the Rabbins, Mark.7.7. contrary to the Scriptures, are the very ſame reproued by our bleſſed Sauiour in thoſe times: they worſhip for doctrine the commandements of men: and ſo Hierome teſtifieth that the Iewiſh traditions, which Epiſtol. ad Algaſ.q 10. the Lord reproued, had their beginning from R. Sammai Hillet, Achiba, and ſome others, not long before the birth of Chriſt, which they called δευτερώσεις ſecond gloſſes or expoſitions: and this Bellar- Lib.4. de verb. Dei.c.10.ſſ.Hyeronym. Nouel. 146. mine alſo confeſſeth: againſt theſe traditions there is extant a conſtitution of Iuſtinian in theſe words. Qua deuterosis, quaſi ſecundaria traditio ab ipſis dicitur, in vniuerſum interdicimus vt qua ſacris libris comprehenſa non ſit, neque deſuper tradita per prophetas, &c. that which is called of them, deuteroſis as a ſecond tradition, we forbid in generall, as not being comprehended in the ſacred books, nor moreouer deliuered by the Prophets, but containeth certaine things excepted by men ſauouring of terrene things, and nothing at all of diuine, &c.

Laſtly, the Papiſts do farre exceed the Church of the Iewes, in number of ceremonies, but in lightneſſe and vanity of ſuch childiſh toyes, the Iewes neuer came neer them, or were once like vnto them. 47.17 We will giue one inſtance of the ceremonies vſed in baptiſme: Firſt, they touch the eares and the noPopiſh Baptiſm full of toyes. ſtrels with ſpettle of the party baptized, that his eares may be opened to heare the word, and his noſtrels to diſcerne betweene the ſmell of good and euill. Secondly, the prieſt ſigneth his eyes, eares, mouth, breaſt, forehead, with the ſigne of the croſſe, that all his ſenſes thereby may bee defended. Thirdly, hallowed ſalt is put into his mouth, that he may be ſeaſoned with wiſedome, and kept from putrifying in ſinne. Fourthly, the party is annointed with oyle in his breaſt, that he may be ſafe from euill ſuggeſtions; and betweene the ſhoulders, which ſignifieth the receiuing of ſpirituall ſtrength. Fifthly, he is annointed with the Chriſme in the top of the head, and thereby is become a Chriſtian. Sixthly, a white garment is put vpon him to betoken his regeneration. Seuenthly, a vaile is put vpon his head, in token that he is now crowned with a royall Diademe. Eighthly, a burning taper is put into his hand, to fulfill that ſaying of the Goſpell, Let your light ſhine before men, Bellarmine, lib. 1. Epiſt.119. cap.19. *de Baptiſm. cap.*26. 27. I report me now to the Iewes, if euer they vſed ſuch toyes, or doe to this day in any of their rites and ceremonies. So that we may iuſtly ſay with Auguſtine, Ipſam religionem oneribus premunt, vt tolerabilior ſit conditio Iudæorum, qui legalib. ſarcinis, non humanis præſumptionibus ſubijciuntur: They cumber religion with their burdenſome inuentions: ſo that the Iewes caſe was more tolerable, (then theirs that liue vnder poperie) who were ſubiect onely to legall ceremonies, not to the inuentions of men. And thus wee ſee the weakenes of popiſh religion, and feebleneſſe of their cauſe, who through very beggery are conſtrained to patch vp their tattered garments with Iewes rags. Thus much for the firſt part. Now to the next.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS PILLAR, CONtaining the inſufficient anſweres and ſolutions of our aduerſaries.

AS moſt of the arguments, which our aduerſaries vſe againſt the common cauſe of the Goſpell, and the truth, doe very feebly and weakely conclude any thing againſt vs: ſo their anſweres likewiſe, which they ſhape vnto ſuch arguments, as they are preſſed withall, are very ſimple, and doe bewray the weakeneſſe of their cauſe. Some particulars for examples ſake we will ſee.

Being vrged concerning prayers in an vnknowne tongue, with that place of Saint Paul; If I 1.Cor.14.14. pray in a ſtrange tongue, my ſpirit prayeth, but mine vnderſtanding is without fruit, 1. Corinth. 14. 14. That is, ſuch prayers are vnprofitable to the Church which it vnderſtandeth not. They anſwere, that publike prayer is made vnto God, not to the people: and it is enough, if God vnderſtand, though the people vnderſtand not, *Bellarmine, de verbo Dei, lib.*2. cap. 16. *obiect.*2. A very abſurd anſwer: for if it were ſufficient, that God vnderſtandeth publique prayers, they need not to be vttered with the voyce, but conceiued onely in the heart, the thoughts whereof are as well vnderſtood of God, as the words of the mouth. And the Apoſtle reaſoneth cleane contrary, ſhewing that the vnlearned cannot ſay Amen to prayers not vnderſtood, verſ. 16. Ergo, the vnderſtanding alſo of the people is neceſſary.

2 Whereas we alleage that place, *Apoc.*22.18. If any man ſhal adde vnto theſe things, God ſhal adde, &c. Apoc.22.18. To proue the Scriptures to be ſufficient, and to conteine all neceſſary matter to ſaluation, and that nothing ought to be added to them to ſupply their wants. Their anſwere is, that Iohn doth onely forbid any addition to be made to that booke, *Bellarm. de verbo Dei, lib.*4. *cap.*10. reſp. ad ſecund. obiect. wheras notwithſtanding the ſame ſentence is pronounced elſewhere, generally of the whole word of Deut.4.2.12. Prou.30.6. God, that nothing muſt be added to it, Deut.4.2.12.32. Prouer.30.6.

3 2.Tim.3.16. Wee againe reaſon thus, The whole Scripture is profitable to teach, to improue, &c. as S. Paul ſaith. 2. Timoth. 3.16. therefore the Scriptures conteine all things neceſſarie to ſaluation, wee neede no other helps. Their anſwere is, that Saint Paul ſaith not the Scriptures onely are ſufficient to theſe purpoſes, but that they do, ad hæc omnia prodeſſe & iuuare, they do profit and help towards theſe purpoſes, Bellarmine ibid. As though it followeth not in the ſame place, that the man of God may be abſolute, being made perfect to all good workes, v.17. If the Scriptures then worke an abſolute perfection in men touching the former duties, then are they not onely profitable, but ſufficient.

4 Luk.2.52. To proue, that although Chriſt, in the very firſt moment of his conception, was perfect God and perfect man, yet as man receiued not at once the fulneſſe of wiſedome, but grew vp, and encreaſed therein dayly, we vrge that place in Luke: And Ieſus increaſed in wiſedome and ſtature, cap. 2.52. They anſwere, he did increaſe opinione hominum, onely in the opinion of men: whereas it followeth in plaine and direct words in the text, Hee increaſed in the forenamed graces, both with God and men. Bellarmine De Chriſti anima, lib.4.cap.5. reſp. ad 3. locum.

5 Mark.13.32. To that place, Mark 13.32. of that day and houre knoweth no man, no not the Angels which are in heauen, neither the Sonne himſelfe ſaue the Father: which words plainely ſhew, that Chriſt as man onely knoweth not the time of his comming to iudgement: They frame this anſwere, Non ſcit ad dicendum alijs: The ſonne of man is ſaid not to know it, that is, to declare it to others, but to keepe it ſecret to himſelfe, Bellarm. ibid. This anſwere is very inſufficient: for as the ſonne knoweth it not, ſo neither do the Angels: if the ſonne be ſaid, not to know it to tell others, and yet knoweth it in himſelfe: ſo likewiſe the Angels ſhould know it to themſelues, though not for others: but I thinke, they will not ſay, that the houre of Chriſts comming is reuealed to the Angels. Againe, as the ſonne is ſaid not to know it, ſo the Father is ſaid to know it; if the Sonne onely know it not, to reueale it to others, then the Father knoweth it, to the intent he ſhould declare it to others: but neuer yet was it declared to any creature, nor euer ſhall, till Chriſt ſuddenly appeare in the cloudes.

6 Whereas S. Peter ſaith, whom God raiſed vp, looſing the ſorrowes of Hell (as the Rhemiſts tranſlate) Chriſt, they ſay, looſed other men from thoſe dolours of hell: Rhemiſt. in eum locum, Bellarm. de Chriſt. lib.4. cap.8. yet it followeth, becauſe it was impoſſible for him to be holden of it: theſe ſorrows therefore were looſed, which Chriſt was in for a while, but could not be long kept there namely, the ſorrowes of death, as we do reade agreeable to the Greeke text, not the ſorrowes of hell: It is therefore but a childiſh ſhift which they vſe, and contrary to the ſenſe and words of the text.

7 Galat.2.11.14. Being vrged with that ſcape that Peter made, Galath. 2. for the which hee was reprooued of Paul, they ſhoote out theſe words, Sine dubio peccatum illud aut veniale, ac leuiſſimum fuit, Either it was a veniall and moſt light offence, or he offended onely materially: that is, erratum quoddam fuit, ſed abſq; Petri culpa: an error was committed, but without any fault at all of Peters, Bellarm. de pontif. lib.1,28. A moſt groſſe and abſurd anſwere. Firſt S. Paul ſaith he withſtood Peter to the face, that is, openly and plainely rebuked him, and not without iuſt cauſe, for he was to be blamed, Galath.2.11. Secondly, Peters fault was, that he conſtrained the Gentiles to doe like the Iewes, v.14. And by his example he cauſed the Iewes and Barnabas to diſſemble: Is diſſimulation then ſo ſmall an offence? or was it ſo light a fault, to conſtraine the Gentiles Iudaizare, to play the Iewes? or was Paul ſo vndiſcreete, ſo ſharply to reprooue ſo worthie an Apoſtle for ſo ſmall a fault? Thirdly, what doctrine is this, that a man may ſinne, and not be guiltie of ſinne? may doe a fault, and not bee faultie? as though ſinnes committed ignorantly and vnwittingly, doe not bring a guilt with them; albeit not ſo great and heinous, as ſinnes willingly done: For to what end elſe were ſacrifices appointed in the law for ſinnes of ignorance? Leuitic.4.

8 Act.25.10. Where wee alleage the example of Saint Paul, that appealed vnto Cæſar ſaying thus, I ſtand at Cæſars iudgement ſeate where I ought to be iudged, Act.25.10. to proue that as Paul, ſo Peter and his ſucceſſors were ſubiect to the terrene and ſecular power of the Emperors. Their anſwere is, that there is not the like reaſon of Heathen and Chriſtian gouernours: for vnto them, euen the chiefe Biſhop was ſubiect in ciuill cauſes: but when Princes became Chriſtians they then were to ſubmit themſelues to the Pope, as ſheepe to the ſhepheard. Bellarm. de Rom. Pontif. lib.2. cap.29. A worthie anſwere: as though the Goſpell did abridge the lawfull authoritie of Princes: for if it were the right of heathen Emperours to be ſupreme Iudges of al perſons: (otherwiſe the Apoſtle would not voluntarily haue appealed to an vnlawfull and vſurped power;) Much more may Chriſtian Princes chalenge the ſame right. They cannot anſwer, that Cæſar had this power by vſurpation: for the Apoſtle was not compelled thereunto, but made free choyſe of Cæſar to be his Iudge.

9 Act.6.2. To proue that it is not lawful nor conuenient for one and the ſame man to be both an Eccleſiaſtical and temporall prince: We bring forth theſe and ſuch like places of Scripture, It is not meete wee ſhould leaue the word of God and ſerue tables. Act.6.2. No man that goeth a warfare, entangleth himſelfe with ſecular buſineſſe, 2. Timoth. 2. They anſwere vs, that it is not meete an Eccleſiaſticall perſon ſhould attend vpon baſe offices, as to be a Cator or prouider of victuals, to be occupied in buying and ſelling, and ſuch like, Bellar. de pontif. lib.5. cap.10. But they haue ſaid juſt nothing: for who ſeeth not that theſe ſecular affaires are forbidden, not ſo much becauſe of their baſeneſſe or vileneſſe, as becauſe they are lets and impediments vnto the paſtorall function? Now it is moſt plaine and euident, that the charge and care of ciuill gouernment, are as great, nay a greater diſtraction of the minde, then the executing of ſmaller and baſer offices, and require greater ſtudie and induſtrie, and therefore doe as well, nay much rather hinder and let the progreſſe of ſpirituall matters. And yet further to ſhew what a friuolous and feeble anſwere they haue made, our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, to put all out of doubt, Who made me a Iudge, or diuider ouer you? Luke 12.14. They will not ſay (I trow) that theſe are baſe and vile offices, to be a Iudge of controuerſies, and a diuider of lands and hereditaments, and to giue vnto euery man his owne: yet euen theſe principall prerogatiues of ciuill gouernment our Sauiour doth refuſe, as vnfit to be matched with the preaching of the Goſpell.

Luke 12.14.

10 Whereas we inferre vpon Peters example, Act.10.26. who forbad Cornelius to worſhip him, that Saints and holy men are not therefore to be adored with any religious worſhip: It is anſwered, that Cornelius did well, and as he ought, in worſhipping Peter: but Peter of modeſtie refuſed to take it at his hands, Bellar. de ſanct. lib.1.cap.14. Yea, but Peter rendereth a reaſon: For I am alſo a man, verſ. 26. inſinuating, that ſuch religious worſhip belonged vnto God, not vnto man: If it be then a point of modeſtie onely for the creature to refuſe that homage which is due to the creator, then was this modeſtie in Peter.

Actes 10.26.

11 That there was and is, one and the ſelfe ſame ſubſtance both of the ſacraments of the old Teſtament, and of ours, we prooue it by S. Pauls words, They all did eate of the ſame ſpirituall meate, and did all drinke the ſame ſpirituall drinke, 1. Corinth. 10.4. Anſwere is made, that they did eate and drinke the ſame ſpirituall meate and drinke amongſt themſelues, not the ſame with vs, Bellarm. de Sacram. lib.2.cap.17. which is but a vaine ſhift: for the Apoſtle addeth, they dranke of the ſpirituall rocke that followed them, and the rocke was Chriſt, v.4. Now Chriſt is the ſame ſpirituall rocke both vnto vs, and vnto them: not vnto them onely among themſelues, or to vs onely, but both vnto them and vnto vs.

1.Cor.10.4.

12 That the baptiſme of Iohn, and the baptiſme of Chriſt, was one and the ſame in ſubſtance, and of the ſame efficacie and force, we proue it thus: Iohns baptiſme was the baptiſme of repentance for remiſſion of ſinnes: Luke 3.3. So alſo was the baptiſme of Chriſt: repent and be baptized euery one of you, in the name of Ieſus Chriſt for the remiſſion of ſinnes: Act.2.38. Ergo, there was the ſame fruit and effect of each baptiſme. They doe anſwere vs thus: No ſaith the Ieſuite, there is not the like reaſon of both, for repentance went before Chriſts baptiſme as a neceſſary preparation thereunto, but it followed Iohns baptiſme, as an effect thereof: Bellarm. de baptiſ. lib.1.cap.23. This anſwere is too vaine and friuolous, for in repentance are two things, the purpoſe of heart, Act.11.23. and the amendment of life, which conſiſteth in being buried and dead vnto ſinne, and riſing vp to the newnes of life, Rom. 6.4. This purpoſe and vow of heart with confeſſion of ſinnes, went as well before Iohns baptiſme as Chriſts: for the people firſt came and confeſſed their ſinnes, and then were baptized of Iohn: Matth. 3.6. Luke 3.12. And as for amendment of life, which is the accompliſhment and fruits of repentance, it neither went before Iohns baptiſme, nor Chriſts: not Iohns by their owne confeſſion, not Chriſts: for in the ſame inſtant, that the Apoſtle ſaid, Repent and be baptized: Act.2. They were baptized, ſo that the time ſerued them not to ſhew the fruites of repentance, and by baptiſme we are buried vnto ſin, and raiſed vp to newnes of life, Rom. 6.4. But the fruites and efficacie of baptiſme goeth not before, but followeth after: thus the vanity of their anſwer is vaniſhed and blowne away.

Luke 3.3.
Actes 2.38.
Rom. 6.4.
Matth. 3.6.
Luke 3.12.

13 Whereas we obiect that ſaying of Chriſt, Except ye eate my fleſh and drinke my blood, yee haue no life in you, Iohn 6.53. That it cannot be vnderſtood of the Euchariſt, as our aduerſaries doe expound all ſuch places in that chapter, for then no man could be ſaued without this ſacrament, which were an abſurd and hard ſaying: And ſo both infants, which are not fit to receiue it, and all ſuch, as are preuented by ſome remediles neceſſitie, ſhould be cut off from the hope of ſaluation. They anſwer thus: firſt, that the place is to be vnderſtood only of thoſe that are Adulti, of yeeres of diſcretion, not of infants. And againe, all men are bound either to communicate, reipſa aut deſiderio, either in very deede, or elſe in vow, and deſire, Bellarm. de ſacram. Euchariſt. lib.1.cap.7.reſp. ad argum.4. This anſwere is like vnto the reſt, very inſufficient, and may be turned vpon themſelues, for whereas they vrge the neceſſitie of baptiſme out of theſe words of our Sauiour, Except a man be borne of water and the ſpirit, he cannot enter into the kingdome of heauen, Iohn 3.5. May it not as well bee anſwered, that children alſo are excluded here, as in the other place? for the words are in both places generally ſpoken without exception. Againe, Chriſt ſaith, except ye eate: if this may be done in vow and deſire, that is, ſpirituallie, which we affirme and grant, then is it not meant of the ſacramentall eating only, as the Papiſts beare vs in hand, and ſo they are contrary to themſelues: Laſtly, if it be neceſſarie to receiue the Euchariſt either actually and in deed, or in vow and deſire (which is moſt true.) There is the like neceſſitie thereof, as of baptiſme: For the Rhemiſts confeſſe as much, that they before God are accepted as baptized that depart this life with vow and deſire to haue this ſacrament, but by ſome remediles neceſſitie could not obtaine it, Annot. Iohn 3. ſect.2. Thus baptiſme by their owne confeſſion is prooued to bee no more neceſſarie then the other Sacrament: and ſo are they taken with their owne wiles.

Iob 6.53.
Iob 3.5.
Baptiſme no more neceſſary, then the Euchariſt by their owne confeſſion.

14 Againſt the reall preſence in the Euchariſt, amongſt other arguments, we doe bring forth this: Saint Paul in diuers places calleth the Sacrament bread after conſecration: as 1. Cor. 10.16. The bread which we breake, is it not the communion of the bodie of Chriſt? And chap. 11.26. As often as ye ſhall eate this bread, and drinke this cup, ye ſhew the Lords death till he come.

1.Cor.10.16.
1.Cor.11.26.

The Apoſtle calleth it bread, Ergo, it is bread, not the body, fleſh or blood of Chriſt. To this argument, ment, they make vs this anſwere: The Apoſtle calleth it bread, becauſe it was bread before, or becauſe it appeareth to be bread, not that it is bread, Bellarm. de Euchariſt. lib. 4. cap. 24. reſponſ. ad loc. 13. Yea, but the Apoſtle maketh mention together, both of the bread and cup: if it be called bread, becauſe of the appearance only; then by the like reaſon ſo is the cup: and as there is no bread in deed, ſo there ſhall be no cup. Againe ſaith he, The bread which we breake; but the ſhape or forme of bread cannot be broken, but the ſubſtance. Neither will they ſay, that Chriſts bodie is deuided or broken: therefore it is true bread which the Apoſtle ſo calleth. Laſtly, if they like this ſpeech of the Apoſtle, that he ſhould call it bread after conſecration; how commeth it to paſſe, that they are afraid to cal it bread in the Canon of the Maſſe, but the body of Chriſt onely? It ſhould ſeeme therefore by their practiſe, that they miſlike the Apoſtles phraſe and manner of ſpeech.

15 That the Euchariſt ought to be miniſtred in both kinds, we confirme it out of that place, Ioh. 6.53. Except ye eate the fleſh of the ſonne of man, and drinke his blood, ye haue no life in you: which our aduerſaries expound of the Euchariſt. Their anſwere is thus: that here the coniunction or particle, &, and, muſt be taken after the phraſe of Scripture, for the Diſiunctiue, vel, either: as if the ſenſe were this: except you either eate or drinke, Bellarm. de Euchariſt. lib. 4. cap. 25. by this reaſon, they make it a thing indifferent, either to eate or drinke, to doe any one of them: and ſo, as the people doe onely eate in the Sacrament amongſt them, and not drinke; the contrarie cuſtome alſo may be brought in, for the people to drinke onely, and not to eate, which I thinke they will be loath to grant.

Ioh. 6.53.

Againe, where they preſſe vs for the neceſſitie of baptiſme with that place, Iohn 3.5. Except a man be borne of water and the Spirit: we can anſwere them with their owne words: and in this place, &, is taken for either, vel, as if it were ſaid, Euery man muſt bee borne either of water or of the ſpirit. Although we haue better anſwers, and are not driuen to vſe any ſuch ſhift, yet thus they doe make rods for themſelues to be whipt withall.

Iohn 3.5.

16 Whereas we thus reaſon, that the Euchariſt ought to be miniſtred in both kinds, becauſe the death of Chriſt cannot otherwiſe be liuely ſhewed forth, but both by eating and drinking in remembrance of Chriſt: The Ieſuite boldly anſwereth, that a ſufficient commemoration may be made by receiuing only in one kind, Bellarm. de Sacram. Euchariſt. lib. 4. c. 27. cleane contrary to S. Paul, who ſaith; As often as ye ſhall eate this bread, and drinke this cup, yee ſhew the Lords death till he come, 1. Cor. 11.26. To remember and ſhew forth the death of Chriſt, he requireth receiuing in both kinds.

1. Cor. 11.26.

17 That the mariage of Miniſters, is authorized by the word of God, we proue out of S. Paul, 1. Tim. 3.11. who hauing firſt deſcribed the office of Biſhops and Paſtors of the Church, and what manner of men they ought to be, commeth afterward to ſet forth the qualities and conditions that ſhould be in their wiues: That they ſhould be honeſt ſober and faithful. The Ieſuit here telleth vs, that the Apoſtle meaneth ſuch, as had been their wiues before they were ordained, li. 1. de Cleric. c. 20 Anſw. I will aske them then one queſtion: Their former wiues maried before, did they renounce them afterward, or retaine them? If they renounced them, what need had the Apoſtle to bee ſo carefull in ſetting downe rules and precepts for their wiues? for it was no more to them, how they demeaned themſelues then other women. If they retained them in the name of their wiues, they either liued together, or apart: not apart, for the Apoſtle preſcribeth an order for the Miniſters houſe and children, verſ. 4. But there is no reaſon that the mother ſhould want the comfort of her children, though ſhe inioyed not the companie of her husband: It is therefore moſt like the mother liued with her children, and the children with their father: and where elſe then ſhould their mother liue, but with their father? If then they liued in one houſe together, how then is ſhe not now his wife as freely, and for all honeſt purpoſes and ends of mariage, as before? Who ſeeth not now, how weakely theſe things hang together?

1. Tim. 3.11.

18 And that it is as lawfull for the Miniſters of Gods word to marrie after their calling to the Miniſterie, as before, we ſhew it by theſe words of the Apoſtle: Haue we not power to lead about a ſiſter a wife? 1. Cor. 9.5. Their anſwer is, that it muſt be read thus, a ſiſter a woman: for certaine deuout women followed the Apoſtles which miniſtred vnto them of their ſubſtance, Rhemiſt. Annot. in hunc locum. Anſere. But this were a ſuperfluous ſpeech, to ſay, a ſiſter a woman, whereas it had been enough to ſay, ſiſter, which word alſo expreſſeth the ſexe. And ſeeing the Apoſtles had wiues of their owne, it is an abſurd thing to imagine, that they would chuſe rather to goe in the companie of ſtrange women, their owne wiues being more neceſſarie to attend on them, and more fit for auoyding of offence.

1. Cor. 9.5.

19 That the hearing and preaching of the word of God, is a neceſſary note of the Church, wee conclude out of our Sauiour Chriſts words: Iohn 10. My ſheepe heare my voice. Bellarmine anſwereth, it is a note whereby a man may geſſe of his election, to heare the word of God, but not a viſible note to know the Church by, Bellarm. de notis eccleſ. lib. 3. cap. 2. A groſſe anſwere, as though whereby a man is knowne to bee a true member of the Church, the Church it ſelfe alſo is not knowne to bee a true Church. If one man be knowne to bee of the Church, becauſe he obeyeth the voice of Chriſt, why ſhall not a congregation of many men be knowne to be the Church of God likewiſe by embracing the word of God?

Iohn 10.16.

20 Againe, our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, Whereſoeuer two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the middeſt, Mat. 18. Hence we conclude, that to aſſemble together in the name of Chriſt, that is, to heare his word, and receiue the Sacraments, is a moſt manifeſt note of the true Church. Bellar- mine anſwereth: this place ſheweth not where the Church is, but where Chriſt is, Bellarm.ibid. A moſt ridiculous and vnskilfull anſwere: as though where Chriſt is knowne to be preſent, there is not neceſſarily the Church: for where elſe is hee to be found, but in his Church?

Matth. 18.20.

21 Chriſt ſaid to Peter, Dic Eccleſiæ, Tell it to the Church, an obſtinate ſinner muſt be referred to the cenſure of the Church: Ergo, Peter and his ſucceſſors are not the ſupreame iudges: for heere hee is referred to the Church. Bellarm. So the Pope doth dicere Eccleſiæ, tell it to the Church, id eſt, ſibi ipſi, that is, hee telleth it to himſelfe, lib. de concil.2.cap.19. Anſwer. Is not heere good ſtuffe? the Pope is now become the whole Church: contrarie to the ſenſe of this place: for in cenſuring of offenders wee muſt proceede by degrees: firſt, one muſt rebuke him that ſinneth, then two or three laſt of all it muſt be declared to the Church: ſo then, as two or three are more than one, ſo the Church is more than 2. or 3. But the Pope is not 2. or 3. much leſſe can he ſtand for the whole Church.

22 That the Apoſtles were all equall in authoritie, wee ſhew it out of Saint Paul, Epheſ.2.20. where Epheſ.1.20. the Church is ſaid to be built vpon the foundation of the Apoſtles indifferently. Bellarmine anſwereth: that they had all chiefe authoritie committed vnto them as Apoſtles, but Peter as ordinary paſtor. Anſwer. But the Apoſtleſhip was the higheſt office in the Church. A paſtor or Biſhop was inferior to an Apoſtle: firſt Apoſtles, ſaith Saint Paul, 1.Corinth.12.28. If then they were equall as Apoſtles, there could be no ſuperioritie among them: but ſuch are their fond and childiſh anſwers.

1.Cor.12 28.

23 Whereas wee reaſon thus againſt reliques: that therefore the Lord buried the bodie of Moſes, leaſt the Iſraelites ſhould haue worſhipped his bodie, and ſo committed Idolatrie. Bellarmine telleth vs, that men are not ſo prone to Idolatrie now as the Iſraelites were, and therefore may more ſafely be admitted to worſhip reliques. de Reliqu. Sanct.l.2.c.4. Whereas daily experience of popiſh Idolatrie ſheweth the contrary: for there was neuer, no not in the moſt corrupt times of that Church, ſuch groſſe Idolatrie and ſuperſtition, and with ſuch boldneſſe committed, & ſo vſually, as is now among papiſts.

And theſe with ſuch like are their anſwers to ſuch places of ſcripture, as we bring againſt them. The like anſwers alſo they giue vs in other matters.

24 Whereas we tell them, that this name Latinus in Greeke letters thus, λατεινος doth conteine the myſticall number of 666. Apocal.13. The Ieſuite maketh this ſimple anſwer, that Lateinus with e.i. maketh that number, not with ſingle i. Lib.3.de Pontif.cap.10. Anſwer. Heerein firſt he ſheweth his ignorance, as though the Greeke diphthong, ei, be not vſually expreſſed by a ſingle i. in Latine. And what if e. be left out? we want but fiue of the number. But what a poore ſhift is this, wee haue found out the name of Antichriſt in Latinus ſauing one ſmall letter.

Apoc.13.18.

25 Where wee tell them, that Rome is the citie built vpon ſeuen hilles: they anſwer vs, that it now ſtandeth in a plaine, in Campo Martio, Sanders. A ſillie ſhift. But it is certaine at that time, when Saint Iohn wrote the Apocalypſe, that it ſtood vpon ſeuen hilles, & to this day, there are ancient monuments and goodly buildings, Churches, chappels, abbeyes, or ſuch like vpon euery one of thoſe hils.

26 It were too long particularly to ſet downe all their abſurd and anſwerleſſe anſwers, their ſillie ſhifts and ſtarting holes. As whereas Gregorie maketh one Scholaſticus author of the Canon of the Maſſe, they anſwer, S.Petrus Scholaſticus dici poteſt, that S.Peter may well be termed a ſchooleman, Bellar.de Miſſ.lib.2.cap.19. which is indeede to ſet the ſpirit of God to ſchoole; to ſay that the Apoſtles were brought vp in ſchooles.

27 Thus in another place he is conſtrained to grant, that mariage betweene Infidels ought to be, after they are baptized, the ſecond time contracted and ſolemnized, Bellarm.de Matrim.lib.1.5. as though they had liued in adulterie before: for if the firſt contract were firme, what neede a ſecond? and if the firſt contract be diſſolued by baptiſme, then are the parties free to marrie where they will. See what an abſurd anſwere this is.

28 Whereas wee tell them that Sylueſter the ſecond, was a great coniurer and Necromancer, as it is recorded in authenticall ſtories: the Ieſuit thus pretily would excuſe the matter, that becauſe he was wel ſeene in Geometrie and in the Mathematikes, therefore that rude and vnlearned age iudged him to be a Sorcerer, Bellarm.de pontif.lib.4.cap.14.

29 So another telleth vs, whereas wee worthily vpbraid them with that whore-Pope of theirs dame Ioane, that ſate two yeares in Papacie: that the Pope might be an Hermaphrodite, or Herkinalſon, that is, both a man and a woman: or being firſt a man might afterwards be turned into a woman: Copus dialog.1.p.47. And all this might be more likelie in their opinion, then that a woman ſhould ſtep into the Popes chaire. What now will theſe men be aſhamed to ſpeake or write, that dare vtter ſuch follies?

30 It were too long to declare all their ſhifts of deſcant, as wee ſay: as when they are preſſed with the authoritie of auncient writers, whom in words they will ſeeme to make great account of: if they cannot readily finde ſome cauill or other to ſhift it off, they wil not ſticke boldly to refuſe and denie them: as where we report the ſtorie out of Sozomene, vpon what occaſion Nectarius Biſhop of Conſtantinople aboliſhed the cuſtome of auricular confeſſion: Bellarmine ſteppeth in boldly and ſaith, Non ignoramus Sozomena in hiſtoria multa eſſe mentitum: Wee are not ignorant, that Sozomene hath told many lies in his hiſtorie, de pœnitent.lib.3.cap.14.

31 Likewiſe in another place the Ieſuite refuſeth Platina, non publica authoritate vitas illas Pontificium ſcripſit. He was not by publike authoritie allowed, to write the liues of the Popes, de pœnitent.li.3.c.13.

Benno a Cardinall refuſed, that wrote the ſtorie of Gregorie the 7. And the Ieſuites looſe coniecture is, that the booke was made by ſome Lutheran: whereas it is manifeſt that the booke is more ancient by almoſt fiue hundred yeeres, then the name of Luther. *Bellarm. de ſum. Pontif. lib.4. cap.*13.

But thus they deale not only with theſe latter writers, but with the moſt ancient: if Tertullian bee alleaged againſt them not to their liking, they crie out that he was an heretike, and wrote this or that in defence of hereſie, Harding. defenſ. 28. Indeed Tertullian had his errors, but yet all that he wrote contrary to them, is not hereſie. 34

Where we cite that ſaying of Cyprian; If the truth faint or faile in any point, we ought to returne to the originall of our Lord, and to the traditions of the Goſpell; We receiue this anſwere: S. Cyprian vſed that ſaying in an euill cauſe: and therefore he defending a falſhood, was driuen to the very ſame ſhifts; whereunto all heretikes are driuen, Defenſ. Apolog. pag. 172. Harding. See the boldneſſe of this man: The counſell and commandement of Christ, Search the Scriptures, is no better with him then an heretical ſhift. 35

When we affirme by S. Hieromes teſtimony, that Pope Liberius ſubſcribed to the Arrians, we are ſent away with this ſcornfull anſwer: that Hierome was deceiued by a rumor dwelling in the Eaſt. Harding. pag. 66. 36

But that famous learned Father Auguſtine, is moſt vncurteouſly vſed at their hands of all the reſt. The Rhemiſts refuſe Auguſtines expoſition of theſe words in the Goſpell: vpon this rocke, &c. Math. 16. which he expoundeth not of Peters perſon, but of Peters faith, Annot. 16 Math. 16. ſect. 8. 37

They likewiſe refuſe his reading, Hebr. 11. Iacob worſhipped leaning vpon his ſtaffe: but they will needs haue it, Iacob worſhipped the top of his ſtaffe: as though Iacob made an Idoll of his ſtaffe, Annot. Heb. 11. verſ. 21.

Bellarmine alſo taketh the ſame liberty to reiect Auguſtines iudgement: as where Auguſtine interpreteth that place of S. Pauls, 1. Cor. 3. He ſhall be ſaued as through fire, of the afflictions or tribulations of this life. But the Ieſuite wreſteth the words to ſignifie pugatorie, de purgat, lib.1. cap.4.

1.Cor.3.15.

And in another place hee doth not onely refuſe, but confute at large Auguſtines interpretation of that place of Peter, Epiſt. 1. cap. 3. of the ſpirits now in priſon, which were ſometime diſobedient, de Christo, lib.4. cap.13.

Likewiſe Bellarmine reprehendeth Auguſtines interpretation of that place, Geneſ. 17. 14. and ſaith he was deceiued in following the Greeke text, lib. 2 de effectu ſacram. cap. 17. Alſo he refuſeth Auguſtines interpretation of thoſe words of Chriſt, Vpon this rocke, which he expoundeth of faith: ſaying that Auguſtine was deceiued through ignorance of the Hebrew tongue.

Geneſ. 17.14.

Yea hee doth not onely reiect this learned father, and by argument confute him, but hee proceedeth further to charge him with ſome things which he holdeth not: as that Auguſtine ſhould hold the booke called Eccleſiaſticus for a diuine and Canonicall booke: whereas he correcteth himſelfe, that howſoeuer he had formerly called and counted it propheticall: he retracteth it: Non videor recte appellaſſe verba prophetica, (quid ſuperbis terra & cinis?) quia non in eius libro legitur, quem certi ſcimus appellatum eſſe prophetam: I may ſeeme not rightly to haue called thoſe propheticall words (Why art thou proud O duſt and aſhes) becauſe it is not read in his booke, whom we are ſure to haue bin called a Prophet. Beſide he auoucheth Auguſtine, that he ſhould make the booke of Wiſdome canonicall, and he citeth, lib.1. de praedeſtinat. c.14. But Auguſtine in that place ſaith no ſuch thing: for whereas hee had alleaged a certaine place concerning Henoch out of the 4. chapter, and he heard, that certaine brethren refuſed that teſtimonie, tanquam non de libro canonico adhibitum, as not taken out of a canonicall booke: Auguſtine anſwereth no more but this. 1. quaſi & excepta huius libri atteſtatione, &c. as though excepting the witneſſe of this booke, the matter be not euident of it ſelfe. 2. Oportet vt iſtum librum omnibus tractatoribus anteponant: they muſt preferre this booke before all other writers. &c. hee maketh it not canonicall, but giueth it a preeminence before other writings. 3. The moſt that hee ſaith of this booke is this: that the ancient writers when they cited this booke as a witneſſe, Nihil ſe adhibere niſi diuinum teſtimonium crediderunt: thought that they did vſe none other, then a diuine teſtimonie, &c. he only ſaith, and that, out of other mens opinions, that this book hath diuine ſayings in it: which being confeſſed maketh it not canonicall; for he granteth, that ſome diuine things may be found among the heathen: ſi in ipſis poteſt aliquid diuinum inueniri: If among the Heathen ſome diuine thing may be found, &c. as he giueth inſtance of Oſtanes, Plato, Hermes.

So Likewiſe he chargeth Auguſtine to thinke and ſay, that Salomon was reprobate of God, and to be a caſtaway: whereas Auguſtine in that place quoted in Pſalm.26. hath indeed [a] ſuch words, that Salomon was reprobate of God, but it is euident that he ſpeaketh of his temporall reiection not of his finall reprobation: as may appeare by theſe reaſons: 1. by whom (ſaith he) multa ſancta praecepta & diuina ſacramenta ſpiritus ſanctus in diuinis literis operatus eſt: The holy ſpirit in the diuine writings wrought many holy precepts and diuine ſacraments, &c. how could he haue the ſpirit of ſanctification, and be a reprobate? 2. Ipſe Salomon mulierum amator fuit, &c. Salomon was a louer of women, &c. and then follow theſe words: and was reprobate of God: but euery louer of women, is not reprobate of God eternally, though for a time he ſeeme to be. 3. What maruell, ſaith he, if Salomon fell among the people of God, in paradiſo non cecidit Adam, did not Adam fall in paradiſe, and the Angell in heauen? &c. Salomon did not fall in the counſell and decree of God, but among the people of God, Salomon not finally reprobate.

[a] In another place, whereas I chanced to ſay, I find no ſuch thing in Auguſtine, my meaning is, not in that ſenſe, Retect. p.199.

which was but for a time: and as Adam fell who finally was ſaued. 4. Salomon built a temple to the Lord (ſaith Auguſtine) in typo & figura futuræ Eccleſiæ & corporis Domini: in a type and figure of the Church and of the body of the Lord &c. but they cannot ſhew any type or figure of Chriſt appointed of God, that was a caſtaway. 34

35 Many ſuch places may be found in Bellarmine, where he aſcribeth to Auguſtine ſome things, which he either affirmeth not at all, or at the leaſt not in his ſenſe; as he ſaith that Auguſtine abſurdiſſimum cenſuit &c. thought[b] it an abſurd thing, that the hereſie of the Donatiſts after the yeare of the Lord 300. out of Carthage ſhould be propagated into all the world &c. and he quoteth lib. de vnitat. Eccleſ. c. 14. 15. for in this place produced Auguſtine. 1. Neither nameth the hereſie of the Donatiſts. 2. Nor yet vſeth the terme, moſt abſurd. 3. Nor yet maketh mention of the 300. yeare. 4. Neither ſpeaketh of the propagating of the Donatiſts hereſie into al the world, but that they ſhould fooliſhly thinke, that al other Churches being periſhed in the world, earum reparationem ex Africa per partem Donati, &c. they ſhould be reſtored and repayred out of Africa by the part or ſect of Donatus, &c. Thus it appeareth euidently, that Auguſtine is heere miſalleaged, howſoeuer a certaine popiſh cauiller go about to iuſtifie Bellarmine. 36

[b] I ſo tranſlate it now to take away all occaſiō of cauill, because (though the word cenſeo as Grammarians know, ſignifieth as well conſtituere decernere, to conſtitute, decree, as exiſtimare to thinke, and ſo elſwhere I tranſlated) yet the other ſeemeth rather to be Bellarmines meaning: yet hee is found ſtill Auguſtine to miſalleage as heere appeareth.

37 In like manner Albertus Pigghius moſt vnreuerently ſaith of Auguſtine, that he erred and lied, and vſed falſe Logique, in affirming matrimonie after a vow made to be perfit, and not to be vndone againe? Diſtinct. 27. Quidam.

38 Sometime they preferre Chryſoſtome before Auguſtine, as interpreting of thoſe words, 1.Cor.10. They did all eate eandem eſcam, the ſame meate: which words are expounded by Auguſtine, Tract. 26. in Ioannem. But his expoſition is by Bellarmine refuſed, lib. 1. de Euchar. c. 4. becauſe Auguſtine affirmeth, that they did eate the ſame ſpirituall meate with vs.

39 Sometime againe they refuſe Chryſoſtome; as Turriane ſaith, Non bene interpretatum eſſe locum: That he hath not well interpreted a certaine place taken out of the 22. Pſalme: Turrian tract. 1. c. 18. fol. 104.

40 Artenus lib. Apolog. 3. c. 25. Saith that Hierome erred in writing thus: Epiſcoporum ordinem in ſchiſmatis remedium non diuino, ſed humano iure inſtitutum: That the order of Biſhops was inſtituted, not by diuine, but rather humane law, for a remedie againſt ſchiſme.

41 Bellarmine with one breath ſaith, that Hilarius, Hypolitus, Apollinarius, were deceiued in expounding a certaine place in the ninth of Daniel, of the times of Antichriſt.

42 When Cyprian is alleaged for the authoritie of Scripture againſt vnwritten traditions: Bellarmine anſwereth that he ſo writ in confirmation of his error.

43 So he refuſeth Chryſoſtome ſuppoſed to be author of the imperfect worke vpon Matthew.

44 Maldonate refuſeth the expoſition of Auguſtine vpon that place Iohn 6. 62.

45 Belarmine reiecteth the iudgement of Beda, Theophylact. Oecumenius, about the vnction ſpoken of Marc. 6. and Iames 5. which they affirme to be the ſame.

46 Bernard is refuſed by the Ieſuite Salmeron concerning the conception of the Virgin Marie in originall ſinne.

47 Epiphanius is put off by D. Allen and Saunder with this ſhift, that the words are imperfect, as Vaſquez the Ieſuite blameth them.

48 The Councell of Eliberis is refuſed (which condemneth adoration of Images) being 1300. yeares old, becauſe it was prouinciall, and not confirmed by the Pope which Vaſquez alloweth.

49 Yea they doe not onely now and then, reiect ſome one two or more of the fathers: but ſometime at one lumpe they refuſe them all: as Bellarmine ſaith, their ſentence is to be followed, as farre as reaſon ſhall perſwade. Maldonate vpon that text Matth. 16. 18. ſaith, that doth not ſeeme vnto me to be the true ſenſe which all Authors, whom I can remember (except Hilarie) doe follow. Tolet interpreting a verſe of the 31. Pſalme ſaith: neither the Greekes, nor the Latine authors ſeeme vnto me to haue deliuered the perfect meaning thereof.

Wee ſee then, what account our aduerſaries make of the Fathers: who doe receiue and refuſe them at their pleaſure: what meaneth Campian then thus to write? Ration 5. Patres ingentis beneficij loco donatos explodere, quanti maleficij eſt? To refuſe the fathers, which are giuen vnto vs as a great treaſure, how great impietie is it? For I know none more guiltie of this impietie then themſelues: and what is now become of his vaine bragge? Ad Patres ſiquando licebit accedere, confectum eſt prælium: If the triall be put to the Fathers, the field is already won: when they themſelues fight not with, but againſt the Fathers at their pleaſure.

50 And as they deale with the ancient writers, ſo they ſpare not their owne friends. Harding ſaith, We take not vpon vs all that the Canoniſts or Schoolemen ſay or write: Defenſ. apol. pag. 385. The like they ſay of others: We binde not our ſelues to maintaine whatſoeuer Albertus Piggihus hath written, Cardinal Caietanus hath his errors: Eraſmus and Agrippa be men of ſmall credite, Alphonſus de caſtro, Beatus Rhenanus, Platina, appendix Concilij Baſilienſ. are ſtuffe little worth. Harding detection 307. b. a.

Bellarmine alſo is ſo bold as to checke Æneas Syluius, who afterward was Pope of Rome called Pius 2. for whereas wee alleage that ſaying of his, Ante Nicenum Concilium ad Romanam Eccleſiam paruus habebatur reſpectus, Before the firſt Nicene Councell there was ſmall regard had to the Church of Rome: The Ieſuite anſwereth Quæ ſententia Æneæ Syluij partim eſt vera, partim non eſt vera, which ſentence of Æneas Syluius is partly true, partly falſe, Bellarm. de Rom. pontif. lib. 2. c. 17. Thus in their mood, they neither ſpare old nor new writer, neither Cardinall nor Pope, friend nor foe: And no maruell, for as Auguſtine well ſaith, Si diuina lex perſuadere non poſſit, humana authoritas ad veritatem reuocare nequit. If the word of God cannot perſwade them, it is not ſtrange, that they are not moued with humane authority, Cont. Creſcon. lib. 1. cap. 3. and indeed, they make as bold with the holy Scriptures, as with the writings of men, wreſting and mangling them, altering and changing the text at their pleaſures.

43 As Bellarmine citing a text out of S. Luk. 22. 19. addeth theſe words of his owne, Cœnantibus eis, While they ſupped, hee tooke bread: whereas the text is, And when he had taken bread, : becauſe hee would proue (very fondly) that the bread was diſtributed in ſupper while, and the cup after ſupper, not both together, Bellarm. de ſacram. Euchariſt. lib 4 cap. 24. Luk. 22. 19.

44 In another plac he quoteth Apoc. 14. verſ. 1. For the ſigne of the Croſſe; and whereas the originall onely hath, hauing his fathers name written in their foreheads, they put in this clauſe, Hauing his name, and his fathers name, after the vulgar Latine. So in the Canon of the Maſſe, they adde theſe words vnto the Goſpell: Manducat ex hoc omnes, Eate ye all of this: whereas Chriſt ſaid onely, after the cup, Bibite ex hoc omnes, drinke ye all of this. Bellarmine ſaith, it is ſupplied by tradition, de ſacram. euchariſt. lib. 4. cap. 25. Apoc. 14. 1.

45 So 1. Iohn 4. 3. where the authenticall Greeke hath, Euery ſpirit which confeſſeth not Ieſus, they reade after their corrupt Latine text, Euery ſpirit which diſſolueth Ieſus: Without any ſenſe, whereas the text approueth the former reading, for the ſecond verſe ſpeaketh of ſpirits confeſſing Ieſus, ſo that conſequently this verſe muſt treate of ſpirits not confeſſing Ieſus. Vnto this place may be added all the corruptions of the vulgar Latine tranſlation, which are maintained by the Church of Rome, diſagreeing from the true originall in Greeke. 1. Iohn 4. 3.

46 Dureus cont. Whitaker. fol. 49. Denieth flatly that any ſuch words can be found in the 17. of Geneſis, or any other place, that circumciſion is called the couenant: whereas in the 13. verſ. the Lord ſaith, My couenant ſhall be in your fleſh, ſignifying circumciſion, which was a ſigne of the couenant: and Bellarmine alſo confeſſeth this ſaying, Circumciſio eſt fœdus, Circumciſion is the couenant to bee found there. lib. 1. de Euchar. cap. 11. But heerein they deale with vs, as the Iewes doe, which denie theſe words, (Erit vita tua quaſi pendens ante te, & non credes vitæ tuæ, Thy life ſhall hang before thee, neither ſhalt thou beleeue thy life) to be found in any part of Moſes: yet are they euidently to be read, Deut. 28. 66.

47 Laſtly, they doe not onely alter and change Scripture, but make ſcripture of their owne, as one of their ſide proueth the Pope to bee Dominus rerum temporalium, Lord of all worldly goods, Per illud dictum Petri, dabo tibi omnia regna mundi: By thoſe words of Peter, I will giue thee all the kingdomes of the world. Theſe words, notwithſtanding Peter neuer ſpake, but they were ſpoken by the diuell; a fit text ſure to ground the Popes Lordlike dominion vpon, Archidiacon Florentin. ex citation. Iuel. pag. 615. defenſ. Apolog.

More who liſt to ſee of our aduerſaries manner of corrupting Scripture: I refer them to that which hath been before ſaid of this matter: 1. Piller. part. 3. à loc. 46. ad 52. I ſay vnto them now, as Auguſtine to certaine heretikes in his time: Mortuus ſine ſenſu iacet, & valent verba ipſius: ſedet Chriſtus in cœlo & contradicitur teſtamento eius: A man lieth dead without ſenſe, and his will remaineth in force: Chriſt ſitteth in heauen, and dieth not, yet his teſtament is gainſaid: in Pſal. 21. Thus we ſee the weake anſweres, and beggerly ſhifts, which our aduerſaries through the weakneſſe of their cauſe, are driuen vnto. Who may fitly be reſembled to vſe Auguſtines compariſon, vnto ſubtile and crafty foxes: Vulpes ſolent habere tales foueas, vt ex vna parte intrent, ex alia exeant: Foxes are wont to haue ſuch holes, that they may goe in one way, and goe out another. Euen ſo doe our aduerſaries ſeeke ſtarting holes, playing faſt and looſe with vs, ſomtime denying the fathers ſomtime affirming with them, ſomtime appealing to Scripture, other while running from Scripture to tradition: and ſo going in and out at their pleaſure. Sed ad vtrumque foramen, as Auguſtine ſaith, captor vulpium retia poſuit: But the fox-taker (ſeeing their craft) hath laid his nets in both holes, that comming in and going out they are ſure to be taken, in Pſal. 80. So God be thanked, our Sauiour Chriſt this wiſe taker of foxes, hath ſo armed the defenders of his truth, that whether theſe wily foxes goe in or goe out, pretend Scriptures, fathers, or goe againſt them, we doubt not but their feet ſhall be caught with the ſnare of truth.

SOPHISTICALL DISTINCTIONS AND CVNNING ſleights deuiſed for the maintenance of Popery. Part.3.

WE are now come (by the grace of God) to ſhake one of the principall pillers of papiſtry: for herein lyeth the very ſtrength of their cauſe, and the very pith of popiſh ſchoole-diuinity, in deuiſing and inuenting ſubtile and ſophiſticall diſtinctions: thinking thereby to obſcure the light of the truth, and to ſhift off moſt euident places of Scripture. The chiefe of their diſtinctions, though not all, yet ſome we will ſet downe in their order, and weigh them in the balance of Gods word, that their lightneſſe may appeare, Diſtinct. 1. I will beginne with that diſtinction concerning the authority of Scripture: they ſay 1

Iohn 5.34.

Iohn 10.16. The authority of the Scripture no way dependeth vpon the Church that, ſecundum ſe, of it ſelfe the Scripture and in it ſelfe is of ſufficient authority, but, Quoad nos, in reſpect of vs, it dependeth of the approbation of the Church: and that wee cannot know, neither are bound to beleeue the Scriptures, but becauſe of the teſtimony and allowance of the Church, Bellar. de conc. lib.2.cap.12. Rhem, annot. Gal.2. ſect.6. Anſw. This is but a ſubtill ſleight to ſteale away the credit of the word of God: for the Scriptures were wholly written for vs and our vſe, and al the authority they haue is for the benefit of men, and in reſpect of vs: If then they haue no authority with vs, nor we bound to beleeue them, vnleſſe the Church doth approue them, then they receiue their authority from the Church, for Scripture was written for men, not for God himſelfe, or Angels: So this diſtinction is contrary to the word of God: I receiue (ſaith Chriſt) no witneſſe of men, Ioh.5.34. But the Scripture is the voice of Chriſt, therfore it needeth not the approbation of men: The ſpirit beareth witneſſe that the ſpirit is the truth. 1.Ioh.5.6. That is, the Scriptures are diſcerned and knowne by the ſame ſpirit, the which they were written withall. The Church indeed is to teſtifie of the truth, but the truth is to be beleeued for the truth ſake, although it haue no teſtimony of men: for my ſheepe (ſaith our Sauiour) heare my voice, Ioh.10. Let them heare alſo what a Doctor of their owne ſaith: that great ſchoolman Thomas Aquinas: Deum dupliciter operari, alia mediantibus cauſis, vt opera naturalia, alia immediate, vt miracula: God worketh two waies: ſome things hee doth by mediate cauſes, as all naturall workes, ſome things by his immediate power, as his miracles: and he proceedeth further: Hominis intellectum Deum per alias literas mediate inſtruere, per ſacras immediate, God inſtructeth mans vnderſtanding by other writings mediatly, but by the holy Scriptures immediately: like as therfore the miracles immediatly wrought, need no other teſtimony, but of themſelues ſhew Gods power, as the Ægyptian ſorcerers could confeſſe and ſay, Digitus Dei eſt, It is the finger of God: ſo neither need the word of God any other euidence, but by the effectuall working thereof, ſheweth it ſelfe to proceed from the ſpirit: for it doth immediately inſtruct vs, but if the Church ſhould bring vs to the Scripture, then ſhould God ſpeake not immediately, but mediately therein vnto vs.

2.Tim.3.17. All things needfull to ſaluation contained in Scripture.

2 *Diſtinct.*2. They diſtinguiſh of the word of God: there is Verbum Dei ſcriptum, The word of God written, that is their traditions, Bellar. de ſcript. lib.4.c.2. Anſw. This is a vaine diſtinction: for the whole word of God reuealed, is contained in Scripture, as out of Scripture we proue it thus: The word written, that is, the holy Scriptures are able to make a man perfect to euery good worke, 2.Tim.3.17. and ſo vnto ſaluation: But whatſoeuer is ouer and beſide that which is perfect, is ſuperfluous: but no part of Gods word is ſuperfluous, therefore no part of the word beſide ſcripture: this diſtinction alſo is ouerthrowne by their owne decrees: decr. p.1. diſt.8. c.9. Si ſolus Chriſtus audiendus eſt, non debemus attendere, quid aliquis ante nos faciendum putauerit, ſed quid, qui ante omnes eſt, Chriſtus prior fecerit: If Chriſt onely muſt be heard, we muſt not attend, what any man before vs hath thought good to be done, but what Chriſt, who is before all, hath firſt done: if Chriſt onely bee to bee heard, whoſe voyce is onely knowne in the Scriptures, then your diſtinction faileth.

Peters faith, not his perſon the foundation of the Church.

Decr. part.2. cauſ.24. qu.1. cap.6.

3 *Diſtinct.*3. The Church is built (ſay they) vpon Peter and Peters faith: but faith heere hath a double conſideration: for it may be either abſolutely conſidered, or with relation to Peters perſon: But faith generally and abſolutely reſpected is not the foundation of the Church, but as it was in Peter, Bellarm. de Roman. pontif. lib.1. cap.11. Rhemiſt. annot. Matth.16. ſect.8. Anſwere. That Peters faith, which was in Peter, and by Peter confeſſed, is a portion and Indiuiduum of the generall ſauing faith of the Church, which is the foundation of the ſame Church, we denie not. But Peters perſonall faith cannot be this foundation: for then when Peter died, his faith being a particular accident to his perſon, going away with him, the Church ſhould haue wanted a foundation. Againe, in Peter theſe two things are reſpected, his perſon and faith: whatſoeuer was in Peter beſide faith, was fleſh and blood: but that could not be the foundation, Ergo, Peters faith onely was the foundation, his perſon had therein no part at all. Conſult with your owne decrees, they will tell you. Quod Petrus, quando claues accepit, Eccleſiam ſanctam ſignificauit: Peter when he receiued the keyes, ſignified the whole Church: if in Peter the whole Church is conſidered, then Peters particular perſon is not included: then by your owne rule you haue loſt a diſtinction.

The Pope not the miniſteriall head of the Church.

Epheſ.3.15.

4 *Diſtinct.*4. There is a principall and ſoueraigne head of the Church, and that is onely Chriſt: there is a miniſteriall head beſide of that part of the Church which is vpon the earth, and ſo is the Pope head of the Church, Rhemiſt. annot. Epheſ.2. ſect.5. This diſtinction by their owne confeſſion may bee ouerthrowne, for if the Pope in any ſenſe may bee the head of the whole Church, the Church alſo in the ſame ſenſe may be called his body: but the Church (ſay the Rhemiſts) is not called the body myſticall either of Peter, or of Pope, or any Prelate whatſoeuer: Ergo, he is not the head. Againe, one family hath but one head, the Church in heauen and in earth maketh but one family, Epheſ.3.15. The Pope in no ſenſe can be ſaid to be head of the triumphant Church. Ergo, neither of that part that is in earth. I will heere referre you to your owne law. Clementin. lib.2. tit.9 cap.1. Romanæ Eccleſiæ caput eſt Chriſtus redemptor noſter, Romanus pontifex eiuſdem redemptoris vicarius, &c. Chriſt our redeemer is the head of the Romane Church, and the Biſhop of Rome his vicar, &c. Heere the Pope himſelfe maketh Chriſt onely the head, and himſelfe but the heads vicar: and the reaſon is included, becauſe Chriſt is the redeemer, therefore the head, the Pope is not the redeemer of the Church: Ergo, not the head: thus your diſtinction is deſtroyed.

5 *Diſtinct.*5. The Pope as a priuate perſon, or as a man, and in matters of faith may erre, and bee deceiued:

ceiued: but as he is head paſtor, decreeing any thing concerning the faith, he cannot erre, Bellarm. lib. 4. de pontif. cap. 13. Harding. defenſ. apolog. 660. Anſw. Peter, when he was reproued of Paul, Galath. 2. erred not onely in example and conuerſation, as Bellarmine anſwereth: but it was an error concerning the faith: Saint Paul ſaith, they went not the right way to the truth of the Goſpell: they erred then from the truth of the Goſpell; Ergo, in faith: if Peter might fall into an error of faith, much more the Pope. Your owne gloſſe granteth, that Peter did exorbitare à fide, goe aſide or out of the way from the faith: for thus the words lie, Par in ſe eſt, à fide exorbitare, & aliis exemplo, vel verbo à fide deijcere: It is all one in it ſelfe, for one to erre from the faith, or by example or word to turne others from the faith, which Peter did: ſo this diſtinction alſo is proued but vaine.

Whether Peter erred in a matter of faith.

Decr. par. 2. cauſ. 2. q. 7. cap. 39. in gloſſe.

Distinct. 6. Non eſt idem, aliquid eſſe de fide & de iure diuino: It is not all one for a thing to depend of faith, and of the law of God: as to beleeue that Paul had a cloake is not a poynt of faith, yet it is, De iure diuino: It belongeth to the word of God; So to beleeue that, the Pope is Peters ſucceſſor, belongeth to the faith, though it be not by the word, Bellarm. de Rom. pont. lib. 2. cap. 12. Anſw. This diſtinction is eaſily ouerthrowne: whatſoeuer is by the word of God, is De iure diuino: Of the diuine right, or of Gods law: but whatſoeuer is of faith, is grounded vpon the word, for faith it ſelfe commeth by hearing the word preached, Rom. 10. 17. Ergo, whatſoeuer is of faith, is alſo De iure diuino. Concerning the example alleaged, that Paul ſhould haue a cloake, it was not neceſſary neither by the word, nor by faith ſimply: but by a conſequent, becauſe it is expreſſed in the word, & it is a point of faith to beleeue all things therein contained to be true, to beleeue this alſo, is of, or belonging to faith. See your owne Canons: Extrauag. Iohan. 22. tit. 14. cap. 5. there ſhall you finde this diſtinction: that Quaedam directè pertinent ad fidem, Some things doe directly concerne the faith, as the articles of our beleefe, and whatſoeuer is contained in them; Quaedam reductiuè, &c. Some things by way of reduction or conſequence belong to the faith, as to beleeue whatſoeuer is contained in Scriptures: and vpon this ground in the ſame place it is proued, that to affirme, that Chriſt had not the proper vſe of any thing, is neither of the faith directly, becauſe it is not contained in the articles, nor reductiuely, becauſe it is not found in Scripture: ſo by this good and neceſſarie diſtinction, your conceit is ouerthrowne. 6

How euery thing in the word contained belongeth to the faith.

Distinct. 7. There is a proper ſucceeding of the Apoſtles, and an improper: properly the Pope is Peters ſucceſſor, whom he ſucceedeth, as an ordinary paſtor of the Church; But other Biſhops doe ſucceed the Apoſtles improperly, in reſpect of their paſtorall and epiſcopall calling, Bellarm. de Rom. pontif. lib. 4. cap. 14. Anſw. If to ſucceed in the place be a proper kind of ſucceſſion, as the Ieſuite ſeemeth to grant, as one King ſucceedeth another, and one Biſhop another, then had other Apoſtles their proper ſucceſſors, as S. Iames at Ieruſalem, S. Andrew at Conſtantinople, S. Iohn at Epheſus, S. Marke at Alexandria, as well as Peter had at Rome: If a proper ſucceſſion require a ſucceſſion of gifts and calling, then neither the Biſhop of Rome, nor any other doe properly ſucceed the Apoſtles, hauing not the calling of Apoſtles, but of Biſhops and paſtors of the Church. And the Ieſuite himſelfe granteth, that the Pope ſucceedeth Peter not as an Apoſtle, but as a paſtor. But Apoſtles properly ſucceed Apoſtles, a paſtor improperly is ſaid to ſucceed an Apoſtle. I will vrge againſt you the teſtimony of your owne Popes: Innocentius 3. ſaith, that Epiſcopi, ſunt Apoſtolorum vicarij: Biſhops are the Apoſtles vicars: decr. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 15. c. 1. Will you heere diſtinguiſh alſo that ſome are properly, ſome improperly vicars: but how can one be ſaid to be in anothers ſtead, if he doe it improperly? A man will chuſe ſuch an one to be his vicar, as may properly and fitly execute his place and office, as if he himſelfe did it: but if you ſay, heere is the difference: Biſhops are the Apoſtles vicars, but the Pope is Chriſts vicar: remember what another of your Popes hath confeſſed: Clem. 5. lib. 5. tit. 8. c. 1. Epiſcopi Chriſti legati exiſtunt: Biſhops are Chriſts Legats: which is all one, as to ſay his vicars: if ſtill you wil vrge your fanſie, and ſay ſome are proper, ſome improper Legats: then will I oppoſe againſt you another decree of your owne: decr. part. 1. diſtinct. 93. c. 24. Epiſcopi omnes Apoſtolorum ſucceſſores: vbicunq́ fuerit Epiſcopus ſiue Romae, ſiue Eugubij, eiuſdem meriti, eiuſdem ſacerdotij: All biſhops are the Apoſtles ſucceſſors: whereſoeuer a Biſhop is, whether at Rome, or Eugubium, they are all of one merit, and haue all one prieſthood, &c. If they be all of the ſame worthineſſe and office, what is become of your proper and improper diſtinction? 7

Good Biſhops ſucceed the Apoſtles more properly then the Pope.

Distinct. 8. The Pope directly hath not any temporall iuriſdiction ouer Kings and princes, as they haue ouer their ſubiects, or as he hath ouer Biſhops, yet indirectly hee hath, and ſo by his indirect power, as he is the ſpirituall Prince of the Church, he may depoſe Kings, cite them iudicially before him, abrogate the lawes of Princes, & eſtabliſh his own, if he ſee it neceſſary for the health of mens ſoules, Bellarm. de pontif. lib. 5. cap. 6. Anſw. The places which the Ieſuite himſelfe bringeth againſt the direct power of the Pope, do alſo ouerthrow his indirect power: As how Chriſt refuſed to be a King, Ioh. 6. and to be a Iudge, Luk. 12. 13. he did execute neither of theſe offices, either directly or indirectly: Ergo, no more ſhould the Pope. And S. Paul maketh euery ſoule directly ſubiect to the higher powers, that beare the ſword, Rom. 13. 1. 4. How then can any ſoule directly ſubiect vnto them, indirectly command and controule them? Indeed an indirect power it is which the Pope chalengeth, that is, vſurped and vnlawfull, and they doe well ſo to call it. Conſult with your owne decrees, one of your Popes thus writeth: Leo. 4. to Lotharius the Emperour: Imperialia veſtra praecepta, quantum valemus, Chriſto propitio, nos conſeruaturos modis omnibus profitemur: Wee doe promiſe to keepe your impe- 8 riall lawes euery way by the helpe of Chriſt: and if any man tell you otherwiſe, ſciatis eum pro certo mendacem, take him for a lyer. If euery way, then both directly and indirectly: and if Bellarmine ſay otherwiſe, he muſt weare the Popes liuery to be counted a lier.

They which haue a conſulting voice in Councels, ought alſo to haue a deciding voice.

9 Diſtinct. 9. In generall Councels there are two kinds of voices or ſuffrages: there is ſuffragium deciſiuum, a deciding or determining voice, which only belongeth to Biſhops, and ſuffragium conſultatiuum, a conſulting or diſcuſſing voice, and ſo other Paſtors and Miniſters may aſſemble to conſult and giue their aduice, Bellar. lib. 1. de concil. c. 15. Anſw. In the Councell held by the Apoſtles and Elders, Act. 15. there was no ſuch difference of voyces: the Apoſtles and Elders did indifferently both conſult and decide the matter in doubt, v. 6. the Apoſtles and Elders came together to looke to this matter, as well to prouide ſome remedy, and to determine and conclude, as to examine and aduiſe vpon the matter: ſo ver. 28. It ſeemed good to the holy Ghoſt and vnto vs: The decree goeth out in the name of the Apoſtles and Elders. As therefore the Elders did decide and conclude with the Apoſtles, ſo ought Paſtors and Miniſters together with Biſhops. Search your owne decrees: Decr. part. 2. cauſ. 16. qu. 1. cap. 7. Romani ſenatum habebant, cuius conſilio cuncta agebant, & nos habemus ſenatum noſtrum, cœtum presbyterorum: The Romans had their ſenate, by whoſe counſell they did euery thing: and wee alſo haue our Senate in the Church the aſſembly of our presbyters. As then the Senate in Rome did not conſult onely, but decide matters, ſo ſhould the Senate in the Church.

Lay men ought to haue voices in Councels.

Diſtinct. 10. As by this diſtinction next before they would exclude the Clergie, all beſide Biſhops, ſo they haue inuented another tricke againſt the liberty of the Laity in Councels: The Biſhop ſubſcribed in this forme: Ego definiens ſubſcripſi: By giuing my definitiue voice I haue ſubſcribed: The lay Magiſtrate thus: Ego conſentiens ſubſcripſi: I by giuing my conſent haue ſubſcribed, Hard. pag. 748. defenſ. apolog. B. Iewel in the ſame place ſheweth the vanity and vntruth of this diſtinction, and proueth that theſe two formes were indifferently vſed: ſometime the Biſhop ſaid, I haue conſented and ſubſcribed: ſometime the Magiſtrate is alſo ſaid in councell to determine, as it is there alleaged of Conſtantinus out of Sozomene. This alſo is agreeable to your owne law: Pope Nicolas granteth thus much: Fides omnium communis eſt, quæ non ſolum ad clericos, verum etiam ad laicos, & ad omnes omnino pertinet Chriſtianos: Faith is common to all, and it doth not onely belong vnto the Clergie, but vnto lay men alſo, and generally to all Chriſtians, decr. par. 1. diſt. 96. c. 4. If faith then bee common alike to all, both to the Laity, and Clergie, why ſhould they not both haue equall right to determine of that, which equally appertaineth to them both?

11 Diſtinct. 11. One may be ſaid to be the ſon or child of God truly, two manner of waies. Firſt, Veritate eſſentiæ ſiue formæ: If he haue the true forme and eſſence of a member of Chriſt and child of God, as if he haue loue, and liue inwardly by the ſpirit of Chriſt. Secondly, Veritate finis ſiue permanentiæ: If he continue, and attaine vnto the end. The firſt way men not predeſtinate may be ſaid truly to bee the members of Chriſt, Bellarm. de eccleſ. lib. 3. cap. 7. Anſw. 1. Charity is not the eſſence or forme of the child of God, but faith and beleefe, Ioh. 1. 12. To them that beleeue in his name hee gaue power to be the ſons of God. 2. It is abſurd, that he which hath the forme and eſſence of a thing ſhould not obtaine the thing it ſelfe. 3. Though ſuch in reſpect of their preſent ſtate may after a ſort be called the ſons of God, yet they are not, Verè filij Dei: Truly and properly his ſons. 4. For in this ſenſe none are truly the ſons of God, but they which ſhall be heires of ſaluation: If we be children, we are alſo heires, euen the heires of God, and heires annexed with Chriſt, Rom. 8. 17. I wil be iudged herein by your owne law: decr. part. 2. cauſ. 33. diſt. de pœnitent. 1. cap. 35. gloſſ. Templum ſpiritus ſancti templum diaboli eſſe deſiit: The temple of the ſpirit ceaſeth to be the temple of the diuell. And againe, Nemo filius Dei & diaboli ſimul eſſe poteſt: No man can be the Sonne of God and the ſon of the diuell together: For the Scripture ſaith, No man can ſerue two maſters: But if they which are not predeſtinate, that is, the children of wrath and deſtruction, may be the ſonnes of God, then the ſons of the diuell may bee the ſonnes of God, which is heere denied.

Ioh. 1. 12.

The child of the diuell, no way the child of God.

Rom. 8. 17.

12 Diſtinct. 12. Bellarmine diſputing of the true notes of the Church (in his opinion) as of ſucceſſion, antiquity, vniuerſality and ſuch like, he ſaith, though they doe not, Efficere euidentiam veritatis ſimpliciter: Yet they doe, Efficere euidentiam credibilitatis: Though they worke not the euidence of truth, that is, doe not certainly demonſtrate the Church, yet they worke the euidence of beleefe or likelihood: they ſhew great probability of the Church, Bellar. lib. 4. de notis eccleſ. c. 3. Anſw. How can there be Euidentia, the euidence of any thing, which is but gueſſed at, not certainly knowne? for that is ſaid to be euident, which is put out of doubt: as faith is ſaid to bee the euidence of things not ſeene, Heb. 11. 1. not the euidence of probability, but of truth and certainty. 2. How can theſe be ſaid to be veræ notæ, true notes of the Church, if by theſe notes a man cãnot certainly finde out the Church? 3. Therefore the true notes doe bring Euidentiam veritatis: An euidence of truth, ſhewing and demonſtrating the Church without doubt: My ſheepe (ſaith Chriſt) heare my voice, Ioh. 10. Where the voice of Chriſt, that is, the word of God, is heard and obeyed, there certainly are the ſheepe and ſheepfold of Chriſt: and where two or three are aſſembled in my name, there am I in the middeſt, Mat. 18. to aſſemble in the name of Chriſt to heare his word, and duely receiue the Sacraments, is an infallible note of Chriſts preſence, and ſo alſo of his Church. Theſe therefore are the true notes, the word and Sacraments, rightly taught and adminiſtred. But that your imagined notes neither bring euidence coniecturall nor demonſtratiue, I report me to your owne decrees, which thus ſpeake of cuſtome and antiquity antiquity, one of your chiefe notes ; Decr.part.1.diſt.8.c.8.Conſuetudo ſine veritate,vetuſtas erroris ? Cuſtome without truth is the oldneſſe of error : and chap.6. Cum Chriſtus veritas eſt,ſequi magis debemus veritatem, quàm conſuetudinem, quia conſuetudinem ratio, & veritas ſemper excludit : Seeing Chriſt is truth, we muſt rather follow truth then cuſtome, for reaſon and verity alwaies exclude cuſtome and antiquitie : if error then may be grounded vpon cuſtome, how can any credence bee giuen to cuſtome for the truth : and if truth exclude cuſtome, how can cuſtome include truth ?

13 *Diſtinct.*13. They make a difference betweene Euangelicall precepts, and Euangelicall Counſels, to leaue a precept vndone is ſin,and euery Chriſtian is bound vnto it. But Euangelicall Counſels are giuen only to the perfect,which they are not bound to keepe,neither do they ſin in not keeping them, yet if they obſerue them,they merit more ; Such Counſels of perfection are theſe and ſuch like ; to giue all to the poore,to vow chaſtity,and ſuch like,Bellarm.de Monach.cap.7.Rhem.annot Matth.9.ſect.9. Anſw. We acknowledge no ſuch difference betweene precepts and Counſels, for whatſoeuer is to the glory of God,we are bound to doe, Matth.5.48. Ye ſhall bee perfect, therefore all Counſels tending to perfection are commandements. And that a man can doe no more,when hee hath done all, then is his dutie to doe,our Sauiour Chriſt ſheweth in plaine words,Luk.17.10. It is therefore a vaine diſtinction. I further refer you herein, to the conſtitutions of your owne Popes : Pope Nicholas ſext. decret.lib.5.tit.12.c.3. Confeſſeth in plaine words, that there be, Nonnulla Conſilia Euangelica ſub verbo & prohibitione præcepti : Some Euangelicall Counſels, expreſſed vnder the terme and prohibition of precepts : if Counſels then are vnderſtood by precepts, how then are they not confounded : ſome Counſels are precepts,and ſome precepts Counſels.

14 Diſtinct. 14. A vow is twofold ; Simplex votum : A ſimple or ſingle vow, which is made before God alone : Votum duplex vel ſolenne : A double or ſolemne vow made in the preſence of the Biſhop or Abbat : Marriage made after a ſingle or ſimple vow ſtandeth in force, but it cannot make voide a ſolemne vow made before,Hard.pag.547.defenſ.Apolog. Anſw. A ſingle vow bindeth as ſtraitly before God as a ſolemne vow,neither is it any thing to the Lord, whether wee vow in the hearing of others,or before witneſſe : therſore the Scripture knowing no ſuch diſtinction, generally biddeth men, that haue vowed vnto God to pay their vowes, Numb.30.3.Eccleſ.5.3. And as for the other point, neither a ſingle nor a ſolemne vow is a ſufficient cauſe to deny mariage to him that cannot containe,as the Apoſtle ſaith:to auoid fornicatiõ,let euery man haue his wife,1.Cor.7.2.They haue here forgottẽ, what Celeſtinus 3.ſaith concerning vowes : Votum ſimplex non minus obligat apud Deum, quàm ſolenne : A ſimple vow doth no leſſe binde before God,then a ſolemne vow : *dec. 15 *Diſtinct.*15. Wheras the Apoſtle ſaith,perfect loue expelleth feare,Bellarmine diſtinguiſheth:there is,Timor pœnæ,and Timor culpæ propter pœnam : Feare of puniſhment,and feare of ſin, for the puniſhment ſake : Loue expelleth not the firſt kind of feare, but the ſecond,Bellarm.de purgator lib.2.cap.3. Anſw. I pray you what difference is there betweene feare of puniſhment, and feare of ſin becauſe of the puniſhment ? or how can theſe two be ſeparated ? for he that is afraid to be damned, will be afraid to ſin, which cauſeth damnation : Loue therefore expelleth theſe ſeruile kinds of feare, which haue painfulneſſe,as the Apoſtle ſaith, but it retaineth the reuerence or feare of children, which bringeth comfort rather,and boldneſſe in the day of iudgement,*ibid.verſ.*17.If you will be tried by your owne law, this diſtinction will not ſerue your turne : decr. Greg.lib.5.tit.41.c.8. Qui ex timore facit præceptum,aliter,quàm debeat facit,& ideo iam non facit : He that of feare doth the commandement,doth it not,as he ought, and therefore doth it not at all : here is no ſuch minſing and clipping of feare, but it is generally excluded,whether the feare of ſinne,or the puniſhment thereof.

No ſeruile fear can ſtand with loue.

16 *Diſtinct.*14. A mediator may be vnderſtood two waies. Firſt, hee is a mediator that payeth the debt vnto the creditor for the debter : ſo Chriſt onely is our mediator,who hath paied the ranſome for vs. Secondly,he that entreateth the creditor to forgiue the debter,ſo the Saints may be & are mediators in praying for vs : Chriſt is the mediator of redemption,they of interceſſion : Bellar.lib.1.de Sanct.c.20. It is a very blaſphemous diſtinction,& contrary to Scripture : for our mediator between God and man,muſt be both God and man,1.Tim.2.5. Therefore no creature can be our mediator. Againe,to make interceſſion to God for vs, belongeth to the Prieſthood of Chriſt, who,as the high Prieſt was wont to goe into the moſt holy place to pray for the people,is now entred into the heauens to appeare in the ſight of God for vs,Heb.9.24. But Chriſt onely is our Prieſt in heauen, neither Angell nor Saint : Ergo,hee only is our mediator and interceſſor : Hearken what Auguſtine ſaith, Quem alium dirigam tibi interceſſorem,neſcio niſi hunc qui eſt propitiatio pro peccatis noſtris : I know not what other interceſſor to direct vnto thee, but him that is the propitiation for our ſins. lib.med.c.5. Therefore there is one mediator both of interceſſion,and propitiation or redemption. This ſentence of Auguſtine is approued by Eſpenſæus a writer of your owne,*lib.de Chriſt.mediator.c.*12.

1.Tim.2.5.
Not diuers kinds of mediator.
Heb.9.24.

17 *Diſtinct.*17. The queſtion ariſing betweene vs, whether Chriſt bee our mediator,in reſpect of his manhood onely,as they hold,or as he is both God and man,as we teach : they do coyne vs this ſophiſticall diſtinction, that Chriſt is our mediator in both his natures, Ratione ſuppoſiti,non ratione formalis principij, in reſpect of the ſuppoſitum or hypoſtaſis of the Mediator,not in reſpect of the formall beginning : to ſpeake this more plainly : The mediator muſt of neceſſity be both God and man, but the forme of his mediation, or that whereby hee worketh his mediation, is his humane nature, Bellarm.

Chriſt mediator in both his natures. 2.Cor.5.19.

de Chriſto lib.5.cap.3. Anſw. The Scripture attributeth the mediation of Chriſt to both his natures: God was in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelfe: Heere God is a reconciler, and Chriſt a reconciler, that is, Chriſt reconcileth vs both as God and man, 2.Cor.5.19. I oppoſe heere againe the iudgement of Auguſtine, to the which Eſpenſaus your owne doctor ſubſcribeth, lib. de Chriſto mediat. c.3. Auguſtine ſaith thus, Non mediator homo præter deitatem non mediator Deus præter humanitatem, diuinitas ſine humanitate non eſt mediatrix, humanitas ſine diuinitate non eſt mediatrix: The man Chriſt is not mediator beſide his diuinity, nor God Chriſt is not mediator beſide his humanity: his diuinity doth not mediate without his humanity, nor his humanity without his diuinity, homil. de omnib.c.12. heere alſo haue you loſt your diſtinction.

18 Diſtinct. 18. The Saints are our interceſſors, not as authors themſelues of any benefit vnto vs, but obtaining through Chriſt and his merits, whatſoeuer by them is obtained for vs, Bellarm. de ſanct. lib.1.cap.17.

Anſw. Firſt, their owne practiſe is contrary, for they make their Saints their mediators by their owne merits and worthineſſe, as in thoſe blaſphemous verſes made of Thomas Becket, is to be ſeene,

Tu per Thomæ ſanguinem, quem pro nobis impendit,
Fac nos Chriſte ſcandere quò Thomas aſcendit.
By the blood of Thomas, which for vs hee did ſpend,
Grant vs Chriſt, whether he did, to aſcend.

Saints no way interceſſors. Ioh.16.24.

Secondly, the Scripture biddeth vs pray in the name of Chriſt vnto God, and we ſhall receiue what we aske, which is a more compendious way, then to pray to Saints, and they by Chriſt vnto God, for if praying in our owne perſons in the name of Chriſt, our prayers bee heard, Iohn 16.24. inuocation of Saints is ſuperfluous. Heere I alſo obiect your owne decrees. decr. part. 3. diſtinct. 4. cap. 39. Miniſtri dum ſunt, pro ducibus haberi nolunt, ſpem in ſe poni erubeſcunt: They are but miniſters, they will not be counted guides or patrones, and are aſhamed that any truſt ſhould bee repoſed in them: Ergo, Saints are no waies patrones, or procurers of any grace vnto vs.

Apocal.22.9. No religious worſhip due to Saints. Galath.4.8. Dried. de libris apocry.lib.4. cap.1.

19 *Diſtinct.*19. They make two kinds of religious worſhip: one called λατρεῖα, which is onely due vnto God: the other δουλεῖα, which may be giuen to Angels and to Saints, Bellarm. lib.3. de ſanct.cap.12. Anſw. All religious worſhip is onely to be yeelded vnto God: as the Angell would not ſuffer Iohn to worſhip him, but ſaid, Worſhip God, Apocal.22. verſ. 9. becauſe all worſhip is due vnto him: he forbiddeth not Iohn ſome ſpeciall kind of worſhip, but generally all: as acknowledging, that no kind of worſhip was due vnto him. And concerning the word δουλεύειν, it is taken alſo in Scripture for the proper ſeruice of God: as Galath. 4.8. Ye did ſeruice to them that by nature were no Gods: there this word is vſed. And that no religious worſhip belongeth to Saints, heare what Driedo a writer of your owne faith, who thinketh that certain ſtories of the Saints are fained; as whē, ſaith he, the Saints, Narrantur in mortis agone monuiſſe, vt ex hoc mundo tranſlati colerentur, &c. are ſaid in their death to haue giuen charge to be worſhipped after they were gone: this ſaith he, is not like they would haue done.

No difference betweene an Idoll and an Image. Rom.1.13.

20 Diſtinct. 20. They diſtinguiſh betweene Idolum, an Idoll, and Imago, an Image, in Greeke, εἰκὼν, is a true ſimilitude of a thing, an Idoll, εἴδωλον, doth repreſent a vaine thing that is not: ſuch were the Idols of the heathen: Images, they ſay, they haue, but no Idols. Bellarm. lib. de ſanct. cap.5. Anſw. 1. As concerning the word, the Idols in Scripture are alſo called Images, Rom.1.13. there the word εἰκὼν, is vſed. The Papiſts then in worſhipping of Images, are proued alſo to bee idolaters, worſhippers of Idols: This friuolous diſtinction helpeth them not. The ciuill law, which can beſt teach vs the vſe of termes, and difference of words, maketh Images and Idols all one, as it thus may bee ſhewed ſimulachrum, as Bellarmine confeſſeth, lib.1. de imagin. ſanctor. c.5. is the Latine for the Greeke word εἴδωλον, an Idoll: now the Ciuill law taketh an image, and a ſimulachre, that is, an Idoll, for the ſame, as Cod. lib.1. tit.27. leg.3. that which the Emperour calleth noſtræ ſerenitatis imagines, the images of our excellencie, in the next title 28. leg.1. The ſame Emperour Theodoſius termeth, Imperatoria ſimulachra, the Emperours ſimulachre, or Idoll.

Exod.32.4.5. Iudg.17.3. Images not to be worſhipped by way of relation.

21 *Diſtinct.*21. They make this difference betweene the Idols of the heathen, and their Images: the heathen worſhipped their Idols as gods, and therefore were Idolaters: But they worſhip their images for that relation they haue to thoſe whoſe images they are, Rhemiſt. Philip.2. ſect.2. Anſw. The Iewes alſo, which were plagued of God for their idolatrie, had a relation in their golden Calfe to that God that brought them out of Ægypt, Exod. 32.4.5. ſo Iudg.17.3. Micah his mother ſaith, that ſhe had conſecrated the ſhekels of ſiluer to the Lord Iehouah, to make a molten image: yet for all this they were idolaters, and ſo are the Papiſts: this ſhift of theirs helpeth them not a whit. And concerning this relatiue worſhip, let them heere what Gregorie out of their owne decrees, ſaith: decret. part. 3. diſtinct. 3. c.27. Aliud eſt picturam adorare, aliud per picturæ hiſtoriam, quid ſit adorandum, addiſcere, nam, quod legentibus ſcriptura, hoc idiotis præſtat pictura cernentibus: It is one thing to worſhip a picture, an other by the pictured ſtory to learne what is to be worſhipped, for as the Scripture is to the readers, ſo the picture is to the beholders, &c. Heere Gregorie granteth a relation in pictures, but no relatiue worſhip: for as we doe not adore the letters of Scripture though they declare who is to be worſhipped: ſo, though a painted ſtorie referre vs vnto God, yet vnto it no diuine worſhip is due, by relation, or otherwiſe, and this is S. Gregory his meaning.

22 Diſtinct. 22. A thing may be honoured, or is ſaid to receiue or be capable of honour after a diuers manner:

manner : Firſt, a thing is honoured Per ſe, vel per accidens, of it ſelfe, as the perſon of the King is honoured, or accidentally, as the Kings robes are honoured becauſe of the King. Secondly, a thing may bee honoured, propter ſe, vel propter aliud, for it ſelfe ſake, or for and becauſe of ſome other thing, whereon the cauſe of honour dependeth. Thirdly, a thing may be honoured propriè, impropriè, properly, which in reſpect of it ſelfe is honoured : impropriè, which in ſtead and place of an other thing is honoured, as the Embaſſadour is for the King. Now the images of Saints are to be worſhipped, not onely improperly or accidentally, but properly, and of themſelues : yea improperly, and by an accident are capable of the higheſt kind of worſhip, as the image of God or Chriſt of the ſame honour that is due vnto them, Bellarm. lib.2. de Sanct. cap.20.21.23. Anſw. I pray you how farre are theſe blaſphemous Papiſts from the higheſt kind of Idolatrie, and from making their ſtocks and ſtones their gods? For the heathen in like ſort vſed ſuch diſtinctions : Non ego illum lapidem colo, adoro, quem video, ſed ſeruio ei, quem non video : I doe not worſhip this ſtone, I adore that I ſee, but I ſerue him whom I ſee not : Auguſt. in Pſalm.96. Thus properly they gaue adoration to their images, but ſeruice, which is the engliſh of (λατρεία) Rhemiſt. Matth.4. ſect.3. They reſerued vnto that God whoſe image it was; yet for all this they were moſt monſtrous idolaters, and ſo are the Papiſts. Againe, no religious worſhip, properly, or improperly, accidentally, or otherwiſe is due to any, but only to the Lord, Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him onely ſhalt thou ſerue : Matth.4. 10. Which text is alleaged by our Sauiour againſt Satan, who had tempted him to fall downe and adore him : wherefore by this text all falling down and proſtrating of our ſelues before any creature to adore it, is forbidden, without which ſubmiſſe geſture, not the meaneſt kind of religious worſhip can be exhibited to any : And that no religious worſhip, properly or improperly; accidentally, or of it ſelfe, or any other kind of way belongeth to images; heare what your owne law ſaith : Chriſtiani non ſeruiunt imaginibus cultu diuino, nec alicui creaturæ, Chriſtians doe not yeeld any ſeruice or diuine worſhip to images, nor to any creature, *decr. par.3. diſt.3. cap.*28. And If it be heere anſwered, that indeed no diuine ſeruice, but only adoration is due vnto Images, I obiect againe that ſaying of S. Gregorie out of their owne decrees, part.3. diſt.3. c.27. Quia imagines adorari vetuiſſes, omninò laudamus : We commend you altogether, for that you forbad Images to be adored : heere alſo adoration of Images is reſtrained.

Images not ſo much as accidentally to be worſhipped.

23 *Diſtinct.*23. There are then three kinds of religious worſhip due vnto God, and his Saints ; λατρεία, ſeruice proper vnto God : δουλεία, adoration which may bee giuen to Saints and Angels : ὑπερδουλεία, an higher kind of adoration due onely to the Virgin Mary. And each of theſe three hath two kinds : euery one of them may be conſidered Simpliciter, vel ſecundum quid, ſimply or abſolutely, or in part onely and reſpect : and euery one of theſe kinds of worſhip, is either Cultus perfectus, or imperfectus, a perfect or imperfect worſhip. The perfect and ſimple kind of Latreia, is proper to God onely, the imperfect and inferior or reſpectiue kind may be giuen, and is due to the image of God : ſo the perfect kind of δουλεία is for the Saint himſelfe, the imperfect for his image : the perfect kind of Hyperdouleia is for the Virgin Mary onely, the imperfect for her image, Bellarm. lib.2. de Sanct. cap.25. Contra. Firſt, thus haue we ſix kinds of religious worſhip forged and deuiſed by Papiſts, more by fiue then the word of God either knoweth or acknowledgeth. 2. Where haue they learned that the Virgin Mary is worthie of an higher kind of adoration, then either Saint or Angell? The Scripture onely ſaith, that they ſhall be as Angels, not aboue or ſuperior to Angels : Matth. 22.30. and it was one of the hereſies of Pelagius, homines æquare angelis; to make men equall to Angels, Eſpenſ. in c.3. 2. epiſt. ad Timoth. p.121. d. 3. By this diſtinction of theirs it commeth to paſſe, that the Image of God, of Chriſt, yea of our Lady, ſhall haue an higher kind of worſhip, not then the images of Saints, but then the Saints themſelues, then either Prophet or Apoſtle, for theſe haue but their Douleia, their ſimple adoration : but the images of God and of Chriſt, haue their kind of Latreia : the image of Mary, a kind of Hyperdouleia. But this is very groſſe and abſurd, that a dead thing that hath no life, ſhould be more honoured, then a reaſonable and vnderſtanding, yea an holy creature : Auguſtine ſaith : Artifex melior eſt eis. The image maker is better then the image, in Pſal.113 but a Prophet or Apoſtle is far to be preferred before euery artificer or craftſ-man, and one would thinke that the liuely image of God, which is man, that walketh and breatheth, ſhould bee worthie of greater honour, then the dead and ſenſeleſſe image of God. Fourthly, by the places alleaged before, Apoc.22.9. Mat.4.10. It is euident, that no kind of religious worſhip is due to any creature, but onely vnto God. See alſo to this purpoſe the decree before alleaged, that Chriſtians doe not giue any diuine ſeruice vnto images, p.3.d.3.c.28. and yet Bellarm. doubteth not to ſay, that the image of God may haue the ſame ſeruice which is due vnto God, though in an vnperfect manner.

But one kind of religious worſhip.

Apoc.22.9. Matth.4.10.

24 Diſtinct. 24. Sacræ ædes, Churches or holy houſes haue a double relation or reſpect : for they may be conſidered as they are Templa, Temples or Churches, and ſo properly they are built onely to the honour of God : or as they are, Baſilicæ, or Memoriæ, ſumptuous buildings, and monuments of remembrance, and ſo alſo they may be dedicated to Saints : Bellar. lib.3. de Sanct. c.4. Contr. Firſt, if the ſame place in a diuers reſpect may be conſecrate to the honour of God and Saints together : great reaſon, that God ſhould be the more principall : but now it is not ſo, for they are called by the name of Saints : if God were the chiefe, hee ſhould giue the name to the place : And indeed the places of prayer are Gods houſes : My houſe ſhall bee called the houſe of prayer, Eſay 56.7. That Churches are called by Saints names amongſt vs, it is not for their honour, but onely for a ciuill difference and diſtinction

How Temples are holy places. Eſay 56.7.

Acts 13.15.

of places: and in their ſenſe Churches are not dedicate vnto God neither, for any holineſſe that is in the place; for in that ſort, Chriſt ſaith, his father will not be worſhipped, neither in that mount Garizim, nor at Ieruſalem, Ioh.4.27. not in one place more then in another: but they are holy places, and for the honour of God in reſpect of the vſe, which is for prayer, My houſe, an houſe of prayer, ſaith the Lord, and for hearing the word of God, Act.13.15. And thus your owne Doctor Thomas Aquinas determineth of this matter: Ad Deum adorandum, non ob neceſſitatem ſtatus locus eligitur ob eum, qui adoratur, quaſi loco concludatur, ſed ex quadam decentia propter adorantes: A certaine place is not choſen as of neceſſitie toward the worſhip of God, as though he that is worſhipped were tyed to a place, but for more decencie and comelines ſake in them that doe worſhip. 2.2.quæſt.84.artic.3.

Againſt popiſh canonizing of Saints.

25 *Diſtinct.*25. Saints ſome are canonized, that is, publikely allowed to be Saints: ſome are not canonized and receiued into the Kalendar: the difference is this, Canonized Saints, either generally by the Pope ſo canonized, for the whole Church, or more ſpecially by a Biſhop for his prouince or dioceſſe, may be publikely prayed vnto, Temples built in their names, and their holy daies yeerely remembred, their reliques preſerued in Churches to be adored: But none of theſe things publikely may bee exhibited to not Canonized Saints, vnleſſe priuately onely, *Bellarm. de ſanct. lib.*1.*cap.*10. Contr. Firſt, that neither canonized, nor vncanonized Saints are in any ſuch ſort to bee worſhipped, we haue ſhewed before. Secondly, what an abſurd thing is this, it is lawfull to pray to ſome Saint priuately, and yet vnlawfull to doe it publikely? ſo men ſhall haue houſe ſaints and Church ſaints: they ſhall ſerue one God at home, and another at the Church: ſuch were the toyes of the heathen: ſuch kinde of ſtuffe we reade of, Ezech.8.10. where the Princes of Iſrael were gotten into a corner, and there worſhipped the ſimilitude of creeping things, and abominable beaſts, which they were aſhamed to do publikely: ſo belike, popiſh houſe-ſaints are ſuch goodly things, that they dare not be ſeene. Thirdly, if they be all ſaints, why are they not all canonized? if they bee all ſaints with God, why are they not with men? Fourthly, who gaue them ſuch power to canonize ſome Saints, and not otherſome? Chriſt ſaith, To ſit at his right hand, or his left, is not his to giue, Matth.20.23. how then dare the Pope, or any prelate, preſume to doe that which Chriſt aſſumeth not, as he is man? See your owne decrees of this matter as touching the canonizing of Saints: *Decret.p.*2.cauſ 11.*quæſt.*3. *cap.*58. Chriſtum violat, qui ſanctum non ſanctum, vel non ſanctum, ſanctum eſſe crediderit: He violateth Chriſt, which counteth a ſaint no ſaint, or no ſaint a ſaint: by this rule, if there be any Saints that are not canonized, as they cannot denie, they doe offer great wrong vnto Chriſt for not to canonize a Saint, what is it elſe but to count him no Saint? wherefore your diſtinction of canonized, and vncanonized ſaints, is nothing worth.

Saints know not mens hearts.

26 *Diſtinct.*26. The hearts of men, their thoughts and cogitations are knowne two manner of waies: either naturally by an ordinary and proper power, and ſo our hearts are knowne only to God: or by an extraordinary grace and gift, and ſo both the Angels and Saints doe know our inward repentance, and deſires, *Rhemiſt.*1.*Cor.*2.*ſect.*1. Contr. It is one thing by reuelation to vnderſtand the ſecrets of mens hearts, as the Prophets ſometime did, and as Peter deſcried the fraud of Ananias and Sapphira: another thing to receiue a gift and power themſelues when they will, to looke into mens hearts, as they affirme of their ſaints, that alwaies they are able to vnderſtand as the vocall voyce, ſo our inward repentance: For if at any time they want this power, then prayers made vnto them are ſometime in vaine, which I thinke they will not grant. But this is contrarie to the Scripture, which ſaith, that God only knoweth the hearts of men, 1.King.8.39. It is not ſaid, he chiefly or properly knoweth them, but he only: And a reaſon is there giuen: Reward euery man according to his waies, as thou knoweſt his heart: God therefore onely knoweth the heart, becauſe he onely rewardeth men after their waies: and that the Saints departed haue no ſuch power or facultie to know things done in the earth, much leſſe mens hearts, your owne canons doe teſtifie: *Decret.par.*2.*cauſ.*13.*qu.*2.*c.*29. Fatendum eſt, neſcire quidem mortuos, quid hic agatur, ſed dum hic agitur, poſteà verò audire ab ijs, qui hinc ad eos moriendo pergunt, non quidem omnia, ſed quæ ſinuntur indicare; We muſt confeſſe, that the dead know not the things here done, while they are in doing, but afterwards they heare them of thoſe that depart vnto them by death, and yet all they know not, but only ſo much as they are ſuffered to declare vnto them, if they know not the things that are outwardly done, much leſſe the inward thoughts and deſire.

As one heauen, ſo but one hell,

27 *Diſtinct.*27. The Papiſts diuide hell into foure parts or members, according to the meaſure and continuance of the puniſhment, for the paine is either temporall, or eternall: and there is, duplex pœna, damni & ſenſus: a double puniſhment beſide, either of loſſe without ſmart, or of loſſe and damage, with ſmart and puniſhment together: The place of temporall loſſe only was Limbus patrum, the dungeon of darkneſſe, where the fathers remained till the comming of Chriſt: the place of temporall loſſe without ſmart, is Limbus infantum, the dungeon, to the which children dying without baptiſme are ſent: the place of temporall loſſe and puniſhment withall, is Purgatorie: the place of eternall loſſe and puniſhment is *Hell: Bellarm. de Purgator. lib.*2.*cap.*6. Contr. Theſe are phantaſticall and ſuperſtitious deuices of men: for the Scripture maketh but one place of darkneſſe and puniſhment, as there is but one place of ioy and light, namely heauen, Luk.16. The rich glutton went to hell, Lazarus into Abrahams boſome, which Auguſtine denieth could be a member of hell, becauſe it was felicitatis ſinus, a place or boſome of bliſſe, epiſt 19. Againe, they make all theſe infernall regions to be places of darkneſſe: but the Scripture maketh no other place of darkneſſe but hell, into the which the diuels were throwne downe: So Saint Peter taketh hell and the chaines of darknes for all one: And what place elſe is that which the ſame Apoſtle calleth a priſon, 1.Pet.3.19. (which the Papiſts notwithſtanding vnderſtand of their Limbus patrum) but where the chaines of darknes are, for chaines and a priſon houſe, haue a mutuall reference one to the other. 2. In hell there is not, neither can be a puniſhment of loſſe or damage onely, without ſenſe and ſmart of torment: for they which are in darkneſſe excluded from the preſence of God, doe not onely ſuſtaine the loſſe of that benefit, but they muſt needs alſo be in paine and ſorrow: for as the Pſalmiſt pronounceth of other creatures, If thou hideſt thy face, they are troubled, Pſal.104.29. ſo is it alſo true of men, that the hiding of Gods face, the abſence of his ſpirit bringeth ſorrow and trouble withall: So our Sauiour ſaith, They ſhall be caſt into vtter or exteriour darkneſſe, there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, Matth.8.12. darkneſſe then is accompanied with weeping and extreme horror: It is called the vtter or exteriour darkneſſe, becauſe without the kingdome of heauen there is nothing but darkneſſe: But if they will haue it ſo called, in reſpect of hell it ſelfe, as though ſome darkneſſe were exteriour or outward, ſome interiour or inward, the darkneſſe of Limbus patrum, which they ſay, is in the brimme of hell, muſt be this exteriour darkneſſe, becauſe hell the place of the damned is lower and more inward, and that muſt be the interiour darkneſſe. Thus we ſee how eaſily their vanities are blowne away. And if you will be iudged by your owne law, you ſhall miſſe of two parts of your hell, your Purgatorie, and Limbus patrum: for as for your purgatorie fire, your decrees haue thus defined, part.2.cau.27.qu.1.c.11. Vt purificatorio igne pœnitudinis peccata poſſint decoqui: That their ſinnes may be decocted or done away by the purging fire of repentance: behold repentance in this life is our purgatorie: and concerning your Limbus, another decree out of Auguſtine hath theſe words as touching the ſpeech which counterfeit Samuel vſed to Saul, ſaying, to morrow thou ſhalt be with me, Virum peccatis preſſum, cum magna peccatorum & iuſtorum diſtantia ſit, cum Samuele iuſtiſſimo futurum mentitus eſt: He lied in ſaying that Saul being a ſinner ſhould be with Samuel, ſeeing there is a great diſtance betweene ſinners and the righteous, decr.p.2.cauſ.26.qu.5.c.14. then could they not be both in hell, for then they might be ſaid to be together, though they ſhould imagine diuers regions in hell, as the theefe is ſaid to be with Chriſt in Paradiſe, and yet not in the ſame region or degree of glorie.

2.Pet.2.4.

Diſtinct.28. The Ieſuite maketh two kindes of voluntarie worſhip: that is properly called cultus voluntarius, voluntary worſhip, qui ſine ratione ſuſcipitur: which is taken in hand without any reaſon or ground. There is another kinde of worſhip or ſeruice: Qui exhibetur Deo per actus virtutum: Which is performed vnto God, by ſome act of vertue, and this is not properly a voluntarie worſhip or religion, though it be not commanded: of this ſort, they ſay, their pilgrimages are, and ſuch like, Bellarm. de ſanct. lib.2. cap.8. Contr. Firſt, S.Paul forbiddeth all voluntary worſhip, Coloſſ.2.23. the word is ἐθελοθρησκεία: wherefore all things brought into the worſhip of God without his commandement, by the will of man, what reaſon or cauſe ſoeuer is pretended, is but will-worſhip. 2. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of ſuch a will-worſhip, as is fondly enterpriſed without any cauſe, as if a man ſhould vow not to ſit downe at the table, till he haue twice waſhed, as the Ieſuite putteth the example: but euen of ſuch worſhip, as is commended by the Ieſuite, which is not raſhly begun, but with aduice, and performed by ſome vertuous act: for the Apoſtle ſaith, that euen will-worſhip hath a ſhew of wiſedome: it is not, ſine ratione, but, habet rationem ſapientiæ. Againe, there is ſubmiſſion and humbleneſſe of the minde, and not ſparing, or not ſatisfying the fleſh; all theſe our aduerſaries cannot denie to be vertuous acts; for ſuch are their faſtings, and other workes of penance: Wherefore euen ſuch things doe make but a will-worſhip. The Ieſuite then hath ſaid iuſt nothing. Remember what one of your owne Popes hath written, Ioann.22.extrau.tit.7.cap.1.in fine. Adulterinas plantationes, quas non pater cœleſtis, ſed humanæ temeritatis audacia plantat, apoſtolici culminis cenſura diuellat: Falſe and adulterous plants, which not the heauenly father, but the boldnes of humane raſhnes hath planted, let the cenſure of the Apoſtolike ſea remoue: wherefore all inuentions not grounded vpon the word, are counted adulterous plants, and conſequently voluntarie worſhip.

Coloſſ.2.23.
Al worſhip deuiſed by man is wil.worſhip.

Diſtinct.29. Bellarmine granteth, that vowes may be made properly vnto Saints, as vnto God, but with this diſtinction: We doe promiſe and make a vow to God, in ſigne of our thankfulnes to him, as vnto the author of all good things: but vnto Saints wee vow to betoken our thankfulneſſe vnto them, as our mediatours and interceſſors, by whoſe meanes we doe receiue theſe good things of God, Bellarm.lib.3.de ſanct.cap.9. Contra. Thus they are not aſhamed to rob God of his honour. The Scripture teacheth vs, that vowes only are to be made to God, Eſay 19.21. In that day the Ægyptians ſhall know the Lord, and ſhall doe ſacrifices and vow vowes vnto God. Here vowes and ſacrifices are ioyned together, but ſacrifices no manner of way are due to Saints, therefore neither vowes. Againe, the Scripture maketh this a reaſon, why we ſhould vow vnto God, and pay our vowes: For the Lord thy God will ſurely require it of thee, Deut.23.21. But God only is able to require and exact a vow at our hands, and to call vs to account for it: Ergo, wee muſt vow only vnto him: See your owne decrees, part.1.cauſ.22.qu.1.c.9. concerning oathes, which are of the ſame nature with vowes, it is thus decreed: Excommunicetur Clericus per creaturas iurans: A Clergie man ſwearing by creatures muſt be excommunicate: but ſaints are creatures, as it is then vnlawful to ſweare by their name, ſo alſo to make a vow vnto them: for the Scripture reſerueth both theſe, namely oathes, and vowes, Vowes are to be made only to God.

as peculiar vnto God, being principall parts of his worſhip. Wee are commanded to ſweare by the name of God, Deut.6.13. and to vow vnto him and performe. Pſal.76.11.

Difference of daies not for more holines, but for Chriſtian policie.
Rom.14.5.

30 *Diſtinct.*30. Daies among Chriſtians are partly equall, partly vnequall: Vnequall they are by reaſon of the precepts and determination of the Church, and for the myſticall ſignification which they haue: Equall they are: Quoad eſſentialia feſti. In reſpect of the eſſentiall matters of an holy day: As a man priuately by himſelfe may vpon any day receiue the communion, heare the word, and keepe the memorie of Chriſts reſurrection, *Bellarm. de cult. Sanctor. lib.*1 *cap.*10. Contr. The difference and diſtinction of daies for ſignification and in reſpect of more holineſſe is meere Iudaicall, as the Apoſtle teſtifieth: This man eſteemeth one day aboue another day, another man counteth euery day alike, Rom. 14.5. Wherefore daies are all equall and alike vnto Chriſtians, not in reſpect only of thoſe eſſentials, (for ſo were they alſo equall to the Iewes, they might by themſelues vpon any day, if they would, reade the law, remember Gods benefits and ſuch like,) but they are equall in nature, holineſſe and goodneſſe: ſo that difference of daies among Chriſtians is rather for Chriſtian order and policie ſake, for the people to meete together to heare the word and ſerue God, then as ſetting a part ſome daies for greater holineſſe in themſelues. Your ſuperſtitious difference of daies is condemned by your own canons; *decr.p.*2.*cauſ.*26.*qu.*7.*c.*17. Ad animarum periculum pertinere ſuperſtitioſas temporum obſeruationes: That the ſuperſtitious obſeruation of daies doth bring a manifeſt perill to the ſoule: and though in the ſame place an inſtance be giuen of heatheniſh obſeruation of daies, yet who ſeeth not that generally all ſuperſtition that waies is condemned.

Matth.26.11.

Chriſts body is neither viſibly. nor inuiſibly preſent in earth.
Acts 3.21.

Matth.28.6.

31 *Diſtinct.*31. Whereas we obiect that place of the Goſpel: The poore ye haue alwaies: but me ye ſhall not haue alwaies, Matth.26. againſt the reall and bodily preſence of Chriſt in the Euchariſt: They anſwere by this diſtinction; that Chriſt is not now preſent in body, viſibili & corporali praeſentia: by his viſible, or corporall preſence; or, Secundum humanam conuerſationem, after his conuerſation, or as he was conuerſant among men: but inuiſibly he may be preſent, and after another manner: *Bellarm. de Euchariſt. lib.*1, *cap.*14. *reſp. ad loc.*4. Contra. This diſtinction is thus by Scripture ouerthrowne: Saint Peter ſaith, The heauens muſt containe or receiue Chriſt, till his comming againe, Act.3.21. Hee cannot in his body be abſent from heauen till that time, therefore hee cannot any way be preſent in earth. If they anſwere, as they doe, that he may be in heauen and in the Euchariſt all at one time, wee confute them by another place of ſcripture: He is not here (ſaith the Angell) for he is riſen, Mat.28.6. which had been no good argument, if the body of Chriſt were likely to be in two places at once. Let them conſult with their owne Canons, there ſhall they finde it thus decreed: Corpus domini, in quo reſurrexit, vno loco eſſe oportet: The body of our Lord, wherein he aroſe againe, muſt needs be in one place: *Decret part.*3 *diſtinct.*2.*c.*44. it cannot then be in heauen and earth at one time.

32 *Diſtinct.*32. Some things are properly attributed to the body of Chriſt in the Euchariſt, as whatſoeuer ſignifieth motion from place to place, as the body of Chriſt may be ſaid to be lifted vp, and to be laid downe, and ſuch like; but other mutations and changes, as to waxe hot or cold, to ſower or be mouldie, doe very improperly or not at all agree vnto the body of Chriſt, *Bellarm. de Euchariſt. lib.*1.*cap.*3. Contra. We grant indeed that Chriſts body is not now ſubiect to heate or cold, nor any ſuch thing, and therefore we denie that his body is preſent in the Euchariſt, becauſe the elements doe receiue theſe alterations: Let them tell vs then, when the bread mouldeth, and the wine ſowreth, what it is that is mouldie, or ſower; bread and wine after conſecration there is none; the accidents, as the whiteneſſe, roundneſſe, ſweetneſſe, cannot receiue other accidents; we cannot ſay, that they are mouldie, or ſower: are they not then driuen to confeſſe that the body of Chriſt is ſubiect to mould, and ſowerneſſe? If they ſay Chriſts bodie departeth, and a new matter is ſupplied as before there was tranſubſtantiation by the turning of the bread into Chriſts body, then there muſt be a retranſubſtantiation (which is a new point of popiſh learning) by the returning of the bread againe. Here I will appoſe them out of their owne canons, for where decret.p.3. diſtinct.2.c.28 it is affirmed, that the Euchariſt may be vomited vp: and in the ſame diſtinction cap.94. Si mus ſacrificium comederit, &c. If a mouſe chance to eate the ſacrifice: I aske them whether a mouſe may eate Chriſts body or not, or may it be vomited vp? If they denie it, their owne canons are againſt them: if they affirme it, let any man iudge if it be not as great a diſhonour to Chriſts body ſo to bee vſed, as either to waxe ſower or mouldie? but indeed, I thinke, they know not what to ſay.

Papiſts are driuen to hold retranſubſtantiation a new point of popiſh diuinitie.

33 *Diſtinct.*33. Whereas they affirme, that the whole quantitie and proportion of Chriſts bodie is in the hoaſt, we thus replie vpon them, that it is an eſſentiall propertie of quantitie to haue, partem extra partem, one part diſtinct from another, the head cannot be where the feete, nor the feete, &c. But if Chriſts bodie in his proper quantitie were in the hoaſt, his parts cannot be diſtinct in ſo ſmall a roome, but ſhuffled and confounded together, Bellarmine here coyneth a moſt friuolous and ſophiſticall diſtinction: Corpus quantum (ſaith he) habet partem extra partem, ſi illud extra dicat habitudinem ad ſubiectum, non autem, ſi dicat habitudinem ad locum: That a bodie of due quantitie hath parts diſtinct one from another in reſpect of the ſubiect, or body it ſelfe, but not in reſpect of the place: ſo there may be Extenſio & diſtinctio partium in ſubiecto, ſed non in loco: There may be an extenſion of the parts, and a diſtinction in the ſubiect, though not in the place, *Bellar. de ſacram. Euchariſt. lib.*3.*cap.*7. This of all other is the moſt abſurd and witleſſe diſtinction; for how can there be a diſtinction reall of the parts in the body, if there bee not in the place? for euery part hath his proper place anſwerable thereunto,and as the body is leſſe or more,ſo the proper place thereof is dilated,or contracted: If then wee take a body of two cubites and thruſt it into a roome of one cubite or leſſe, there cannot be the like extenſion of the parts,as in a place of two cubites. All the ſophiſtrie in the world(let the diuell put to his wit and all)will not helpe them here,that Chriſts body full and whole ſhould be encloſed in a thinne wafer cake,and yet all his parts keepe their due place and proportion ſtill. Alas,poore men,theſe reſtleſſe toyes will cauſe them ſooner to runne mad, then to helpe them at a pinch: they ſhould doe much better to leaue theſe new deuices,and hold them to their ancient canons,and to ſay, as in the decrees,par.3.diſtinct.2.cap.58. Chriſtus per partes manducatur in ſacramento,& manet integer totus in cœlo,manet integer totus in corde tuo: Chriſt is eaten by parcels in the Sacrament(he meaneth the bread which is broken into parts,as a little before he ſaid, quiſque accipit partem ſuam, euery man taketh his portion) but he remaineth whole in heauen,he remaineth whole in thy heart: he ſaith not,he remaineth whole in thy mouth,or in thy hands, but in thy heart: ſuch a ſpirituall preſence of Chriſt,without a locall diſtinction of parts we confeſſe,but no otherwiſe.

Chriſts bodie imagined by the Papiſts without quantitie in the ſacrament.

34 Diſtinct.34. They tell vs of three kinds of conuerſion of things: there is conuerſio productiua, A conuerſion productiue, when a thing is produced which was not before, as when Chriſt changed water into wine: Conuerſio conſeruatiua: A conuerſion conſeruatiue, when one thing is corrupted or periſhed,and another thing is generated or preſerued: Conuerſio adductiua: A conuerſion adductiue,when a thing is not produced that was before,but is only brought to a place where it was not: and ſo is the bread adductiuely changed into the body of Chriſt in the ſacrament, Bellarm.de ſacram. lib.3.cap.18. *Contr.*1. Theſe ſpecies, or kinds of conuerſion are confounded, for the productiue and conſeruatiue are all one, as that example ſheweth of turning the water into wine: for the water was changed,and wine conſerued,and the wine was produced by the power of Chriſt, out of the ſubſtance of water: The creation was properly productiue,when things were made and produced,that were not: but there is no creation now,and therefore no productiue conuerſion. 2. Yet to keepe their diſtinction,we will eaſily proue,that the being of Chriſts body in the Euchariſt,is by a productiue or conſeruatiue change,not an adductiue: For either the bread is there together with Chriſts bodie, as the Lutherans hold,and that is their conſubſtantiation, which Papiſts denie; or the bread is annihilate, and turned to nothing,which I thinke they will not grant: or it muſt needes be turned into Chriſts body,and ſo a thing is produced that was not,namely,the breaden body of Chriſt. They haue nothing to anſwere but this, that the bread is turned into materia prima, the firſt matter, whereof things are made,as the water was when Chriſt made the wine, Bellarm.ibid.cap.24. *Contr.*1. Thus if Ariſtotle had not helped them with his phantaſticall deuice of materia prima, they had bin put to their tumps. 2. And ſo notwithſtanding they are: for Ariſtotles deuice cannot ſtand againſt ſcripture, which ſaith concerning that miracle of Chriſts: Aquam vinum factum: As their owne text hath: the water did not vaniſh into materia prima,or I wot not what,but it was made wine, namely water: and if after the ſame manner the bread be conuerted in the Euchariſt, the bread is made the bodie of Chriſt, and the body of Chriſt is made of it. And this verily was the opinion of the elder Papiſts,as Innocentius 3. affirmeth thus, Probabilior opinio iudicatur, qua adſerit aquam cum vino in ſanguinem tranſmutari: It is the more probable opinion, which affirmeth that the water and wine are changed into Chriſts blood, Decret.Greg.lib.3.tit.41.c.6. Be aſhamed at length ye Papiſts of ſuch fooleries, and glorifie God,in confeſſing your error, and acknowledging the truth.

Bread turned into Chriſts body by neceſſarie conſequence of popiſh doctrine.

35 Diſtinct.35. Where we vrge that place of the Apoſtle, Hebr.10.14. Chriſt with once offering,hath made perfect for euer them that are ſanctified. And therefore he is not offered or ſacrificed in the Maſſe. They haue found out this quaint diſtinction: the oblation of Chriſt is, Cruenta vel incruenta: Bloodie or vnbloodie: the bloodie ſacrifice was offered but once, the vnbloodie may be offered often, Bellarm.lib.1.de miſſa,cap.6.reſponſ.ad 8.argum. Contra. This is a vaine diſtinction,void of learning and truth: For Chriſt cannot be offered vp, but by dying Heb.9.27 28. And without ſhedding of blood,there is no remiſſion of ſinnes,verſ.22. But by the ſacrifice of Chriſt,ſo oft as it is offered,there is remiſſion of ſins: Ergo, alſo ſhedding of blood: there is then no ſuch vnbloodie ſacrifice or oblation of Chriſt. This diſtinction alſo of yours agreeth not with your owne canons: Decr.par.2.cauſ.1, qu.1.cap.84. Sacrificium dicitur, quaſi ſacrum factum, quia prece myſtica conſecratur, pro nobis in memoriam dominica paſſionis: It is called a ſacrifice, that is made holy,becauſe by prayer myſticall it is conſecrated for vs for a remembrance of the Lords paſſion,&c. Here then is no ſacrificing of Chriſt anew,but remembring only of his paſſion and ſacrifice alreadie paſt.

No vnbloodie ſacrifice of Chriſts bodie. Heb.9.27,28.

36 Diſtinct.36. In other ſacraments the Prieſt is the miniſter of Chriſt, yet ſpeaketh in his owne perſon,as in baptiſme, I baptize thee with water: but in the Euchariſt,he is not only the miniſter of Chriſt, but aſſumeth and taketh vpon him his very perſon, ſaying: This is my body, as the Angels ſometime ſpake in the perſon of God, Bellarm. de ſacram. Euchariſt. lib 4.cap 14. *Contra.*1. When Miniſters haue ſuch warrant to ſpeake in the perſon of God,as the Angels had,they may doe as they did. 2. The Rhemiſts confeſſe that the Prieſt in penance giueth abſolution in the perſon of Chriſt, Annot.2.Cor. 2.6. Therefore in the Euchariſt only,as Bellarmine ſaith, he aſſumeth not the perſon of Chriſt,but at other times alſo,by their owne confeſſion. 3. If to doe any thing in the perſon of Chriſt,be no more but in the name and power,or in the ſtead and place of Chriſt,we miſlike not the phraſe nor ſenſe,for the ſcripture alloweth that ſpeech: We are meſſengers for Chriſt,and for Chriſt, or in Chriſts ſtead,wee beſeech you: 2.Cor.5.20,21. He ſaith not, as Chriſt, but for Chriſt: and the higheſt dignitie that the paſtors of the Church haue, is to be miniſters onely of reconciliation, 2.Corinth.5.18. and to be diſpenſers or diſpoſers of the myſteries of God, 1.Cor.4.1. And that the Prieſt doth not ſupplie the perſon of Chriſt, it may be gathered out of your owne decrees, decret.part.3.diſtinct.2.cap.72. Iteratur hoc myſterium ob commemorationem paſſionis Chriſti, ſicut ipſe ait, hoc quotieſcunque feceritis, in meam commemorationem facite: This myſterie is iterated for the remembrance of Chriſts paſſion, as he himſelfe ſaith, this as often as you doe, doe it in my remembrance, &c. If the Prieſt do it then in remembrance of Chriſt, then not in his perſon as preſent, for we only remember things abſent.

37 Diſtinct.37. There is an action in the Church, which is both a ſacrifice, and a repreſentation of a ſacrifice beſide; there is alſo another that is no ſacrifice, but a repreſentation onely: the firſt is the Maſſe, the ſecond the Euchariſt, Bellarm.lib.1.de Miſſa.cap.1. Contra.1. The Euchariſt alſo is a ſacrifice of praiſe and thankſgiuing, as the word ſignifieth: for other ſacrifice externall in the Church we acknowledge none but theſe ſpirituall ones, Heb.13.15.16. 2. Such diſtinction of a ſacrifice repreſenting, and a repreſenting without a ſacrifice, they learne not out of the word, nay it is contrarie to it, for all that Chriſt cōmandeth vs is, to doe this in his remembrance, and this doing, is nothing elſe, but eating and drinking according to his inſtitution in the ſacrament, 1.Cor.11.26. and verſ.25. This do as often as ye drinke it: This doing is cōmunicating by drinking, not ſacrificing, as they fondly imagine: and ſo S.Paul expoundeth theſe words, ſaying: As often as ye ſhall eate this bread, and drinke this cup, ye ſhew the Lords death till he come, 1.Cor.11.26. Vnto this agreeth your owne canon, decr.par.3.diſt.2.c.53. Quod nos facimus, in commemorationem fit eius, quod factum eſt: That which we do, is done in remembrance of that which was done: this doing then, is by eating and drinking and remembring, not by ſacrificing.

38 Diſtinct.38. There is duplex diuortium, a double kinde of diuorce in matrimonie, quoad thorum & cohabitationem, & quoad vinculum: A diuorce from bed and boord onely, the mariage knot or bond remaining ſtill, as in caſe of adulterie: and another kinde, when the knot or bond it ſelfe is diſſolued, and looſed, Bellarm.de Matrim.lib.1.cap.14. Contr. This diſtinction is contrarie to the Apoſtle, as we ſhall ſhew: Mariage cannot be diſſolued in reſpect of bedding and boording together, but the bond, vinculum, muſt needs be vntied: What the vinculum or bond of mariage is, Saint Paul ſheweth, The wife hath not power ouer her owne body, but her huſband, and ſo likewiſe the huſband, &c. 1.Cor.7.4. and that this is the bond, it is gathered out of the 15. verſe, where ſpeaking of the departure of infidels, he ſaith, that a brother or ſiſter is not in ſubiection, that is, is no longer bound to performe theſe duties and debts of mariage: and verſ.27. Art thou bound to a wife? ſeeke not to be looſed: Ergo, the bond may be looſed: the word here vſed is, δέδεται, of the which word commeth, δεσμὸς or δέσμα, vinculum, a bond: Therefore by not being in ſubiection or vnder power one of another, is to be freed, and to be no longer bound. If the mariage knot or bond could not be vntied among Chriſtians, the Apoſtle needed not to haue ſaid, Seeke not to be looſed: for who will ſeeke for an impoſſible thing? And that in the caſe of adulterie, the mariage knot it ſelfe is diſſolued, ſo that it is lawfull after ſuch diuorce to marrie againe, your owne decree ſheweth, decr.p.2.cauſ.32.queſt.7.c.17. Viro licet aliam ducere, ſi ab uxore diſceſſerit cauſa fornicationis: It is lawfull for the man to marrie another, if hee leaue his wife for fornication.

Mariage whether lawfull after lawfull diuorce.

39 Diſtinct.39. Some vertues are Morales, morall, ſome Theologicæ, Theological: repentance, which they call penance, is a vertue Morall, ſaith the Ieſuite: faith a vertue Theologicall: Bellarm.lib.1.de pœnitent.cap.29. Contr. Firſt, this diſtinction is not currant: for if you vnderſtand by Theologicall, that which is diuine, for ſo we engliſh Theologia, Diuinitie; then are al the vertues of Chriſtians Theologicall, that is, Diuine, both in reſpect of the author, for they are all the gifts of God, Iam.1.17. as alſo in reſpect of their operation and effect, Ye are partakers (ſaith S.Peter) of the diuine nature, if yee flie the corruption of worldly luſts, 2.Epiſt.1.4. Loe the flying of worldly luſts, which is with them a Morall vertue, is now become a theologicall or diuine vertue, becauſe thereby wee are made diuine, or like to the diuine nature. Secondly, if they be morall vertues, which conſiſt in manners and practiſe, they theologicall, that conſiſt in knowledge and ſpeculation; Faith in that ſenſe is not theologicall only, but morall alſo, Faith working by loue, Galath.6.5. Thirdly, what needeth ſuch diſtinction and ſeparation of vertues, ſeeing the Apoſtle ioyneth them all together, Ioyne vnto your faith vertue, to vertue knowledge, to knowledge temperance, 2.Pet.1.6,7. Therefore it is no good argument which the Ieſuite maketh, faith belongeth not to repentance, becauſe one is of this kinde, and another of that, ſeeing the Apoſtle both in nature and practiſe ioyneth them together: and that faith in their ſenſe is not a vertue theologicall, conſiſting in ſpeculation of the minde, their owne decree ſheweth, part.2.cauſ.33.diſtinct.2.c.14.gloſſ. In Chriſtum non credit, qui charitatem non habet, in Chriſtum enim credere, eſt amando in ipſum credere: He beleeueth not in Chriſt who hath not charitie, for to beleeue in Chriſt, is by louing him to beleeue in him: ſeeing therefore charitie is practicall, not contemplatiue, faith alſo, which is ioyned with charitie, of neceſſitie muſt belong as well to action, as contemplation.

Iames 1.17.

Faith whether it belong only to contemplation.
2.Pet.1.6,7.

40 Diſtinct.40. In contrition, Propoſitum non peccandi duplex, There is a double purpoſe not to ſinne any more, Virtuale ſiue implicitum, & formale ſeu explicitum, an inward and vertuall purpoſe, and a formall and explicate purpoſe: the firſt is not ſufficient; but it is neceſſarie, that hee which is iuſtified from his ſin, ſhould make a formall and expreſſe purpoſe not to ſin any more, beſide the deteſtation which he hath of ſin, Bellarm.lib.2.de pœnit.cap.6. Contr. Firſt, the Lord ſaith by his Prophet, If the wicked will returne from all his ſins, and keepe my ſtatutes, he ſhall ſurely liue: Ezech.18.21. Heere is nothing required but a forſaking of ſin, and doing of righteouſneſſe, which may be done, without any ſuch formall or expreſſe purpoſe, yet a purpoſe of heart is neceſſary, Act.11.23. which muſt needs accompany the deteſtation of ſin, and amendment of life. Secondly, I pray you where was this formall and expreſſe vow or purpoſe in the theefe vpon the Croſſe, vnto whom Chriſt notwithſtanding promiſed Paradiſe? Luk.23.42.43. Alſo it is affirmed in your owne decrees, Quod ſola cordis contritione ſine confeſſione oris peccatum remittitur, That ſin is forgiuen by the contrition of the heart onely without the confeſſion of the mouth, decr.p.2.cauſ.33.diſt.1.c.36.gloſſ. What is become now of your formall and explicate profeſſion? &c.

Ezech.18.21. A formall purpoſe of amendment not alwaies neceſſary in repentance. Act.11.23. Luk.23.42.43.

41 *Diſtinct.*41. They diſtinguiſh thus of merits: There is Meritum de congruo, merit of congruity, as the workes which goe before iuſtification, though they be not ſimply meritorious, Ex debito iuſtitiæ, by the due debt of iuſtice, yet they deſerue of congruitie: Meritum de condigno, merit of condignity followeth iuſtification, whereby a man by his meritorious works, is worthy by iuſtice of the kingdome of heauen, Rhemiſt annot.Rom.2.ſect.3.Bellar.lib.2.de pœnit.cap.12. Contr. Firſt, that there is no merit at all of condignitie, Saint Paul ſheweth, ſaying, The afflictions of this life are not worthie, or (as they reade) Condigne of the glory to come, Rom.8.v.18, The Rhemiſts diſtinction vpon that place of condigne to, and condigne of, is but a Ieſuiticall toy, and not worth the anſwere. Secondly, that there is no merit of congruity before iuſtification, it is thus proued: Without faith there is no merit, for without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Heb.11.6. and faith is not before iuſtification, Rom.5.1. Ergo. And your owne law ſaith, Vbi Chriſtus non eſt fundamentum, nullum boni operis eſt ſuperædificium: Where Chriſt is not the foundation, no good worke can be builded vp, decr.p.2.cauſ.1.qu.1.cap.26. but before faith and iuſtification there can be no foundation laid in Chriſt.

No merit at all either of condignity or congruitie. Heb.11.6. Rom.5.1.

42 *Diſtinct.*42. Workes of the law or of nature done without or before faith merit not, but workes done by Gods grace, are truly meritorious: Thus they anſwere vs, when we obiect that place, Rom.3.28. We hold that a man is iuſtified by faith without the works of the law, Rhemiſt.in hunc loc. Contr. The Apoſtle himſelfe taketh away this diſtinction, Eph.2. By grace ye are ſaued through faith, not of workes: then it followeth, verſ.10. For we are his workmanſhip created in Chriſt Ieſus vnto good workes, which God hath ordained, that we ſhould walke in. Heere the Apoſtle excludeth euen workes of grace prepared, and ordained of God, from being any cauſe of our iuſtification. Heare alſo what a learned writer of your owne alleageth to this purpoſe out of Auguſtine, ſer.2.de verbis apoſtoli: Te quidem coronat Deus, ſed in miſericordia, non enim dignus fuiſti quem vocaret, vocatū iuſtificaret, iuſtificatum glorificaret, & ſi merita tua præceſſerunt, dicit tibi Deus, diſcute merita tua, & videbis, quia dona mea: God crowneth thee, but in mercy, for thou waſt not worthie whom God ſhould call, or being called to be iuſtified, and being iuſtified to be glorified: If thou plead thy merits, the Lord thus ſaith vnto thee, examine thy merits, and ſee if they be not my gifts, Eſpenſ.in 2. epiſt. Timoth. digreſſ. 22. pag.157. There is then no merit neither before our calling to iuſtification, nor after our iuſtification to our glorifying.

Workes of grace merit not

43 *Diſtinct.*43. Some things doe iuſtifie, Ex opere operantis: by the worke of the doer, Id eſt, fide & deuotione ſuſcipientis, That is, by the faith and deuotion of the receiuer, ſo the Sacraments of the old law did iuſtifie: Some things doe iuſtifie, Ex opere operato, by the very worke wrought, as the Sacraments of the new Teſtament, Bellarm.de effect.ſacr.lib.2.cap.13. Contr. Firſt, there is one and the ſame efficacie, ſubſtance, and operation in generall of the Sacraments, both of the old and new Teſtament: For they did eate the ſame ſpirituall meate, and drinke the ſame ſpirituall drinke, 1.Cor.10.3.3. Secondly, neither of them doe conferre grace, or are cauſes of our iuſtification before God, but are only ſeales of the iuſtice or righteouſneſſe that commeth by faith, Rom.4.11. Yet we grant, that in the Sacraments of the Goſpell, there is a more liuely reſemblance and more full repreſentation of ſpirituall things, then there was in the other, in which reſpect they are preferred before them. Thirdly, We are not iuſtified before God in part or in whole by any worke, either operantis, or ex operato, of the doer, or of the thing done: But we are iuſtified onely by faith: all workes, euen ſuch as are wrought in vs by grace, are excluded from being any cauſe of our iuſtification before God, Epheſ.2.10.11. Fourthly, And ſo farre is it off, that any iuſtification can bee had ex opere operato, by the worke wrought, without reſpect to the faith of the doer, that no ſuch worke is at all acceptable to God, much leſſe able to iuſtifie: for without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Hebr.11.6. And thus this Ieſuiticall diſtinction is nipped in the head. And herein your owne decrees are againſt you, that Sacraments helpe not by the worke wrought, but according to the faith of the receiuer, part.2.cauſ.1.qu.1.c.98. Tale cuique fit, quali corde, ad accipiendum acceſſerit: The Sacrament is vnto euery man, as hee commeth in heart prepared to receiue it.

1.Cor.10.23. Rom.4.11. Sacraments do not iuſtifie by the worke wrought. Epheſ.2.10.11. Hebr.11.6.

44 *Diſtinct.*44. To extenuate and eneruate the force and efficacie of the death and paſſion of our Sauiour Chriſt, as though it were not alone by it ſelfe a ſufficient ſatisfaction for the ſinnes of the world, vnleſſe other ſatisfactions as helpes were ioyned thereunto: they haue forged and deuiſed impious and blaſphemous diſtinctions of their owne.

First, there is a kind of ſatisfaction, Pro amicitia reſtauranda, for reſtoring vs to the friendſhip of God: there is another, Pro iuſtitia reſtauranda, for reſtoring of iuſtice loſt and decayed in vs: the firſt 8 ſatisfaction is only wrought by the death of Chriſt; the other muſt be wrought by vs, Bellar. de pœnit. lib.4.c.1. Contr. Chriſt hath ſatisfied for vs, in paying the ranſome for our ſinnes, and hath reconciled vs to God, in imparting to vs of his righteouſneſſe: He hath made him to bee ſinne for vs which knew no ſinne, that we ſhould be made the righteouſneſſe of God in him, 2.Cor.5.21. therefore Chriſt hath by his death not onely redeemed vs, and reconciled vs to the fauour of God, but hath alſo clothed vs with his righteouſneſſe: Who is made of God vnto vs, our wiſedome, righteouſneſſe, ſanctification, redemption, 1.*Cor.*1.30. Not onely our redemption, but our righteouſneſſe: he hath therefore ſatisfied the wrath of God, in reſtoring his friendſhip, and hath repaired iuſtice decayed in vs, by his iuſtice and righteouſneſſe. And that faith in Chriſt ſerueth not onely to obtaine remiſſion of ſins, but to reſtore iuſtice, it may be proued out of your owne decrees, part.2.cauſ.24.qu.1.cap.29. Vbi fides non eſt, non eſt iuſtitia, quia iuſtus ex fide viuit: Where there is no faith, there is no righteouſneſſe, for the iuſt ſhall liue by faith, if faith be the life of a righteous man, and he liueth by faith, then hee hath his iuſtice, which is his life, by faith.

Chriſt doth both reconcile and iuſtifie vs.

45 *Diſtinct.*45. There is a ſatisfaction pro culpa, for the fault: another kind pro pœna, for the puniſhment. The firſt was onely wrought by Chriſt; the other is our ſatisfaction to be performed by vs, Bellarmine; ibid. So there is duplex remiſſio peccatorum, prima, ſecunda: A double or twofold remiſſion of ſins, the firſt in Baptiſme, both a culpa & pœna, from fault and puniſhment: the ſecond from the fault, but we our ſelues muſt ſatisfie for the puniſhment, Bellar. de pœnit. lib.4. cap.14 Contr. If our ſinnes be forgiuen vs, the puniſhment likewiſe together with the ſin is remoued: for ſin cauſeth death, and all other puniſhments: It ſhould not therefore ſtand with the iuſtice of God, to lay puniſhment vpon men, hauing forgiuen them their ſins, for this were to ſay, that their ſinnes were not truly forgiuen. Chriſt hath ſet vs at peace with God, by the blood of his Croſſe, Coloſſ.1.20. Ergo, hee hath ſatisfied both for the offence and puniſhment: For if God puniſh ſtill, then were we not at perfect peace with him, his anger yet abiding. And as for temporall puniſhment which remaineth after the forgiueneſſe of ſin, it is not inflicted as a puniſhment for the ſin paſt, but as a meanes to exerciſe vs, leſt we fall into the ſame ſin againe: and thus much is confeſſed in your owne decrees, part, 2. cauſ.33. diſt.1. cap. 82. Ab electis ſuis iniquitatum, maculas ſtudet Deus temporali afflictione tergere, quas in perpetuum non vult in eis videre: God by temporall affliction doth wipe away from the elect the blemiſh of their ſin, that it may bee no more found in them, &c. And whereas they make the firſt remiſſion of ſins to be auaileable both for the ſin and puniſhment: the ſecond but for the ſin; the Apoſtle reaſoneth clean contrary: If while we were yet ſinners and enemies, Chriſt died for vs, much more being iuſtified by his blood, and reconciled by his death, we ſhall be ſaued from wrath through him, Rom.5.10.11. Much more ſaith the Apoſtle: if then in the firſt reconciliation to God, we had remiſſion of both, being now reconciled we ſhall much more. Hence alſo it is manifeſt, that Chriſt worketh all, both before our reconciliation, and after.

Chriſt hath ſatisfied both for the fault and puniſhment.

46 *Diſtinct.*46. Men alſo may ſatisfie for the fault, but ex congruo, non ex condigno, It is a ſatisfaction of congruity, not of condignity, Bellar. lib.4 de pœnitent. c.1. Contr. There is no ſatisfaction wrought by man for his ſins, no not of congruity: Firſt, it is repugnant to the nature and property of ſatisfaction: for that which is of congruitie, is accepted of fauour, but ſatisfaction is an exact compenſation in reſpect of iuſtice: by this God is iuſtly ſatisfied: by the other, hee is but enclined to fauour, as they teach. Secondly, there is no ſatisfaction for ſinne ex congruo: for when we were enemies (ſaith S. Paul) we were reconciled to God, Rom.5.10. But nothing that enemies can doe, is acceptable vnto God, therfore God cannot any waies, no not ex congruo, by our ſatisfaction be appeaſed, before our reconciliation, nor yet afterward: for our ſin in the purchaſing of our reconciliation, was already ſatisfied for by Chriſt. When Peter had ſinned in denying of Chriſt, and vpon his repentance was receiued to mercy, there was no ſatisfaction at all, vnleſſe you will ſay, that the dropping of teares was a ſatisfaction, for the letting fall of curſing and lying words, wherewith Chriſt was denied: and it thus ſtandeth in your owne decrees, Lachrymas lego, ſatisfactionem non lego: I read of Peters teares and lamentation, but of no ſatisfaction: decr. p.2. cauſ.33. diſtinct.1. cap.1.

No ſatisfaction at all for ſinne.

47 *Diſtinct.*47. Man cannot ſatisfie God for the eternall puniſhment due vnto ſin, but for the temporall he may, Bellar. lib.4. de pœnit. cap.1. Contr. Seeing our Sauiour Chriſt hath fully redeemed vs by his moſt precious blood, he hath not only ſatisfied for our ſin, but for our puniſhment both eternall and temporall due vnto ſin, Heb.10.14. with one offering hath hee made perfect, or (as the Rhemiſts reade) conſummated for euer them that are ſanctified. If then hee haue conſummated vs by our redemption, he hath ſatisfied for all: for if any thing were left to be done by vs, wee ſhould not bee conſummated by him. And as for the puniſhments and chaſtenings of this life, S. Paul ſheweth the end of them, not to make ſatisfaction, but we are chaſtened of the Lord, that wee ſhould not bee condemned with the world, 1 Cor.11.42. And to this purpoſe ſee your owne decrees: part. 2. cauſ. 33. diſtinct.3. de pœnit. c.7. Vel ad demonſtrationem debita miſeria, vel ad emendationem labilis vita, vel ad exercitationem neceſſaria patientia temporaliter hominem detinet pœna. A man is temporally puniſhed, either for the demonſtration of deſerued miſerie, or the emendation of humane frailty, or the encreaſing of patience ſo neceſſary.

We doe not ſatisfie either for temporall or eternall puniſhment.

48 *Diſtinct.*48. There is actualis ſatisfactio, an actuall ſatisfaction: and that is our ſatisfaction: Alia eſt ſatisfactio virtualis, a virtuall ſatisfaction: (This name Bellarmine hath not, but the ſenſe:)

Such is the ſatisfaction of Chriſt, Per quam habemus gratiam, vt ſatiſfaciamus, By the which we haue grace and power to ſatisfie, *Bellarm. de purgat. lib.*1.*cap.*10.

49 *Diſtinct.*49. Chriſt hath immediate, immediately ſatisfied and paid the ranſome for our ſinne, but mediate, mediately, onely for the temporall puniſhment. Bellarm. de pœnitent. lib. 4. cap. 15. Contr. Both theſe diſtinctions tend to one end, and therefore one anſwere ſhall ſuffice them both. Firſt, if Chriſt hath both actually and immediately ſatisfied for the greater, that is our ſinne, and euerlaſting puniſhment due to the ſame; much more hath he for the leſſe, that is temporall puniſhment. Secondly, all puniſhment and recompence of ſin, is cauſed by the curſe of the law: Curſed is he that continueth not in all things written in the law, &c. Galath. 3. 10. But Chriſt hath actually and immediately redeemed vs from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for vs. ibid. 13. which curſe wee are not able to beare, neither in whole, nor in part: Ergo, actually and immediately he hath redeemed vs from all puniſhment both ſpirituall and temporall due vnto ſinne. I will heere ſet againſt you your owne Doctor Thomas Aquinas, who thus writeth, part. 3. qu. 48. artic. 5. Paſſiones ſanctorum Eccleſiæ proficiunt per modum exempli & exhortationis, non redemptionis: The ſufferings of the Saints doe profit the Church by way of example and exhortation, not for redemption, &c: the Saints ſufferings then are not ſatiſfactorie, or redemptorie, that is, auaileable to ſatisfie or redeeme themſelues, or others either from ſin or the puniſhment thereof: wherefore this power muſt reſt onely in the Croſſe of Chriſt: and while that you aſcribe vnto Chriſts death, not the act of ſatiſfaction but the grace and power, whereby wee ſatisfie, take heed you fall not into the hereſie of one Abelardus, Qui negauit Chriſti mortem pro peccatis noſtris ſatisfactoriam, Who denyed Chriſts death to be ſatisfactorie for our ſins, Et nihil niſi virtutis exemplum in ea commendauit, And commended nothing in it but the example of his vertue, &c. how farre are the Papiſts from this hereſie, who aſcribed vnto Chriſts death, a vertue only and power to ſatisfie for temporall puniſhment.

Galath. 3. 10.

Chriſt by his paſſion hath actually ſatiſfied both for temporall and eternall puniſhment.

Eſpen. in 2. Tim. p. 3.

50 *Diſtinct.*50. Chriſt is a Sauiour in a double reſpect, either for ſauing men already fallen into ſinne and condemnation, or elſe for preſeruing and ſuſtaining them from falling: in this ſenſe he was a Sauiour onely to the Virgin Mary, who was preſerued onely from ſinne by Chriſt, not ſaued from her ſinnes, which ſhe had not, Franciſcani, Fox pag. 801. col. 1. Contr. Chriſt is called Ieſus, a Sauiour in this ſenſe only, Becauſe he ſhould ſaue his people from their ſins, Mat. 1. 21. Hee was then either in this ſenſe a Sauiour vnto Mary, or not at all. But her Sauiour he was, as ſhe her ſelfe confeſſeth, Luk. 1. 47. Ergo, he ſaued her from her ſins. In the other ſenſe, if Chriſt be a Sauiour at all, for preſeruing from ſin, he is ſo vnto Angels, not vnto men, as Bernard ſaith; Qui hominibus ſubuenit in tali neceſſitate, Angelos ſeruauit à tali neceſſitate: He that helped men out of their neceſſity, preſerued Angels from ſuch neceſſity, lib. de Diligend. Deo. And this diſtinction is further thus auoided: one cannot be ſaid to bee a Sauiour, if he ſaue none: but Chriſt in their ſenſe, neuer yet ſaued or preſerued any that they ſhould not ſin at all: I will be iudged herein by your owne decrees, part. 1. diſt. 25. c. 3. gloſſ. Contra naturam pene eſt, vt aliquis ſine peccato ſit: It is a thing againſt nature, for a man to be without ſin. And againe, part. 1. diſt. 81. c. 1. The Apoſtle ſaith not, Siquis ſine peccato, hoc enim ſi diceret, omnis homo reprobaretur: If any man be without ſin, for if he ſhould ſo ſay, euery man muſt bee refuſed, &c. No man or woman then was euer yet preſerued ſo from ſin, wherefore in that ſenſe Chriſt is not a Sauiour, but that he ſaueth, that is, deliuereth vs from ſinne.

Matth. 1. 21.

Chriſt preſerueth not any from all ſinnes in this life, but deliuereth from ſins.

Luk. 1. 47.

51 *Diſtinct.*51. When we obiect that place of S. Paul againſt the popiſh doctrine of merits: We are iuſtified freely by grace, Rom. 3. 24. They anſwere by a diſtinction: there are two iuſtifications: the firſt, which is onely of grace, and the ſecond, wherein we proceed daily by good workes, Rhemiſt. annot. Rom. 2. ſect. 3. Contr. The Scripture ſpeaketh but of one iuſtification, which glorification followeth, Rom. 8. 30. Whom he iuſtified, them alſo he glorified: If then this one iuſtification doe bring vs to glorification, what need a ſecond? Againe, their ſecond iuſtification is nothing elſe, but that which the Scripture calleth ſanctification, which iſſueth out from iuſtification, as the fruites therof: but Chriſt is both our righteouſneſſe, and ſanctification. 1. Cor. 1. 30. Ergo, he is both our firſt and ſecond iuſtification, and ſo both are of grace. Heere what one of your Popes hath confeſſed of this matter: Innocent. 3. as he is cited, decr. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 41. c. 3. Qui Chriſtum per fidem habet, habet vtique fundamentum præter quod alıud poni non poteſt, &c. & ſuperædificare poſſe videtur ſalutifera opera, &c. Hee that hath Chriſt by faith, hath the foundation, beſide which none other can be laid, & vpon this foundation he may build wholeſome works, &c: there is then but one iuſtificatiō, becauſe there is but one foundatiō by faith, ẏ which followeth is not another iuſtificatiō, but a building vpō by good works.

Rom. 3. 24.

There is but one iuſtification.

1. Cor. 1. 30.

52 *Diſtinct.*52. There is Iuſtitia imputatiua, iuſtitia inhærens, Iuſtice imputatiue, when the righteouſnes of Chriſt is imputed vnto vs, and made ours by faith: Iuſtice inherent, is that iuſtice that actually abideth in vs: by this we are iuſtified & truly made iuſt, not by the other, Rhemiſt. annot. Rom. 2. ſect. 4. Contr. A iuſtice inherent we grant to be in faithfull men, but imperfect; it is not able to iuſtifie them before God: but the righteouſnes only of Chriſt imputed to vs by faith, is our iuſtice before God. The Apoſtle ſaith Chriſt was made ſin for vs, that we ſhould be made the righteouſnes of God in him, 2. Cor. 5. 21. Looke how Chriſt was made ſin for vs, ſo are we made righteouſnes in him: but our ſins were imputed to him, himſelfe knew no ſin: Ergo, our righteouſnes before God, is none other but his righteouſnes imputed to vs by faith. Heare again what Pope Nicolas cōfeſſeth: decr. p. 2. cauſ. 15. q. 8. c. 5. Omnia fide Chriſti purgantur, fides eſt enim, quæ hunc mundū vincit: Al things are purified by faith: for it is Inherent iuſtice iuſtifieth not.

2. Cor. 5. 21.

faith that ouercommeth the world? &c. It is faith then in Chriſt that purifieth our hearts, and whereby we ouercome the world, the fleſh, and the diuell, and not any inherent righteouſneſſe in vs.

The law not perfectly fulfilled in this life.

53 Diſtinct. 53. Whereas they hold, that the law may be perfectly fulfilled in this life, leſt it ſhould ſeeme a very abſurd opinion, and not farre from blaſphemie, as indeed it is not, they would qualifie the matter by a diſtinction: there is a perfection among men, a perfection among Angels: one kind in earth, another in heauen: the perfection in this life may bee attained vnto, though the other cannot, Harding. defenſ. Apolog. 368. pag. Contr. Firſt, this is an abſurd diſtinction, and nothing to the purpoſe: The queſtion is of the perfection of obedience to the law: and he telleth vs of the perfection of Angels: as though the law were giuen to Angels: as if God had ſaid to them: Thou ſhalt not ſteale, thou ſhalt not commit adulterie, &c. Secondly, ſuch a perfection as God hath appointed in this life, we denie not but that it is poſſible by Gods grace to attaine vnto: but full and perfect obedience to the law in this life cannot be had, no otherwiſe then Chriſt hath fulfilled it for vs. Saint Paul ſaith, They that are of the workes of the Law, are vnder the curſe: but they which are of faith, are bleſſed, Gal. 3. 9. 10. The law therefore vnto vs is no otherwiſe perfectly fulfilled in this life, ſo that we by ſuch fulfilling may eſcape the curſe thereof, then by faith, and beleefe in Chriſt, who hath done it for vs: and where our aduerſaries doubt not to affirme, that the law may bee perfectly fulfilled in this life, as wee haue ſeene, how farre are they from the hereſie of the Beguardi, condemned by Clemens 5. Clement. lib. 5. tit. 3. c. 3. who did hold, Quòd homo in hac vita talem perfectionis gradum poteſt acquirere, quòd reddetur omnino impeccabilis, That a man may attaine in this life to ſuch a degree of perfection, as that he ſhould become without ſin, &c. For to ſay a man may perfectly keepe the law, what is it elſe but to affirme he may be without ſin: for he that breaketh not the law, ſinneth not: and if this diſtinction of angelicall and humane perfection might helpe, it would alſo as well haue ſerued theſe heretikes turne.

Gal. 3. 9. 10.

No habituall faith but actiue. Galath. 5. 6.

54 Diſtinct. 54. There is an habituall, and an actuall faith: the faith in habite, which alſo we may call a potentiall faith: The actuall faith is to be found in ſuch as are of yeeres of diſcretion, Bellar. de baptiſm. lib. 1. c. 11. Contr. There is no habituall or potentiall faith that pleaſeth God: the liuely iuſtifying faith is alwaies actuall, working by loue, Gal. 5. 6. And thus your owne law teacheth: decr. p. 2. c. 33. queſt. 3. diſt. 2 c. 14. gloſſ. Si charitas à fide Chriſtianorum ſeiungi nequit, quomodo qui charitatem non habuit, fidem Chriſtianorum habuit? If loue cannot be ſeparated from faith, how can he haue faith that hath not loue? &c. If true faith then be alwaies ioyned with loue, it is alwaies working and effectuall.

No ſinnes pardonable of themſelues by the curſe. Galath. 3. 10. 1. Ioh. 3. 10.

55 Diſtinct. 55. Sinnes, ſome are veniall, that is, pardonable of their owne nature: Some mortall, becauſe all that doe them are worthie of damnation, Rhemiſt. Rom. 1. ſect. 11. Contra. That all ſinnes by grace are pardonable through Chriſt to all beleeuers, (blaſphemie onely againſt the holy Ghoſt excepted, which is irremiſſible, and which the faithfull are ſure to bee preſerued from) wee grant: But no ſinne of it owne nature is pardonable: for all tranſgreſſion of the law is ſubiect to the curſe, Galath. 3. 10. But all ſinne is the tranſgreſſion of the law, 1. Ioh. 3. 10. And that ſinnes are not otherwiſe veniall, then by pardon and forgiueneſſe, your owne Canons doe iuſtifie, decr. part. 2. cauſ. 33. diſt. 1. cap. 47. Venialis culpa, quam ſequitur profeſſio delictorum: That ſin or fault is veniall, which the confeſſion of ſinnes followeth.

No ſin which is not culpable.

Rom. 14. 23.

56 Diſtinct. 56. A man may ſinne two waies, materialiter, & formaliter, materially, and formally: He that ſinneth materially onely, that is, of a ſimple mind doth it, ſine culpa, without his fault: as Peter did, failing ſomewhat in his example, Galath. 2. Erratum fuit abſque vlla Petri culpa: It was a ſmall error without any fault of Peters, Bellarm. de pontif. lib. 1. cap. 28. Contr. All ſin indeed is not alike hainous: for treſpaſſes committed willingly, are greater then faults done of ſimplicity or ignorance, yet are they all ſins, and make the offender guiltie much or little: Otherwiſe, there ſhould not haue needed any ſacrifices to be prouided in the law for ſinnes done of ignorance, Leuit. 4. Whatſoeuer is not of faith is ſinne, Rom. 14. 23. He ſaith not, whatſoeuer is done of malice or wilfulneſſe: but whatſoeuer is not of faith, that is, of a ſure ground, done with certaine knowledge & perſwaſion, and according to a good conſcience: as Bernard expoundeth the place, De fide vera non falſa puto dixiſſe Apoſtolum, omne quod non ex fide peccatum, quia fides falſa, fides non eſt. Non autem ex fide vera bonum, creditur quod malum eſt. I thinke the Apoſtle ſpake of a true, not a falſe faith in that place: Whatſoeuer is not of faith is ſin: becauſe a falſe faith is no faith: and by a true faith, a man cannot beleeue that to be good, which is euill, lib. de Diſpenſat. Therefore all ſinnes done ignorantly, and ſimply, though the intent be neuer ſo good, doe make the party that ſinneth guilty and faultie. And as touching Peters deniall, that it was not ſo ſmall a fault as you make it, conſider what your owne Canons confeſſe: decr. part. 2. cauſ. 11. qu. 3. cap. 85. Negando Chriſtum, quid aliud, quàm ſe negauit eſſe Chriſtianū: & quanta eſt vita confiteri Chriſtum, tanta eſt mors negare Chriſtum: In denying Chriſt, what did he elſe but denie himſelſe to be a Chriſtian: and as it is life to confeſſe Chriſt, ſo it is death to denie him, &c. Iudge then if it be ſo ſmall a fault for a man to denie himſelſe a Chriſtian? or to commit that which deſerueth death: but as it there followeth, Quidam peruerſo fauore Petrum excuſare nituntur: Some labour of a peruerſe fauour to excuſe Peter: euen ſo doe our aduerſaries, who of a blind zeale ſeeke to hide Peters ſinne, which he himſelſe confeſſed.

Peter erred greatly in denying Chriſt.

57 Diſtinct. 57. There is a double certainty of ſaluation: Certitudo infallibilis, an infallible certitude, which a man cannot haue in this life: certitudo humana & moralis, a morall and humane certitude:

and this is ſufficient for a man to reſt himſelfe vpon, *Bellarm. de Sacram. lib.*1. *cap.*28. Contr. Firſt, they ſpeake contraries: for how can there be a certitude not vnfallible? for that that is certaine, is vnfallible, and what is fallible is vncertaine. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith otherwiſe, Giue diligence to make your calling and election ſure (βεβαίαν, ſure without ſtaggering, or wauering) For, if ye doe theſe things, ye ſhall neuer fall, 2. *Pet.*1.10. Is not this an vnfallible certitude, whereby a man ſhall be aſſured neuer to fall? If this might not be attained vnto in this life, S. Peter would not exhort vnto it. I haue alſo here the teſtimony of your owne law: *decr. Greg. lib.*5. *tit.*7. *c.*1. Dubius in fide, infidelis: He is an infidell, that doubteth of his faith, and ſo conſequently of his iuſtification.

No crtainty of iuſtification coniectured, but infallible onely.
2. Pet.1.10.

58 *Diſtinct.*58. I let paſſe heere their idle fanſies, and fond ſchoole diſtinctions, not fit to bee vſed by boy Sophiſters, much leſſe by men, that would be counted graue Diuines: As how, there are cauſæ morales iuſtificationis, aliæ cauſæ Phyſicæ: Morall cauſes of our iuſtification, and Phyſicall or naturall cauſes, *Bellarm. de effect. ſacram. lib.*2. *cap.*11. Contr. This diſtinction is repugnant to the Ieſuites owne doctrine: for faith is no Morall, but a Theologicall vertue, as he diſtinguiſheth them, but it is faith that iuſtifieth, Rom.5.1. Ergo, no morall vertue. Themſelues alſo exclude the workes of nature from being any cauſe of iuſtification: how then can there bee any phyſicall cauſes? For indeed our iuſtification is no phyſicall or naturall, but a metaphyſicall and ſupernaturall worke. And to ſpeake properly, no morall vertue is the cauſe of iuſtification: for that is a morall vertue, that is gotten by vſe, and confirmed by cuſtome, ſo is not faith, whereby onely we are iuſtified: for Spiritus gratiæ dat fidem, The ſpirit of grace giueth faith: *decr. part.*3. *diſtinct.*4. *c.*145. It commeth not by cuſtome, neither is gotten by mans induſtrie.

There is no naturall or phyſicall cauſe of iuſtification.

59 *Diſtinct.*59. Not much vnlike to this, is that diſtinction of Dolor ſummus intenſiuè, & appretiatiuè: Our ſorrow is greateſt intenſiuely, when it is in the higheſt degree: It is the greateſt appretiatiuely, or in eſtimation, when as we ſorrow not for a thing as much as we can: yet we had rather loſe other things then loſe that: As a godly man may mourne intenſiuely for the death of his children, more then for his ſinnes: yet he had rather loſe his children then the fauour of God. True contrition then requireth ſorrow in the higheſt degree, appretiatiuè, but not intenſiue, *Bellarm. lib.*1. *de pœnit. cap.*11. Contr. It is not poſſible that a man ſhould weepe more for that which hee leſſe eſteemeth: and if a man mourne more for a temporall loſſe, then for his ſinnes, he mourneth not aright: therefore ſorrow for our ſinnes ought to be the greateſt in the higheſt degree, intenſiuè. And thus true ſorrow is deſcribed in the Scriptures: We roare like beares, and mourne like doues, Eſay 59.10. Behold O Lord how I am troubled: my bowels ſwell, my liuer is powred out vpon the earth. Ierem. Lament. 1.20. O that my head were as the waters, and mine eyes as fountaines of teares, Ierem.9.1. Cut off thine haire, O Ieruſalem, and caſt it away, and take vp a complaint, Ierem. 7.29. They ſhall mourne like doues, ſmiting vpon their breaſts, Nahum 2.7. In that day ſhall there bee great mourning in Ieruſalem, as the mourning of Hadadrimmon, in the valley of Megiddo, Zachar.12.11. Thus the Prophets did vſe to deſcribe true ſorrow for ſinne, then the which none could be greater: as Moſes ſaith, Seeke the Lord with all thine heart, and all thy ſoule, Deut,4.29. Wherefore, ſorrow for ſinne ought to be the greateſt and chiefeſt of all other, euen intenſiuè, as we haue ſaid. This is in your owne decrees confeſſed: *decr. part.*2. *cauſ.*33. *diſtinct.*3. *cap.*42. Sciat culpabiliter ſe durum, qui deflet damna temporis, vel mortem amici, & dolorem peccati lachrymis non oſtendit: Let him thinke himſelfe ſinfully hard, who can weepe for temporall loſſes, as for the death of a friend, and can bring out no teares for his ſins, wherefore hee ſinneth, that mourneth more for any temporall loſſe, then for Gods diſpleaſure: and herein I approue rather the iudgement of Eſpenſæus, Maior ſolicitudo abundantioris amoris indicium: The greater care or deſire, is a ſigne of great loue.

Eſa.59.10.
Lament. 1.20.
The greateſt ſorrow in the world ought to be for ſin: if any grieue more for temporall loſſes then for their ſinnes; it is their infirmity.
Zach.12.11.
Deut.4.29.
In 2. epiſt. ad Tim.p.78.f.

60 *Diſtinct.*60. Many ſuch goodly diſtinctions they haue: as to ſhew that two bodies may be in one place, they haue inuented this diſtinction: there is duplex diuiſio, extrinſeca reſpectu loci; intrinſeca ratione ſubiecti: There are two kinds of diuiſion of one thing from another: the externall diuiſion in reſpect of place: the internall in reſpect of the ſubiect: And ſo when two bodies are in one place, they are internally diſtinct from themſelues, though they be not diſtinct and diuided in place: the firſt diuiſion is taken away, not the ſecond, *Bellarm. lib.*3. *de Euchariſt. cap.*3.

See what Iugling heere is, and all to breed an impoſſible concluſion: for ſeeing euery body hath his proper place: yea, ſpirits haue their proper definite places, much more bodies: two bodies then muſt haue two places, vnleſſe they be mingled and incorporate together, and ſo make but one body. Thus they diſtinguiſh of the being and ſubſiſtence of the accidents of bread and wine in the Euchariſt without their ſubiects: Sunt in ſe negatiuè, non poſitiuè, They haue a being in themſelues negatiuely, not poſitiuely, *Bellarm. lib.*3. *de Euchariſt. cap.*24. Is not this good ſtuffe? I pray you, what is eſſe negatiuè, to be with a negatiue? that is, put the negatiue (non) to (eſſe) and ſo (non eſſe) by this skilfull Philoſophie ſhall be (eſſe) not to be, is all one with (to be.) Such toyes theſe vaine men do traine vp their ſchollers in, and thinke by them to deceiue the world, of whom wee may truly ſay, as Saint Hierome of the Arrians, Venena erroris melle verborum circumlinebant: They doe with hony words daube their poyſoned opinions: Hierom ad Iohann. Hieroſol. Or as Thomas Aquinas ſaith, Fidem ſophiſticis rationibus corrumpi: By their ſophiſticall diſtinctions they corrupt the faith.

Two bodies cannot be in one place.

The danger of ſubtill and ſophiſticall diſtinctions.

I will trouble the Reader at this time with no more of their ſtuffe: by theſe examples alreadie ſet forth, we may giue our iudgement of the reſt, that their diſtinctions are lewd, ſophiſticall, and vaine inuentions, to obſcure the truth withall, and not worth a ruſh: all diſtinctions we condemne not, wee know they haue their profitable vſe, for the finding out of truth, and diſcouering of falſehood: but ſuch diſtinctions, as ſerue to countenance error and ſuperſtition, againſt the manifeſt truth of Gods word, ſuch as are theſe popiſh diſtinctions, we vtterly abhorre and condemne. Of ſuch diſtinctions we may ſay, as one of their owne fellowes ſaid of that diſtinction of Simonie: There were Simoniaca de ſui natura: there were Simoniacall things by nature, forbidden by the word of God, as to buy or ſell Sacraments. Simoniaca iure poſitiuo: Simoniacall things by the poſitiue law and conſtitutions of the Church, as to ſell Biſhopricks and Eccleſiaſticall liuings, theſe the Pope might diſpenſe withall. O Petre (ſaith he) quantam animarum multitudinem cateruatim tranſmiſit, & tranſmittit ad infernum hac ſuperſtitialis & damnanda diſtinctio: O Peter, Peter, how many ſoules hath this ſuperſtitious and damnable diſtinction ſent by heapes, and yet doth daily ſend to hell: Aureum ſpeculum, ex citation. Iuell. pag. 614. So the Papiſts by their blaſphemous diſtinctions of merits, ſatisfactions, iuſtifications, adoration, and ſuch like, doe ſubuert the truth, peruert the ſoules of many, euert and ouerthrow the courſe of religion, and tread them a high way, and a beaten path to hell and damnation.

THE

THE FOVRTH PILLAR OF PAPISTRIE, CONSISTING OF PAPISTS CONTRADICTIONS amongſt themſelues.

IT is an vſuall accuſation of the popiſh ſort againſt the profeſſors of the Goſpell, that we are at variance and diſſention amongſt our ſelues, and cannot agree of the points of our religion, Harding ſaith with a ſtinking and vncleane mouth: that the puddle of Lutherans runneth downe by many ſinkes: that we agree not within our ſelues: and that each one oftentimes diſagreeth with himſelfe: Defenſ. Apolog. pag. 289. The Rhemiſts falſly obiect, that we would euery yeere haue a new faith, 2. Cor. 2. verſ. 18. Bellarmine ſaith, that wee haue 200. ſeuerall expoſitions of theſe words of our Sauiour (This is my body) with lie and all, de Sacram. lib. 2. cap. 1. Now then, to cleere and purge our ſelues of this falſe accuſation, we will conſider who they are that caſt vs in the teeth with our diſſentions: who, for one diſſention that is among vs, haue tenne among themſelues: yea, if I ſaid for one an hundred, I thinke the ſaying might be iuſtified. This Pillar of Papiſtry hath foure parts: Firſt, we will ſhew the diſſentions of the later and new Papiſts with the old. Secondly, of the contradictions of the new among themſelues. Thirdly, becauſe they ſay, that amongſt vs, one diſagreeth many times with himſelfe: we will lay open the nakedneſſe of their ſtouteſt champion Bellarmine, how ſhamefully he forgetteth himſelfe, ſaying, and vnſaying, now of one opinion, by and by of another. Fourthly, wee will ſhew the repugnances, inconueniences, and inconſequent opinions, which popiſh religion hath in it ſelfe.

THE CONTRADICTIONS AND DIVERS OPINIONS of old Papiſts and new.

BEcauſe our aduerſaries would beare vs in hand, that their diſſentions are not in materiall points, but lighter matters, which concerne not the faith: We will make choice of ſuch opinions of theirs (leauing the reſt) wherein they diſſent, as ſhall eaſily appeare to bee no triuiall or common matters, but of great weight and moment.

Lyranus, Hugo Cardinalis, Caietanus, doe hold the bookes of Tobie, Iudith, Macchabees, Eccleſiaſticus, the Wiſdome of Salomon to be Apocryphall bookes, and no part of Canonicall Scripture: Arius Montanus alſo holdeth all the bookes of the old Teſtament, not found in the Hebrew Canon, to be Apocryphall, ex Whitacher. contrau. quaſt. 1. cap. 6. The contrary is now maintained by Papiſts, that all the aforeſaid bookes are Canonicall, and part of the Scriptures. 1

Canus affirmeth, that the Scriptures in the Hebrew text are wholly corrupt and defaced by the malice of the Iewes: Bellarmine confeſſeth ſome corruption in them, yet not concerning the doctrine of faith and manners. And that thoſe corruptions and defaults came rather by reaſon of ſome faulty Libraries, and imperfect copies, then by the malicious deprauation of the Iewes, Bellarm. de Verb. Dei. lib. 2. cap. 2. 2

They differ much in many points concerning Antichriſt. Some of them thinke, that the number 666. Apocal. 13. doth deſcribe the time of Antichriſts comming, as Lyranus. Some, that it ſheweth the name Ἀντεμος, which they thinke ſhall be the name of Antichriſt, Anſelmus, Richardus. Bellarmine thinketh his name ſhall not be knowne, till he be come, de Rom. pont. lib. 3. cap. 11. 3

Some, that he ſhall be borne of a woman of fornication. Some, of the tribe of Dan, as Anſelmus, Richardus. Bellarmine holdeth neither, Ibid. cap. 12. 4

Dominicus a Soto is of opinion, that the Chriſtian faith ſhall vtterly bee extinguiſhed in the great perſecution vnder Antichriſt. Bellarmine thinketh no, Ibid. cap. 17. 5

Their Canon law ſaith, that no mortall man muſt heere preſume to reproue the faults of the Pope, because he himſelfe being to iudge all men, is to be iudged of none, Part. 1. diſt. 40. cap. Si Papa. Yet the Rhemiſts affirme the contrary, that Popes may be reprehended, and are iuſtly admoniſhed of their faults, and ought to take it in good part, if it proceed of zeale and loue, Annot. 2. Galat. ſect. 8. 6

Some

7 Some of them doe thinke that the Pope, euen as he is Pope, may fall into hereſie, and ſo become an heretike, if hee take vpon him to define or determine without a generall Councell, Gerſon, Alphonſ. de Caſtro, Adrianus 6. Papa. Some affirme the cleane contrary, that the Pope cannot poſſibly fall into hereſie, nor define any hereticall point, no not by himſelfe alone, Albert. Pighius. Others do teach, that whether the Pope may be an heretike or not, he cannot determine any thing that is hereticall, ſic Driedo, Caietanus, Hoſius, Eckius: and to this ſubſcribeth Bellarmine lib. 4. de Rom. pontif. cap. 2.

8 That place of the Goſpell, where Chriſt ſaith, I haue prayed for thee Peter, that thy faith ſhould not faile: the Diuines of Paris vnderſtand generally of the whole Church, that Chriſt prayed that the Catholike faith ſhould not faile. But Bellarmine and the reſt, take theſe words as meant of Peter only and his ſucceſſors, that they ſhould not erre at any time in faith, Bellarm. ibid. cap. 3.

9 Durandus a popiſh author confeſſeth, that Gregorie 1. was found in an error, for permitting prieſts to confirme: but Bellarmine chargeth him rather with error in ſo writing, ibid. cap. 10.

10 Melchior Canus affirmeth, that Honorius 1. was an heretike: Bellarmine holdeth the contrarie, de pontif. lib. 4. cap. 11.

11 Celeſtinus 3. an heretike: ſo ſaith Alphonſ. de Caſtro: Bellarmine is of the contrarie opinion, ibid. cap. 14.

12 Iohn 22. was in a great error, who held, that the ſoules of the righteous ſhould not ſee God before the day of the reſurrection, Guilielmus Ockam, Adrianus: Bellarmine notwithſtanding taketh vpon him to excuſe him of hereſie, Bellarm. cap. 14.

13 Benedictus 13. condemned for an heretike in the Councell of Conſtance, and Eugenius 4. in the Councell of Baſile, Bellarmine denieth notwithſtanding that they were heretikes, but the Councels to haue erred rather in condemning them, ibid.

14 Some of the Papiſts thinke, that Biſhops, as the Apoſtles before them, doe receiue their iuriſdiction immediatly at Gods hands: So Franciſcus Victoria, Alphonſ. de Caſtro. Others, that the Apoſtles receiued their iuriſdiction not from Chriſt, but from Peter, and Biſhops from Peters ſucceſſors: ſo Iohan. de Turre cremat. Dominicus Iacobatius. A third ſort hold, that the Apoſtles immediatly receiued power from Chriſt, but Biſhops muſt looke for it at the Popes hands: ſic Caietanus, Dominicus a Soto, Bonauenture, Durand. ſo alſo Bellarm. cap. 22.

15 They are much troubled about this queſtion, whether the Pope may be depoſed for hereſie: Albert. Pighius holdeth, that the Pope cannot be an heretike, and therefore not for any cauſe to be depoſed: Iohannes de Turre cremat. is of opinion, that the Pope for ſecret hereſie, is actually depoſed of God, and may be by the Church declared to be ſo depoſed. Others held, that the Pope neither for manifeſt, nor ſecret hereſie either is actually or may be depoſed. Caietanus, that the Pope for manifeſt hereſie is not actually depoſed, but may be depoſed by the Church. There is a fifth opinion, that the Pope being a manifeſt heretike, doth ceaſe of himſelfe to be Pope, and that he may be iudged by the Church, and yet they iudge not the Pope, for he is now no Pope, Iohan. Driedo, Melchior Canus, and Bellarmine conſenteth, lib. 2. de pontif. cap. 30.

16 Concerning the Popes temporall iuriſdiction, ſome of them teach, that the Pope by the word of God, hath full and plenarie power in all matters both eccleſiaſticall and ciuill, Auguſtin. Triumphus, Hoſtienſis: Others, that he hath not directly and immediatly any temporall authoritie, but only ſpirituall: yet indirectly and immediatly by reaſon of his ſpirituall power, he hath chiefe authoritie alſo in temporall matters: ſic Iohan. Driedo, Iohan. de Turre Cremat. Pighius, Caietanus, and Bellarm. lib. 5. de pontif. cap. 4.

17 They are much buſied about the Councell of Iewes that condemned Chriſt, whether it erred or not. Some hold that the queſtion was de facto, non de iure: not by what right Chriſt ſhould be put to death, but they conſulted only of the fact, to put him to death, and therefore in a matter of fact might erre. Others thinke that they erred in their owne minde and affection toward Chriſt, not in the ſentence: for Chriſt was worthie of death bearing our ſinnes. But Bellarmine is of an opinion by himſelfe, that the Councell did erre: for they were priuiledged onely from error before Chriſts comming, not afterward, lib. 2. de Concil. cap. 8. Thus they wearie themſelues in their owne fooliſh conceits.

18 Some thinke that generall Councels cannot erre, though they haue not the Popes confirmation: ſo the Diuines of Paris. Others hold the cleane contrarie, that they may, as Caietanus, Turrecremat. Bellarm. lib. 2. de concil. cap. 11.

19 Some hold opinion, that a generall Councell is aboue the Pope, Nichol. Cuſanus, Panormitanus, Abulenſis. So alſo it was concluded in the Councels of Conſtance and Baſile. The Canoniſts teach, that the Pope by right is aboue the Church and Councels, but hee may, if he pleaſe, ſubmit himſelfe to their iudgement, and giue them authoritie ouer him. But others thinke, that he hath ſuch an abſolute authoritie, that hee cannot ſubmit himſelfe to the ſentence or cenſure of Councels though hee would: So Antoninus, Iohan. de Turre cremat. Caietanus, Pighius, with others: vnto this Bellarmine ſubſcribeth, the Popes waged champion to fight for his triple crowne.

20 Alphonſ. de Caſtro is of opinion, that heretikes are mẽbers of the Church: Bellarm. beſtoweth ſome labour to confute his opinion. Thus one papiſt maketh work for another, Bellar. de Eccl. lib. 3. cap. 4.

21 Iohan.de Turre cremat. requireth faith as neceſſarie to make a true member of the Church, which is a true and ſound opinion: but hee is confuted by Bellarmine, who holdeth faith in this caſe to bee needleſſe: Lib.3.de Eccl.cap.10.

22 Iohan.de Turre cremat. ſaith, it is againſt the Catholike faith to affirme, that the faith of the Church did not only reſt, or was preſerued in the Virgin Mary in the paſſion of Chriſt: Bellarmine thinketh that faith was preſerued as well in the Apoſtles, as in Mary, that theirs failed no more then hers, lib.3. de Eccl.cap.17. And herein the Ieſuite commeth neereſt the truth: The Apoſtles faith was not loſt, but greatly ſhaken, at the death of Chriſt, and they remained wauering and doubtfull, till they were by Chriſt (riſen againe) confirmed.

23 Some affirme that the vow of continencie or ſingle life is annexed to Prieſthood by the law of God, Iohan.Maior, Clictouaeus. Others, that it is not grounded vpon the diuine law, but only brought in by the conſtitution and decree of the Church, and may be diſpenſed withall, Tho.Aquinas, Caietanus: ſo thinketh alſo Bellarm.de clericis, lib.1.cap.18.

24 The Canoniſts hold, that the conſtitution of tithes, euen in reſpect of the quantitie and proportion of the tenth, is eſtabliſhed by the law of God, and therefore cannot be altered to any other quantitie. Bellarmine calleth it an error of the Canoniſts, and confuteth it, determining the matter thus: that the paiment of tithes is de iure diuino, quoad ſubſtantiam, non quoad quantitatem, is by the word warranted, in reſpect of the ſubſtance or equitie, not in regard of the preciſe quantitie, de clericis, lib.1. cap.25.

25 The Canoniſts hold, that Clergie men are exempt from the power of ſecular Princes, not only in eccleſiaſticall, but in politike and ciuill affaires by the law of God. Others affirme, that they are freed their perſons and their goods only by humane conſtitution, Franciſcus Victoria, Dominicus a Soto: and Bellarm.de clericis, lib.1.cap.28.

26 Scotus did hold, that veniall ſinnes were remitted in the very inſtant of the ſeparation of the ſoule from the bodie, but they were remitted per merita præcedentia, by vertue of the merits, which went before in the life. Thomas Aquinas held the contrarie that they were not remitted then, but afterward in purgatorie. To this agreeth Bellarmine and the reſt, Bellarm.lib.1.de Purg.cap.10.

27 Some papiſts hold, that the ſoules in purgatorie are vncertaine of their ſaluation: and though they ſhall be ſaued, yet they know it not, Dyoniſ.Carthuſianus, Michael Baij: but the generall opinion of the Papiſts now is, that they are certaine of their ſaluation, Bellarm.de Purg.lib.2.cap.4.

28 Some of them thinke, that veniall ſinnes by nature deſerue eternall death, and that they are but veniall of Gods mercie: wherein they hold the truth: for the ſtipend of all ſinne is death, Rom.6.23. ſo Michael Baij, Gerſon, Iohan.Roffenſ. But now the Ieſuites generally hold the contrarie, that veniall ſinnes are pardonable of their owne nature, Bellarm.ibid.

29 Some are of opinion, that prayers may be made for ſoules that are in hell: Bellarmine, and generally all that rabble hold it only to be lawfull to pray for ſoules in purgatorie. But the truth is, the dead are not to be prayed for at all, Bellarm.de Purg.lib.2.cap.5.

30 The Papiſts generally hold, that the ſoules which need no clenſing in purgatorie, doe ſtraightwaies goe to heauen: yet Bellarmine hath a tricke by himſelfe, and thinketh it not improbable, that there ſhould be another place, not ſo full of ioy as heauen is, nor in paine equall to purgatorie, lib.2. de Purg.cap.7. But we acknowledge neither the one nor the other: for ſcripture no where maketh mention of moe placas then heauen and hell.

31 Thomas Aquinas holdeth, that the leaſt puniſhment in purgatorie exceedeth the greateſt torment in this life. Bonauenture denieth that, and ſaith that the greateſt paine of purgatorie only exceedeth the greateſt of this life. And ſo thinketh Bellarm.lib.2.cap.15. But this is a needleſſe queſtion to diſpute of the paines of purgatorie, for there is no ſuch place, as we haue elſewhere ſhewed.

32 That the Saints know our prayers, though it bee not agreeable to ſcripture, yet it is agreed vpon amongſt papiſts: yet about the manner, how they come by the knowledge of our prayers, it is not amongſt them agreed. Some thinke, that mens prayers are at that inſtant reuealed to Saints when they are made. Others, that in the beginning of their happineſſe, ſo ſoone as they are receiued into heauen, they behold all things in God, as in a glaſſe, which appertaine to them. And this Bellarmine taketh to be the more probable opinion, cap.20. yet it is but a prophane ſpeculation: for God himſelfe onely knoweth the heart, neither will he giue his honour to another.

33 Caietanus Cardinall confoundeth images and idols, taking them for all one: Bellarmine and the reſt make great difference betweene them. Images, they ſay, they haue, but no Idols, Bellarm.de imaginib.ſanctor.lib.2.cap.7.

34 Some papiſts hold opinion, that the Images of the Trinitie ought not to be made, Abulenſ.Durand.Pereſius, Caranza, who beſide alloweth not the Image of Chriſt to bee made. Others hold the contrary, that they may ſafely be made, and adored: Caietanus, Catharinus, Sanderus; and Bellarmine, who for the moſt part holdeth with the worſt opinion.

35 Concerning the worſhip of Images, it is agreed amongſt papiſts to be lawfull and commendable, though it be flat contrarie to the ſecond Commandement: yet they diſagree about the manner of worſhip. Some hold that the image in it ſelfe is not at all to bee worſhipped; but before the image, that only whoſe image it is: Sic Durandus, Alphonſus de Caſtro. Others, that the image is to bee worſhipped, and adored with the ſame kinde of worſhip that the exemplar is, whoſe image it is; and ſo the image of Chriſt to be worſhipped as Chriſt himſelfe: Sic Caietanus, Bonauenture, Capreolus, and others. There is a third opinion, that images properly in themſelues may be worſhipped, yet with an inferiour kinde of worſhip, then that which is due to the Saint reſembled by the image, Pereſius, Catharinus, Sanderus: to theſe conſenteth Bellarmine de Imaginib. ſanctor. lib. 2. cap. 20.

36 The papiſts make two kindes of religious worſhip, the higher and more excellent kinde, which is due onely vnto God, they call λατρεία, the inferiour kinde, which may bee giuen vnto Saints, δουλεία, Sic Bellarm. Yet Martinus Pereſius a learned papiſt, ſaith, that δουλεία cannot ſignifie the worſhip of Saints: for the word is tranſlated, ſeruitude, or ſeruice: but we are not ſeruants to the Saints, but their fellow-ſeruants, Bellarm. lib. 1. de beatitud. Sanctor. cap. 12.

37 Now concerning the Sacraments. Some of them thinke that the ſame definition of a ſacrament, cannot agree vnto the ſacraments both of the old and new Teſtament, but improperly: Sic Magiſter ſententiar. Albertus, Bonauenture. Others thinke, that this definition of a ſacrament, eſt ſacra rei ſignum, It is a ſigne of an holy thing, may properly comprehend both the old and new ſacrament, becauſe it is not of the eſſence of a ſacrament to be a cauſe of ſanctification, but a ſigne only: Sic Thom. Dominicus a Soto, Martinus Ledeſmius, and this is the truer opinion. But Bellarmine fully liketh neither: Lib. 1. de ſacram. cap. 12.

38. 1. Now whether the ſacraments doe conſiſt, ex verbis & rebus, of the words, and the things or elements, as their matter and forme, it is a great queſtion among papiſts. Some hold that they doe not: but that any thing ſenſible, whether it be the element, or the word, is the matter, and the forme to be the ſignification, Sic Dominicus a Soto, Caietanus. Others thinke that all Sacraments conſiſt not of the word and elements, but ſome only: Sic Durandus. A third opinion is, that the ſacraments onely of the new Teſtament doe conſiſt of theſe parts, not the ſacraments of the old: ſic Alexand. Alenſis. And others thinke, that all ſacraments doe conſiſt of theſe parts, either in themſelues, or ſomewhat in ſtead, or place of them: Sic Dominicus a Soto. Bellarmine taketh ſomewhat from all theſe opinions, lib. 1. de ſacram. cap. 18. But to put the matter out of doubt, there muſt bee in euery ſacrament, both the word and the element; the word ſanctifieth, 1. Timoth. 4. 5. and therefore muſt needes be there, nothing can ſerue in ſtead of it: there muſt be alſo an element beſide the word, to be ſanctified, and therefore the word cannot be the element.

39 The Ieſuites doe hold, that the intention of the Miniſter is neceſſarie to make a ſacrament; he muſt haue a purpoſe and intention, Faciendi, quod facit eccleſia, to doe that which the Church doth: that is to make a ſacrament: Sic Bellarm. cum alijs. Catharinus a papiſt ſaith, it is not neceſſarie to haue ſuch an intention, but that a ſacrament may be without it: wherein hee thinketh aright, for the ſacrament no more dependeth of the Miniſters intention, then the preaching of the word doth.

40 Concerning the efficacie of the ſacraments, they doe all hold, that they are cauſes of ſanctification, but not alike. Some hold that the Miniſter is the efficient and working cauſe of iuſtification, the ſacrament but the inſtrument: Sic Caietanus, Scotus, Ledeſmius. Some contrariwiſe, that the ſacrament is the efficient cauſe, the Miniſter but the inſtrument: Ita Tho. Aquinas, ex Bellar. lib. 1. cap. 27. and of theſe there are two ſorts: ſome think that the ſacraments are but cauſes, Sine quibus non: without the which we are not iuſtified, Sic Bonauentur. Scotus, Durandus. Others thinke that there is verily an effectuall power giuen to the ſacraments to iuſtifie: Sic Bellarm. lib. 2. cap. 11. What a doe is here about nothing, the ſacraments are no inſtrumentall or efficient cauſes of our iuſtification, but ſeales only of the righteouſnes of faith, Rom. 4. 11. And it is faith whereby we are iuſtified, Rom. 5. 1.

41 As touching the ſacraments of the law: ſome denie that they did iuſtifie ex opere operantis, that is, by the faith and deuotion of the receiuer: ſic Magiſter. Others thought they did. And for Circumciſion, ſome held it did iuſtifie ex opere operato, by the very worke wrought: ſic Alexander, Bonauenture, Scotus, Gabriel. Others were of opinion, that it did not iuſtifie of it ſelfe, but as it was a proteſtation and application of faith: Sic Tho. Capreolus, Scotus: to this Bellarmine enclineth, lib. 2. c. 13. But if theſe fellowes would haue contented themſelues with iuſtification by faith, as the ſcriptures teach vs, they needed not to haue made ſo many doubts.

42 Concerning the indeleble character, which they ſay is imprinted in the ſoule by the ſacraments, and can neuer be blotted out, Durandus ſaith, it is no reall thing diſtinct from the ſoule, or any abſolute qualitie, but a certaine reſpect, and relation only: Scotus ſaith, it cannot be proued by ſcripture: Gabriel doubteth, whether the Church hath determined it: yet Bellarmine holdeth his owne ſtill, that there is ſuch an indeleble character: which is but a meere deuice, and hath no ground out of ſcripture, as Scotus ſaith, Ex Bellarm. lib. 2. de ſacram. cap. 20.

43 Some papiſts haue held opinion, that in baptiſme it is ſufficient to baptiſe in the name of one of the perſons in trinitie, and eſpecially of Chriſt: Sic Hugo de S. Victor. Nicolaus Papa. Bellarmine holdeth, as the truth is, that baptiſme muſt be celebrated in the name of the whole Trinitie.

44 Some hold, that martyrdome doth not giue grace, Niſi ex opere operantis, but according to the affection & diſpoſition of the martyr: ſic Dominicus a Soto, Martinus Ledeſmius. Others, that it was auailable ex opere operato, by the very worke wrought: Ita Thom. Gabriel, Iohan. Maior, and Bellar. lib. 1. de baptiſ. cap. 6. The firſt is the truer opinion, for without loue if a man giue his body to be burned, it is nothing, 1. Cor. 13. And yet neither martyrdome, nor any worke elſe, can be the cauſe of grace.

45 Some hold that Iohns baptiſme was a ſacrament of the new law, and that they which were baptized therewith, and did not put their truſt therein, but had knowledge of the holy Ghoſt, needed not to haue been baptized againe by Chriſt: Sic Petr. Lombardus. Others thought it was a kinde of ſacrament, ſuch as were the ſacraments of the law, Ita Magiſter Thomas. But Bellarmine will haue it neither ſacrament of the old nor new, *De ſacram.baptiſ.lib.*1.19. The ſcripture putteth all out of doubt that ſaith, Iohn baptized vnto repentance for remiſſion of ſinnes, Luke 3. and ſo was in ſubſtance and effect one, and the ſame with the baptiſme of Chriſt.

46 That Chriſt in the ſixth of Iohn treateth not of the Euchariſt: it is the opinion of many Papiſts, Gabriel, Cuſanus, Caietanus, Tapper, Ianſenius: wherein they ſay, as the truth is. But Bellarmine, and generally the Papiſts now adaies doe applie it to the Euchariſt: though indeed, it maketh more againſt them, then for them, *Lib.*1.*de Euch.cap.*5 ex Bellarm.

47 As touching the reall preſence of Chriſt in the Euchariſt, Durandus thinketh, that the ſubſtance of Chriſt is there without magnitude or quantitie. Others thinke that the bodie of Chriſt is there with the due quantitie and magnitude, but there is no diſtinction nor order of the parts: Sic Okam. But Bellarmine and the reſt doe thinke that the body of Chriſt is in the ſacrament, in his due quantitie and diſtinction and order of parts, *Lib.*3.*de ſacram.Euch.c.*5. Of all theſe the firſt two opinions are more reaſonable: for how is it poſſible for the body of Chriſt, in his due proportion and bignes to be contained in a thinne wafer cake? But none of all theſe opinions are true: for the bodie of Chriſt is no where elſe but in heauen, till his ſecond comming, as S. Peter ſaith, Acts 3.

48 Some did hold, that all the bread and wine in the Euchariſt was not tranſubſtantiate, but ſo much onely as was receiued of the godly. Others, that the forme onely of the bread was changed, not the matter: ſic Durandus. Some contrariwiſe, that the matter was changed, not the forme. Others, that the bread is aſſumed hypoſtatically vnto the word, as the humane nature is, ſic Rupertus. Bellarmine with the reſt, that after the words of conſecration, the bread and wine is tranſubſtantiate wholly into the body of Chriſt, the accidents only remaining, *Lib.*3.*de Euch.cap.*11.

49 It is the generall opinion of Papiſts, that there ariſeth no more ſpirituall fruit by receiuing in both kindes, then by receiuing in one: Yet there are ſome of the contrarie opinion. Alexander. Alenſ. Gaſper Caſſalius, Ruardus. And by a generall decree in the Councell of Baſile the vſe of the cup was granted to the Bohemians, Bellarm.lib 4.*de Euchariſt.cap.*23. for if ſo the receiuing in one kind were all out as full of comfort, and as profitable, as to doe it in both, then were one ſuperfluous; and ſo they take vpon them to controule our Sauiour Chriſt, who inſtituted both, and vſed them at his laſt Supper.

50 About the popiſh ſacrament of extreame vnction ariſe theſe differences: They haue but two places of ſcripture vpon which they ground that ſacrament, Marke 6. and Iames 5. About the former place they much diſagree: Some holding that when the Apoſtles annointed the ſicke with oyle, it was not the ſacramentall vnction, but an adumbration of it, and preparation thereunto, ſic Ruardus, Ianſenius, Dominicus a Soto. Others, that it is one and the ſelfeſame kinde of vnction, which is treated of in both places: ſic Thom.Waldenſ. Alphonſ.de Caſtro: Bellarmine enclineth to the firſt opinion, for no other reaſon, but becauſe the Proteſtants hold, the vnction ſpoken of in both places to be the ſame, *Bellarm.de extrem.vnction.lib.*1.*cap.*2.

51 Some thinke that the corporall health of the bodie is the abſolute and infallible effect of this their deuiſed ſacrament: ſic Dominicus a Soto. Others, that it is but a conditionall effect, if it be profitable for the ſoules health, and that this ceremonie is not principally applied for the health of the body, but for the health of the ſoule: *Concil.Tridentin.Sic Bellar.cap.*6.

52 Some hold, that in time of neceſſitie a lay-man may be the miniſter of extreame vnction: ſic Thom. Waldenſ. Others, that a lay-man may annoint with holy conſecrate oyle, but without a ſacrament: ſic Dominicus a Soto. A third ſort thinketh, that it is not lawfull for the lay ſort to doe the one or the other: *ſic Ianſenius, Bellarmin.cap.*9. Now who will giue credit to theſe men, that there is ſuch a ſacrament of extreame vnction: when they cannot agree amongſt themſelues, nor one beleeue another?

53 Some alſo thinke, that to annoint the fiue ſenſes together with the reines and the feete, is of the eſſence of extreame vnction, and none ought to be omitted. Some the contrarie, that none of them are of the eſſence, but the annointing of any one may ſerue. The third opinion is, that the annointing only of the fiue ſenſes is of the eſſence: *ſic Thom. Aquin. Bellarm.ibid.cap.*10.

54 The Rhemiſts hold the mixture of water and wine in the Euchariſt to bee neceſſarie, and ſay the Proteſtants in not vſing that ceremonie doe moſt impudently, and damnably, Annot.1.Cor.11.ſect. 10. yet the Canoniſts affirme that it is de honeſtate tantum, non de neceſſitate: Of decencie only, not neceſſitie: *De conſecrat.diſtinct.*2.in gloſſ.Scotus 4.ſententiar.diſtinct.[illegible] *quæſt.*6.

55 Some denie that Epiſcopalis ordinatio, the ordaining of Biſhops to be a ſacrament, Dominicus a Soto, Petrus a Soto, Caietanus, Durandus with others: Bellarmine with the reſt of the Ieſuits hold the contrarie, that it is a ſacrament: *De ſacram.ordinis lib.*1.*cap.*4.

56 Durandus denieth Matrimonie to bee a ſacrament, vnleſſe Equiuocè, Equiuocally and improperly: Bellarmine and generally the Papiſts hold it properly to bee a ſacrament: *Lib.*1.de Matrimon. cap.[illegible]

Some

57 Some of them againe do thinke, that matrimonie is not a proper ſacrament of the new teſtament: ſic Alphonſ. de caſtro, Petrus a Soto, Bonauentur. cum alijs. But that it was confirmed rather then inſtituted of Chriſt: Bellarmine with the reſt, hold the contrary, Lib. 1 de Matrim. cap. 5.

58 Some hold that matrimonie, which they affirme to be a ſacrament, giueth no grace: ſic Magiſter ſententiar. lib. 4. diſtinct. 2. Bellarmine with the reſt hold the contrary, ibid.

59 Some affirme, that they which being maried are afterward conuerted to the faith and baptized, ſhould after their baptiſme contract matrimonie againe, and ſo then it becommeth a ſacrament, Sic Paludanus, Capreolus, Eckius. Others thinke, that there neede no new contract, but that matrimonie by the very act of baptiſme is confirmed, Sic Thom. de Argent. Bellarmine that a new contract is not neceſſarie, but that the parties after baptiſme by ſome ſigne ſhould expreſſe their conſent, Bellar. lib. 1. de ſacram. cap. 5.

60 Melchior Canus affirmeth, that the parties themſelues cannot be the miniſters of the ſacrament of matrimonie, but of the contract onely, but that it muſt be neceſſarily done by an eccleſiaſticall miniſter. Bellarmine with the reſt teach the contrary, that the parties themſelues are the miniſters of the ſacrament. Some againe ſay, that the mutuall conſent of the parties contracted in due forme of words expreſſed, are the matter and forme of the ſacrament of matrimonie. Others, that the perſons themſelues are the matter: Bellarmine thinketh, both that in the contract while, the words are the matter expreſſing their conſent, and afterward the parties themſelues, Bellar. cap. 6.

61 The times prohibited and interdict for mariage were in times paſt, three in the yeare, from the Aduent to the Epiphanie, from Septuageſima to the octaues of Eaſter: from three dayes afore the aſcenſion, to the octaues of Pentecoſt, Ruard. Tapper. The practiſe among them now is otherwiſe: for with the interdict time at Pentecoſt, they haue diſpenſed: and the prohibited time at Eaſter is cut ſhorter, to begin not from Septuageſima, but from Aſhwedneſday. So was it decreed in the late chapter of Trent, ſeſſ. 24. cap. 10.

62 Concerning the popiſh ſacrament of penance, there ariſe many doubts and differences among them: Some hold the ſinnes which are abſolued to be the matter of the ſacrament: others, the ſinner himſelfe that maketh confeſſion: ſome the prieſt that abſolueth, ex Bellar. de pœnitent. lib. 1. cap. 16.

63 Some, that the whole ſacrament doth not conferre grace, but abſolution only by the prieſt, Sic Thom. Aquin. Bonauent. Vega. Franciſcus Ferrarienſ.

64 Others that abſolution did not giue grace alone, but the action of the penitent perſon was ioyned, and did concurre with it, in that caſe: Bellarmine enclineth to the firſt opinion, De pœnitent. lib. 1. cap. 16.

65 Some thinke that the act of penance, is but a diſpoſition onely vnto remiſſion of ſinnes, no merite at all whereby remiſſion is deſerued: Sic Iohan. Capreolus, Dominicus a Soto. Others, that is not a diſpoſition onely vnto iuſtification, but a meriting cauſe thereof of congruitie, Sic Albertus, Bonauent. Scotus, Durandus, Gabriel: to this alſo Bellarmine ſubſcribeth, lib. 2. de pœnitent. cap. 12. But the Ieſuite is here groſly deceiued, for before iuſtification it is impoſſible to pleaſe God without faith: therefore there is no place for merite.

66 Some, that perfect contrition is not ſufficient to attaine remiſſion of ſinnes, without the ſacrament of penance, and abſolution by the prieſt, but onely at the point of death. Others, that it is ſufficient to be truely contrite, if the partie haue a vow and purpoſe afterward to receiue the ſacrament of penance: ſic Bellarm. cum alijs, lib. 2. cap. 13. But the truth is, that true repentance before God is ſufficient with ſatisfaction to the Church in publike offences, without either ſacramentall penance, or the vow thereof, for ſuch ſacrament we acknowledge none.

67 Some hold, that men may ſatisfie God by their penall workes, both for the fault, and for eternall puniſhment due thereunto: Sic Ruard. Tapper, Andreas, Vega. Others, that they can ſatisfie God for neither of theſe, but onely for temporall puniſhment, ſic Bellarm. cum Ieſuitis lib. 4. cap. 1. But the truth is, that Chriſt hath ſatisfied fully and wholly in our behalfe, both for ſinne and whatſoeuer puniſhment due, as we haue ſhewed before: ſo that no part or kinde of ſatisfaction remaineth to be done by vs.

68 Some hold, that Auricular confeſſion is neceſſarie to ſaluation, and that by the inſtitution of Chriſt, Hard. pag. 186. Others hold, that confeſſion is not neceſſary for ſecret ſinnes, but that they may bee forgiuen without: ſic Gratian. Holcott. Thom. Aquin. ex Iuel. defenſ. apol. pag. 190.

69 Some hold, that the Virgin Mary was conceiued without originall ſinne: Friers Franciſcane. Others that ſhe was conceiued as all other children of Adam be: Dominike friers. And Bernard thinketh it vnlawfull therefore to keepe a feſtiuall day of her conception, Fox. pag. 800.

70 The moſt part of them hold, that it is not meete or conuenient, that the people ſhould receiue in both kinds. Others more truly hold the contrary: Bartholomæus Latomus confeſſeth that our requeſt is reaſonable to haue the holy ſacrament adminiſtred in both kinds: Gerardus Lorichius calleth them Pſeudocatholicos, falſe catholikes, that hinder the reformation of the Church in that point. And hee calleth the wilfull maintaining of receiuing in one kind, Hæreſis & blaſphemia peſtilens & execrabilis: An hereſie, and blaſphemie curſed and peſtilent, Ex Iuel. defenſ. apolog. pag. 28.

71 Laſtly (becauſe it were infinite to ſhew all their contradictions) they doe foully diſagree about the bodie of Chriſt in the ſacrament, what ſhould become of it after conſecration: Some ſay, that Chriſts body paſſeth downe into the ſtomacke: other, that it entreth onely into the mouth: Another, that as ſoone as the formes of bread and wine be grated of the teeth, the body of Chriſt is caught vp into heauen: One ſaith, a mouſe may eate the body of Chriſt: Another, that a mouſe cannot eate it: yea the Maſter of the ſentences himſelfe is to ſeeke, Deus nouit, ſaith he: after much diſcuſſing of the matter, he reſolueth it thus: God knoweth, ſaith he, what is become of it, Ex citation. Iuel. pag. 280. And that we may ſee yet further how well they agree together in this maine point of popery, ſome of them ſay, that Chriſts body doth deſcend from heauen vpon the altar: for theſe are the words of their S. Francis, Chriſtus quotidie deſcendit de ſinu patris ſuper altare, &c.: yet Turriane denieth, that the body of Chriſt doth come from heauen, 1. tract. cap. 19. fol. 116. Againe, the common gloſſe ſaith, that after the Euchariſt is eaten, the Angels take the body of Chriſt & carry it into heauen: But Scarga ſaith, that neuer any diſcreet Catholike ſo ſaid, Scarg. in art. 5. fol. 335. Bellarmine doubteth not to ſay, that the body of Chriſt is conſumed: for thus he writeth, Per conſecrationem corpus Chriſti accipit formam cibi, cibus autem ad coniectionem, ac per hoc ad mutationem, & deſtructionem ordinatur: The body of Chriſt by conſecration receiueth the forme of meate, which meate is ordained to bee eaten, and ſo to be changed, conſumed and deſtroyed, lib. 1. de miſſ. c. 17. Some of them hold, that the body of Chriſt remaineth ſtill after it is eaten, Vt tanquam ſemen viuificum in nobis inueniatur corpus vitæ: That the body of life may be found in vs as a quickning ſeed, Turriane. tract. 1. cap. 19. fol. 114. But other of them thinke, that the body of Chriſt doth no longer remaine in the Euchariſt, quàm naturaliter manſiſſet ſubſtantia panis, then the ſubſtance of bread naturally ſhould haue remained, Bellar. lib. 1. de Euchar. cap. 1. The old popiſh diuinity was this, Corpus Chriſti in veritate frangi fidelium dentibus & atteri: That the body of Chriſt is in truth broken and ground with the teeth of the faithfull, decr. par. 3. diſtinct. 2. cap. 42. But their new diuines are aſhamed of ſuch groſſe ſtuffe, as Bellarmine ſaith, Chriſtus non teritur, non roditur: Chriſt is not rent or torne, meaning his body, &c. lib. 8. de Euchariſt. cap. 8. Thomas Aquinas hath this concluſion, Quod non aliter poſſit corpus Chriſti incipere eſſe de nouo in hoc ſacramento, niſi per conuerſionem ſubſtantiæ panis in ipſum: That the body of Chriſt cannot otherwiſe begin to be in the Sacrament, then by the turning of the ſubſtance of the bread into it, Summ. 3. queſt. 65. art. 2. But they do now inſtantly deny any ſuch conuerſion of the bread into Chriſts body, Moſcou. theſ. polon. 13. ſo full of doubts and vncertainties is the popiſh doctrine of the reall preſence. Thus much ſhall ſuffice concerning the contradictions of the Papiſts of former times, with our new vpſtart Pope-catholike doctors. And I hope by this it may appeare that their domeſticall diſſenſions are not, as they beare vs in hand, in the ſmaller points onely, but in the very ground and ſubſtance of Popiſh religion, as about the Sacraments, the reall preſence, iuſtification, authority of the Scriptures, of the Pope, of generall Councels, and ſuch like. Now let vs ſee how well our new maſters of Popery, which are principally the Ieſuites, agree among themſelues.

THE DISAGREEMENT AND DIFFERENCE OF OPINION of the Ieſuites and Seminary Prieſts among themſelues. Part. 2.

I Will heere eſpecially match our Rhemiſts and Bellarmine, and compare their doctrine and opinions together, that the vnity whereof they make ſuch boaſt and brags may be made knowne to the world.

1 Bellarmine holdeth, that wicked men liuing in the externall profeſſion of the Church, are Veræ partes, & membra Eccleſiæ: Are true parts and members of the Church, De Eccleſ. lib. 3. cap. 10. The Rhemiſts ſay, that they are rather as ill humors, and ſuperfluous excrements, then true and liuely parts of the bodie, Annot. 1. Iohn 2. ſect. 10. 71

2 That place Math 24. 15. of the ſtanding of the abomination of deſolation in the temple, Bellarmine vnderſtandeth of the deſtruction of Ieruſalem, Lib. 3. cap. 16. reſp. ad 5. ration. The Rhemiſts affirme it ſhall be eſpecially accompliſhed in Antichriſts time, when as the ſacrifice of the Maſſe (as they imagine) ſhall be vtterly aboliſhed, Annot. Matth. 24. verſ. 15. 72 Mat. 24. 15.

3 Concerning the defection and Apoſtaſie, which S. Paul ſpeaketh of, 2. Theſſ. 2. 3. Bellarmine ſaith that it ſhall be a defection from the Romane Empire. Rhemiſt. It ſhall be a defection from moſt points of Chriſtian religion: Secondly Bellarmine ſaith, that though it be a defection from the Roman faith, yet it ſhall not be generall, but particular, Ibid. cap. 16. reſp. ad 5. argum. The Rhemiſts grant it ſhall be a reuolt of kingdomes, peoples, prouinces, ſo that the publike entercourſe of the faithfull with the Church of Rome ſhall ceaſe: they ſhall onely communicate with it in heart; Annot. 2. Theſſ. 2. ſect. 6. 73

4 The Rhemiſts hold, that Antichriſt ſhall be borne of the tribe of Dan: Annot. 2. Theſſal. 2. 8. Bellarmine doth not onely varie from them, but oppoſeth himſelfe againſt them, and confuteth their arguments, Lib. 3. de pontif. cap. 12. 74

5 Bellarmine, by that place, 1. Iohn. 2. 22. hee is Antichriſt that denieth the Father and the Sonne, would proue, that Antichriſt, when he commeth, ſhall apertly and openly deny Ieſus to be Chriſt, lib. 3. de pontif. cap. 14. The Rhemiſts ſay this was a marke, ſeruing onely for thoſe times to deſcribe an heretike by, Annot. 1. Iohn 4. ſect. 2. And therefore it cannot be applied to Antichriſt. 75 1. Iohn. 22.

6 Bellarmine ſaith, that one of the wonders or miracles, that Antichriſt muſt worke, ſhal be to cauſe 76 the Image of the beaſt to ſpeake, *Ibid.cap.*15. The Rhemiſts, whereas the text ſaith, another Beaſt ſhall riſe out of the earth, and ſhall cauſe fire to come from heauen, and the image of the beaſt to ſpeake, Apoc.13. They expound it not of Antichriſt, but of another falſe prophet inferiour to Antichriſt, *Annot. Apocal.*13. *ſect.*3.

77 7 Bellarmine ſaith: Soli epiſcopi paſtores ſunt: That Biſhops onely are paſtors of their dioceſſe: and that inferiour miniſters are not properly paſtors of their ſeuerall flocks, Lib. 1. *de Concil.cap.*15. The Rhemiſts doubt not to ſay, that many, which haue no gift to preach, yet for their wiſedome and gouernment are not vnmeet to be paſtors and biſhops, *Annot.*1.*Tim.*5. *ſect.*13. If ſuch in their opinion may be made Biſhops, then are they not moſt properly paſtors, as Bellarmine ſaith: for hee is moſt properly a paſtor, that hath gifts to preach, which is ſpirituall feeding.

78 8 The Rhemiſts affirme, that Chriſt in plaine tearmes moſt amply imparted vnto the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, his full power and authority to remit ſinnes: And further, they ſeeme to inſinuate, that what authority Chriſt had, as he was man, it is now wholly reſiant in them, *Annot.Ioh.*20.*ſect.*3. Bellarmine notwithſtanding denieth, that the Pope may doe as much, as Chriſt could as he was man: For Chriſt did inſtitute Sacraments, and could remit ſinnes without Sacraments, ſo cannot the Pope, *de pontif.lib.*5.*cap.*4.

79 9 The day of the Lord ſhall reueale it, 1.Cor.3.13. that is, ſaith Bellarmine, the generall day of Iudgement, *Lib.de purgat.*1.*cap.*4. the Rhemiſts vnderſtand the particular day of euery mans death, Annot. 1.*Cor.*3.*ſect.*3.

80 10 Whereas Iohn is forbidden by the Angell to worſhip him, Apoc.19. verſe 10. The Rhemiſts ſay, it was becauſe Iohn being deceiued in the error of his perſon, and ſo taking the Angell for Chriſt, gaue him diuine honour, Annot.in eum locum. But Bellarmine ſaith, hee did but giue the Angell the worſhip due vnto him, and did well in adoring the Angell: and that the Angell did well in refuſing adoration, for reuerence to the humanity of Chriſt. The Rhemiſts ſay, it was refuſed for reuerence to the excellency of Iohns perſon, *Bellarm.lib.*1.*de ſanctis,cap.*14. Thus theſe Ieſuites agree, as they ſay, as harp and harrow.

81 11 The Rhemiſts affirme, that Images are not to be adored with godly or diuine honour, *Annot. Act.*17.*ſect.*5. Bellarmine yet granteth, that impropriè, improperly notwithſtanding they may be adored with diuine worſhip, *Lib.*2.*de ſanct.cap.*23.

82 12 Bellarmine denieth that the body of Chriſt being eaten goeth any further then the ſtomacke, *lib.*1 *de Euchar.cap.*14. The Rhemiſts goe further, they ſay wee are made a peece of his body and blood, 1.Cor.10.ſect.5. as though his body were conuerted into the ſubſtance of their bodies.

83 13 The Rhemiſts commend the reſeruing of the water in Baptiſme, and carrying of it home, to giue it the diſeaſed to drinke, *Annot.Iam.*5. *ſect.*5. But Bellarmine alloweth the reſeruation onely of the Euchariſt, which onely, ſaith he, remaineth a Sacrament, after the vſe, *lib.*4.*de Euchar.cap.*3.

84 14 The Rhemiſts ſay, we do improperly name the whole Sacrament, and miniſtration therof Communion, *Annot.*1.*Cor.*11. *ſect.*14. yet Bellarmine dealeth more liberally, for hee frankly and freely vſeth the name of Communion, as *lib.*4.*de Euchar.cap.*24 tot.capit. and many other places.

85 15 The Rhemiſts vpon thoſe words of the Apoſtle, Heb.13.10. Wee haue an altar, doe ground the hauing of their materiall altars for the ſacrifice of the body of Chriſt: and would proue by this place, that Chriſtians haue altars properly ſo called. Annot.in hunc locum. Bellarmine of purpoſe refraineth to vrge this place againſt vs, becauſe, ſaith he, diuers Catholike writers doe vnderſtand it either of the Croſſe, or of Chriſt himſelfe, *Lib.*1.*de miſſ.cap.*14.

86 16 Bellarmine ſaith, that in the Euchariſt onely, the Prieſt doth Induere perſonam Chriſti, take vpon him the perſon of Chriſt, when he ſaith, This is my body: In other Sacraments he is but the miniſter of Chriſt, he doth not take his perſon vpon him, *lib.*4. *de Euch. c.*14. Yet the Rhemiſts affirme, that the Prieſt in other popiſh Sacraments alſo doth take vpon him the perſon of Chriſt, as in penance he abſolueth in the perſon of Chriſt, Annot. 2.*Cor.*2.*ſect.*6. Bellarmine alſo varieth from other Papiſts of theſe daies, as well as from the Rhemiſts, and they varie from him.

87 17 Heskins a Papiſt affirmeth, that the ſacrifice of Chriſt vpon the Croſſe was after the order of Aaron, *lib.*1.*c.*13. Bellarmine ſaith plainly, that it was not properly either after Aarons order, or Melchiſedecks, *lib.*1.*de miſſa,cap.*6.reſp.ad 5.argum.

88 18 The Councell of Trent concludeth thus concerning the adoration of Images, Honor, qui eis debetur, refertur ad prototypa, quæ illa repræſentant: The honour due vnto them is to bee referred to thoſe things which they repreſent, *Seſſ.*25. But Bellarmine holdeth, that there is a religious worſhip properly due vnto them, Et non ſolum vt vicem gerunt exemplaris, and not only as they repreſent another thing, De imaginibus Sanctorum, liber 2.*cap.*22.

89 19 Bellarmine denieth that Auguſtine vnderſtood thoſe words of our Sauiour figuratiuely, This is my body: when his words are moſt plaine, writing thus, Non dubitauit dominus dicere, hoc eſt corpus meum, cum ſignum daret corporis ſui: The Lord doubted not to ſay, this is my body, when hee gaue a ſigne of his body: yet Bellarmine laboureth by ſubtile and fraudulent diſtinctions to ſhift off and obſcure the euidence of theſe words, *lib.*2.*de Euchar.cap.*24. By other Papiſts notwithſtanding of no meane account, it is confeſſed, that Auguſtine did expound thoſe words figuratiuely, *Fox pag.*1428. *col.*2.Secret.Bourne,Fecknam.

20 Concerning the ſtory of Pope Ioane, and the circumſtances thereof, it is pretty ſport to ſee what ſhifts the Papiſts are driuen vnto, and how they iarre one with another, to obſcure, if it were poſſible, the light of that ſtorie. Harding denieth, that whereas the ſtory ſaith, vpon that occaſion, in the election of the Popes they vſed a chaire with an hole to trie the Popes humanity, hee flatly denieth that there was any ſuch thing: Or that the Popes doe refraine to goe that way in proceſſion, where Pope Ioane trauelled with childe: Or that there is any image repreſenting ſuch a thing, he counteth all theſe fables. But Bellarmine which is better acquainted with Rome, then it ſhould ſeeme Harding was, doth ſomewhat more cunningly excuſe the matter, to the firſt hee ſaith, there is indeed a porphyrie Chaire, but to ſhew the Popes humility, not to trie his humanity: to the next, he confeſſeth the Pope refraineth to go that way, but not vpon any ſuch occaſion, but only becauſe it is a ſtraite way, and not fit for his traine: to the third, he granteth there is an image, not without faſhion or ſhape, as Harding ſaith, who compareth it to ſome of the ragged ſtones at Stonage, but it rather reſembleth ſaith he, a heatheniſh prieſt going to ſacrifice, then a woman, Harding defenſ. apol. p. 428. Bellarm. lib. 3. de pontif. cap. 24. Let vs ſee yet a little further the manifold contradictions of the new popiſh writers eſpecially concerning the Euchariſt. 90

91 Whereas the Euchariſt is ſo called of gratia, grace, Turriane ſaith, it muſt be vnderſtood of gratia ſubſtantialis, & autohypoſtatos, of ſubſtantiall and hypoſtaticall grace, tract. 2. cap. 13. Staniſlaus Socolonius will haue it ſo called of accidentall grace, becauſe in the Euchariſt, mentionem facimus omnium bonorum, &c. We make mention of all Gods benefits, and giue thankes for the ſame, de adorat. Euchar. fol. 26. 27.

92 Scarga. de Euchar. lib. 1. cap. 5. ſaith thus, Speciem panis ita vocari corpus Chriſti, vt ſcrinium in quo eſt aurum, auri nomine vocatur: That the forme of bread is ſo called Chriſts body, as the caske, whereon the gold is, is called gold, but Bellarmine ſaith, neuer any of the Catholikes affirmed, the grace of the ſpirit, in ſacramentis ſicut in vaſis contineri, to be in the Sacraments contained, as in veſſels, lib. 1. de ſacram. cap. 4. and yet one of his fellowes, as wee ſee, likeneth the Euchariſt to a caske, which containeth gold.

93 Bellarmine vnderſtandeth thoſe words of our Sauiour, I am with you to the end of the world, not of the corporall preſence, but of the diuinity of Chriſt, and the preſence of grace, ad quod non requiritur præſentia corporalis, to the which the corporall preſence is not neceſſary, de Chriſto, lib. 3. cap. 16. But Vega farre otherwiſe ſaith, it is an abſurd thing, Chriſtum tanquam magnum aliquod donum promiſiſſe non diſceſſurum ſe ſecundum diuinitatem: That Chriſt ſhould promiſe this as ſo great a gift not to depart from them in his diuinity or godhead.

94 Vega de miſſ. theſ. 119. that the ſacrifices of the law were auaileable, vt expiarentur defunctorum culpæ, to expiate the ſinnes of the dead: Bellarmine ſaith flatly, ſacrificia non valuiſſe ad expiationem peccati, that the ſacrifices were not auaileable for the expiation of ſinne, lib. 2. de effect. ſacrament. cap. 17.

95 Scarga art. 8. fol. 211. Signo crucis conſecratur corpus dominicum, The body of Chriſt is conſecrated with the ſigne of the Croſſe: yet Bellarmine ſaith, Nec in characteribus nec in ſono aut numero ſyllabarum vim ponimus: We place no vertue in characters or ſignes nor in the number or ſound of ſyllables: then conſequently not in the character or ſigne of the Croſſe, Bellar. lib. 1. de ſacram. cap. 20.

96 Turriane counteth it hereſie to denie that the body of Chriſt is paſſible in the Sacrament, tract. 1. cap. 7. fol. 36, Scarga ſaith, Impaſſibili modo in Euchariſtia manducatur, That he is eaten in the Sacrament after an impaſſible manner, art. 11. fol. 333.

97 Scarga ſaith, A baptiſmo natura Euchariſtiæ non indicatur, That wee cannot iudge of the nature of the Euchariſt by Baptiſme, Turriane is more liberall and ſaith, after he had compared Baptiſme, and the Euchariſt together aut proprietatem in vtroque ſacramentor. ſerua, aut in neutro, keepe the property of ſpeech either in both ſacraments or in neither, 1. tract. cap. 1. fol. 4.

98 Whereas S. Paul ſaith, the rocke was Chriſt, Turriane thus expoundeth it, Petra erat Chriſtus figuratè, the rocke was Chriſt figuratiuely, tract. 1. cap. 2. fol. 7. Scarga ſaith, it was propriiſſima non figurata locutio, a moſt proper ſpeech, and not figuratiue at all, art. 5. fol. 99.

99 Thoſe words of S. Auguſtine, Crede & manducaſti, Beleeue, and thou haſt eaten, are notably turned and toſſed of our aduerſaries: Scarga vnderſtandeth them de voto & deſiderio ſacramenti, of the vow and deſire of the Sacrament, when it cannot be had, in art. 10. fol. 279. Vega vnderſtandeth them, de pane prophano, of prophane not ſacramentall bread, de tranſubſt. theſ. 167. Bellarmine ſaith, that Auguſtine did ſpeake non de ſacramento, ſed de fide incarnationis, not of the Sacrament, but of the faith of the incarnation of Chriſt, lib. 2. de Euchar. cap. 24.

100 Scarga is bold to ſay, the holy fleſh of Chriſt is giuen vnto vs, non vt videamus, ſed etiam, vt dentes illi infigamus, not to ſee it, but to faſten our teeth into it, art. 11. fol. 34. Iurgeuicius ſaith contrary: the Catholike Church teacheth not, dentem non fidem, fauces non cor, &c. that wee muſt bring our teeth and not faith, our iawes and not our heart, &c. cont. Volan. mendac. 53.

101 Scarga ſaith, durabit hic ritus, this rite, whereby we doe ſhew the Lords death, ſhall continue till Chriſts comming, art. 8. fol. 188. and Bellarmine affirmeth the ſame, lib. 1. de ſacr. cap. 9. but Vega ſaith, that the ſacrifice of the Maſſe ſhall be taken away by Antichriſt, de miſſ. theſ. 46. how then is it like to continue till Chriſts comming?

102 Bellarmine, lib. 4. de miſſ. cap. 22. In vna ſpecie non habetur perfectè & integrè ſacrificij ratio, ſed vtraq; neceſſaria eſt: The ſacrifice is not fully and wholly expreſſed in one kinde, but both are neceſſarie: but Grodecicus concion. 4. fol. 86. writeth thus, I know, ad miſſæ ſubſtantiam vtramque ſpeciem non pertinere, that both kinds doe not belong to the ſubſtance of the Maſſe: what can bee ſaid more contrary.

103 Duræus cont. Whitaker. fol. 49. ſaith, that it cannot be found neither in the 17. of Geneſis, nor in any other place of Scripture, Circumciſio eſt fœdus, this ſentence, Circumciſion is the couenant: but Bellarmine confeſſeth it in theſe words, Vbi circumciſio vocatur fœdus, ibi dicitur etiam ſignum fœderis, Where circumciſion is called a couenant, it is there alſo ſaid to be a ſigne of the couenant, lib. 1. de Euchar. cap. 11.

104 Bellarmine, lib. 2. de miſſ. ca. 8. confeſſeth, Verum ſacrificium futurum, etiamſi nulla in eo fieret ſanctorum memoria, that it is a true ſacrifice, though there be no commemoration of the Saints: but Arthurus chargeth the Proteſtants with ſacrilege, Quia martyrum commemorationes impiè ex veſtris liturgijs ſuſtuliſtis, Becauſe ye haue wickedly, ſaith he, taken away the commemoration of the martyrs out of your liturgies, apolog. cont. Toſſan. ca. 3. fo. 30. then let him as well charge Bellarmine with ſacrilege, who thinketh, that ſuch commemorations are not neceſſary but may be ſpared.

105 Scarga ſaith, Confitemur ceſſantibus ſpeciebus ceſſare corpus Chriſti. Wee confeſſe, that when the ſhapes or ſhewes of bread and wine doe ceaſe, the bodie of Chriſt alſo ceaſeth there to be, art. 11. fol. 335. But Vega Nulli homini licere præſcribere tempus, &c. That it is not lawfull for any man to preſcribe the time how long this propoſition ſhould be true, This is my body, De real. præſent. theſ. 103.

106 Vega vnderſtandeth thoſe words, quod pro vobis frangitur, which is broken for you, de vero & reali corpore Chriſti, of the true and reall body of Chriſt: and confeſſeth, that the body of Chriſt can be broken, de real. præſentia, theſ. 84. But Scarga, Non dicimus tangi, aut frangi corpus Chriſti, We ſay not, that the bodie of Chriſt can be either touched, or broken, art. 11. fol. 344. and Thomas Aquinas alſo flatlie concludeth, Non poteſt dici, quod ipſum corpus Chriſti verum frangatur: It cannot be ſaid, that the true bodie of Chriſt is broken part. 3. qu. 77. artic. 7.

107 Now as touching the meaning of theſe words, Hoc eſt corpus meum, This is my body, it is prety ſport to ſee how they weary themſelues about the expoſition of this pronoune, hoc, this. Scarga would haue it to be vnderſtood of Chriſts bodie Hoc, quod ſub ſpecieb. panis occultatur, This, which is hid vnder theſe formes: and ſaith he, nemo mentis compos, none in his right wit would ſay otherwiſe, lib. de Euchar. 1. ca. 5. But Vega de miſſ. fol. 13. vnderſtandeth it de ſpecie panis, of the forme and ſhape of bread. Turrianus ſaith, Hoc ſubſtantiam panis demonſtrabat, This pronoune doth demonſtrate the ſubſtance of bread, tract. 1. ca. 22. Bellarmine hath a fourth opinion, Hoc demonſtrat panem cœleſtem, This pronoune hoc, doth demonſtrate heauenly bread, lib. 2. de Euchar. ca. 7. thus one of them ſaith, that hoc betokeneth the forme of bread: another, that it ſignifieth the ſubſtance of bread: a third, that it ſheweth not materiall but, heauenly bread: and yet another, that it referreth vs to the body of Chriſt: what certaintie then can pope-catholike profeſſors haue of their faith, when the maſters of their religion are not yet agreed; and theſe diſſenſions, with an hundred more they haue among themſelues as touching the Euchariſt: more who liſt to ſee, I referre him to the treatiſe of Craſtonius, called Bellum Ieſuiticum, where he hath induſtriouſly gathered together 205. contradictions of the Ieſuites concerning the ſacrament of the altar: thus wee ſee that neither the old Papiſts agree with the new, nor the new among themſelues: ſo that I may fitly apply againſt them that ſaying of Saint Ambroſe, Hæreſis velut quædam hydra fabularum vulneribus ſuis creuit, & dum ſæpe reciditur, pullulauit: Hereſie, like to the ſerpent reported of in fables, doth increaſe by the wounds thereof, and where it is cut, it brancheth out againe, lib. 1. de fide cap. 4. ſo poperie groweth into one abſurditie after another; and as the heads of this hydra roſe vp one in anothers place, ſo our aduerſaries abound in new deuiſes, and being but one bodie, haue many heads, thinking and ſpeaking diuers and contrary things. Now to the third part, let vs ſee how they doe not onely one varie from another, but the ſame writer doth often diſſent from himſelfe.

BELLARMINE AT VARIANCE WITH himſelfe. Part. 3.

108 1 Bellarmine, for expounding of Scripture, referreth vs to the [a] fathers of the Church: from them to generall Councels: laſtly to the Pope and Cardinals, Lib. 3. de Verb. ca. 3. but otherwhere, he maketh the Pope the chiefe judge of all controuerſies aboue generall Councels, who cannot erre in decreeing concerning faith, no nor concerning manners: yea it is probable he cannot erre as a particular perſon, Lib. 4. de pontif. c. 3. 5. 6. What need he then ioyne the Cardinals in cōmiſſion with the Pope?

109 2 Bellarmine in one place denyeth, that faith is neceſſary or requiſite to make a true member of the Church, Lib. 3. de Eccleſ. cap. 10. And yet elſewhere forgetting himſelfe, ſaith, Fide firmiſſima ac certiſſima credimus, we by a moſt certaine and infallible faith beleeue, which is the Church: ibid. cap. 16. If by faith onely the Church is knowen, and ſo who are the true members thereof: much more doe the members themſelues ſtand by faith: and if by faith they are beleeued of others to be of the Church, much

[a] Though Bellarmine maketh not expreſſe mētion there of the Fathers of the Church yet he referreth to the fourth ſeſſion of the Councell of Trent, where that interpretation is preferred, which hath the ioint conſent of the Fathers: ſo is the cauiller anſwered. And Pope Pius the fourth in his Bull annexed to the Councell of Trent preſcribeth an oath to be taken by Biſhops, Deanes, Canons, and all that haue cure of ſoules, not to receiue any interpretation of Scripture, which is not according to the vniforme conſent of the ancient Fathers: ſee further Retec. p. 46.

much more by faith ought they to bee aſſured of it themſelues: Theſe things therefore hang not currantly together.

110 3 Bellarmine out of that text, Paſce oues meas, Feede my ſheepe, would prooue that Biſhops onely are the paſtors of the Church, and therefore that they onely are to giue deciding voices in Councels, *Lib.1.de Conc.cap.*15. But cap.19. he by that text proueth the Pope to be vniuerſall paſtor, and ſo to be preſident in Councels, ſo ſoone hath he forgotten himſelfe.

111 4 Bellarmine in one place maintaineth this point, Romani pontificis Eccleſiaſticum principatum, authore Chriſto principium accepiſſe, That the eccleſiaſticall Iuriſdiction of the Pope tooke beginning of Chriſt, *lib.2.de pontif.cap.*12. But elſewhere he ſaith, that the Pope is not Peters ſucceſſour iure diuino, by any diuine right: neither is it ex prima inſtitutione Pontificatus, quæ in euangelio legitur, of the firſt inſtitution of that chiefe paſtorſhip, whereof we read in the Goſpell, c.17. In any mans eare I thinke theſe ſpeeches will make a contrary ſound.

112 5 Bellarmine confeſſeth that the Church of Rome cannot erre perſonally, and yet denieth not but that the Pope may erre perſonally, which is an abſurd and a contradictory ſpeech, ſeeing the Popes being at Rome is the cauſe, as they ſay, of the not erring of that Church: and therefore hee holdeth that the Church of Rome is ſure no longer to be preſerued from error, then the Popes Apoſtolike Sea remaineth there. If the Pope then be the cauſe of their not erring, hee is much more free from error himſelfe: for how then is the Church free from perſonall error, and not the Pope?

113 6 Bellar. in one place ſaith that the Pope only ſucceedeth Peter properly; Biſhops ſucceede the Apoſtles, non proprie, not properly, *de pontif.lib.*4.25. But in another place he writeth thus, Epiſcopi proprie ſuccedunt Apoſtolis: Biſhops properly ſucceede the Apoſtles, *lib.1.de Clericis, cap.*12. proprie, non proprie, properly, not properly to ſucceede, I trow, they be contradictorie ſpeeches.

114 7 Bellarm. confeſſeth, that the mariage of Miniſters is not forbidden by the word of God: and yet contrary to his owne opinion, he wreſteth places of ſcripture againſt the mariage of Miniſters, as that 1.Tim.2.3. No man that warreth intangleth himſelfe, &c. lib.de Clericis 19. 1.Tim.2.3.

114 8 Bellarm. ſaith, that the care of children and houſhold, are a great impediment to the calling of a Miniſter, ibidem 19. and forbidden vnder the name of ſecular affaires in that place to Timothie: And yet elſewhere he affirmeth, that regimen politicum, politicall gouernment, is no hinderance to the Eccleſiaſticall calling: but that the ſame man may very well be both an eccleſiaſtical and political prince, *de Rom.pontif.lib.5.cap.*10.*ad obiect.*5. If then the care and charge of a whole citie or countrie, may ſtand very well with the eccleſiaſticall function, much more the care of one familie may: The Ieſuite is not well aduiſed, ſo ſoone to forget himſelfe.

115 9 That place in *Zacharie, thou haſt looſed thy priſoners out of the pit, where there was no water, Zachar.*9.11. Bellar. in one place expoundeth of Limbus Patrum, The dungeon of darkneſſe, from whence the Patriarkes were deliuered, *lib.4.de Chriſti anima.cap.*11. In another place he alleageth it to prooue purgatorie, *lib.1.de purgat.cap.*3. But Limbus Patrum and purgatorie, are places among Papiſts much different. Zachar.9.11.

116 10 Bellarm. in expounding of that place, 1.Cor.3.13. The fire ſhall trie euery mans worke, and v.15. He ſhall be ſaued, yet as it were by the fire, is put to ſuch trouble and buſineſſe, that within the compaſſe of one chapter he admitteth contrary ſenſes of the ſame place: in the firſt place, by fire vnderſtanding the iudgement of God: in the ſecond, the flames of purgatorie, *de purgator.l.1.cap.*4. 1.Cor.3.13.

117 11 Bellarmine in one place writeth thus, In extremo iudicio duo tantum loca remanebunt, Paradiſus & Gehenna: At the laſt iudgement, two places onely ſhall remaine, Paradiſe and Gehenna, heauen and hell, lib.1.de purgat.cap.8.reſponſ.ad 5.obiect. And yet not long after he confeſſeth that there are two places of eternall puniſhment, Limbus infantium, pro pœna ſolius damni æterna: the dungeon of infants for eternall puniſhment of loſſe without ſmart, and infernus pro pœna damni & ſenſus: Hell for the eternall puniſhment both of loſſe and ſmart. Theſe then are two places that ſhall laſt for euer, and heauen is the third: how then are there but two? *lib.2.de purgat.cap.*6.

118 12 Bellarmine otherwhile beareth vs in hand, that there are but two kindes of Religious worſhip: The higher kind called δουλεία, due onely to God, & an inferiour ſort called λατρεία proper to Saints: vnto the which kind belongeth that which they call Hyperdouleia, a higher kind of inferiour ſeruice or worſhip proper to the Virgine Mary and the humanity of Chriſt: ſo hee maketh three kindes in all, *lib.1.de Sanct.cap.*12. But in another place hee doubleth the number, and maketh ſixe ſeuerall ſorts, Latreia ſimpliciter, and ſecundum quid: the firſt due vnto God, the ſecond vnto his image: Hyperdulia ſimpliciter, and ſecundum quid: and ſo likewiſe Dulia ſimpliciter, and ſecundum quid, the firſt proper vnto the Virgin Marie, and other Saints, the other to their images, *lib.2.cap.*25.

119 13 Bellarmine, to proue amongſt other reaſons, that thoſe words of Chriſt, This is my body, are taken properly, not figuratiuely: alleageth this for one, Verba legum perſpicua & propria eſſe debent: The words of lawes and ſtatutes ſhould be perſpicuous and proper. And againe, Dogmata præcipua non niſi proprijs verbis tradi ſolent in diuinis literis: Principall precepts are wont in the Scriptures to bee expreſſed in proper words: therefore it is not like, that Chriſt being now to preſcribe a perpetuall law and forme of this ſacrament, would ſpeake obſcurely, *lib.1.de Euchariſt.cap.*9. yet elſewhere hee ſaith, Neceſſario fatendum eſt ſcripturas eſſe obſcuriſſimas: It muſt neceſſarily bee granted, that the Scriptures are moſt obſcure, *de Verb.l.3.cap.*1. And findeth great fault with vs, for ſaying, that the precepts of faith are euidently expreſſed in Scripture, which is no more then he himſelfe affirmeth.

120 14 Somtime Bellarmine telleth vs, that Corpus Domini ſolo corpore ſine fide acceptum nihil prodeſt; That the body of Chriſt being onely receiued with the body profiteth not, de Euchariſt.lib.3.cap.9. Wherein he ſaith right. Sometime againe he would make vs beleeue, that the Sacraments are auaileable, ex opere operato, by the very worke wrought, non ex merito agentis, vel ſuſcipientis, not for the worthineſſe either of the receiuer or Miniſter. And againe, Fides & pœnitentia non dant efficaciam ſacramento: Faith and repentance doe not giue efficacie to the Sacrament, Lib. 2. de Sacrament.cap.1. How theſe things agree together I cannot ſee: that the Sacrament ſhould not profit without the faith of the receiuer. And againe, that it ſhould auaile, ex opere operato, without any reſpect had to the receiuer.

121 15 Bellarmine ſaith, Opera bona ſine fide non proſunt: good workes profit not without faith, de Sacrament.Euchariſt.lib.3.cap.9. And yet elſewhere confeſſeth, that there may be Meritum de congruo, a merit of congruity before iuſtification. If then workes may merit, then they are auaileable, and that without faith, which cannot bee had before iuſtification, Bellarmine, lib.2. de pœnitent. cap 12.

122 16 Bellarmine in one place ſaith, Non ſolum res, ſed etiam verba in ſacramentis nouæ legis à Deo determinata ſunt, vt non liceat quidpiam immutare: The words and matter in the Sacraments of the new law, are ſo determined of God, that it is not lawfull to change one iotte, De Sacrament. lib.1. cap.21. Yet they haue preſumed, contrary to their owne rule, to change both. As for the matter of the Euchariſt, they haue taken away the one halfe, depriuing the people of the cup. And concerning the words, they doe ſhew no leſſe boldneſſe in altering them: They haue put in (enim) into the words of conſecration, ſaying, hoc enim eſt corpus meum: and in conſecrating the cup, they adde theſe words, myſterium fidei, The myſtery of faith: and all this Bellarmine ſaith is well done, and that theſe words which are not found in the Goſpell, are ſupplied by tradition from S. Peter, de Sacram. Euchar. lib.4. cap.14. Thus they offend againſt their owne rules: for they adde vnto the words determined of God in his holy word, which is contained in the Scriptures.

123 17 Bellarmine ſometime granteth, that the body of Chriſt is made of bread in the Euchariſt, vt ex aqua factum eſt vinum, as of water Chriſt made wine, lib.3.de Euchariſt.cap.24. But in another place, he flatly denieth it: for that was a productiue conuerſion of the water into wine, which is, when that beginneth to be, which was not before: but the changing of bread into Chriſts body is no productiue conuerſion, but onely adductiue, not making a thing to be which was not before: but only bringing it to a place where it was not before, de Euchariſt.lib.3.cap.18.

1.Cor.10.1.2.

124 18 To ſay, that the Iewes did not eate the ſame ſpirituall meate with vs, and that the Manna, which they did eate, had no ſpirituall effect, which is affirmed notwithſtanding by Saint Paul, 1.Corinth.10.1.2. and yet to grant, that they which were then iuſt or righteous, were ſo iuſt ob participationem ſacrificij crucis, by the participation of the ſacrifice vpon the Croſſe, I think are plaine contraries: to ſay they were not partakers of the ſame ſpirituall meate with vs, namely Chriſt, and yet againe that they were: yet Bellarmine affirmeth both; the firſt, lib.2.de Sacram.cap.17.reſp.ad argum.3. The latter, lib.1.de Miſſ.cap.20.

Rom.5.1.

125 19 To ſay, that faith goeth before repentance, or, as they terme it, Penance: and that repentance goeth before iuſtification, is all one to ſay, that repentance goeth before iuſtification, and that iuſtification likewiſe goeth before repentance: for by faith are we iuſtified, Rom.5.1. As ſoone as faith commeth, iuſtification doth accompany it: If faith go before, ſo doth iuſtification: and if iuſtification follow repentance, ſo doth faith: yet are they both affirmed by Bellarmine, de pœnit.lib.1.cap.19.

126 20 To theſe contradictorie ſpeeches of Bellarmine, other ſuch like a great number may be added: as ſometime he ſaith, Accipimus carnem & corpus non pro toto, ſed parte: Wee take the fleſh and the body not for whole Chriſt, but for a part, lib.3. de Euchar.cap.15. but elſewhere he ſaith, per concomitantiam ſub vtraque ſpecie totum eſſe Chriſtum indicatur; by way of concomitancie, whole Chriſt is ſignified vnder both kinds, lib.1.de Euchariſt.cap.2. whole Chriſt, and not whole Chriſt to be contained vnder each kind, are contrary.

127 21 Bellar. ſomtime ſaith, Chriſtus non teritur, roditur, crematur, &c. Chriſt is not torne, or chawed, or burnt, lib.de Euchariſt.c.11. and yet againe, as forgetting himſelfe in the end of the ſame chapter, hee ſaith, ſome men cannot abide to heare that Chriſt ſhould bee encloſed in a box, bee deuoured of beaſts, burned &c. doe they not thinke that Chriſt in his fleſh might haue been both bitten of beaſts, and burned: and if Chriſt might haue ſuffered theſe things in his owne ſhape, how much more vnder the ſhape of bread, and wine, &c. to ſay, that the body of Chriſt may be deuoured, and not deuoured, burned, and not burned, are contrary.

128 22 To ſay, that the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, and the ſacrifice of the Croſſe, are idem, quoad rem oblatam, are all one in reſpect of the thing offered: and to ſay, that vpon the Croſſe, Chriſts eſſe naturale, his naturall being was deſtroyed, in the Maſſe, his eſſe ſacramentale, his ſacramentall being, and that his naturall being is more noble, then his ſacramentall: how are they not contrary? for if the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, and of the Croſſe be the ſame, one cannot be better then the other: the firſt Bellarmine affirmeth, lib.1 de miſſ.cap.27. the other, lib.2.de.miſſ.cap.4.

129 23 To ſay, Panem certè dici offerri pro eccleſia, that the bread is truly ſaid to bee offered for the Church, and again abſurdiſſimum eſt, panem triticeum ſacrificari, it is moſt abſurd, that wheaten bread ſhould be ſacrificed, are moſt contrary: Bellarmine affirmeth the firſt, lib.2.de miſſ.cap.21. the ſecond, lib.1.de miſſ.cap.27.

24 To ſay, Res ſacra in conſecratione ex prophana effecta, &c. In the conſecration the prophane thing is made holy; and againe, the bread and wine paulò ante conſecrationem ſacrificia ſancta, a little before the conſecration, are holy ſacrifices, are contrary ſpeeches, to affirme the ſame thing before conſecration to be holy, and prophane: yet both affirmed by Bellarmine, the firſt, lib.1.de miſſ.cap.27. the ſecond, lib.2.de miſſ.cap.21. 130

25 Bellarmine in one place confeſſeth the change of the bread into the body of Chriſt, to bee a generation: cum ſuccedit res nobilior, tota illa actio generatio dicitur: when as a more noble thing ſucceedeth, it is called generation, lib.3.de Euchar.cap.24. elſewhere he denieth it, who findeth fault with Peter Martyr, quia toties inculcat corpus Chriſti generari: becauſe he ſo much vrgeth, that the bodie of Chriſt is generated, fol.399. eiuſdem capitis. 131

26 Sometime he ſaith, Sacrificium eſt actio, non res permanens: A ſacrifice is an action, not a permanent thing, lib.2.de miſſ.cap.4. And againe, Sacrificium eſt res aliqua ſenſibilis & permanens: A ſacrifice muſt be ſome ſenſible and permanent thing, lib.1.de miſſ.cap.2. to bee a permanent thing, and not to be, are contraries. 132

27 In cœna Domini expreſſit remiſſionem peccatorum: Chriſt in his laſt ſupper expreſſed, and promiſed remiſſion of ſinnes, Bellarm.lib.1.de miſſa cap.8. and yet he confuteth the Lutherans for affirming, that the Euchariſt was inſtituted for remiſſion of ſinnes, lib.4.de Euchar.cap.18.19. 133

28 Chriſt doth not now offer any thing himſelfe, ſed vocatur caput eorum, qui offerunt, but is the head of thoſe that offer, Bellar.lib.1.de miſſ.cap.6. And againe, Chriſtus per ſacerdotes ſacrificat & ſacrificatur, Chriſt by his Prieſts doth ſacrifice, and is ſacrificed, ibid. how can Chriſt be ſaid to ſacrifice, if he haue nothing to offer? 134

29 Theſe words in the ſixth of Iohn, Hee that eateth this bread, ſhall liue for euer, Bellarmine ſometime denieth to be vnderſtood of the Euchariſt, but of Chriſts incarnation, lib.2.de Euchar.c.8. ſometime he granteth it, as where he proueth out of this place, which maketh mention onely of bread, that the Sacrament in one kind is ſufficient, Bellarm.lib.1.de Euchar.cap.7. 135

30 Bellarmine ſometime ſaith, that verba praſcripta in baptiſmo inuocationem ſonant trinitatis, that the words preſcribed in baptiſme do imply an inuocation of the Trinity, lib.1.de ſacram.cap.19. but in another place he ſaith, that which maketh the Sacrament in Baptiſme, non ſunt humanæ preces, ſed illa verba Domini, &c. are not humane prayers, but thoſe words of our Lord, I baptize thee in the name, &c. Here he denieth, that this forme of words containeth a prayer or inuocation, which hee granted before, lib.4.de Euchar.cap.13. 136

31 Bellarmine ſometime ſaith, that there is no ſacrifice in the law for the greater ſinnes, as of idolatry, adultery, lib.2.de ſacram.cap.17. and yet he elſewhere approueth the Macchabees to be Canonicall Scripture, for that mention is made with commendation of ſacrificing for the idolatry of thoſe which were dead, de verbo Dei.cap.15. 137

32 Bellarmine concerning Manna, which the fathers eate in the wilderneſſe, ſomtime ſaith it was called not the food of Angels, propter effectum, for any ſpirituall effect it had, lib.2.de ſacram.in gener.cap.17. And againe he ſaith, that though the fathers in Manna did not receiue the fleſh of Chriſt, ſumebant tamen effectum eius, id eſt, gratiam, yet they receiued the effect thereof, that is, grace, lib.1.de Euchariſt.cap.13. to ſay that Manna had a ſpirituall effect, and againe, that it had none, are contrary. 138

33 Theſe words, Hoc eſt corpus meum, This is my body, Bellarmine ſo expoundeth, that he would haue hoc, to demonſtrate, panem cœleſtem, heauenly bread, ſometime, terrenum panem, earthly and terrene bread, lib.2.de Euchariſt.cap.7. ſo well he agreeth with himſelfe. 139

34 Bellarm.lib.4.de miſſa cap.22. In vna ſpecie non habetur integrè & perfectè ſacrificij ratio: The nature and reaſon of the ſacrifice is not expreſſed perfectly and wholly in one kind: and yet in the ſame place he ſaith, Duo illa ſigna, non ſunt partes eſſentiales ſacramenti, Thoſe two ſignes are not eſſentiall parts of the Sacrament: but how are they not eſſentiall, ſince that without them it is not perfect: theſe things agree not. 140

35 Lib.4. de Euchar.cap.23. Sacramentum ſub duplici ſpecie inſtitutum eſt, The Sacrament was inſtituted vnder both kinds, Lib.4.cap.27. Si propriè & ſecundum euangelium loqui volumus, cœna domini non conſtat niſi ex vna ſpecie: If we will ſpeake properly, and according to the Goſpell, the ſupper of the Lord doth conſiſt but of one kind, &c: to be inſtituted vnder both kinds, and vnder but one kind, are contrary. 141

36 Lib.4.de Euchariſt.cap.23. The ſame thing being giuen in one kinde, or both, Famem & ſitim animæ ſedat, Doth ſlake the hunger and thirſt of the ſoule: And yet in the ſame place he ſaith, as forgetting himſelfe: Euchariſtiam ſub ſpecie panis conferre gratiam, ſed non ante ſumptionem alterius ſpeciei: That the Euchariſt vnder the forme of bread doth conferre grace, but not before the taking of the other kind, &c. Then it followeth, that vnder one kind it conferreth not grace, and ſo aſſwageth not the thirſt of the ſoule, which before was affirmed. 142

143 37 Bellarm.lib.2.de effect.ſacram.cap.24. Sacramenta ex diuina inſtitutione promiſſionem habent annexam gratiæ iuſtificantis: The ſacraments by the diuine inſtitution, haue a promiſe annexed of iuſtifying grace: and *lib.1.de ſacram.cap.*14. he ſaith cleane contrary, Particula, quòd promiſſio debet eſſe annexa ſigno diuina ordinatione, falſa eſt: This clauſe, that a promiſe muſt by the diuine ordinance be annexed to the ſigne, is falſe.

144 38 *Lib.1.de miſſa, cap.*10. Euchariſtia nullius miniſtri malitia pollui poteſt: The Euchariſt cannot be polluted through the euilnes of the Miniſter. And againe, lib.2.de miſſa, cap.24. Euchariſtia poteſt ex parte miniſtri non placere: The Euchariſt on the behalfe of the Miniſter may ſometime not be pleaſing, or acceptable vnto God. If it is not accepted becauſe of the Miniſter, then it is by him polluted.

145 39 Sometime he ſaith, Sacrificium miſſæ rectè celebrari pro ſanctis, That the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is ſolemnized for the Saints, *lib.2.de miſſ.cap.*8. and yet in the ſame place, Non tam oramus pro ſanctis, quàm pro nobis: We pray not ſo much for the Saints, as for our ſelues.

146 40 *Bellarm.lib.1.de miſſ.cap.*9. vpon thoſe words in the 9. of Daniel, where it is ſaid, that Antichriſt ſhall take away the daily ſacrifice, confeſſeth, Quòd Antichriſtus ſimpliciter auferet iuge ſacrificium: That Anichriſt ſhall ſimply take away the daily ſacrifice. But lib.3. de eccleſia militanti, cap 16. he denieth it, and ſaith thus, Loquitur Daniel apertiſſimè de euerſione Hieruſalem, & ceſſatione ſacrificij Iudæorum; Daniel ſpeaketh plainly of the ouerthrow of Ieruſalem, and the ceaſing of the ſacrifice of the Iewes: and he will not haue the place to be expounded of Antichriſt.

147 41 *Lib.3 de Romano pontif.cap.*12. Bellarmine ſaith, Antichriſtus * licet verè ſit de tribu Dan: Though Antichriſt ſhall verily be of the tribe of Dan, &c. and yet in the ſame place he confuteth that opinion, and ſheweth diuers reaſons why he is not like to come of the tribe of Dan.

*Yet is it denied by a certaine popiſh caviller, that Bellarmine here affirmeth, that Antichriſt ſhall come of Dan: whereas he directlie ſaith, Though he verily ſhall be of the tribe of Dan, yet he ſhall faine himſelfe to be of the family of David. See our further anſwere, Retect. pag.50.

148 42 Sometime Bellarmine confeſſeth, Antichriſtum diabolum adoraturum, That Antichriſt ſhall worſhip the diuell, *lib.3.de Roman.pontif.cap.*14. ſometime forgetting himſelfe, he ſaith, Idola odio habebit Antichriſtus: Antichriſt ſhall hate Idols, ibid.

149 43 By the God Maozim mentioned in Daniel, one while he vnderſtandeth the diuell, whom Antichriſt ſhall worſhip, *lib.3.de Roman.pontif.cap.*14. another while he expoundeth it to be Antichriſt himſelfe, ibid.

150 44 Thus haue we ſeene the inconſtancie of Bellarmine, and how euery where he doth contradict himſelfe: an hundred ſuch like contradictions and more may eaſily be found in his workes; but leauing him a little, let vs ſee whether other of his fellowes are not of the ſame ſpirit, with the ſame breath as they ſay blowing hot and cold. *Sixtus Senenſis bibl.lib.6.annot.*196. ſaith, Sacramentum eſt caro Chriſti, &c. That the fleſh and blood of Chriſt properly is the ſacrament. But in another place, annot.22.ſuper Chryſoſtom. he ſeemeth to place the ſacrament in the accidents of bread and wine, Neceſſarium eſt, vt vna cum vero corpore & ſanguine Chriſti ſint in ſacramento altaris, panis & vini accidentia: It is neceſſarie, that the accidents of bread and wine ſhould bee ioyned together with the bodie and blood of Chriſt to worke the ſacrament.

151 45 *Scarga.in art.4.fol.*83. ſaith, that Luke only vſeth that forme of words, This cup is the new teſtament, &c. and yet in the ſame place forgetting himſelfe, he thus writeth: Vna eadem perpetua & conſtans verborum forma apud hos Euangeliſtas: That all the three Euangeliſts vſe one conſtant and perpetuall forme of words; if they all vſe one forme, how then hath S. Luke a forme of words by himſelfe?

152 46 The ſame *Scarga.in art.6.fol.*118. ſaith, Euchariſtia ad normam baptiſmi examinari non poteſt: The Euchariſt muſt not bee examined according to the rule of baptiſme: and yet *art.7.fol.*157. he thus writeth, Quod de baptiſmo oſtenſum eſt, idem de ſacroſancta Euchariſtia oſtenditur, That which I haue ſhewed concerning baptiſme, may be ſhewed in the bleſſed Euchariſt: here againſt his owne rule he compareth baptiſme and the Euchariſt together.

153 47 *Turriane tract.1.c.22.fol.*139. ſaith out of Tertullian, that in Chriſts words, this pronoune, hoc, demonſtrabat panis ſubſtantiam, did demonſtrate the ſubſtance of bread: and yet *fol.*140. hee contrary to himſelfe affirmeth, that Chriſt non potuit ſignificare ſubſtantiam panis, could not ſignifie the ſubſtance of bread.

154 48 The ſame *Turriane, tract.1.cap.22.fol.*145. ſaith, that the wicked which vnworthily receiue Chriſts bodie non fiunt membra Chriſti, ſed membra Satanæ, are not made the members of Chriſt, but the members of Satan: and yet in the ſame place, fiunt vna caro Chriſti, ſed non vnus ſpiritus, they are made one fleſh with Chriſt, but not one ſpirit, &c. If they be one fleſh with Chriſt, how are they not his members?

155 49 *Vega de diſtrib.Euch.fol.15.theſ.*23. ſaith, that the Iewes did vſe to eate of the ſacrifice, but neuer to drinke: but in another place *de miſſa, theſ.*25. to proue, that they did eate of the ſacrifice, he alleageth that text, ſedit populus, manducare & bibere, the people ſate downe to eate and drinke.

156 50 Againe, *Vega de diſtrib.Euchar.theſ.*29. he ſaith, hæc conſuetudo ſub altera ſpecie communicandi ab apoſtolis inſtituta, that this cuſtome of receiuing in one kinde, was inſtitute of the Apoſtles: yet *theſ.*63. he ſaith, Eccleſia propter Neſtorianos ſub vnica tantum ſpecie dari iubet euchariſtiam: The Church, becauſe of the Neſtorians, doth appoint that the Euchariſt ſhall be giuen but vnder one kinde, &c. If the Church vpon this occaſion did appoint and command it, how did the Apoſtles inſtitute it?

157 51 Ianſenius, as Bellarmine reporteth his opinion, lib.3.de pontif.cap.6. vpon the words of Malachie, that Helias ſhould come before the Meſſiah, firſt is of opinion, non ad implendum eſſe in propria eius perſona, that it muſt not be fulfilled in his owne perſon: and yet againe in another place vpon the 17 of Matthew, he writeth, that the place of Malachie cannot be vnderſtood, niſi de vero Helia, but of Elias himſelfe.

158 52 Arturus, concerning the inuocation of Saints, thus writeth, apolog. contr. Toſſan. cap.3. Catholici implorant ſanctos, vt pro ſe Deum deprecentur, &c. Catholikes doe pray to Saints, to pray for them vnto God, not as though they as patrones could grant any thing themſelues: and yet he ſaith, cap.10. quod res humanas cum Chriſto regnantes in cœlo adminiſtriant, that the Saints doe raigne with Chriſt in heauen, and haue the adminiſtration of earthly things committed to them, &c. how then are they not patrones, and not interceſſors only?

159 53 The ſame Arturus de inuocat. ſanctor. theſ.91. calleth the Centuriators Atheiſts, for denying inuocation of Saints; yet elſewhere, apolog. cap.3. he ſaith, nulla neceſſitate compellimur, &c. we are not compelled of neceſſitie to pray to Saints, wee may pray vnto Chriſt without them, &c. If it be not of neceſſitie, how can it be Atheiſme not to doe it?

160 54 Againe, Arturus de inuocat. ſanctor. theſ.132. reproueth Melancton ſcornefully, calling him a Grammarian, for ſaying thus, ſingulis ſanctis ſingulæ procurationes commiſſæ ſunt: They doe appoint vnto euery Saint their ſeuerall procurations and charges, as Anna to giue riches, Sebaſtiane to heale the peſtilence, &c. yet he himſelfe theſ.133 affirmeth the ſame, that the Saints haue ſuch ſeuerall charges giuen them of God, ſome to cure one diſeaſe, and ſome another: vt ſanè habere & experimur, & ſupra demonſtrauimus: we finde by experience that they haue ſuch procurations, and haue ſhewed it before.

161 55 Arturus de inuocat. ſanctor. theſ.93. Sancti non puniendo, ſed paſtorum more gubernando, The Saints are ſet ouer vs, not to puniſh, but as paſtors to gouerne vs: and yet theſ.88. Sancti inueniuntur qui vindictã de alijs ob ſcelera ſumpſerunt: We find, that the Saints haue taken puniſhment of ſome for their ſinnes, &c. Thus the Saints doe not puniſh in his opinion, and yet againe they doe puniſh.

162 56 Arturus apolog. cap.4. Sanctos vt ea ratione non inuocamus, ita quoque in eoſdem non credimus: As we doe not in that manner pray vnto Saints, neither doe we beleeue in them: and yet he ſaith, de inuocat. ſanctor. theſ.158.cap.14. In ſanctos credere nos etiam docet Paulus: Paul teacheth vs to beleeue and truſt in Saints, &c. Thus this popiſh Doctor one while would haue vs to beleeue, and again not to beleeue and truſt in Saints.

163 57 Many ſuch contradictorie and repugnant ſayings are eaſily to bee found in Bellarmines volumes, and in the writings of other Papiſts: ſo that they neither agree with others, nor with themſelues: as the Rhemiſts ſometime ſay, that the meritorious workes of the Saints, the very ground of popiſh indulgences, are to be diſpoſed by the paſtors of the Church, 2.Cor.2. ſect.5. Sometime, that they are applicable by the ſufferers intention, Annot. 1.Coloſſ.1. ſect.4. Harding ſometime calleth their Legend ſtorie an old moth-eaten booke, and confeſſeth, that among many true ſtories, it may haue ſome fables, Defenſ. Apolog. pag.166. And yet forgetting himſelf, he ſtoutly affirmeth, that there are no fables, nor lies in that booke, pag.750.

Thus haue we ſeene, what ſpirit popiſh writers are of, and how they are led: for if they were guided by the ſpirit of truth, they would both ſpeake and write the ſame things: but now are they like blinde archers, that ſhoote at an vnknowne marke, ſome ſhoote farre off, ſome neerer, as it happeneth; ſo theſe men being wilfully blinde, euery man ſpeake their fancies, ſome hitting, ſome miſſing the truth, as Origen well ſaith, Vt errantium à via multa differentia ſunt, alij contra viam publicam vadunt, alij modicum recedunt: As they that goe out of the way, differ much, ſome goe quite beſide, ſome miſſe but a little: ſo it happeneth to our aduerſaries, as it may appeare in their contrarie poſitions: and thus much of the perſonall contradictions among the Papiſts both old and new. Now wee will ſet downe for a taſte and triall the repugnances and contrarieties, which their religion hath within it ſelfe.

Tract. 2. in Matth.

POPISH RELIGION CONTRARY WITHIN it ſelfe. Part.4.

164 IT is generally taught and beleeued in the popiſh Church, that baptiſme is neceſſarie to ſaluation, which error they would ground vpon thoſe words: Ioh.3.5. That vnleſſe a man be borne of water and the ſpirit, he cannot enter into the kingdome of heauen: yet they themſelues alſo affirme, that baptiſme was not neceſſarie before the paſſion of Chriſt, but began in the day of Pentecoſt after to be neceſſarie, Bellarm. lib.1. de baptiſ. cap.5. Yea and now alſo they make two exceptions, of Martyrs, and penitent perſons, who without baptiſme may be ſaued, Bellarm. cap.6. The Rhemiſts adde vnto theſe a third exempt caſe, of thoſe that depart this life with vow and deſire of the ſacrament of baptiſme, Annot. Ioh.3. ſect.2. But, if they ground the neceſſitie of baptiſme vpon thoſe words of our Sauiour, it began to be neceſſarie when thoſe words were vttered, and therefore was neceſſarie before the paſ-ſion of Chriſt. Secondly, the words are generall, in ſo much, that there is no priuiledge granted to Martyrs or penitent perſons, if they ſtand ſtrictly vpon that place: In this point therefore papiſtrie is not at vnitie in it ſelfe.

165 2 Bellarmine with the reſt doe affirme, that Chriſt gaue the cup only to his Apoſtles, whom at that inſtant, (they ſay) he made prieſts, and therefore prieſts onely not lay-men are bound by the word of God to receiue in both kindes. Yet the practiſe of their Church is contrary: For neither do prieſts, if they communicate only, and miniſter not the ſacrament, receiue in both kindes, according to the decree of the Tridentine Chapter, Bellarm. de ſacram. Euchariſt. lib. 4. cap. 25.

166 3 Againe, in their priuate Maſſes, the prieſt ſaith, Quotquot ex hac altaris participatione ſumpſerimus: As many of vs as haue been partakers of this altar: When as there be no communicants, beſide the prieſt himſelfe, how can this hang together? ex canon. miſſe.

167 4 The prieſt alſo being at Maſſe, ſaith, Command theſe to be carried by the hands of thine Angels, vnto the higheſt altar in heauen: and anon hee ſwalloweth downe the hoſte into his belly that hee would haue conueied into heauen: how doe theſe things agree?

168 5 The Papiſts generally make but ſeuen degrees of Eccleſiaſticall orders, as Prieſts, Deacons, Subdeacons, Acolythiſtes or Attenders, Readers, Exorciſts, Doore-keepers, Bellarm. de Cleric. cap. 11. And yet Bellarmine, the mouth of the reſt, affirmeth, that Ordinatio epiſcopalis, the ordaining of Biſhops is a ſacrament, as the other miniſteriall orders be: Ergo, it is alſo a diſtinct degree from the reſt, and ſo there are eight in all, Bellarm. de ſacram. Ordinis, cap. 5. Further, if there be eight diſtinct Orders, and euery one by it ſelfe is a ſacrament, as Bellarmine teacheth, then haue we eight ſacraments of Order, beſide the other ſixe, for all theſe ſeuerall orders cannot make one ſacrament, ſeeing they differ one from another both in forme of words, and in the externall ſignes or ceremonies that are vſed, Conſul. Bellar. lib. de Ordin. cap. 5. 6. 7. 8.

169 6 In words and outward profeſſion they affirme, that Matrimonie is a ſacrament: And yet ſome of them call it a pollution or prophanation of orders, Gregor. Martin. And that the mariage of Miniſters is the worſt ſort of incontinencie and fornication, Rhemiſt. 1. Cor. 7. ſect. 8. Haue not theſe men now a very reuerent opinion of their ſacraments?

170 7 Againe, they preferre continencie before matrimonie, as a ſtate farre more excellent and meritorious before God: yet they hold matrimonie to be a ſacrament, and to conferre grace of iuſtification: how then is it not more excellent, then ſingle life, which is no ſacrament, neither a conferrer of grace?

171 8 Bellarmine ſaith: Bonum eſt à Deo petere, tum vt ſanctos pro nobis orare faciat, tum vt illos pro nobis orantes exaudiat: It is good for vs to craue of God, that he would cauſe the ſaints to pray for vs, and that then he would heare them entreating for vs, De miſſ. lib. 2. cap 8. Thus they make God a mediatour betweene the Saints and vs. And what an abſurd thing is this to pray to God, that the Saints may pray for vs, whereas in thus ſaying, they confeſſe that we haue acceſſe vnto God our ſelues without their mediation?

172 9 It is the opinion of the ſchoolemen approued by Bellarmine, that the fathers of the law were iuſtified by the merit of Chriſts paſſion as we are: but herein to ſtand the difference, that the merit of Chriſts death is applied vnto vs by the ſacraments: Hebræis autem per ſolam fidem: But vnto the Hebrues by onely faith, Bellarmine de ſacram. lib. 2. cap. 13. I pray you now if they were iuſtified by faith only, who liued vnder the law, which is oppoſite to faith: The law is not of faith, ſaith the Apoſtle, Galath. 3. 12. ſhall not we much more vnder the Goſpell, which is by S. Paul called the word of faith? Rom 10. 8. Who ſeeth not now the packing and iugling of Papiſts?

173 10 Now concerning the Pope, they euery where beare vs in hand that hee is head of the Catholike and vniuerſall Church: And yet in the end being vrged, they confeſſe, that he is Chriſts vicar, but in the regiment of that part which is on the earth, Rhemiſt. annot. Epheſ. 1. ſect. 6. He is not then head of the vniuerſall Church, neither hath he any thing to doe in purgatorie, as other of the popiſh ſort haue written.

174 11 Bellarmine confeſſeth, that the Pope is not Peters ſucceſſor, iure diuino, by diuine right, neither by Chriſts inſtitution in the Goſpell, Lib. 2. de pontif. cap. 17. How then commeth it to paſſe, that they haue made it an article of their faith, To beleeue the Pope to bee the head of Chriſts Church? Seeing Bellarmine himſelfe confeſſeth in theſe words: Nihil eſt de fide, niſi quod Deus per Apoſtolos aut Prophetas reuelauit, aut quod euidenter inde deducitur: Nothing is of faith but that which God hath reuealed by his Apoſtles or Prophets, or that which is euidently deduced from thence, Bellarm. de verb. Dei non ſcript. lib. 4. cap. 9. But that the Pope is Peters ſucceſſor, it is neither expreſſed nor euidently deduced out of ſcripture: therefore it is no point of faith.

175 12 Bellarmine, and likewiſe the reſt, make the perpetuall ſucceſſion of the Biſhops of Rome to be a manifeſt argument of the Church: he calleth it inſolubile and euidentiſſimum argumentum: and yet afterward being preſſed with the example of the Patriarchical Sea of Conſtantinople, which hath had alwaies a perpetuall ſucceſſion, he anſwereth, that ſucceſſion is an argument of the Church, Negatiuely, that is, where there is no ſucceſſion, there is no Church; not affirmatiuely, that where there is ſucceſſion, there is ſtraightway a Church, lib. 4. de notis eccleſ. cap. 8. Thus we ſee what is become of their euidentiſſimum argumentum, of this their moſt euident argument.

13 It is confeſſed by our aduerſaries, that the Church of Rome was founded both by Peter and Paul, Rhemiſt.annot.Galath.2.ſect.6. And that they are both patrons of that ſea. How then commeth it about, that the Pope challengeth rather to be S. Peters ſucceſſor then S. Pauls? 176

14 In the popiſh Church, they doe diuide the cup from the other element in the Euchariſt, miniſtring the ſacrament in one kinde onely to the lay-ſort: Cleane contrary to the Canon of Gelaſius, which is to be found among the Popes owne decrees, in theſe words: We vnderſtand, that there ſome, which receiuing only the portion of the Lords body, doe abſtaine from the cup of his ſacred blood, to whom we enioyne, that either they receiue the whole ſacrament in both kindes, or elſe that they receiue neither: for the diuiding of that whole and one ſacrament cannot be done without ſacriledge: De conſecrat.diſt.2. cap.12. Who ſeeth not now, that their practiſe is contrarie to their owne decrees? 177

Let vs yet ſee further the inconueniences, and abſurdities, that muſt of neceſſitie be admitted in popiſh religion.

15 They doe hold, that the Euchariſt is not a creature, but the Creator himſelfe after that the words of conſecration are pronounced, as Bellarmine reporteth the ſtorie and words of S. Anthony of Padua. Anthony holding the venerable ſacrament in his hand, ſaith thus vnto his beaſt, in the vertue and name of thy Creator, whom though vnworthy I hold in my hand, I ſay vnto thee beaſt, that thou come preſently, and doe him reuerence, that hereticall prauitie may know, Quod omnis creatura ſuo ſubditur Creatori, That euery creature is ſubiect to his Creator, lib.3.de Euchar.cap.8. So then the Euchariſt is their Creator: but yet ſuch a Creator as neither hath eternitie nor omnipreſence: for firſt they denie that this creator of theirs either came from heauen, or goeth to heauen againe: as Scarga confeſſeth, Nos vt deſcenſum negamus, ita nec aſcenſum ſtatuimus, As we denie his deſcenſion, ſo neither doe we affirme his aſcenſion, in art.5.fol.335. And yet he further ſaith, Corpus Chriſti corruptis ſpeciebus ibi eſſe deſinit, vbi prius erat: After the formes and accidents be corrupted, the body of Chriſt ceaſeth to be where it was. So this their Creator is neither to be found in heauen, nor yet in man that hath eaten him, and ſo conſequently their Creator ſhall be no where. And further, another thus writeth, Quaſi ſacramentum cœlum & terram impleat, As though the ſacrament did not fill heauen and earth: Turriane tract.1,cap.21. But if he be your Creator, he muſt be euery where: but in truth you make him no where. Behold then the Papiſts Creator and godamight, that is neither to be found in heauen, whither they ſay he aſcendeth not, nor in earth, where they ſay he remaineth not. 178

16 Bellarmine and the reſt doe ſay, that after the accidents of bread and wine are corrupted, the body of Chriſt ceaſeth there to be, and yet they ſay, Accidentia Chriſti ſubſtantia non inhærent, The accidents depend not on the ſubſtance of Chriſt, or are not inherent in it, lib.1,de Euchar.cap.2. How can theſe things hang together, that as ſoone as the accidents are corrupted, Chriſts body is gone, and yet the one to haue no coherence or dependance on the other. 179

dities which follow the car-nall preſence.

17 They generally hold that by vertue of the words of conſecration the elements are tranſubſtantiate into the body and blood of Chriſt: and yet Turriane ſaith, that the Euchariſt is αὐτόχαρις, and autohypoſtatos, is a grace conſiſting, and hauing an hypoſtaſis and being of it ſelfe: how doth it conſiſt by it ſelfe, ſeeing it is made by the words of conſecration, and is vnmade by the corruption of the accidents. 180

18 Bellarmine affirmeth, that there is a certaine conuerſion of the bread into Chriſts body, which he calleth conuerſionem adductiuam, an adductiue conuerſion: and yet denieth, Quod per motum localem corpus Chriſti è cœlo adducatur, That the body of Chriſt is brought to, or adduced by any locall motion from heauen: but they ſpeake now againſt the law of reaſon and nature and diuinitie too: for how can a body be induced, produced, or adduced, brought in, foorth, or to, without the locall motion thereof. 181

19 Bellarmine lib.1.de miſſa,cap.10. Sacrificium à Deo inſtitutum, à Deo, non à nobis vim ſuam habet: This ſacrifice is inſtituted of God, and hath his valure from God, not from vs: and yet he ſaith, Valor ſacrificij miſſæ finitus, The valure of the ſacrifice of the Maſſe is finite, lib.2.de miſſ.cap.4. If the Maſſe deriue the vertue thereof from God, who is infinite, how can the vertue of it be finite? and yet he that ſaith the Maſſe is not infinite, writeth thus of ſatisfaction, Sicut offenſio habuit infinitatem quandam, ſic habeat & ſatisfactio infinitatem aliquam ex parte principij ſatisfactionis: As the offence was in a manner infinite, ſo ſatisfaction muſt be infinite in reſpect of the beginning and ground of ſatisfaction, de pænitent.lib.4.cap.1. Shall ſatisfaction then being but mans worke be infinite, and the ſacrifice of the Maſſe hauing the vertue from God, be finite? this is to preferre mans worke before Gods worke. 182

tainties in ſome chiefe points their profeſſion.

20 They all hold the reall preſence of Chriſts body, and yet Bellarmine granteth, Eſum euchariſtiæ nec prodeſſe, ſi adſit, nec obeſſe, ſi non adſit: That the eating of the Euchariſt neither profiteth if it be had, nor hurteth if it be not had, lib.2.de Euchar.c.8. What manner of creator then is this, whoſe preſence profiteth not, nor his abſence hindreth? this is but light and deceitfull ſtuffe. 183

21 Thoſe words of our Sauiour, Behold, I am with you to the end of the world, ſome of them, as Vega, as I haue ſhewed before, doe vnderſtand of Chriſts corporall preſence in the ſacrament: they alſo doe affirme, and namely Bellarmine, that Antichriſt ſhall aboliſh the ſacrifice of the Maſſe: and thus they make Chriſt a lier, in promiſing a perpetuall preſence of his bodie to the end of the world, which ſhall be taken away by Antichriſt at his comming. 184

22 Bellar-

185 22 Bellarmine ſaith, that Verba conſecratoria non habent perfectam ſignificationem effectum, niſi in vltimo inſtanti: Theſe words of conſecration, This is my body, haue not their full effect and ſignification till they be all pronounced, lib. 1. de Euchar. ca. 11. And againe he ſaith, Deus mentiri non poteſt, cùm dicit aliquid eſſe, neceſſe eſt, vt illud ſit: God can not lye, when he ſaith any thing is, it muſt needs be: &c. Wherefore if when Chriſt had ſaid, this is, it had not beene preſently his body, before all the words were brought forth, Bellarmine hath made Chriſt a lier, becauſe as ſoone as hee had ſaid, this is, it was not; thus are they ſnared in their owne deuices.

186 23 Bellarmine ſaith, that Prima redemptio ab omni malo culpa & pœna non obtinetur per Miſſam, quia in cruce peracta eſt: The firſt redemption which is from all euill both of ſinne and the puniſhment, is not giuen or obtained in the Maſſe, becauſe that was done vpon the croſſe, lib. 2. de miſſa. cap. 21. and yet they ſay, that there is vnum miſſæ & crucis ſacrificium, that there is but one ſacrifice of the maſſe and the croſſe, and that Chriſt offered the ſame body at his laſt ſupper, which he the next day ſacrificed vpon the croſſe: if the ſame body, and ſo the ſame ſacrifice be offered in the maſſe and vpon the croſſe, how hath it not the like redemption and worketh the ſame effect?

187 24 Bellar. lib. 1. de miſſ. ca. 4. Sacrificium crucis eſt ſacrificium omnium perfectiſſimum & ipſo ſacrificio miſſæ præſtantius. The ſacrifice of the croſſe is the moſt perfect ſacrifice of all, and more excellent then the ſacrifice of the Maſſe: hence it will follow that the Papiſts worſhip two Chriſts, and make him two bodies, for if the ſame body be offered in the maſſe, which is vpon the croſſe, how can it be more excellent heere, then there?

188 25 They hold that in the maſſe, Chriſtus eſt & ſacerdos & ſacrificium, that Chriſt is both the Prieſt and the ſacrifice: and yet in the Canon of the maſſe, they pray in this manner, Command thou theſe to be brought by the hands of the holy Angell vnto the high altar in heauen: hath Chriſt now need of the mediation of Angels, that his body ſhould by them be carried into heauen? or if Chriſt in the maſſe doe ſacrifice himſelfe, is not his prieſthood ſufficient without the Aſſiſtance of Angels? what could bee ſaid more abſurd?

Popiſh abſurdities which follow the carnall preſence.

189 26 Now concerning the body of Chriſt, which they affirme to be in the Euchariſt, what ſhould become of it after the Euchariſt is receiued, thus Bellarmine deliuereth his opinion, Chriſtum intrare per os communicantium, & tamen non emitti in ſeceſſum, ſed corruptis in ſtomacho ſpeciebus ſine vlla læſione ſui deſinere ibi eſſe: That Chriſt entreth in by the mouth of the cõmunicants, & yet goeth not into ẏ draught, but as ſoon as the accidents of bread & wine are corrupt in the ſtomack, it ceaſeth without any hurt to it ſelfe there to be, lib. 1. de Euchariſt. c. 14. Here are many abſurdities vttered in one ſentence, 1. That Chriſts body ſhould enter in at the mouth, & ſo be chawed & bruſed in the teeth, wheras the Scripture ſaith, they ſhal not break a bone of him. 2. That though he enter into the mouth, yet is not caſt into the draught, and yet our Sauiour himſelfe ſaith, whatſoeuer thing entreth into man, entreth into the belly, and ſo goeth into the draught, which is the purging of all meat, Mark 7. 18. whatſoeuer entreth by the mouth, goeth that way. 3. Chriſt goeth not away, till the accidents bee corrupted in the ſtomack: then if a mouſe chance to eat the hoaſt, by this rule Chriſts body goeth into the mouſes ſtomacke. 4. The body of Chriſt there ceaſing to bee, either is carried into heauen, or is annihilate and turned to nothing, or corrupted: a fourth way of ceaſing there cannot bee, but they deny that it aſcendeth into Heauen, much leſſe is it turned to nothing, then muſt it needs be corrupted contrary to the Scriptures, Thou ſhalt not ſuffer thy holy one to ſee corruption.

Popiſh vncertainties in ſome chiefe points their profeſſion.

190 27 Now vnto theſe repugnant & contrary points in popiſh religion, we may adde alſo their vncertainties and vndetermined articles: As firſt it is not yet knowne at what time Peter came to Rome, Oroſius ſaith, he came thither in the beginning of Claudius raigne, Ierome ſaith, the ſecond yeare of his raigne: other ſay, the fourth yeare: other the thirteenth yeare: Damaſus would haue him come thither in Nero his raigne. This diſſention of writers ſheweth, that the matter may bee doubted of, whether Peter were euer at Rome or not. Againe, they can ſhew no certaine ſucceſſion from Peter, of the which they brag ſo much: Tertullian maketh Clement the next to Peter: Optatus firſt nameth Linus, then Clement; Irenæus after Peter placeth Linus, and Cletus, and Clemens in the fourth. Thus alſo their ſucceſſion is made vncertaine and doubtfull.

191 28 They hold Lent to be an Apoſtolicall tradition, and warranted by the example of our Sauiour Chriſt: Irenæus witneſſeth, that ſome faſted one day, ſome two daies, ſome forty houres day & night. Epiphanius ſaith, the wedneſdaies faſt alſo was an Apoſtolike tradition, and to faſt the ſixe daies of Eſther, with bread and water, and ſalt, which the Papiſts themſelues doe not obſerue. One therefore is as like to bee an Apoſtolike tradition as the other: But it is certaine neither of them was; for then they would haue beene kept more vniformely of the Church, and not euery man left to his owne choice.

192 29 It is a matter yet vndetermined and not concluded vpon of all ſides, whether the Pope bee aboue Councels, or Councels aboue the Pope. And both opinions are maintained and defended in the popiſh Church.

193 30 As alſo it is vncertaine among papiſts, whether the Virgin Marie were conceiued without originall ſinne, for both opinions are permitted and ſuffered among them, both of them that ſay ſhee was and that holde ſhe was not, Bellarm. de cultu ſanctor. lib. 3. cap. 16. Likewiſe they leaue it as vncertaine, whether Marie were aſſumed and taken vp into heauen in body, Ex Fulk. Annot 1. Act. v. 14.

31 About and concerning Purgatory, they haue many doubts, which they are not yet reſolued 192 vpon: as, firſt in what place purgatory ſhould be. 2. How many years purgatory continueth, whether an hundred, two hundred or a thouſand years. 3. Whether it be material fire that burneth in purgatory, they are vncertaine. 4. They make doubt how corporall fire ſhould work vpon the ſoules in purgatory, which are ſpirituall and incorporall, *Bellar.lib.2.de purgator.ca.*12. 5. It is doubted, whether the diuels or Angels are miniſters of the torments in purgatory. 6. Whether the paine of purgatory be at all time alike, or by little and little ſlaked toward the end, and whether it exceed all the paines and ſorrows of this life, *Bellarm.cap.*14. All theſe points remaine yet vndetermined among them: and yet for all this the Ieſuite telleth vs ſadly, that it is an article of faith to beleeue purgatory, and that hee which beleeueth it not is ſure to go to hell, *Bellarm.lib.*1.*cap.*11.

32 Now as touching the Maſſe, there are many vncertainties: firſt of the name: they do not them- 193 ſelues know what it ſhould ſignifie, nor whereof it is deriued. Some ſay, this worde Miſſa, hath his deriuation from the Hebrew, and ſo ſhould ſignifie a voluntary oblation. Others take it to be a latine word, whereof ſome would haue Miſſa to be deriued à mittendis eleemoſynis, from ſending of almes at the Communion: others, à miſſione precum, from the ſending vp of prayers: others, à Miſſione Angeli, from the ſending of an Angel: ſome, à dimiſſione populi, of the diſmiſſing of the people, would haue it ſo called. And Durandus hath another conceit, Miſſa vocatur hoſtia, quaſi tranſmiſſa, The hoaſt is called the Maſſe, becauſe it is tranſmitted from vs vnto God, *lib.*4.rational. ſo vncertaine are they of their owne termes.

33 And as they are vncertaine about the name of the Maſſe, ſo they are doubtfull who was the 194
firſt founder and author of their Maſſe. Some hold, that Chriſt did ſay the firſt Maſſe, others that the Apoſtles, but which of the Apoſtles did celebrate the firſt Maſſe, they know not: ſome ſay S. Peter, ſome S. Iames: but that lõg liturgy which goeth vnder the name of S. Iames is worthily ſuſpected, ſeeing that Gregorie reporteth, that the Apoſtles did vſe to conſecrate by the ſaying onely of the Lords prayer.

34 Many vncertainties alſo they haue as touching Antichriſt: ſome thinke that hee ſhall haue his 195
ſeat in Ieruſalem, as Iurgeuicius, *Patres & Doctores ſedem Antichriſti Hieroſolymis conſtituunt, fol.*11. *mend.*5. The Fathers and Doctors do appoint Antichriſts ſeat to be at Ieruſalem: ſome of them think, that not verily, but by way of alluſion he ſhall ſit in the temple at Ieruſalem, as Vega. *pro real. preſentia aſſert.*221. Irenaus ex alluſione templi Hieroſolymitani, templum Chriſtianorum interpretatur: Ireneus, by alluſion to the temple of Ieruſalem, doth interpret it of the temple of Chriſtians.

35 Some of them thinke that vnder the perſecution of Antichriſt, the Chriſtian faith ſhall bee vt- 196 terly extinguiſhed, as Dominicus a Soto. Others hold the contrary, as Bellarmine: Hæc ſententia meo iudicio defendi non poteſt: This ſentence in my iudgement cannot bee defended, lib. 3. *de pontif. ca.*17.

36 Some of them hold, that Iudæi ad veſperam conuertentur, that the Iewes ſhall bee conuerted at 197
the euentide, that is, the end of the world, Socolouius, lib. 2. *de eccleſ.cap.*5. But Bellarmine ſaith, Antichriſtum præcipuè propter Iudæos venturum, & ab eis tanquam Meſſiam recipiendum: That Antichriſt ſhall come chiefly for the Iewes ſake, who ſhall receiue him as their Meſſiah, lib. 3. *de Roman.pontif. cap.*12. But how is it like that the Iewes ſhould then bee conuerted, when they ſhall by Antichriſt moſt ſtrongly be ſeduced? there can be coherence at all in theſe opinions.

37 They doe generally hold, that there ſhall be but 45. daies after the death of Antichriſt till the 198 end of the world, *Bell.lib.*3.*de Roman.pontif.ca.*17. and yet Ezechiel ſaith, they ſhall bee ſeuen yeares in burning the weapons of God, and Magog, which muſt needs be more then 45. daies. Bellarmine anſwereth, that Ezechiel ſpeaketh not properly, but figuratiuely. But why ſhould not Ezechiels prophecie properly and literally be vnderſtood of ſo many yeares, as Daniels of ſo many daies: and admit a figure in that prophecie, we find in Scripture daies to ſignifie yeares, but not yeares to bee taken for dayes: and againe, if there ſhould bee iuſt 45. daies, it were poſſible to calculate the very day of Chriſts comming, which is contrary to Scripture. We ſee then what an abſurd and inconſequent opinion is this.

38 Another maine point vndetermined amongſt them, is of the manner of the real preſence in the 199
Euchariſt: Thomas Aquinas ſaith, it muſt be done by one of theſe two waies, vel per loci mutationem, vel per alterius conuerſionem in ipſum, either by locall mutation, or by the conuerſion of another thing into it, not by locall mutation, ſaith hee, and therefore he concludeth it is done by the conuerſion of the bread into Chriſts body: *Sum.*3.*queſt.*63.*art.*2. But now the new maſters of popery deny the conuerſion of bread, as well as the locall mutation, and rather encline to thinke that the bread is annihilate, ſuch vncertainty there is in the greateſt points of popery.

39 It is a reſolution in the popiſh Church, that what the greater part of the Fathers think is Catho- 200 like verity: and by the Bull of Pope Pius the fourth. An oath is preſcribed to bee taken by Biſhops, Deanes, Canons, that they ſhall not receiue any expoſition of Scripture, which is not according to the vniforme conſent of the ancient Fathers: and yet notwithſtanding the popiſh writers take great liberty in correcting the expoſition of the Fathers: as Salmeron expounding theſe words. 1. Cor. 6. 18. hee ſinneth againſt his owne body preferreth his owne conceipt before the interpretation of the Fathers, ſo doth Maldonate expounding theſe words. Matthew. 19. 11. All men cannot receiue this thing.

Canus loc. Theol.lib. 7. c.3.

185 22 Bellarmine ſaith, that Verba conſecratoria non habent perfectam ſignificationem effectum, niſi in vltimo inſtanti: Theſe words of conſecration, This is my body, haue not their full effect and ſignification till they be all pronounced, lib. 1. de Euchar. ca. 11. And againe he ſaith, Deus mentiri non poteſt, cùm dicit aliquid eſſe, neceſſe eſt, vt illud ſit: God can not lye, when he ſaith any thing is, it muſt needs be: &c. Wherefore if when Chriſt had ſaid, this is, it had not beene preſently his body, before all the words were brought forth, Bellarmine hath made Chriſt a lier, becauſe as ſoone as hee had ſaid, this is, it was not; thus are they ſnared in their owne deuices.

186 23 Bellarmine ſaith, that Prima redemptio ab omni malo culpa & pœna non obtinetur per Miſſam, quia in cruce peracta eſt: The firſt redemption which is from all euill both of ſinne and the puniſhment, is not giuen or obtained in the Maſſe, becauſe that was done vpon the croſſe, lib. 2. de miſſa. cap. 21. and yet they ſay, that there is vnum miſſæ & crucis ſacrificium, that there is but one ſacrifice of the maſſe and the croſſe, and that Chriſt offered the ſame body at his laſt ſupper, which he the next day ſacrificed vpon the croſſe: if the ſame body, and ſo the ſame ſacrifice be offered in the maſſe and vpon the croſſe, how hath it not the like redemption and worketh the ſame effect?

187 24 Bellar. lib. 1. de miſſ. ca. 4. Sacrificium crucis eſt ſacrificium omnium perfectiſſimum & ipſo ſacrificio miſſæ præſtantius. The ſacrifice of the croſſe is the moſt perfect ſacrifice of all, and more excellent then the ſacrifice of the Maſſe: hence it will follow that the Papiſts worſhip two Chriſts, and make him two bodies, for if the ſame body be offered in the maſſe, which is vpon the croſſe, how can it be more excellent heere, then there?

188 25 They hold that in the maſſe, Chriſtus eſt & ſacerdos & ſacrificium, that Chriſt is both the Prieſt and the ſacrifice: and yet in the Canon of the maſſe, they pray in this manner, Command thou theſe to be brought by the hands of the holy Angell vnto the high altar in heauen: hath Chriſt now need of the mediation of Angels, that his body ſhould by them be carried into heauen? or if Chriſt in the maſſe doe ſacrifice himſelfe, is not his prieſthood ſufficient without the Aſſiſtance of Angels? what could bee ſaid more abſurd?

189 26 Now concerning the body of Chriſt, which they affirme to be in the Euchariſt, what ſhould become of it after the Euchariſt is receiued, thus Bellarmine deliuereth his opinion, Chriſtum intrare per os communicantium, & tamen non emitti in ſeceſſum, ſed corruptis in ſtomacho ſpeciebus ſine vlla læſione ſui deſinere ibi eſſe: That Chriſt entreth in by the mouth of the cõmunicants, & yet goeth not into yͤ draught, but as ſoon as the accidents of bread & wine are corrupt in the ſtomack, it ceaſeth without any hurt to it ſelfe there to be, lib. 1. de Euchariſt. c. 14. Here are many abſurdities vttered in one ſentence, 1. That Chriſts body ſhould enter in at the mouth, & ſo be chawed & bruſed in the teeth, wheras the Scripture ſaith, they ſhal not break a bone of him. 2. That though he enter into the mouth, yet is not caſt into the draught, and yet our Sauiour himſelfe ſaith, whatſoeuer thing entreth into man, entreth into the belly, and ſo goeth into the draught, which is the purging of all meat, Mark. 7. 18. whatſoeuer entreth by the mouth, goeth that way. 3. Chriſt goeth not away, till the accidents bee corrupted in the ſtomack: then if a mouſe chance to eat the hoaſt, by this rule Chriſts body goeth into the mouſes ſtomacke. 4. The body of Chriſt there ceaſing to bee, either is carried into heauen, or is annihilate and turned to nothing, or corrupted: a fourth way of ceaſing there cannot bee, but they deny that it aſcendeth into Heauen, much leſſe is it turned to nothing, then muſt it needs be corrupted contrary to the Scriptures, Thou ſhalt not ſuffer thy holy one to ſee corruption.

Popiſh abſurdities which follow the carnall preſence.

190 27 Now vnto theſe repugnant & contrary points in popiſh religion, we may adde alſo their vncertainties and vndetermined articles: As firſt it is not yet knowne at what time Peter came to Rome, Oroſius ſaith, he came thither in the beginning of Claudius raigne, Ierome ſaith, the ſecond yeare of his raigne: other ſay, the fourth yeare: other the thirteenth yeare: Damaſus would haue him come thither in Nero his raigne. This diſſention of writers ſheweth, that the matter may bee doubted of whether Peter were euer at Rome or not. Againe, they can ſhew no certaine ſucceſſion from Peter, of the which they brag ſo much: Tertullian maketh Clement the next to Peter: Optatus firſt nameth Linus, then Clement: Irenæus after Peter placeth Linus, and Cletus, and Clemens in the fourth. Thus alſo their ſucceſſion is made vncertaine and doubtfull.

Popiſh vncertainties in ſome chiefe points their profeſſion.

191 28 They hold Lent to be an Apoſtolicall tradition, and warranted by the example of our Sauiour Chriſt: Irenæus witneſſeth, that ſome faſted one day, ſome two daies, ſome forty houres day & night. Epiphanius ſaith, the wedneſdaies faſt alſo was an Apoſtolike tradition, and to faſt the ſixe daies of Eſther, with bread and water, and ſalt, which the Papiſts themſelues doe not obſerue. One therefore is as like to bee an Apoſtolike tradition as the other: But it is certaine neither of them was, for then they would haue beene kept more vniformely of the Church, and not euery man left to his owne choice.

192 29 It is a matter yet vndetermined and not concluded vpon of all ſides, whether the Pope bee aboue Councels, or Councels aboue the Pope. And both opinions are maintained and defended in the popiſh Church.

193 30 As alſo it is vncertaine among papiſts, whether the Virgin Marie were conceiued without originall ſinne, for both opinions are permitted and ſuffered among them, both of them that ſay ſhee was and that holde ſhe was not, Bellarm. de cultu ſanctor. lib. 3. cap. 16. Likewiſe they leaue it as vncertaine, whether Marie were aſſumed and taken vp into heauen in body, Ex Fulk. Annot. 1. Act. v. 14.

31 About and concerning Purgatory, they haue many doubts, which they are not yet reſolued 192 vpon: as, firſt in what place purgatory ſhould be. 2. How many years purgatory continueth, whether an hundred, two hundred or a thouſand years. 3. Whether it be material fire that burneth in purgatory, they are vncertaine. 4. They make doubt how corporall fire ſhould work vpon the ſoules in purgatory, which are ſpirituall and incorporall, Bellar. lib. 2. de purgator. ca. 12. 5. It is doubted, whether the diuels or Angels are miniſters of the torments in purgatory. 6. Whether the paine of purgatory be at all time alike, or by little and little ſlaked toward the end, and whether it exceed all the paines and ſorrows of this life, Bellarm. cap. 14. All theſe points remaine yet vndetermined among them: and yet for all this the Ieſuite telleth vs ſadly, that it is an article of faith to beleeue purgatory, and that hee which beleeueth it not is ſure to go to hell, Bellarm. lib. 1. cap. 11.

32 Now as touching the Maſſe, there are many vncertainties: firſt of the name: they do not themſelues 193 know what it ſhould ſignifie, nor whereof it is deriued. Some ſay, this worde Miſſa, hath his deriuation from the Hebrew, and ſo ſhould ſignifie a voluntary oblation. Others take it to be a latine word, whereof ſome would haue Miſſa to be deriued à mittendis eleemoſynis, from ſending of almes at the Communion: others, à miſſione precum, from the ſending vp of prayers: others, à Miſſione Angeli, from the ſending of an Angel: ſome, à dimiſſione populi, of the diſmiſſing of the people, would haue it ſo called. And Durandus hath another conceit, Miſſa vocatur hoſtia, quaſi tranſmiſſa, The hoaſt is called the Maſſe, becauſe it is tranſmitted from vs vnto God, lib. 4. rational. ſo vncertaine are they of their owne termes.

33 And as they are vncertaine about the name of the Maſſe, ſo they are doubtfull who was the 194
firſt founder and author of their Maſſe. Some hold, that Chriſt did ſay the firſt Maſſe, others that the Apoſtles, but which of the Apoſtles did celebrate the firſt Maſſe, they know not: ſome ſay S. Peter, ſome
S. Iames: but that lōg liturgy which goeth vnder the name of S. Iames is worthily ſuſpected, ſeeing that Gregorie reporteth, that the Apoſtles did vſe to conſecrate by the ſaying onely of the Lords prayer.

34 Many vncertainties alſo they haue as touching Antichriſt: ſome thinke that hee ſhall haue his 195
ſeat in Ieruſalem, as Iurgeuicius, Patres & Doctores ſedem Antichriſti Hieroſolymis conſtituunt, fol. 11.
mend. 5. The Fathers and Doctors do appoint Antichriſts ſeat to be at Ieruſalem: ſome of them think, that not verily, but by way of alluſion he ſhall ſit in the temple at Ieruſalem, as Vega. pro real. preſentia aſſert. 221. Irenæus ex alluſione templi Hieroſolymitani, templum Chriſtianorum interpretatur: Irenæus, by alluſion to the temple of Ieruſalem, doth interpret it of the temple of Chriſtians.

35 Some of them thinke that vnder the perſecution of Antichriſt, the Chriſtian faith ſhall bee vtterly 196 extinguiſhed, as Dominicus a Soto. Others hold the contrary, as Bellarmine: Hæc ſententia meo iudicio defendi non poteſt: This ſentence in my iudgement cannot bee defended, lib. 3. de pontif.
ca. 17.

36 Some of them hold, that Iudæi ad veſperam conuertentur, that the Iewes ſhall bee conuerted at 197
the euentide, that is, the end of the world, Socolouius, lib. 2. de eccleſ. cap. 5. But Bellarmine ſaith, Antichriſtum
præcipuè propter Iudæos venturum, & ab eis tanquam Meſſiam recipiendum: That Antichriſt ſhall come chiefly for the Iewes ſake, who ſhall receiue him as their Meſſiah, lib. 3. de Roman. pontif.
cap. 12. But how is it like that the Iewes ſhould then bee conuerted, when they ſhall by Antichriſt moſt ſtrongly be ſeduced? there can be coherence at all in theſe opinions.

37 They doe generally hold, that there ſhall be but 45. daies after the death of Antichriſt till the 198 end of the world, Bell. lib. 3. de Roman. pontif. ca. 17. and yet Ezechiel ſaith, they ſhall bee ſeuen yeares anſwereth, that Ezechiel ſpeaketh not properly, but figuratiuely. But why ſhould not Ezechiels prophecie properly and literally be vnderſtood of ſo many yeares, as Daniels of ſo many daies: and admit a figure in that prophecie, we find in Scripture daies to ſignifie yeares, but not yeares to bee taken for dayes: and againe, if there ſhould bee iuſt 45. daies, it were poſſible to calculate the very day of Chriſts comming, which is contrary to Scripture. We ſee then what an abſurd and inconſequent opinion is this.

38 Another maine point vndetermined amongſt them, is of the manner of the real preſence in the 199
Euchariſt: Thomas Aquinas ſaith, it muſt be done by one of theſe two waies, vel per loci mutationem, vel per alterius conuerſionem in ipſum, either by locall mutation, or by the conuerſion of another thing into it, not by locall mutation, ſaith hee, and therefore he concludeth it is done by the conuerſion of the bread into Chriſts body: Sum. 3. queſt. 63. art. 2. But now the new maſters of popery deny the conuerſion of bread, as well as the locall mutation, and rather encline to thinke that the bread is annihilate, ſuch vncertainty there is in the greateſt points of popery.

39 It is a reſolution in the popiſh Church, that what the greater part of the Fathers think is Catholike 200
verity: and by the Bull of Pope Pius the fourth. An oath is preſcribed to bee taken by Biſhops, Deanes, Canons, that they ſhall not receiue any expoſition of Scripture, which is not according to the vniforme conſent of the ancient Fathers: and yet notwithſtanding the popiſh writers take great liberty in correcting the expoſition of the Fathers: as Salmeron expounding theſe words, 1. Cor. 6. 18. hee ſinneth againſt his owne body preferreth his owne conceipt before the interpretation of the Fathers, ſo doth Maldonate expounding theſe words. Matthew. 19. 11. All men cannot receiue this thing.

Canus loc. Theol. lib. 7. c. 3.

200 40 Laſtly, that we may ſee at once the fraile and brittle foundation of popiſh religion: the Rhemiſts boldly affirme that iuſtice is reputed to men, or that they are iuſtified by beleeuing onely the articles of Chriſts death and reſurrection, and this they call the Catholike faith, Annot.Rom.4.Sect.9.

If this be Catholike faith, to beleeue only the articles of faith to be true: then reprobates, yea and the diuell himſelfe may be true Catholikes, for the diuels beleeue and tremble, Iames 2.19. Yea, they confeſſe Ieſus to be the ſonne of God, Matth. 8.29. Mark.5.7. Is not this a proper faith for Chriſtians to ſaue themſelues by? It is not then a bare knowledge or generall beleefe of the articles of faith, or giuing aſſent or credite vnto them only, that is ſufficient to iuſtifie vs, as the Rhemiſts affirme: but ſuch a beleefe of theſe articles, as is ioyned with an aſſured truſt and confidence in God, and vndoubted perſwaſion, that all the promiſes of God, and whatſoeuer Chriſt wrought in his fleſh, are not only true, but euen doe belong and appertaine to euery one in particular.

HERE FOLLOW AN OTHER HVNDRED OF CONtradictions collected out of the Popes Canons, which are the very marrow and ſinewes of Poperie.

THus hetherto I haue ſhewed both the perſonall contradictions of popiſh writers, iarring one with another, and diſagreeing alſo with themſelues: a taſt alſo I haue giuen of their vnſauorie religion, how full of abſurd and inconſequent opinions, doubts and vncertainties it is, in theſe fewe examples ſet down; to the which I will adde their diſſonant and diſagreeing Canons, which are the very body of popiſh profeſſion, that it may appeare to all the world, how vaine their brag of vnitie is, and how vntrue, which Bellarmine proclaimeth, Nunc omnes catholici toto orbe diſperſi, de omnibus dogmatibus fidei ſentiunt idem.: Now all the Catholikes in the world, of all the articles of faith, hold and thinke the ſame, lib.4.ca.10.de notis eccleſ.

201 1 Firſt, Decret.part.1.diſtinc.26.ca.1. He is not counted bigamus, that hath one wife before baptiſme, another after: Ca.3.Innocentius 3. determineth the contrarie: Bigamus probatur, &c. Hee is noted of bigamie, that had one wife before baptiſme, and another after.

202 2 Par.1.diſtinc.27.ca.2. Poſt votum nubentes non ſunt ſeperandi: They that marry after a vow muſt not be ſeparated: but the contrarie is determined, ca.8. Contracta matrimonia ab huiuſmodi perſonis diſiungi volumus: We will that ſuch perſons be diſioyned from their mariage.

203 3 Diſtinc.31.ca.1. Gregorie giueth leaue to the ſubdeacons in Sicily to keepe their wiues which they had maried: for thus he ſaith, Durum mihi & incompetens videtur: It ſeemeth to me an hard and inconuenient thing, &c. that is, that they ſhould be ſeparated from their wiues: but diſtinc.32.ca.1. Leo defineth the contrarie: neque etiam ſubdiaconis connubium conceditur: neither is mariage lawfull for ſubdeacons.

204 4 Diſtinct.16.ca.2. Zepherinus ſaith, there are 60. ſeuerall heads or canons of the Apoſtles: ca.3. Leo but 50.

205 5 Diſtinct.34.ca.4. He that hath not a wife, ſed pro vxore concubinam habet: but hath a concubine in ſtead of a wife, muſt not be repelled from the communion: this canon ſeemeth to allow, or at the leaſt to tolerate concubines: but ca.6. it is directly forbidden, Si non habetis vxores, tamen non licet vobis habere concubinas: Though you haue no wiues, it is not lawfull for you to haue concubines.

206 6 Diſtinct.50.ca.1. Gregor. Lapſi in ſuum ordinem reparari non poſſunt: They which are fallen, cannot be reſtored to their orders: ca.14. Calixtus. Clerici poſt lapſum in ſuis ordinibus reputari poſſunt: Clarkes after their fall, may be accounted in their former orders: they may, and they may not, I think are flat contrarie.

207 7 Diſtinc.63.ca.23. Leo. Electio Romani pontificis ad ius pertinet imperatoris: The election of the Biſhop of Rome belongeth to the Emperour: ca.29. Hadrianus 2. inconſultis legatis imperatoris eligitur: is elected without the conſent of the Emperours embaſſadors.

208 8 Diſtinc.68.ca.1. Gregor.1. Semel conſecratus, iterum conſecrari non debet: He that is once conſecrated, muſt not be conſecrated againe: ca.2. Gregor.3. conſecrentur: let them bee conſecrated againe.

209 9 Diſtinc.74.ca.2. Gregor. Nullus promoueatur inuitus. That no man ſhould be promoted againſt his will: ca.3. They that refuſe to be promoted by the Biſhop, a locis ſuis reijciantur, let them be put by their places: how are they not then promoted againſt their will?

210 10 The Canons agree not about the foure ſolemne faſts of the yeare: Diſtinct.76.ca.2. the time is thus limited, that the foure faſts muſt be kept in the firſt weeke of March, the ſecond of Iune, the third of September, in the fourth of December: ca.3. the Calends, that is the beginning of theſe moneths is preſcribed.

211 11 The Canons are very diuers concerning the yeares and age of ſuch as are to be admitted to orders: Diſtinc.77.2. Zozimus alloweth, that one in his infancie may be a lector, or exorciſt, and ſo after fiue yeares a ſubdeacon: ca.4. none is allowed to be a ſubdeacon before 25. yeares: ca.3. Syricius at 25. yeares granteth the degree of prieſt-hood: ca.6. it is not permitted before 30. yeares.

212 12 Diſt.93.ca.14. Ne diaconi presbyteris ſacramenta porrigant, That deacons ſhould not miniſter the ſacraments to presbyters: ca.23. the contrarie is decreed; Sacerdotibus propter præſumtionem non licet de menſa domini calicem tollere, niſi eis traditus fuerit à diacono: It is not lawfull for Prieſts becauſe of preſumption, to take the cup, vnleſſe it be giuen them of the deacons.

13 Diſt.95.ca.1.Gregor. Concedimus, vt presbyteri tangere debeant chriſmate in fronte baptizatos: 213
Wee allow Prieſts to annoint with chriſme in the forehead, thoſe that are baptized, ca.2.Gelaſius defineth the contrarie: Conſignationis pontificalis adhibendæ ſibi accipere facultatem prohibemus: Wee forbid them to take any ſuch power to ſigne in the forehead.

14 Diſtinct.96.ca.1.Laicis nulla vnquam de eccleſiaſticis facultatibus aliquid diſponendi legitur attributa facultas: We do not finde, that euer lay men had any authoritie to diſpoſe of eccleſiaſticall goods: Contra.par.2.cauſ.10.quæſt.2.ca.4. Communicationes rerum eccleſiaſticarum nulla perſona ſine licentia regia facere præſumat: That no perſon ſhould preſume to alienate or communicate the Church goods, without the licence of the King. 214

15 Decr.part.2.cauſ.1.quæſt.1.ca.97.Ordinatio in ſchiſmaticis manet integra: Schiſmatikes doe retaine the power of ordination, or giuing of orders.Contra.ibid. in gloſſ. Innocent. Ordinatos ab hæreticis ſolam damnationem accipere, That they which receiue orders of heretikes, receiue nothing but damnation. 215

16 Quæſt.7.ca.23.gloſſ.Gregor.Semel conſecratus iterum conſecrari non debet: Hee that is once conſecrate, muſt not be againe: Contra.ca.24. Vrbanus. Reiterari oportet, quod malè actum eſt: That which is not rightly done, muſt be iterated againe. 216

17 Cauſ.2.quæſt.5.ca.4. Presbyter vice iuramenti per ſanctam conſecrationem interrogetur: That a Presbyter, in ſtead of an oath, ſhould be examined by vertue of his conſecration: Contra ca.5: Gregor. If a Presbyter be accuſed, iuſiurandum in medio erit, let him be put to his oath. 217

18 Cauſ.2.quæſt.5.ca.7.Gregor. Vulgarem legem feruentis aquæ, ignitique ferri contactum, te nolumus vllo modo poſtulare: the common triall by whot water, or burning yron, I would not haue you by any meanes require. Contra.ca.15. Si non ſit ingenuus, feruenti aqua, vel candenti ferro ſe expurgat: If hee be not a free man, let him purge himſelfe by ſeething water, or burning Iron. 218

19 Cauſ.2.qu.4.c.1. If any man do accuſe any of the Cleargy of fornication, ſecundum preceptum Pauli, duo, vel tria teſtimonia requirantur, according to S.Pauls precept, let two or three witneſſes be required: Contra.ca.2. A Biſhop ſhall not be condemned vnder 72. witneſſes, a Prieſt vnder 44. nor a Deacon with leſſe then 27. witneſſes, how then are two or three ſufficient. 219

20 Cauſ.8.ca.1. Calixtus, Accuſatio ſemper fiat in ſcriptis: Let an accuſation bee alwaies framed in writing: Contra.ca.5. Stephanus, per ſcripta nullius accuſatio ſuſcipiatur, Let no mans accuſation be receiued in writing. 220

21 Cauſ.3.qu.6.ca.1. Ibi ſemper cauſa agatur, vbi crimen admittitur: Let the cauſe alwaies there be heard, where the crime is committed. Fabian.contra.Stephan.ca.4. Niſi appellatum fuerit: Vnleſſe the appeale be made to the ſea Apoſtolike. If appellations from forraigne countries to Rome are to be admitted, then the canon of Fabian faileth, who ſaith, that alwaies the cauſe muſt bee heard where it is done. 221

22 Cauſ.3.qu.8.ca.2.Felix. Epiſcopus non niſi à duodecim epiſcopis audiatur & iudicetur: That a Biſhop ſhould not be iudged of fewer then twelue Biſhops. Contra.cauſ.11.qu.1.ca.36. Teſtimonium etiam ab vno epiſcopo perhibitum,&c. The teſtimony giuen by one Biſhop, euery iudge in euery cauſe ought to receiue. 222

23 Cauſ.2.qu.4.ca.3. Leo. That a Biſhop ſhould not be condemned vnder the teſtimony of fewer then 72. witneſſes. Contra.Cauſ.2.qu.7.ca.19.Sixtus. The Apoſtle willeth, that no accuſation ſhould bee receiued againſt an elder, but vnder two or three witneſſes: Si hæc de presbyteris ſunt præcipienda, quanto magis de epiſcopis: If this rule muſt hold concerning presbyters, how much more in Biſhops. 223

24 Cauſ.35.quæſt.6.ca.11.in gloſſ. Nullius perſonæ quantumlibet exercitatæ teſtimonio aliquid credatur: To one mans teſtimony, though he be neuer ſo well exerciſed, no credit muſt be giuen. Contra. decr.Gregor.lib.4.tit.1.ca.27. Innocen. Ad denunciationem vnius viri honeſti fides adhibenda,&c. Credit may be giuen to the report of one honeſt man. 224

25 Cauſ.6.quæſt.2.ca.3.Non putet ad iniuriam ſuam epiſcopus pertinere, ſi illi ſoli non creditur: Let not a Biſhop thinke it any wrong to himſelfe if he alone be not beleeued: Contra.cauſ.11. quæſt.1.ca.36. Teſtimonium etiam ab vno epiſcopo perhibitum,&c. The teſtimony of one Biſhop muſt bee receiued as before. 225

26 Cauſ.6.quæſt.2.ca.2. Epiſcopus quamdiu nihil probari poteſt,&c. That if a Biſhop know any man guilty, and haue no proofe thereof, he ſhould refraine to communicate with him. Contra.ca.3. If the Biſhop refraine to communicate with him, other Biſhops likewiſe ſhall refuſe to communicate with the Biſhop: the firſt canon permitteth the Biſhop not to communicate with the guilty party; the other doth cenſure him if he doe. 226

27 Cauſ.9.quæſt.1.ca.2.Gregor. Non poteſt appellari conſecratio, quæ fit ab excommunicatis: It is no conſecration, which is done by ſuch as are excommunicate: Contra.ca.4.Vrbanus 2. Ordinationes ab excommunicatis factæ tolerantur: Orders giuen by excommunicate perſons are tolerated. 227

28 Cauſ.9.quæſt.2.ca.7.Ordinatio irrita, &c. Orders giuen in another dioceſſe are void: Contra. ca.10.Vrbanus: Clerici ab epiſcopo alterius parochiæ ordinati,&c. Clarks ordered by a Biſhop of another 228

dioceſſe, may be receiued of their owne Biſhop, which is proued by the example of Epiphanius, who gaue orders to certaine of the dioceſſe of S.Chryſoſtome.

229 29 Cauſ.11.quæſt.1.ca.8. Bonifac. Neque pro ciuili, neque criminali cauſa epiſcopus apud ciuilem iudicem producatur: That a biſhop ſhould not be brought before a Ciuile iudge: Contra. ca. 20. Greg. Epiſcopum Mediolaneuſ. ad clementiſſ. principem ſub digna cuſtodia dirigatis: Send the Biſhop of Millane vnder ſafe cuſtody to the moſt gentle Prince, &c.

230 30 Cauſ.11.quæſt.1.ca.15. Pelagius. In cauſis, in quibus Eccleſiaſtica perſona loco petitoris exiſtit, &c. In cauſes, where any Eccleſiaſtical perſon is plaintife againſt a lay man, apud ſuæ prouinciæ iudicem, &c. he muſt bring the cauſe before the iudge of the prouince. Contra. ca. 26. Innocentius. Inter clericos & laicos cauſæ exortæ ab epiſcopis audiantur: Matters ariſing betweene the Clergie and Laity, muſt receiue hearing before the Biſhops.

231 31 Cauſ.11.quæſt.1.ca.43. Clericus apud ciuilem iudicem iudicari non debet, &c. A Clergie man muſt not be iudged by a Ciuile iudge, neque ſi crimen fuerit intentatum, vel ciuilis cauſa commota fuerit, neither in cauſe criminall, nor ciuill: Contra. cap. 45. Si de criminali cauſa litigium emerſerit, tunc competentes iudices in hac ciuitate interpellati, &c. If the ſtrife be about any criminall cauſe, let them call vpon a competent Iudge in the citie, &c: the other canon refuſeth the ciuill iudge in cauſes criminall, this canon alloweth him.

232 32 Ibid. ca. 30. in gloſſ. Ex his datur intelligi, quod in ciuili cauſa Clericus ante ciuilem iudicem conueniendus eſt: By this we are giuen to vnderſtand, that in a ciuil cauſe, a Clergie man muſt bee brought before a ciuil iudge. Contra. c. 47. in gloſſ. Ex his omnibus datur intelligi, quòd Clericus ad publica iudicia, nec in ciuili, nec criminali cauſa eſt producendus: By this we are giuen to vnderſtand, that a Cleargie man muſt not be brought to publike iudgement, neither in cauſe criminall nor ciuil: what could bee ſpoken more contrary?

233 33 Cauſ.11.qu.3.c.46. Gelaſ. Neminem poteſt iniqua grauare ſententia. An iniuſt ſentence bindeth no man: in this caſe, Non eſt petenda ſolutio, A man need not require abſolution, cont. ca. 4. Excommunicatum per iracundiam ante cauſæ cognitionem, nemo communioni ſociet: Let no man receiue to the communion him, that is haſtily excommunicate, before his cauſe be heard.

234 34 Cauſ.12.q.1.ca.7. Clericis nihil proprium habere licet: It is not lawfull for Clergie men to haue any thing proper. Contra. ca. 19. De reb. proprijs epiſcopi hæredibus relinquant: Biſhops of their proper goods may leaue vnto their heires.

235 35 Qu.2.c.10. Auferens eccleſiæ in quadruplum damnum reſtituat. Euſeb. Hee that taketh away from the Church, muſt reſtore foure fold. Contra. Gregor. c. 11. Sine augmento eccleſia ſibi ablata recipere debet: The Church muſt take ſuch things as were taken away without any increaſe.

36 Cauſ.16.qu.1.ca.8. Eugen. Nullus monachorum, pœnitentiam dare debet, baptizare, &c. A Monke ought not to giue penance, to baptize, nor preach, ca. 11. Contra. ca. 24. Gregor. ſacerdotib. monachis, licet prædicare, baptizare, pœnitentiam imponere, &c. Monks, that are Prieſts, may preach, baptize, enioyne penance.

236 37 Cauſ.16.qu.2.ca.1. Ioannes. Preſbyteri in monachorum eccleſijs per abbates inſtituantur: Prieſts muſt be inſtituted by the Abbots in thoſe Churches which belong to the Monks. Contra. ca. 6. Abbates ſine epiſcoporum conſilio in parochialibus eccleſijs preſbyteros non ordinent: The Abbats ought not to ordaine Prieſts in pariſh Churches without the aduiſe of the Biſhops.

237 38 Cauſ.19.qu.3.ca.7. Gregor. Poſt monaſterij ingreſſum nulli relinquitur licentia teſtandi: After entrance into any monaſtery, they haue no power to make a will: ſed res eorum eiuſdem monaſterij iuris fiant, but their goods belong of right to the monaſtery: Contra. ca. 8. There is mention made of one Petronilla, which after her entrance into a Monaſterie, res ſuas ſpecialiter donationis titulo ei contulit, did by a ſpeciall gift beſtow her goods vpon that Monaſtery: then the other canon faileth, that after their ingreſſe and entrance, they haue no more power to diſpoſe of their goods.

238 39 Cauſ.20.ca.12. Virgines ante 60. annos non conſecrentur: Virgines muſt not bee conſecrate before 60. yeares, ca. 13. non ante 40. annos, not before forty yeares: ca. 15. non ante 25. annos, not before 25. yeares: ſo well theſe canons agree.

239 40 Cauſ.21.qu.3.ca.1. Clerici ad minorum ætatum tutelas, &c. Clergie men may be admitted to the tuition of thoſe, which are vnder yeeres. Contra. ca. 4. ne quis de Clericis tutorem conſtituat, that no man make any of the Clergie a tutor or gardian, &c.

240 41 Cauſ.23.qu.8.ca.22. Vrbanus. Eccleſiæ de ſuis exterioribus tributa ſoluant, the Church ought to pay tribute of outward things. Contra. ca. 24. De agro eccleſiaſtico preſbyter non cogatur cenſum perſoluere: A Prieſt ought not to pay tribute for the land belonging to his Church.

241 42 Cauſ.24.qu.1, ca.36. Non habentur excommunicati, qui ab hæreticis excommunicantur: They muſt not be counted excommunicate, which are excommunicate of heretikes: Contra. ca. 38. Pro aliquo facinore ab hæreticis excommunicatus à catholicis non eſt recipiendus: He that is excommunicate for any offence of heretikes, muſt not be receiued of Catholikes: ſo the excommunication of heretikes, muſt be held for good, and againe it muſt not.

242 43 Ibid. ca. 42. Potius eſt mortem accipere, quàm à manu hæretici communionem accipere: It is better to die, then to receiue the communion at the hands of an heretike. Contra. ca. 40. In extremo poſitus, &c. Hee that is in the point of death, may receiue, pœnitentiam, repentance or penance, that is, reconciliation at the hands of an heretike: why may they not receiue one ſacrament as well as another, for penance with them is a ſacrament.

44 Cauſ.24.qu.2.ca.1. Eccleſia non poteſt mortuos ligare. Gelaſ. The Church cannot bind, or excommunicate the dead. Contra. ca.6. Hæretici etiam poſt mortem excommunicandi: Heretikes may be excommunicate after their death. 244

45 Cauſ.27.qu.1.ca.40. Innocent. Siquis poſt profeſſam continentiam vxorem duxerit, non eſt matrimonium: If any man take a wife after the profeſſion of continencie, it is no marriage: Contra.ca.41. Qui dicunt talium nuptias, non eſſe nuptias videntur mihi non ſatis diligenter conſiderare quid dicant: They that ſay that the marriage of ſuch is no marriage, are not well aduiſed what they ſay. 245

46 Cauſ.33.qu.5.ca.4. Non poteſt vir continentiæ vota reſcindere, quæ eius aſſenſu mulier Deo promiſit: The husband cannot breake of the vow of continency which the wife hath made to God with his conſent. Contr.ca.11 Vota abſtinentiæ, quæ viro permittente mulier promiſit, illo prohibente ſeruare non cogitur: The vow of abſtinence, which the woman made by her husbands ſufferance, if hee afterward forbid it, ſhe is not bound to keepe: by this Canon the husband may breake a vow made with his conſent, contrarie to the other Canon. 246

47 Cauſ.27.qu.1. ca.24. Virgins marrying after their profeſſion, inter bigamos haberi debent, are to bee numbred amongſt thoſe that are twice married: for they make Chriſt, to whom they vowed themſelues, their firſt husband. Contra.ca.41. This Canon is confuted, and there it is further ſhewed, that Chriſt in this caſe is not to be counted an husband: for by this reaſon, Chriſtus ſanctis viduis videatur ſecundus maritus, Chriſt ſhould be the ſecond husband to holy widowes. 247

48 Decr.Greg.lib.1.tit.21.ca.6. Qui plures habuit concubinas ex eo non eſt bigamus: He that hath had many concubines, is not noted of bigamie, and yet ca.5. maritus viduæ, the husband of a widow, becauſe of bigamie is barred from taking orders, or he that hath had two wiues: and thus we ſee how iniurious theſe Canons are to holy marriage, preferring concubines before honeſt wiues, and fornication before marriage. 248

49 Cauſ.31.qu.1.ca.10. He is conuinced of bigamie that hath two wiues together: Primus Lamech vnam carnem in duas diuiſit vxores: & digamiam eadem cataclyſmi deleuit pœna: Lamech firſt of one fleſh made two wiues, but the flood was ſent as a iuſt puniſhment for digamie: But now hee is generally held bigamus in poperie, that hath two wiues one after another. 249

50 Cauſ.27.qu.2.ca.12. Sponſæ vxores appellantur: They that are eſpouſed, are called wiues; and therefore it is forbidden in that Canon for a man to marrie the ſpouſe of his nephew deceaſed. Contra. ca.17. Iulius. Mulier præter commiſtionem carnis, &c. non pertinet ad matrimonium: The woman beſide carnall knowledge, is not for the eſpouſals to bee accounted in the degrees of marriage: ſo one Canon counteth eſpouſals in the computation of the degrees, the other excludeth them. 250

51 Part.2.cauſ.27. ca.8. Velit, nolit, ſanctimoniæ habitum induat, licet ſacramento confirmare velit, ea ratione ſibi velamen impoſuiſſe, vt iterum poſſet deponere: That woman taking vpon her the vaile of chaſtity, ſhould bee conſtrained, will ſhee, nill ſhee, to profeſſe ſanctimonie, though ſhee will ſweare, that ſhee did take it no otherwiſe vpon her, then with purpoſe to lay it downe: heere wee ſee ſingle life is enforced. Contra. cauſ. 32. queſt. 1. ca. 13. Virginitas ex conſilio ſuadetur, non ex imperio præcipitur: Virginity may bee perſwaded in counſell, not enioyned by commandement. 251

52 Concerning the marriage of infidels, whether after their conuerſion, it ought to hold, the Canons ſpeake diuerſly. Cauſ.28. qu.1. ca.1. Innocentius. Quod Deus coniunxit, homo ne ſeparet: That which God hath coupled, let not man put aſunder: which ſaying is applied to the marriage of infidels, and Ca.8. ſomewhat otherwiſe: Ab infidelibus coniugibus licet diſcedere, ſed non expedit: It is lawfull to leaue an vnbeleeuing wife, though not expedient; and Ca.10. the contrary is concluded. Iudæus ſeparetur ab vxore fideli: An vnbeleeuing Iew muſt be ſeparated from a beleeuing wife. 252

53 Cauſ.29 qu.2. ca.2. Ancillam in matrimonio ſuſceptam viro dimittere non licet: It is not lawfull for the husband to diſmiſſe a bondmaid, whom he hath married. Contra. ca.4. Si quis ancillam alterius vxorem acceperit, &c. ſi voluerit, aliam accipiat: If a man take to wife another mans bondſeruant, he may marrie another, if he will. 253

54 Cauſ.30.qu.1.ca.2. Ab vxore ſeparetur, qui filiaſtrum ſuum coram epiſcopo tenuit: Let him bee ſeparated from his wife, that doth vndertake for his owne ſon before the Biſhop: that is, is his ſons Godfather. Contra.ca.3. Nicolaus. Non ſeparetur, Let not him or her, ſo vndertaking for their ſon at their baptiſme, be ſeparated. 254

55 Cauſ.30.qu.3.ca.4. Vrbanus. Poſt compaternitatem geniti legitimè coniungi poſſunt: The children of Godfathers may marrie together lawfully. Contra.ca.5. Paſchalis. Non poſſunt copulari: They may not, &c. 255

56 Qu.4.ca.3. Innocentius. Nullus duabus commatribus miſceatur: A man cannot marrie his wiues commother, that is, if they were fellow Godmothers: Contra.ca.5. Paſchalis. Vxorem compatris ducere licet: A man may marrie his fellow Godfathers wife. This Canon alloweth to marrie the fellow Godfathers wife, and by the ſame reaſon, it is as lawfull to marrie the wiues fellow Godmother, which is forbidden in the other Canon. 256

257 57 Decret.Gregor.lib.4.tit.11.ca.1.Alexander. Filij duorum compatrum, ſiue ante, ſiue poſt compaternitatem geniti, licitè coniungi poſſunt: Godfathers children, borne before they were Godfathers, or after, may lawfully marrie. Contra.7.Innocent.3. Huiuſmodi perſonæ non poſſunt matrimonium contrahere, & ſi contraxerint, poſſunt adinuicem ſeparari: Such perſons cannot marrie together, if they doe, they may be ſeparated.

258 58 Cauſ.28.queſt.3.c.1. Non eſt bigamus, qui ante baptiſmum habuit vnam & poſt baptiſmum alteram: He is not to be counted a bigamiſt, which had one wife before baptiſme, and another after: Contra, ca.2. Innocentius affirmeth the contrary that he is.

259 59 Cauſ.31.queſt.1.ca.1. Leo. Adulterio polluta non ducatur ab eodem in matrimonium: Shee that was defiled by adultery, cannot marrie the adulterer. Contra. ca. 2. Auguſtin. Licet alicui ducere in matrimonium, quam priùs polluit adulterio: A man may marrie her, with whom before he committed adultery.

260 60 Cauſ.31.queſt.2.c.1.Vrbanus. Iuramento patris non cogitur puella nubere, cui nunquam aſſenſum adhibuit: The daughter is not bound notwithſtanding her fathers oath to marry, where ſhee neuer gaue conſent. Contra.ca. 2. Hormiſda. Poteſt de filio nondum adulto pater cui vult in matrimonium tradere: The father may giue his ſonne in marriage to whom he will, being vnder age: and when he commeth to yeeres of diſcretion, omninò adimplere debet, the ſonne is bound to fulfill the marriage.

261 61 Cauſ.32.queſt.1.ca.6. Qui adulteræ debitum reddit, tribus annis pœniteat: He which companieth with an adulterous wife, let him doe three yeeres penance. Contra. ca. 5. Illam tua ordinatione ſub cautela recipiat, Let the husband take his adulterous wife by your appointment, &c.

262 62 Cauſ.32.qu.2. ca. 1. Partus fœminarum eſt eis ſola cauſa nubendi: Women muſt marry onely for children. Contra. ca. 6. Coniuges ſunt, qui cauſa ſolius incontinentiæ ſibimet inuicem copulantur: They are man and wife which are ioyned together, onely to auoid incontinencie.

263 63 Cauſ.32.qu.5.ca.10. Illa eſt glorioſa continentia, quam complectitur voluntas ſancti propoſiti: That is a glorious kind of continencie, which is found in the wil and purpoſe, non quam tranſgredi non poteſt neceſſitas debilitati corporis, not that which is kept in the body hauing no power thereunto. This canon commendeth virginity of mind, before virginity of the body. Contr.c.14. Quæ opprimuntur incontaminatis ſe virginibus non audeant comparare: Virgins by violence oppreſſed, muſt not compare themſelues with virgins which are vndefiled, that is, in their body.

264 64 Cauſ.32.qu.7.c.18. Ob infirmitatem corporis licet viro aliam ducere: Greg.3. It is lawfull for the husband to take another wife, if his other be not able to performe the duty of marriage. Contra. ca.25. Nicolaus. Ob infirmitatem coniugia ſoluere non licet: Marriages muſt not be diſſolued becauſe of impotencie or infirmity.

265 65 Cauſ.33.qu.2.ca.12. Syricius: Pœnitentes matrimonia contrahere prohibentur: They that are in penance muſt not contract matrimonie. Contra. ca. 14. Leo. Non negantur pœnitentibus licita coniugia: Lawfull mariages muſt not be denied to thoſe that are vnder penance.

266 66 Cauſ.33.qu.3 .diſtinct.4.ca.12. Futuri filij perditionis æternæ recedendo à iuſtitia, cùm piè tamen & fideliter viuunt, verè ſunt filij Dei: They which are like to bee the children of deſtruction, by departing from iuſtice, yet while they liue godly, are truly the ſonnes of God. Contr.ca. 8. Non erant filij, quando erant in nomine & profeſſione filiorum: They were not ſonnes, no not when they ſeemed ſo to bee in outward name and profeſſion: to bee truly the ſonnes of God, and not to bee, are contrary.

267 67 Diſtinct.4.ca. 8. in gloſſ. Alij dicunt peccata remitti in baptiſmo ſecundum præſentem iuſtitiam, non ſecundum præſcientiam: Some thinke that ſinnes are remitted in baptiſme, not verily according to Gods preſcience, but in appearance in reſpect of their preſent iuſtice. Contra. alij perfectè peccata expiata affirmant: Some ſay that ſins are perfectly expiated, and afterwards doe returne, if they ſin againe: ſins to be verily, and not verily remitted are contrary.

268 68 Cauſ.33.qu.4. ca. 3. Nullus vxori ieiuniorum diebus coniungatur; Let no man company with his wife in the daies of faſt. Contr. ca. 12. Apoſtolus nec ad tempus niſi ex conſenſu voluit coniuges carnali inuicem fraudare debito: The Apoſtle would not haue one to defraud the other of their carnall dutie, but for a time, and that with conſent: if but for a time, how then for many weekes, and ſome moneths together?

269 69 Cauſ.35.qu.3.ca.1. Gregor. Vſque ad ſeptimam generationem, &c. None muſt marrie his kinſman to the ſeuenth generation: ca. 3. Fabian. Affines in quinta generatione copulari poſſunt: They may marrie in the fifth generation.

270 70 Ibid.cap.7. Iulius. Ex propinquitate ſanguinis nullus ducat vxorem vſque ad ſeptimum gradum: No man muſt marrie with any of his kindred to the ſeuenth degree. Contra. cauſ.35.qu.1.8.c.2. Gregor. Vſque ad quartum gradum genealogiæ abſtinere debent: They muſt refraine to the fourth degree of their kindred.

271 71 The Canons agree not in the computation of the degrees of conſanguinity: ſome make the father to be the firſt degree, part.2.cauſ.35.qu.4. ca. 21. gloſſ. ſome would haue brethren to be the firſt, Iſidor. ibid. qu.5.ca. 1. ſome againe begin the computation from brothers children. Alexand. ibid. ca.2.

72 Arbor.affinitat.cauſ.35.q.5.in fine: Certum eſt, quod affinitas non habet hodie prohibitionem niſi in primo genere: It is certaine that affinity is not forbidden but in the firſt kind: as if my kinſmans wife is of my affinity in the firſt kind, if ſhe afterward marry another, he is of my affinity in the ſecond kind, but in the ſame degree: and in this kinde of affinity there is no prohibition. Contra.cauſ.35.qu.10.ca.4. Hyginus: Proles ex ſecundis nuptijs mulieris non poteſt ſe copulare cognationi prioris mariti: The children which a woman hath by her ſecond husband, cannot marrie with the kinred of the firſt husband, which are in the ſecond kind of affinity at the leaſt.

272 73 Cauſ.36.qu.2.ca.8. Voluntate patris rapta poteſt nubere raptori: With the conſent of the parents; ſhe that is rauiſhed may marry with him that offered the violence. Contra.ca.11. ne voluntate parentis, ſhe cannot marry no not with the conſent of the parents.

273 74 Decr.part.3.diſtinct.2.ca.42. Berengarius was conſtrained to ſubmit himſelfe to the confeſſion of Pope Nicolas as touching the reall preſence in this forme, Corpus & ſanguinem Chriſti ſenſualiter in manibus ſacerdotum tractari, frangi & fidelium dentibus atteri: That the body and bloud of Chriſt is ſenſibly handled by the Prieſt, and broken and chawed with the teeth of the faithfull. Contra.ca.44. Gratia eius non conſumitur morſibus: His grace (that is his gratious body) is not bitten or chawed, or with biting conſumed, &c. for, that the canon ſpeaketh of the chawing onely of Chriſts body, not the conſumption of it, it is cleare by theſe former words, where Chriſt is made thus to ſpeake and expound himſelfe: Non hoc corpus, quod videtis, manducaturi eſtis, you ſhall not eate this body which you ſee, &c.

274 75 Part.3.diſtinct.2.ca.65. Qui diſcordat à Chriſto, non manducat carnem eius: Hee that diſſenteth from Chriſt, eateth not his fleſh. Contra.ca.68. Qui indignè accipit, corpus Chriſti accipit, He that receiueth vnworthily, yet receiueth the body of Chriſt.

275 76 Part.2.cauſ.1.qu.1.ca.88. Chriſtus traditori ſuo Euchariſtiam primam confectam manibus ſuis tradidit: Chriſt deliuered the Euchariſt conſecrated with his owne hands firſt vnto the betrayer. Contra.part.3.diſtinct.2.ca.7.Iulius. Intincta buccella magiſtri proditorem oſtendit, non ſacramenti inſtitutionem ſignauit: The dipped ſop did not betoken the Sacrament, but did bewray the betrayer of Chriſt: that Iudas receiued the Sacrament, and that he did not, are contrary.

276 77 Par.3.diſtinc.4.ca.24. Nicolaus, Qui in nomine tantum Chriſti baptizantur, denuò non baptizandi: They which are baptized onely in the name of Chriſt, muſt not be baptized againe. Contra.ca.30. Pelagius. Si ſolummodò in nomine domini baptizatos ſe confitentur & eos nomine ſancta Trinitatis baptizabis: If they are only baptized in the name of the Lord, thou ſhalt baptize them againe in the name of the Trinity, to baptize againe, and not to baptize are contraries.

277 78 Diſtinct.4.ca:79. Qui ſemel mergit in baptiſmate deponatur. Hee that doth dip but once in baptiſme, let him be depoſed. Contra.ca.Gregor. Reprehenſibile eſſe nullatenus poteſt, infantem in baptiſmate ſemel, vel ter immergere: Is it not a matter worthy of reprehenſion, to dippe the infant once or twice in baptiſme.

278 79 Ibid. ca.82. Euangelicum praeceptum eſt trina merſione baptiſma tribuere; It is an Euangelicall precept to miniſter baptiſme with thrice dipping. Contra.ca.85. Propter vitandum haeretici dogmatis vſum teneamus ſimplam merſionem: Let vs dip but once in baptiſme, to auoid the vſe and cuſtome of heretikes, &c. If it be hereticall to dip but once, how is it euangelicall?

279 80 Diſtinct.5.ca.2. Melchiades. Spiritus ſanctus in fonte plenitudinem tribuit ad innocentiam: The holy ſpirit in baptiſme giueth fulnes of innocencie. Contra.ca.1. Vrbanus. Spiritum poſt baptiſmum accipere debent vt pleni Chriſtiani inueniantur: They muſt receiue the ſpirit after baptiſme (in confirmation) that they may be found full Chriſtians: then they had no fulnes before, which is affirmed in the other Canon.

280 81 Decret.Gregor.lib.1.tit.11.ca.14. Ordinans puerum tredecim annorum ſuſpendatur: He that giueth orders to a childe of thirteene yeeres, let him be ſuſpended. Contra.tit.14.ca.3. Alexand. Nemini intra annum 14. conſtituto perſonatum concedatis: You ſhall not giue a perſonage to any vnder foureteene yeeres of age, &c. It is then lawfull by this canon to giue a perſonage, and conſequently orders to a childe of foureteene yeeres: vnlawfull by the other canon to doe it to a child of thirteene yeeres: what great oddes can there be in one yeere?

281 82 Decret.Greg.lib.1.tit.17.ca.4. Si filius inſtitutus eſt in eccleſia patris, eum inde non differas amouere: If the ſon be inſtituted into his fathers Church, you ſhall remoue him without delay. Contra.ca.5. Qui ſcienter contulit filio ſacerdotis paternam eccleſiam, exinde eum remouere non poteſt: He that wittingly beſtowed vpon the ſonne his fathers benefice, cannot remoue him out of it: to remoue, and not to remoue, are contrary.

282 83 Ibid.tit.20.ca.4.Clemens. Qui ſe abſcidit, vt obſequium praeſtet Deo, abſque alterius miniſterio, &c. He that geldeth himſelfe to be the more obedient vnto God, muſt not miniſter at the Altar. Contra.c.5. Innocent.3. Qui ſibi virilia abſcindit propter lepram, officium exequatur: Hee that geldeth himſelfe to preuent the leproſie, may execute his office, &c. as though the health of the body were to bee preferred before the ſeruice of God: but indeed in neither caſe is it tolerable or commendable.

283 84 Decr.Gregor.lib.1.tit.16.ca.2. Honor.3. Sepulti à ſchiſmaticis non exhumandi: They, whom ſchiſmatikes haue buried, muſt not bee taken out of their graues: Contra.lib.3.tit.28.ca.12. Clemens 3. Oſſa excommunicatorum, ſi diſcerni poſſunt, exhumanda: The bones of excommunicate perſons, ſons, if they may bee diſcerned muſt bee taken vp.

285 85 Lib.3.tit.32.ca.17. Innocent.3. Vxor maritum profeſſum repetere poteſt, non obſtante licentia profitendi ab ea metu extorta: The wife may require her husband profeſſed, though ſhee gaue him leaue being conſtrained by feare. Contra.ca.20. Licet ſeductus, & deceptorie illectus, &c. If a man make profeſſion of ſingle life, though he were ſeduced, and deceiued, it muſt ſtand, &c. Why ſhould a vow by conſtraint be diſſolued, and not a vow alſo made by deceipt.

286 86 Lib.3.tit.42.ca.3. Some thinke that children haue no faith at all: Nonnulli concedunt, quod paruuli credant non per vſum, ſed per habitum fidei: Some thinke, that children doe beleeue, not by the act, yet by the habite of faith.

287 87 Decret.Gregor.lib.4.tit.1.ca.10. Alexander. Qui iurauit cum aliqua contrahere, contrahere compellitur: He that hath ſworne to contract marriage with any, muſt be compelled to do it: Contra.ca.17.Lucius. Moneri potius debet, quàm compelli: Hee muſt bee admoniſhed rather then compelled to doe it.

288 88 Lib.4.decr.Greg.tit.1.ca.3.Eugen. Si quis puellam nondum ſeptennem duxit, & eam tentauit, coniunx ipſius dicitur: If one marry a child vnder ſeauen yeares, and hath attempted her, ſhee is his wife. Contra.tit.2.ca.10.Vrban.3. Contractus ante pubertatem, etiam cum vſu carnalis copula non facit matrimonium: A contract made before ſufficient yeares for marriage, maketh no marriage, though there can be an endeuor of carnall knowledge.

289 89 Lib.4.tit.6.ca.3.Alexan.3.Votum ſimplex non dirimit matrimonium poſt contractum: A ſimple vow, doth not diſſolue matrimony after contracted. Contra.ca.7. Innocent.3. Votum ſolenne dirimit, &c. A ſolemne vow doth diſſolue matrimony afterward contracted: and yet can.6. Celeſtinus ſaith, Votum ſimplex non minus apud Deum obligat, quàm ſolenne: A ſimple vow doth bind no leſſe before God, then a ſolemne, &c: then the one as well as the other is of force, or not of force to diſſolue matrimonie.

290 90 Decr.Greg.lib.5.tit.33.ca.6.Alexand.3.Contra priuilegium eccleſiæ praſcribitur ſpatio 30. annorum: Thirty yeares may preſcribe againſt the priuiledge of the Church. Contra.ca,15. Innocent.3. Contra priuilegia eccleſiæ non praſcribitur minori ſpatio 40. annorum: Fewer years then forty cannot preſcribe againſt the priuiledge of the Church.

291 91 Decr.Gregor.lib.3.tit.5.ca.28.Innocent.8. Plures dignitates licet tenere cum diſpenſatione: It is lawfull to hold diuers dignities of the Church, and thoſe with cure, with a diſpenſation: Contra extrauag.Ioann.22.tit.3.ca.1. Virtute diſpenſationis non licet plures dignitates obtinere: It is not lawfull to hold diuers dignities, no not with a diſpenſation &c. and this Canon commeth neerer the rule of conſcience and equity.

292 92 Decr.Gregor.lib.3.tit.28.ca.3.Innocent.3. Qui ſepulturam eligit in loco minùs religioſo, non tenet electus: He that chooſeth his buriall in a place not religious, his choice cannot hold: Contra.Sext.Decretal.lib.3.tit.12.ca.3.Bonifac.8.In loco minùs religioſo poteſt noua elegi ſepultura: A man may make choice of a place not religious to be buried in.

293 93 Sext.Decretal.lib.3.tit.20.ca.1.Innocent. Nullam pecuniam ratione procurationum, ſed in victualibus expenſas tantùm recipiat moderatas: That the biſhop ſhould take no mony in his viſitation, in the name of his procurations, but onely his moderate expences in diet. Contra.ca.3.Bonifac.8. reuerſeth this Canon, and decreeth thus: Pecuniam licitè recipere valent pro ſumptibus moderatis faciendis in victualibus: They take money for the moderate expences and charges of their diet. One Canon ſaith, they may not take money, but their diet: another ſaith, they may take money.

294 94 Sext.decretal.lib.4.tit.3.ca.12. Clement.3. cognatio ſpiritualis per catechiſmum vix impedit matrimonium: Spirituall kinred which commeth by catechizing that goeth before baptiſme, doth hardly hinder mariage. Contra.ibid.Bonif.8. Impedit matrimonium; It doth hinder mariage.

295 95 Decr.Gregor.lib.5.tit.33.ca.28.Honor.3. Pariſijs, & in locis vicinis ius ciuile legi non debet: The Ciuile law muſt not be read at Paris, and the cities adioyning. Contra.ſext.decret.lib.5.tit.7.ca.2. Innocent.4. Romæ vigeat ſtudium iuris diuini & humani canonici videlicet & ciuilis: At Rome the ſtudie both of diuine and humane Law, that is Canon and ciuill muſt flouriſh, &c: And why I pray you at Rome more then Paris, which is as famous an Vniuerſitie?

296 66 Sext.decret.lib.5.tit.2.ca.15. Filij hæreticorum, vſque ad ſecundam lineam paternam, ad primam vero maternam ſunt inhabiles ad beneficium eccleſiaſticum: The ſonnes of heretikes are incapable of any Eccleſiaſticall benefice to the ſecond degree of their fathers kinred, and firſt of their mothers: Contra.lib.5.tit.9.ca.4. Pœna alicui impoſita & eius poſteris non extenditur ad poſteros linea fœminea: Puniſhment inflicted vpon any and their poſterity is not to be extended to the poſterity of the womans line.

267 97 Sext.decretal.lib.3.tit.14.ca.5.Bonif.8. Poteſt quis poſt votum emiſſum de certa religione intranda, religionem aliam laxiorem ingredi: A man after his vow made to enter into a certaine religious profeſſion, may goe vnto another religion more large. Contra.Clement.lib.1.tit.3.ca.1.Clemens.5. Rationi non congruit, vt homines diſparis profeſſionis ſimul in eiſdem monaſterijs ſocientur: It is againſt reaſon that men of diuers profeſſions, ſhould company together in one monaſterie, &c. how then can one that hath vowed one religious profeſſion, enter into another, as in the former Canon?

298 98 Sext.decretal.lib.5.tit.12.ca.3. Nicolaus 3. Abdicationem proprietatis omnium rerum Chriſtus verbo & exemplo firmauit: Chriſt did by his word and example, teach the abdication or diſclayming of the very property of things. Contra.extrau. Ioann.22.tit.14.ca.4. Opinio, quæ aſſerit Chriſtum & diſcipulos nihil habuiſſe, erronea eſt, & heretica: That opinion, which affirmeth, that Chriſt and his diſciples had nothing, is erroneous and hereticall: thus Pope Iohn maketh Pope Nicolas that ſo affirmeth, an heretike.

99 Ibid.lib.5.tit.12.ca.3. Pope Nicolas granteth vnto the Franciſcans Simplicem vſum facti non Iuris, The ſimple vſe in fact, not in right or property of ſuch things, as were neceſſary for their ſuſtentation, Dominium vero & proprietatem ad Romanam ſedem pertinere, But the dominion and property of ſuch things to belong to the Sea of Rome. Contra.extrau. Ioan.tit.14.ca.3. This diſtinction is confuted at large, and there it is further ſhewed, quod actus vtendi ſine iure in rebus conſumptibilibus conſtitui non poteſt: That there cannot be a bare vſe without right, or property in things conſumptible, as thoſe things which belong to meat and drinke: and this reaſon is giuen thereof: Quia vti re aliqua nihil aliud eſt quàm fructus ex ea, ſalua ſubſtantia percipere: To vſe a thing without property, is to take profit of it, the ſubſtance or ſtocke ſtill remaining; but ſo cannot a man vſe meat and drinke, becauſe the ſubſtance is conſumed: and this Canon ſeemeth of the two to be built vpon the better reaſon. 299

100 Laſtly, that it may appeare to all men, how vſuall a thing it is in popery for one to contradict another, let a view be taken of the Popes themſelues, with whom it is a very common thing for one to reuerſe and abrogate that which another had eſtabliſhed and decreed: as whereas Boniface.8. had made a decree, that the Laity ſhould not lay any taxes or impoſitions vpon the Cleargie: Sext.decret. lib.3.tit.23.ca.3. Clemens.5. doth abrogate that conſtitution, and maketh it of no force. Clemens.lib.3.tit.17.ca.1. 300 1

And as Clemens ſerueth his predeceſſor, ſo Pope Iohn 22. offereth the like meaſure to him, Extrauag.tit.9.ca.1. Conſtitutio Clementis torneamenta inhibens ſub pœna excommunicat. hic reuocatur: The conſtitution of Clement, forbidding Iuſtings and torneaments vnder paine of excommunication, is here reuerſed. 2

Extrau.Ioan.tit.7.c.vnic. Bonifacius abrogateth whatſoeuer was decreed by Celeſtinus his predeceſſor, and not by him approued. 3

Extrau.lib.14.ca.2. Iohn 22. reuerſeth the conſtitution of Nicolas 4. which he made againſt thoſe which ſhould take vpon them to write gloſſes, or commentaries vpon the rule of S. Francis. 4

Ibid. cap.3. Hee repealeth the conſtitution of the ſame Nicolas, whereby, the property & right of ſuch things as were conferred vpon the Franciſcanes was reſerued to the Church of Rome. 5

Ibid.ca.5. The ſame Pope Iohn 22. ſheweth, that it was lawfull for him to diſſent from his predeceſſors, Si nobis non licuit contra conſtitutionem Nicolai 4. predeceſſoris noſtri aliquid ſtatuere, nec ſibi licuit contra ſtatuta Gregor. Innocent. aliquid declarare, &c. If it were not lawfull for vs to eſtabliſh any thing againſt the degree of Nicolas 4. our predeceſſor, how was it lawfull for him to do the like againſt the decrees of Gregorie and Innocentius his predeceſſors. 6

Againe, in the ſame place he ſheweth the like practiſe to haue beene before his time; Licet Innocent.3. in generali conſilio interdixiſſet nouas religiones inſtitui, tamen ſucceſſores ipſius (non obſtante interdicto) plures leguntur ordines confirmaſſe, qui fuerunt poſtea per Gregor.9. diſſoluti: Though Innocent. 3. in a generall Councell had forbidden any new religion to be inſtituted, yet, that prohibition and interdiction notwithſtanding, his ſucceſſors confirmed diuers orders which afterward Gregorie 9. diſſolued. 7

Thus we ſee the manifold diſſentions, and ciuill warres, as it were, which popiſh religion hath in it ſelfe, and into how many opinions, as formes and ſhapes, they can change themſelues, that a man may worthily vſe againſt them that verſe of Horace:

Quo teneam vultus mutantem Protea nodo:
No knot ſo faſt or ſure to hold,
Which changeable Proteus cannot vnfold.

And as Origene well interpreteth that ſaying of our Sauiour, Surget gens contra gentem, id eſt, vna hereſis contra aliam: One nation ſhall riſe againſt another, that is, one hereſie againſt another. So wee do ſee the effect of that propheſie in Popiſh Religion, which as Saint Ambroſe well ſaith, Velut quadam monſtruoſi Scylla portenti in varias formas diſtincta perfidia: Like to the hideous monſter of the gulfe Scylla, doth deuide it ſelfe into diuers deformed ſhapes. Cuius ſpeluncam, vt ferunt nautæ, nos clauſa aure prætèrire debemus: But as the marriners are ſaid to paſſe that gulfe ſtopping their eares, ſo let vs paſſe ouer their monſtrous abſurdities and diſſentions, not regarding them. Hom.7.in Leuitic. Lib.1.de fide; cap.4.

Thus, I thinke, I haue requited Bellarmines kindneſſe towards vs, who chargeth vs vntruly with no leſſe then an hundred ſeuerall diſſenſions in opinion amongſt our ſelues: I haue heere repayed him for one hundred three, and more truely, and if that bee not intereſt ſufficient, hee may haue more hereafter.

And heere againe is ſome ods betweene vs: Bellarmines hundred is in word onely, but our large hundred we haue proued by particular induction.

Now then, if wee will compare the firſt and the laſt, and lay all together, their raylings, ſlanders, forgeries, lying and vntruths: Againe, their blaſphemies, opinions contrary to Scripture, hereſies, and abſurdities? Thirdly, their weak and feeble arguments, inſufficient anſwers, ſubtile and vaine diſtinctions: Laſtly, their contradictions among themſelues, the new with the old: the new one with the other; the ſame men many times with themſelues: yea, their religion fighting and iarring with it ſelfe: If theſe things be well weighed and conſidered, it will eaſily appeare whether their houſe bee built vpon a ſandie or a rockie foundation: Beggerlie, paltrie, diabolicall, Antichriſtian, is that religion, which is driuen to vſe ſuch leaud, vnhoneſt, and vnchriſtian deuiſes and ſhifts.

Now, to the Reader of this booke, thus much firſt I ſay, as touching himſelfe: If hee hath beene at any time doubtfull or wauering in the faith of the Goſpell, I truſt by this heere ſet downe hee may, partly be confirmed to cleaue vnto the Goſpell with a reſolute minde, and to thinke of Popery as it deſerueth, and to follow the Apoſtles counſaile, To try all things, and hauing tried, to keep that which is beſt, 1. Theſ. 5. 21. And as Auguſtine very well aduiſeth in theſe words: Si iactatus curru inanium quæſtionum cadis in fluctus vanæ contentionis, &c. Reuertere & ſede in portu fidei Catholicæ, vbi te nulla poſſit fluctuoſæ curioſitatis tempeſtas turbare vel mergere: If at any time hauing beene carried away, as with a chariot of vaine queſtions, thou haſt fallen into light and vnneceſſary contentions, and as a ſhip forſaken of the gouernour, beene toſſed, and caſt vpon vnknowen coaſts, returne and reſt thy ſelfe in the hauen of the Catholike faith, where no tempeſt of troubleſome curioſity, can either trouble or drowne thee, Hypognoſt. articul. 6.

And as concerning my ſelfe, this I haue to ſay, that I doe not take vpon me to bee a champion, or profeſſed propugner of our faith, there are other vpon whom that care & charge may rather lye, as whoſe leaſure is more, their encouragement greater, and their meanes better. I ſay heere with S. Auguſtine, anſwering the Donatiſts in the like caſe, who ſpake it modeſtly of himſelſe, but I more truly Abſit, vt mihi apud Catholicos arrogem, quod (Bellarminus) ſibi (apud pontificios) arrogat: vnus ſum è multis qui profanas veſtras nouitates, vt poſſumus, refutamus, ſicut vnicuique noſtrûm Deus partitus eſt menſuram fidei: Farre be it from me to chalenge that place among true Catholikes and goſpellers, that Bellarmine doth among the popiſh ſort. I am one amongſt many, which labour to my skill and power to confute your prophane nouelties, as God hath giuen to euery of vs a meaſure of faith, Cont. Iulian. lib. 6. cap. 4.

My trauell herein ſhall not preiudice other mens more painfull labours, I haue but ſhewed my deſire, and endeuoured rather, then performed that which I deſired, yet I truſt the Chriſtian Reader will accept of this my good will: and to others more curious then courteous, I ſay with S: Hierome, Apolog. ad Pammach. Aut profer meliores epulas, & me conuiua vtere, aut qualicunque noſtra cœnula contentus eſto, Either bring forth better dainties, and let me be a gueſt, or elſe content your ſelfe in the meane time with this ſmall refreſhing of mine.

And now to conclude, to thee (Chriſtian Reader) I direct my ſpeech, In his quæ tibi diſplicebunt, ego conſpicior, in his quæ per donum Spiritus ſancti tibi placent, ille amandus, ille prædicandus. August. ad Paulinum epiſt. 34. Wherein any thing in this book ſhall iuſtly diſpleaſe or offend thee, it is my fault, the blame is mine; but what ſo by the giſt and grace of the ſpirit of God is wel ſaid, and approued by thee; hee is to be loued, he is to be praiſed for it. Now to God the Father, and his Sonne Ieſus Chriſt, with the ſame holy ſpirit, be all praiſe, honour, and glory for euer.

Amen.

Other ſcapes there are of ſmaller importance, as when a letter is tranſpoſed, as mercides for mercedis: or omitted: as mericordia for miſericordia, with for which: or one letter taken for another, as Ioh. for Ioſh. aboleta for abolita, ſanguinus for ſanguinis, Quitirai for Quiricai, Cannexus for Commenus, Eſau for eſus, fames for fomes, prepoſitum for propoſitum, ligit for ligat: or when the points are miſtaken, as laus Dominus for laus: Dominus, p.1077. accepit: a patre, for accepit a patre: him for euer, for him: for euer: ſuch literall ſcapes I leaue to the Readers diſcretion to be amended.
